BATTLE HYMN FOR THE REPUBLIC

Mine eyes have seen the glory of the President-to-be;
 He is trampling out resistance to the pigmentocracy
 For he's sworn that Whites for ever shall maintain supremacy;
 His challenge marches on.

He has summoned us to answer him before his judgment place;
 He is sorting out the souls of men according to their race;
 And only Whites are human and the rest must know their place;
 This challenge marches on.

The rest, a lower order, shall forever servile be;
 But men can not be less than men, though reared to slavery
 And legislation can't destroy a man's will to be free—
 The future marches on.

Yet he casts a mighty shadow; fear and silence are abroad,
 And the soul is slow to answer him, the spirit overawed;
 But the future holds the lightning of a terrible swift sword
 And the future marches on.

MARION,
