

REPORT TO THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE, HONOURABLE TSHILOLO MICHAEL MASUTHA, IN THE MATTER OF
DR. VERWOERD'S ASSASSINATION

Vol. II

By

Harris Dousemetzis¹

¹ Harris Dousemetzis is a tutor in the School of Government and International Affairs at Durham University, England, and a Fellow of the Higher Education Academy. He holds a PhD in politics from Durham University and is also the author of The Man who Killed Apartheid: The Life of Dimitri Tsafendas.

Contents

Essential Background.....
Chapter 3: The Assassination
Chapter 4: The Police Investigation
Chapter 5: Tsafendas’s Summary Trial
Chapter 6: The Report of the Commission of Enquiry into the Circumstances of the Death of the Late Dr. the Honourable Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd
Aftermath and Conclusion.....
Bibliography.....
Appendix.....

ESSENTIAL BACKGROUND

This Report² was submitted on hard copy, by High Court Judge Jody Kollapen, to the Minister of Justice, the Honourable Michael Masutha, on 23 April 2018. The Report ran to three volumes, totalling 2,192 pages and 861,803 words. It was accompanied by a 16GB USB memory stick with all the evidence presented in the Report, including all 12,000 pages of documents from archives in South Africa, Portugal and the U.K.; newspaper articles; documents from private collections that were entrusted to the author; and all the recordings of the interviews the author conducted for this research. This submission was accompanied by a letter to the Minister written and signed by five prominent South African jurists who had collaborated with the author for this Report and had evaluated the evidence presented in it. They were advocate George Bizos SC³; Professor of International Law and former Judge ad hoc on the International Court of Justice in The Hague John Dugard⁴; former Durban State Attorney and co-chairman of the Law Society of South Africa Krish Govender⁵; advocate and TRC Commissioner Dumisa Ntsebeza SC⁶; and former Constitutional Court Judge Zak Yacoob⁷. This was their letter:

² The Report was edited by Gerard Loughran, a retired foreign correspondent for the US news agency, United Press International, who also spent eleven years in senior editorial capacities with the Nation group of newspapers in Nairobi, Kenya. He is the author of Birth of a Nation: The Story of a Newspaper in Kenya and co-author of The Man who Killed Apartheid: The Life of Dimitri Tsafendas.

³ Advocate George Bizos SC is an internationally renowned lawyer who defended several prominent anti-apartheid activists including Nelson and Winnie Mandela, Govan Mbeki, Steve Biko and Walter Sisulu and many others. In 1999, he was awarded by then President Nelson Mandela the Order for Meritorius Service medal, in 2001, the 2001 International Trial Lawyer Prize of the Year by the International Academy of Trial Lawyers, in 2016 the Freedom of City of London by the City of London, and also in 2016 he was an official guest of then UK Prime Minister David Cameron in 10 Downing Street in order to honour him for his contribution to ending apartheid and bringing democracy to South Africa.

⁴ Professor John Dugard has been part of the main UN body for developing international law (the International Law Commission of the United Nations); he chaired a UN Commission on Human Rights inquiry into human rights in occupied Palestine; and was the United Nations Special Rapporteur to the commission on “the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied by Israel since 1967.” He has been Dean and Law Professor at the University of the Witwatersrand, Director of the same university’s Centre for Applied Legal Studies, Director of the Lauterpacht Centre for International Law at the University of Cambridge, Chair in Public International Law at Leiden University, and a visiting professor at the University of New South Wales, Princeton University, Duke University, UC Berkeley, and the University of Pennsylvania.

⁵ Attorney Krish Govender was also the vice-chairman of the council of the University of KwaZulu-Natal and a founding member, along with Dullah Omar, former Minister of Justice, and Pius Langa, former Chief Justice, of the National Association of Democratic Lawyers (NADEL); he has also served in various Governmental bodies such as the Judicial Service Commission (JSC).

⁶ Advocate Dumisa Ntsebeza SC is also chancellor of the University of Fort Hare, Chairman of the Desmond Tutu Peace Trust, and a trustee of the Nelson Mandela Foundation.

⁷ Justice Zak Yacoob was appointed to the Constitutional Court in 1998 by Nelson Mandela and has also served as Acting Deputy Chief Justice.

“RE: REQUEST TO RE-EVALUATE THE HISTORICAL RECORD FOLLOWING THE ASSASSINATION OF DR HF VERWOERD

The death of Prime Minister HF Verwoerd on 6 September 1966 was no doubt a significant event in the history of South Africa and one that would have long-term consequences for the people of South Africa. Dr. Verwoerd was killed by Dimitri Tsafendas, a Portuguese national of Greek descent, in the House of Assembly at a time when Tsafendas was employed there as a messenger.

At the trial of Tsafendas in the Cape Supreme Court he was found unfit to stand trial on the ground that he suffered from schizophrenia. The court found that Tsafendas had no political motive for killing Verwoerd. These conclusions were confirmed by a subsequent commission of enquiry. Arising out of this, Tsafendas was declared a State President’s patient and was detained first in prison, then in a mental institution until his death in 1999. For most of his incarceration he was subjected to cruel and inhumane treatment by the prison authorities. He died a sad and lonely death in a mental institution.

There were understandable reasons why it was in the interests of the apartheid regime not to seriously dispute that Mr. Tsafendas was schizophrenic and to ignore weighty evidence that he was not mentally ill, but that Mr. Tsafendas’s actions were in fact wholly politically motivated. First, the apartheid regime wished to have people believe that no sane person could kill or even want to kill an outstanding leader as Verwoerd was projected to be. Second, the minister of justice and police, John Vorster, would have been embarrassed that a communist who had made his strong opposition to apartheid publicly known passed the security clearance that allowed him to work as a messenger in the House of Assembly and gave him the opportunity to kill Verwoerd. To avoid accountability for this lapse in security, it would have been considered wiser for Vorster and the National Party to portray Tsafendas as an insane person. Third, a full-blown criminal trial would have had the inevitable effect of placing the national and international spotlight on the excesses of the system of apartheid – something the regime of the day would have preferred to avoid.

Consequently, the apartheid regime embarked on a cover-up in which the trial, the subsequent commission of enquiry and media were carefully orchestrated to present Tsafendas as an insane person. This succeeded to a large measure as the dominant discourse that emerged and still prevails is that Mr. Tsafendas was mentally ill and his actions were not even remotely political. It is equally understandable that Mr. Tsafendas adopted the correct strategy in which he too feigned insanity. Otherwise he would undoubtedly have been sentenced to death.

A recent study by Harris Dousemetzis of Durham University in England reveals the full extent of the cogent evidence that the regime ignored. It shows convincingly that Mr. Tsafendas was not a schizophrenic who believed that his actions were determined by a tapeworm. In fact, the study compellingly demonstrates that he was a man with a deep social conscience who was bitterly opposed to apartheid and viewed Verwoerd as the prime architect of this policy. Tsafendas told the police after the assassination that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he was 'disgusted with his racial policies' and hoped that 'a change of policy would take place'. The killing of Verwoerd was therefore a political assassination and not the act of an insane man.

The study also shows that Tsafendas was a highly politicised person. He was arrested several times in his home country of Moçambique by the Portuguese police for promoting Communism and denouncing colonialism. The Portuguese security police – PIDE – had a file on Tsafendas dating back to 1938, when he was 20 years old, and kept a careful watch over him when he was exiled for 12 years from Moçambique on account of his political activities. He fought in the Greek Civil War with the communists and he was imprisoned in Portugal for his pro-communist and anti-colonialist activities. In London he became a member of the British anti-apartheid movement and associated with Tennyson Makiwane, the ANC's representative in England. He was a member of the South African Communist Party from 1937 to 1942 and was later refused admission to South Africa for this reason. Shortly before the killing of Verwoerd, Tsafendas characterised a possible assassination of Dr Verwoerd as morally justifiable on grounds that he was a dictator and a tyrant who oppressed his people. Tsafendas repeated this notion about thirty years later while he was at a psychiatric hospital. These are but some features of the study all of which are fully substantiated. They powerfully militate against the conclusion that the actions of Tsafendas on 6 September 1966 were those of an individual ignorant of the scope and consequences of his actions.

Dousemetzis's study is painstakingly thorough and is based on an examination of some 12,000 pages of documents in the South African National Archives, as well as those of Portugal and the United Kingdom. It is supported by interviews with 137 persons, 69 of whom knew Tsafendas personally. The study collaborated closely with several relevant South African and international legal experts, including the signatories to this letter. We are in full agreement with the study, the conclusions it reaches as well as the reasons advanced in support of it.

In addition, a wide spread of experts in fields relevant to this research were also contacted on an ongoing basis, including lawyers, judges, psychologists, psychiatrists, academics, retired high-ranking police officers and former secret agents. Further, to examine the diagnosis of schizophrenia, the study collaborated closely with the forensic psychiatrist, Professor Tuviah Zabow, the former head of the forensic psychiatry unit at Valkenberg Hospital, former professor of psychiatry at the University of Cape Town and chairman of the College of Psychiatrists of South Africa.

The study also consulted with the following noted psychiatrists and psychologists: Professor Alban Burke, head of the Department of Psychology at the University of Johannesburg; Professor Kirk Heilbrun, forensic psychologist and professor of psychology at Drexler University, USA; Professor Phillip Resnick, forensic psychiatrist and director of the Division of Forensic Psychiatry at Case Western Reserve University School of Medicine, USA; and Professor Robert L. Sadoff, clinical professor of psychiatry and director of the Center for Studies in Social-Legal Psychiatry at the University of Pennsylvania, former president of the American Academy of Psychiatry and the Law as well as of the American Board of Forensic Psychiatry. Collectively they represent some of the best minds in the field of psychiatry and psychology.

This overview is provided both as a glimpse into the study and how it was conducted as well as to disavow any notion that the study is anything other than a carefully considered and well researched body of work on a matter of great significance to South Africa.

We are also convinced that much of this evidence was available to the state. In normal course, and had not the insanity plea and finding suited the regime's purposes, it would have challenged the insanity plea. Our experience is that the state has never yet so docilely accepted an insanity plea without more in a case in which without insanity, the crime would have been vicious murder without extenuating circumstances if not treason.

At present, South African history records Tsafendas as the insane killer of Dr Verwoerd who had no political motive for his act. This is as inadequate as it is incorrect and this is borne out by the study.

South African history, in proper recognition of the generations who preceded us as well as those to come, should record in its annals an accurate account of the killing of Dr

Verwoerd which recognises that Tsafendas was motivated to kill him by reason of his deep opposition to apartheid and was indeed a freedom fighter and a hero. This must be acknowledged by a revision and a correction of this event in history. This is necessary in order that what occurred is properly recorded and that the distortion of it by the apartheid government is laid bare. It is not about being vindictive or vengeful but simply about recording our painful history with the accuracy that our commitment to the truth and reconciliation requires.

In our submission the study is so thoroughly and painstakingly done that we would have no hesitation in recommending that the minister may well accept its findings and conclusions and act thereon. On the other hand, we fully accept and understand that the minister may wish to subject the study to an independent assessment. We hardly seek to be prescriptive in this regard. What is of interest to us is the course of action that the South African government, once it is satisfied with regard to the study and its findings, may elect to take. Again this area falls squarely within the discretion of the government as advised by the minister but may we suggest a few options for consideration and they would include:

- a. A public acknowledgement of the acceptance of the study and its findings; and
- b. The appropriate steps to revise the curriculum of schools and other institutions of learning to correct the teaching and learning of the killing of Verwoerd.

This is not an exhaustive list of possible actions but are merely suggestions and we remain willing to work with you and the government on these.

Finally, in order to assist you in this process, we attach a copy of the report by Mr. Dousemetzis. We are confident that you will find that it raises a convincing case for a re-evaluation of the death of Dr HF Verwoerd. Mr. Dousemetzis has indicated his willingness and availability to assist by way of clarification, if required, of any matter dealt with in the research undertaken by him.

Kindly acknowledge receipt and do advise us of your consideration at your earliest convenience.”

THE MAN WHO KILLED APARTHEID AND ITS AFTERMATH

On November 8, 2018, The Man Who Killed Apartheid: The Life of Dimitri Tsafendas by Harris Dousemetzis and Gerry Loughran was launched at the Apartheid Museum in Johannesburg in co-operation with the Ahmed Kathrada Foundation. The speakers were Judge Jody Kollapen, who gave the keynote address; Neeshan Balton, Executive Director of the Ahmed Kathrada Foundation; Maggie Davey of Jacana Media; Reneva Fourie, member of the Central Committee of the SACP; Attorney Krish Govender; and Minister of Justice and Correctional Services Michael Masutha.

Judge Jody Kollapen said that the book “is about a search for the truth” and that it is important because South Africa needs to know the truth about such a major historical event. He said that Tsafendas “was incensed about what Verwoerd did and he was prepared to risk his life” and that he had personally discovered that Tsafendas never lost his militancy even towards his last days.

Reneva Fourie said:

“Our first Deputy General Secretary, comrade Solly Mapaila, is out of the country and had requested that I stand in for him. He deemed it essential that the SACP be represented at this very important occasion -the launch of a book that makes such a significant contribution to our history. We are here feeling guilt while simultaneously feeling elation. Harris did what we failed to do. He spent nearly a decade getting to know Dimitri Tsafendas, unpacking his character, digging right to the bottom of what could have driven him to assassinate Verwoerd and crafted a beautiful narrative that gives insights to that which comprised the essence of Dimitri. What a significant effort by someone who had no obligation to set the record straight. Our guilt resides in the knowledge that, as part of the liberation movement, we could have done more. But what great cause for celebration! And herein lies our elation. Our Movement and Dimitris family and friends can take pride in knowing that the killing of Verwoerd was not an act of a deranged man; but a calculated act of tremendous courage to rid the world of an evil - the architect of a cruel system of apartheid, which stripped non-whites of all sense of dignity and undermined the very essence of that which made us human; evil that could easily be equated with the works of Hitler; an evil which remnants we still suffer of today.

Today, one day and a month after the passing of Dimitri Tsafendas, 19 years ago, the work of Harris Dousemetzis empowers us to affirm that Dimitri was a comrade, our comrade. A comrade who knew the humiliation of racial discrimination and who understood the exploitative conditions of workers. His pronounced social and political consciousness enjoined him to associate with the Communist Party of South Africa, and inspired him to take the difficult decision to exercise the highest level of sacrifice for this country, as expressed in his own words, 'I was so disgusted by the racial policy that I went through with the plan to kill the Prime Minister.' And we are here tonight to take full ownership of our member, albeit very late.

It is for this reason that we formally endorsed the submission to Minister Mike Masutha that the historical records be rectified. His presence here today provides us with assurance that every effort will be made in this regard. His department has been doing good work in allowing apartheid atrocities to be investigated and exposed. It is also doing a sterling job to eliminate historical distortions and to replace it with truths that have been buried for long. Confronting the truth is an important part of healing; an integral element of reconciliation; and a cornerstone of nation building. May this restoration of history make us conscious of the efforts to divide and determined that these efforts never again succeed. Please receive our warm and sincere appreciation to all who contributed to the formulation and promotion of this historic record of the life of an unsung hero. Thank you for going the extra mile to include the South African Communist Party in this process. We are honoured. We are humbled. As the SACP we undertake to repair the tombstone and to ensure that the 20th Anniversary of comrade Dimitri Tsafendas' passing is appropriately commemorated. Forward to a united, non-racial, non-sexist, democratic and prosperous South Africa Long live the undying spirit of comrade Dimitri Tsafendas long live."

Minister Masutha, who had volunteered to attend the event and to speak, described the book launch as "a moment to celebrate the truth" about Tsafendas. He said:

"Tonight we're here to celebrate the truth. Only the truth will set you free ... Indeed, the story that is being told tonight is one of a man who may have killed a man, but I believe in the depth of his mind he was not a killer. He did not want kill a human being. He wanted to kill a system. It is unfortunate that the system personified itself in a human being."

Minister Masutha added that at the time, it would have suited the apartheid state to conceal the truth as it would have been to its detriment to admit that a Communist had been in service inside parliament. Thus they misportrayed him.

Attorney Kris Govender highlighted the book's importance to South Africa's history for "revealing the truth" about Tsafendas and Dr. Verwoerd's assassination. He also conveyed to the audience the following message from Judge Zak Yacoob:

"This publication shows how hard work and attention to detail reveal truth to conquer powers of evil that seeks to hide it."

At the end of the event, in a private conversation with the author and Advocate George Bizos, Minister Masutha said that his legal team, headed by Mr. Prince Maluleke, had finished reading the Report and evaluating the accompanying evidence. Asked by the author whether they agreed with the findings, Mr. Maluleke said, "We wouldn't have been here if we did not agree." Subsequently, Minister Masutha and Mr. Maluleke told the author and Advocate Bizos that they were going to explore ways to take the matter further.

Advocate George Bizos said about the book:

"One of the most important books that have ever been written about apartheid. Not only does it reveal the truth about Tsafendas by exposing apartheid's lies, but it also gives a very detailed and accurate description of what apartheid was and how its security forces operated."

The Man Who Killed Apartheid: The Life of Dimitri Tsafendas received widespread acclaim from academics, critics, journalists, jurists and scholars in South Africa and across the world for setting the record straight regarding Tsafendas and Dr. Verwoerd's assassination. For example:

Marcel Gascón Barberá wrote in Politicsweb:

"[The book is a] definitive investigation and does justice to a lucid and courageous man, in which the desire for freedom and justice always prevailed over the instinct of conservation and the yearning for security."⁸

Imraan Buccus wrote in the Mail and Guardian:

⁸ Marcel Gascón Barberá, "The Late Redemption of Dimitri Tsafendas." Politicsweb, 20 December 2018. Retrieved from: <https://www.politicsweb.co.za/news-and-analysis/the-late-redemption-of-dimitri-tsafendas>

“Dousemetzis’s book is almost 500 pages long and is an impressive work of scholarship. It has been validated by some of our leading legal, journalistic and academic minds. The case that he makes is unanswerable.”⁹

Timothy J. Christian, Professor of Law, Professor Emeritus, Faculty of Law, University of Alberta, Canada wrote:

“This is an important book because it corrects a big lie, and may help to resolve an historic injustice. Whether or not one agrees that the murder of a tyrant can be justified, it is clear that the lies of a racist regime cannot. Harris Dousemetzis and Gerry Loughran set the record straight, and for that we are grateful.”¹⁰

Max du Preez wrote on News24:

“The Dousemetzis book is important because it corrects history.”¹¹

Mark Gevisser wrote in Business Live:

“Harris Dousemetzis’s magnificent biography of Tsafendas demonstrates convincingly how the state covered up mountains of evidence about Tsafendas’s political history and motivations, in its efforts to have him declared insane.”¹²

Professor Robert M. Kaplan wrote in his review of the book in the South African Historical Journal:

“A good story, if nothing else, has been completely overturned by Harris Dousemetzis in his book, The Man Who Killed Apartheid: The Life of Dimitri Tsafendas. Everything in the official and widely believed version was wrong and deliberately so ... Dousemetzis has done a phenomenal task of researching his subject ... What he produced is the meticulous biography of a man robbed by history of his identity ... What Harris Dousemetzis has produced is nothing less than a classic example of the genre and one, more than most, that

⁹ Imraan Buccus, “Coming to Terms with our History – Winnie and the Anti-apartheid Assassin Tsafendas.” Daily Maverick, 1 April 2019. Retrieved from: <https://www.dailymaverick.co.za/opinionista/2019-04-01-coming-to-terms-with-our-history-winnie-and-the-anti-apartheid-assassin-tsafendas/>

¹⁰ Review of The Man who Killed Apartheid: The Life of Dimitri Tsafendas, Amazon Canada, 6 February 2019. Retrieved from:

https://www.amazon.ca/gp/product/1431427543/ref=ox_sc_saved_title_1?smid=A3DWYIK6Y9EEQB&psc=1

¹¹ Max du Preez, “Fake News: The Past and the Present.” News24, 18 December 2018. Retrieved from: <https://www.news24.com/Columnists/MaxduPreez/fake-news-the-past-and-the-present-20181218>

¹² Mark Gevisser, “The Moral Struggles Imparted by Verwoerd.” Business Live, 27 September 2019. Retrieved from: <https://www.businesslive.co.za/bd/life/2019-07-30-the-moral-struggles-impacted-by-verwoerd/>

has changed the historiography of this significant event ... Harris Dousemetzis is to be congratulated on a fine work that will inspire other workers in the biographic field.”¹³

Nikos Konstandaras wrote in The Nation, the oldest continuously published weekly magazine in the United States, in an article entitled “The Truth Behind the Assassination of the South African PM”:

“Harris Dousemetzis has placed the killing in its correct historical perspective.”¹⁴

Eusebius McKaiser said on the Eusebius McKaiser Show:

“A really significant book and probably one of the most important books published this year in our country ... a significant work of great historical, moral and political importance for anyone with even a cursory interest in twentieth century South African history and politics, and the inner workings of the apartheid state.”¹⁵

Moira Levy, in her review of the book in the New Agenda: South African Journal of Social and Economic Policy, wrote:

“The indisputable conclusion Dousemetzis comes to was one that many have long suspected, and that has for years been whispered in the public domain; Dimitri Tsafendas, a committed life-long Communist and activist, stabbed Dr Verwoerd to death in the parliamentary chamber in 1966 to register his revulsion at the concept of apartheid, and his hope was that in killing the “father of apartheid” he could possibly bring this appalling system to an end ... The importance of this book is that it finally lays to rest the lies, or even lingering doubts, constructed by the apartheid narrative. The author’s meticulous research demonstrates that the unlikely tape worm fable came from Tsafendas himself... The author can rest assured that no reader of this detailed and comprehensive account of the life of Tsafendis [sic] could possibly complete this 400-plus volume and still defend the narratives concocted at the time by the likes of security chief General van den Bergh, John Vorster, the then Minister of Justice who replaced Verwoerd as Prime Minister, and Major Daniel ¹³ Robert M. Kaplan, “The Man Who Killed Apartheid: The Life of Dimitri Tsafendas.” South African Historical Journal, 71: 3 (2019), p. 522.

¹⁴ Nikos Konstandaras, “The Truth Behind the Assassination of the South African PM.” The Nation, 16 August 2019. Retrieved from: <https://www.thenation.com/article/hendrik-verwoerd-assassination-dimitri-tsafendas/>

¹⁵ Eusebius McKaiser, “Eusebius McKaiser Show: Verwoed’s Killer Was Neither Mad Not Apolitical.” 22 November 2018. Retrieved from: <https://omny.fm/shows/mid-morning-show-702/verwoeds-killer-was-neither-mad-not-apolitical?fbclid=IwAR0y5ty-LMWTuGBjHP2nB0EaCq4-tlXK7rMNubx2Y09mJPOuyg90qNvL78w;>
<https://www.facebook.com/photo.php?fbid=10102646962173749&set=a.559451567779&type=3&theater>

Rossouw, head of the Cape Town Security Police, who interrogated Tsafendas hours after the assassination.”¹⁶

Don Makatile wrote in his review of the book:

“This book, the result of meticulous research, shines a particular spotlight on the comedy of errors that was the State’s case against the assassin ... The authors have done South African history a good turn with this offering, well enough to lodge an appeal with the Minister of Justice Michael Masutha to re-evaluate the assassination and declare it a political killing and Tsafendas a freedom fighter, not a lunatic.”¹⁷

Professor Richard Pithouse, University of the Witwatersrand Institute for Social and Economic Research:

“An extremely important book. This is a book that goes into the archive, that permanently changes a whole understanding of a whole era in our history. It's a really, really significant intervention.”¹⁸

Glen Relief wrote in the Daily Maverick:

“The fact that the assassination was politically motivated has been known for decades, and yet it has taken Dousemetzis to launch the long-overdue effort to officially acknowledge this.”¹⁹

Professor Jonny Steinberg, Professor of African Studies, Oxford University, wrote about the book:

“I bought it and started reading it and was soon filled with wonder and admiration. What an extraordinary achievement. What a unique, precious book. It is evidence, if any is needed, that the best work comes from passion to the point of obsession, and from mountains of labour.”²⁰

Marianne Thamm, who also listed it as her Book of the Year, wrote in the Daily Maverick:

¹⁶ Moira Levy, “The Man who Tried to Kill Apartheid, Harris Dousemetzis.” New Agenda: South African Journal of Social and Economic Policy, Volume 2019, Number 73, Jul 2019, p. 47.

¹⁷ Don Makatile, “Book Review: The Man Who Killed Apartheid.” Makatile Media. N.d. Retrieved from: <https://www.makatilemedia.com/book-reviews-makatile-media.php?eid=07b9bc9fec5c9400cf542ce8c86d0883>

¹⁸ Richard Pithouse, “Eusebius McKaiser Show: Verwoed’s Killer Was Neither Mad Not Apolitical.” 22 November 2018.

¹⁹ Glen Relief, “All We Are Saying is Give Tapeworms a Chance.” Daily Maverick, 30 April 2019. Retrieved from: <https://www.dailymaverick.co.za/article/2019-04-30-all-we-are-saying-is-give-tapeworms-a-chance/>

²⁰ Jonny Steinberg’s email to Bridget Impey, 10 January 2019.

“Dousemetzis and Loughran, in this meticulous - and perhaps at times a tad over-researched - biography of Dimitri Tsafendas, have corrected the lie that he was a simple-minded man who was driven to kill Verwoerd because a tapeworm told him to do so. A gripping read that restores Tsafendas to his rightful place in history.”²¹

Chris Townsend wrote in The Southern Cross, South Africa's Catholic Weekly:

“While I leave to you to buy the book and read the impressive research and presentation, I will say that it is, simply put, a book that asks all South Africans to continue, or begin, a process of re-looking at our history.”²²

Oscar van Heerden wrote in the Daily Maverick:

“The Man Who Killed Apartheid, offers a fresh and important take on the life of Dimitri Tsafendas – which contradicts the mainstream narrative of Hendrik Verwoerd’s assassin as nothing more than a madman.”²³

Percy Zvomuya described the book in his review in New Frame as “a crisply written, 500-page work of painstaking scholarship at whose heart is a Dickensian energy.” He also wrote:

“Dimitri Tsafendas was labelled mentally unstable for decades, obscuring his political motive in killing the architect of apartheid. Now the record has been set straight. The Man Who Killed Apartheid by scholar Harry Dousemetzis and Gerry Loughran is an important book as it gives agency back to Tsafendas, a man rightly eulogised by a friend as a ‘Displaced Person, Sailor, Christian, Communist, Liberation Fighter, Political Prisoner, Hero.’”²⁴

²¹ Rebecca Davis, “Reading Season: Daily Maverick’s Picks for Books of the Year.” Daily Maverick, 14 December 2018. Retrieved from: https://www.dailymaverick.co.za/article/2018-12-14-reading-season-daily-mavericks-picks-for-books-of-the-year/?fbclid=IwAR1RX27vVHBmBj175nfHKBBf-dQs_f9kt58SZrF8nwGQJ6hCqEB2RBvJ12w

²² Chris Townsend, “Why We Need to Revisit the Past.” The Southern Cross, South Africa's Catholic Weekly. 12 February 2019. Retrieved from: <https://www.scross.co.za/2019/02/why-we-need-to-revisit-the-past/>

²³ Oscar van Heerden, ‘Why Tsafendas should be seen as a National Hero.’ Daily Maverick, 6 December 2018. Retrieved from: <https://www.dailymaverick.co.za/opinionista/2018-12-06-why-dimitri-tsafendas-should-be-seen-as-a-national-hero/>

²⁴ Percy Zvomuya, “Verwoerd’s Radical Assassin.” New Frame, 4 February 2019. Retrieved from: <https://www.newframe.com/verwoerds-radical-assassin/?fbclid=IwAR0FUIMA-YscDpyLkfEGvsfNNSaWmc2XkrXRg2-vltsnhIF0wHY-zQKUnYs>

INTRODUCTION

At 2.15 p.m. on September 6, 1966, Dimitri Tsafendas stabbed to death, at his desk in the South African House of Assembly, Prime Minister Dr. Hendrik Verwoerd, the so-called “architect of apartheid.” Some forty days later, in a summary trial before the Cape Town Supreme Court, Tsafendas was declared to be schizophrenic and unfit to stand trial for the assassination. It was stated that he believed a tapeworm lived inside him which controlled his actions, and that he did not have any political motive for assassinating the Prime Minister. A subsequent Commission of Enquiry confirmed the court’s verdict and reaffirmed the largely negative evidence given at the trial as to Tsafendas’s character and behaviour.

This study reveals that both the police and the Commission suppressed and manipulated evidence to provide a distorted picture of Tsafendas. It reveals that Tsafendas was nothing like the hopeless, shambolic person portrayed in Court and by the Commission of Enquiry. It demonstrates conclusively that Tsafendas was not schizophrenic and did not believe he had a tapeworm. It shows that the tapeworm is a myth and that, after the assassination, Tsafendas gave the police clear and sound political reasons why he had killed Verwoerd. Tsafendas told the police that he had killed Verwoerd because he was “so disgusted with the racial policy.” He considered Verwoerd to be a “tyrant” and a “dictator,” as well as “the brains behind apartheid.” Therefore, he reasoned to the police, he hoped that with Verwoerd’s “disappearance”, the racist political system he had developed would sooner or later collapse, and a “change of policy would take place” in South Africa.²⁵ However, these sentiments, Tsafendas’s real reasons for killing Verwoerd, and his long history of political activism, were concealed and did not come to light at the time. How the tapeworm came into the case, as well as how Tsafendas was declared to be schizophrenic, will be discussed in detail. The study also shows the inaccuracy of the diagnosis of schizophrenia given by the doctors who examined Tsafendas before his summary trial.

The evidence shows that Tsafendas was a modest and thoughtful, if emotional, man; also a highly politicized man, a Communist with a lively social conscience and profound political convictions. We will see that Tsafendas was deeply political from a very young age and remained politically active until the assassination. He was arrested several times in Mozambique and Portugal for promoting Communism and denouncing colonialism. Due to his political activities, the Portuguese security police, PIDE, created a file on him (Secret Criminal Record no 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis) as early as 1938, when he was just twenty-years old, when he was “suspected of distributing communist propaganda.”²⁶

²⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150. Report of the Commission of Enquiry into the circumstances of the death of the late Dr. the honourable Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd, (hereafter cited as K150), Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. National Archives of South Africa (hereafter cited as NASA).

PIDE’s very detailed file on Tsafendas totalled some 130 pages at the time of the assassination. Two days after Dr. Verwoerd’s assassination, the Chief Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon sent a top-secret telegram to the Sub-Director of PIDE in Mozambique, instructing him that any “information indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of your country should not be transmitted to the South African authorities, despite the relations that exist between your delegation and the South African Police.”²⁷ PIDE played an important role in the case; this too will be examined here. The background and issues surrounding the assassination also appear in a markedly different light in the study. The study will reveal important and hitherto unknown information about Tsafendas’s life and political activities, for example his participation in the Greek Civil War on the side of the Communists.

Work on this research started in 2009. It has examined at least 12,000 pages of documents found in the National Archives of South Africa, Portugal and Britain, the vast majority of which had never previously been consulted.²⁸ All the documents found in these archives are in the author’s possession in digitized form and are included in the evidence submitted to the Minister. Further research covered all the South African newspapers of the time which were still available, along with the leading contemporaneous newspapers from Australia, Britain, Canada, France, West and East Germany, Greece, Italy, Mozambique, Portugal, the Soviet Union, the United States and Zimbabwe. All the articles found in these newspapers are also in the author’s possession in digitized form and are included in the evidence submitted to the Minister.

The author has conducted interviews with 146 people, 75 of whom knew Tsafendas personally (the difference between this number and the one in the letter to the Minister and the previous Report is due to the fact that since the submission of the letter and the previous Report, the author has conducted additional interviews with new witnesses). The interviewees included persons who met Tsafendas in the countries where he lived or which he visited, such as Germany, Greece, Mozambique, South Africa, Turkey and Zimbabwe. Some witnesses knew him exceptionally well and here speak formally about him for the first time; five of them had known him since he was a small child. Other interviewees included members of his family, workmates, housemates, fellow prisoners, visitors who talked to him in hospital and prison, and four members of his defence team during his summary trial after the assassination (two clinicians who examined him and two of his lawyers). All interviews with witnesses were conducted and recorded personally by the author; except those with Gordon Winter, which were conducted and recorded by Dr. James Sanders on behalf of the author. All the interviewees who knew Tsafendas were interviewed on several occasions on an ongoing basis, apart from David Bloomberg and Nicolas Mavronas, who were interviewed only once. Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky was not interviewed face to face or by telephone; however, he corresponded with the author on several occasions and answered all the questions sent to him. For each of the witnesses who knew Tsafendas, the footnotes give the date of the last interview between the witness and the author; on these occasions, the key witnesses reviewed the transcripts of their interviews and approved them. All these interviews are included in the evidence submitted to the Minister.

²⁶ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. Arquivo Nacional da Torre do Tombo, Lisbon (hereafter cited as ANTT).

²⁷ Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁸ All the documents found in the archives have been copied in the study exactly as they were found. The many spelling or grammar mistakes are of the original documents, not of the author.

In addition, several experts in fields relevant to this research were consulted on an ongoing basis; for example lawyers, judges, psychologists, psychiatrists, academics, high-ranking police officers and former secret agents. In order to properly examine the diagnosis of schizophrenia in regard to Tsafendas, the process followed, and all the medical aspects of the case, the author of the study collaborated with Professor Tuviah Zabow and consulted several renowned psychiatrists and psychologists, including Professor Alban Burke, Professor Kirk Heilbrun, Professor Phillip Resnick, and Professor Robert L. Sadoff.

Furthermore, the author carried out a series of interviews with Mr. Reyner van Zyl, the psychologist who examined Tsafendas after the assassination and one of the defence's main witnesses at the summary trial. Looking at the evidence the police had gathered at the time, especially the statements by people who knew Tsafendas and the two statements Tsafendas himself made to the police, Van Zyl admitted that it was "very contradictory" and "very different" to his diagnosis, as well as the diagnoses of the psychiatrists at the time. He conceded that at least some aspects of these diagnoses "appear to have been wrong". He told the author about this evidence:

“You know, I agree with you. The information that you have given me is very different from what my findings were at the time, and the findings of the other experts. Why these documents weren’t made available to us, as experts [I do not know] ... Yes. Look, obviously that is important information, and information that influences one’s findings in the end. There is no doubt about it ...”²⁹

Van Zyl conceded that if he had been in possession of such evidence at the time, his diagnosis, as well as the diagnoses of the other clinicians who examined Tsafendas, would have been different. He also admitted that Tsafendas “obviously” had killed Dr. Verwoerd for political reasons, and that the only possible reason why the police withheld this evidence was in order to conceal Tsafendas’s political motive.³⁰

In addition, the author collaborated closely and on an on-going basis with several relevant legal experts, including Advocate George Bizos SC, Professor John Dugard, Attorney Krish Govender, Advocate Dumisa Ntsebeza SC, and Justice Zak Yacoob. All of these eminent jurists have read the report, seen the evidence and discussed all aspects of the case with the author. All have agreed with the Report’s findings.

Advocate George Bizos told the author that:

“The police at the time would have never allowed it to become known that Tsafendas was a politically minded person who had killed Verwoerd for political reasons [the hope that apartheid would collapse without him]; if this had happened, Tsafendas would have instantly become a hero of the anti-apartheid movement. Then a trial of politically minded person like Tsafendas, just like the Rivonia, would have put apartheid in the dock... it would have also been hugely embarrassing for the police to admit that a dedicated Communist with such a long history of political activism had managed to penetrate what was alleged to be a top security system... Communism was at the time the monster in South Africa, the number-one enemy, and the killing of Verwoerd by a Communist would have been a major blow to the prestige of the regime, but also a big victory for Communism. Verwoerd at the time was adored and accepted by most Whites in this country and the thought that someone had killed him because he disagreed with his policies would have shattered such an image.”³¹

Advocate Bizos characterized this Report as “monumental,” and said “I have never seen anything like this before.” He described it as “the most comprehensive study of apartheid and how it operated that I have ever seen... It is a mammoth enquiry into the steps taken by the government to declare him mad and to cover up his treatment. It's absolutely amazing what the government did ... The police and the authorities of the time could have very easily built up a case [against Tsafendas], but they withheld it in order to find him insane." Advocate Bizos believes that this report is "of major historical importance for South Africa and as to our understanding of Verwoerd's assassination." He described the evidence gathered and presented by this report, proving that Tsafendas was not insane but politically motivated in killing Dr. Verwoerd, as "overwhelming and unquestionable."³²

²⁹ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

³⁰ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

³¹ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017.

Professor John Dugard said about the Tsafendas case and this report:

"Many South Africans suspected that there was a political cover-up in the Tsafendas case. The apartheid regime had two reasons for portraying Tsafendas to be insane. First, the regime wished to suggest that no-one in his right mind could kill such a wonderful leader as Hendrik Verwoerd. Secondly, there was the security aspect. The security apparatus, led by the Minister of Justice and Police, John Vorster, wished to avoid accountability for allowing a political revolutionary to be employed in a position close to the Prime Minister. So it was that the media and the legal proceedings were manipulated to present Tsafendas as a mentally deranged person dictated to by a tapeworm.

This research confirms that there was a cover-up. It shows convincingly that Tsafendas was a political revolutionary, whose assassination of Dr. Verwoerd was motivated by a hatred of Dr. Verwoerd and all he stood for. He was not an insane killer but a political assassin determined to rid South Africa of the architect of apartheid. Political assassinations seldom achieve their goal and this was no exception. But at least South African history should know the truth about Tsafendas. Dousemetzis has done South Africa a service by correcting the historical record."³³

Justice Zak Yacoob said he agreed "100 per cent" with all of The Report's findings and characterised it as "incredible". He added:

"The historical record shows that comrade Tsafendas killed Verwoerd, that he pleaded insanity at the trial, his plea was upheld and he was, consequent to his plea, confined at the pleasure of the relevant authority. If he had spoken the truth, he would have been sentenced to death, so the tactic was a very good one in the circumstances. History does not record that he pretended to be insane to save his life. This is well brought out in the research. The research shows conclusively that he did a deliberate courageous anti-apartheid act but pretended insanity at the trial; understandably so. I think the research speaks for itself.”³⁴

³² Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017.

³³ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 8 September 2016.

³⁴ Justice Zak Yacoob in a personal interview, 18 September 2017.

CONTENTS

Vol. I

Essential Background.....
Introduction.....
Chapter 3: The Assassination
Chapter 4: The Police Investigation

Vol. II

Chapter 5: Tsafendas's Summary Trial
--	--

Vol. III

Chapter 6: The Report of the Commission of Enquiry into the Circumstances of the Death of the Late Dr. the Honourable Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd
Aftermath and Conclusion.....
Bibliography.....
Appendix.....

OVERVIEW OF THE CHAPTERS

Chapter 3: The Assassination

Here the study deals with Dr. Verwoerd's assassination, including the national situation before the event, the act itself, the reaction in South Africa and around the world and the assassination's immediate aftermath.

Chapter 4: The Police Investigation

This chapter provides a very detailed account of the police investigation that followed the assassination. It sets out all of the important evidence collected by the South African police, including all statements in full from people who were questioned by the police.³⁵ An important issue discussed in this chapter is the role of PIDE in the investigation, something that has not been examined hitherto. All the top-secret documents of the South African police and PIDE found in the National Archives of Portugal and South Africa are included. This chapter also covers events such as the appointment of Tsafendas's defence team, Vorster becoming Prime Minister, certain announcements by Vorster about Tsafendas, and several press reports.

Chapter 5: Tsafendas's Summary Trial

This chapter provides a very detailed account of Tsafendas's summary trial. We see the preparations of both the defence team and the State ahead of the trial. Each witness's testimony is included, in most cases exactly as it was given, or after the removal of small talk or anything unimportant or not germane. Testimony is analysed in detail by comparing evidence gathered by the police which contradicted the testimony of witnesses, thus exposing inaccuracies. The analysis was much assisted by new evidence collected by the author. Forty-six of the witnesses who knew Tsafendas well were interviewed by the author and had parts of the testimonies heard in the court read to them and then offered their comments.³⁶

³⁵ Evidence found in the archives which was not directly related to the assassination or to Tsafendas or was of no importance has been reduced to summaries or omitted.

Chapter 6: The Report of the Commission of Enquiry into the Circumstances of the Death of the late Dr. the Honourable Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd

This chapter examines the report of the Commission of Enquiry which followed the summary trial of Tsafendas. It starts by explaining what a Commission of Enquiry is and then offers examples of how Commissions operated during apartheid. Some examples have been used, such as the Sharpeville Commission, in order to make clear how both the Commission and the police operated during apartheid. This is an important part of the chapter because of the many similarities between these previous Commissions and the one on Dr. Verwoerd's assassination. All the statements and important evidence collected by the Commission is presented. Several parts of the Commission's Report are examined in detail. The Commission is judged by the evidence it had in its possession at the time and not by evidence collected by the author. There is only one occasion where new evidence is presented.

Conclusion

This chapter offers a comprehensive but concise conclusion concerning everything discussed in this Report.

³⁶ In total seventy-five witnesses who knew Tsafendas were interviewed by the author. The author refers to forty-six witnesses who were asked specifically about issues which were raised during Tsafendas's summary trial and by the Commission of Enquiry. On several occasions, these witnesses were given extracts to read from the trial transcript and asked to comment on them. Most were people who knew Tsafendas as a free man before the assassination and were best placed to give an opinion on his behaviour and mental state. However, there were also important witnesses, like Liza Key, Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis, and Fathers Michalis Visvinis and Minas Constandinou, who came to know Tsafendas well during his time in prison or in hospital, when he confided extensively in them. The remaining twenty-nine of the seventy-five witnesses either did not know Tsafendas well enough to comment on the specific issues raised, or were members of his defence team, or had died before the author had the trial manuscripts in its possession.

CHAPTER 3

THE ASSASSINATION

THE ASSASSINATION

With his shooting plan a non-starter, Tsafendas decided to buy a knife and stab Dr. Verwoerd to death in the Chamber of the House of Assembly; the only part of the building where the Prime Minister was not escorted by his two bodyguards.³⁷ On Tuesday, September 6, he arrived at the House of Assembly at 6.45 am, one hour ahead of his normal start time, so that he could get his work done then go out and buy a suitable knife. Two shops which stocked knives were both closed when he arrived and he called at another store and inquired when they would open. He then walked up and down the pavement until City Guns opened³⁸ and he entered the shop in 57 Hout Street, Cape Town at 9.05 am. He was wearing grey, baggy flannels, a white shirt and light-coloured jacket. He asked the prices of sheath knives displayed in the window and was shown two. He asked about one which had a metal sheath and a spring clip and slipped it inside his trousers. He bought the knife, tendering a R10 note and receiving change.³⁹

Tsafendas then went to Wm. Rawbone en Kie, a local hardware store, and bought for R3.30 another sheath knife, with an aluminium handle more like a stiletto,⁴⁰ known as a Black Forest,⁴¹ whose blade was approximately 5½ inches long.⁴² He said, “I bought two weapons in order to make certain of the job I had in mind. I thought that something might go wrong and one weapon might be taken away from me.”⁴³ He later said he chose knives that were long enough to cause serious damage.⁴⁴

³⁷ Vic Alhadeff, A Newspaper History of South Africa, (Cape Town: Don Nelson, 1985), p. 107; Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁹ A.J. Harrison statement to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File 3. NASA.

⁴⁰ Maurice Klein testimony to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁴¹ Tony Harrison in A Question of Madness.

⁴² Maurice Klein testimony to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁴³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

Returning to Parliament, Tsafendas took the knives out of their wrapping paper and placed them in his locker. He poured an anti-rust solution on the blades, hoping it would poison Dr. Verwoerd's blood should he survive the stabbing. He used a small box of anti-rust solution which he kept for his work tools.⁴⁵ Tsafendas then changed back into his navy blue messenger's uniform under which he wound a waist belt with the two empty sheaths, and walked up to the first floor to serve tea and coffee to the reporters.⁴⁶ His colleagues said he seemed restive,⁴⁷ but he said he was waiting for an "important phone call."⁴⁸ He asked one of them if Dr. Verwoerd was going to speak that day and received a positive answer.⁴⁹

In the course of the morning, Tsafendas asked a fellow messenger to change lunch breaks with him so that he could take the 1pm-2pm slot instead of his rostered noon-1pm. His colleague refused and Tsafendas said he was going for a walk in the gardens that surround the Parliament, which he did around 12:15. Tsafendas was seen again in the Press Gallery at 13:05⁵⁰ and a little later he took an order for lunch from Gerald Shaw, the parliamentary correspondent for The Cape Times. When Tsafendas returned with his hamburger and a pot of tea, Shaw paid with a currency note and Tsafendas counted out change which was ten times more than the reporter was due.⁵¹ At 1.05 pm, Tsafendas shared his lunch, curry with rice, with another messenger in the messengers' room. When he finished, he brought a member of the South African Broadcasting Corporation staff his curry lunch. The correspondent complained about the meal and Tsafendas asked another messenger to take the uneaten curry back to the cafeteria, saying he was "in a hurry." This was around 1.50 pm. The messenger was still on his lunch break and refused, so Tsafendas took the plate and hurried off. "I have something to do," he said as he went.⁵²

A few minutes before 2.10 pm, when the division bell calling Members to the sitting was scheduled to ring, Tsafendas retrieved the knives from his locker and inserted them into the sheaths inside his pants. He then waited in the lobby until Dr. Verwoerd appeared and ⁴⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; A Question of Madness; Liza Key in a personal interview, 2 April 2015.

