

During the committee-stage debate on his budget vote, Education and Development Aid's Gerrit Viljoen said that control of educational institutions by "collective decision-making" bodies would mean those who required education would make decisions along with those who already had insight and experience. This would not work in any right-thinking system.

BUSINESS DAY 30 JULY 1987