⁴⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁷ The New York Times, 'Dr. Verwoerd is Slain by Assassin in the South African Parliament', 7 September 1966: 1.

⁴⁸ Frankfurter Rundschau, 'Motiv für Attentat auf Dr. Verwoerd Noch Vollig Unklar', 8 September 1966: 1.

⁴⁹ The Cape Times, 'Messenger's Journey Before Killing', 10 September 1966.

⁵⁰ Noticias, 'Os Movimentos do Criminoso', 8 September 1966: 1.

⁵¹ Shaw, Believe in Miracles: South Africa from Malan to Mandela – and the Mbeki Era, p. 57.

⁵² Rand Daily Mail, 'I Have Something To Do, Said the Assassin', 7 September 1966: 1.

followed him into the debating chamber⁵³ just minutes after the bell rang.⁵⁴ The Prime Minister's two bodyguards left him and sat in the Public Gallery, about a hundred feet from his bench.⁵⁵ Dr. Verwoerd looked full of life and sat down with a jaunty air. He was expected to make a speech regarding his talks with Chief Leabua Jonathan and possibly to announce a new South African foreign policy towards the newly independent states of Botswana and Lesotho.⁵⁶ MP Aubrey Radford, who was a surgeon, walked in behind Dr. Verwoerd and as he did so, he was pushed violently; looking up, he saw the back of a parliamentary messenger hurrying in Dr. Verwoerd's direction.⁵⁷ Tsafendas's plan was to attack Dr. Verwoerd as he walked towards his place on the front bench and but he had difficulty pulling the dagger from its sheath and by the time he did so, Dr. Verwoerd had taken his seat.⁵⁸

Tsafendas moved rapidly up the Chamber to the front bench. Dr. Verwoerd looked at him calmly and without suspicion, assuming he was going to hand him a message. Tsafendas came up and stood over the seated Dr. Verwoerd, who leaned forward slightly to listen to what the messenger had to tell him.⁵⁹ At that point, Tsafendas put his hand into his coat and drew out the Black Forest.⁶⁰ His right hand rested on Dr. Verwoerd's left breast. He remained in that position for a portion of a second. When he lifted his right hand, he was holding a knife in his hand.⁶¹ Dr. Verwoerd raised an arm to stop the attack, but he was too late as blood was already dripping from his chest.⁶² According to the official post-mortem:

“The first stab was in the chest, just left of centre and a bit beneath the throat. The stab was aimed at the heart and reached its target.”⁶³

⁵³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁴ Frank Walter Waring statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁵ Alhadeff, A Newspaper History of South Africa, p. 107.

⁵⁶ Beyers, Dictionary of South African Biography, Vol IV, p. 739; Rand Daily Mail, ‘Unsaid Speech was Expected to Set New SA Foreign Policy’, 7 September 1966: 7.

⁵⁷ Dr. Aubrey Radford statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁹ O Primeiro de Janeiro, ‘O Assassinato do Dr. Verwoerd’, 7 September 1966: 2.

⁶⁰ Shaw, Believe in Miracles: South Africa from Malan to Mandela – and the Mbeki Era, p. 57; Tony Harrison in A Question of Madness.

⁶¹ Paul van der Merwe statement to the police, 8 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁶² O Primeiro de Janeiro, ‘O Assassinato do Dr. Verwoerd’, 7 September 1966: 2.

⁶³ Verwoerd, Verwoerd: My Journey through Family Betrayals, p. 16-17.

Tsafendas plunged the knife repeatedly into the Prime Minister's left side of his chest and neck. The knife penetrated the left ventricle of the heart and the lungs, while there was also a cut in the colon. Due to the wounds being inflicted so quickly, it was difficult to distinguish between the stabs.⁶⁴ Dr. Verwoerd slumped forward in his seat with blood spurting from his neck and chest, which quickly made a large pool on the carpet.⁶⁵

For a few moments, there was a stunned silence in the House before Members realised what had happened.⁶⁶ Then, several MPs jumped up from their seats and chaos reigned.⁶⁷ Frank Walter Waring, Minister of Sport and Tourism, aged fifty-eight, a former member of the South African Springboks rugby team, jumped from his place behind and to the right of the prime minister, got a neck-lock on Tsafendas and pulled him away. Tsafendas resisted but Waring pulled him further back, over a desk and on top of himself, and spotted a large dagger in Tsafendas's hand.⁶⁸ Someone shouted, "Get the knife,"⁶⁹ and someone else, "don't kill him, remember Oswald."⁷⁰

Many MPs sat immobilised by shock but others joined in and threw themselves onto Tsafendas. Nationalist Party MPs formed a whirling scrum around Tsafendas, punching and kicking him.⁷¹ Tsafendas's fingers were clenched around his knife and he managed to slash Waring's trousers before he was thrown to the ground. Dr. W.L. Venter grabbed his hand and with the help of others managed to prise the fingers open and seize the knife.⁷² M.P. Cas Greyling punched Tsafendas in the mouth, injuring his own hand.⁷³ Waring said later that he had spent many years playing international rugby and considered Tsafendas to be as strong as any man he ever tackled.⁷⁴

⁶⁴ J.J.J. Scholtz, Die Moord op Dr. Verwoerd, (Johannesburg: Nationale Boekhandel BPK, 1967), p. 24-25.

⁶⁵ The Canberra Times, 'Dr. Verwoerd Assassinated in Parliament House', 7 September 1966: 1.

⁶⁶ The Australian, 'Dr. Verwoerd Stabbed', 7 September 1966: 1.

⁶⁷ Willem L.D.M. Venter statement to the COE, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁶⁸ Frank Walter Waring statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁶⁹ Willem L.D.M. Venter statement to the COE, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁷⁰ Jonathan Stephenson, "Jonathan Stephenson on a Cape Town Incident". Fortnight, No. 159 (Dec., 1977 - Jan., 1978), p. 27.

⁷¹ Shaw, Believe in Miracles: South Africa from Malan to Mandela – and the Mbeki Era, p. 57.

⁷² Frank Walter Waring statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Willem L. D. M. Venter statement to the COE, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁷³ The Australian, 'Assassin Lunged at Sports Minister', 8 September 1966.

⁷⁴ Chris Barron, Collected South African Obituaries, (Johannesburg: Penguin Books, 2005), p. 336.

As Tsafendas was manhandled out of the Chamber, he shouted about Waring who had broken his nose, “Where is that bastard? I will get that bastard.”⁷⁵ His face was covered in blood and the front of his shirt was bloodstained.⁷⁶ MPs were shouting for an ambulance and Felix George Miles, one of the Parliamentary messengers, dialled for one, but found all the lines were engaged.⁷⁷ Police Captain Christian Pieter Coetzee found the second knife on Tsafendas’s belt⁷⁸ and Dr. Venter put the attack knife on the table in front of the Speaker’s chair, from where the police retrieved it.⁷⁹ Shaw looked at the Assembly clock, which was always kept five minutes fast, and scribbled the time in his notebook, twenty past two. He then rushed to telephone his news editor, Tom Jessop, that Dr. Verwoerd was bleeding to death. Jessop did not believe him and put the phone down. Shaw had to call him back to convince him he was serious.⁸⁰

The dying Dr. Verwoerd was quickly surrounded by MPs, at least six of whom were doctors – Radford, E.L. Fisher, G. de V. Morrison, C.V. Van Der Merwe, Venter and Maud Clark. He was deathly pale and bleeding profusely, with his left arm hanging by his side.⁸¹ The front of his shirt was bloodstained and blood dripped onto the green carpet.⁸² Dr. Muller, the Foreign Minister, placed a cushion under Dr. Verwoerd’s head.⁸³ Dr. Fisher was the first doctor to treat Dr. Verwoerd.⁸⁴ He tore open the Prime Minister’s shirt and waistcoat⁸⁵ and found heavy bleeding from four wounds in the chest.⁸⁶ At Dr. Fisher’s request, Dr. Morrison performed mouth-to-mouth resuscitation.⁸⁷ Dr. Fisher had his medical bag in the House, in which he kept an emergency supply of drugs.⁸⁸ He asked Dr. Morrison to fetch the cardiac

⁷⁵ Daily Express, ‘Assassination’, 7 September 1966: 2; Deutsche Zeitung, ‘Sudafrikas Ministerpräsident Dr. Verwoerd im Parlament Von Einem Weiben Erstoehen’, 7 September 1966: 1; Washington Post, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Slain at his Parliament Desk’, 7 September 1966: 1.

⁷⁶ Rand Daily Mail, ‘Desperate Fight to Reach Killer, Save Prime Minister’, 7 September 1966: 2.

⁷⁷ Felix George Miles statement to the police, 7 October 1966. K150, Vol. 2, File: 1. NASA.

⁷⁸ Christian Pieter Coetzee statement to the police, 6 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA

⁷⁹ Willem L.D.M. Venter statement to the COE, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁸⁰ Shaw, Believe in Miracles: South Africa from Malan to Mandela – and the Mbeki Era, p. 57.

⁸¹ Paul van der Merwe statement to the police, 8 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁸² Daily Dispatch, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Assassinated’, 7 September 1966: 1.

⁸³ The Times (London), ‘Dr. Verwoerd Murdered in the Parliament’, 7 September 1966: 1.

⁸⁴ Daily Dispatch, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Assassinated’, 7 September 1966: 1.

⁸⁵ Dr. Aubrey Radford statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁸⁶ Daily Dispatch, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Assassinated’, 7 September 1966: 1; Rand Daily Mail, ‘Desperate Fight to Reach Killer, Save Prime Minister’, 7 September 1966: 2.

⁸⁷ Dr. Aubrey Radford statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁸⁸ Daily Dispatch, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Assassinated’, 7 September 1966: 1.

stimulant, Coramine, from his office and the contents of two syringes were injected into Dr. Verwoerd's heart by Dr. Fisher and Dr. Morrison. He was given four injections in all.⁸⁹

Dr. Fisher, a psychiatrist and United Party MP, said, "We did everything we could to stop the bleeding. We gave mouth-to-mouth breathing and tried artificial respiration."⁹⁰ Dr. Radford felt for Dr. Verwoerd's left pulse. It was completely absent and never returned; he and Dr. Fisher, speaking quietly, decided that the Prime Minister was dead.⁹¹ Dr. Fisher said, "We kept on treating him and trying respiratory treatment ... but by then he had no pulse at all. It was hopeless."⁹² Dr. Verwoerd lay slumped in his seat, his head tilted back. He never uttered a word or a sound during the attack.⁹³ The four stab wounds were all delivered in an angled, downward direction, with at least two of them being fatal;⁹⁴ Dr. Verwoerd died within two minutes of being stabbed in the heart.⁹⁵

Dr. Verwoerd's wife, Betsy, was brought into the debating Chamber. She had been in the building, but she did not see the killing because the elevator to take her to the Chamber was delayed.⁹⁶ She bent slowly over the lifeless body of her husband, stroked his hair and kissed him on the forehead. At about 2.30 pm, an ambulance crew carried Dr. Verwoerd's body from the Chamber on a stretcher past ranks of stunned MPs, and transported it to Groot Schuur hospital. There, a team of three surgeons, two physicians and five medical students were standing by with emergency equipment prepared.⁹⁷

As MPs, officials and spectators in Parliament began to realise that Dr. Verwoerd was dead, uproar broke out. Two MPs collapsed in the lobby, others bellowed with anger.⁹⁸ Cabinet Minister and future Prime Minister P.W. Botha turned to Helen Suzman, the lone Member of Parliament representing the Progressive Party, and shaking his finger in her face, shouted in Afrikaans, "It's you who did this. It's all you liberals. You incite people. Now we

⁸⁹ Dr. Aubrey Radford statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁹⁰ Daily Dispatch, 'Dr. Verwoerd Assassinated', 7 September 1966: 1

⁹¹ Dr. Aubrey Radford statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁹² Daily Dispatch, 'Dr. Verwoerd Assassinated', 7 September 1966: 1.

⁹³ Rand Daily Mail, 'Desperate Fight to Reach Killer, Save Prime Minister', 7 September 1966: 7.

⁹⁴ Sunday Express, 'Killing Reconstructed.' 23 October 1966: 1; The Post, 'The Killer Knife', 30 October 1966: 1.

⁹⁵ Daily News, 'Death Inside Two Minutes Says MP', 10 September 1966.

⁹⁶ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), 'Lift Delay Spared Window', 11 September 1966.

⁹⁷ Daily Dispatch, 'Dr. Verwoerd Assassinated', 7 September 1966: 1.

⁹⁸ The New York Times, 'Dr. Verwoerd is Slain by Assassin in the South African Parliament', 7 September 1966: 1.

will get you. We will get the lot of you.”⁹⁹ Meanwhile, the police set upon a Cape Times photographer who had been recording the event, seizing his camera and film.¹⁰⁰

⁹⁹ Helen Suzman, In No Uncertain Terms - A South African Memoir, (New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1993), p. 69.

¹⁰⁰ Zuleiga Adams, Dimitrios Tsafendas: Race, Madness and the Archive, (PhD Thesis, University of the Western Cape, South Africa, 2011), p. 1.

Around 3.00 pm, some forty-five minutes after the stabbing, Barend J. Schoeman, the Leader of the House, said he believed the Prime Minister was dead.¹⁰¹ Dr. Verwoerd's death was confirmed at 3.05 pm, two days before his 65th birthday, by Groote Schuur's medical superintendent, Dr. J.G. Burger, who said that he had probably died instantly.¹⁰² Official confirmation of death followed at 3.30 pm, in a statement which said Dr. Verwoerd was dead on arrival at the hospital.¹⁰³

AFTER THE ASSASSINATION

Tsafendas had already been frogmarched out of the Chamber by three policemen, his face covered in blood, "streaming blood from his face," and the front of his shirt blood-stained.¹⁰⁴ A young man, crying hysterically, tried to attack him as he was led through the lobby but was fended off by the police.¹⁰⁵ Tsafendas was then thrown by the policemen at the back of a police van¹⁰⁶ and at 2.30 p.m. he was led by Captain Dirk Kotze Genis of the South African Security Police, to the police station in Caledon Square round the corner from Parliament.¹⁰⁷ Captain Genis was one of the officers who a few years earlier had received special training from the French in torture techniques;¹⁰⁸ he was also responsible for the interrogation of Imam Haron who was found dead in his cell after 122 days in detention.¹⁰⁹

Due to his injuries and bleeding, Tsafendas was seen at 2.50 p.m. by Dr. Ralph Kossew, the district surgeon who had examined him on June 17, 1966 over his claim for a disability grant. Dr. Kossew found that Tsafendas had a gaping wound of one and a half inches from his forehead to the bridge of his nose, which was swollen, and a half-inch cut on the lower lip. Tsafendas answered the questions guardedly but did not appear confused and the doctor noticed nothing wrong with his mental state.¹¹⁰ Immediately the doctor left, the ¹⁰¹ The Times (London), 'Dr. Verwoerd Murdered in the Parliament', 7 September 1966: 1; Washington Post, 'Dr. Verwoerd Stabbed to Death at his Desk in Parliament', 7 September 1966: 8.

¹⁰² Daily Dispatch, 'Dr. Verwoerd Assassinated', 7 September 1966: 1.

¹⁰³ The Chronicle (Bulawayo), 'Dr. Verwoerd Killed', 6 September 1966: 1.

¹⁰⁴ Rand Daily Mail, 'How Dr. Verwoerd Died', 7 September 1966: 1; Washington Post, 'Dr. Verwoerd Stabbed to Death at his Desk in Parliament', 7 September 1966: 8.

¹⁰⁵ The Australian, 'Dr. Verwoerd Stabbed', 7 September 1966: 1; The Canberra Times, 'Dr. Verwoerd Assassinated in Parliament House', 7 September 1966: 1.

¹⁰⁶ Sunday Express, 'Schoolgirl: I Saw Assassin Strike', 11 September 1966: 15.

¹⁰⁷ Dirk Kotze Genis statement to the police, 24 October 1966. COE, K150, Vol: 3, File: Afskrif van vorm Z 204. NASA.

¹⁰⁸ TRC, TRC Report: Volume Two, p. 195.

¹⁰⁹ TRC, TRC Report: Volume Three, p. 405-406.

¹¹⁰ Dr. Kossew's report on examination in case of alleged assault or other crime, 6 September 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File 3. NASA.

handcuffed Tsafendas was taken to a cell and seriously beaten by policemen. When Brigadier Aucamp¹¹¹ arrived, he began interrogating the prisoner while the violence continued.

Tsafendas was kicked as he lay on the floor, then the policemen made him stand and took turns punching him. When he fell they kicked him and when he stood they punched him. One policeman used his baton.¹¹²

At 4:20 pm, with Tsafendas still in the police cell, Captain Genis searched his room, No. 7, at Aldor Apartments, Rustenburg Ave, Rondebosch. In the second drawer of the wardrobe, he found the gas pistol¹¹³ that was sold to Tsafendas by Mastromanolis and Mavronas.¹¹⁴ At 4.30, the first statement regarding the assassination was taken by the police. It was the statement of Captain Christian Pieter Coetzee of the Security Police:

“I’m a captain in the South African Police, stationed Security Police, Headquarters, Pretoria. I serve as marshal of the President and is currently in Cape Town for the duration of the parliamentary session. On the 6th September 1966, at 2: 14 p.m., I was sitting in the parliament house and in the box of the president. I sat and watched as Dr. Verwoerd entered the hall. I followed him until he sat in his position on the bench. Dr. Verwoerd sat on the left side of the bench. Shortly after Dr. Verwoerd took his seat, I saw a person dressed in a messenger’s uniform, walk to the bench of Dr. Verwoerd. The person leaned across the bench like he wanted to say something to Dr. Verwoerd. At the same time I saw an object that looked like a knife, in the person’s hand. He stabbed Dr. Verwoerd. I could see that he stabbed Dr. Verwoerd in the left breast. Dr. Verwoerd raised his arms as if he wanted to avoid the stabbing. The person, however, gave two quick stabs to Dr. Verwoerd. The one in the right breast and one in the back. At that point I rushed to aid Dr. Verwoerd. A number of members of the Assembly, however, pounced on the man and overpowered him. Col. Buitendach and I took over the person. I also searched him and a second knife in a sheath, bound with a belt around his body was found. I seized this knife. Col. Buitendach handed me the dagger with which the person stabbed the Prime Minister. The person was arrested and taken to the A.K. Caledon Square. Later I discovered that the person was a messenger employed by Parliament. He was dressed in a uniform of the Assembly.”¹¹⁵

¹¹¹ The author is not certain of the correct spelling, but this is a close phonetic rendering.

¹¹² Tsafendas in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

¹¹³ Dirk Kotze Genis statement to the police, 24 October 1966. K150, Vol: 3, File: Afskrif van vorm Z 204. NASA.

¹¹⁴ Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016.

¹¹⁵ Christian P. Coetzee’s statement to the police, 6 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

In the police station, because of his injuries from the beating, the officer in charge asked Brigadier Aucamp to take Tsafendas to hospital.¹¹⁶ That Tsafendas was taken to hospital after almost four hours in custody supports his claim that he had been tortured. If the injuries were sustained during the brawl in Parliament, he would presumably have been taken there immediately or very soon afterwards, not four hours later. Brigadier Aucamp and his detail must have arrived with Tsafendas at the casualty department of Groote Schuur hospital around 6.30.¹¹⁷ During a heavily-guarded, one-hour visit,¹¹⁸ the police imposed a total security blackout on the hospital and nobody was allowed to see Tsafendas. Plain-clothed policemen were by Tsafendas's side constantly, including when he stripped to be examined.¹¹⁹

At 6.40, Tsafendas was examined by Dr. T.A. Darby who found him to be "co-operative" and "composed." According to Dr. Darby's report, Tsafendas had a broken nose with blood obstructing the airways, a ragged laceration from the right eyebrow to the nose and a laceration of the lower lip. The cuts were stitched, the nose put in a splint and he was given an anti-tetanus injection. Nothing about his mental state was mentioned in this report.¹²⁰ Policemen stayed with Tsafendas the entire time, even inside the X-ray theatre.¹²¹ Dr. Darby's examination would have lasted about twenty minutes.¹²² Whether Dr. Darby's report on Tsafendas's injuries was wholly accurate and comprehensive is not something the author can know. There is no evidence to suggest it is less than trustworthy, but it has to be noted that it was written at a time when doctors are known to have colluded with police to conceal crimes by the authorities.

Having been examined by Dr. Darby, Tsafendas was seen at 7 pm for around 30-45 minutes¹²³ by a psychiatrist, Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky, the hospital's head of psychiatry, at the ¹¹⁶ Tsafendas in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

¹¹⁷ Tsafendas was examined by Dr. T.A. Darby at 6.40, therefore he must have arrived at the hospital just before that.

¹¹⁸ Natal Mercury, 'Assassin Rushed to Hospital', 7 September 1966: 1; Rand Daily Mail, 'Tsafendas in Hospital', 7 September 1966: 1.

¹¹⁹ Natal Mercury, 'Assassin Rushed to Hospital', 7 September 1966: 1.

¹²⁰ Dr. Darby's statement regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, G.S.H. No: 65/14-081, 6 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹²¹ Natal Mercury, 'Assassin Rushed to Hospital', 7 September 1966: 1.

¹²² Dr. Darby's report says that he examined Tsafendas at 6.40 pm., while Dr. Sakinofsky's report states that he examined him at 7 pm., which obviously means that Dr. Darby's examination lasted twenty minutes.

¹²³ According to the newspaper reports Tsafendas's visit lasted one hour (Natal Mercury, 'Assassin Rushed to Hospital', 7 September 1966: 1; Rand Daily Mail, 'Tsafendas in Hospital', 7 September 1966: 1). Since Dr. Darby examined Tsafendas at 6.40 and Dr. Sakinofsky around 7, we can assume that Tsafendas arrived at the hospital around 6.35 the latest, which means that the hour visit gives Dr. Sakinofsky from 7 to around 7.35-7.45.

request of the Security Police and the Casualty Officer.¹²⁴ Dr. Sakinofsky gave to the author a vivid, first-person account of the scene that greeted him when he arrived at the hospital in response to a call to his home by Dr. Tockar, the psychiatry registrar/resident on duty. He said:

“We found Mr. Tsafendas in a room that was milling about with uniformed and plain-clothed security men of all ranks. It would have been impossible to establish any kind of rapport with him under these conditions, so there proceeded a stand-off where we refused to examine him until the room was cleared of the security personnel, which we were eventually able to effect only after we contacted the superintendent of the hospital and got his support. After we had interviewed Mr. Tsafendas at length and after calming his agitation at the time and gaining rapport, we did complete our examination. We deliberately refused to make any public announcements until the following day. We would have liked to have detained him in the hospital for further study and treatment but the security authorities overrode our wishes and took him away.”¹²⁵

This is Dr. Sakinofsky’s “Psychiatric Report on Demetrios Tsafendas”, which he compiled the day after the assassination:

“On September 6th 1966 at 7 p.m. I was called to Groote Schuur Hospital Casualty Department where I examined the mental state of a man who identified himself to me as Demetrios Tsafendas, and gave his age as 48 years.

The patient’s demeanour was moderately excited (but not elated or exalted); he was tense, breathing rapidly at times and he seemed perplexed. On two occasions he burst into weeping for a few seconds, but was not otherwise manifestly depressed.

His speech seemed unguarded; was under some pressure. He answered most questions readily. There was no formal syndromic schizophrenic thought disorder but I formed the conclusion that his reason was impaired, in that there was a manifest defect of logical processes with repeated non sequiturs. He was frankly deluded in that he said that the Portuguese Government had kept him in a prison for 14 years (between 1949 and 1963) for being a conscientious objector and that they had tried to kill him for this by the application of alternating currents to his head. He gave as one of the reasons for his assassination of the Prime Minister that the latter was in league with the Portuguese government. He voiced several other delusional ideas, vis. that the Prime Minister had been a foreigner (and he, Tsafendas, a South African); that the Prime Minister had been against the English way of life (with which he, Tsafendas, identified himself on account of “having had an English mother”). He said that Dr. Verwoerd had been against the ideal of a “Cape to Cairo” union which he, the patient, identified with “the Commonwealth”. He claimed that his mother, from whom he had been separated, was called Von Willem and that she was a member of an overseas Royal Family, and this idea he apparently connected with his concern for “the Commonwealth”. He stated that he had brooded over the weekend about the meeting between the Prime Minister and Chief Leabua Jonathan, which meant to him a further blow to “the Commonwealth”, and this had determined his actions subsequently. He appears to have misinterpreted the meeting as being related to immorality legislation, in that he claims to have applied for a double identity card, so that he could try and find a wife among either the White or non-White group; he stated that he had been rejected by women of both race groups and has therefore not been able to get married.

¹²⁴ Dr. Sakinofsky testimony in Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966: p. 131. K150, Vol. 10. NASA.

¹²⁵ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky in correspondence with the author, 30 March 2016.

Tsafendas spoke also of attacks of surges of “anguish and pain” throughout his body and limbs associated with “pressure headaches” (I note that he attended the out-patient clinic for headaches during February 1966). He claimed also to see “hairy springs and coils” in front of his eyes which he attributed to blood pressure. He was not hallucinated. He denied passivity feelings but said that this thoughts raced most of the time. He was fully orientated for time and person. His concentration was moderately impaired; his general knowledge reasonable (considering he claims only to have passed standard 5). He denied epileptic seizures.

The patient claims to have had several “nervous breakdowns”. He says that he was detained in a New York immigration transit centre in 1942 and given tablets. Subsequently he spent about 18 months in the Grafton State Hospital, New York, where he had electro-convulsive therapy (between 1946-1947) and was subsequently deported to Greece. He had a further period of hospitalisation for “nervous breakdown” in 1963 at the Ochosen Krankenhaus outside Hamburg.

Comment:

I formed the conclusion that the patient is not of sound mind, that his thought processes are grossly impaired and deluded, and that he is therefore not in a position to evaluate correctly the consequences of his deed. I consider that it is probable that his mental state is the result of damage caused by previous attacks of a mental disease called schizophrenia.

In my opinion further important information on the state of his mind should be obtained by the following:

1. He should be detained in a closed mental hospital ward for a period of observation. I would like myself to assess his mental state over a period of time and at successive interviews.
2. He should have the following special investigations:
Electro-encephalogram, blood and C.S.P.
Wasserman reaction (occasionally an organic disease of the brain can mimic the clinical picture of schizophrenia).
Psychological tests.
3. Medical reports should be obtained via the Portuguese government; and from the Grafton State Hospital, New York, and the Krankenhaus outside Hamburg (it is possible that the names of these places have been garbled by the patient).¹²⁶

Dr. Sakinofsky's psychiatric report and examination are considered in extensive detail in Chapter 5. However, there are a few things that should be noted here. First, and most important, is the fact that Tsafendas denied having "passivity feelings". Dr. Sakinofsky explained to the court during Tsafendas's summary trial that:

"A passivity feeling is another very important cardinal feature of schizophrenia whereby an influence on the patient is interpreted, by the patient, as being due to an external agency. For instance, if a patient believes that his body had been changed by hypnosis or by computers or something like that, or by an enemy, this would be passivity ... that one's will is taken over, one's thoughts are tampered with, one's body functions are interfered with by an external agency."¹²⁷

During Tsafendas's summary trial, the defence team's main argument would be that Tsafendas believed he had a tapeworm that had influenced his life since the 1930s, and that this was responsible for Dr. Verwoerd's assassination. However, in Dr. Sakinofsky's report on the examination he conducted just a few hours after the assassination, Tsafendas makes not a single reference to the tapeworm; he even denies believing that he had in him any ¹²⁶ Dr. Sakinofsky's psychiatric report on Demitrio Tsafendas, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File 3. NASA.

¹²⁷ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

“external agencies”. Therefore, at that time he either did not believe he had a tapeworm or he had not begun pretending to have one. Dr. Sakinofsky was the third doctor to examine him that day, after Dr. Kossew and Dr. Darby, all of them just a few hours after the assassination; Tsafendas did not mention the tapeworm to any of them.

Furthermore, Dr. Sakinofsky’s report contains no mention of Tsafendas’s physical condition at the time, nor the injuries for which he had just received treatment. Strictly speaking, Dr. Sakinofsky’s duty was only to examine Tsafendas’s mental state, but to ignore glaringly obvious physical problems would seem to be taking his instructions rather too literally. It might also be assumed that the physical injuries and the beatings Tsafendas had suffered could have had some effect on his mental condition at the time, but this does not seem to have been explored. It is also important to mention Dr. Sakinofsky’s report that he found in Tsafendas “no formal syndromic schizophrenic thought disorder but I formed the conclusion that his reason was impaired”. How and whether Tsafendas’s reason was “impaired” will be examined in detail in Chapter 5. Another point to highlight in Dr. Sakinofsky’s report is the fact that Tsafendas told him his mother was English; an obvious lie. Finally, the psychiatrists who would examine Tsafendas on behalf of the defence team would testify to the court that they found him to be unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes, that he talked in a disjointed manner and suffered from thought blocking. However, none of these symptoms were observed by Dr. Sakinofsky, nor by Dr. Kossew and Dr. Darby who also examined him a few hours after the assassination.

After Dr. Sakinofsky’s examination, Tsafendas was then driven off in a black American Sedan and returned to the police station in Caledon Square,¹²⁸ where he was soon again interrogated and beaten by Brigadier Aucamp and his men.¹²⁹ While all this was taking place, the Minister of Justice and Police, John Vorster, summoned the Commissioner of Police, Lt. Gen. John Keevy, and directed him to place Major-General Hendrik van den Bergh, head of the Security Branch and Deputy Commissioner of Police, in charge of the investigation. He considered him to be “the man best qualified to get to the bottom of this quickly.”¹³⁰ A few hours later van den Bergh was flying to Cape Town, accompanied by Brigadier Gideon Joubert,¹³¹ head of the Criminal Investigation Department (CID). As soon

¹²⁸ The Cape Times, ‘Suspect’s Jaws Broken’, 7 September 1966.

¹²⁹ Tsafendas in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

¹³⁰ John D’Oliveira, Vorster – The Man, (Johannesburg: Ernest Stanton, 1977), p. 180.

¹³¹ Born in Transvaal in 1912; joined the police in 1932, served as Deputy Commissioner of the CID from 1964 to 1968, promoted to General and Police Deputy Commissioner in 1968, before becoming Commissioner of the Police in 1972 (Piet Swanepoel in a personal interview, 6 April 2016).

as they arrived, van den Bergh and Major Daniel Jacobus Rossouw, head of the Security Police in Cape Town, took over the interrogation of Tsafendas.¹³² Tsafendas was held under the 180-Day Act¹³³ which gave the police authority to keep him in custody and interrogate him for up to 180 days without the presence of a lawyer. Meanwhile, Dr. T.E. Dönges, the Finance Minister, had temporarily taken over the duties of Prime Minister.¹³⁴

ACCURACY OF THE MEDICAL REPORTS DURING APARTHEID

The author is not in position to know the accuracy of any of the doctor's reports in Tsafendas's case, but they must be read against a background of known collusion by physicians with the authorities in those years, especially when in reference to Tsafendas's physical condition. According to Sydney Kentridge QC, "In South Africa, one after another inquests into deaths in detention found that 'no one was to blame' as the security police, the judiciary and district surgeons conspired to keep torture and murder under wraps."¹³⁵ It should also be noted, though, that neither Dr. Sakinofsky nor the other psychiatrists who would later be appointed by Tsafendas's defence team to examine him – namely Dr. Cooper, Dr. MacGregor and Dr. Zabow – were National Party or apartheid supporters.¹³⁶

On the other hand, according to advocate George Bizos, "on several occasions" during the apartheid years, doctors who were against the regime either

"due to pressure or out of fear collaborated with the police or they willingly reported a finding they knew the police would like ... sometimes they did it out of their own initiative; they knew what findings to make, they knew what would be the police's preferable finding and they knew what would happen to them if the police was not happy with their report ... this was a police state and people knew their 'duty' towards the state; in every profession there were people like this [who knew how to do their 'duty' towards the state]; no one had to tell them what to do, they knew what to do, they all knew how to play the game. There is absolutely no doubt that the doctors who examined Tsafendas knew that the state would want ¹³² The Cape Times, 'Suspect's Jaws Broken', 7 September 1966.

¹³³ A Voz, 'A Policia de Joanesburgo Pediu As Autoridades de Mozambique e Lisboa Todas as Informacoss Possiveis Sobre Tsafendas', 8 September 1966.

¹³⁴ The Times (London), 'Dr. Verwoerd Murdered in the Parliament,' 7 September 1966: 1.

¹³⁵ Quoted in Bizos, No One to Blame? A Personal Account of Inquests into Some Deaths in Detention under Apartheid, p. vii; For a detailed account of deaths in detention, the subsequent inquests and how the State conspired with doctors, jourists and the police "to keep torture and murder under wraps" see Bizos, G. (1998) No One to Blame? A Personal Account of Inquests into Some Deaths in Detention under Apartheid.

¹³⁶ Willie Burger in a personal interview, 9 April 2015; Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

him found to be mad and apolitical; they [the state] would have never admitted he was sane and politically motivated ... they [the doctors] knew this, no doubt whatsoever about it; they must have been really dumb or completely ignorant to not think of this, and I don't believe any doctor back then was ignorant of what was going on. And you must think that the doctors might have also thought that this is the best outcome for everyone concerned, including Tsafendas, who would escape the death penalty. So, they would have tried to find bits and pieces here and there, trying to build a case of insanity.”¹³⁷

Professor Alban Burke also affirmed to the author the control of doctors and hospitals during apartheid and questioned whether there was any “state pressure on them [the doctors who examined Tsafendas].” He said:

“Yes, I would question it [their findings], because there was immense state government control at that point, and they controlled various things. I mean, even the mental hospitals; in those times; psychiatric hospitals, were split between black and white, and the Black people ... and I observed it, I mean, I worked in one of those hospitals in the eighties... did not receive the same level of treatment as the White people. It was impossible to become a psychologist or a psychiatrist in those days if you were Black, for a number of reasons, so it was a very controlled environment. So, I think there was that fear and that paranoia, as well, and I'm wondering, to what extent, that may have influenced their decision in the end.”¹³⁸

In 1995, the South African Medical Association (MASA) apologised for its attitude and silence during the years of apartheid. The Association admitted that it had colluded with the apartheid authorities by remaining “silent” and by “tolerating interference with doctors’ treatment of prisoners and detainees.”¹³⁹ In 1997, South Africa’s medical profession found itself in the dock at the TRC hearings, when it was forced to answer for its complicity with the regime during the apartheid years. Evidence was submitted that doctors not only ignored the routine torture of prisoners, but colluded with the security police by turning a blind eye to the abuse, while on some occasions they even helped some detainees back to health so they could be tortured again. The support of district surgeons in matters of security facilitated the abuse of detainees. The MASA admitted that during the apartheid years there was a close relationship and collaboration between the medical association’s leadership, as well as doctors and district surgeons, with the security police, the department of health and the medical and dental council.¹⁴⁰

¹³⁷ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017.

¹³⁸ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

¹³⁹ Pat Sidley, “South Africa’s Doctors Apologise for Apartheid Years.” British Medical Journal, Vol. 311, No. 6998 (Jul. 15, 1995), p. 148.

The Commission heard that more than seventy prisoners died in detention between 1960 and 1990, in some cases largely from negligence. Instead of securing improvements in the health of its people, evidence suggested that the national health policy, because of the way it operated, actually contributed to the ill health of the poor. Such data were covered up to falsify the picture for public consumption. The Medical Association described its members as “both perpetrators and victims of apartheid and human rights abuses.” It conceded that “there was a close relationship between the Association’s leadership, the Department of Health, the security police, and the Medical and Dental council.”¹⁴¹ Given the extent of the abuses throughout the apartheid era, doubt must remain over medical reports and examinations concerning Tsafendas, especially, in view of his political importance.

A good example of how the police operated at the time is the following: after the Sharpeville massacre, the police insisted that they had used normal bullets and not the banned dum-dum variety. This was after telling medics at the hospital where the dead and injured were taken that it would not be in the national interest for them to make “exaggerated” disclosures. When victims were brought in, police officers removed those bodies that had been badly damaged by explosive dum-dum bullets. The hospital doctors did not interfere or protest. Up to twenty-four dead were buried in secret, ensuring that no post-mortems were carried out which might disclose evidence of the use of dum-dums.¹⁴²

The most infamous case of doctors conspiring with the apartheid authorities, however, was that of Steve Biko.¹⁴³ Dr. Ivor Lang, the Port Elizabeth district surgeon, examined Biko in detention and stated that he “found no evidence of any abnormality or pathology on

¹⁴⁰ Sidley, “South African Truth Commission Calls Doctors to Account for Their Actions during the Apartheid Era”, p. 1850.

¹⁴¹ Sidley, “South African Truth Commission Calls Doctors to Account for Their Actions during the Apartheid Era”, p. 1850.

¹⁴² Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 148-149.

¹⁴³ For a detailed account of the doctor’s conduct during apartheid and in Biko’s case see: Baxter, L.G (1985) Doctors on Trial: Steve Biko, Medical Ethics, and the Courts; Berat, L. (1989) Doctors, Detainees and Torture: Medical Ethics v. the Law in South Africa; Dowdall, T.L. (1991) Repression, Health Care and Ethics under Apartheid; McLean G.R., Jenkins, T. (2003) The Steve Biko Affair: A Case Study in Medical Ethics; Rayner, M. (1987) Turning a Blind Eye? Medical Accountability and the Prevention of Torture in South Africa; Rayner, M. (1990) From Biko to Wendy Orr: The Problem of Medical Accountability in Contexts of Political Violence and Torture; Silove, D. (1990) Doctors and the State: Lessons from the Biko Case; Zwi, A.B. (1987) The Political Abuse of Medicine and the Challenge of Opposing it.

detainee.”¹⁴⁴ The doctors who examined him before his death made a diagnosis of malingering in spite of overwhelming evidence that he had suffered traumatic brain injury. The inquest into Biko’s death provided a rare insight into the manner in which state doctors sometimes functioned in relation to the police and during apartheid¹⁴⁵ and “it became clear that the two responsible district surgeons, Drs Ivor Lang and Benjamin Tucker were deeply implicated in Biko’s death through gross neglect and falsification of medical records.”¹⁴⁶

Dr. Lang had “failed, apparently, to see the injury on the forehead on the occasion of his first and subsequent examinations ... failed to attach any significance to the lip injury, or to other bruises and visible symptoms which Dr. Lang admitted in court having noticed. He failed to ask the patient for his account of how these injuries were sustained. He did not prescribe any treatment, carry out any routine blood or urine analysis tests, or take the patient’s temperature at any stage. He did not recommend to the police that Mr Biko should not be left lying on the floor on urine-soaked bedding. He failed to keep the patient under medical observation following Biko’s transfer from Sydenham Prison Hospital to the Walmer Police Station. He did not keep Drs Hersch and Keeley fully informed about the patient’s condition or of actions taken which may have affected his condition. He failed to insist upon proper hospitalisation, or to oppose Dr Tucker’s acquiescence in the plan to send the patient to Pretoria. And only after Steve Biko died did Dr. Lang make any notes or reports of his findings.”¹⁴⁷

Dr. Lang eventually conceded that his diagnosis was incorrect as far as the question of abnormality was concerned and “highly inaccurate” insofar as it related to pathology.¹⁴⁸ However, the inquest concluded that “the available evidence does not prove that the death was brought about by any act or omission involving or amounting to an offence on the part of any person.”¹⁴⁹ The South African Medical Council (SAMDC) also concluded that there was no evidence of improper or disgraceful conduct on the part of the two doctors.¹⁵⁰

¹⁴⁴ Lawrence G. Baxter, “Doctors on Trial: Steve Biko, Medical Ethics, and the Courts.” South African Journal on Human Rights, (1985), p. 137-140.

¹⁴⁵ D. Silove, “Doctors and the State: Lessons from the Biko Case.” Social Science & Medicine, Volume 30, Issue 4, (1990), p. 417.

¹⁴⁶ T.L. Dowdall, “Repression, Health Care and Ethics under Apartheid.” Journal of Medical Ethics, (Dec., 1991), 17 (Supplement), p. 52.

¹⁴⁷ Dowdall, “Repression, Health Care and Ethics under Apartheid”, p. 52; Mary Rayner, Turning a Blind Eye? Medical Accountability and the Prevention of Torture in South Africa, (Washington, D.C.: AAAS Committee on Scientific Freedom and Responsibility, 1987), p. 28.

¹⁴⁸ Baxter, “Doctors on Trial: Steve Biko, Medical Ethics, and the Courts”, p. 137-140.

¹⁴⁹ Bizos, No One to Blame? A Personal Account of Inquests into Some Deaths in Detention under Apartheid, p. 71.

¹⁵⁰ Nicholas, “Psychological Sequelae of Political Imprisonment during Apartheid”, p. 19.

It took eight years of intense pressure before the SAMDC took disciplinary action. On 30 January 1985, the Pretoria Supreme Court ordered the SAMDC to hold an inquiry into the conduct of the doctors who treated Steve Biko for five days before he died. In his judgment, Judge President of the Transvaal Mr Justice W. G. Boshoff said that there was prima facie evidence of improper or disgraceful conduct on the part of the Biko doctors in a professional respect.¹⁵¹ Dr. Land was then stripped of his medical qualifications.¹⁵² Biko's death had serious consequences for the medical profession in South Africa and led to the expulsion of its Medical Association from the World Medical Association, though it was later re-admitted. The British Medical Association expressed the view at the time that "South African doctors do not have the ethical machinery capable of dealing with the affair."¹⁵³

Fortunately, not all doctors were like Dr. Lang, ready to cooperate with the apartheid state. For example, Dr. Wendy Orr,¹⁵⁴ a district surgeon in Port Elizabeth, would make notes of police brutality and torture when she examined prisoners. Although Dr. Lang happened to be her direct superior, Dr. Orr took her evidence to law and forced the Supreme Court to issue an interdict against the abuse of detainees. As result of Dt. Orr's intervention, she was ordered onto "other duties" and barred from visiting political detainees in prisons.¹⁵⁵

REACTIONS TO THE ASSASSINATION

Within hours of the assassination, the South African authorities declared that the killing was devoid of political meaning and that the killer was a madman. Although Tsafendas had not even been interrogated and nothing was known about him, the South African embassy in Brussels released a communique along exactly those lines. It said that the murder of Dr. Verwoerd had "manifestly been perpetrated by an unbalanced individual and was therefore devoid of political significance. Independently of the fact that South Africa has been plunged into mourning by the death of a man who, in view of his age, had become a father for both the Whites and Blacks, there will be no changes, despite the speculations which could arise

¹⁵¹ South African History Online, The Inquest into Biko's Death and his Funeral. Retrieved from: <http://www.sahistory.org.za/article/inquest-bikos-death-and-his-funeral>

¹⁵² Nicholas, "Psychological Sequelae of Political Imprisonment during Apartheid", p. 20.

¹⁵³ Baxter, "Doctors on Trial: Steve Biko, Medical Ethics, and the Courts", p. 137-138.

¹⁵⁴ For more about Dr. Orr's case see: Dowdall, T.L. (1991) Repression, Health Care and Ethics under Apartheid; Orr, W. (2000) From Biko to Basson: Wendy Orr's Search for the Soul of South Africa as a Commissioner of the TRC; Reyner, M. (1990) From Biko to Wendy Orr: The Problem of Medical Accountability in Contexts of Political Violence and Torture.

¹⁵⁵ Dowdall, "Repression, Health Care and Ethics under Apartheid", p. 52-53; The New York Times, 'Doctor is Shifted by South Africa', 6 October 1985.

on this subject.” It said work would be continued on the basis of the “peaceful apartheid policy for which Dr. Verwoerd had laid the foundations.”¹⁵⁶

As result of the assassination, cinemas were closed, regular radio programmes and sports events were cancelled, shops shut and university lectures postponed across South Africa.¹⁵⁷ Dr. Verwoerd’s death also had financial implications, “shocking the Rand into numbness”¹⁵⁸ the Johannesburg Stock Exchange shut down¹⁵⁹ while in London and Paris the stock market fell.¹⁶⁰ Newspapers rushed out special editions with huge headlines and regular radio programmes were halted. A seven-minute documentary film entitled “A Nation’s Tribute” was created within twenty-four hours by Killarney Studios in Johannesburg. Copies were flown to Durban and to Cape Town and shown for a week in the cities’ centre cinemas, then in suburban ones after normal programmes. The documentary opened with a shot of flags flying at half-mast, then, using newsreel film, traced Dr. Verwoerd’s eight years as Prime Minister. It closed on a moment of hope, with requiem music playing as Dr. Verwoerd gazed ahead with a smile on his lips.¹⁶¹

On September 22, 1966, just sixteen days after the assassination, John Vorster who had been selected as Prime Minister, announced that the planned new version of the one-Rand silver coin would bear the head of Dr. Verwoerd instead of that of Jan van Riebeeck.¹⁶² One South African government official commented about the assassin, “Thank God he wasn’t Coloured. That would have sparked off a reaction that would make apartheid seem like child’s play.”¹⁶³

A Black woman in Cape Town told a reporter, “thank God it was not one of our people who did it.” A White bus conductor said, “They have killed our Prime Minister. Now I hope that Vorster takes over and shoots them all. The Communists, liberals, all of them.”¹⁶⁴ Describing a tribute session held in Parliament in the wake of the assassination, the Cape Town correspondent of The Australian said the atmosphere was one of “restrained emotion.”

¹⁵⁶ Rand Daily Mail, ‘Devoid of Political Meaning,’ 7 September 1966.

¹⁵⁷ The New York Times, ‘Assassination Stirs Concern Among Leaders of Black Africa,’ 7 September 1966: 17; Pretoria News, ‘Sports Cancelled as Mark of Respect for Dr. Verwoerd,’ 7 September 1966.

¹⁵⁸ The Chronicle (Bulawayo), ‘Dr. Verwoerd’s Death Shocks Rand Into Numbness,’ 7 September 1966.

¹⁵⁹ Washington Post, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Stabbed to Death at his Desk in Parliament,’ 7 September 1966: 8.

¹⁶⁰ The New York Times, ‘London Stocks Fall After Dr. Verwoerd Assassination,’ 7 September 1966: 69; Die Welt, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Ermordet,’ 7 September 1966: 1; Sunday Times (Johannesburg), ‘Assassination Shakes Market,’ 11 September 1966: 24; The Canberra Times, ‘Stock Exchange Numb,’ 7 September 1966: 1.

¹⁶¹ Daily News, ‘Durban Indians Pay Tribute in Prayer,’ 8 September 1966: 3; The Cape Times, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Film in City,’ 8 September 1966.

¹⁶² The Canberra Times, ‘Coins Honour Verwoerd,’ 23 September 1966: 6.

¹⁶³ The Herald (Melbourne), ‘Murder Shocks World,’ 7 September 1966: 2.

¹⁶⁴ Washington Post, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Stabbed to Death at his Desk in Parliament,’ 7 September 1966: 8.

Dr. Verwoerd's green leather front bench was conspicuously empty and on the green carpet next to it there was a faint discolouration where he bled to death.¹⁶⁵

SOUTH AFRICA

Reaction to the killing in South Africa ranged from shock and outrage in the Afrikaner community to hilarity among some Black Africans. Some Black officials condemned the assassination publicly but the vast majority of ordinary Blacks were delighted¹⁶⁶ although they were reluctant to demonstrate their support in public. However, where Blacks lived away from white eyes, they hailed the news that "the tyrant is dead" by singing, dancing and drinking. Black neighbourhoods in Johannesburg were subjected to special police patrols as a "precautionary measure."¹⁶⁷ A song was composed and sung about Dr. Verwoerd's death and later became a playground ditty for Black children playing skipping rope.¹⁶⁸ Some Blacks began to dub Tsafendas "Dimitri Defendus," meaning Tsafendas "defended us" from Dr. Verwoerd.¹⁶⁹ Black South Africans were not the only ones who celebrated Dr. Verwoerd's death though. Stanley Uys, parliamentary correspondent of the Sunday Times, stated many years later that an unnamed member of Dr. Verwoerd's cabinet threw a party at his home that night.¹⁷⁰ None of this was published in the South African press at the time.

On Robben Island, the political prisoners heard the news almost immediately. One of them, Lionel Davis, a prominent anti-apartheid revolutionary, told the author that the news delighted them all and Tsafendas immediately took on heroic stature. He said, "We all saw him as a hero. He was a hero in our eyes. All political, orchestrated political persuasions on the island, hailed him as a hero." However, they were careful not to show their delight as they knew what would follow.¹⁷¹ This was described by Nelson Mandela as follows: "As often happened on the island, we had learned significant political news before our own guards. But by the following day it was obvious that they knew, for they took out their anger on us. The ¹⁶⁶ Lionel Davis in a personal interview, 8 April 2015; Michalis Michelis in a personal interview, 23 January 2016; Mary Vasilakou in a personal interview, 25 March 2015.

¹⁶⁵ The Australian, 'Murder Shocks World, But Some Leaders Are Glad,' 8 September 1966.

¹⁶⁷ Frankfurter Allgemeine, 'Sudafrikas Ministerprasident Dr. Verwoerd Im Parlament ermordet,' 7 September 1966: 1; Noticias, 'Proseguem as Investigacoes,' 8 September 1966: 1.

¹⁶⁸ A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

¹⁶⁹ Louise O' Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

¹⁷⁰ Chris Barron, 'Stanley Uys: Veteran Journalist who Tracked the Rise and Fall of the Nats', Sunday Times (Johannesburg), 9 January 2014.

¹⁷¹ Lionel Davis in a personal interview, 8 April 2015.

tension that had taken months to abate was suddenly at full force. The authorities began a crackdown against political prisoners as though we held the knife that stabbed Verwoerd.”¹⁷²

In contrast to the majority, many prominent Black leaders condemned the assassination. They included the Rev. Benjamin Rajuili, Chief Whip of the Opposition Transkeian Democratic Party, the Rev. O. Mooki, chairman of the Orlando School Board, and M.P. Vundia, member of the Joint Advisory Board. African supporters of apartheid, including Ephraim Tahabalala, President of the African Foundation, and F.S.M. Mneube, President of the Johannesburg Chamber of Commerce, vigorously denounced the killing.¹⁷³ The Reverend J.S. Gericke, Moderator of the Dutch Reformed Church, compared Dr. Verwoerd to the Biblical King David, describing him as the victim of vicious attacks and lying propaganda. He added that “if anyone thinks this sad event will break us, he doesn’t know the strength of the people who produced a Hendrik Verwoerd.”¹⁷⁴

South African politicians who commented included the Minister of Transport and Leader of the House of Assembly, Barend J. Schoeman, who said Dr. Verwoerd’s death was “an irreplaceable loss to South Africa, but it was God’s will,”¹⁷⁵ and Helen Suzman, the sole MP of the Progressive Party, who called the assassination “one of the most ghastly shocks” she had ever experienced.¹⁷⁶ MP A. E. Trollip said in the House the next day that when Tsafendas’s dagger stabbed Dr. Verwoerd’s heart, “he stabbed in the heart of South Africa.”¹⁷⁷ In Britain, staff at the South African embassy in London’s Trafalgar Square reacted with disbelief, then shock. One hour after the news broke, the embassy flag was lowered to half-mast.¹⁷⁸

The Hindu Foundation of Durban held special prayer services,¹⁷⁹ and Mr. A. Habib, who sat on the Indian Council, joined the condemnations. The South African Jewish community also held special prayer services for Dr. Verwoerd. A rabbi in Johannesburg praised Dr. Verwoerd as “one of the greatest, if not the greatest, Prime Ministers South Africa has ever produced.” Rabbi Super acknowledged that in 1936 Dr. Verwoerd opposed the admission to South Africa of Jewish refugees from Germany, but added that in 1948 he endorsed the new National Party policy of non-discrimination against any section of the ¹⁷⁴ The Australian, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Victim of Lies Says Moderator’, 12 September 1966: 1.

¹⁷² Mandela, Long Walk to Freedom, p. 513.

¹⁷³ Rand Daily Mail, ‘Act Condemned by Non-White Leaders’, 7 September 1966: 2.

¹⁷⁵ The Cape Times, ‘It was God’s Will Says Schoeman’, 8 September 1966.

¹⁷⁶ The Globe and Mail, ‘Assassination Condemned by Friend and Foe Alike’, 7 September 1966: 3.

¹⁷⁷ B.M. Schoeman, Die Sluipmoord op Dr. Verwoerd, (Pretoria: Strydpers Bpk, 1975), p. 2.

¹⁷⁸ The Cape Times, ‘Sorrowing South Africa’s solemn tributes’, 7 September 1966: 10.

¹⁷⁹ Daily News, ‘Durban Indians Pay Tribute in Prayer’, 8 September 1966: 3.

European population in South Africa.¹⁸⁰ Chief Rabbi B.M. Casper expressed his personal grief and the “sorrow and dismay of the Jewish community,” while Dr. T. Schneider, President of the South African Jewish Board of Deputies, sent the following telegram to Betsy Dr. Verwoerd: “The South African Jewish community is deeply shocked by this tragic national calamity and offers you and your children heartfelt condolences. We mourn the passing of a dedicated son of this country.”¹⁸¹

Alan Paton, leader of the Liberal Party and known worldwide as the author of the novel Cry, the Beloved Country, said “acts of violence such as this can never achieve anything, no matter what the intention of the assassin.”¹⁸² Twenty days later Paton described Dr. Verwoerd in realistic terms in an article in The Star entitled, “Dr. Verwoerd: his world of illusion.” Paton there described the Prime Minister as hypocritical, charging that he was racist during the 1930s, 1940s, and early 1950s, although he changed for the better later.¹⁸³

The South African media published numerous messages of condolence and condemnation, avoiding any statement applauding the killing, either from inside or outside South Africa. Typical was The Cape Times which published detailed condemnations from politicians, prominent citizens, church leaders and representatives of the Jewish, Indian and Coloured communities, clearly in an effort to demonstrate that all South Africans condemned the assassination.¹⁸⁴ Elsewhere, Dr. Verwoerd was characterised as the “father of the nation,” the “Moses of the Afrikaner tribe” and “apartheid’s architect.”¹⁸⁵ However, Johnny Makhatini, an ANC exile leader in Algiers, hailed the assassination as “the beginning of the end for apartheid,”¹⁸⁶ and said that it would “help the morale of guerrilla fighters in South Africa ... it would increase confusion among the Republic’s whites.”¹⁸⁷

Albie Sachs, the South African barrister and anti-apartheid activist who had arrived in London just a month earlier after spending eight months in solitary confinement in Cape Town for anti-apartheid activities, said in an interview on the British television programme Twenty-Four Hours that there would be “jubilation” among Black people in the townships that “a tyrant has fallen.” He added, “One thinks of the people who were killed at the time of ¹⁸⁰ Rand Daily Mail, ‘Act Cndemned By Non-white Leaders’, 7 September 1966: 2.

¹⁸¹ South African Jewish Times, ‘South African Jewry Share in National Grief’, 9 September 1966: 1.

¹⁸² Washington Post, ‘London Conference Shocked by Slain’, 7 September 1966: 8.

¹⁸³ Alan Paton, ‘Dr. Verwoerd: His World of Illusion’, The Star, 26 September 1966: 18.

¹⁸⁴ The Cape Times, ‘Sorrowing South Africa’s Solemn Tributes’, 7 September 1966: 10.

¹⁸⁵ Lapierre, A Rainbow in the Night: The Tumultuous Birth of South Africa, p. 126.

¹⁸⁶ The Australian, ‘Murder shocks World, But Some Leaders Are Glad’, 8 September 1966.

¹⁸⁷ The Globe and Mail, ‘Assassination Condemned By Friend and Foe Alike’, 7 September 1966: 3; The Herald (Melbourne), ‘Murder Shocks World’, 7 September 1966: 2.

Sharpeville... of the other various victims of apartheid.”¹⁸⁸ Asked if he regretted the assassination, he replied, “Murder is foul, wherever it happens, but I would be hypocritical if I said I had any regrets.”¹⁸⁹ None of these statements was published in the South African press. Later a judge, Albie Sachs told the author that he had also said during the interview that “assassination never solved problems.” However, this comment was omitted by the newspapers that reported his interview.¹⁹⁰

The Afrikaans media responded to the assassination in emotional terms. Die Transvaler wrote, “Dr. Verwoerd is no more. That is a thought which pierces the soul of all who have known him... it is heart-rending... it is not only that a great void has come about in the life of the people of South Africa, but a void has come that cannot again be filled.” Die Burger wrote that “the death of the Prime Minister and the horrible circumstances surrounding it is a shock that will, to a large extent, test our political system and our public life. Winds of excitement and change, of distrust and indignation will blow through our country and they will be fanned by those who seek our destruction.” The newspaper called for “calm and balance” from all sections of society, stating that, “it is with these characteristics that the governing party will have to approach the problem of a permanent successor.”¹⁹¹ On 10 September, author G. H. Calpin, in an article in Die Vaderland wrote: “I cannot think of South Africa without Dr. Verwoerd.”¹⁹²

Volkshandel, an Afrikaner monthly periodical, characterised Dr. Verwoerd as “a great statesman and a dynamic leader” and added:

“Hendrik Verwoerd will stand in history on the same pedestal as Paul Krueger [the leader of the Afrikaner republics in the Boers Wars]. He is the political as well as economic father of our white Republic ... His sincere efforts to help non-white races developed independently in their own areas has laid the foundation for a future template of multi-racial state with independent ethnic groups.”¹⁹³

Under the headline “A Heinous Crime,” the English-language Rand Daily Mail said the people of South Africa had experienced the “most profound shock and horror,” adding that “non-white leaders of all political opinions were quick to express horror” at Dr.

¹⁸⁸ The Times (London), ‘BBC News Criticized’, 7 September 1966: 1.

¹⁸⁹ The Herald (Melbourne), ‘Murder Shocks World’, 7 September 1966: 2.

¹⁹⁰ Albie Sachs in a personal interview with the author, 27 September 2016.

¹⁹¹ Pretoria News, ‘Assassination Swept All Away’, 9 September 1966.

¹⁹² Schoeman, Die Sluipmoord op Dr. Verwoerd, p. 90.

¹⁹³ Miller, An African Volk: The Apartheid Regime and Its Search for Survival, p. 40.

Verwoerd's death. The Rev. Benjamin Rajuili, Chief Whip of the opposition Transkeian Democratic Party, said, "If his murderer believed this would help the African people, he must be a misguided madman."¹⁹⁴ The Zululand Times in a very small article condemned this "reprehensible and irresponsible act"¹⁹⁵

Around the same time, youngsters play-acting with knives, started yelling at one another, "I'll Demitrio you" or "I'll Tsafendas you!" Three weeks after the assassination, two jokes started going around South Africa about Dr. Verwoerd's death. The first one was set in heaven, where St. Peter asked Dr. Verwoerd, "How did you get here?" He replied, "A messenger sent me." The second was a "knock-knock" joke, showing that Dr. Verwoerd was already forgotten by some:

"Knock, knock."

"Who's there?"

"Hendrik."

"Hendrik who?"

"Have you forgotten already?"¹⁹⁶

GREEKS IN SOUTH AFRICA

News that a Greek had killed Dr. Verwoerd had a huge effect on members of South Africa's Greek community, numbering some 40,000,¹⁹⁷ complicated by the "pro" or "anti" reactions of their White and Black friends. Those who knew Greeks who were of a liberal disposition were not afraid to express their views, congratulating them that a compatriot had assassinated their tyrant. In Cape Town, Peter Protoulis employed a Black woman servant whose brother was imprisoned on Robben Island. She would often point to the island and tell Protoulis about him. After the assassination, she pointed again and told him that her brother would be very happy about Dr. Verwoerd's death. She was delighted that it was a Greek who killed the man she said caused them so much suffering and she told Protoulis that there were celebrations throughout her neighbourhood.¹⁹⁸ Also in Cape Town, some of Elias ¹⁹⁴ Rand Daily Mail, 'Act Condemned by Non-White Leaders', 7 September 1966: 2.

¹⁹⁵ Zululand Times, 'The Late Dr. Verwoerd', 8 September 1966: 1.

¹⁹⁶ E. J. Kahn, Jr., The Separated People: A Look at Contemporary South Africa, (New York: W.W. Norton & Company, Inc., 1968), p. 148, 164.

¹⁹⁷ Rand Daily Mail, 'Greeks Are Given 'No Retaliation' Assurance', Either 7 or 14 September 1966, most likely the 7th.

¹⁹⁸ Peter Protoulis in a personal interview, 28 May 2016.

Constantaras's Black colleagues congratulated him for being Greek and expressed happiness over the assassination.¹⁹⁹ In Johannesburg, Mary Vasilakou's and Akis Apergis's Black friends and colleagues expressed their satisfaction and said there were celebrations in their home communities. Some Black South Africans asked Mary Vasilakou if she knew Tsafendas personally and praised his bravery. Vasilakou said it was the first time in South Africa that she felt so proud of being Greek.²⁰⁰

The reaction of White South Africans was mostly angry and Greek shops became targets for their wrath. In Cape Town, Johannesburg and Pretoria, the windows of Greek shops and houses were smashed,²⁰¹ some Greek shopkeepers were verbally abused and others received threatening telephone calls. The canopy outside a Greek shop in Johannesburg was set on fire,²⁰² many café customers turned hostile and some walked out after making insulting remarks. An assistant at a Greek café in Sunnyside, Pretoria arrived for work to find one of the glass doors broken. A cartridge case for a 0.25 bullet was found in the doorway and the bullet was embedded in a pile of scattered sweet tins. The owner said he could not understand why people were reacting against the Greeks: "We feel as badly as all South Africans about the assassination of our Prime Minister. There is no proof at all that the man is Greek."²⁰³ The Commissioner of Police, Lt. Gen. J.M. Keevy, ordered that no reprisals be taken against South Africa's Greek community. He said "Tsafendas was not and had never been a member of the Greek community."²⁰⁴ The South African Government also declared that it would not tolerate retaliation against Greeks.²⁰⁵

Greeks in South Africa, and Mozambique, too, tried hastily to distance themselves from Tsafendas, many claiming he was not Greek so as not to tarnish the Greek name in South Africa.²⁰⁶ Most Greeks in South Africa supported apartheid and many were "more royal than the king," eager to show their loyalty to the regime. Generally, Greeks co-operated with apartheid for commercial, political or personal reasons, but some gave financial support to the army and the National Party. Opponents of apartheid were widely considered to be traitors, including Advocate George Bizos, who was shunned by his fellow countrymen and ¹⁹⁹ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 19 June 2014.

²⁰⁰ Akis Apergis in a personal interview, 24 March 2015; Mary Vasilakou in a personal interview, 25 March 2015.

²⁰¹ Akis Apergis in a personal interview, 24 March 2015; Peter Protoulis in a personal interview, 28 May 2016; Mary Vasilakou in a personal interview, 25 March 2015.

²⁰² The Times (London), 'Attacks on Greek Shops', 7 September 1966: 1.

²⁰³ Pretoria News, 'City Greek Café Hit By Bullet', 7 September 1966: 1.

²⁰⁴ The Herald (Melbourne), 'Don't Touch the Greeks', 9 September 1966: 9.

²⁰⁵ Rand Daily Mail, 'Assurances for Greeks', 14 September 1966.

²⁰⁶ Eleftherotipia, 'Οι Έλληνες Φίλοι του Απαρτχάιντ', 4 July 2010.

considered to be a “traitor.”²⁰⁷ The following statement by a “leading South Coast Greek businessman” in The Daily News is a representative example of the attitude of most Greeks at the time: “when I arrived in South Africa some fifteen years ago I had holes in my shoes. With the help of the Government I was able to find employment, and within a matter of six years I had my own business and two cars. I am sure that I speak for all Greeks in South Africa when I say we never had it so good... we as Greeks have always had the highest regard for D. Dr. Verwoerd. He had done a great deal for us, allowed and given us every reason to want to be South Africans and succeed in business.”²⁰⁸

The Greek community in Pretoria was the first publicly to distance itself from this “infamous and reprehensible assassination.” A spokesman hastily declared that “the criminal was in no way attached to any religious or social Greek organisation and he was not recognized as a Greek.”²⁰⁹ The Consul for Greece in Cape Town, Mr. E. Kallos, stated that “Tsafendas was not a Greek subject and was not registered with any of the Greek consulates in the country.” Another consular official suggested that “Tsafendas was in fact a Portuguese citizen ... he is not of Greek origin at all.”²¹⁰ A spokesman for the Hellenic Community in Cape Town declared: “we are greatly perturbed by the fact that the assassin seems to have a Greek name. Actually the name is the only indication that he might be of Greek descent, as he is completely unknown to the community and its members. He is also unknown to the Greek priests and has never attended any religious service or social function.”²¹¹

A spokesman for South Africa’s Hellenic community expressed “profound and heartfelt sympathy for the tragic passing of Dr. Verwoerd,” adding, “On behalf of the various Greek communities in South Africa and all South African Greeks, we wish it to be known that we dissociate ourselves entirely from this infamous and reprehensible act.”²¹² The leader of the Greek community in Johannesburg, Peter Paizes, said he was a personal friend and admirer of Dr. Verwoerd;²¹³ he spoke of his “tremendous grief” and expressed “indescribable consternation” that the assassin apparently was partly of Greek extraction.²¹⁴

²⁰⁷ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017; Advocate George Bizos in Live and Let Live.

²⁰⁸ The Daily News, ‘S.A. Greeks Had High Regard for Dr. Verwoerd’, 8 September 1966: 9.

²⁰⁹ Noticias, ‘Proseguem as Investigações’, 8 September 1966: 1.

²¹⁰ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), ‘Vorster Gives Greeks Assurance’, 11 September 1966: 8.

²¹¹ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), ‘Vorster Gives Greeks Assurance’, 11 September 1966: 8.

²¹² Pretoria News, ‘City Greek Café Hit by Bullet’, 7 September 1966.

²¹³ To Vima, ‘Η Δολοφονία Του Φέρβειρντ: Ελληνικής Καταγωγής Ο Δράστης’, 7 September 1966: 1.

²¹⁴ The New York Times, ‘Grief Expressed by Leader of Greeks in Johannesburg’, 7 September 1966: 16.

The President of the Greek Community in Bloemfontein, Georgios Manidis said about Tsafendas, “He must be insane. He does not represent the feelings of the Greeks of South Africa. Most of the Greeks in South Africa are supporters of Dr. Verwoerd.”²¹⁵ In Cape Town, a delegation of Greek leaders called on the Minister of Justice, John Vorster, and expressed deep sympathy. They assured the minister that Tsafendas was not of Greek origin and was not connected in any way with the Greek community in South Africa.²¹⁶ On September 8, the Greek Consul in Cape Town asked all Greek traders to close their businesses at 12.30 p.m. on September 10, the day of Dr. Verwoerd’s funeral, and attend a memorial service in his memory.²¹⁷

The entire South African press found something good to say about Dr. Verwoerd, from eulogies to modest praise, according to the newspaper’s political stance. However, the wildest encomiums came not from the Afrikaner media, but from Acropolis, a Greek newspaper in South Africa. A front-page article by owner and editor Georgios P. Sakellaridis, outdid all others in lauding the slain Premier and characterised Dr. Verwoerd as “perhaps the greatest son of the South African nation ... a philosopher, an intellectual, a true Christian, a philanthropist, a visionary ... a holy symbol of Christian civilization and of real patriotism ... who turned South Africa to the only bastion of Christianity in an atheistic, godless continent and to the only hope of the free people of the continent against the cancer of Communism.” Sakellaridis went as far as to declare Dr. Verwoerd to be “a modern Prometheus Unbound, who has been misunderstood, slandered and wrongfully accused by the unfair and irresponsible international community which is unaware of everything he has done for the black South Africans.”²¹⁸

AFRICA

There was very little mourning in Africa for Dr. Verwoerd’s death, indeed there were celebrations in several places. In Dar-es-Salam, Tanzania, Gerge Magomba, secretary of the OAU Liberation Committee, declared that the death of South Africa’s Prime Minister would encourage delegates at the Commonwealth Conference, then gathering in London, to demand a continuation of the fight against the ideas defended by the late Dr. Verwoerd, and would ²¹⁵ Kathimerini, ‘Ατομον Ελληνικής Καταγωγής Εδολοφόνησε τον Φέρβειρντ’, 7 September 1966: 1.

²¹⁶ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), ‘Vorster Gives Greeks Assurance’, 11 September 1966: 8.

²¹⁷ The Cape Argus, ‘Greek Shops Asked to Close’, 9 September 1966: 1; The Cape Times, ‘Greek Shops to Stop for Funeral’, 8 September 1966: 7.

²¹⁸ Acropolis, ‘Ολόκληρον το Νοτιοαφρικόν Έθνος Εκήδευσε τον Πρωθυπουργό του’, 17 September 1966: 1.

serve as a warning to Ian Smith and Antonio de Oliveira Salazar.²¹⁹ Commonwealth General Secretary Arnold Smith said, “Meaningless violence and assassinations will not solve South Africa’s political problems.”²²⁰ In Algiers, Mnoko, representative of the Zimbabwe African People’s Union (ZAPU), which was banned in Rhodesia, declared that oppression could lead only to death. “The attack ... proved the vulnerability of this fascist empire,” he added. Uazuvara Ewald Katjivena, representative of SWAPO (South West African People’s Organization) in Algiers declared that “the fascist Dr. Verwoerd got what he deserved.”²²¹

In Zambia, neither President Kenneth Kaunda nor any of his ministers commented on the assassination, but when the news was announced in Parliament by Wesley Nyirenda, the Deputy Speaker, there was laughter by some members of the parliament.²²² Under the headline, “Death of an Evil Genius,” The Times of Zambia editorialised that there were few who more deserved a violent death than the South African Prime Minister. It said, “The society he created in South Africa is sick. For him ... the sickness has proved mortal.”²²³

The New York Times, reporting from Nairobi, Kenya, wrote that throughout East Africa, “People were shocked but not really distressed.” It said, “Black Africans seemed confused by the assassination... it was as if they were not sorry it happened but were worried lest events rush in on them and make a bad situation worse... that Dr. Verwoerd’s successor might be worse for Africans.” A statement issued on behalf of Kenyan President Jomo Kenyatta said, “Perhaps the assassination will act as a timely lesson to Dr. Verwoerd’s supporters in redeeming their country from many more such deaths.”²²⁴

The Kenya African National Union, the ruling Party, stated that force would be the ultimate method of overthrowing apartheid. It characterised the assassination as “a symbolic and heartening act, from which millions suffering from apartheid would draw hope.”²²⁵ Kenya’s Minister of Defence, Dr. Njoroge Mungai, said when first told about the stabbing, ‘I hope it is successful. It would be a good thing.’²²⁶ The East African Standard reported the

²¹⁹ PIDE’s News Digest; Le Courrier d’Afrique, ‘A Eleicao do Sucessor’, 9 September 1966: 2. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²²⁰ Frankfurter Rundschau, ‘Dr. Verwoerd im Parlament Ermordet’, 7 September 1966: 1.

²²¹ PIDE’s News Digest; Le Courrier d’Afrique, ‘A Eleicao do Sucessor’, 9 September 1966: 2. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²²² The Globe and Mail, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Party Vows to Continue Apartheid’, 8 September 1966: 4; The Herald (Melbourne), ‘Murder Shocks World’, 7 September 1966: 2; The Rhodesia Herald, ‘World Condemns Dr. Verwoerd Murder’, 7 September 1966; TIME, ‘South Africa: Death to the Architect’, 16 September 1966.

²²³ The New York Times, ‘Zambians Call Death Deserved’, 8 September 1966: 12.

²²⁴ The New York Times, ‘Assassination Stirs Concern Among Leaders of Black Africa’, 7 September 1966: 17.

²²⁵ The Guardian, ‘Stinking’ Quotation by BBC’, 9 September 1966: 11.

²²⁶ The Herald (Melbourne), ‘Murder Shocks World’, 7 September 1966: 2.

assassination without comment, but the Kenya Daily Nation published a front-page editorial signed by the editor, George Githii. It said in part, “Dr. Verwoerd’s regime has been carrying out an inhuman social experiment, but unlike scientific experiments in laboratories, factors affecting the human mind are unpredictable and cannot entirely be suppressed by the force of arms.” MP Henry Wariithi said, “This has been expected. He should not be buried in African soil.”²²⁷

In Lagos, many Nigerians shouted “hallelujah,” danced in the streets and jumped for joy when they heard the news of the assassination of the “apostle of apartheid.”²²⁸ Brigadier Ogunidipe, leader of the Nigerian delegation in the 1966 Commonwealth Conference, said, “There may be a message in this for Mr. Ian Smith of Rhodesia.”²²⁹ In Ethiopia, a banner headline in the New Times of Addis Ababa said, “The Sharpeville Butcher Stabbed to Death,” and the English-language Voice of Ethiopia said, “He who raises the sword shall perish by the sword.”²³⁰ Ethiopia’s Foreign Minister called Dr. Verwoerd’s death “the natural result of apartheid, which breeds blind hate and evil.”²³¹ Cairo’s Al Akhbar newspaper said Egypt had “no tears to shed” for Dr. Verwoerd.²³²

From Salisbury, Rhodesia, the Rand Daily Mail of South Africa reported that Dr. Verwoerd had become “a sort of idol” to White Rhodesians,²³³ while The Chronicle in Bulawayo characterised him as a “good friend of Rhodesia.”²³⁴ The Rhodesia and World Report wrote that South Africa’s Prime Minister was “misunderstood by those who prefer to misunderstand” and that he “stood with courage and dignity for the principles he held. That these principles may in time be accepted even where they are at present most bitterly resisted is not beyond the bounds of possibility.” The newspaper went on to claim that his death would be “equally” felt in Rhodesia “whose desperate needs he served far above the call of duty or political expediency” and characterised him as “a great man, a humanitarian and outstanding intellect, in whom the spirit flamed with rare brilliance.”²³⁵

²²⁷ The New York Times, ‘Assassination Stirs Concern Among Leaders of Black Africa’, 7 September 1966: 17.

²²⁸ Daily Express, ‘Epitaph For A Fanatic’, 7 September 1966: 2; The Times (London), ‘Jubilation at News in Nigeria’, 7 September 1966: 1; The Herald (Melbourne), ‘How Africa Took the News’, 7 September 1966: 1; Washington Post, ‘London Conference Shocked by Slain’, 7 September 1966: 8.

²²⁹ The Australian, ‘Murder Shocks World, But Some Leaders Are Glad’, 8 September 1966.

²³⁰ The Globe and Mail, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Party Vows to Continue Apartheid’, 8 September 1966: 4.

²³¹ TIME, ‘South Africa: Death to the Architect’, 16 September 1966.

²³² Daily Dispatch, ‘Assassination Sends A Wave of Shock Around the World’, 8 September 1966: 6; Washington Post, ‘London Conference shocked by slain’, 7 September 1966: 8.

²³³ Rand Daily Mail, ‘Ghastly, Says A Socked Ian Smith’, 7 September 1966: 7.

²³⁴ The Chronicle (Bulawayo), ‘Senseless Act – Jonathan’, 7 September 1966.

²³⁵ Sheldon, ‘The Pattern of Assassination. The Continuing Pattern’, p. 3.

In Parliament, Prime Minister Ian Smith, a close ally of Dr. Verwoerd whose country depended on South African economic support, looked pale²³⁶ when he said, “I am sure this ghastly event has deeply shocked Honourable Members, as it has myself.” He promised a full tribute next day, then adjourned Parliament two hours early.²³⁷ A little later, he characterised Dr. Verwoerd as “the champion of the ideals of civilization and Christianity”²³⁸ and described his death as a “tragic loss.”²³⁹

The Economist reflected on the effect of Dr. Verwoerd’s death on a white-ruled Rhodesia beset by British-imposed sanctions. It said Dr. Verwoerd “was much more than a very good friend and neighbour; he was the only national leader of world prominence who gave Rhodesians moral and material support in their struggle to make sanctions less effective... “The weekly magazine said, “There is no immediate fear that Dr. Verwoerd’s successor will alter the South African policy of helpful neutrality ... but one fear has always nagged White Rhodesians... that no fighting war would be waged by South Africa to prevent Rhodesia becoming an African state if that seemed inevitable.”²⁴⁰ In Umtali, Rhodesia, the Rev. T.C. de Villiers, a minister of the Dutch Reformed Church, said Dr. Verwoerd was his fellow student at Stellenbosch University and a personal friend. “He was a born leader as well as a brilliant student... he will live in the hearts of tens of thousands of South Africans and Rhodesians.”²⁴¹

Chief Leabua Jonathan, Prime Minister of Basutoland, an ally of Dr. Verwoerd and the first Black African head of government ever to make an official visit to South Africa, forced a motion of condolence through Basutoland’s Assembly by a paper thin vote of 29 to 28.²⁴² He expressed his “shock and grief” at the assassination and said it left him “with a real sense of personal loss.”²⁴³ Chief Kasper Matanzima, Chief Minister of the Transkei, said the nation of South Africa had lost its “greater leader of all time” and the African people within its borders a friend and father.²⁴⁴

²³⁶ The Herald (Melbourne), ‘How Africa Took the News’, 7 September 1966: 1.

²³⁷ The Rhodesia Herald, ‘World Condemns Dr. Verwoerd Murder’, 7 September 1966.

²³⁸ PIDE’s News Digest; Le Courrier d’Afrique, ‘A Eleicao do Sucessor’, 9 September 1966: 2. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²³⁹ Washington Post, ‘London Conference Shocked by Slain’, 7 September 1966: 8.

²⁴⁰ The Economist, ‘Whites in Mourning’, 10 September 1966: 1000-1001.

²⁴¹ The Umtali Post, ‘Umtali Minister Pays Tribute to An Old Friend’, 7 September 1966: 1.

²⁴² TIME, ‘South Africa: Death to the Architect’, 16 September 1966.

²⁴³ The Chronicle (Bulawayo), ‘Senseless Act – Jonathan’, 7 September 1966: 1.

²⁴⁴ Daily Dispatch, ‘Assassination Sends A Wave of Shock Around the World’, 8 September 1966: 6; Washington Post, ‘London Conference Shocked by Slain’, 7 September 1966: 8,

In Uganda, many applauded the killing of the “hated leader of the persecution of Africans”²⁴⁵ and danced in the streets.²⁴⁶ However Uganda President Milton Obote said, “It is a very bad thing to solve political problems through assassination and I regret his death.” Elsewhere, Forbes Burnham of Guyana characterised the assassination as, “interesting,” and Dawda Jawara of Gambia said, “I can only hope that the new leader will steer South Africa away from a policy which can only be described as disastrous.”²⁴⁷

The Algerian-French magazine Revolution Africaine applauded the assassination, referred to Dr. Verwoerd as “the apostle of hatred,” and said, “The most hated man of Africa is no more. The jailor of the Cape, with more than thirteen million Africans at his feet thanks to the complicity, more or less active, of three million Whites of European origin, and thanks to the indifference, if not complacency, of the Halogen groups, died last Tuesday.” In another article, the magazine characterized South Africa as a “ghetto for the Black People,” and said that Dr. Verwoerd was “the head of the criminals of the large prison that South Africa had become.” It said, “Dr. Verwoerd’s madness, and that of his acolytes, turned it into a ghetto for colored people, since South Africa is solely the home of a minority, excluding a majority. This is the principle of the philosophy that inspires the system upon which rests all the politico-social structure reserved to a category of ‘supers.’”²⁴⁸

Finally, the Congolese newspaper Le Courier d’Afrique reported that at the United Nations a few African representatives had planned to celebrate Dr. Verwoerd’s assassination, partly as a response to the celebration of the South African delegation about the rejection of the International Court of Justice of the action against Pretoria, regarding the mandate over the African Southeast. However, after further consideration, they preferred to refrain from manifestations of this kind.²⁴⁹

EUROPE

In Britain, the newspapers reported the assassination with banner headlines, page-wide photographs and many columns of text. Prime Minister Harold Wilson sent the following message to Dr. Theophilus E. Dönges, South Africa’s senior Cabinet minister and acting ²⁴⁵ Kathimerini, ‘Ατομον Ελληνικής Καταγωγής Εδολοφόνησε τον Φέρβειρντ’, 7 September 1966: 1.

²⁴⁶ Daily Express, ‘Epitaph For A Fanatic’, 7 September 1966: 2.

²⁴⁷ The Herald (Melbourne), ‘Murder Shocks World’, 7 September 1966: 2.

²⁴⁸ Revolution Africaine, ‘The Apostle of Hatred is No More’, 9 September 1966: 3.

²⁴⁹ PIDE’s News Digest; Le Courier d’Afrique, ‘A Eleicao do Sucessor’, 9 September 1966: 2. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

Prime Minister: “I was shocked to hear the news of the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. Please accept condolences on behalf of the British Government and myself and convey our sympathy to Dr. Verwoerd’s family.”²⁵⁰ The leader of the opposition Conservative Party, Edward Heath, declared that he strongly opposed Dr. Verwoerd’s apartheid policy but he was sorry for “this barbaric assassination.” Jo Grimond, the Liberal Party leader, commented: “It is obvious that the regime leads to violence of this kind. This should serve as a warning to all of those who wish to lead autocratic regimes in Africa.”²⁵¹

A few hours after the assassination, Sir Arthur Michael Palliser, private secretary to Prime Minister Harold Wilson, reflected on the effects of Dr. Verwoerd’s absence on the international scene. In a letter to the British Foreign Office, he wrote, “Whatever one may think of Dr. Verwoerd’s policies, no other South African minister has his experience, and prestige and we are likely to regret the disappearance of his skill, caution and realism in the conduct of South Africa’s external affairs.” He concluded by correctly predicting that John Vorster would be his successor. “The ruthless and former pro-Nazi Minister of Justice seems the most likely candidate,” he wrote.²⁵²

Initially, the head of state, Queen Elizabeth, remained silent and sent no messages to the Dr. Verwoerd family or the South African government.²⁵³ It was understood by the press that she took such a decision on the advice of Prime Minister Harold Wilson.²⁵⁴ The Canberra Times of Australia said, “It seems likely that it was considered inappropriate for the Queen to send a message, especially as many of the Commonwealth leaders (then meeting in London) might not have been in sympathy with it.”²⁵⁵ However, a few days later, the Queen sent a private message of condolence to Dr. Verwoerd’s wife, Betsie. The delay came about because the Prime Minister’s office considered such an action would be against precedent. However, the Queen said after Dr. Verwoerd’s funeral that she “would very much like to send a purely private word of sympathy to Mrs. Dr. Verwoerd.” The PM’s Office bowed to her wish, but was at pains to explain to the media that this was not “a formal message, which would be from the Queen to a head of state, but a purely private and personal message, conveyed on ²⁵⁰ Copy of Harold Wilson’s message to Dr. Donges. 6 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. British National Archives (hereafter cited as BNA); The Rhodesia Herald, ‘World Condemns Dr. Verwoerd murder’, 7 September 1966: 1.

²⁵¹ O Primeiro de Janeiro, ‘Qualquer Violencia e Lamentavel’, 7 September 1966: 2.

²⁵² A.M. Palliser letter to the Foreign Office. 6 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

²⁵³ The Sun (Vancouver), ‘Advice to Queen Shocking’, 12 September 1966: 3; The Herald (Melbourne), ‘Murder Shocks World’, 7 September 1966: 2.

²⁵⁴ The Umtali Post, ‘No Message from Queen’, 7 September 1966: 1.

²⁵⁵ The Canberra Times, ‘Matters of Protocol’, 8 September 1966: 1.

her behalf to the widow.” The message, sent on September 10, said: “The Queen was deeply shocked by the news of the assassination of your husband. Her Majesty, who feels very deeply for you in your loss, desires me to convey to you and to all the members of your family an expression of her most sincere sympathy.”²⁵⁶

The BBC interrupted its programmes to announce the assassination.²⁵⁷ But there were protests when an unnamed African appeared on a news broadcast and stated that Dr. Verwoerd’s death was the “happiest day of his life and he only wished he had committed the murder himself.”²⁵⁸ The South African Die Vaderland responded to BBC with an article entitled “Away with the BBC.” The newspaper said that the fact that BBC allowed this man to make such a comment “stinks in nostrils of the civilised world.”²⁵⁹ Nevertheless, the BBC News on the night of the assassination attracted some twelve and a half million viewers, one of the highest audience figures of the year.²⁶⁰

The Daily Mail’s headline on the front page said “the final irony-Dr. Verwoerd, apostle of apartheid is carried out dead... killed by the hand of a White man.” Below the headline was a picture with Dr. Verwoerd’s body being carried out from the Parliament on a stretcher the left-wing Daily Mirror’s headline was “Missionary of hate-he shaped the laws of apartheid,” while the Right-wing Daily Sketch called Dr. Verwoerd “this misguided man.” The London Times editorial said, “what has been tragically seen in recent years, notably in the murder of President Kennedy is that the closest security system ca pan protect nobody against the private vendetta of a solitary man with a grievance.”²⁶¹

Writing from London, the historian and politician Lord Altrincham said, “Dr. Verwoerd was certainly the ablest practical and theoretical exponent of apartheid, but the system was not his creation, nor will it die with him. Indeed, his supposed martyrdom may give it additional strength.”²⁶² The London Economist disagreed. After considering Dr. Verwoerd’s possible successors, it said, “Whoever wins, one thing seems certain: the days of apartheid as an intellectualised and rationalised philosophy are over. The death of Dr.

²⁵⁶ Queen’s condolences message to Betsie Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

²⁵⁷ Pretoria News, ‘Shock News on BBC’, 6 September 1966: 1; The Umtali Post, ‘BBC Reports the Death’, 6 September 1966: 1.

²⁵⁸ The Stage, ‘BBC Drops Further Behind in September’, 20 October 1966: 10; The Times (London), ‘BBC News Criticized’, 7 September 1966: 1.

²⁵⁹ The Guardian, ‘“Stinking” Quotation by BBC’, 9 September 1966: 11.

²⁶⁰ The Stage, ‘BBC Drops Further Behind in September’, 20 October 1966: 10.

²⁶¹ Daily Dispatch, ‘Assassination Sends A Wave of Shock Around the World’, 8 September 1966: 6.

²⁶² The Australian, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Killer: Sad Little Psychopath Or Messenger of Doom?’, 10 September 1966.

Verwoerd is to 'separate development' what the death of Lenin was to Communism. The theories will remain but they will ossify."²⁶³

On September 17, the British satirical magazine, Private Eye, carried several cartoons and spoof conversations about the assassination, including a front-page photograph of Africans dancing and leaping. The caption, ironically suggesting they were celebrating their Prime Minister's death, proclaimed, "Dr. Verwoerd: A Nation Mourns."²⁶⁴ South Africa's Publications Control Board banned the issue. A Daily Dispatch reporter who saw the magazine said the cover picture showed Africans in trial dress dancing jubilantly above a caption which suggested they were reacting to news of Dr. Verwoerd's death.²⁶⁵

In Athens, Foreign Minister Ioannis Toumbas said, "The Greek Government feels horror for the odious crime whose victim was the South African Premier."²⁶⁶ Kathimerini, a leading Greek newspaper of the time, said in a front-page editorial, "Greek public opinion has been struck with horror ... the assassin was probably disturbed in his mind. The fact that he is of Greek origin provokes a national feeling of sorrow."²⁶⁷ Messages of condolence poured into the South African embassy in Athens from all parts of Greece.²⁶⁸ In Cyprus, President Makarios, who opposed apartheid, said, "Assassinations are terrible things. I am terribly shocked and express my sympathy."²⁶⁹

At the Vatican, Pope Paul VI extended his condolences over Dr. Verwoerd's "tragic death,"²⁷⁰ while the governments of West Germany, Denmark and Norway all expressed shock. Denmark, however, expressed serious criticism of apartheid and announced that the government would not send an official representative to attend Dr. Verwoerd's funeral.²⁷¹ Portugal, whose Prime Minister Antonio de Oliveira Salazar was a close ally of Dr. Verwoerd, characterised the murder as a "criminal act,"²⁷² while a spokesman at the Portuguese Foreign Ministry said, "Nobody could deny the personal integrity, the patriotic devotion and the moral courage of the Premier of South Africa." In Paris, government officials said they were certain the murder would strengthen racial opposition within South

²⁶³ The Economist, 'Whites in Mourning', 10 September 1966: 1000-1001.

²⁶⁴ Private Eye, 'Dr. Verwoerd: A Nation Mourns', 17 September 1966: cover.

²⁶⁵ Daily Dispatch, 'Satire on Dr. Verwoerd Death Banned', 14 October 1966: 1.

²⁶⁶ The New York Times, 'Grief Expressed by Leader of Greeks in Johannesburg', 7 September 1966: 16.

²⁶⁷ Kathimerini, 'Ατομον Ελληνικής Καταγωγής Εδολοφόνησε τον Φέρβειντ', 7 September 1966: 1.

²⁶⁸ Pretoria News, 'City Greek Café Hit by Bullet', 7 September 1966: 1.

²⁶⁹ The Vancouver Sun, 'Verwoerd Assassination Shocks World Leaders', 6 September 1966: 3.

²⁷⁰ The New York Times, 'Pope Sends Condolences', 8 September 1966: 12.

²⁷¹ Pretoria News, 'Denmark Will Not Send Diplomat', 10 September 1966.

²⁷² The Herald (Melbourne), 'Murder Shocks World', 7 September 1966: 2.

Africa,²⁷³ although France's Foreign Minister, Maurice Couve de Mourville, expressed the "sad condolences" of his Government.²⁷⁴ Dr. Borg Olivier of Malta said, "I hope it does not happen to any of us."²⁷⁵

In Moscow, the Soviet News Agency Tass reported the assassination without comment but it identified Dr. Verwoerd as "the head of the racist regime" in South Africa.²⁷⁶ The government newspaper, Izvestia, wrote that "for millions of honest people in Africa and all over the world," Dr. Verwoerd was "the embodiment of the monstrous doctrine of total racism."²⁷⁷ It added that although the Russian tradition required a person to say either good things or nothing at all about the dead that was impossible in Dr. Verwoerd's case.²⁷⁸ The Communist Party daily Pravda also reported the assassination without comment in a single paragraph of thirteen lines.²⁷⁹

The Melbourne Herald of September 7, 1966, recalled how the Soviet Union once put Hendrik Verwoerd on trial, in absentia. The newspaper said news of Dr. Verwoerd's death came too late for Soviet officials to be contacted, but added that the Kremlin was unlikely to have any regrets. Russia had never had diplomatic relations with South Africa and two years ago, an "international court of public opinion" was set up as a youth forum in Moscow to try Dr. Verwoerd for racist crimes. The court concluded that the South African leader was liable to be condemned as a heinous, international criminal and an enemy of mankind. It "summoned" Dr. Verwoerd to appear before it, a summons, the newspaper said, which he never obeyed.²⁸⁰

In Italy, Corriere Della Sera characterised Dr. Verwoerd as the 'fanatical executor' of apartheid. Recalling his comment that "we are Christian, we want to help them (non-whites) stand up," the newspaper asked, "How could they stand up if they had no room to place their feet, when three million and four hundred thousand whites control 86% of the land and twelve million negroes only 14%?"²⁸¹

In divided Germany, opinion about Dr. Verwoerd was also divided. In West Germany, most of the media condemned the assassination without commenting on Dr.

²⁷³ Frankfurter Allgemeine, 'Die Wähler Honorieren die Apartheid', 7 September 1966: 5.

²⁷⁴ The Rhodesia Herald, 'World Condemns Dr. Verwoerd Murder', 7 September 1966.

²⁷⁵ Herald (Melbourne), 'Murder Shocks World', The 7 September 1966: 2.

²⁷⁶ Washington Post, 'London Conference Shocked by Slain', 7 September 1966: 8.

²⁷⁷ The New York Times, 'Moscow Assails Dr. Verwoerd', 8 September 1966: 12.

²⁷⁸ To Vima, 'Απειλούν τους Έλληνες εις την Ν. Αφρική', 8 September 1966: 1.

²⁷⁹ Daily Dispatch, 'Assassination Sends A Wave of Shock Around the World', 8 September 1966: 6.

²⁸⁰ The Herald (Melbourne), 'Murder Shocks World', 7 September 1966: 2.

²⁸¹ Corriere Della Sera, 'L'Apartheid', 8 September 1966.

Verwoerd's policies. Handelsblatt claimed that Dr. Verwoerd was misunderstood and what he did was for the benefit of the Blacks.²⁸² However, Frankfurter Allgemeine declared that Dr. Verwoerd had "sown hatred and discord."²⁸³ In East Germany, the Neues Deutschland attacked Dr. Verwoerd as "the leader of the white racists ... one of the most eager defenders of apartheid, the barbaric racial oppression of 13 million Africans and Asians, whose methods are barely inferior to the 'Nuremberg Laws.'" The newspaper reminded its readers that according to the Swiss, German-language daily, Neue Zürcher Zeitung of April 15 this year, the International Agency for Employment in Geneva had declared that the "state of African labour bound to a South African economy under the principles of White supremacy" could "barely be differentiated from slavery." Nues Deutschland pointed out that West Germany supported Dr. Verwoerd's fascist racial politics. It was "none other than the current President of West Germany and concentration camp builder Lübke, who visited South Africa in 1959 and told the racist regime that 'the problems surrounding native peoples are in good hands here.'" The article said Dr. Verwoerd was "a victim of his own politics of violence."²⁸⁴

REST OF THE WORLD

Achkar Marof, the chairman of the UN Special Committee on apartheid and Guinea's Permanent Representative to the UN, said: "The international community should be grateful to the assassin if his act produces a change in South Africa's race policy." UN Secretary General U Thant expressed deep regret and declared that "any violence is deplorable."²⁸⁵

In the USA, Martin Luther King also commented on the assassination, saying that "few individuals in modern times have been so insidious and diabolical in their schemes of oppression as Hendrik Verwoerd, but even in this case, one must deplore the fanatical act of assassination."²⁸⁶ Julius W. Hobson, another leading civil rights activist commented, 'I am not in favour of murder, but that's not the point. This man has been responsible for the death of thousands of Black South Africans. I am not going to advocate killing anybody, but I am delighted he is dead.'²⁸⁷ US President Lyndon Johnson, who sent a personal message to ²⁸² Handelsblatt, 'Sudafrika Sucht Nachfolger Fur Dr. Verwoerd', 7 September 1966: 1.

²⁸³ Daily Dispatch, 'Assassination Sends A Wave of Shock Around the World', 8 September 1966: 6.

²⁸⁴ Deues Deutschland, 'Dr. Verwoerd', 9 September 1966: 7.

²⁸⁵ The Globe and Mail, 'Assassination Condemned by Friend and Foe Alike', 7 September 1966: 3; The Herald (Melbourne), 'Murder Shocks World', 7 September 1966: 2; Washington Post, 'London Conference Shocked by Slain', 7 September 1966: 8.

²⁸⁶ The New York Times, 'Johnson Decries Assassination; Rights Leaders Echo Dismay', 7 September 1966: 16; Washington Post, 'London Conference Shocked by Slain', 7 September 1966: 8.

²⁸⁷ The New York Times, 'Johnson Decries Assassination; Rights Leaders Echo Dismay', 7 September 1966: 16.

Betsie Dr. Verwoerd, called the assassination “a deplorable act, a stroke of violence that shakes the sensibilities of men who believe in law and order.”²⁸⁸ Senator Robert Kennedy, himself to be assassinated two years later, said he was “deeply shocked” and added, “violence is not answer the problems which must be worked out between people, with compassion and understanding on both sides.”²⁸⁹

The day after the assassination, The New York Times carried the headline, “Verwoerd: Relentless Advocate of Apartheid. Pro-Nazi and Harsh Racist, He Seemed Outwardly Genial.” The newspaper wrote that Dr. Verwoerd’s policies were “condemned by most of the governments of the world but hailed by racists” and described them as “the harshest race laws since Hitler.”²⁹⁰ In another article on the same page, the newspaper carried another headline dedicated to the slain Prime Minister: “Unafraid of Assassins, Dr. Verwoerd Said in 1962.” The story below said that two years after he was shot by David Pratt, Dr. Verwoerd was asked if he was not afraid someone else might shoot him. “No, I’m not afraid,” he said. “I don’t think anyone wants to kill me.” A reporter pointed out that he was sitting in front of an open window of his office on street level. “My desk just happens to be placed here,” he responded. “If someone really wants to kill you, it’s not a very hard job. One thing is certain, there’s no point going around worrying about it.”²⁹¹

Also in the United States, LIFE magazine published an article by Anthony Samson, former editor of South Africa’s DRUM magazine and the future official biographer of Nelson Mandela. The article was titled, “Violent end for the apostle of apartheid.” In it, Samson called Dr. Verwoerd a symbol of “reckless white supremacy” whose “repressive policies were applied with police state efficiency to keep twelve million non-Europeans powerless in South Africa and to separate them from the 3.4 million Europeans.” He noted that at the time of his death, Dr. Verwoerd was at “the height of his political power.”²⁹² The Washington Post reported that “Verwoerd’s successor will be a racist, too.”²⁹³

From Bombay, India, the Economic and Political Weekly warned, “If no tears need to be shed for Dr. Verwoerd, there is equally nothing to take heart in his exit for the future of ²⁸⁸ The Herald (Melbourne), ‘Murder shocks world’, 7 September 1966: 2; The New York Times, ‘Johnson Decries Assassination; Rights Leaders Echo Dismay’, 7 September 1966: 16; Washington Post, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Slain at his Parliament Desk.’

²⁸⁹ The New York Times, ‘Johnson Decries Assassination; Rights Leaders Echo Dismay’, 7 September 1966: 16; The Vancouver Sun, ‘Verwoerd Assassination Shocks World Leaders’, 6 September 1966: 3.

²⁹⁰ The New York Times, ‘Dr. Verwoerd: Relentless Advocate of Apartheid’, 7 September 1966: 16.

²⁹¹ The New York Times, ‘Unafraid of Assassins, Dr. Verwoerd Said in 1962’, 7 September 1966: 16.

²⁹² Schoeman, Die Sluipmoord op Dr. Verwoerd, p. 89.

²⁹³ Washington Post, ‘Verwoerd’s Successor Will Be a Racist, Too’, 7 September 1966.

the Africans in South Africa. For most of the three and a half million Whites, in their psychopathic fear of the Africans who outnumber them so overwhelmingly, apartheid appears as the only means of survival and cling to it they must.”²⁹⁴ Appasaheb Pant, India’s Ambassador to Egypt, offered his sympathy to Dr. Verwoerd’s family but also to the “hundreds of thousands of people who suffered from Dr. Verwoerd.”²⁹⁵

In Canada, acting Prime Minister Paul Martin said, “The Canadian government regrets this shocking act of violence. I have this morning sent to the acting Prime Minister of South Africa a message of condolence. This regret, of course, does not affect the government’s well-known attitude on apartheid. We thoroughly disagree with this policy, but our difference of views does not dilute our regret at this brutal assassination.”²⁹⁶ Tommy Douglas, the leader of the New Democratic Party of Canada, said, “one cannot help but fear that unless there is some reversal of policies in South Africa a great deal more blood will be spilled in that unhappy country.”²⁹⁷ The Toronto Star published an article headlined, “The man is dead - his monster grows,” suggesting the monster of apartheid was far from moribund.²⁹⁸

Prime Minister Harold Holt of Australia condemned the murder as “repugnant.” Premiers Lester Pearson of Canada and Keith Holyoake of New Zealand had identical reactions: “I am shocked.”²⁹⁹ In Wellington, New Zealand, members of a Maori tribe presented a bouquet of flowers at the South African consulate-general.³⁰⁰ Singapore’s Prime Minister, Lee Kuan Yew was less sympathetic and said, “If you run regimes like that, this is part of the risk.”³⁰¹ In Cuba, a Radio Havana broadcast commented that “the reactionary bloc has lost one of its infamous representatives. Dr. Verwoerd has left behind him the result of his segregationist policy.”³⁰²

TSAFENDAS’S FAMILY REACTION

²⁹⁴ Economic and Political Weekly, ‘Apartheid Unassassinated’, 10 September 1966: 146-147.

²⁹⁵ Kathimerini, ‘Ατομον Ελληνικής Καταγωγής Εδολοφόνησε τον Φέρβειρντ’, 7 September 1966: 1.

²⁹⁶ The Globe and Mail, ‘Canada Regrets Death but Stand Still Same’, 7 September 1966: 3.

²⁹⁷ The Vancouver Sun, ‘Verwoerd Assassination Shocks World Leaders’, 6 September 1966: 3.

²⁹⁸ Schoeman, Die Sluipmoord op Dr. Verwoerd, p. 90.

²⁹⁹ The Herald (Melbourne), ‘Murder Shocks World’, 7 September 1966: 2.

³⁰⁰ Pretoria News, ‘Simple Maori Tribute Paid to Dr. Verwoerd’, 8 September 1966: 1.

³⁰¹ Daily Express, ‘Epitaph for A Fanatic’, 7 September 1966: 2; The Australian, ‘Murder Shocks World, but Some Leaders are Glad’, 8 September 1966; Washington Post, ‘London Conference Shocked by Slain’, 7 September 1966: 8.

³⁰² Washington Post, ‘London Conference Shocked by Slain’, 7 September 1966: 8.

When Tsafendas's family heard about the assassination, his siblings and in-laws, apart from Katerina who was in Rhodesia, gathered in Marika's house in Pretoria. All were deeply shocked, fearing the worst for themselves because they had begged and convinced van den Berg to allow Tsafendas to enter South Africa under the pretence that he was not a threat to the state and that all he wanted was to spend a few days with his family. They believed that if Tsafendas was tortured, he would reveal everything. Nick Vlachopoulos, although he was the main culprit of this and had even given money to van den Berg, was the calmest and said that it was very possible the police would not find out because Tsafendas had experience of torture and could possibly to withhold anything damaging to the family. All agreed that if asked, they would deny knowing Tsafendas was not allowed to enter South Africa.³⁰³

Marika and her son Victor were the most frightened. Victor suggested they should pack their bags and be ready to leave the country at any time. At one point, he even suggested leaving then and there. Eventually, he and his wife remained, but with their bags packed and ready to flee. All agreed that, if asked, they would distance themselves as far as possible from Tsafendas, claiming they had no contacts with him since he had been away for many years and they were unaware of his political views and activities. They feared that if it became known he was a Communist, they would be in trouble for not reporting him since Communism was illegal.³⁰⁴

Fearing an imminent police search of their houses, Marika and her daughter Evangelia burned all of Tsafendas's books, both those in his step-mother's house and in the apartment Vlachopoulos had given him. Every single book went into the flames, although not all of them were political. Marika also burned photographs which Tsafendas had sent them from around the world, along with family photographs from Mozambique. She also destroyed Tsafendas's two records with the Communist songs along with all of Paul Robeson's, just because he was Black.³⁰⁵

However, the person who was most frightened after the assassination was George Michaletos, Tsafendas's uncle and Artemis's husband. It was he, along with Nick Vlachopoulos, who convinced J.J. van den Berg, the passport control officer at the South African consulate in Lourenço Marques, to ignore Tsafendas's name on the Stop List and ³⁰³ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁰⁴ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁰⁵ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

issue him a visa. For more than a month after Tsafendas's arrest, Michaletos was unable to sleep and lived in constant fear of arrest. He wanted to flee the country and go back to Greece, but Artemis was calmer and insisted that they should remain. Michaletos cut off any contact with J.J. van den Berg, but when he heard that the passport officer had been taken for questioning, he left Lourenço Marques immediately and took refuge in a relative's house in Zambia. He stayed there for three or four weeks, still terrified, and only returned to Lourenço Marques after Tsafendas's summary trial had ended. Even then, he remained nervous and suspicious over the years, fearing that one day the case might be discovered.³⁰⁶

³⁰⁶ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

CHAPTER 4

THE POLICE INVESTIGATION

INTRODUCTION

General van den Bergh stated on 26 October 1976 that “no person in South African history has ever been interrogated as much as Demitrios Tsafendas. I wanted to know everything about this man and quizzed him on everything under the sun – including the remote possibility that he had been ‘programmed’ by drugs, or even hypnosis, to kill, or if he had been a hired assassin.” Due to this, “no stone was left unturned in the investigation” and “Tsafendas’s activities in many countries were closely checked.”³⁰⁷

The purpose of this chapter is to examine the activities as well as the findings (and non-findings) of the South African police during their investigation into Dr. Verwoerd’s assassination. Non-findings include important information regarding Tsafendas which was withheld by PIDE, the Portuguese Security Police. We will look at the statements which the South African police took from people who had known Tsafendas, documents received by the South African authorities from various institutions and organizations around the world, medical reports, police memoranda and police reports.

The investigators were confronted by thousands of documents specific to Tsafendas and many which were irrelevant to the case. This study will look only at documents relevant to Tsafendas and the assassination. Documents which repeated information that we have already seen are also not listed. However, all statements taken by the police from people who knew Tsafendas, including two statements by Tsafendas himself, are included. All the top secret documents are included.

This chapter also includes some of the Press reports published during the investigation to demonstrate how the media covered the issue and to illustrate the “climate” of the day, but also to examine how Tsafendas was portrayed at the time, bearing in mind that most news reports contained false, incomplete or exaggerated information.

³⁰⁷ Gordon Winter, ‘Tsafendas was Ineffective Red-Van den Bergh’, The Citizen, 26 October 1976.

BACKGROUND ON GENERAL HENDRIK JOHAN VAN DEN BERGH

Before we examine the police investigation into the assassination, we will explore the nature of the man who was in charge of it. General van den Bergh played a massively important role in the case and was deeply involved in creating the portrait of Tsafendas that emerged from his summary trial and from the proceedings of the Commission of Enquiry into Dr.

Verwoerd's death. Arguably the most feared man in South Africa during the 1960s and 1970s Police Chief Hendrik Johan van den Bergh created, headed and became virtually synonymous with the Bureau of State Security (BOSS),³⁰⁸ an all-embracing security organisation which he employed ruthlessly in defence of the apartheid state.³⁰⁹ He was the oppressive power behind the apartheid government of John Vorster.³¹⁰ At the height of his power in 1976, van den Bergh plotted with two close associates to secure a share of power at the highest level following the expected retirement of Vorster,³¹¹ but after exposure of his involvement in a government corruption scandal, he was forced to retire.³¹²

Born on 27 November 1914³¹³ into an Afrikaner farming family in Vredefort, Orange Free State, Hendrik Johan van den Bergh was known to his friends as HJ, the initials of his given names, but to everyone else, he was Lang Hendrik (Tall Hendrik) on account of his height, a towering 1.96m (6 feet 5 inches).³¹⁴ Van den Bergh joined the police in 1934,³¹⁵ but when World War Two broke out, he was interned in Koffienfontein camp as a suspected member of the Stormjaers, the military wing of the pro-Nazi organization *Ossewabrandwag*³¹⁶ (OB - Oxwagon Sentinel).³¹⁷ A fellow internee who held general's rank ³⁰⁸ For more about BOSS and its activities see: Hepple, A. (1969) "South Africa's Bureau for State Security;" International Defence and Aid Fund (1969) South Africa: The BOSS Law; International Defence and Aid Fund (1975) BOSS: The First Five Years; O'Brien, K.A. (2010) The South African Intelligence Services: From Apartheid to Democracy, 1948-2005; Sanders, J. (2006) Apartheid's Friends: The Rise and Fall of South Africa's Secret Service; Swanepoel, P.C. (2007) Really Inside Boss: A Tale of South Africa's Late Intelligence Service; Winter, G. (1981) Inside BOSS.

³⁰⁹ Leonard, South Africa at War: White Power and the Crisis in Southern Africa, p. 123

³¹⁰ Mary Braid, 'Obituary: Hendrik van den Bergh', The Independent, 20 August 1997: 12.

³¹¹ John F. Burns, 'Vorster Rejects Allegations in South Africa's Information Scandal', The New York Times, 23 March 1979: A3; James Sanders, South Africa and the International Media, 1972-1979: A Struggle for Representation, (London: Routledge, 1999), p. 61; TIME, 'South Africa: Rhodie's Story', 26 March 1979.

³¹² Sanders, South Africa and the International Media, 1972-1979: A Struggle for Representation, p. 64.

³¹³ Pogrand, 'Obituary: Lieutenant-General Hendrik van den Bergh: Boss of South Africa's Forces of Oppression', The Guardian, 21 August 1997: 17.

³¹⁴ The New York Times, 'Acid General is Key to Pretoria Scandal', 1 April 1979: 10; Gordon Winter, Inside BOSS: South Africa's Secret Police, (Harmondsworth: Penguin Books, 1981), p. 34.

³¹⁵ Alexander Hepple, "South Africa's Bureau for State Security", The World Today, Vol. 25, No. 10 (Oct., 1969), p. 437.

³¹⁶ For more about the Ossewabrandwag see Chapter 1.

in the OB, was Balthazar Johannes Vorster, the future Prime Minister. He and van den Bergh quickly became friends³¹⁸ and subsequently van den Bergh became Vorster's closest confident, security advisor and a devoted advisor.³¹⁹ During the time of their detention, van den Bergh was Vorster's "counter-intelligence chief," tasked to seek out and expose the government's agents sent in to spy on the internees.³²⁰

After the war, van den Bergh worked as a clerk at the South African Institute of Architects³²¹ before re-joining the police in 1950.³²² He reached the rank of captain in 1953,³²³ but his police career was unspectacular until Vorster became Minister of Justice in 1961.³²⁴ Van den Bergh was then swiftly promoted to lieutenant colonel and at the end of 1962 he was named by Vorster as head of South Africa's Secret Police.³²⁵ His progress thereafter was unstoppable: promoted to full colonel in 1963,³²⁶ when, as ordered by Vorster, he established the Republican Intelligence Service;³²⁷ brigadier in 1964, major-general in 1966,³²⁸ lieutenant general in 1968; and in 1969 full general and head of the notorious Bureau of State Security (BOSS),³²⁹ which through the 1970s was the controlling national organisation in South Africa.³³⁰ South African judges, professors and lawyers, some of them even supporters of apartheid, protested against the methods of the BOSS and condemned its increasing power and unaccountability. The Veg ("Fight"), a journal published by Afrikaner intellectuals, suggested that it should instead be called the Bureau for Intimidation, Victimization and Elimination, or just the Gestapo.³³¹

³¹⁷ James Sanders, Apartheid's Friends: The Rise and Fall of South Africa's Secret Service, (London: John Murray, 2006), p. 34-35.

³¹⁸ O'Meara, Forty Lost Years: The Apartheid State and the Politics of the National Party 1948-1994, p. xxxvii.

³¹⁹ Robert I Rotberg, "The Process of Decision Making in Contemporary South Africa" (1983). In Helen Kitchen (ed.), South Africa: In Transition to What? (Washington, D.C: The Centre for Strategic and International Studies, 1988), p. 13-14.

³²⁰ Bell and Ntsebeza, Unfinished Business: South Africa, Apartheid and Truth, p. 41.

³²¹ Sanders, Apartheid's Friends: The Rise and Fall of South Africa's Secret Service, p. 35.

³²² Hepple, South Africa's Bureau for State Security, p. 437; The Times, 'Hendrik van den Bergh', 19 August 1997: 19.

³²³ Sanders, Apartheid's Friends: The Rise and Fall of South Africa's Secret Service, p. 34-35.

³²⁴ International Defence and Aid Fund, BOSS: The First Five Years, (London: International Defence and Aid Fund, 1975), p. 15; Sanders, Apartheid's Friends: The Rise and Fall of South Africa's Secret Service, p. 35.

³²⁵ O'Meara, Forty Lost Years: The Apartheid State and the Politics of the National Party 1948-1994, p. 211.

³²⁶ Hepple, "South Africa's Bureau for State Security", p. 437.

³²⁷ Sanders, Apartheid's Friends: The Rise and Fall of South Africa's Secret Service, p. 35.

³²⁸ Hepple, "South Africa's Bureau for State Security", p. 437.

³²⁹ Dubow, Apartheid 1948-1994, p. 153; O'Meara, Forty Lost Years: The Apartheid State and the Politics of the National Party 1948-1994, p. xxxvii; Sanders, Apartheid's Friends: The Rise and Fall of South Africa's Secret Service, p. 35.

³³⁰ Hain, Sing the Beloved Country: The Struggle for the New South Africa, p. 84.

³³¹ International Defence and Aid Fund, South Africa: The BOSS Law, (London: International Defence and Aid Fund, 1969), p. ii-4.

General van den Bergh was Vorster's eminence grise, his closest adviser and chief hatchet man³³² and was widely considered the second most powerful man in the country. Some believed that van den Bergh was at the time even more powerful than Vorster; since the Prime Minister was answerable to Parliament and to his Party, while the General was answerable only to the Prime Minister, who was his best friend and closest associate.³³³ BOSS, which was modelled on America's CIA,³³⁴ was responsible for some of apartheid regime's worst excesses in the 1970s, with van den Bergh overseeing blackmail, torture and assassination at a time when the Cold War gave the ruling National Party an alibi – fighting international Communism – for its true mission, the prevention of democratic rule.³³⁵

In 1966, van den Bergh publicly denied that he had ever been a member of the OB, although his adherence to the group along with other prominent figures was widely known. He even claimed that he was unfamiliar with the principles and policies of the organization.³³⁶ However, when he acted as a pallbearer at the funeral of Hans van Rensburg,³³⁷ Commanding General of the Ossewabrandwag during World War Two,³³⁸ he saluted him with the organisation's Fascist, arm-across-the-chest salute.³³⁹ A life-long Afrikaner nationalist, van den Bergh was also a member of the Afrikaner Broederbond. His membership number was 6745³⁴⁰ and in 1964, the Broederbond awarded him a medal for his services.³⁴¹

Van den Bergh was fanatically anti-Communist and anti-Semite and in September 1966, he outraged South Africa's large Jewish community by claiming that Jews were becoming Communists because "Communism is the highest form of capitalism." Addressing ³³² O'Meara, Forty Lost Years: The Apartheid State and the Politics of the National Party 1948-1994, p. xxxvii.

³³³ International Defence and Aid Fund, South Africa: The BOSS Law, p. 5.

³³⁴ Kenneth W. Grundy, The Militarization of South African Politics, (Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1986), p. 42-43.

³³⁵ Braid, 'Obituary: Hendrik van den Bergh', The Independent, 20 August 1997: 12.

³³⁶ Rand Daily Mail, 'Van den Bergh: I Wasn't An OB', 9 October 1966: 1.

³³⁷ (1898-1966) A lawyer and Nazi supporter who served as Secretary of Justice in 1933. In 1938, he helped in the formation and organization of the Nazi organization the Ossewabrandwag and he became its commander general from 1941 until 1952. He died on the 25th of September 1966. (Rees, Who's Who in the Extreme Right since 1890: An International Biographical Dictionary, p. 401). On the day of his funeral, the newly appointed Prime Minister John Vorster, sent a wreath and ordered all flags in Pretoria to fly at half-mast, a military guard of honour was at the service and ex-OB members gave their semi-fascist salute (Furlong, "The National Party of South Africa: A Transnational Perspective", p. 73).

³³⁸ Furlong, "The National Party of South Africa: A Transnational Perspective", p. 73.

³³⁹ Rand Daily Mail, 'Van den Bergh: I Wasn't An OB', 9 October 1966: 1; Sanders, Apartheid's Friends: The Rise and Fall of South Africa's Secret Service, p. 35.

³⁴⁰ Bell and Ntsebeza, Unfinished Business: South Africa, Apartheid and Truth, p. 28; Serfontein, Brotherhood of Power: An Expose of the Secret Afrikaner Broederbond, p. 272; Wilkins and Strydom, Broederbond: The Super-Afrikaners, p. A239.

³⁴¹ Serfontein, Brotherhood of Power: An Expose of the Secret Afrikaner Broederbond, p. 18, 91.

an anti-Communist symposium at the height of the Tsafendas investigation, he charged that Communists subverted the White South African way of life by engaging in “psychological sabotage.” The Communist leaders of the campaign were “white so-called intellectuals,” most of whom, he said, were Jewish.”³⁴² In the 1970s, however, he developed close official ties with Israel.³⁴³ Communists, however, remained high on his hate list. He said, the Communist Party consisted of “a very select group of people” and “possessed everything except a person’s soul.”³⁴⁴ He also said Communism was furthered by “self-indulgence, self-pessimism and sickly sentimentality.”³⁴⁵

Van den Bergh was known to be unstable and to take pleasure from inflicting pain³⁴⁶ and throughout his career, he left a trail of violence in his wake. The methods of torture he applied were learned, or refined, from his contacts with the American Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) and from training he received in interrogation techniques in France and Algeria during the first half of the 1960s.³⁴⁷ Evidence of van den Bergh’s cruelty was demonstrated as early as March 21, 1960 at the Sharpeville massacre when he was sent to the Baragwanath hospital where many victims of the police shootings had been taken. His team of White and Black policemen dragged wounded people from their beds, irrespective of their condition, handcuffed them and transported them to Boksburg Prison. There they were stripped naked, hosed down and ordered to dress again in their bloody clothes, which they were forced to wear unwashed for months afterwards as an example of the price of “agitation.”³⁴⁸

As a reward for this exemplary action against sick and injured people, van den Bergh was awarded a role in the Sharpeville investigation.³⁴⁹ Judge Wessels, the sole member of the Commission of Inquiry, appointed van den Bergh as the chief police investigator to determine, among other things, who fired the first shots and who shouted “shoot.”

³⁴² Rand Daily Mail, ‘Reds and Jews by v.d. Bergh’, 30 September 1966: 1; Winter, Inside BOSS: South Africa’s Secret Police, p. 87; H. J. van der Bergh, ‘Sabotage in South Africa.’ In National Council to Combat Communism, Battle for the Mind: Papers Read at the International Symposium on Communism, Sept. 1966, Pretoria, (Joubert Park: National Council to Combat Communism, 1967), p. 21-45.

³⁴³ Sasha Polakow-Suransky, The Unspoken Alliance: Israel’s Secret Relationship with Apartheid South Africa. (New York: Pantheon Books, 2010), p. 89-90.

³⁴⁴ Rand Daily Mail, ‘Van den Bergh: I Wasn’t An OB’, 9 October 1961: 1-2.

³⁴⁵ Bunting, The Rise of the South African Reich, p. 412.

³⁴⁶ Peter Lambley, The Psychology of Apartheid, (Athens: The University of Georgia Press, 1980), p. 235.

³⁴⁷ TRC, TRC Report: Volume Two, p. 195.

³⁴⁸ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 194-195.

³⁴⁹ Rand Daily Mail, ‘Sharpeville Magistrate’, 22 July 1960.

Unsurprisingly, van den Bergh “failed” to discover the guilty parties,³⁵⁰ but Judge Wessels praised him nonetheless for the industry he displayed.³⁵¹ As chief police investigator, van den Bergh was also responsible for concealing evidence of the use by the police of illegal dum-dum bullets.

In July 1964, van den Bergh announced that forty anti-apartheid activists had been arrested in the previous two weeks alone under the 90-day detention clause of the General Law Amendment Act of 1963. He said there was nothing arbitrary about recent police actions. “Before we raid anyone or detain them, we give the matter our most thorough consideration... we have files on all leftists in this country. If we do not have a file on a person, the investigating officer’s motivation must be exceptionally strong before we will agree to detention under the 90-day clause.” A panel of six senior officers under his chairmanship decided whether to arrest suspects, he said. “Unless we all agree to the detention, the request is referred back to the investigating officer for further motivation,” van den Bergh stated.³⁵²

In 1965, Hugh Lewin, a White South African reporter and anti-apartheid activist, was arrested on charges of sabotage, and beaten by police. He was brought before van den Bergh with a bruised and bloody face. Lewin subsequently brought charges of assault against the police. The accused officers unanimously denied the charges and stated on oath that Lewin sustained his facial wounds when he banged his head accidentally against the door of a police car. For his part, van den Bergh was clearly unafraid to lie before the law, since advocates told the court that he was prepared to testify on oath that no member of his force ever assaulted Lewin.³⁵³ Later, van den Bergh affirmed accusations that his department was impervious to legal constraints by stating, “We were fighting a revolution those days. It was not kid-gloves stuff, it was war... as far as I was concerned there was no time for peacetime legal niceties.”³⁵⁴

Van den Bergh’s successes on behalf of apartheid were evident in the steep increase in trials of political activists from the early 1960s onwards which saw thousands imprisoned.

³⁵⁰ Report of the Sharpeville Commission, p. 154; Roux, Time Longer than Rope: A History of the Black Man’s Struggle for Freedom in South Africa, p. 408.

³⁵¹ Report of the Sharpeville Commission, p. 10.

³⁵² The New York Times, ‘40 in South Africa Arrested in Raids’, 12 July 1964: 5.

³⁵³ Lewin, Bandiet: Seven Years in a South African Prison, p. 23-37.

³⁵⁴ Bizos, No One to Blame? A Personal Account of Inquests into Some Deaths in Detention under Apartheid, p. 3.

As a result, he was credited with having “practically wiped out” sabotage in South Africa.³⁵⁵ His biggest coup was organising the arrests of the most prominent members of the ANC at Liliesleaf Farm in July 1963.³⁵⁶ It was, he said, “one of the most important round-ups so far.” The arrests led to the Rivonia Trial³⁵⁷ the following year when Nelson Mandela and eight ANC activists were sentenced to life imprisonment. For his success, the then Colonel van den Bergh was raised to the rank of brigadier - the youngest holder of that rank in the South African Police.³⁵⁸ In addition, in 1964, van den Bergh ordered the arrest of Bram Fischer, followed by the arrests of several Communists and anti-apartheid activists.³⁵⁹ Robben Island,³⁶⁰ the infamous penitentiary where most of the political prisoners were detained during the apartheid era, was described at the time as “van den Bergh’s monument.”³⁶¹

On July 24, 1964, shortly after John Harris’s bomb had exploded in Johannesburg Railway Station, van den Bergh sat in his car pondering, “Who did this?” Suddenly, he claimed, the name “John Harris” came into his mind, although he had never heard of him. Van den Bergh attributed this flash of inspiration to divine revelation.³⁶² As we will shortly see, it was not the only thing in his life that he attributed to the hand of God. General van den Bergh was later asked by Benjamin Pogrund of the Rand Daily Mail about Harris’s broken jaw. The general said that on the evening in question, Harris was arrested and brought into the Security Police headquarters in Johannesburg, where he was present:

“When I left late that night I walked down the stairs, there was a light missing. I told them they should put in a bulb otherwise someone was sure to trip in the dark and hurt himself. That’s exactly what happened to Harris. After he had confessed, he was being brought down the stairs and he slipped and fell and broke his jaw.”³⁶³

The truth, of course, was that a Security policeman had broken Harris’s jaw.³⁶⁴ Gordon Winter, a former BOSS agent and very close friend of the General, claimed that on March 31, 1965, van den Bergh offered John Harris,³⁶⁵ on the eve of his execution, the ³⁵⁵ International Defence and Aid Fund, BOSS: The First Five Years, p. 15.

³⁵⁶ Braid, ‘Obituary: Hendrik van den Bergh’, The Independent, 20 August 1997: 12; Dubow, Apartheid 1948–1994, p. 96; The New York Times, ‘17 Seized in Raid in South Africa’, 11 July 1963: 3.

³⁵⁷ For more about the Rivonia Trial see Chapter 1.

³⁵⁸ Sanders, Apartheid’s Friends: The Rise and Fall of South Africa’s Secret Service, p. 35.

³⁵⁹ Pike, A History of Communism in South Africa, p. 405.

³⁶⁰ For more about Robben Island see Chapter 1.

³⁶¹ Pogrund, ‘Obituary: Lieutenant-General Hendrik van den Bergh: Boss of South Africa’s Forces of Oppression’, The Guardian, 21 August 1997: 17.

³⁶² Pike, A History of Communism in South Africa, p. 405.

³⁶³ Pogrund, War of Words: Memoir of a South African Journalist, p. 248-249.

³⁶⁴ Pogrund, War of Words: Memoir of a South African Journalist, p. 249.

³⁶⁵ The man who planted a bomb in a Johannesburg train station. For more see Chapter 1.

chance to escape from prison in exchange for information about his accomplices. Harris declined to betray his comrades and was hanged the next day.³⁶⁶

In 1965, infuriated by a Rand Daily Mail story alleging torture and inhumane conditions in South African prisons, van den Bergh ordered a raid on the newspaper's offices.³⁶⁷ Laurence Gandar, the newspaper's editor, described the police action as an unprecedented campaign of savagery.³⁶⁸ The police swoop was not without gallows humour. After the raid and the presumed bugging of the newspaper's offices, staff at editorial conferences, when discussing sensitive matters, would look up at the ceiling and say, "Hope you can hear OK, General."³⁶⁹

Justice Minister Vorster, who in 1966 accepted the additional portfolio of Police and Prisons, instructed van den Bergh that anyone deemed to be a threat to the state should "be taken out of circulation in one way or another, if there are valid reasons for not bringing that person to trial."³⁷⁰ For this reason, in 1969, General van den Bergh created within BOSS a special unit known as the Z Squad tasked to eliminate both enemies of the state and security risks.³⁷¹

When van den Bergh appeared before the Erasmus Commission of Inquiry³⁷² into the so-called "Infogate" scandal in 1978, that eventually brought him down, he acquiesced with Vorster's remark but also hinted that his department had an operational capacity which did not exclude murder. He said, "Mr. Commissioner, I really want to tell you that I am able, with my department, to do the impossible. I can today tell you here, not for your records, but I can tell you, this is not bragging, I have good men, Afrikaners, I don't have weak men... I have enough men to commit murder if I tell them, 'Kill'... I don't care who the prey is. These are the types of men I have ..."³⁷³ There were several cases which seemed to bear out van den

³⁶⁶ Winter, Inside BOSS: South Africa's Secret Police, p. 99-100.

³⁶⁷ Joseph Lelyveld, 'South African Found Guilty of Lying about Jails', The New York Times, 27 January 1966: 13; Joseph Lelyveld, 'South Africa Raids Paper Over Prison Articles: Detectives Seize Copy', The New York Times, 2 July 1965: 3; The New York Times, 19 August 1965: 30, 'Reprisals in South Africa.'

³⁶⁸ The New York Times, 'Reprisals in South Africa', 19 August 1965: 30.

³⁶⁹ Pogrand, 'Obituary: Lieutenant-General Hendrik van den Bergh: Boss of South Africa's Forces of Oppression', The Guardian, 21 August 1997: 17.

³⁷⁰ D'Oliveira, Vorster – The Man, p. 157-158.

³⁷¹ Jeffrey M. Bale, "South Africa's Project Coast: 'Death Squads,' Covert State-Sponsored Poisonings, and the Dangers of CBW Proliferation." Democracy and Security, Vol. 2, Issue 1 (2006), p. 43.

³⁷² The Erasmus Commission of Inquiry was appointed to investigate "alleged irregularities" into the Department of Information.

³⁷³ John F. Burns, 'Pretoria Scandal Testimony Reveals Talk of Murder', The New York Times, 18 May 1980: 3; Leonard, South Africa at War: White Power and the Crisis in Southern Africa, p. 124; Clifford Luyt, "The Killing Fields: South Africa's Human Rights Record in Southern Africa." Social Justice: A Journal of Crime,

Bergh's boast.³⁷⁴ In front of the same commission van den Bergh also had added "that if he wanted to do something nobody would stop him and that he would stop at nothing."³⁷⁵

Working together, Vorster and van den Bergh engineered legislation which gave the security forces virtual carte blanche in their pursuit of apartheid's interests. In 1969, the General Law Amendment Bill was passed, whose notorious Clause 29 authorised the Prime Minister or his nominee (i.e. van den Bergh of course) to prohibit oral testimony or the production of any document before any court or statutory body should they believe the evidence or document would be "prejudicial to the interests of the state or public security."³⁷⁶ In reality, this permitted the police and the security forces to conceal or ensure the unavailability of any document or evidence which might jeopardise their cause. As we will see in the following chapters, the Tsafendas case exemplified such a situation, when documents and evidence contradicting the judge's trial verdict and the "findings" of the Commission of Enquiry were concealed or disappeared.

In 1975, according to the South African Observer, the head of BOSS was so powerful at the time that Prime Minister Vorster would have been "unable to govern the country without having General van den Bergh at his elbow." The newspaper argued that the Nationalist Party had become "a mere instrument in the hands of these two ambitious men."³⁷⁷ The close relationship between the minister and the security supremo was made clear by Vorster when he declared, "General van den Bergh is an officer with whom I co-operated intimately during the most difficult years which South Africa experienced at the time, of the Poqo and the ANC and other problems. He is an officer for whom I have the highest regard and respect because of his ability and the manner in which he performs his work."³⁷⁸ These two men made the police virtually sacrosanct and systematically destroyed not only what little room for democracy remained, but also, from the beginning of the 1960s, opposition from any quarter,³⁷⁹ turning South Africa effectively into a police state.³⁸⁰ By 1966, just three years after his appointment as police and security overlord, van den Bergh Conflict and World Order, Vol. 16, No. 2 (36), Varieties of State and Corporate Crime (Summer 1989), p. 110; TRC, TRC Report: Volume Two, p. 18.

³⁷⁴ Leonard, South Africa at War: White Power and the Crisis in Southern Africa, p. 124.

³⁷⁵ Report of the Commission of Inquiry into Alleged Irregularities in the Former Department of Information, (Pretoria: Government Printer, 1978), chap. 11, par. 386.

³⁷⁶ International Defence and Aid Fund, BOSS: The First Five Years, p. 11; John D. Jackson, Justice in South Africa, (Harmondsworth: Penguin Books, 1980), p. 40.

³⁷⁷ International Defence and Aid Fund, BOSS: The First Five Years, p. 15.

³⁷⁸ House of Assembly [South Africa], Debates, (21 April 1971).

³⁷⁹ van der Westhuizen, White Power and the Rise and Fall of the National Party, p. 96.

³⁸⁰ O'Meara, Forty Lost Years: The Apartheid State and the Politics of the National Party 1948-1994, p. xxxvii.

had trebled the strength of the security police and was promoted from lieutenant colonel to brigadier.³⁸¹

In 1971, Ahmed Timol, a thirty-year-old teacher and member of the South African Communist Party and the MK, died after falling from the tenth floor of the notorious John Vorster Square police station while he was in custody. The police version was that Timol flung open a window and leaped out. However, it was common knowledge that Timol had been tortured systematically in detention and almost certainly murdered, prompting people to demand a public inquiry. His fingernails had been pulled out, one of his eyes gouged from its socket, his testicles crushed, and his body was covered in blue bruises and livid burn marks. General van den Bergh declared that there was no need for a public inquiry, but “there will be an inquest and all the facts relating to his death will be made public then.” The inquest was held in secret and the result of the post-mortem was not released.³⁸²

General Stoffel Buys, head of the CID, who investigated the incident concluded that Timol had “stormed towards the window and jumped through it.”³⁸³ Naturally, the usual verdict in such cases was announced: “Suicide.” The Magistrate said in his judgement, “Mr. Timol was not assaulted by any person. I am satisfied that despite the long hours of the interrogation to which he was subjected, he was treated in a civilised and humane manner.” Timol was the twentieth political prisoner to die in police custody in eight years.³⁸⁴

However, on October 12, 2017, Judge Billy Mothle of the Pretoria High Court, ruled at the conclusion of an inquest which ran from June to September 2017 that Timol was murdered, thereby overruling the verdict of the original inquest. Judge Mothle said in his judgement that the magistrate at the time had relied on “a limited version of events.”

³⁸¹ Bizos, No One to Blame? A Personal Account of Inquests into Some Deaths in Detention under Apartheid, p. 3.

³⁸² Bernstein, South Africa: The Terrorism of Torture, p. 1-3; Bizos, No One to Blame? A Personal Account of Inquests into Some Deaths in Detention under Apartheid, p. 18-36; Yadhana Jadoo, ‘New Light Shed on Ahmed Timol’s Death’, The Citizen, 27 October 2015; Gregory Houston and Bernard Magubane, “The ANC Political Underground in the 1970s.” In South African Democracy Education Trust, The Road to Democracy in South Africa: 1970-1980, Vol 2, (Pretoria: UNISA Press, 2007), p. 440-441; Bernard Magubane, “Introduction to the 1970s: The Social and Political Context”. In South African Democracy Education Trust, The Road to Democracy in South Africa: 1970-1980, Vol 2, (Pretoria: UNISA Press, 2007), p. 5; South African History Online, Ahmed Timol, (30 January 2019). Retrieved from: <https://www.sahistory.org.za/people/ahmed-timol>; World Peace Council, Apartheid is Built on Torture, p. 4-8.

³⁸³ Bernstein, South Africa: The Terrorism of Torture, p. 1.

³⁸⁴ Bizos, No One to Blame? A Personal Account of Inquests into Some Deaths in Detention under Apartheid, p. 18-36; Jadoo, ‘New Light Shed on Ahmed Timol’s Death’, The Citizen, 27 October 2015; Houston and Magubane, “The ANC Political Underground in the 1970s”, p. 440-441; Magubane, “Introduction to the 1970s: The Social and Political Context”, p. 5; World Peace Council, Apartheid is Built on Torture, p. 4-8.

Archbishop Desmond Tutu said, “It is sad that it took so long and there are many other TRC matters that haven’t been resolved.”³⁸⁵

During the 1970s, van den Bergh did not confine his techniques of persuasion to the physical. He was one of the brains behind the launch in 1976 of the government-funded English-language newspaper, The Citizen,³⁸⁶ a propaganda sheet designed to counter the liberal political position of the long-established Rand Daily Mail. However, it was his involvement in murky, pro-apartheid propaganda and his bitter relationship with Defence Minister P.W. Botha and South Africa’s Defence Forces that ultimately led to his downfall.³⁸⁷

In 1978, Judge Anton Mostert, the sole member of the one-man Commission of Inquiry into exchange control regulations, discovered evidence of widespread government corruption, particularly at the Ministry of Information, It became known as the “Information Scandal”³⁸⁸ (also nicknamed Muldergate after the Information Minister, Cornelius Mulder), directly involving van den Bergh and Vorster,³⁸⁹ despite their efforts to conceal their involvement long before the scandal broke. In 1976, van den Bergh and Vorster had instructed their associates in the Ministry to destroy all “unnecessary documentation” that would disclose their involvement in the case.³⁹⁰ In 1977, these two, along with Mulder, ordered L.S. Reynders, a civil servant investigating the irregularities, to exculpate them from any involvement. His “findings” offered van den Bergh, Vorster and Mulder the whitewash they wanted.³⁹¹

However, Judge Mostert discovered evidence linking van den Bergh and Vorster, the two most powerful men in the country at the time, to the scandal. Despite heavy pressure from the government, the judge disclosed at a press conference that in seeking ways to influence public opinion in favour of apartheid, the Ministry collaborated closely and ³⁸⁵ Greg Nicolson, ‘Timol Inquest: He Was Murdered But Culprits are Dead, Court Rules’, Daily Maverick, 12 October 2017. Retrieved from: <https://www.dailymaverick.co.za/article/2017-10-12-timol-inquest-he-was-murdered-but-culprits-are-dead-court-rules/>

³⁸⁶ Sanders, Apartheid’s Friends: The Rise and Fall of South Africa’s Secret Service, p. 99.

³⁸⁷ Gavin Cawthra, Brutal Force: The Apartheid War Machine, (London: International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa, 1986), p. 38.

³⁸⁸ For more about the scandal see: Rees, M., Day, C. (1980) Muldergate: The story of the info-scandal; Rickard, C. (2012) Thank You, Judge Mostert!

³⁸⁹ H. Lindsay Smith, Anatomy of Apartheid, (Germiston: Khanya Publishers, 1979), p. 43; The Globe and Mail, ‘Secret Life of Pretoria’, 6 April 1979: 6.

³⁹⁰ Sanders, South Africa and the International Media, 1972-1979: A Struggle for Representation, p. 62.

³⁹¹ Richard Pollack, Up Against Apartheid. The Role and the Plight of Press in South Africa, (Carbondale, IL: Southern Illinois University Press, 1981), p. 31.

covertly throughout the 1970s with van den Bergh's BOSS.³⁹² Among Mostert's findings was that in 1973, Vorster agreed to a plan to shift sixty-four million Rand secretly from the defence budget to fund a series of propaganda projects. These included bribes for international news agencies, an attempt to buy the US Washington Star newspaper for twenty-five million dollars and the expenditure of thirty million dollars setting up an English-language newspaper, The Citizen, as a government mouthpiece in opposition to the liberal Rand Daily Mail.³⁹³ For making his disclosures public in his final report, Judge Mostert was fired and the Commission of Inquiry was disbanded.³⁹⁴

As a result of Muldergate, the Erasmus Commission of Inquiry was appointed to investigate. By June 1979, the Commission had issued three reports implicating Vorster and Mulder in misleading Parliament about the secret funding of The Citizen and laying responsibility for extensive financial irregularities on Mulder and van den Bergh.³⁹⁵ When L.S. Reynders was questioned by the Commission, in the words of the Commission report, "he burst into tears and, like a lanced boil, made a clean breast of things."³⁹⁶ He admitted producing the whitewash under fierce pressure from van den Bergh, saying he feared that had he opposed him, the general would "pulverise" him, because "few people in this land realise what power van den Bergh possesses."³⁹⁷

In a sign of how the mighty had fallen, van den Bergh had his passport confiscated³⁹⁸ and he even signed a nationwide petition calling for his own prosecution.³⁹⁹ However, when he appeared before the Commission and was accused of being a "ruthless manipulator," he responded by calling the panel "a big farce" and denouncing its report as "full of lies." He also boasted about his "sinister network of agents" and his willingness to "stop at nothing" to achieve his ends. The Commission accused him of attempting to manipulate the election of Vorster's successor as prime minister just a year earlier.⁴⁰⁰

³⁹² Burns 'Pretoria Scandal Testimony Reveals Talk of Murder', The New York Times, 18 May 1980: 3; William A. Hachten and C. Anthony Giffard, The Press and Apartheid: Repression and Propaganda in South Africa, (Madison: The University of Wisconsin Press, 1984), p. 243-244.

³⁹³ Hachten and Giffard, The Press and Apartheid: Repression and Propaganda in South Africa, p. 250-251, 275.

³⁹⁴ The Globe and Mail, 'Secret Life of Pretoria', 6 April 1979: 6.

³⁹⁵ Leonard, South Africa at War: White Power and the Crisis in Southern Africa, p. 163.

³⁹⁶ Report of the Commission of Inquiry into Alleged Irregularities in the Former Department of Information, chap. 11, par. 383.

³⁹⁷ Report of the Commission of Inquiry into Alleged Irregularities in the Former Department of Information, chap. 11, par. 385.

³⁹⁸ Nicholas Ashford, 'The Revelations of Dr Rhoodie', The Spectator, 17 March 1979: 8.

³⁹⁹ The New York Times, 'South African General Signs Petition for His Own Prosecution', 4 February 1979: 5.

⁴⁰⁰ The New York Times, 'Acid General is Key to Pretoria Scandal', 1 April 1979: 10.

The accusation was true. In 1979, Eschel M. Rhodie, secretary of the Department of Information and close associate of van den Bergh and Mulder,⁴⁰¹ described a plot involving van den Bergh which could be construed as a bid for power. Rhodie claimed that before Vorster resigned, he (Rhodie), van den Bergh and Mulder planned to install Mulder as Vorster's successor, then form a triumvirate at the head of the nation's affairs.⁴⁰² As result of the scandal, van den Bergh was forced to resign and retire. BOSS was subsequently renamed as Department of National Security (DONS), headed by Dr. Niel Barnard.⁴⁰³ Van den Bergh faded from public view, farming broiler chickens quietly for two more decades before dying at Bronkhorstpruit, Pretoria, on August 16, 1997. He was eighty-three.⁴⁰⁴

⁴⁰¹ Sanders, South Africa and the International Media, 1972-1979: A Struggle for Representation, p. 72.

⁴⁰² Burns, 'Vorster Rejects Allegations in South Africa's Information Scandal', The New York Times, 23 March 1979: A3; Sanders, South Africa and the International Media, 1972-1979: A Struggle for Representation, p. 61; TIME, 'South Africa: Rhodie's Story', 26 March 1979.

⁴⁰³ Sanders, Apartheid's Friends: The Rise and Fall of South Africa's Secret Service, p. 64, 77, 161.

⁴⁰⁴ Pogrud, 'Obituary: Lieutenant-General Hendrik van den Bergh: Boss of South Africa's Forces of Oppression', The Guardian, 21 August 1997: 17.

Today he is remembered as the sanctioner of assassination and torture on behalf of apartheid and as a consummate blackmailer through his network of spies and informers. Almost anyone who was not a rampant Afrikaner was his enemy. "Tall Hendrik" cast his considerable shadow far beyond South Africa's borders in his hunt for anti-apartheid activists.⁴⁰⁵ He was described by the International Aid and Defence Fund as "a cruel and ruthless man with scant regard either for justice or humanity." Along with Prime Minister Vorster, he was responsible for the torture and death in detention of many opponents of apartheid.⁴⁰⁶ Judge Mostert described van den Bergh as a "sinister figure who saw himself as the power behind the throne of Prime Minister Vorster."⁴⁰⁷ Professor Dan O'Meara said van den Bergh personified "the most paranoid and the most vicious tendencies in Afrikaner nationalism,"⁴⁰⁸ while Helen Suzman described him in Parliament as "South Africa's own Heinrich Himmler."⁴⁰⁹

There were others who thought him plain mad. The best-selling British author and foreign correspondent Frederick Forsyth⁴¹⁰ described a disturbing encounter with van den Bergh, whom he described as "the originator and enforcer of apartheid." Forsyth wrote, "I once found myself enclosed with General van den Bergh, the head of the Bureau of State Security, the dreaded BOSS, and he insisted on telling me a story to prove not only his legitimacy but his sanity as well."⁴¹¹ This is what van den Bergh told Forsyth:

"I was standing once, quite alone on the High Veldt, when a great storm came up. I knew the land was riven with iron ore deposits and lightning strikes would be often and dangerous. So I took shelter under a large mwataba tree. There was an old kaffir standing nearby, also sheltering. The storm raged with biblical intensity. The thunderbolts poured out of the sky and the thunder was enough to deafen me. The tree was struck and split down the middle, its core a smoking ruin. The old kaffir was struck and at once electrocuted. But the storm passed and the sky cleared, and I was not touched. And that was when I knew that the hand of God was upon me."

⁴⁰⁵ Braid, 'Obituary: Hendrik van den Bergh', The Independent, 20 August 1997: 12.

⁴⁰⁶ International Defence and Aid Fund, BOSS: The First Five Years, p. 15.

⁴⁰⁷ The Globe and Mail, 'Secret Life of Pretoria', 6 April 1979: 6; The New York Times, 'Acid General is Key to Pretoria Scandal', 1 April 1979: 10.

⁴⁰⁸ O'Meara, Forty Lost Years: The Apartheid State and the Politics of the National Party 1948-1994, p. 211.

⁴⁰⁹ Winter, Inside BOSS: South Africa's Secret Police, p. 26; House of Assembly [South Africa], Debates, (8 December 1978).

⁴¹⁰ Author of, among others, The Day of the Jackal (1971), The Odessa File (1972) and The Dogs of War (1974).

⁴¹¹ Frederick Forsyth, The Outsider: My Life in Intrigue, (London: Bantam Press, 2015), p. 334-335.

Forsyth concluded that the “master of one of the most brutal secret police forces in the world” was “mad as a frog.”⁴¹²

GENERAL VAN DEN BERGH'S INTERROGATION

General van den Bergh spent the evening of September 6 and some of the following day interrogating Tsafendas, while Security Police officers in Cape Town worked through the night on the investigation.⁴¹³ Unfortunately, the transcript of Tsafendas's interrogation by General van den Bergh has gone missing from the National Archives and has never been seen by the author. As we will later see and discuss, this is hardly surprising, as a number of very important documents have disappeared from the Archives over the years; the most recent case being that of Ahmed Timol. The author found in the archives the transcripts of two of the statements which Tsafendas gave to the police and to Major Rossouw, but not the one that was taken by General van den Bergh on that first day.

Tsafendas's interrogation by General van den Bergh is not his only missing statement. The two statements Tsafendas gave to the Commission of Enquiry have also disappeared. According to the Commission's report, Tsafendas gave evidence twice; on October 25 and November 11.⁴¹⁴ Neither of these statements can be traced. Apart from the written statements, the Dictaphone recordings of these two testimonies are also missing. It would be a remarkable coincidence for both copies, one typed and one recorded for each of the testimonies, to disappear, whether by accident or incompetence.

Furthermore, the report of the Commission of Enquiry stated that “one hundred and five persons, including Tsafendas himself, gave oral evidence before the Commission.”⁴¹⁵ However, fewer than half of these witnesses' statements were found in the archives. The surprising thing is that in most cases where a typed statement survived, so did the recording; but where a typed statement went missing, the recording did, too. It is not unusual for documents to go missing from archives for a variety of reasons, but it strains credulity that in every case where a written statement disappeared, so, too, did the accompanying recording. The issue of the missing statements will be discussed in detail later in this chapter and in Chapter 6.

⁴¹² Forsyth, The Outsider: My Life in Intrigue, p. 334-335.

⁴¹³ Daily Dispatch, 'All Night Work', 7 September 1966: 1; The Cape Times, 'Riddle of Dr. Verwoerd's Assassin', 7 September 1966: 1; Pretoria News, 'Security Men Work All Night', 7 September 1966: 1.

⁴¹⁴ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II D, Paragraphs 18-19.

⁴¹⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter I, Paragraph 4.

The fact that General van den Bergh personally interrogated Tsafendas is confirmed by multiple sources. First of all, the General himself admitted in 1976 that he had done so: he said, "I can tell you that no person in South African history has ever been interrogated as much as Demitrios Tsafendas. I sat talking to him the whole evening [of the assassination] and right through the night. I wanted to know everything about this man and quizzed him on everything under the sun – including the remote possibility that he had been 'programmed' by drugs, or even hypnosis, to kill, or if he had been a hired assassin."⁴¹⁶ John Vorster later also stated that General van den Bergh had questioned Tsafendas, adding that "if a man does not break after forty-eight hours of van den Bergh's questioning, then you know that he does not know a thing".⁴¹⁷ In addition, in two interrogation transcripts of Tsafendas from later dates, there are references to van den Bergh's interrogation. In his first statement on September 11, Tsafendas refers explicitly to van den Bergh's interrogation, saying, "I must have made a mistake by telling General van den Bergh this."⁴¹⁸ On September 19, in his second recorded statement, Major Rossouw, who is conducting the interrogation, tells Tsafendas: "You told Gen. van den Bergh about a girl you were interested in ..."⁴¹⁹

The transcript of van den Bergh's interrogation was originally lodged in the National Archives of South Africa in Pretoria, along with the two found by the author, but it went missing around the time of the TRC hearings. As far as the author can tell, at least four persons have seen this transcript: Terry Bell, an investigative journalist and anti-apartheid activist; David Beresford, foreign correspondent in South Africa for Britain's Guardian newspaper; Liza Key, a researcher and filmmaker who made a documentary about Tsafendas; and Jan-Ake Kjellberg, a Senior Police Adviser at the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, and an investigator in the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's National Investigative Unit. All four, in personal interviews with the author, spoke at length about the contents of the interrogation transcript. They were unanimous, that Tsafendas told the general he had killed Dr. Verwoerd because he "did not agree with his policies", that there was nothing in the transcript to suggest that Tsafendas was not sane, and that van den Bergh was ⁴¹⁶ Gordon Winter, 'Tsafendas was Ineffective Red-Van den Bergh', The Citizen, 26 October 1976.

⁴¹⁷ D'Oliveira, Vorster – The Man, p. 180.

⁴¹⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴¹⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

most interested in finding out whether Tsafendas had any accomplices or discussed his intentions with anyone.⁴²⁰

The first person known to the author to have access to the document is Jan-Ake Kjellberg. It was during his work as an investigator for the TRC in 1997 that he came across the document in Tsafendas's police file. Kjellberg told the author that the interrogation transcript indicated that although Tsafendas told van den Bergh that he had killed Dr. Verwoerd because he "disagreed with him" and "his policies", the general was more interested in whether Tsafendas had any accomplices and whether he had discussed the assassination with anyone else. Kjellberg also said that there was nothing strange in the statement or anything to suggest that Tsafendas might not be sane.⁴²¹

Around the same time as Kjellberg saw the transcript, it was also accessed by David Beresford and Liza Key. Key, in her 1997 documentary A Question of Madness, and Beresford in articles in the Guardian in 1997 and 1999, made reference to Tsafendas's statement to General van den Bergh and subsequent statements by Tsafendas while he was in custody. Both emphasised in their works that the police had tried persistently to make Tsafendas say that the tapeworm "ordered him" to kill Dr. Verwoerd, but Tsafendas insisted that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he "disagreed with his policies."⁴²²

In an article in the Guardian in 1999, Beresford wrote, "Although there were attempts by police, during interrogation, to suggest to him [Tsafendas] that he believed a tapeworm had 'ordered' him to carry out the killing, he never seems to have made the claim himself."⁴²³ In the 1999 article in the Guardian, Beresford wrote, "Police interrogators, try though they did, never managed to get his admission that the worm talked to him, much less ordered the murder of the prime minister of the Republic of South Africa."⁴²⁴ Key, in her documentary, said exactly the same thing as Beresford, adding that Tsafendas had also said he had killed Dr. Verwoerd because he "disagreed with his policies."⁴²⁵ Both Beresford and Key reaffirmed to the author what they had said in their work about Tsafendas. Both also told the author that Tsafendas always maintained to them when they interviewed him over several ⁴²⁰ Terry Bell in a personal interview, 10 April 2015; David Beresford in a personal interview, 11 April 2014; Liza Key in a personal interview, 2 April 2015; Jan-Ake Kjellberg in a personal interview, 5 March 2015.

⁴²¹ Jan-Ake Kjellberg in a personal interview, 5 March 2015.

⁴²² David Beresford, 'Inside Story: The Madness that Destroyed Apartheid', The Guardian, 6 November 1997: 6-7; David Beresford, 'Dimitri Tsafendas: Long-Jailed Assassin of South African Premier', The Guardian, 11 October 1999: 18; A Question of Madness.

⁴²³ Beresford, 'Dimitri Tsafendas: Long-Jailed Assassin of South African Premier', The Guardian, 11 October 1999: 18.

⁴²⁴ Beresford, 'Inside Story: The Madness that Destroyed Apartheid', The Guardian, 6 November 1997.

⁴²⁵ A Question of Madness.

hours that he had killed Dr. Verwoerd because he “disagreed with his policies,” and he never said to them that the tapeworm had anything to do with it, nor was there anything to suggest that Tsafendas was not sane.⁴²⁶

Terry Bell was given a copy of Tsafendas’s interrogation transcript by Kjellberg while the latter worked for the TRC. In his 2003 book Unfinished Business: South Africa, Apartheid and Truth, co-authored with advocate and TRC Commissioner Dumisa Buhle Ntsebeza, it is stated that Tsafendas, according to the transcript of the interview, gave as his reason for killing Dr. Verwoerd the fact that he “didn’t agree with him.” Furthermore, still according to Bell and Ntsebeza, the transcript showed that Tsafendas had mentioned the notorious tapeworm only in passing, when asked about his hospitalizations, and he replied that he had suffered from tapeworm infestation. According to the authors, the transcript indicated that van den Bergh was more interested in whether Tsafendas had any accomplices and whether he had discussed the assassination with anyone else.⁴²⁷ In a personal interview with the author, Bell confirmed in detail the contents of Tsafendas’s first interrogation as reported in his book and as stated by Beresford and Key in their respective works.⁴²⁸

Further confirmation of the content of the first statement comes from Michalis Michelis, a prominent and now retired Greek journalist. In 1988, Michelis published an article about Tsafendas in the Greek political magazine Scholiastis, which was subsequently cited by Eleftherotipia, the biggest and most reliable newspaper in Greece at the time. The article was titled “I Did My Duty, What About You?”⁴²⁹ It was based on interviews which Michelis conducted in South Africa and elsewhere with people who knew Tsafendas. Among them were the South African writer, painter and anti-apartheid activist Breyten Breytenbach, who was with Tsafendas in “Beverly Hills,” a section in Pretoria Prison, Dimitris Kalogirou, who gave Tsafendas a reference in Durban in 1965 and who knew him since he was a child, and Dimitris Apostolidis, who knew Tsafendas in Durban. Michelis also interviewed a retired Afrikaner policeman who was present in the police station in Caledon Square when Tsafendas was detained there after the assassination. The policeman told Michelis he saw Tsafendas almost every day and spoke to him on some occasions.⁴³⁰

⁴²⁶ David Beresford in a personal interview, 11 April 2014; Liza Key in a personal interview, 2 April 2015.

⁴²⁷ Bell and Ntsebeza, Unfinished Business: South Africa, Apartheid and Truth, p. 56-57.

⁴²⁸ Terry Bell in a personal interview, 10 April 2015.

⁴²⁹ Michelis, “Δημήτρης Τσαφέντας: Έκανα το Καθήκον Μου ... Εσείς;”, p. 14-15.

⁴³⁰ Michalis Michelis in a personal interview, 12 December 2015.

Michelis did not disclose in his article the name of the policeman because the interview was given on condition of anonymity. The policeman told Michelis that he “never heard Tsafendas saying anything about the tapeworm” and that “he seemed to be perfectly sane.” He also added that “none of the policemen thought Tsafendas might be insane.” The policeman said Tsafendas told them that he considered it his “duty” to kill Dr. Verwoerd, hence the title of the article, because he believed him to be a “tyrant and a dictator who was oppressing his people.” Tsafendas would repeat exactly the same statement in the mid-1990s to Fathers Minas Constandinou, Spiros Randos and Ioannis Tsafaridis. He told them the assassination was morally and politically justifiable because Dr. Verwoerd was a dictator and a tyrant. He said that he had the “chance to kill the tyrant who had created apartheid,” that it was his “social responsibility,” indeed a “duty,” and he would have regretted it all his life if he had not acted when he had the chance.⁴³¹ A detailed account of what Tsafendas told the priests is given in the following chapter.

Tsafendas had also characterised a hypothetical assassination of Dr. Verwoerd as “justifiable” on grounds that he was “a dictator and a tyrant,” when he talked to a group of Eleni crew members three days before the actual assassination. Tsafendas characterised Dr. Verwoerd as a tyrant and a dictator when he was interrogated by Major Rossouw on September 11, 1966 and though he did not use those exact words that was clearly what he meant. He said that in his mind, Dr. Verwoerd was not the real representative of his country. “I wanted to see a government representing all the South African people. I do not think the nationalist Government is representative of the people and I wanted to see a different government.”⁴³²

Furthermore, according to Michelis, quoting the South African policeman, Tsafendas had said that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he had created apartheid and he hoped that his death could bring an end to it sooner or later.⁴³³ Tsafendas told Major Rossouw on September 11 that he had killed Dr. Verwoerd because he believed “a change of policy would take place” after his death.⁴³⁴ Finally, still according to Michelis quoting the South African policeman, Tsafendas said, “I don’t care what you will do to me, kill me.”⁴³⁵ Tsafendas ⁴³¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

⁴³² Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴³³ Michalis Michelis in a personal interview, 12 December 2015.

⁴³⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴³⁵ Michelis, “Δημήτρης Τσαφέντας: Έκανα το Καθήκον Μου ... Εσείς;”, p. 15.

would twice repeat an almost similar sentiment while he was interrogated. When he was interrogated by Major Rossouw on September 11, 1966, he said, "I did not care about the consequences for what would happen to me afterwards. I was so disgusted with the racial policy that I went through with my plans to kill the Prime Minister."⁴³⁶ On September 19, Tsafendas told the Major, "I never thought about hiding if I had to do the job with a knife. I didn't have much of a chance of getting away when using a knife. I didn't care much and didn't give it a second thought that I would be caught."⁴³⁷ Tsafendas also told other witnesses after the assassination that he "did not care what would happen" to him and that he knew he was going to be executed.⁴³⁸

The marked similarity between what Michelis wrote in 1988 and what Tsafendas told Major Rossouw on two occasions clearly indicates that Michelis's policeman was present when Tsafendas was in custody in Caledon Square police station. Michelis could not otherwise have known the content of Tsafendas's words, since the interrogation transcripts only became publicly available in the mid-1990s, long after the policeman was interviewed by Michelis and had his article published. Only someone who was present at the time could have known what Tsafendas told the police then.

Perhaps the strongest evidence that the policeman was present when Tsafendas was held in custody came from the fact that he told Michelis that Tsafendas was visited in his cell by a Greek-South African policeman. Michelis traced then this policeman, but he declined to talk to him.⁴³⁹ However, Tsafendas later told Fathers Minas Constandinou and Spiros Randos that a Greek-South African policeman had indeed visited him while he was in custody,⁴⁴⁰ thus confirming that Michelis's police informant had to be in the police station to witness this. We will talk later in this chapter about the role of the Greek-South African policeman in the case.

According to Tsafendas, van den Bergh interrogated him all night and he was not tortured or harassed when the General was present; van den Bergh was very polite, offered

⁴³⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴³⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴³⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

⁴³⁹ Michalis Michelis in a personal interview, 12 December 2015.

⁴⁴⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

him a cigarette, which he turned down, and water, which he accepted. However the General refused to let him sleep, saying he would sleep only when the interrogation was concluded.⁴⁴¹

⁴⁴¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

TSAFENDAS'S LEGAL REPRESENTATION

Soon after his arrest, though the author is not in position to know exactly when, Tsafendas formally requested that the well-known anti-apartheid activist and human rights lawyer, Advocate George Bizos, should be appointed to defend him in forthcoming legal proceedings. Tsafendas had not met Advocate Bizos, but was well acquainted with his work as a defence lawyer at political trials and had a very warm relationship with his father, Antonis Bizos. Receiving no response, Tsafendas repeated his request, but the result remained the same.⁴⁴² He did not see a lawyer until September 26, when he had been in custody for twenty days, and the lawyer was not Advocate Bizos but a defence team appointed by the State.

According to Advocate George Bizos, he was never contacted by the State or anyone else about representing Tsafendas, although it was a prisoner's legal right to be defended by a lawyer of his choice. Bizos was not surprised since he was himself persona non grata with the State. Not long before the assassination, Police Minister John Vorster's personal lawyer, by name of Krueger, had transmitted a warning from Vorster to Bizos that "his leash is getting shorter."⁴⁴³

The rejection of Tsafendas's request for the politically active Bizos to be his defence counsel was mirrored years earlier in the case of Nelson Mandela. Prohibitions against lawyers who had defended anti-government leaders meant that many accused persons were robbed of their right to the counsel of their choice. Mandela's defence counsel was threatened with imprisonment unless he left the trial precincts. This prompted Mandela to address the presiding magistrate as follows: "It is my duty to make this point: One of the few rights left to the Black man in this country is the right to choose his own Counsel. I suspect a deliberate decision to deprive me of Counsel of my own choosing. This is not a reflection on the State prosecutor. I think it is a high-level conspiracy to make it difficult for me to prepare for this trial."⁴⁴⁴

⁴⁴² Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

⁴⁴³ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017.

⁴⁴⁴ A Distinguished South African Lawyer, Verwoerd's Police State, p. 8-10.

The Police Investigation

Tsafendas Tortured in Detention

TSAFENDAS TORTURED WHILE IN DETENTIONINTRODUCTION⁴⁴⁵

The TRC found that torture “was the dominant form of violation” by the apartheid police during the 1960s.⁴⁴⁶ In Chapter 1, we saw how the apartheid police brutally tortured, even murdered, detainees during the 1960s (and, of course, it continued to do so until the fall of apartheid). Through the General Law Amendment Act of 1963 (the 90-day detention law), the police were given the power to detain individuals without charge and to use solitary confinement.⁴⁴⁷ In 1965, the 90 days were doubled and thus became the 180-day law. From June 1963 to September 1966 three detainees under this law, the same law under which Tsafendas was held, “killed themselves” while in police custody.⁴⁴⁸ In total, between 1960 and 1969, twenty prisoners died in detention. Of these deaths, eleven were labelled suicides and seven the result of natural causes, of which two were described as “slipping” accidents and one an accidental fall down stairs.⁴⁴⁹

As we also saw in Chapter 1, detainees were routinely tortured for lesser crimes than those of Tsafendas. In 1976, Prime Minister John Vorster revealed that General van den Bergh had questioned Tsafendas for forty-eight hours, adding that “if a man does not break after forty-eight hours of van den Bergh’s questioning, then you know that he does not know a thing.”⁴⁵⁰ Van den Bergh himself claimed that “no person in South African history has ever been interrogated as much as Demitrios Tsafendas.”⁴⁵¹ Given that the police of the apartheid era were notorious for their use of torture during questioning, we must assume that some violence was inflicted on Tsafendas. After all, he was interrogated more than any other prisoner during the apartheid years and he had committed the greatest possible crime by killing the architect of apartheid. As for Vorster’s statement regarding van den Bergh’s efficiency during interrogation, it could probably safely be interrupted as an allusion to torture by van den Bergh and his men. Tsafendas was not the first or last prisoner to be tortured by the apartheid police, nor were the techniques used reserved for him only. As we will see, most of what happened to Tsafendas was simply routine and the torture techniques

⁴⁴⁵ For a more detailed account of torture during apartheid see Chapter 1.

⁴⁴⁶ TRC, TRC Report: Volume Three, p. 530.

⁴⁴⁷ Eades, The End of Apartheid in South Africa, p. 16.

⁴⁴⁸ Rand Daily Mail, ‘Three 180-Day Detainees Have Killed Themselves’, 28 January 1967: 2; Sachs, The Violence of Apartheid, p. 26.

⁴⁴⁹ Fullard, ‘State Repression in the 1960s’, p. 362.

⁴⁵⁰ D’Oliveira, Vorster – The Man, p. 180.

⁴⁵¹ Winter, ‘Tsafendas was Ineffective Red-Van den Bergh’, The Citizen, 26 October 1976.

used on him, apart from the mock hanging, as far as the author can tell, were employed routinely by the apartheid police, especially the use of electric shocks.

THE TORTURE

On September 26, 1966, twenty days after the assassination, David Bloomberg, one of Tsafendas's lead lawyers, visited him for the first time. He said Tsafendas had "some facial injuries" which Major Cerff, the police officer who accompanied Bloomberg to the cell, claimed had "occurred during the struggle to subdue him in Parliament." Bloomberg "doubted this explanation since three weeks had elapsed since the assassination", but he decided he would "not reveal" his "misgivings" as "the injuries appear to be superficial."⁴⁵²

The assumption is that Bloomberg would have taken action over more serious injuries. However, Bloomberg was not a doctor and not qualified to determine whether or not the injuries were superficial. Further, since Tsafendas was fully dressed, Bloomberg could not know if Tsafendas carried injuries to his body, such as would be caused by beating or electric shocks. The use of violence and electrical shock torture was widespread at the time, as Bloomberg, a lawyer, should have known. Lyttelon Mngqlikana, who was held in Vooruitsig Prison in 1964, stated that the warders were "careful not to hit a prisoner on parts of the body which would show. It was futile to complain about a beating unless a prisoner could show marks."⁴⁵³

During a subsequent visit, Bloomberg again found Tsafendas with "visible injuries."⁴⁵⁴ He has given two different descriptions of this encounter. According to his 1997 account in Liza Key's documentary A Question of Madness, he discovered Tsafendas "huddled in a corner and badly bruised." Bloomberg said Tsafendas told him that a "madman, in his own words, got into his cell during the night and had beaten him up." Then "after further investigation, not only from the police, but around the town," Bloomberg discovered that on the night of the beating, a very famous horse trainer⁴⁵⁵ had been out drinking with a very senior policeman. At the end of their drinking binge, the men went to the police station where Tsafendas was held and the "horse trainer was allowed into the cell and performed ⁴⁵² David Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, (Simon's Town: Fernwood Press, 2007), p. 74-75.

⁴⁵³ International Defence and Aid Fund, South African Prisons and the Red Cross Investigation, (London: International Defence and Aid Fund, 1967), p. 43.

⁴⁵⁴ David Bloomberg in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

⁴⁵⁵ By coincidence, Abe Bloomberg, David Bloomberg's father, was president of a racecourse club in Cape Town. Judge Beyers was a board member of this club and a friend of Abe Bloomberg (Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016).

what I,⁴⁵⁶ what he, probably thought was a very loyal act and beat him up.” Bloomberg said the horse trainer had to be restrained from beating Tsafendas even more. In effect, Bloomberg attributed Tsafendas’s injuries to an unnamed individual who had somehow gained access to the cell. Not only did he absolve the police of any blame, he credited them with preventing Tsafendas from being more severely beaten.⁴⁵⁷

In his 2007 memoir My Times, Bloomberg downplayed the incident. In this version, Tsafendas is not “badly bruised,” but only had “some scratches and minor bruising on his face.” Bloomberg claimed that Tsafendas told him he was woken in the middle of the night by a police officer and a man in civilian clothes. The man in civilian clothes “suddenly rushed at him and started punching him and the officer intervened to restrain him and the two then left.” According to Bloomberg, the duty officer “denied that any unauthorised person could possibly have been allowed into this high security part of the police station and said that Tsafendas must have had a dream.” Bloomberg did not enquire how it was possible to acquire facial injuries by dreaming.⁴⁵⁸

This was the second time Bloomberg had found Tsafendas with facial injuries and again he did nothing. Instead of asking for a doctor to examine Tsafendas’s face and body, he ignored the matter. Judges Gerald Friedman and Robin Marais, both of whom were practising counsel then and had no connection with the case, thought that it would ordinarily be the duty of a lawyer to whom a client complained of having been assaulted while in continuing police custody to take the matter up with higher authority and, if material physical evidence of assault was still detectable, to require a medical examination to take place.⁴⁵⁹

According to Advocate George Bizos and Professor John Dugard given the seriousness of Tsafendas’s offence, and because of the police’s reputation for torture and brutality, Bloomberg should have asked that Tsafendas be examined by a doctor to determine if there were other injuries and if the facial injuries were indeed only superficial.⁴⁶⁰ Professor John Dugard told the author:

“You must remember the environment of the time in South Africa. The mid-sixties were undoubtedly the worst period in South Africa for that kind of treatment. And so I think ⁴⁵⁶ This is exactly what David Bloomberg said. The ‘I’ must have been a slip of his tongue.

⁴⁵⁷ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 82.

⁴⁵⁸ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 82.

⁴⁵⁹ Judge Gerald Friedman in a personal interview, 18 August 2016; Judge Robin Marais in a personal interview, 3 June 2016.

⁴⁶⁰ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017; John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

that lawyers... I don't know Bloomberg at all, but I know that lawyers were afraid to raise complaints of this kind. In my book on it, I mentioned the handful of lawyers who I thought were good, brave lawyers, and Wilfrid Cooper was one. So I would have expected him to raise it. He certainly would have. But other lawyers, advocates and attorneys were terrified.”⁴⁶¹

Professor Dugard described Bloomberg's claim as “absolute nonsense,”⁴⁶² Judge Robin Marais seriously doubts whether a civilian could have walked through many locked doors and beaten up Tsafendas.⁴⁶³ Judge Gerald Friedman founds the story “unbelievable”⁴⁶⁴ and Advocate George Bizos believes it to be a “lie.”⁴⁶⁵

Tsafendas later told several people that he was tortured severely by the police while in custody, both mentally and physically, and he described the torture in detail. Those he talked to include the cinematographer Liza Key, journalist David Beresford, Alexander Moumbaris,⁴⁶⁶ a member of Umkhonto We Sizwe and fellow prisoner in Pretoria Maximum Security Prison, and priests⁴⁶⁷ who visited him in prison and later in the two hospitals (Pretoria prison hospital and Sterkfontein), namely, Fathers Minas Constandinou and Spiros Randos and Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis.⁴⁶⁸ The South African policeman who was present while Tsafendas was held in Caledon Square Police Station told Michalis Michelis that Tsafendas was “badly tortured” while in custody, but he only mentioned severe beatings.⁴⁶⁹

⁴⁶¹ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

⁴⁶² Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

⁴⁶³ Judge Robin Marais in a personal interview, 3 June 2016.

⁴⁶⁴ Judge Gerald Friedman in a personal interview, 18 August 2016.

⁴⁶⁵ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017.

⁴⁶⁶ Alexander Moumbaris, born in Egypt to Greek parents in 1938, was arrested in 1972 on the Botswana border, along with his two-to-three months' pregnant French wife Marie-Jose, while he was attempting to smuggle MK fighters into South Africa. He was charged under the Terrorism Act, and was found guilty of conspiring with the ANC to instigate violent revolution in South Africa, of aiding “terrorists,” of distributing ANC pamphlets in Durban in 1968 and of reconnoitring the Transkei to find places for seaborne landings. He was sentenced to twelve years' imprisonment. He was sent to Pretoria Central Prison, from where he escaped in December 1979, along with fellow political prisoners and anti-apartheid activists Stephen Lee and Tim Jenkins. During the 1980s, he ran the ANC office in Paris. For his efforts in the anti-apartheid struggle he was later awarded the national order of Grand Companion of O.R. Tambo Medal and the Sabotage Campaign Medal (Keable, London Recruits: The Secret War against Apartheid, p. 122-131; Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017; Pike, A History of Communism in South Africa, p. 474-478). For Moumbaris's activities in South Africa see Keable, K. (ed.) (2012) London Recruits: The Secret War against Apartheid. For the amazing story of Moumbaris's escape see Jenkin, T. (2003) Inside Out: Escape from Pretoria Prison.

⁴⁶⁷ Tsafendas was also visited during the late 1980s and early 1990s by a fourth priest, Father Michalis Visvinis. Father Michalis was extensively interviewed several times by the author on the condition that what he said would not be published. He agreed to talk in order to “point the author to the right direction.” Everything he said is completely compatible with what Tsafendas told his three fellow priests and several other witnesses.

⁴⁶⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

⁴⁶⁹ Michalis Michelis in a personal interview, 12 December 2015.

According to Tsafendas, he was never tortured while “the General” was present. The “only thing” that van den Bergh insisted upon was that Tsafendas should not be allowed to sleep until the interrogation was finished.⁴⁷⁰ The no-sleep tactic was not a first. Bram Fischer, who defended Nelson Mandela at the 1963-64 Rivonia trial, was captured after a woman he knew was interrogated and threatened for seventy hours non-stop.⁴⁷¹ Tsafendas said that at first his torture was designed to find out more about him and whether he had any accomplices, but later it simply became revenge for his killing of Dr. Verwoerd.⁴⁷²

Tsafendas claimed that while in custody in Caledon Square Police Station, policemen would enter his cell several times a day and kick him and beat him with their fists and legs. There was no bed and he was forced to lie, often naked, and handcuffed, on the concrete floor. Sometimes, he would be put in a straitjacket and beaten, and this continued after he was transferred to prison. Tsafendas also said that he was given electric shocks. He described a small wooden box with wires, which he said the police used to electrocute him after they had removed some of his clothes. At the same time, they poured water over him to heighten the shock while tightening a burlap sack or a plastic bag around his head, causing a suffocating effect. He often lost consciousness and when he came to found himself half-naked on the floor. Tsafendas admitted, crying, that a few times he realised he had urinated on himself. He wore the same soiled clothes day after day and was only given clean clothes and allowed to have a bath when he was seen by his defence team or was examined by doctors.⁴⁷³

In addition to purely physical violence, Tsafendas was subjected to a series of mock hangings, which combined bodily and psychological torture. Almost every day, starting about a week after his arrest, Tsafendas would be taken blindfolded and with his hands tied, to another room. On the way there, the policemen shouted, “Now, you bastard, now your time has come.” Inside the room, they placed him on a chair with a rope around his neck. They then asked him if he had a last wish. A few seconds later they pulled the chair from under him, leaving him hanging from the rope. Tsafendas dangled for a few seconds in mid-air while the policemen shouted and laughed, before they loosed the rope and let him fall. Once on the floor he was kicked and beaten again. He was told that his time had not come yet, but ⁴⁷⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴⁷¹ Peires, The Holocaust and Apartheid: Similarities and Differences A Comparative Study, p. 107.

⁴⁷² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

⁴⁷³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

that he was not going to get out of there alive. After a few days of this, Tsafendas did not have the strength to stand and the police had to carry him into the “hanging” room.⁴⁷⁴

In another form of psychological torture, Tsafendas was subject to pretended defenestrations; he was taken to the window in a different room where the police threatened to throw him out, saying they would claim he had tried to escape.⁴⁷⁵ In Chapter 1, we saw that Abdullay Jassat, arrested in 1963, described a similar method of torture: he was also given electric shocks and was severely beaten.⁴⁷⁶ As far as the author can establish, all the torture techniques used on Tsafendas, apart from the mock hanging, were widely used by the enforcers of apartheid. They have been described in Chapter 1, with several cases provided as examples.

⁴⁷⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴⁷⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴⁷⁶ TRC, TRC Report: Volume Two, p. 539.

THE POLICE INVESTIGATION

What follows is a detailed diary of the police investigation that followed the assassination. It contains all the statements made by persons interrogated about Tsafendas, correspondence of the police and the government with various agencies and foreign governments, embassies' reports, police reports, an account of the PIDE's role and many of the press reports for each day.

WEDNESDAY, 7 SEPTEMBER 1966

STATEMENTS

The morning after the assassination, September 7, 1966, General van den Bergh continued his interrogation of Tsafendas while his men began interviewing people who knew the accused. At the same time, the police contacted the PIDE in Mozambique for information about Tsafendas.⁴⁷⁷ That day, the first full day of the investigation, at least eleven people⁴⁷⁸ were questioned and they are the following:

MARIKA MICHAEL TSAFANTAKIS⁴⁷⁹

I am the widow of the late Michael Tsafandakis who died at Pretoria on 14.2.62, and lives at No. 1 in Fatti's Building, in Paul Cruger Street, Pretoria. I married Michael Tsafandakis in 1920 in Port Said, Egypt and we moved to Lourenço Marques during 1921. At the time of our marriage I heard that Michael had a child with another woman, Amelia William. The child was then living with Michael's mother in Alexandria, Egypt. This child was named Demitrio Tsafendas. According to a birth certificate which I now produce, he was born at Lourenço Marques during July 1918. In 1924 the grandmother wrote to Michael stating that she was ill and unable to care for the child. The child was then brought to Lourenço Marques, where he lived with us and went to school in Lourenço Marques. When the child was approximately ten years old, we sent him to school in Middelburg, Transvaal. As far as I can remember, he attended school at Middelburg between three and five years. I cannot remember the name of the school, but as far as I know it was a government school. Eventually he was brought back to Lourenço Marques and he then attended a Portuguese school.

At the age of fifteen and even before, he was difficult to control and his father often had to punish him in order to get him disciplined. His association with other children at this stage, however, was good. He showed a particular interest in the use of gunpowder and explosives at this stage and at one time nearly blew up our house. Also at this stage I often found him gazing in space and when I asked him what he was doing, his reply was that he was thinking.

⁴⁷⁷ The Cape Argus, '180-Day Prison for Tsafendas', 7 September 1966: 1.

⁴⁷⁸ "At least" as some statements have disappeared from the archives and one cannot say for sure how many people were questioned.

⁴⁷⁹ Marika Tsafantakis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

He left school at the age of about sixteen and refused to attend further school. He then started work as a shop assistant and in his spare time took up boxing. He became a particularly good boxer and took part in many tournaments. I do not know him ever to have been injured in boxing. I remember that he was suffering from malaria over a period of years. He however never had blackwater fever. I also remember having taken him to a doctor at the age of about seven-eight years old as one of his teeth took too long to come out. The doctor then told me that this child was showing tendencies of idiocy.

During 1936 he was offered employment by a British firm, apparently building a base or an aerodrome in Mozambique, on account of him being able to speak English and Portuguese. I then lost trace of the accused and my husband and I moved to Johannesburg during 1937. During 1939 he however turned up at my home in Johannesburg and stayed with us until 1940. He at that time tried to get permanent residence in South Africa. Before this was finalised, he left for Durban and took up employment on a ship. I saw him for the first time in 1963 when he came to Lourenço Marques. During this period I received letters from him from all over the world and he was always asking for money.

When he returned during 1963 he told me that he wanted to settle down and he wanted me to help him. I then caused him to come to South Africa and he subsequently got permanent residence in the Republic. In Pretoria he took up employment with Poole's engineering as a welder and general maintenance. He did not live with us while working in Pretoria. Within a year he disappeared again and I never saw him again. The Greek legation in Lisbon at one time wrote to me that the accused was imprisoned in Lisbon but I do not know what for. I also heard from friends that he was at one stage in prison in Lourenço Marques. I also believe that he was in prison in Beira about two years ago.

I do not know to which religion the accused belongs. He however often mentioned that he is a Christian. As far as I know, the accused never showed any tendencies towards violence or criminality. The accused also told me that the ship he was working on during the war was torpedoed. As far as I know the accused was in America, Portugal, Egypt, Germany, Palestine, South Arabia at one or other stages of his life. I do not know the accused to be in any way politically inclined. He has never discussed politics with me. As far as politics is concerned, the Portuguese Government would be in position to furnish more definite information.

Pretoria 7.9.66. (SGD) J.W. Strumpher. Justice of the Peace.

COMMENTS ON MARIKA TSAFANTAKIS'S STATEMENT

Marika naturally revealed that she was aware that he was imprisoned in Beira, as she could not have done otherwise with such a well-known incident. She also volunteered that her stepson had had an interest in explosives as a teenager, and “nearly blew up” their house, as this too was such a well-known event among the Greek community in Lourenço Marques that the police would almost certainly have heard about it. However, she stated that Tsafendas “never discussed politics” with her and that he was not “in any way politically inclined.” As we have already seen, Marika Tsafantakis had often disagreed with her stepson’s political ideas and these ideas and his outspokenness were among the main reasons that he was left behind in Lourenço Marques in 1937 when the family immigrated to South Africa.

According to Katerina Pnefma, Marika’s daughter and Tsafendas’s half-sister, who was in Rhodesia at the time and was questioned there twice after the assassination by the police, her mother deliberately did not mention to the police Dimitri being a Communist nor did she refer to his anti-apartheid ideology. Pnefma told the author that this was something every member of the family did. She said:

“What could she have told them [about Tsafendas’s political ideas]? It was natural for my mother to say that she did not know anything about his political ideas. We all said the same thing: he never discussed politics with us ... how could she and us have told them that he was a Communist? That he was anti-apartheid? That he was anti-colonialist? That he called Dr. Verwoerd ‘bastard,’ ‘Hitler’s student’ and ‘dictator?’ That he has been getting us into trouble because of politics since he was child? They [the police] would have said ‘Why did you bring him here then [to South Africa]? Why didn’t you report him to the police?’ They might have even thought that we had the same ideas as him. Remember these were very difficult times for anyone who was even suspected of being a Communist and anti-apartheid. The Communist Party was illegal at the time in South Africa ... my mother had not only known that he was a political animal, but she had helped him to come to South Africa. Can you imagine what would have happened to her and to us if they knew that we knew that he was Communist and anti-apartheid and we helped him to come to South Africa?”

My poor mother was so terrified that they might find out they had bribed this guy in the Embassy in Lourenço Marques and that they would all go to jail. None of us told the police that he [Tsafendas] was a Communist and anti-apartheid. How could we have said such things then? They might have deported us all or even worse ... who knows what they could have done to us if they had found out that we knew. Even so, it took another twelve years before our application to reside permanently in South Africa was accepted. We had to hire lawyers and appeal several times. We spent a fortune ...⁴⁸⁰

Fotini Gavasiadis, whose brother Nick Vlachopoulos, was Marika's son-in-law, and who became extremely close with Tsafendas over nine months in Pretoria in 1963-1964, also stated that the "family tried to distance themselves as much as possible from Dimitri. They also couldn't admit that Dimitri was a Communist and against apartheid. They all said 'we knew nothing about his political ideas. He never discussed them with us.' They were terrified, absolutely terrified. They did not know what would happen to them."⁴⁸¹

Mary Eintracht, Tsafendas's cousin, who was in Pretoria at the time agreed. She told the author:

"We could not admit we knew [that Tsafendas was a Communist and anti-apartheid], especially about what he thought about Dr. Verwoerd [being a dictator and a tyrant]. You could not have admitted any of these things, we would have been into big trouble... They [the family] could not have hidden that they drove all the way to Lourenço Marques to pick him up and bring him back to South Africa. All their friends knew and the police would have easily found out. Yes, just like Katerina said, they [the police] would have said, 'Why did you help him come to South Africa when you knew his political ideas?' It was a very difficult time even for us [her own family]."⁴⁸²

Finally, Marika testified to the Commission of Enquiry on October 21, 1966. According to Judge van Wyk of the Commission, this is what she told him:

"Tsafendas was favoured over the other children and sent to Middelburg because Portuguese children could only receive a proper education either there or in Swaziland. After he returned from Middelburg, he was again sent to a Portuguese school... She had heard that Demitrio had worked at a café, but that he only worked intermittently and that he had been sent back to Lourenço Marques around 1937 or 1938 after the Police had been summoned as ⁴⁸⁰ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁸¹ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁴⁸² Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

he had been accused of being a Communist. In 1963 someone phoned Mrs. Tsafandakis from Lourenço Marques to tell her that Demitrio had asked her to intervene in bringing him back to his family. She had felt it to be her duty to do so as Tsafendas's father had died. Tsafendas never talked to the family about his tape worm. According to them, he was definitely not insane. He always had proper accommodation in Pretoria. According to his stepmother, Tsafendas only learned that he had coloured origins when he looked for work at the aircraft factory. He had grown up as one of her children. He was depressed after he had learned about this, but never said anything about it."⁴⁸³

ROBERT HARPUR SMITH⁴⁸⁴

White male, aged 64 years, Durban.

I am an adult White pensioner and now reside at the above address. From March, 1965, until December, 1965, I was employed as Night Clerk at the reception office of the Durban Men's Home, 160 Queen Street, Durban. During this period I was also residing on the premises. On 21.6.1965 a White Male, Demitrio Tsafendas, I.D. No. 963/081129 (W), obtained accommodation at the said Men's Home. On 24.8.1965 Demitrio Tsafendas left the home.

During his period I often used to converse with him. He invariably discussed politics and he told me that if this was a Communistic state, there would be no need for a Durban Home because everybody would have sufficient.' He made mention that he had met Mr. Canon Collins and Solly Sachs in London and that they had assisted him. He did not state when that was but I gathered that it must have been fairly recently.

One night I was again approached by Tsafendas and he asked me if I knew what Mr. Arenstein, the solicitor's residential address was. I replied that I did not. Tsafendas stated that there would be a revolution throughout the Western world and that the Communists would rule. He said that the South African Government's policy was "rotten" and often simulated conditions in South Africa with that of Russia, stating, "Look at all the poor people in South Africa, such conditions don't exist in Russia because Russia is a Communistic state.”

⁴⁸³ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴⁸⁴ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Tsafendas did not state that he was a Communist but he was definitely pro-Communist. Tsafendas was in my opinion a fanatic on politics and seldomly spoke of anything else. He said that “the United Party and National Party officials and members were capitalistic roughs” and continually stated that the time was drawing closer for a change throughout the world. Eventually Tsafendas’s political philosophy and fanaticism irritated me to such an extent that I would try to avoid him.

About a week before Demitrio Tsafendas left the Men’s Home, he told me that a friend of his would take him to Cape Town but did not give any reason or state where he was going to stay. Demitrio Tsafendas did receive mail at the Men’s Home but this was only a small quantity. I am also aware that he has a large quantity of literature but do not know the nature thereof. Tsafendas did not associate with residents of the Home and kept himself to himself most of the time. I am unable to state what associates he had outside the Home. I never saw Demitrio Tsafendas again after he left the Men’s Home.

The above statement taken by (Sgd.) R.D. Wilson. No. 40205 D/Sergt. Commissioner of Oaths.

Durban 7.9.1966 – 11.20 a.m.

JOHANNES TOBIAS BENADE⁴⁸⁵

White male, Pretoria.

I live at above-mentioned address and am working for City Engineering and Carron, 30 Zeiler Street, Pretoria West. Mr. Dimitri Tsafendas is known to me. From 09/12/63 to 03/02/64 he was working for the same firm as me. He pretended to be a welder fitter. According to the work he delivered, it was clear that he did not have much knowledge on the subject, and as a result he was dismissed on 03/02/64. While he worked here, he did not draw my attention in the political field, although he did seem egotistical. He was even-tempered. He carried out his orders without objections.

⁴⁸⁵ Johannes Tobias Benade statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

*Statement taken by me this 7th of September 1966 in Pretoria. (Sgd.) D.J. Bezuidenhout
D/SGT. Commissioner of Oaths. S.A. Police, Pretoria*

KENNETH HEUGH ROSS⁴⁸⁶

White male, aged 66 years, resident and employed at Durban Men's Home, Durban.

I am a member of the staff of the Durban Men's Home, 160 Queen Street, Durban. The inmates of the Durban Men's Home and the Stores fall under my supervision. I have been employed at the said address since 1960. According to the records maintained by the Home and to which I have access by virtue of my position, Demitrio Tsafendas I.D. No. 963/081129 (W), a White Male, obtained accommodation at the said Home from 21.6.1965 until 24.8.1965. Demitrio Tsafendas was born on 14.1.1919 in Lourenço Marques and by accommodation was an interpreter at the Magistrates Courts. He was also employed at Fraser and Chalmers for a period of two months until 31.5.1965, when he left as a result of an injury sustained in a stabbing incident.

During Demitrio Tsafendas's period of residence in the Durban Men's Home, I became fairly friendly with him. We often discussed his travels, in which he revealed that he had been to Egypt, Angola and many other countries. As far as I can recollect, he never mentioned that he had visited countries behind the Iron Curtain.

Tsafendas often stated that the political position of South Africa was unfair and that everybody should have the right to franchise. He sympathised with the Communistic principle of collectivism and objected to the Communists being banished to Robin-Island [sic] because of their political opinions and actions. In general, Tsafendas opposed to every decision taken by the South African Government and freely voiced his opinion to me.

Tsafendas was very fond of discussing politics and gave me the opinion that he was well versed in politics. He was blatantly opposed to the National Party policy, the policy of the present Government, and was definitely pro-Russian, but did not state that he was a Communist or that Communism was the solution to South Africa's problems. I am aware that ⁴⁸⁶ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Tsafendas possessed a large quantity of literature but did not take note of the names of the books he read.

The above statement taken by (Sgd.) R.D. Wilson. No. 40205 D/Sergt. Commissioner of Oaths.

Durban 7.9.1966 – 10.25 a.m.

CORNELIUS JOHANNES RUDOLPH⁴⁸⁷

I am the head court interpreter on the staff of the Magistrate of Durban, and as such I act and arrange for interpreters in the different courts, and if necessary I get or take temporary interpreters in employ where foreign languages are required. I keep a register of interpreters who can interpret in foreign languages. In the register, among other names, is the name Demitrio Tsafendas. About a year ago, the latter approached me and asked whether a suitable vacancy on the staff exists where he can be appointed. I told him that no such vacancy exists and that a Greek or Portuguese interpreter is seldom used in the courts. I was led to believe those were the two languages in which he is proficient. I took his name and address, and wrote it in my register, and also his phone number and promised him that if I need a Greek or Portuguese interpreter, I would get in touch with him.

It happened that I made use of services on several occasions. He was in the habit of regularly reporting two or three times a week to ask whether there is any interpretation work. I got to know him pretty well and would have no trouble identifying him. He later also gave me different addresses where I could contact him, all the addresses are written in my registry. He was away for some time and I did not see him, and upon his return he told me that he worked at Mandeni, Zululand, and he now got work on the Railways. Later he visited me again at the office and told me that he lived at the "Durban Men's Home", 160 Queen Street, and was unemployed. Thereafter he came back to my office and told me that he would now move to Cape Town, because he cannot get work here in Durban. It was about eight months ago. I have not seen him since. I spoke with him several times, he seemed to be a normal person and intelligent. He spoke English properly.

⁴⁸⁷ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Statement taken by me at Durban this 7th September 1966 at 11.30 a.m. (Sgd.) A. Geysler. No. 72504.

ANTONY MAW⁴⁸⁸

I arrived in Lourenço Marques September 1919 with my wife and a little while later rented a small house in Rua Andrade Corvo. In the semi-detached house next to us lived a Greek, Michael Tsafandakis by name, and a half-caste baby boy named Dimitri of between one and two years of age, and an African girl Maria to look after the latter. The father was employed as fitter and turner at the Buccellato workshop in Rua Lapa.

In 1919 or 1920, the man approached my wife asking her to request a certain Greek lady (Schinas by name) who was about to embark on a sea trip to Athens via Port Said, to take under her wing the baby Dimitri. It was arranged that Mr. Tsafandakis' mother and sister would proceed from Alexandria to meet the boat at Port Said to take delivery of the baby. Dimitri stayed in Alexandria a few years where he attended school and arrived back in Lourenço Marques some years later (I guess between 1926 and 1928) and I have a vague recollection that he attended school in Middelburg (Transvaal). After this period Dimitri lived in Lourenço Marques for some years and then went to sea as a merchant seaman.

A few years after the war, he touched port aboard a steamer and claiming illness was hospitalized here. The local Authorities would not let him stay (on confidential grounds of suspected Communist tendencies) and compelled him to leave by the same steamer. Prior to entering hospital, he approached me and asked in case of death he did not wish rites from a priest or the Church. I did not lay eyes on him again until approximately 2 or 3 or 4 years ago when he called in at my office very unexpectedly. He said he had been all over the world and was here aboard a passenger steamer. He said he was calling on me with a view to obtaining information as to the identity of his mother and the location of her grave. I advised in reply that I remembered only himself as a baby living with his father and an African servant girl.

Sometime later I learnt that he had obtained permission to reside in South Africa. Mr.

⁴⁸⁸ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub File: 1/8. NASA.

Michael Tsafandakis, during Dimitri's sojourn in Egypt, journeyed there and married a Greek girl in Port Said. Both Dimitri's father and step-mother originated from the island of Crete and the family name is Tsafendis or Tsafantis, the father having been known also as Tsafandakis, it being usual for Cretans to append -akie to the family name.

Dimitri's father Michael Tsafandakis and subsequent family lived in Lourenço Marques for some years but immigrated to Pretoria where he was employed at Iscor. A little while after his retirement he died and was buried there. Dimitri Tsafendis (or Tsafandakis) was baptised in Lourenço Marques by a Greek orthodox priest and he was registered in the local Administraçao Civil as a son of Mr. Tsafandakis (or Tsafendis). From 1926 to 1936, I was assistant (honorary) to an eminent local citizen, Mr. P. dos Santos Gil, in respect of his duties as Honorary Consul for Greece (1926-1936) and from 1936 to 1954 (the time when I myself was Honorary Consul for Greece) Dimitri Tsafendis (or Tsafandakis) was never registered in the Consular register as a son of Michael Tsafandakis, and in fact a Greek passport was refused him by me in line with Greek Civil Code. I am ignorant with what nationality and passport he has circulated.

Lourenço Marques, 7th September, 1966.

*Signed by A. Maw (Antony Maw) in my presence this seventh day of September, 1966. (Sgd.)
G.C. Nel*

COMMENTS ON MAW'S STATEMENT

In his statement, Maw uses the phrase "claiming illness" to describe Tsafendas's attempt to enter Lourenço Marques after being denied entry. According to Katerina Pnefma, Maw told her and her father that Tsafendas had "pretended to be suffering from appendicitis" after the Portuguese authorities refused to let him disembark in Lourenço Marques. According to Pnefma, Maw also told her and her father that Tsafendas staged this trick to be allowed off the ship and onto land, where he was taken to a hospital from which he subsequently escaped.⁴⁸⁹ According to Katerina Pnefma, Helen Grispos and Ira Kyriakakis, the fact that ⁴⁸⁹ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

Tsafendas pretended to be suffering from appendicitis in order to enter Mozambique was well known by the all the Greeks in Lourenço Marques.⁴⁹⁰

GARNET VINCENT MULLER⁴⁹¹

I am Senior Running Foreman on the South African Railways at the electric running sheds, Umbilo, Durban. I am resident at 183 Frere Road, Durban – telephone no. 358112.

During the morning of 16th March, 1965, Demitrio Tsafendas, who was up to then unknown to me, arrived at my office and produced a letter from the System Manager's Staff Office, Durban, to report for duty as a shed attendant, under my supervision. From my observations I could see that Demitrio Tsafendas was a foreigner and he informed me at that time, that he was a Portuguese and had then just arrived from Lourenço Marques to seek employment in Durban. On his own accord, Demitrio Tsafendas informed me that the people where he came from are dying from starvation.

Demitrio Tsafendas also informed me that he had no money to pay for his transport to and from work daily and that he also had by then not found accommodation. I collected among my staff and I handed Demitrio Tsafendas the amount of approximately two rand (R2) and I also arranged accommodation for Demitrio Tsafendas at the E.R. CARNEY Hostel at Montclair. He later furnished me with his room no. as 166.

In his capacity as shed attendant, Demitrio Tsafendas's duties consisted of removing jumper cables from between electric unit sets and replacing the jumper cables as and when required. He also had to assist the shedman under whose immediate supervision he worked. Demitrio Tsafendas worked 12-hourly shifts, i.e. 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. and every alternative week night shift, i.e. 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. While on day shift, Tsafendas would come under my control as from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Demitrio Tsafendas worked his last shift from 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. on the 7th April, 1965. He did not report for further duties and he was eventually regarded as having absconded from the service as from the 7th April, 1965.

Tsafendas usually conversed in English. He did say to me on an occasion that this job is unsuitable to him and said he was a boilermaker by trade. He gave me to understand he took on this position on a temporary basis. The position as a shed attendant entailed no academic qualifications and could be undertaken by any person of low school qualification. After having been employed for a few days, I observed Demitrio Tsafendas to possess intelligence above that of the average person who is likely to accept a position with the little responsibility which is attached to that of shed attendant. This is all I know about Tsafendas.

⁴⁹⁰ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁹¹ Garnet Vincent Muller statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

KYRIAKOS SKORDIS⁴⁹²

I am the proprietor of the Cuban Hat Tea Room, North Beach, Durban. I know Demitrio Tsafendas. I cannot remember the date, but it was about a year ago or more, he came to me at the Cuban Hat. At that time I was the president of the Greek Community in Durban and Natal. He introduced himself to me and I asked him where he came from. He told me that he was from Lourenço Marques and that he was looking for a job. I asked him whether he had any relations in the Republic and he said that he had some, but did not tell me who they were, neither did I ask him who they were.

After a few days he came and told me that he was offered a job at the law courts as an interpreter and told me that he know four or five foreign languages. He asked me whether he could use my address to give to the officials at the Court House, so that they could contact him, whenever they needed him through me. I agreed to this. At that time he told me that he had a room at the Parade Rooms. A few days later he informed me that he had obtained accommodation at a hotel off Muagrave Road, Berea. He was contacted through me by the Court authorities.

I cannot remember how long he was here in Durban, then he disappeared. After a couple of months he re-appeared. I asked him where he was and he told me in Zululand. He did not mention what he did in Zululand. He stayed for a while in Durban. I cannot say where, but he just disappeared shortly after his return from Zululand and I have not seen him since. He never discussed his previous life with me, neither did I have any discussions with him. He appeared to be quite normal and was apparently in a poor financial position. At that time I was living in a flat in Prince Street in Crown Point Plats, number 1404. He never visited my home.

⁴⁹² Kyriakos Skordis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Statement taken by me at Durban this 7th September 1966 at 3.15 p.m. (Sgd.) A. Geysler. No. 72504: W/O.

JOHANNES JACONUS UYS AURETS⁴⁹³

I am a European Male employed by the 3.A. Hallways as a Shedman at the South African Railways, Umbilo, Durban. During the early part of 1965, I cannot recollect the exact date, a European male accompanied the Senior Running Foreman, Mr. G.V. Muller, to my office where he introduced the man to me as Demitrio Tsafendas, a Shed Attendant to work under my supervision. Demitrio Tsafendas thereafter worked under my direct supervision. We worked shifts, one week from 6.00 a.m. to 6.00 p.m. and the following week 6.00 p.m. to 6.00 a.m. The duties of Tsafendas entailed connecting and disconnecting air pipes and vacuum hoses between electric units and the removal and replacement of electric cables between electric units as and when required.

Tsafendas was a well-mannered and well-spoken person. He associated with those working with him. He was soft-spoken and appeared to be of a good nature. During the time he was employed under my supervision i.e. for approximately 3 weeks, I did not see him being cross at any time. He was a good worker. I can remember one night whilst on duty, it was approximately 2.00 a.m., he was relaxing in the office when the Shedman (known as the Outside Shedman) Mr. P.A. Louw, threw a paper bag containing water at Tsafendas where he was lying on a bench. Tsafendas stood up, water running down his clothes. He appeared to be a bit annoyed and asked how he could work in wet clothes. Mr. P.A. Louw has then run away so as not to be seen. Tsafendas then said that he was going home as he was not going to work in wet clothes and walked off. About a week later he returned and took some personal effects of his. He then mentioned that he was working for a firm somewhere on the North Coast.

During the time he worked under my supervision, he often related about his travels overseas. He also mentioned that he was of mixed origin - Portuguese and Greek. He further stated that he was an interpreter in Court and that he could speak several languages. He never showed any signs of being of violent nature. Occasionally he complained about his wages. I do not know anything more about Tsafendas.

⁴⁹³ Johannes Jacobus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

The deponent acknowledges that he knows and understands the contents of this affidavit and that it is the truth. Read over, sworn to and signed before me this 7th day of September, 1966, at 2.40 p.m. at Durban.

(Sgd.) V.H. Dyssel, D/Sergt. 3250. S.A.R. Police: Durban. EX Officio: Commissioner of Oaths. R.S.A

CAROLINE BARBEAU⁴⁹⁴

Durban.

During about April, 1965, Demitrio Tsafendas came to the above address presenting himself as being one of the members of our church viz. The Christian Church. In all, this person stayed with us for about 5 days, but he visited us quite frequently. During this time and his visits, he told us his life history and as I recollect it now, he told me that he was interned for a couple of years during the war in Greece because he did not want to join the Army. At the time he stayed with us, he told me that he was working on the S.A.R. & H. and had a very inferior job to his intelligence and left the S.A.R. & H., apparently because he was unhappy with his work. Then he got a job at the Mandini Paper Factory and not long after he came back and he had been involved in some knife fight with another Greek at the Mandini Factory. During this fight his right hand was injured and he was treated at the Addington Hospital.

During my conversations with him, he told me also that he has a brother and a sister in Johannesburg and somehow I got the impression that he was the black sheep of his family. I also got the impression after having known him for some time, that he was not all there.

⁴⁹⁴ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Then one day after he came back from hospital, he told me that he was going to the Cape and he wanted some addresses of people he might visit there. He then left. I believe he stayed with a Daniels family in 1, St. Souci Road, Bellville, Cape Town (Bellville South) for about 3 months. I also got the impression that Tsafendas was a rolling stone and a sponger because he never stayed long in one place and never offered to pay any rent.

When this Greek was staying with the Daniels family in Belleville, I heard by rumour only that he wanted to marry a Miss Daniels and was going to take out a Coloured identity for the purpose. He told me also that he was working in South West Africa at one time and that he was a well-travelled man. I believe also that he told me that at one time he stayed at the Railway Hotel. From his actions he was a very strange man and not very talkative; he liked to pity himself saying that his family did not want him but at the same time he never thanked one for any kindness shown him. He never discussed politics with us and I cannot say if he had any difficulty with his attempt at obtaining a Coloured identity card.

The deponent has acknowledged that she knows and understands the contents of this affidavit which was affirmed to before me and signed in my presence.

(SGD.) D. Wessels, 25689 D/W/O. Commissioner of Oaths

COMMENTS ON BARBEAU'S STATEMENT

Many of the Church's members resented being linked to Tsafendas through his membership of their sect and were deeply embarrassed to be questioned by the police.⁴⁹⁵ They considered the association with Tsafendas reflected badly on their Church and, like the Greek community in South Africa, tried to distance themselves and the Church from him.⁴⁹⁶

Tsafendas had also clashed with the Church leaders because they advocated "the Biblical idea of subservience to a Government," including to the governing National Party and its policy of apartheid, a stance which he hotly disputed.⁴⁹⁷ None of the Church members mentioned this ⁴⁹⁵ The Observer, 'Police Question S. African Sect', 18 September 1966: 2; Sunday Times (Johannesburg), 'Tsafendas's Brothers are Quizzed', 18 September 1966: 18: 5.

⁴⁹⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

⁴⁹⁷ Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA; Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013.

to the police, apart from Patrick O’Ryan.⁴⁹⁸ When O’Ryan asked fellow members at a prayer gathering to pray for Tsafendas, his suggestion was met with angry protests and a minister of the Church pleaded with him to distance himself from Tsafendas and not present him as “one of us.”⁴⁹⁹ Barbeau and another Church-goer, James Johnston, who would also testify to the police, were the only ones to speak negatively about Tsafendas’s mental state.

CASPER ANDRIES WILLEMSE⁵⁰⁰

I am the housemaster at E.R. Carney, Clair Wood (telephone no. 310-7590). Beginning 15 March 1965, lodging was allocated to one D. Tsafendas who had been employed under the supervision of the chief Loko, Elektrotegnies, Umbilo. Room no. 166 was granted to him and he lived in the home until 14 April 1965. When Tsafendas took up residence, he gave next of kin as one Mr. N. Vlachopoulos (brother), Church Street 600, West End, Pretoria. Room furnishing included a Bible, it is the New Testament in English and Afrikaans, and after he vacated his room, the Bible was missing. I had no opportunity to ask him to give an explanation as to the missing Bible. The amount of 60 cents was charged in respect of the Bible from his payroll.

To the best of my knowledge, Tsafendas had no special friend in the home and number 166 is a single room. During his stay, I was requested on three occasions by the court to convey a message to Tsafendas to report to the court to act as an interpreter. I asked him about it and Tsafendas told me that the interpreter job was only temporary. He usually spoke English. He made no political statements, and I did not receive any reports relating to such statements and or behaviour on the part of Tsafendas from any of the other residents and/or servants.

Statement taken by me at Durban this 7th September 1966. (Sgd.) T.J. Gunter. Commissioner of Oaths.

⁴⁹⁸ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴⁹⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

⁵⁰⁰ Casper Andries Willemse statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

WILLEMSE'S INTERVIEW IN THE SUNDAY TIMES

In an interview with the Sunday Times, Willemse described Tsafendas as a “sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man.”⁵⁰¹

COMMENTS ON STATEMENTS

According to documents found in the South African archives, the aforementioned eleven people were interviewed by the police on September 7, 1966, the first day of the murder investigation. As we saw, Tsafendas is portrayed by people who knew him as being well versed in politics,⁵⁰² who talked politics fanatically and constantly,⁵⁰³ freely expressing his political views,⁵⁰⁴ pro-Russian and Communist⁵⁰⁵ and for this reason denied entry to Mozambique.⁵⁰⁶ He was further described as against apartheid⁵⁰⁷ and having characterised members of the National Party and United Party as “capitalist roughs,” of once being associated with the South African trade unionist and anti-apartheid activist, Solly Sachs, and the campaigning Anglican priest, Canon John Collins,⁵⁰⁸ and having a large quantity of literature.⁵⁰⁹

Tsafendas was also described as a normal person and intelligent,⁵¹⁰ indeed to possess

⁵⁰¹ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), ‘Assassin - Man With A Chip On His Shoulder’, 11 September 1966: 1, 8.

⁵⁰² Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰³ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁴ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁵ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁶ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub File: 1/8. NASA.

⁵⁰⁷ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁸ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁹ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵¹⁰ Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

above-average intelligence,⁵¹¹ a well-mannered and well-spoken person,⁵¹² quite normal,⁵¹³ a good worker, non-violent,⁵¹⁴ someone who wanted to be reclassified as Coloured in order to marry Helen Daniels.⁵¹⁵ On the other hand, other witnesses claimed that Tsafendas did not discuss politics with them,⁵¹⁶ that he was a strange man and not very talkative who indulged in self-pity.⁵¹⁷ Marika also denied that he ever discussed politics⁵¹⁸ with her, but this was for the reason we have set out already.⁵¹⁹

It is not surprising that the above statements contain differences. It was natural for Tsafendas to discuss politics with some people and not with others. This could be for a number of reasons, perhaps that he did not trust the person, or the person did not seem interested in politics. It is also possible that they did discuss politics with Tsafendas and that he told them what he told other witnesses, such as being against apartheid and like Marika and her family members, they chose to not reveal it.

THE AUTOPSY ON DR. VERWOERD

An autopsy performed on Dr. Verwoerd established the cause of death as “multiple stab wounds, one of which penetrated the left ventricle of the heart.” The doctor who performed the examination reported that “there were no grounds for a rumour that the wounds had been inflicted by an expert stabber.” They were “quite ordinary,” he said.⁵²⁰

⁵¹¹ Garnet Vincent Muller statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵¹² Johannes Jacobus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵¹³ Kyriakos Skordis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵¹⁴ Johannes Jacobus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵¹⁵ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵¹⁶ Casper Andries Willemse statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵¹⁷ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵¹⁸ Marika Tsafantakis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵¹⁹ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵²⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II D, Paragraph 12.

VORSTER: “ONE-MAN JOB”

On the afternoon of the same day, just twenty-four hours after the assassination, Minister of Justice John Vorster publicly declared that, “Present information indicates that it (the assassination) was the deed of one individual, and his actions and movements are being investigated in the finest detail.” The statement said in full, “Present information indicates that it was the deed of one individual, and his actions and movements are now being investigated to the finest detail. I am aware that much speculation is going the rounds and I want to warn the public not to attach exaggerated value to rumours. Our departed leader believed in law and order. In this case also, the law will take its relentless course and the public will be kept informed as necessary.”⁵²¹

According to Vorster, it was General van den Bergh who informed him that the assassination was a “one-man job,” after he personally interrogated Tsafendas.⁵²² As we will see later in his two subsequent statements to the police, Tsafendas maintained that he planned and executed the assassination alone. Vorster most probably had learned from van den Bergh of Tsafendas’s statements to the police and of his long history of political activism. Desperate to ensure that no-one would suggest that the “greatest political crime ever committed in South Africa” was politically motivated, he immediately spread the word assiduously that the assassin was “a simple-minded man whose action could not have political implications of any kind.”⁵²³

It should also be mentioned that six years previously, just twenty-four hours after David Pratt had shot Dr. Verwoerd, the police had made the exact same statement. On that occasion it was the Deputy Commissioner of Police in the Western Cape, Colonel Terblanche, who had stated that “the attack on the Prime Minister was not an organised one: it was purely an isolated attack by an individual.”⁵²⁴

PRESS REPORTS OF THE DAY

Tsafendas’s assassination of Dr. Verwoerd received blanket coverage in South Africa and wide attention overseas. The Daily Dispatch of East London reproduced on its front page two ⁵²¹ The Cape Argus, ‘Killer was A Lone Worker’, 7 September 1966 (late edition): 1.

⁵²² D’Oliveira, Vorster – The Man, p. 180.

⁵²³ Lapierre, A Rainbow in the Night: The Tumultuous Birth of South Africa, p. 126.

⁵²⁴ The Cape Times, ‘Isolated Attack, Says Police Chief’, 11 April 1960, 1; The Cape Times, ‘Dr. Verwoerd’, 11 April 1960: 10; The Times (London), ‘Dr. Verwoerd Moved To Pretoria’, 11 April 1960: 10.

teletype messages received from the South African Press Association newsroom in Parliament, each marked FLASH, the most urgent of news agency designations. The first, timed at 14.15, said, DR. VERWOERD ASSAULTED BY KNIFE IN THE ASSEMBLY. The second, sent at 15.30, said PRIME MINISTER DEAD.⁵²⁵ South African newspapers carried blow-by-blow descriptions of the murder scene in Parliament, along with early reactions from local and world leaders.⁵²⁶

The Cape Argus published an interview that Tsafendas had given to it six weeks ago, in which he described himself as an “anti-Portuguese rebel and an antagonist of the Portuguese dictatorship.” However, during the interview, which the paper said lasted seventy-five minutes, Tsafendas did not express any hostility towards South Africa’s political leaders. He claimed he had become anti-fascist during his time in Middelburg, Transvaal, that he was imprisoned without trial for three years in Portugal and “brainwashed,” a procedure from which he said he had never fully recovered. He also spoke about his imprisonment in Lisbon, in Barca d’Alva, in Aljuba and at the Machinegun Regiment 1 where he refused to serve in the Portuguese Army. He said that he was not allowed to return to Mozambique until 1963.⁵²⁷ Tsafendas did not explain what he meant by brainwashing but he believed that the Portuguese were trying to change his Communist ideology and his anti-Portuguese convictions. That Tsafendas was telling the truth about all these matters is confirmed, apart from the torture, by the PIDE in its “Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas, no: 2707/64/SR, of November 15, 1964.”⁵²⁸

Newspaper reports after the assassination described Tsafendas as being “something of a mystery man” to his fellow workers in Parliament. Early articles said he had travelled widely and he had two obsessions – a quotation from the Book of Kings in the Bible which puzzled him, and the cost of living for poor Whites in South Africa.⁵²⁹ He was a bitter, withdrawn man with few friends⁵³⁰ and according to a Pretoria News dispatch from Lourenço Marques, he was also “a Red,” having been deported from Mozambique for alleged Communist connections after the Second World War. The dispatch said he had an African mother and it quoted local Greeks as scoffing at any suggestion that Tsafendas might have

⁵²⁵ Daily Dispatch, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Assassinated’, 7 September 1966: 1.

⁵²⁶ See ‘Assassination Reaction,’ Chapter 4.

⁵²⁷ The Cape Argus, ‘Brainwashed in Jail Held Man told Argus.’ 7 September 1966: 3.

⁵²⁸ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT

⁵²⁹ Daily Dispatch, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Assassinated’, 7 September 1966: 1.

⁵³⁰ The Sun (Vancouver), ‘Assassin Bitter About White Pay’, 7 September 1966.

been the key figure in an international plot to assassinate Dr. Verwoerd.⁵³¹ The Cape Argus reported that according to reports from Mozambique, Tsafendas was “violently anti-Portuguese.”⁵³²

A Cape Town landlady, Alice Theyser, told The Cape Times that Tsafendas had lodged with her in the Woodstock neighbourhood for two months. She described him as a strange, untidy man with silver-capped teeth. “He was not a happy man, I feel sorry for him,” she said.⁵³³ Theyser also told the Cape Argus that Tsafendas left water on the bathroom floor after he had bathed and one time burnt out her electric kettle by forgetting to switch it off and she made him reimburse her for it. Eventually, she asked him to leave because of his habits and attitude. A neighbour said Tsafendas was given the nickname “The Texas Millionaire” because of his bearing. H.J. Summers, proprietor of Barling’s Tea Lounge in Woodstock, said Tsafendas would order tea and scones there from time to time. Once, when he described South Africa as a “bastard country,” Summers ordered him out.⁵³⁴ Twenty days after he made these remarks in a newspaper interview, Summers was questioned by the police. He did not mention the above incident and described Tsafendas as “a quite normal, innocent type ... I never had reason to even suspect that he could be mentally unbalanced. He acted quite normal.”⁵³⁵ The Pretoria News came closest to providing a reasonably accurate description of Tsafendas’s life with a report from its Durban correspondent who had met Tsafendas. He said Dr. Verwoerd’s assailant had travelled widely, spoke many languages, was a former seaman and had been a casual interpreter at Durban law courts.⁵³⁶

Greeks throughout South Africa and in Mozambique, too, sought hastily to distance themselves from Tsafendas. Some people who had never met Tsafendas before and knew nothing about him claimed that he was insane or that he was not Greek.⁵³⁷ Georgios Manidis, President of the Greek Community in Bloemfontein and supporter of apartheid, said Tsafendas “must be insane. He does not represent the feelings of the Greeks of South Africa. Most of the Greeks in South Africa are supporters of Dr. Verwoerd.”⁵³⁸

⁵³¹ Pretoria News, ‘Dimitrio A Red, They Alleged’, 7 September 1966: 1.

⁵³² The Cape Argus, ‘180-Day Prison for Tsafendas?’, 7 September 1966: 1.

⁵³³ The Cape Times, ‘Landlady Tells of Strange, Untidy Lodger’, 7 September 1966: 1.

⁵³⁴ The Cape Argus, ‘Tsafendas Seen As A Bitter, Withdrawn Man’, 7 September 1966.

⁵³⁵ Herbert James Summers statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵³⁶ Pretoria News, ‘Dimitrio A Red, They Alleged’, 7 September 1966: 1.

⁵³⁷ Eleftherotipia, ‘Οι Έλληνες Φίλοι του Απαρτχάιντ’, 4 July 2010.

⁵³⁸ Kathimerini, ‘Θλίψις εις την Ελληνικήν Παροικίαν του Γιοχάνεσμπουργκ’, 7 September 1966: 1.

In Mozambique, some Greeks described him as “a strange man who could easily have been mentally unbalanced,” and expressed astonishment that a person of his “mental calibre and background” was able to get a job at the Parliament.⁵³⁹ As we will see, none of the Mozambique Greeks who described Tsafendas as “a strange man ...” testified to the police. The senior South African police officer, Col. van Wyk, was in Mozambique at the time seeking out people who knew Tsafendas, and he did not report any such contacts or claims. The belief generally held by Greek expatriates was that to kill the prime minister, Tsafendas “must” or “could” have been unbalanced. It is a stance that remained unchanged over the years. When the author interviewed several Greeks in Mozambique in 2015, some said that “Tsafendas must have been insane,” although they did not know him. Their reasons? Dr. Verwoerd had done nothing to Tsafendas so Tsafendas must have been crazy to kill him; a normal person would not kill such a popular and “good” Prime Minister; Tsafendas was a Communist going around saying things against the Portuguese, so he could not have been normal; he had no reason to kill Dr. Verwoerd - if he was Black it would have been different.

Most Greeks at the time, including government officials, sought to distance themselves from Tsafendas so as to protect their communities and to demonstrate their loyalty to state authorities, either the apartheid regime in South Africa or the Portuguese colonialists. There was often a racist undertone, too. Some Greeks interviewed by the author said they did not consider Tsafendas to be Greek because he was born in Mozambique and his mother was Mozambican. One said, “How could someone with a Black mother be Greek?” None of these Mozambique Greeks was ever interviewed by the police because they had never met nor even seen Tsafendas. That is hardly surprising. Between 1939, when he left Mozambique as a twenty-year-old for South Africa, and the assassination in 1966, Tsafendas spent only eleven months in Mozambique: three months in 1951, two months in 1963 and six months, three of them in prison, in 1964/65.

The Greeks of South Africa, who were likewise unacquainted with Tsafendas, considered that he “must have been crazy” because he killed Dr. Verwoerd, who was a “wonderful man,” a “great man,” and a man “loved by both Blacks and Whites.” The willingness of people to talk about someone they do not know is well-known to journalists looking for on-camera comments. Interviewees often claim knowledge of a person in the news when the only thing they have in common is that they are of the same nationality or live in the same neighbourhood.

⁵³⁹ Pretoria News, ‘Dimitrio A Red, They Alleged’, 7 September 1966: 1.

When news of the assassination broke, journalists flocked to the home of George Michaletos, Tsafendas's uncle, in Lourenço Marques, but none of the family spoke to them.⁵⁴⁰ Ira Kyriakakis, Tsafendas's childhood friend in Lourenço Marques, was also sought out for interview but refused.⁵⁴¹ As did Costas Poriassis, Nick Papadakis and Andreas Babiolakis in Beira.⁵⁴² Elsewhere it was different. Not only were Greeks in Mozambique and South Africa keen to declare Tsafendas a non-Greek and probably a lunatic, so at least was one Greek in Greece itself.

The following incident is a perfect example of the attitude of most of the Greeks. The Athens newspaper To Vima of September 9, 1966 published an article headlined, “Dr. Verwoerd's assassin was unstable since he was child, says an Athenian who met him.” The newspaper declared, “The assassin of South Africa's Prime Minister, Hendrik Verwoerd, must be unstable. He is not Greek. He is the illegitimate son of a Greek from Egypt, M. Tsafendas, and of a mixed-race woman, Amelia Williams.”⁵⁴³

The article was based on an interview with a certain Mr. Charitakis, who said that he met Tsafendas when he was on holiday in Lourenço Marques and Tsafendas was thirteen years old. He said, “I don't know his past well. I only happened to meet him by chance when we were in Lourenço Marques.” Charitakis added, “Generally, he was a strange guy with strange behaviour...we did not hang around together much because my holidays finished and I left Lourenço Marques.” He also claimed that Tsafendas told him that he had been sick and admitted to a psychiatric hospital in Pretoria. Referring to the assassination, Charitakis said, “I believe he must have been crazy in order to reach this point and do such a thing. Dr. Verwoerd was very much loved by everyone and was keeping the prestige of the white race in the Dark Continent.”⁵⁴⁴

Like all the other Greeks, Charitakis uses the words “must have been crazy,” deducing this from the fact that Tsafendas killed the much-loved Dr. Verwoerd, that he was a strange boy when he was thirteen and that he had been in a psychiatric hospital in Pretoria. In fact, according to police records, his family's statements to the police and the Commission of Enquiry, his medical records and people interviewed by the author who knew Tsafendas when he was a child, he was never admitted to a psychiatric hospital in Pretoria. Indeed, he ⁵⁴⁰ John and Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁵⁴¹ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁵⁴² Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Costas Poriassis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

⁵⁴³ To Vima, ‘Από Παιδί Ηταν Ανισόρροπος Ο Δολοφόνος του Φερβέρντ’, 9 September 1966: 1.

⁵⁴⁴ To Vima, ‘Από Παιδί Ηταν Ανισόρροπος Ο Δολοφόνος του Φερβέρντ’, 9 September 1966: 1.

had never been to Pretoria during the first thirteen years of his life. Again, like his fellow Greeks, Charitakis assumed that Dr. Verwoerd was loved by everyone and concluded that to kill him must be an act of insanity.

How reliable as a witness was Charitakis, a man who briefly met a thirteen-year-old boy thirty-five years earlier? Certainly such testimony would never have been brought to court but was obviously good enough for a newspaper desperately seeking local angles on an event of international significance. The key factor emerging from this interview, however, is not so much the reliability of the witness as his personal opinion – that Tsafendas “must have been crazy” to kill a man “loved by everyone,” who was “holding up the prestige of the white race in the Dark Continent.”

THURSDAY, 8 SEPTEMBER 1966

SECRET TELEGRAM FROM THE SOUTH AFRICAN EMBASSY IN LISBON

At 08.40 on the morning of September 8, the Secretary for Foreign Affairs in Cape Town received a secret telegram from the South African embassy in Lisbon, written and sent from there the previous evening at 7.23 p.m. It said that according to “a very reliable local source,” Tsafendas “has a criminal record in Mozambique, where he is said to have been arrested on several occasions after creating public disturbances, including shouting pro-Communist anti-Portuguese slogans,” but that he had “never been convicted as courts have found him to be of unsound mind.” The telegram concluded with the following sentence: “If information correct, we suspect Portuguese may play down assassin’s previous political activities and we would suggest full details in this connection be sought.”⁵⁴⁵

This telegram contained two important pieces of information: the fact that Tsafendas had a criminal record and that he had been arrested several times. Both were correct. Tsafendas was arrested three times while in Mozambique and twice while in Portugal for political reasons. PIDE indeed had a file on him (n° 10.415) since he was “suspected of distributing Communist propaganda” in 1938.⁵⁴⁶ As we will see, even though the embassy in Lisbon warned the South African authorities through this telegram about the Portuguese authorities’ likely reaction, the South African police did not investigate Tsafendas’s political past, but accepted what was given to them by the Portuguese.

PIDE’S INVOLVEMENT

More importantly, the embassy’s telegram could not have predicted the Portuguese reaction more accurately. That same day, the Chief Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon sent a top-secret telegram to the Sub-Director of PIDE in the “Overseas Province of Mozambique,” instructing him that any “information indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of your country should not be transmitted to the South African authorities, despite the relations that exist between your delegation and the South African Police” (informo ainda V.Ex^a. que às autoridades da Africa do Sul, mesmo ao nível das relações directas entre essa Delegação e a Polícia Sul-Africana, não devem ser dadas informações que indiquem o TSAFENDAS como partidário da independência dessa Província).⁵⁴⁷

⁵⁴⁵ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Lisbon, to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 07 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁴⁶ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

To ensure that there would be no mistakes concerning the information given to the South African police, PIDE in Lisbon compiled a report on Tsafendas, and it was sent to the Sub-Director of PIDE in Mozambique along with the above communication. The report was to be given to the South African authorities and it had downplayed and even omitted several of Tsafendas’s political activities. This report is as follows, translated into English by the South African police:

DEMITRIO TSAFENDAS or DEMETRIO TSAFANDAKIS -

Illegitimate child of Michel Tsafendas, of Greek nationality, and Amelia William, of mixed race, Portuguese, maritime salesman and interpreter.

Born in Lourenço Marques on 19th January, 1918. Left at school-going age for South Africa to study and afterwards returned to Mozambique to start work.

During his stay in the said Province, he was on two occasions suspected of dedicating himself to communistic activities, but it was impossible to prove such activities.

In 1937 he returned to South Africa, where he lived for approximately five years, after which he joined a Greek ship, bound for Canada, as a table steward, and according to his declaration, stated:

“that he took ill during the voyage, and on arrival in that country disembarked under orders of the Immigration Authorities;

As the country was at war, the authorities above mentioned decided to put him on a ship carrying explosives, and one of a convoy heading for the Allied troops which were in combat in Europe;

As he was still convalescing and feared that the ship would be torpedoed, as happened at times, he fled in the company of three other seamen to the United States of America, where he was detained at the border of Penebescot County, in the Province of Maine.

⁵⁴⁷ Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

As the American Government needed volunteers for their ships doing the 'scale' (?) to Europe and the Pacific, he was obliged to embark.

Sometime later, at the end of the war, the said Government repatriated all those that had entered illegally, to their countries of origin of their fathers.

After disembarking in that country the American occupation authorities, in agreement with the Greek Immigration, decided to allow him admission as official interpreter in the reconstruction of the Port of Pireu.

After the reconstruction was terminated he went to work for the English forces in distributing provisions to the Allied troops which were still in Greece.

Afterwards he requested the Port Authorities of Pireu to embark as seaman in a Greek ship 'scaling' (?) French Ports and the Mediterranean, and like that he arrived in France, where he disembarked in Marseilles as a clandestine, and later reported to the Immigration Authorities in Paris.

After legalising his situation in France, he decided to request a 90-day visa for Spain, which he obtained. However, after three days in Spain, he decided to leave for Portugal.

On arrival in Portugal on 8th November, 1949, he was detained at the post of Barca d'Alva, due to insufficient documentation. There were doubts as to whether he was Portuguese. The documentation which was seized made it clear that he had been expelled from the United States of America by the Immigration Authorities and sent to Greece.

The investigations made concluded that he was entitled to Portuguese nationality, but as he had not performed his military service, he was handed over to the Military Government in Lisbon, on the 6th of February, 1950, as a deserter.

In December 1951 he boarded on a ship to Mozambique, but owing to his past, he was not given permanent residence in that Province, and returned to Portugal.

In 1952 he tried to leave the country in possession of a Greek "Laissez-Passer" nationality, which he also had a right to, but was detained for investigation.

After interrogation a mental deficiency was noted, a fact which was confirmed by the Hospital do Ultramar.

On 23rd April, 1953, he was handed over to the Institute for the Destitute in Lisbon, where he left in August of the same year.

In January, 1961, stating he was a political refugee, he presented himself to the Consul-General of Spain in Jerusalem, requesting her intervention in obtaining a visa for Israel.

In January 1962, after visiting several countries, he disembarked in Italy, where he was urgently admitted to a hospital with acute enteritis.

To return to Portugal he was given monetary help by the Portuguese Embassy in Rome, and once again presented himself to the Institute for the Destitute.

He left the said Institute to take up employment as a welder at the construction offices of the bridge over the river Tejo, where he earned 120 escudos. – (being R3.00 per day) Due to his bad condition he was dismissed and was offered another employment where he earned 60 escudos per day. He refused this work saying he intended working for himself, and once again he returned to the above-mentioned Institute.

It appears that during the political disturbances in Lisbon and while he was at the Institute, he always had a group of inmates around him.

On 16th November 1964, he was handed over to the Sub-Delegation of Police in Beira, by the Security Police, accused of making subversive propaganda amongst the native masses.

Specifically, and amongst other phrases, he was accused of the following phrase: “This country is not called Portugal, it is called the United States of Mocambique. We already have money, which is needed and we are not wrong in saying we are Portuguese. No - we are Africans. I do not like the Portuguese Flag.”

When he was interrogated he confessed to the accusation, quoting that he was at the time of saying that and other phrases, in the bar of a hotel in Gondola, in the company of various native races, under the influence of liquor and agitated. He added, however, that his words resulted from ideas he had about the independence of Mocambique - a Mocambique governed by the nationals of that Province, whether they be white or black, therefore separated from the mother country.

TSAFENDAS described a history which was his life, an authentic adventurous romance, travelling through several countries of the world.

He denied belonging to any party or subversive organization which worked for obtaining independence of Mocambique, as well as having promoted subversive activities against the security of the State, although he was in favour of the independence of Mocambique.

However, as mentioned before, Tsafendas is mentally deficient. It is true that one finds in him an obvious spirit of revolt in relation to the Portuguese Administration, and favouring the independence of Mocambique.

His criminal and police records have nothing against him. However, as said by him, Tsafendas had remarked on his Police certificate, which he confessed.

Analyzing his declarations, and taking into consideration a mentally sick, he is not capable of being charged with judicial crime. The process was filled and was set free, as he was not considered dangerous.

This is a resume known to be of DEMITRIO TSAFENDAS.

XXX 7/9/66 xxx⁵⁴⁸

COMMENTS ON PIDE'S ROLE

As we see from this report, the PIDE in Lisbon downplayed some of Tsafendas's political activities while completely omitting others. More importantly, PIDE provided information that was of no great importance or was already known to the South Africans, without offering them anything fresh or significant. For example, that Tsafendas was suspected of Communist activities while living in Mozambique had been known to the South Africans since June 29, 1937. The information was contained in a letter from the South African Consul General in Mozambique in response to a request from the Deputy Commissioner of Police in Johannesburg.⁵⁴⁹

While some of Tsafendas's arrests are mentioned, others are omitted or downplayed. For example, his arrest in Gondola in 1964 by the Portuguese Security Police is included as well as the fact that Tsafendas had admitted to his interrogators that he was "in favour of the independence of Mocambique." PIDE could not have concealed Tsafendas's beliefs or his arrest as they were well known to all of his friends and acquaintances; the arrest had even been widely reported in the Mozambican media. Furthermore, this incident is downplayed and important details are not mentioned; these included the fact that he had anti-apartheid, anti-colonialist and Communist literature in his suitcase and that he was subsequently accused of preaching “under the guise of religion in favour of Mozambique’s independence.”⁵⁵⁰ On the other hand, the report states that even though Tsafendas was mentally deficient, “It is true that one finds in him an obvious spirit of revolt in relation to the Portuguese Administration, and favouring the independence of Mocambique.” This is presumably included because PIDE knew that it would be extremely easy for the South African police to find out about it by talking to people who knew Tsafendas, since most of the Greeks were well aware of his political beliefs and arrests and that he was widely known among their community as “The Red.” The following points include the omitted material:

⁵⁴⁸ Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁴⁹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II A, Paragraph 16.

- First and most important, the report lied that Tsafendas’s “criminal and police records have nothing against him.” In reality, PIDE had a detailed file of 130 pages on Tsafendas entitled Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis.⁵⁵¹ The file contained details of his political and other activities since 1938 when he was first “suspected of distributing Communist propaganda.”⁵⁵² The file shows Tsafendas as a passionate supporter of independence for Mozambique.
- Absent are the reasons he was denied entry to Mozambique in October 1951 and his subsequent imprisonment for two weeks when he was interrogated regarding his past “unclear activities.”⁵⁵³ The report simply says “owing to his past,” but gives no details. According to another PIDE report⁵⁵⁴ and the statement by Greece’s honorary Consul in Lourenço Marques, Antony Maw,⁵⁵⁵ this was due to his suspected Communist tendencies and the suspicion that he was involved in subversive activities.

⁵⁵⁰ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Costas Poriazis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

⁵⁵¹ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁵² Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁵³ PIDE Record of questions. 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁵⁵⁴ PIDE Confidential Report about Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁵⁵ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

- Tsafendas's arrest in Lisbon in January 1952,⁵⁵⁶ immediately after his arrival from Mozambique, is omitted. Presumably this is because of the reason behind his arrest; that the Portuguese Police in Lisbon had been informed by PIDE in Lourenço Marques about his political activities in Mozambique in the 1930s and wanted to question him about them.⁵⁵⁷
- No reference is made to the fact that Tsafendas was banned from entering and residing in Mozambique and was forced to live in exile from 1951 to 1963.⁵⁵⁸ In this way, the fact that the ban was on account of his political ideas and activities was concealed.
- The fact that he was only given amnesty to return to Mozambique in 1963.⁵⁵⁹
- The fact that Tsafendas made several applications to be allowed to return to Mozambique and they were all turned down, each time after PIDE supplied the Ministry of Interior with information regarding his "political and professional activities."⁵⁶⁰
- The fact that he remained in prison for ninety-three days following his last arrest by the Public Security Police.⁵⁶¹
- The fact that he was arrested a second time by the Portuguese Police while in Beira in February 1965.⁵⁶² The South African, Portuguese and the international media were aware of the arrest and had referred to two arrests of Tsafendas while in Mozambique and not one.⁵⁶³

⁵⁵⁶ PIDE report regarding Demetri Tsafendas to the Minister of Interior. 07 June 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; PIDE Record of questions. 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁵⁷ PIDE Report regarding Tsafendas, 5 May 1956. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁵⁸ Confidential Letter of the Director of PIDE to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, no: 2.077- S.R., 03 May 1961. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Letter of a police agent to the Ministry of Interiors regarding Tsafendas's exile. 30 October 1962. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁵⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁶⁰ Letter of the Directorate-General of the Political and Civil Administration of the Overseas Ministry to the Director of the International and State Defence Police. 07/04/1958. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁶¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁶² Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 May 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Costas Poriazis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

⁵⁶³ The Daily News, 'Tsafendas Seen As 'Mystery Man'', 8 September 1966: 17; The Herald (Melbourne), 'The Killer: Five Passports and A Record of Subversion', 8 September 1966: 1; The Rhodesia Herald, 'Assassin Said To Have Been Deported From P.E.A. for Communist Connections', 8 September 1966: 1; The Star, 'Assassin Had Five Passports', 10 September 1966: 3.

- The fact that each time he was arrested by the Portuguese police, “during his interrogations he gave signs of having some sort of mental disability.”⁵⁶⁴

CONCLUSION REGARDING PIDE’S ROLE

We can only speculate as to why the Portuguese authorities wanted to conceal information pointing to Tsafendas “as a partisan for the independence of Mozambique,” but the likeliest reason is that he was a Portuguese citizen. It would have looked bad for Portugal if the Prime Minister of a friendly country was murdered by a Portuguese national who was known to the security authorities for his long history of revolutionary and subversive activities. It would appear significantly less damaging if the assassin were labelled as a psychopath rather than a political revolutionary. Because he was known to be a revolutionary and a Communist who had often been arrested, many people would have wondered how such a man was allowed by the Portuguese to walk free. Even worse, that someone with a 130-page police dossier and known for his anti-Portuguese and Communist beliefs, managed to walk free in Mozambique.

TSAFENDAS’S HEARING

At 2.15 pm on Thursday, September 8, 1966, Tsafendas was brought before Cape Town’s Chief Magistrate, Mr. C. Willman, in a room at the police station in Caledon Square, where he was being held. A high-ranking official said, “This was done in the interests of the accused. We did not want a repetition of what happened between Lee Harvey Oswald and Jack Ruby in Texas.”⁵⁶⁵

Mr. H.C.F. Jacobs, Senior Public Prosecutor, asked that Tsafendas be remanded in custody until October 6. A certificate from Cape Attorney General Willem van den Berg was presented to the Chief Magistrate. It said in part that “I, Willem van den Berg, in the interests of public order, hereby order that Demetrio Tsafendas, who has been arrested on a charge of having committed murder, shall not be released on bail or otherwise before sentence has been passed or before he has been discharged, as the case may be.” Mr Willman asked Tsafendas if he understood the application and Tsafendas replied “I understand, my lord.” The magistrate

⁵⁶⁴ PIDE Confidential Report, 3.282.-S.R, regarding Demitrios Tsafandakis sent to the Chief of Staff of the Interior Minister, 9 May 1956. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁶⁵ Daily Dispatch, ‘Tsafendas in Court’, 9 September 1966: 1; The Globe and Mail, ‘Dr. Verwoerd’s Slayer Appears for Formal Hearing in Court’, 9 September 1966: 4.

then granted the application and ordered that Tsafendas be detained in the police cells in Cape Town.⁵⁶⁶

Tsafendas wore a white, open-necked shirt and grey flannel trousers and answered his name firmly. The charge sheet described him as a male adult, aged forty-eight, a messenger, of Portuguese nationality. He gave the impression of considerable physical strength. He was not handcuffed. The hearing began exactly forty-eight hours after Dr. Verwoerd's assassination and lasted five minutes. Eight police officers were present, including Major D.J. Rossouw, head of the Security Police in Cape Town.⁵⁶⁷ The Commissioner of Police, Lt. Gen. J.M. Keevy, said Tsafendas might appear again in court before the October 6 remand date since the police investigation was expected to be completed in the next week or two.⁵⁶⁸ He said the case might take the form of a preparatory examination, but there was also provision in the Criminal Procedure Act for a murder case to be heard summarily by the Supreme Court. Documents would be laid before the Attorney-General, who would decide.⁵⁶⁹

STATEMENTS

HENDRIK JOHANNES VAN LOGGENBERG⁵⁷⁰

White male, manager of "Baron's Meubels" Pretorius Street 191, Pretoria.

The last time I saw Dimitrio Tsafendas known to me as Miemie, was about 2 to 3 years ago. I am well known among the Greek community. I know the accused's stepmother Ant-Marika very well and also his other family in Pretoria. It was through his family members that I met the accused. I occasionally ate with the accused at his family. He also ate at my house.

The accused was work-shy for hard work and considered himself very worthy and learned, which he obviously was not. He constantly changed jobs as well as habitation. He was never satisfied. In accord with my observation taken, he was not welcome among his own ⁵⁶⁶ Daily Dispatch, 'Tsafendas in Court', 9 September 1966: 1.

⁵⁶⁷ The Cape Times, 'Tsafendas: Fear for Life', 9 September 1966: 1.

⁵⁶⁸ Daily Dispatch, 'Tsafendas in Court', 9 September 1966: 1; The Star (Johannesburg), 'Tsafendas Remanded and Questioned', 9 September 1966: 3; The Herald (Melbourne), 'Don't Touch the Greeks', 9 September 1966: 9.

⁵⁶⁹ Rand Daily Mail, 'Tsafendas May Reappear in Court', 9 September 1966: 1.

⁵⁷⁰ Hendrik Johannes van Loggenberg statement to the police, 8 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

people and they cast him out. The accused had a sombre appearance and was never upbeat. He constantly carried a Bible with him. I do not know what religion he belonged to. From the stories the accused told, he had to visit a lot of overseas countries. He mastered several languages. It was against the accused's principle to use strong liquor. Accused definitely came across as normal and was an unmarried man. He also seemed healthy and did not smoke.

Pretoria 8.9.1966. Statement taken by me. (Indecipherable name). Commissioner of Oaths.

MAGDALENE WARLASS DOROTHEA SANDERS⁵⁷¹

Coloured Female, 66 years old, 65 Wills Road, Durban.

Demitrio Tsafendas attended church services in my house on several occasions and also delivered his testimony on the verse or chapter he had read from the Bible. He gave me the impression he was a firm believer in God. I don't know where he was staying at the time. On one occasion, he arrived at my house with his suitcase and placed it in the pantry. I told him I had no accommodation and he had to go elsewhere. He had one meal here. Whenever he arrived for church service, he had his Bible with him ... First time saw him was about two years ago and the last time was when he had injured his arm. His hand was bandaged. I don't remember which one. He never discussed politics.

⁵⁷¹ Magdalene Warlass Dorothea Sanders statement to the police, 8 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

PAUL STEFANUS VAN DEN MERWE⁵⁷²

603 Portman Place, Fir Ave, Sea point and Welgeluk, Otjiwarongo, S.W.A.

I am an adult white man and a Member of Parliament for Midlands. I am a member of the National Party in the Assembly and hold a seat behind the Prime Minister. My seat is two steps behind that of the Prime Minister.

On Tuesday, 06/09/66, I entered the Assembly Hall at approximately 2:17 pm according to the Council's watch. (Official time 2:12 pm.).

I entered the hall through the main door. I was still on my way to my seat when I saw the deceased at his seat. He had just arrived at his seat and was about to sit down. There were other council members who were still on the way to their seats.

I walked past the late Dr. Verwoerd and sat in my seat. I noticed that I did not have a notebook and got up and went to the Speaker's table to fetch a book. To get to the Speaker's table I have to pass on the left-hand side of the late Dr. Verwoerd.

On the way back to my seat, I decided to discuss something with Dr. Verwoerd. I stood on the left-hand side of Dr. Verwoerd. At that time he was looking in the direction of the Opposition, i.e. right in front of him. I bowed to talk to him.

Before I could say a word, I noticed that a messenger whom I later had identified as the accused Dimetrio Tsafendas, cast himself halfway across Dr. Verwoerd's seat on top of him. I noticed that his right hand rested on Dr. Verwoerd's left breast. Tsafendas remained in that position for a portion of a second. When he lifted his right hand from Dr. Verwoerd's chest, I saw a dagger of about 8 inches in his hand. Only then did I realize that he stabbed Dr. Verwoerd with the dagger.

From where I stood on the left side of Dr. Verwoerd's table/seat, I immediately tried to fend off the assailant, but he was too far away from me and before I could get around the seat, he had given different blows to Dr. Verwoerd's body with the dagger.

Other members of the Assembly, had at this stage grabbed the assailant from behind and removed him from the hall.

⁵⁷² Paul Stefanus van der Merwe statement to the police, 8 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Cape Town

8/9/66. 2.50 p.m.

Statement taken by me. (SGD.) A.J. van Dyk. Captain.

PRESS REPORTS OF THE DAY

Forty-eight hours after the assassination, the overseas press published the first reports about Tsafendas's political past and his activities, while the South African newspapers front-paged plans for Dr. Verwoerd's funeral on September 10, carried speculation about his successor and probed further into the life and character of his assassin. They also published further messages, mostly of shock and condolence, from world and local leaders.⁵⁷³

The Sun of Vancouver, Canada, front-paged a different, unsmiling, photograph of Tsafendas, alongside a Cape Town-dated dispatch from the Associated Press, which said, "There are reports he was anti-Nazi, anti-fascist, anti-everything."⁵⁷⁴ The Chronicle of Bulawayo, Rhodesia, spelling his name "Stafendas," said Tsafendas was "a mystery man who had few friends." It repeated fragments of information which were becoming current, including his origins in Lourenço Marques, deportation from Mozambique due to his Communist tendencies, time in the Merchant Navy, reactions in Frankfurt and the remarks of his former landlady, Mrs. Theyser.⁵⁷⁵

The Daily News, The Herald of Melbourne, Australia, the Rhodesia Herald and the Herald African News Service reported that Tsafendas was picked up in Mozambique, where he had "a record of subversion", possessing five passports and was questioned about his "suspicious activities" in an area on the Malawi-Mozambique border where unrest had developed among the Africans. The reports said that while he was in Mozambique, Tsafendas was arrested twice for subversive activities and that after the Second World War he was deported because of "Communist activities." They said the South African police were investigating how he got a job as a messenger in Parliament.⁵⁷⁶ All of this information was ⁵⁷³ See 'Assassination Reaction' Chapter 4.

⁵⁷⁴ The Sun (Vancouver), 'Dr. Verwoerd Assassin Painted as Anti-Everything Loner', 8 September 1966: 1.

⁵⁷⁵ The Chronicle (Bulawayo), 'Tsafendas: Mystery Man of Parliament', 8 September 1966: 1.

⁵⁷⁶ The Daily News, 'Tsafendas Seen As 'Mystery Man'', 8 September 1966: 17; The Herald (Melbourne), 'The Killer: Five Passports and A Record of Subversion', 8 September 1966: 1; The Rhodesia Herald, 'Assassin Said To Have Been Deported From P.E.A. for Communist Connections', 8 September 1966: 1.

correct, including the five passports. However, it seems there was nothing sinister about the passports, as no mention of them is made by PIDE who arrested Tsafendas on this occasion. They could easily have been Tsafendas's old passports that he had kept. If they were forgeries or there was something suspicious about them, this would almost certainly have been stated by PIDE in its reports.

The Daily Dispatch, The Daily News and the major Portuguese newspaper, O Primeiro de Janeiro, published a news report from Frankfurt containing interviews with some of Tsafendas's colleagues. In these reports Tsafendas was described "as extremely nice and friendly by people who met him." Mr Horst Hartmann, senior personnel officer at the heavy engineering company Fries & Son, where Tsafendas worked as a welder, said, "Yes, sure, I remember him. He drove up here in a big, battered American car. I thought he was more likely to apply for an executive job than as a welder. Well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous, a very pleasant man...he made a good impression and he spoke good German, so I took him on. He left of his own accord. We would have liked to keep him."⁵⁷⁷

Although he was with Fries & Son for only six weeks, Tsafendas made a lasting impression on Guenter Haafe, the factory doorman, who eight years later still remembered the jovial greeting Tsafendas gave him every morning. "He was a jolly man, always smiling and friendly. He would almost always come into my locker room to say hello. He was really one of the friendliest workers I have met, and trust me, in my twelve years as a doorman, I have seen thousands and thousands of faces coming in and out. This man was courteous, they do not make them like that anymore."⁵⁷⁸ Three other colleagues in the same job said about Tsafendas that "He was a nice guy," "He was a good comrade" and "He left me with a good impression."⁵⁷⁹

The French national news agency, Agence France-Presse, quoted workers at the Julio de Matos Psychiatric Hospital as saying that Tsafendas appeared for a medical appointment there on March 2, 1962, but never returned after that first appointment. The story said that people in touch with him on that occasion described him as "a reserved man who didn't want ⁵⁷⁷ Daily Dispatch, 'He Made A Good Impression', 8 September 1966: 1; 'Tsafendas Seen As 'Mystery Man'', The Daily News, 8 September 1966: 17; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 'Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte', 8 September 1966.

⁵⁷⁸ The Daily News, 'Tsafendas Seen As 'Mystery Man'', 8 September 1966: 17; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 'Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte', 8 September 1966.

⁵⁷⁹ O Primeiro de Janeiro, 'Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte', 8 September 1966.

his past to be mentioned.”⁵⁸⁰ The “people in touch with him” must have had exceptional memories to remember, four and a half years later, a man they met once in their lives, while their work required them to see tens, perhaps scores, of people every day. It is possible that Tsafendas made such a big impression on them that they did remember him. However, they still did not say anything regarding his mental state.

In South Africa, the evening edition of The Cape Argus, reported that Tsafendas appeared that afternoon before Cape Town Chief Magistrate Mr C. Willman in an office in the Caledon Square police station in connection with the murder of Dr. Verwoerd. He was remanded in custody until October 6.⁵⁸¹ Newspapers carried the first photograph of Tsafendas, apparently a file shot, showing him in shirt and tie, smiling slightly. The Rand Daily Mail headlined the photograph “Face of the Assassin,”⁵⁸² and in another article, Dr. Samuel Schmahmann, a former schoolmate at Middleburg, recalled Dimitri as being “not very bright at school,” but “a popular boy and not the least introverted.” He said, “I particularly remember him singing a Greek song at a school concert. He was very funny and had us all in stitches.”⁵⁸³

George Sakellaridis, editor and owner of Acropolis, a Greek newspaper in South Africa, was a passionate supporter of apartheid and such an admirer of Dr. Verwoerd that he hung his portrait on his office wall.⁵⁸⁴ Sakellaridis published a eulogy for the slain Prime Minister which outdid all other encomiums in its unctuous adoration. It praised him as “perhaps the greatest son of the South African nation ... a philosopher, an intellectual, a true Christian, a philanthropist, a visionary ... a holy symbol of Christian civilisation and of real patriotism ... who turned South Africa into the only bastion of Christianity in an atheist, godless continent and the only hope of the free people of the continent against the cancer of Communism.” Sakellaridis characterised Dr. Verwoerd as a modern “Prometheus Unbound,” who had been misunderstood, slandered and wrongfully accused by the unfair and irresponsible international community which was unaware of everything he had done for Black South Africans.⁵⁸⁵

⁵⁸⁰ Agence France-Presse, NOTIC DSR 16, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁸¹ The Cape Argus, ‘Tsafendas Appears in Court’, 8 September 1966: 1.

⁵⁸² Rand Daily Mail, ‘Face of the Assassin’, 8 September 1966: 1.

⁵⁸³ Rand Daily Mail, ‘Boyhood Days of Tsafendas’, 8 September 1966.

⁵⁸⁴ Mary Vasilakou in a personal interview, 25 March 2015.

⁵⁸⁵ Acropolis, ‘Ολόκληρον το Νοτιοαφρικόν Έθνος Εκήδευσε τον Πρωθυπουργό του’, 17 September 1966: 1.

Although Sakellaridis had never met Tsafendas, he told a negative story about him which was picked up and published by most of the South African media. He claimed that he had made inquiries among some Greeks in South Africa, and discovered that when he was a child Tsafendas was called “Blackie,” causing him to have “an inferiority complex.”⁵⁸⁶ Both claims were untrue but no-one questioned them and the story became widely accepted as fact. Even today, half a century later, the story persists in some quarters. However, those people who grew up with Tsafendas are adamant that he was never called “Blackie,” that he was not black anyway and showed no signs of having an inferiority complex.⁵⁸⁷

William Mare Volbrecht, a psychologist and Tsafendas’s schoolmate in Middleburg, testified to the police that “at that stage, Tsafendas was seen as white and there was never anything that pointed to someone regarding or treating him as a non-white or to him being discriminated against. I cannot remember whether he was ever guilty of misconduct; he was never a loner and mingled freely with us.”⁵⁸⁸ According to his step-mother’s testimony to the Commission of Enquiry into Verwoerd’s death, Tsafendas “association with other children at this stage, however, was good.” His half-sister, Katerina Pnefma, described him as a boy to the author as such: “He was very white, peculiar as it is, as white as all the family. But he had different hair. But it wasn’t so much like the Blacks; it was like the Coloureds. But he did not look Black at all, he was as white as me.”⁵⁸⁹ Furthermore, according to his cousin Mary Eintracht, Andreas Babiolakis, Ira Kyriakakis and Helen Grispos, who all grew up with him, Tsafendas was never called “Blackie.” They said his skin colour was white and it was not possible to tell he was of mixed race. Photos of Tsafendas as a schoolboy and in later life confirm this. A man cannot be very dark as a child but become whiter with the passage of time. In fact, none of the children, including Helen Grispos’s husband George, who was one of Tsafendas’s best friends and classmate, knew at the time that Tsafendas was of mixed racial origin; their parents knew, but not the children.⁵⁹⁰

⁵⁸⁶ Rand Daily Mail, ‘Boyhood Days of Tsafendas’, 8 September 1966; Natal Mercury, ‘The Face of Demitri Tsafendas’, 8 September 1966: 5.

⁵⁸⁷ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 June 2016; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵⁸⁸ William Mare Volbrecht statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol 3, File Verklaring deur Majoor Venter. NASA.

⁵⁸⁹ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵⁹⁰ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 June 2016; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

Katerina Pnema told the police shortly after the assassination, that growing up with Tsafendas “to all intents and purposes it was understood” by her and her siblings that “he was a member of the family... his complexion was such – as also his manner – that he passed as a European.”⁵⁹¹ As for bullying, none of these witnesses ever remembered anyone bullying or mocking Tsafendas for his colour. Tsafendas was much bigger and stronger than most of the boys of his age and given his outspoken and aggressive character, it would not have been easy for someone to intimidate him.⁵⁹²

Sakellaris also claimed that Tsafendas’s family had disowned him.⁵⁹³ This, too, was false, but also came to be widely believed. What is true is that his family sought to distance themselves from him after the assassination, but up to then he was an accepted family member. His step-mother, his brother-in-law, his half-brother and his half-brother’s wife had all travelled by car from Pretoria to Lourenço Marques three years earlier to meet him and take him back to South Africa even though they were aware that he was banned from entering the country. His family begged and convinced J.J. van den Berg, the passport officer at South Africa’s Consulate in Lourenço Marques, to ignore the fact that Tsafendas was on the South African Stop List and to issue him with a visa. It was his family who then gave him a job in a family business and a rent-free apartment in Pretoria for eight months upon his return to South Africa. These are hardly the things a family would do for someone it has disowned.

Another story current at the time concerned a comment attributed to Tsafendas – that “the government worried too much about the Black population and did nothing to help the poor whites.” He was said to have made this remark while working in Parliament, although none of his fellow members recalled him making such a statement when they were questioned by the police. If he had told them something of the sort they would have probably mentioned it. The story was started by the Parliamentary correspondent of Die Vaderland newspaper, the National Party’s mouthpiece. He said that Tsafendas complained frequently that the Government did more for Blacks than for Whites.⁵⁹⁴ It is perfectly possible that Tsafendas made such a comment, knowing he was talking to a reporter for a pro-Government newspaper, perhaps to distract any suspicions from his own political sentiments, or perhaps ⁵⁹¹ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁵⁹² Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 June 2016; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵⁹³ Rand Daily Mail, ‘Boyhood Days of Tsafendas’, 8 September 1966.

⁵⁹⁴ O Primeiro de Janeiro, ‘O Assassinio do Primeiro-Ministro Sul-Africano’, 8 September 1966.

simply from sarcasm. Several people who knew him very well testified to the author that Tsafendas was often sarcastic.⁵⁹⁵ The author asked forty-six people who were acquainted with Tsafendas, including some who knew him very well, and all denied that Tsafendas could have made such comments. If he did, they said, he could not have meant them.

Examining Tsafendas's assault upon Dr. Verwoerd, the Pretoria News said Tsafendas carried three knives, and published a photograph of a blade it said was similar to the one used against the prime minister.⁵⁹⁶ The newspaper also said Tsafendas told an acquaintance that he could not leave Cape Town because he "had a job to finish here first." The remark came in a conversation with two men who also stayed at his lodging house during a discussion about leaving to work in South West Africa.⁵⁹⁷ The same newspaper also raised the question of Parliamentary security: "Was he properly screened at Parliament?" And how, as a temporary messenger, was he able to enter the Chamber and make the attack without security officers preventing him?⁵⁹⁸

The Daily Dispatch said Tsafendas took advantage of the Sergeant-at-Arms' absence from the lobby for duties connected with the Speaker's procession to slip into the Chamber.⁵⁹⁹ The Cape Times also carried a facsimile of his signature, apparently from a job application form. The same newspaper, in another article published a description of Tsafendas's bedroom as he left it in his Rustenburg Avenue lodgings on the morning he set out to kill Dr. Verwoerd. A reporter who was allowed to see the room under security guard described Tsafendas's quarters as untidy and grimy, with an unmade bed and personal effects strewn across the floor; on the dressing table were a hammer, a file, a pair of socks, polish, shoe brushes, cutlery, a hair brush and an Oxford English Dictionary.⁶⁰⁰ However, this was after the police had searched the room and the likelihood is that it was their search which left it in that condition.

The Cape Times, the Daily Dispatch and The Daily News also revealed that Tsafendas was a schoolteacher in Turkey, that he had "taught the phonetics of elementary English" at an ⁵⁹⁵ For example Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015 and many others.

⁵⁹⁶ Pretoria News, 'He Carried Three Knives', 8 September 1966: 1.

⁵⁹⁷ Pretoria News, 'Said he 'Had A Job to Do'', 8 September 1966.

⁵⁹⁸ Pretoria News, 'What Screening Did Tsafendas Have', 8 September 1966: 1.

⁵⁹⁹ Daily Dispatch, 'Assassination A One Man's Job – Says Vorster', 8 September 1966: 1.

⁶⁰⁰ The Cape Times, 'Untidiness, Grim in his Bedroom', 8 September 1966.

Istanbul college five years ago.⁶⁰¹ Although this was a significant pointer to Tsafendas's abilities, it would not be mentioned again, not even during Tsafendas's summary trial.

JOHN VORSTER'S AND GENERAL VAN DEN BERGH'S ANNOUNCEMENTS

Although only two days had passed since the assassination, General van den Bergh announced that the preliminary investigation was completed. He now handed over the case to Advocate W. M. van den Berg, Attorney-General of Cape Town, whose job it would be to study the files and decide on the form of the trial.⁶⁰² However, the main news story of the day was Justice Minister John Vorster's statement from the previous night that present information indicated that the assassination was the work of one individual.⁶⁰³ After General van den Bergh completed his questioning of Tsafendas, he informed Vorster that this was a one-man job and that Tsafendas was not responsible for his actions.⁶⁰⁴ However, this latter conclusion is flatly contradicted by the investigation itself. Firstly, if Tsafendas told van den Bergh what he told the police in the two subsequent statements (which is obviously the most likely scenario), then there was no sign of insanity in Tsafendas's words. According to Terry Bell, David Beresford, Liza Key and Jan-Ake Kjellberg who saw the transcript of the first interrogation, there was no sign of insanity and Tsafendas, as he did in his next two statements, gave political reasons for the assassination.⁶⁰⁵ Furthermore, according to Michalis Michelis, the Greek journalist who interviewed a South African policeman who was present while Tsafendas was in custody after the assassination, none of the policemen who interacted with Tsafendas at this time believed that he was insane.⁶⁰⁶

Importantly, up to that point, none of the witnesses who had testified to the police had claimed that Tsafendas was insane or that there was anything wrong with him. On the contrary, everyone, along with the report of the South African Embassy in Portugal, was talking about a man with strong political convictions; a Communist. Therefore, even though

⁶⁰¹ The Cape Times, 'Tsafendas Taught Turks English', 8 September 1966; Daily Dispatch, 'Tsafendas Taught English in Turkey', 8 September 1966: 1; The Daily News, 'Tsafendas Seen As 'Mystery Man'', 8 September 1966: 17.

⁶⁰² Adams, Demitrios Tsafendas: Race, Madness and the Archive, p. 75; Die Burger, 'Tsafendas in die Hof: Geen Borgtog', 9 September 1966: 1.

⁶⁰³ The New York Times, 'Plot is Doubted by South Africa', 8 September 1966: 1; Daily Dispatch, 'Assassination A One Man's Job – Says Vorster', 8 September 1966: 1; The Australian, 'Dr. Verwoerd's Assassin Acted Alone, Police Say', 8 September 1966: 1.

⁶⁰⁴ D'Oliveira, Vorster – The Man, p. 180.

⁶⁰⁵ Terry Bell in a personal interview, 10 April 2015; David Beresford in a personal interview, 11 April 2014; Liza Key in a personal interview, 2 April 2015; Jan-Ake Kjellberg in a personal interview, 5 March 2015.

⁶⁰⁶ Michalis Michelis in a personal interview, 12 December 2015.

the evidence suggested that Tsafendas was perfectly sane, a Communist and passionate about politics, van den Bergh ignored this and declared him to be insane. It is worth asking why, if Tsafendas was insane or van den Bergh really believed he was insane, he did he not ask a psychiatrist to examine him while he was in custody. Finally, if Tsafendas was insane, why were lawyers not appointed to defend him the moment the preliminary investigation was completed? Why did it take twenty days?

FRIDAY, 9 SEPTEMBER 1966

SECRET TELEGRAM FROM THE SOUTH AFRICAN EMBASSY IN WASHINGTON

At 9.00 am on September 9, the Secretary of Foreign Affairs in Cape Town, received another secret telegram, this time from the South African embassy in Washington, DC. Written in telegraphic style, this stated that a “very reliable source with first-hand knowledge” informed them that the U.S. Immigration authorities had a file on Tsafendas, which had already been handed to Attorney-General Katzenbach with “suggestions it be made available” to the South African embassy in Washington, something the Attorney-General was “reluctant to do at this stage.”

The reason was that the State Department believed that “handing over information at this stage could have undesirable consequences at the Commonwealth Conference since file apparently reveals Tsafendas is quarter Negro or African.” Tsafendas’s file contained “full particulars” of his time in the United States. “He is understood to have shown under psychiatric treatment that he was unstable though not (not)⁶⁰⁷ insane, but type of man who would easily be used as instrument of Communist or hostile organizations. Impression of U.S. Immigration people at the time was that he had been manipulated and was under influence of someone or some organization. He was subsequently deported to Europe.”

The author of the telegram then suggests that his embassy should contact the U.S. authorities for any possible information on Tsafendas, given that they know he served in the U.S. merchant navy at one time, but without revealing knowledge of the above information. The telegram concludes that if the U.S. authorities “refuse or deny existence of material, it could be very embarrassing for U.S. if existence of material subsequently leaked out.”⁶⁰⁸ As we will see in the following chapter, this document, along with anything else which suggested that Tsafendas was not insane, would be ignored by the police, by the Commission of Enquiry and also during Tsafendas’s summary trial.

⁶⁰⁷ This is exactly how it appears in the telegram. There is a second ‘not’ within brackets.

⁶⁰⁸ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Washington, to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

SECRET TELEGRAM FROM THE SOUTH AFRICAN EMBASSY IN LONDON

That same morning, the Secretary of Foreign Affairs in Cape Town received another secret telegram, this time from the South African embassy in London. It stated that Tsafendas arrived in England on May 16, 1959 and wanted to take a language test and be granted landing permission to be employed as a kitchen porter at a hotel. Both requests were refused. He then asked for permission to remain in the UK as a student, but this request was also refused and he was ordered to leave on September 2, 1959. On September 12, 1959 Tsafendas admitted himself to a mental ward claiming that he “had a fixation that he had a tapeworm.” He left the hospital later in September - the exact day is not given - with the police looking for him since he was now in the country illegally. Tsafendas admitted himself to the Whitecroft Hospital in the Isle of Wight on October 4, 1959. On December 3, 1959, he was arrested at the hospital and deported to Germany.⁶⁰⁹

MEMORANDUM OF THE SPECIAL BRANCH OF THE BRITISH SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE IN SALISBURY⁶¹⁰

On this day, the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Salisbury, Rhodesia, sent its first report regarding Demitrio Tsafendas to the South African Police:

MEMORANDUM

XY6. 194/B/11/22.

Demitrio TSAFENDAS

1. The abovenamed, born in Lourenço Marques, Portuguese East Africa, on the 14th January, 1918, first entered Rhodesia at Bulawayo by train on the 19th July, 1964. He was travelling on Portuguese passports number 6511/63, issued in Lourenço Marques on the 2nd November 1963, and valid until the 2nd November, 1965. He gave his race as white, his marital status as single and his nationality as Portuguese.

⁶⁰⁹ Secret Telegram from the South African Embassy in London to the Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

⁶¹⁰ Memorandum of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Salisbury regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

2. Stating that his last permanent address was 600 Proclamation Hill Café, West End, Pretoria, he said that his occupations were Linguist, Translator, Interpreter and Maintenance Fitter. He was in possession of £50 and gave the purpose of his entry as a visit to his sister, Catherine HARALAMBOS, of Marandellas Store, Marandellas.

3. He was granted an Alien's Tourist Permit, valid to the 9th August, 1964, and it is noted that this permit is endorsed with a stamp indicating that he re-entered Rhodesia via Salisbury Airport on the 27th July, 1964, until this date and no indication as to the country from which he re-entered.

4. On the 11th August, 1964, following the expiry of his Alien's Tourist Permit, TSAFENDAS was requested to produce a return ticket to South Africa or to pay a deposit if he required an extension. At this stage he sought employment in Rhodesia from the Public Services Board, an official of which asked the Immigration Department if there was a vacancy to which, as a linguist, he could be appointed.

5. The Immigration authorities wrote to TSAFENDAS at the O.E. Bottle Store and Liquosetto, Efthyvoulos House, King George Road, Avondale, on the 19th August, 1964, informing him that his permit had expired and that he must immediately report to their offices. On the following day they informed the Public Services Board that TSAFENDAS was in the country illegally and could not be given employment in Rhodesia.

6. He reported to the Immigration offices on the 21st August, 1964, stating that he was without funds and was seeking employment. He was informed that, as he was not in possession of a Police Certificate, the Residence Permit for which he would have to apply before being permitted to work would take a minimum of four weeks to be completed, and that he could not be allowed to remain in the country during that period. He then stated that he had once been a missionary in Egypt and North Africa and belonged to a Christian community which was not a recognised denomination and had no church. From this community he had received the cost of a rail fare to Vila de Manica. He was then advised to leave Rhodesia on the following day, and he accordingly departed by train, crossing the border at Umtali on the 22nd August, 1964.

7. TSAFENDAS again entered Rhodesia at Umtali on the 9th October, 1964. He was not in possession of the required visa and was declared a prohibited immigrant in terms of Section 6 of the Immigration Act, 1954. On this occasion he gave his intended destination as Galanakis Grocery Store, Main Street, Umtali, his race as Greek and his nationality as Portuguese. His last permanent address was 600 Church Street, West End, Pretoria and he stated that he was employed as an Interpreter and Technician by the Companhia Do Pipeline

Mocambique, on whose behalf he wished to enter on a business visit to the Hume Pipe Company. He was given a Temporary Permit for two weeks, but when the circumstances of his previous visit became known, the permit was withdrawn on the following day and he was instructed to leave Rhodesia forthwith. He accordingly departed from Umtali on the 10th October, 1964.

Special Branch Headquarters,

SALISBURY.

9th September, 1966.

STATEMENTS

FATHER HANNO PROBST⁶¹¹

Priest, white male, Mangete, Dist. Mtuhzini. 5.45 pm.

Sometime during 1965 I cannot remember the month, I went to Mandini store. When I came out of the store, I saw a man sitting on a bench in front of the store and I noticed that one of his arms was bandaged. He looked a bit lost and I went up to him and asked him what had happened. He told me that he had been stabbed in the arm. I could see that he was not a South African, and I asked him whether he had come from Mozambique, he said "how do you know that" I told him that I could see. He started swearing at the Mozambique Government, and said that they had no sense and did nothing for the black people. I said to him, you are a Portuguese and you should love your Government and when you behave in that spirit, you are not liked in South Africa. I asked him how long he had been in Mozambique, he said that he was not there for long.

He told me that he could speak eight languages. I tried him with a few languages and I found that he spoke them all perfectly. He asked where I was born, I told him that I was born near Munich in Germany. He then started to talk in Munich dialect. I then tried him in Spanish, Italian, German tried a few words in Czech and he answered me in Czech. I asked him where he had learned all these languages, he told me that he was in Russia and that he had learned these languages in a training school in Russia.

⁶¹¹ Father Hanno Probst statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

He asked me to which church I belonged and I told him that I was a Roman Catholic Priest. He started to swear against the Roman Catholic Church and said that they should be done away with. I asked him why and he said that in Mozambique the Roman Catholic Sisters in the Hospitals Inject the Bantu people with something to get rid of them, and they died like flies and it is being done with the approval of the Mozambique Government. I told him that it was the same propaganda like in the Congo, against the sisters. I said to him you speak like a Semba of the Congo. I got annoyed with him and I warned him about his attitude, told him that he would not get very far in South Africa, I called him a communist and I left him.

NIKOLAAS JACOBUS NEL⁶¹²

I am a 34 year old white male resident at the above address and working in Howden, James and Safanco, Booysens.

About the middle of 1964, I was still working at FA Poole Engineering Works, Carl Street, Pretoria West. The same time there was a man working with the name Dimitrio Tsafendas. He is the same person who is currently accused of killing Dr. Verwoerd. Accused was employed as a Fitter and Welder. While the accused and I were busy off-loading cranes from the truck on a certain day, we had quarrelled. He wanted to exercise authority, while I was in charge of the specific work and the Bantus who were helping us. During our argument the accused threatened that he would stab me with a knife. He had no knife with him nor did he bring one forth. Accused and I never spoke to each other again. Accused was certainly unpopular among white workers. Accused adapted more to the non-whites. He could speak several languages and seemed normal. Accused had a messy and dirty appearance. I do not know much more of him because I did not want to have anything to do with him after of our argument. Accused said he was of Greek descent. However I cannot say which nationality he was from.

⁶¹² Nikolaas Jacobus Nel statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

JAN BANIS⁶¹³

White male, employed at Quix Snax, Cape Town.

I met him (Tsafendas) about three months ago, when he came to eat at 42 Chamberlain Street, Woodstock. He was a table boarder at this address. I saw him there on and off for about a month before I first had occasion to speak to him. I asked him where he was employed and he told me that he was looking for a job. He then told me his name. He told me that he had found a job in South West Africa, but before going there he was going to take a job in the House of Parliament for two months. He did not tell me why he wants a job in the House of Parliament.

GLADSTONE DUNN⁶¹⁴

54 years old, Coloured Male, Good Hope Farm, Dist Mtunzini. 4.00 pm.

During May, 1965, a man came to my house. He introduced himself to me as Demitrio Tsafendas. He told me that he had just come from court, where he had charged another man with assault on himself, but that the other man was found not guilty. He told me that he was working for Fraser and Chalmers at Mandeni, that the assault took place in the messroom. He told me that before he had come to Mandeni, he had heard about me from E. Barbeau, 41 Botanic Avenue, Durban. Tsafendas spoke about religion, it then transpired that both of us belonged to the same Faith. I belong to Christs Church. During the conversation Tsafendas told me that the present Government was not playing fair with the non-whites. He said that the wages paid to non-whites was very unsatisfactory, as well as the political situation. When he said this to me, I asked him why he did not go back to the place where he had come from. He said that he could not get on there.

He also told me that from here he would be going to Cape Town where he will change his identity, he said that he would become a coloured. He told me that he had been to Germany, France, Portugal and South America. He said that while he was in Portugal he refused to join the army and was imprisoned and after his release he returned to ⁶¹³ Jan Banis statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁶¹⁴ Gladstone Dunn statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Mozambique. He also told me that he could not get on with his family and that they did not want to have anything to do with him ... He told me that he came to Durban where he got a job at the law courts as an interpreter, from there he went to the railways where he also worked. I cannot remember what he did on the railways. When he left the railways he came to Mandeni where he worked for Frazer and Chalmers. He slept the night at my house and the next morning I took him back to Mandeni.

ANTONIO TEIXEIRA DA SILVA⁶¹⁵

Welder at F.A. Poole's Engineering Works, Pretoria

I started employment with, this firm during March 1964 and saw the accused Demetrio Tsafendas for the first time. He was also employed by this firm. I met him on the first day as I was working next to him in the shop. During the first two days of my employment I had a conversation with the accused and he made enquiries what I did whilst in Mozambique. I told him that I served in the Portuguese Army for three years.

He then enquired how life in the army was and what salary I got. He also asked me whether the army had many activities and whether we often had trouble with the natives. I told him that the only thing I had against the army was that the period of training was too long. The accused also questioned me as to what my opinion was about Dr. Salazar the Prime Minister of Portugal. I told him that I was not interested in discussing this with him. Soon after this discussion, I noticed that the accused became aggressive towards me and started accusing me falsely of not doing my work properly. He also made several reports against me to the works foreman Mr. Vercueil. The accused pretended that he was an educated man but according to his manners and approach to other people I would say that he was very ill-mannered. Otherwise the accused was acting normal and I never noticed anything wrong with him. I have seen an insane person before but I can state that the accused never behaved as an insane person whilst employed here.

⁶¹⁵ Antonio Teixeira Da Silva statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

ROSAMUND ELIZABETH POPKISS⁶¹⁶

Aldor Apartments, Rustenburg Avenue, Rondebosch.

I am the temporary manageress of the above-mentioned apartments. On 31.6.1966 Mr. Dimitrio Tsafendas moved into room no.7 which was vacant and which was advertised. The rent for the room is R20 p.m. Although he spoke to some of the other residents he seemed very reserved. On Monday 5.9. 1966 at about 6.30 p.m. I met him outside in the garden. I was looking for ray cat and he was just walking up and down. To me he looked very worried. I then spoke to him and asked him whether he saw my cat. I told him that I was very worried about the cat. He then said that he was also very worried and that he had something on his mind. I did not peruse this any further and left him there.

Rondebosch. 9.9.1966. 8.20 pm.

(SGD.) R.E. Popkiss.

Statement taken by me. (SGD.) A.J. van Dyk. Captain.

FRANK WALTER WARING⁶¹⁷

White male, Cabinet Minister in the Parliament of the Republic of South Africa, Cape Town, 5.30 pm.

On 6/9/66 I entered the Assembly shortly after the bells rang at 2.10 p.m. and sat down at my desk. My desk is behind and to the right of that of the Prime Minister ... A noise attracted my attention and I looked up to see Dr. Donges apparently trying to clutch at someone who, at the same time, I saw plunge something into the right hand shoulder of Dr. Verwoerd. I jumped at him and put a neck lock on him and pulled him away. He resisted and seemed to play around with his arms to get out of my grip. I pulled him further back and over on top of me on the bench of Dr. Donges which is to the right of that of the Prime Minister.

It was then that I saw he had a large dagger, of the type exhibited, in his hand. His hand movements were now restricted by the bench and desk, although momentarily, his hand freely held the dagger. In a matter of seconds, however, his hand was held by other members and the dagger removed. He was then pulled off me and when I got up, also in a matter of seconds, was on the floor where I grabbed hold of his right leg and could see his face clearly for the first time. Those who held him on the floor were making an effort to drag him outside. At that stage the State President's body-guard, Capt. Buytenbach also grabbed hold of his leg and told me to leave it to him which I did and moved away and sat next to Sen. Trollip. Some ten minutes later it was pointed out to me that the left hand leg of my trousers had two tears which appeared could have been made by the dagger. The one is about two inches and the other about one inch in length. I, however, received no injuries.

⁶¹⁶ Rosamund Elizabeth Popkiss statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/8, NASA.

⁶¹⁷ Frank Walter Waring statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

PRESS REPORTS OF THE DAY

Perhaps the biggest story of the day was a false one, a report in the Rand Daily Mail that Amelia Williams, Tsafendas's mother, was alive and living in Lourenço Marques. The Mail had lifted the erroneous report from the Portuguese newspaper, Diario de Lisboa, of the previous day.⁶¹⁸ It was one of a number of false stories published about Tsafendas at the time. The Cape Times reported that police had visited a mill at Mandini where Tsafendas had a fight with a fellow worker, Nikolas Vergos, and took statements from men who met Tsafendas.⁶¹⁹ However, only one statement taken that day in Mandini was found in the National Archives, that of Gladstone Dunn.⁶²⁰ This must mean either only this man gave a statement that day or the other statements have gone missing.

Further newspaper investigations of Tsafendas's past turned up Nikolas Vergos of Johannesburg, aged sixty-one (of fifty-four according to other reports), who described a fight he had with Tsafendas when they worked for the same company in Mandini, Zululand, in May, 1965. Vergos said one day in the canteen, Tsafendas knocked him to the ground twice and so he drew a razor and slashed his wrist. He thought Tsafendas hit him "because he resented the fact I would have nothing to do with him." The men's foreman, Charles Woods, ⁶¹⁸ Diario de Lisboa, 'A Mae de Dimitrio Ainda Vive Nos Arredores de Lourenço Marques', 8 September 1966; Rand Daily Mail, 'Tsafendas' Mother Still Alive', 9 September 1966; Diario de Lisboa, 'Localizada a Mae de Tsafendas', 13 September 1966.

⁶¹⁹ The Cape Times, 'Tsafendas in Brawl in Canteen', 9 September 1966: 15.

⁶²⁰ Gladstone Dunn statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

described Tsafendas as a very good worker and “far from being a crank. He seemed to be a fairly intelligent man but he was a violent type and we couldn’t keep him.”⁶²¹

The Daily Dispatch carried a reproduction of Tsafendas’s signature and an analysis by Dr. R.M. Schweitzer of East London, South Africa, who it described as a graphologist of thirty years’ standing. Dr. Schweitzer managed to portray Tsafendas quite accurately, indeed more accurately than any psychiatrist would do in his summary trial. He suggested the writer experienced difficulty in accepting discipline, had unsteady working habits, showed evidence of vindictiveness, but was idealistic, a person of great enthusiasm and a quick thinker. By studying loops, whirls and letter shapes, Schweitzer concluded that the signatory was intelligent and “capable of learning and thinking logically and can at times co-operate,” but he also nurtured emotional inhibitions and needed more sympathy in his emotional life. By underlining his signature three times, the writer signalled that he could be extremely vain.⁶²²

The written media presented a jumble of false claims about Tsafendas. The Pretoria News said Tsafendas lived in Pretoria for about two years. It quoted an unnamed colleague of Tsafendas at a city engineering firm as saying that Tsafendas lived in an empty car packing box. “In the evenings he bought meat and fried it on the fire at work, then he would take it back to his motor-car box,” the man said.⁶²³ The story did not name the company, which must have been City Engineering or FA Poole Engineering Works, as these were the only two firms Tsafendas worked for in Pretoria, apart from his sister’s café. Every aspect of the story is false. Tsafendas lived in Pretoria for nine months, not two years and he lived for a few days at his half-sister’s house, for a few weeks at Fotini Gavasiadis’s house and then for the rest of his time in the rent-free-apartment given to him by Nick Vlachopoulos. His whole family testified to the Commission of Enquiry that “he always had proper accommodation in Pretoria.”⁶²⁴

The author also asked two people, Fotini Gavasiadis and Mary Eintracht, who saw a lot of Tsafendas at the time and both dismissed the newspaper’s report. Tsafendas lived in the house of Fotini Gavasiadis and her husband Markos for several weeks. When he left, he moved into an apartment next to their house, where he stayed for the next eight months, seeing Fotini and Markos every day, and spending a lot of his time at their home. Tsafendas ⁶²¹ The Cape Times, ‘Tsafendas in Brawl in Canteen’, 9 September 1966: 15.

⁶²² Daily Dispatch, ‘The Hand the Killer Wrote’, 9 September 1966: 1.

⁶²³ Pretoria News, ‘Dimitrio Lived in Pretoria’, 9 September 1966: 1.

⁶²⁴ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

and Fotini also worked together for nine months in her brother's café. Mary Eintracht, Tsafendas's cousin, lived in Pretoria at the time and was close to him throughout his stay. Both characterised the report as a "lie" and confirmed that throughout his time in Pretoria Tsafendas had only lived either with Marika in her house, or with Fotini and Markos in their house or in the rent-free apartment given to him by Vlachopoulos and never in a packing case.⁶²⁵

A Cape Times story said Tsafendas was stopped by Israeli border police in Jerusalem on January 22, 1961. The newspaper's London correspondent said Tsafendas arrived at the Mandelbaum Gate at the entrance to the old city of Jerusalem with a Portuguese passport issued in Hamburg but without money. He said he was sure the Greek churches in Israel would not let him starve. The immigration officer turned Tsafendas over to the security police, who denied him entry.⁶²⁶ In about October 1964, Tsafendas was seen in Umtali, Rhodesia, where he visited a café. The lady owner was curious about his teeth, which looked as if they were made of silver. She quoted Tsafendas as saying they were false teeth which were made for him when he visited Russia. He said he travelled a lot and did not belong to any country.⁶²⁷ Police in Cape Town combed the city for anyone who had met or had any associations with Tsafendas, but it was believed that nothing had been discovered that remotely connected Tsafendas with any political organisation in South Africa or abroad.⁶²⁸

⁶²⁵ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁶²⁶ The Cape Times, 'Tsafendas: Fear for Life', 9 September 1966: 1.

⁶²⁷ The Umtali Post, 'Assassin Was Seen in Umtali', 9 September 1966: 1.

⁶²⁸ The Australian, 'Search Goes On for Killer's Friends', 9 September 1966.

SATURDAY, 10 SEPTEMBER 1966

STATEMENTS

COSTAS MICHAELETOS⁶²⁹⁶³⁰

White man, 51 years, born in Greece, South African citizenship acquired during 1955, owner of Metro Cafe, Vryburg, telephone number 213, declares:

I am well acquainted with the alleged attacker of the late Prime Minister of the Republic of South Africa, His Excellency Dr. H. F. Verwoerd. The full name of the attacker is Dimetrios Tsafantakis or Mimis and he is of mixed descent. His father is a Greek by birth and his mother was a Portuguese Coloured woman. Tsafantakis is an illegitimate child and was born in Lourenço Marques at about 1916. The exact date of his birth is unknown to me.

Dimetrios Tsafantakis' father is Michael Tsafantakis who emigrated from the island Crete to Mozambique. Michael Tsafantakis is a brother of my uncle, George Michaeletos's wife. George Michaeletos is currently living at PO Box 187, Lourenço Marques. George Michaeletos married Diana Artemis.

During the time Dimetrios Tsafantakis was born, I was also living in Lourenço Marques and Dimetrios Tsafantakis grew up before me, and I even taught him at school in Lourenço Marques. Later Dimetrios Tsafantakis went to Middelburg (Transvaal) where he completed his schooling.

The father of Dimetrios Tsafantakis was seeing a Portuguese Coloured woman named Amelia. Because of the relationship between Michael Tsafantakis and Amelia, Dimitri Tsafantakis was born out of wedlock. Michael Tsafantakis has discussed the birth of his illegitimate child with me several times.

When Dimetrios Tsafantakis was about 10 years old, his father married a Greek girl with the name Marika Sakelis, who hails from Port Said and from this marriage three children were born in with the name -

⁶²⁹ Costas Michaeletos statement to the police, 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁶³⁰ The correct spelling is Michaletos, not Michaeletos.

a) Bagela, a daughter who later married a certain Nissiotis, who currently owns a cafe at the Municipal Market in Pretoria and who is well known to the Greek community in Pretoria.

b) Victor, a son who has a disability in his left leg.

c) Then there was a daughter named Bussa, who later married a Greek, presumably with the name Kuwaris. The Kuwaris' owns a cafe in Pretoria but the name of the cafe is unknown.

Dimetrios Tsafantakis is well known to a certain Tamos Tamburazis who works at the Tattersalls in Pretoria.

Dimetrios Tsafantakis grew up with his half brothers and sisters and was always treated as part of the family.

During 1933-1934, Dimetrios Tsafantakis left Lourenço Marques when he joined the Navy. I can, however, not say which country's navy Dimetrios Tsafantakis joined.

I left Lourenço Marques during 1935 and came to South Africa and shortly afterwards the Tsafantakis family also came to South Africa. Michael Tsafantakis worked about 20 years for Iscor, Pretoria. Michael Tsafantakis died about four years ago. Michael Tsafantakis' wife is still living somewhere in Pretoria, but her address is unknown to me.

Since Dimetrios Tsafantakis left Lourenço Marques during 1933-1934, I had not seen him again. On 8/9/66, however, I saw a picture of Dimetrios Tsafantakis in the newspaper and recognized him immediately. Dimetrios Tsafantakis looks just like his father.

Dr. John Michaeletos who also had his schooling in Middelburg (Transvaal) and went to school with Dimetrios, is currently a physician in Greece. He has a clinic in Athens, Greece. Dr. John Michaeletos' mother, Sophia Michaeletos, lives in Aharnon Street, Athens.

There is also a professor John Michaeletos in Greece, but I do not know where he currently finds himself. When I visited Greece in 1952, I heard that he was an active communist. I also think that the doctor and the professor know each other. Mrs. Helen Kallos, the Greek consulate in Cape Town is well acquainted with both the doctor and the professor. Mrs. Kallos' maiden name is also Michaeletos and she is a cousin of mine.

Ever since I knew Dimetrios Tsafantakis, I never/anytime observed that he showed any deviations. He also never was an aggressive type person. I am aware of the fact that Dimetrios Tsafantakis was a withdrawn type person, possibly due to the fact that he never actually was recognized as a member of his family.

The letter which was found in the Bible of Dimetrios Tsafantakis, supposedly comes from Dr. John Michaeletos of Athens, because they know each other well and grew up together.

Of the actions of Dimetrios Tsafantakis as a mature person I have no knowledge.

That's all I want to say.

COMMENTS ON MICHALETOS'S STATEMENT

As we can see, Michaeletos was asked by the police about a "John Michaeletos" who corresponded with Tsafendas (a letter of his was found inside a Bible). It seems highly unlikely that the police would have made enquiries about a simple pen friend of Tsafendas, given that at the same time he was corresponding with several people overseas – for example, Father Nikola Banovic and Limasollu Naci in Istanbul – and none of them, as far as the author can establish, was contacted about his relationship with him. The fact that Tsafendas's friend John Michaeletos was a member of the Greek Communist Party and of the DSE, and had even recruited Tsafendas into the DSE, must have been known to the police; that is surely why they made inquiries about him. Such information could have easily become known to the police through the interrogation of Tsafendas or the content of the letter. The fact also that Costas Michaeletos then explicitly refers to one of the two "John Michaeletos" he mentions as "an active communist", suggests further that he was specifically asked about the political ideas of that person. Furthermore, as we will later see, the fact that subsequently the South African police and the Commission of Enquiry made inquiries regarding this "Michaeletos" to PIDE, and almost certainly to the Greek police too, suggests even more strongly that the man they were looking for was not just a pen friend.

CONFIDENTIAL SECURITY REPORT OF THE SPECIAL BRANCH OF THE BRITISH SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE IN UMTALI

On September 10, a second confidential security report from the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Rhodesia, written by D/S/O/ Stannard, was sent to the South African police. It contained information about Tsafendas's movements in Rhodesia, plus interviews from people in the country who knew him.

It has been ascertained that, on the 9th October, 1964, Demitrio Tsafendas entered Umtali from Mocambique through Forbes Border Post. Immigration register details state that Tsafendas gave out that he was Portuguese, and a Technician from Pretoria. A Temporary Permit, No. 892, was issued to him, valid until 23rd October, 1964.

Tsafendas gave out that he was on a business visit to the Hume Pipeline, and that his address in Umtali would c/o Mr. GALANAKIS, Main Street, Umtali. His Permit instructions were that he was to leave Rhodesia though Bulawayo/Beit Bridge. Immediately beneath this entry, and on the same date, was the fact that one, Carmelo da Silva, Portuguese, a clerk in Beira, had entered Rhodesia en route to Salisbury. It is possible, although not confirmed, that Tsafendas entered in this man's company. Photostat copies of the Temporary Permit are attached for your information and retention.

It has been ascertained that Tsafendas visited the Umtali Green Grocers, situated in Main Street and spoke to Nikolas George SPANOS, the owner. SPANOS has been interviewed and states that he remembers this occasion, and states that TSAFENDAS said that he was on a business trip. He asked SPANOS if he was from Egypt, and whether or not he spoke any foreign languages. Spoke to SPANOS in French, and Greek, but when asked what nationality he was, he declined to comment. SPANOS states that he was a mysterious man. SPANOS was asked if he was related to GALANAKIS. He replied that he was a cousin, and thereafter referred TSAFENDAS to John GALANAKIS, who owns the Gala's Cash Store, Main Street, Umtali.

John GALANAKIS stated that Tsafendas entered his shop, having been referred to him by SPANOS. He states that he formed the impression at the time that TSAFENDAS was on the scrounge, but realised that he was an intelligent man and that he spoke Greek, Portuguese and Afrikaans fluently. He asked GALANAKIS how Africans in this country live and what their conditions were. He also stated that he had owned some form of tapestry factory in Madeira, but that this concern had since fallen through, and that he was looking for employment. He stated that he might try and secure employment with the Oil Refinery, as he considered he would be an asset, being fluent in several foreign languages. He asked GALANAKIS if he could rent his farm in Vila Nanica, Mocambique, but this offer was declined, as GALANAKIS realised he had no money. TSAFENDAS stated that he was looking for accommodation, and in this regard, he was introduced to the local Greek priest Father CONDOS, who approached one Mrs KAVADIAS. She agreed to accommodate him and he is known to have stayed there for two nights.

Father CONDOS when seen reiterated what GALANAKIS has said, and stated that he merely secured accommodation for him. He did add, however, that he was convinced that TSAFENDAS was not of Greek origin, but of Turkish extract.

Mrs. Helen GRISPOS, the daughter of Mrs. KAVADIAS, was seen and stated that she met Tsafendas while he stayed with her mother. Described him as being well mannered and intelligent. She stated that he was collected by Immigration officials after his two nights with her mother as his papers were not in order, and that he would have to go.

TSAFENDAS was also known to have visited the Vumba Milk Bar, owned by Mr. Spiros RAFTOPOULOS. RAFTOPOULOS stated that he remembered this man well, and that he visited his shop on two occasions. He mentioned that he was trying to secure a job with the Pipelines. RAFTOPOULOS mentioned that the most outstanding thing about Tsafendas was his silver or platinum coloured teeth. When he asked TSAFENDAS about this, he replied that he had them done while he was staying in Russia. He also mentioned that he was born in Lourenço Marques, but that he had not been there for some considerable time, and that he had visited Cyprus, Turkey, and in fact, most places in the world.

It is known that Tsafendas visited two Greeks in Gondola after being declared a Prohibited Immigrant. These two Greeks are Andrew KAVALIERATOS and Paul BABIOLAKIS. He was arrested by the Portuguese Police at Maforga, 5 miles from Gondola, when he was living and mining with Africans in that area. He was thereafter conveyed to Beira for interrogation. He was not seen in Umtali since that occasion.

All the persons above state that Tsafendas had silver and platinum coloured teeth. The only luggage Tsafendas had was one small blue suitcase.

Comments: Mrs. KAVADIAS is now living at Cedult Farm, 10 mile peg, Melsetter road. Enquires continue to ascertain whether or not there was any connection between TSAFENDAS and GALANAKIS. It is considered curious that TSAFENDAS should give the name GALANAKIS as his address when entering Rhodesia, and yet GALANAKIS states that he only met with him by chance, having been referred to him by his cousin SPANOS. It is also understood that TSAFENDAS visited Rhodesia on two previous occasions in July and August, 1964, via Bulawayo and Salisbury, and that he left Rhodesia via Umtali by train on the 22nd August, 1964.

Special Branch Headquarters,

Salisbury.

9th September, 1966.⁶³¹

COMMENTS OF HELEN GRISPOS AND ANDREAS BABIOLAKIS TO THE AUTHOR REGARDING THEIR STATEMENTS

For unknown reasons, Sophia Kavadias was apparently not questioned by Special Branch, although Tsafendas stayed at her house and was arrested there. She had long known Tsafendas and his family, having lived next door to them in Lourenço Marques in the mid-1930s. However, her daughter, Helen Grispos, was questioned. Helen was married to George Grispos, who was a very close friend of Tsafendas and his schoolmate in Lourenço Marques. In an interview with the author, Helen Grispos remembered the police asking her about Tsafendas after Dr. Verwoerd's assassination:

“I don't remember if my mother spoke to the police then ... I remember George was away in Mozambique at the time, so he was not questioned... I can't remember if he was questioned by the police in Mozambique, but I think not ... I don't remember at all what I told them [the police] ... I don't think I would have mentioned that he was a Communist.” Asked if she told the police that her husband was Tsafendas's friend, she replied, “I don't remember, but I don't think I would have done it after what he [Tsafendas] did!”⁶³²

Andreas Babiolakis was a good friend of Tsafendas from childhood and had stayed at his house in Beira for a couple of months. In a personal interview with the author, he said that he and Kavallieratos were questioned by the police after the assassination. However, their statements were not found in the archives. Babiolakis does not remember exactly what he told the police or by whom he was questioned. He clearly remembers trying to distance himself from Tsafendas as much as possible, but also telling the police about Tsafendas's two arrests in Beira two years earlier, knowing that they would be aware of them. As for the Report's question regarding Galanakis's statement that he only met Tsafendas by chance, it is true that Galanakis knew Tsafendas from the past, very probably from back when they were children. He obviously lied in order to distance himself from Tsafendas, as did most people at the time.⁶³³

⁶³¹ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁶³² Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

PRESS REPORTS OF THE DAY

Five days after the assassination, newspapers reported that Tsafendas would appear for summary trial in the Cape Town Supreme Court on a charge of murder. The Cape Times said the Judge-President of the Cape, Mr. Justice Beyers, would probably preside with two assessors; the Attorney General of the Cape, Mr. Willem van den Berg, would appear for the State, and Judge Beyers would likely appoint a defence advocate, or two, for Tsafendas. Van den Berg was expected to spend the weekend studying statements from the police, after which an indictment would be drawn up.⁶³⁴

The Daily Dispatch quoted van den Berg as saying that the tightest possible security measures would be taken. "Everything possible will be done to see that these measures are watertight for the safety of all concerned," he said. The available courts were small, seating no more than 120 members of the public and only four reporters. Special measures would be taken to accommodate more Press representatives. Tsafendas was still being held at Caledon Square police station.⁶³⁵

The New York Times reported that Tsafendas carried on a twenty-year feud with the United States, culminating in a demand for extensive damages. In an affidavit drawn up by lawyers in Cape Town, Tsafendas declared he was suing the United States for $100,000 because in 1947 he was deported by US authorities to Greece instead of to South Africa, as he wished. He also claimed $50,000 for loss of salary and mental and physical suffering and $50,000 for "inconvenience imposed upon me during the past twenty years, which was entirely due to the negligence of the American authorities."⁶³⁶ In a dispatch from Washington, The New York Times reported that Tsafendas had been deported from the USA in 1947 on grounds that he entered the country illegally. There was no record of his having ⁶³³ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

⁶³⁴ The Cape Times, 'Top Security for Trial of Assassin', 10 September 1966: 1.

⁶³⁵ Daily Dispatch, 'Security Clamp-Down for Trial of Tsafendas', 10 September 1966: 1.

⁶³⁶ The New York Times, 'Assassin Planned Suit Against the USA', 10 September 1966: 15.

sued the United States but he had threatened to do so during numerous visits to the US Consulate in Cape Town.⁶³⁷

Newspapers began searching for any news about Tsafendas, even if it was previously published elsewhere. The Dagbreek and The Star printed the report of Tsafendas being picked up in Mozambique with five passports, his arrests there (two according to The Star and three according to Dagbreek) and his deportation after the Second World War because of “communist activities.”⁶³⁸ The Star also published the story that had been in the Pretoria News two days earlier about Tsafendas telling an acquaintance he could not leave Cape Town because he “had a job to finish here first.”⁶³⁹ The Natal Witness republished interviews with some of Tsafendas’s Frankfurt colleagues.⁶⁴⁰

DR. VERWOERD’S FUNERAL

Dr. Verwoerd’s body, accompanied by his bulldog Punch, was flown from Cape Town to Pretoria on September 8.⁶⁴¹ Wilhelm Verwoerd, Dr. Verwoerd’s eldest son, wanted a small, family funeral, but government ministers insisted that a State funeral was necessary and he eventually agreed.⁶⁴² Dr. Verwoerd was buried on Saturday, September 10, at 2.15. A mile-long cortege, led by a Mounted police escort, processed through the heart of the capital to Heroes’ Acre in the Old Cemetery on Church Street West. The ceremonies were watched by the biggest crowd ever seen in South Africa, estimated at 250.000.⁶⁴³

The State funeral began with a one-hour religious service in the amphitheatre of the Union Buildings, attended by 10,000 people led by State President Charles Robert Swart and including many diplomats in formal dress. The only national leader mentioned was Ian Smith, Prime Minister of Rhodesia. Separately, in the shadow of the West Wing, sat Paramount Chief Kaiser Matanzima and some twenty Africans representing seven ethnic ⁶³⁷ The New York Times, ‘Records Show Deportation’, 11 September 1966.

⁶³⁸ Dagbreek, ‘Tsafendas Het Vir V.V. in Persie Gewerk’, 11 September 1966; The Star, ‘Assassin Had Five Passports’, 10 September 1966: 3.

⁶³⁹ The Star, ‘He Had A ‘Job’ To Do’, 10 September 1966: 3.

⁶⁴⁰ Natal Witness, ‘Tsafendas was So Friendly ...’, 10 September 1966.

⁶⁴¹ The Globe and Mail, ‘Dr. Verwoerd’s Slayer Appears for Formal Hearing in Court’, 9 September 1966: 4.

⁶⁴² Goodman, Fault Lines: Journeys into the New South Africa, p. 154-155.

⁶⁴³ House of Assembly [South Africa], Debates, (6th September and 7th September 1966), p. 2015-2016; Personality, ‘The State funeral of Dr. H.F. Verwoerd, Prime Minister’, 29 September 1966: 19-24; Scope, ‘The Entire Nation Mourns ... And A Critical World Press Passes Caustic Comments’, 23 September 1966: 12-18; The Star, ‘Vast Crowds Pay Last Respects to Dr. Verwoerd’, 11 September 1966: 1.

groups. Representatives of the Indian and Coloured communities also sat there.⁶⁴⁴

The coffin was carried in by eight military officers flanked by eight senior Cabinet ministers and the mourners rose when Mrs. Dr. Verwoerd took her place with her children. The national anthem rang out and an Air Force guard of honour saluted as the casket was placed on a purple and black draped catafalque in front of the pulpit. The service was conducted by the Rev. J.H. Louw of the Pretoria East Ned Geref Kerk, of which Dr. Verwoerd was a member; the Lesson was read by Church of England Bishop S.C. Bradley, and the funeral eulogy was delivered by the Rev. J.S. Gericke, Moderator of the Ned Geref Kerk of the Cape.⁶⁴⁵

The service lasted for just over an hour, whereupon the cortege moved slowly towards the cemetery headed by thirty-eight Mounted Policemen, motorised army detachments and four hundred troops. Overhead, in a clear blue sky, flights of Harvard aircraft formed the letters "HV." The committal at the cemetery was restricted to family and the Cabinet, but as the coffin was carried to the graveside, the thousands gathered outside heard nineteen-gun salvos fired from the hills around Pretoria.⁶⁴⁶ The funeral proceedings were aired by the South African Broadcasting Corporation in eleven different languages so that people from all around the world could follow them.⁶⁴⁷

Die Vaderland, the National Party's mouthpiece, declared on its front page that although Dr. Verwoerd was gone, "his message remains."⁶⁴⁸ Most of the foreign press was not so complimentary. David Holden of the London Sunday Times wrote: "So now he goes, respected by many, hated perhaps by many more according to the colour of their skin, but not apparently very much loved. His former minions have surrounded his funeral with some of that aloofness and isolation that characterised his policies by refusing all visiting correspondents like myself any official facilities for covering the event." John Griff of the London Guardian wrote: "He leaves behind him a system established by force, and which ⁶⁴⁴ The New York Times, '10.000 People Attend Funeral Service', 11 September 1966; The Canberra Times, 'Dr. Verwoerd buried in Heroes' Acre', 12 September 1966: 5.

⁶⁴⁵ The Times (London), 'Hundreds File Past Grave of Dr. Verwoerd', 12 September 1966: 7; The Cape Argus, 'Magnificence for "Quiet Man"', 11 September 1966: 1 (late edition); The Star, 'Vast Crowds Pay Last Respects to Dr. Verwoerd', 11 September 1966: 1.

⁶⁴⁶ The Illustrated London News, 'The State funeral of Dr. Verwoerd', 17 September 1966: 1; The Star, 'Vast Crowds Pay Last Respects to Dr. Verwoerd', 11 September 1966: 1, ⁶⁴⁷ The Cape Times, 'State Gurnal On Air in 11 Languages', n.d.

⁶⁴⁸ Die Vaderland, 'Hy is Weg, Maar Syboodskap Bly', 10 September 1966: 1.

only force can destroy ... His work may endure for several generations – the power of the modern state is so hard to shake – but in the long run it must surely be doomed.”⁶⁴⁹ ⁶⁴⁹ Scope, ‘The Entire Nation Mourns ... And a Critical World Press Passes Caustic Comments’, 23 September 1966: 12-18.

SUNDAY, 11 SEPTEMBER 1966

TSAFENDAS'S STATEMENT TO THE POLICE⁶⁵⁰

Major Rossouw questioned Tsafendas in a session which started on this day, September 11, and ended on September 12. Copies of the transcript were found in the National Archives in Pretoria. Maj. Rossouw, head of the Security Police in Cape Town, was an experienced interrogator, having also questioned John Harris, Stephanie Kemp and other ARM members, all of whom were tortured during their time in detention.⁶⁵¹ This is what Tsafendas told Major Rossouw:

Demetrio Tsafendakis or Tsafendas,

States:-

I have been warned by Maj. Rossouw that he is investigating a charge of murder against me arising from the death of the late Prime Minister, Dr. H. F. Dr. Verwoerd. My rights have been explained to me and I understand the warning given to me. I am in my sound and sober senses and I have not been influenced in any way to make this statement. I am prepared to make a statement.

I.

I was born on the 14th of January, 1918 in Lourenço Marques, Portuguese East Africa. My father was a marine engineer named Michael Tsafendakis. He was originally from the island of Crete and according to my knowledge, he was of Greek nationality. Only later in my life did I find out that my mother was a non-European woman, a person known in Portuguese as a Mulato woman, meaning a Portuguese Coloured woman. Her name was Amelia Williams and she was of German origin. My father wasn't married to my mother and I never knew my mother. I ascertained later that my father separated from my mother and that my father had sent me to Egypt when I was one year old. I was in Egypt until I reached the age of six. I resided in Egypt with my grandmother, i.e. my father's mother. By that time my father had married again and had sent for me to be brought back to Lourenço Marques. We then lived at the Britannia Hotel. This was about 1925.

⁶⁵⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁶⁵¹ Fullard, "State Repression in the 1960s", p. 362.

2.

I remained with my father until the year 1927 when I was sent to a kindergarten school called the Anglican Mission in L.M. As I could not get along with my stepmother, my father decided to send me to boarding school in Middelburg, Transvaal. I used to go home then only every six months.

3.

During the depression in 1930 my father lost his partnership in the firm Vucellato, a shipbuilding and engineering firm in Lourenço Marques, and because of financial difficulties he took me out of school in Middelburg and I went back to the Anglican Mission School in Lourenço Marques. I was at the latter school until 1933. From 1933-1935 I attended the Portuguese Mission School evening classes. I reached standard 5 in English and standard 4 in Portuguese.

4.

It was about 1936 when I was about 18 years old, I left L.M. and went to the Transvaal and obtained a job at the Fountains Cafe near the Pretoria railway station. I was there for about two or three months when I decided to go to Johannesburg. I worked in different places in Johannesburg. I remember working in the City Tea-room in Hillbrow, the Elgin Café in Jeppe Street and at the Cosmopolitan Restaurant.

5.

When war broke out in 1939 I started attending fulltime classes at the Progress College, Johannesburg studying to do welding. I only attended the Progress College for three months. I then obtained work at British Mining Supply Company in Eloff Street Extension, Johannesburg. I worked there until 1941 when I decided to go to Cape Town.

6.

I was in Cape Town for 15 days when I joined a merchant ship called SS Eugene Livanos, as a mess hoy. Shortly after joining, the boat left for Canada. When the boat arrived in Canada I deserted. I went to the Canadian Immigration Department and told them I did not want to go back to the SS Eugene Livanos because the crew members were too rough. They were smoking dagga and marijuana and were fighting amongst themselves. Instead of sending me to another boat I was detained by the Immigration Authorities in a detention barrack for seamen in Montreal. From there I was sent to Halifax. From this detention station me, myself and two other seamen, ran away and crossed the American border. We were arrested on the American border and sent to the American Immigration Authorities, in Boston. There we were placed on an American ship, the SS Pillory, which went to Greenland. I was not in detention while on the Pillory. I was doing war service.

7.

When the SS Pillory arrived back in Boston I got a job on a liberty ship, the name of this ship has slipped my memory. I wish to explain that I was on different liberty ships till the end of the war in 1945.

8.

At the end of the war I fell ill on one of the liberty ships on way to England. I was taken off this boat and flown to an American base in England. From there I was sent back to America. I was unconscious when I was removed from the boat. When I came to my senses I found myself in the Grafton State Hospital in Massachusetts. I was in this hospital until 1947. I do not know what the medical diagnosis was but two medical board meetings were held on my health condition. I was then asked whether I wanted to return to Africa. The medical services authorities decided to send me back to Africa, but the Immigration Authorities decided that it could not be done.

9.

I had a Portuguese passport before leaving Cape Town, but because Portugal was a neutral country and I did not want to be neutral, I obtained a Greek passport from one of the Greek Consulates in either Johannesburg or Cape Town. This puzzled the American authorities because, apart from holding a Portuguese and a Greek passport, I was then also in possession of American seaman's papers. Instead of sending me to Africa the American authorities deported me to Greece. I was a complete stranger in Greece and could not find work. In order to survive I sold my clothing which I brought from America.

10.

Eventually I managed to obtain employment with the American Reconstruction Mission under the Marshall Plan. This job was as a foreman and interpreter. I cannot say whether this was a United Nations organization body or whether it was an American Aid Scheme. I remained on this job until 1949 when the project was concluded. I could not find alternate employment and eventually decided to go to the Greek Immigration Authorities. After some time I managed to obtain a refugee passport. I had no money and went to a shipping company where I was allowed to work my way on a ship, the Correnthia, to Marseilles.

11.

I left the boat at Marseilles and as I could not get a job there I went to Paris. I went by train after having purchased a train ticket with the money I had from my previous employment. This was during 1949. I moved from there to Ruan and Marseilles and back to Paris without being able to find work. From Paris I boarded a train through Spain to Portugal. I arrived in Portugal towards the end of 1949.

12.

When I arrived in Portugal with the refugee passport the immigration authorities did not recognise my passport and consequently detained me for about 6 months. I had already lost my Portuguese passport while in Canada. Before I left Greece I handed in my Greek passport in order to obtain a refugee passport. From the military detention depot I was sent to Machine Gun Depot Nr. 1 in Lisbon. There they wanted me to do military service and I refused to do military service. I told them I was a Christian and did not want to do military service. I was accused of deserting from Portuguese East Africa and for doing military service for foreign powers.

13.

I told the Portuguese authorities in Lisbon that I had been rejected by a recruiting board in Portuguese East Africa in 1936 because of my mother being a Coloured. They said there was no racial discrimination in Portugal and there was no reason for my refusal to do military service in Portugal. I still refused to do military service on the grounds of my Christianity. I was accused of disloyalty and they eventually discarded me. I was allowed to look for work in Lisbon but I was not allowed to leave the country. I could not find work but managed to survive through selling goods as a hawker. I sold embroidery and postcards and watches mainly to shipping passengers.

14.

I remained in Portugal until about 1953. I then tried to leave the country on my refugee passport but I was arrested by immigration authorities and was detained for over a year at the Port of Casias.

15.

After my release I managed to obtain a Portuguese passport and left for Western Germany. I also went to Sweden and Denmark. I fell ill in Western Germany and was admitted to Oxensoll⁶⁵² Krankenhaus for about six months. I deserted from this hospital. I returned to friends in Hamburg where I had stayed before going to hospital. I went to the Portuguese authorities in Hamburg and they arranged for my return to Portugal. I went back to Portugal and remained there until 1958. I worked as a hawker as I had done before.

16.

In 1958 I went to the Brussels Fair in Belgium to sell embroidery. This was not a success on account of too much competition from the Chinese. I was all over Western Europe trying to sell embroidery. As this business was unsuccessful, I found a job with the Anglo American Fashion and Designers in Frankfurt for three months. I also worked for Fries and Son, the American Army printing works in Höchst. I remained in these jobs in Germany until 1959.

17.

In 1959 I decided to leave Western Europe and try my luck in England, When I arrived in England I had many difficulties in finding employment because I had a Portuguese passport. I did casual work. I fell ill in England and was hospitalised on the Isle of Wight for about three to four months. This was a continuation of my previous nervous trouble. The immigration authorities decided in 1959 to deport me to Germany. They wanted to deport me to Portugal but I told them I came from Germany and I asked them to send me to Germany. I found a job in Munich in a tractor factory. I remained there for six months. I received my money and decided to go to Egypt. I travelled through the Balkan States from Germany by train to Pireus harbour from where I travelled by ferry-boat to Alexandria.

18.

My purpose was to travel through the Africa States south so South Africa. I went to the Egyptian authorities and explained my plight, but instead of helping me I was detained at a place outside Cairo for about 6 months. I was sent to Alexandria where I obtained help from the Red Cross to get to Beirut on a ferry-boat. I remained at Beirut for a few days and met some people of my church - the Christian Church - and they assisted me to purchase an airline ticket to Jerusalem. I was living on my wits for about 4 months on the Jordan River and had a look at the Holy Land.

⁶⁵² The correct spelling is Ochsenzoll.

19.

I found I was unable to get back to Southern Africa so I decided to go back to Europe through the Middle East. Eventually I managed to get through Serbia⁶⁵³ to Beirut and from Beirut to Tripoly, from Tripoly to Loadikia, from Loadikia to Hallipo, from there to Ohms and from there to Turkey to a place called Addena and from there to Ankara through the Torres Mountains. This journey was by bus. I was in Ankara for about a month and then went to Istanbul. I managed to obtain a job there as an English teacher, in the absence of a teacher at the Tarban College. I remained there for two months. I was stuck without money and gave blood transfusions at Istanbul. I was paid about one pound for a pint of blood.

20.

Sometime during 1961 I left by train to Western Europe through the Balkan States. I went as far as Bulgaria where I got off at Sofia. I could not find a job and after two weeks I boarded a train back to Istanbul. From Istanbul I got a free ride by a fish cooling truck to Athens.

21.

I remained in Athens for a few days and then got a ferryboat from Pireus to Crete to visit my father's relatives. I was destitute then. I did not know where to find my father's relatives but managed to trace some relatives in Crete. I stayed there for three days when I was told that they could not keep me. I went to the Christian Church Mission in Hercules and then to Rethinon.⁶⁵⁴ I stayed in Crete for about 20 days before I got a ferry-boat back to Pireus. From Pireus I got a bus to Corfu. From there I went by ferry-boat to Southern Italy. I went to the Vatican embassy (Portuguese) in Rome and they supplied with fare to return to Portugal.

22.

I arrive in Portugal with the intention of getting back to Africa. This was in 1962. I stayed in Portugal for over a year and during this time went to various embassies in an endeavour to obtain assistance to get back to Africa.

23.

In August or September, 1963 I received amnesty and the Social Services agreed to pay my ⁶⁵³ The spelling mistakes of names here are of the transcript, not of the author.

⁶⁵⁴ The correct spelling is Heraklion and Rethimnon.

boat fare to Lourenço Marques. I left immediately on the Princippi Perfecto and arrived in L.M. during approximately October, 1963. I stayed in L.M. with an uncle of mine for a few days. They contacted my half-brother in Pretoria and he and my stepmother came to L.M. to fetch me to Pretoria. In Pretoria I found a job with City Engineering Company in Mitchell Street, Pretoria as a maintenance fitter. I remained on this job for about three months. I then found another job with Pool Engineering in Pretoria and stayed there for about three to four months. I saved some money and then left for Rhodesia during June or July, 1964. I went to visit my half-sister, Catherine Pnematikatos. Things were politically upset in Rhodesia and I failed to find a job there. I had an apartment house in Avondale, Salisbury for one month. I left Rhodesia and went to Nyassaland in search of work. I stayed in Nyassaland at Lake Malawi for about 20 days before returning to Salisbury.

24.

Prom Salisbury I went to Umtali to look for a job with the Central African Petroleum Corporation. I failed to get a job so I crossed the Portuguese border to Beira. I found casual work in Beira and worked there for a few days. From there I found, a job with Central African Petroleum Corporation⁶⁵⁵ at Gondola in Portuguese territory. I was there for about one month. I was arrested on the job by the Portuguese authorities because I criticised the Portuguese government for their policy in regard to petrol distribution. I was detained in Beira for 93 days.

25.

After my release I met business people of the Greek community in Beira who gave me money for a shipping ticket to Durban. I arrived in Durban during February, 1965. I found a temporary job as cable fitter in Durban on the railways. This job lasted about one month. I then took another job with Fraser & Chalmers in Manzini, Zululand as a structural fitter. I was with them for three months when I had an argument with another Greek who insulted me. We came to grips. Later on he came to my room with a knife and he cut me all up. I did not know he had a knife. I am showing a scar on my right forearm, and hand. I had to undergo an operation. I did not wish to return to the job after what had happened. After I was operated I want to stay in Durban Men's Home for a couple of months during which time I underwent medical treatment for my injured right arm. While I was still living at the Durban Men's Home I was trying to obtain a lift to Cape Town. I managed to get a lift with a director of a cardboard factory in Cape Town in a Ford Sedan car. I got a lift with this man as far as Port Elizabeth.

⁶⁵⁵ Tsafendas almost certainly meant here the Hume Pipe Company.

26.

From Port Elizabeth I bought a train ticket Cape Town. I arrived in Cape Town during September or October, 1965. When I arrived in Cape Town I went to stay at 1 San Sauci Street, Belville with the family of a girl who was staying there and who had written to me previously to say that she wanted to marry me. Her name was Helen Daniels, a Coloured woman. She belong to the same church as me, i.e. "The Christian Church." I did not, want to get married. This war her idea. I stayed there for almost two months while I was searching for a job. I found work at the Table Bay Power Station. When I found work I paid the Daniels family for my hoard and lodging.

27.

After I left the Daniels family I found a room at a boarding house in front of the traffic department in Green Point. I worked at Table Bay Power Station for a couple of months - two or three months, when I was discharged. I was out of work for several months and lived on my wits and my savings, until I round a job on the Marine Diamond Corporation Barge Colpantoon. I had to take care of 25 machines and pumps and found, the job too strenuous on account of my health, so I resigned after two months. I came back with my savings to have an ear, nose and throat operation at Grootte Schuur Hospital. I was operated there.

28.

After the operation, I stayed at Milton House, Milton Road, Observatory, for about two to three months. When I left Milton House to stay at 5 Wrench Road, Observatory with a Mrs. Vos.

29.

Mrs. Vos wanted a friend of hers to stay with her so she gave me notice. She found a place for me to stay at 48 Devon Street, Woodstock.

30.

After I was discharged from Table Bay Power station, while I was unemployed, I stayed at 9 Westminster Street, Lansdowne with one named Pat Ryan, a Coloured family. I stayed there for about a month or two but I wasn't paying board and lodging. I shared a room, with his children. I also stayed at 10 Walnut Street, Lansdowne for about one week to 10 days.

31.

At the time of my arrest I was staying Eldor Apartments, Rustenburg Road, Rondebosch. At this stage I feel tired and request that I be given a rest. I will continue this statement tomorrow.

(Time 11.45 pm on 11/9/66.) Accused's request complied with.

32.

I now wish to state something which I had forgotten to tell you last night. In 1927 when I came from Egypt my stepmother began to corrupt me because I was the Heir to my father's property. She got her brother to rape me when I was a child to try and destroy my manly qualities. Her brother forced me into a room and committed an unnatural deed with me. I got very scared, I was a child. This is what I had not stated before.

33.

I am politically inclined but do not belong to any political party. I like to read what goes on. I like to read foreign papers and I am generally internationally minded.

34.

I cannot say that I agree with world politics, but I was always in favour of the politics of the western world. I am a liberal but I would not describe myself as a leftist. I did say previously that I was a leftist but I had to say something.

35.

In England I did not associate much with other people because I was in hospital most of the time. In America I was on ships most of the time. While I was staying in England I did attend some political meetings. I attended meetings of the Committee of African Organisations and I attended meetings at Caxton Hall. I also attended political meetings Hyde Park in London. They were anti-colonial meetings, anti-apartheid meetings and anti-racial meetings. It's a long time ago and I cannot remember the names of all the speakers I remember speeches by Barbara Castle, Fenner Brockway and Callaghan. I used to like to attend these meetings and be present at the meetings to contribute to their way of thinking.

I did take part in a protest and propaganda meeting at Trafalgar Square. It was anti-colonial protests. I was holding the posters up but I did not speak at those meetings. I was never approached to become a member of the Communist Party. I was anti-colonial, against slavery and in favour of all colonies which were controlled by Belgium, France and Portugal to be afforded self-government. I was against apartheid because it separated the people of different races and brought a big barrier amongst them which is difficult to describe. It brought wrong ideas among the people causing the different races to hate one another. It caused misunderstanding and suspicion amongst the different races, and made them afraid to talk to each other. People in buses did not know where to sit. South Africa is a nation of minorities of Europeans, Africans, Coloureds and Indians, I mean that South Africa consists of various races. All the apartheid laws made things confusing amongst the different races. I refer especially to the laws applying to mixed marriage because people are unable to marry whom they want to marry according to their economic means. That is what I term oppression. If there was freedom there would be no restrictions and there would be evolution so that eventually there would be only one race. That is what I mean by evolution.

36.

I was in sympathy with the people fighting racialism hence the reason for attending the meetings mentioned above. Whilst attending these meetings it never struck me that by killing the Prime Minister of the Republic of South Africa the apartheid laws could be changed.

It is true that I mixed with South African people in London, some of whom were leftists. In private conversations with some of these people it was said that the South African Prime Minister deserves to be shot, I cannot remember by whom this statement was made because it was merely during private conversation that this statement was made. This sort of statement was made more than once by different people. I cannot remember any particular person having made such a statement. It was just casual talk. These were isolated statements by people happened to come across by chance. To say that this was the main thought amongst leftists, is a bit exaggerated. I must have made a mistake by telling General van den Bergh this.

I used to agree with the idea that the Prime Minister deserves to be shot. I sometimes agreed with them. Sometimes we used to discuss that Dr. Verwoerd was lucky he did not die the first time he was shot. There was no decision made that he should in fact be killed – I mean I did not decide on anything at that time. I never took upon me the task of killing the Prime Minister nor did I tell anyone that I would kill the Prime Minister. I did believe that with the disappearance of the South African Prime Minister a change of policy would take place. I did set myself the task of destroying the Prime Minister. It was my own idea to kill him. No one offer me any reward for doing so. I did not care about the consequences for what would happen to me afterwards. I was so disgusted with the racial policy that I went through with my plans to kill the Prime Minister.

Nowhere in the world where I have travelled did anyone ever tell me to kill Dr. Verwoerd. In Western countries people know very little about the South African policies.

At this stage the deponent was again warned about the seriousness of the charge against him. It was explained to him that he faces a charge of murder and that there is a danger of him being hanged for a deed which he is alleged to have committed as the result of the incitement of another. Deponent replies that no one incited him to commit the murder. Apart from what I have read in papers and on account of inflationary conditions no one has ever incited me to murder the Prime Minister.

A contributory cause was also my dissatisfaction about the existent racial laws in South Africa. I say this because it caused me a lot of frustration as I was unable to mix with the class (financial) to which I belong. I was classed as a white person and I wanted to marry a Coloured woman named Helen Daniels. I went to the Department of Interior and complained to a Mr. Rossouw that I wished to be classified as a Coloured person. I had an European identity card which I gave to Mr. Rossouw same time last year when I applied for re-classification. I could not get myself an European wife therefore I wanted a blank identity card which was given to me but later taken back by Mr. Rossouw. I visited Mr. Rossouw's office frequently and then he always wanted to know where I was staying and whether the people I was staying with were White or Coloured. This was one of the main reasons for making me upset.

37.

The Coloured woman referred to above wrote to me and sent me her photograph while I was in Durban. She got my address through some people of my church in Benoni where she was on holiday. These people are named Tillik, a Coloured family. They live in Benoni or Brakpan.

38.

It is no true that I returned to South Africa from England with the purpose of working my way to South Africa to kill the Prime Minister.

39.

It is true that I went to Rhodesia after my arrival in South Africa to visit my sister. I did this because I have not seen her for a long time. I did not go there to say good-bye because I thought I would never see her again. At that time I did not think about the serious mission which I would not survive. It was only after I came back to Gape Town that I decided to murder the Prime Minister.

40.

Because I was out of work I went to the Labour Department to look for work. At the labour department I learned that casual labourers would be required at the House of Assembly. I went to the House of Assembly three times to look for work. I contacted Mr. Wiese at the main entrance, who directed me to Mr. Burger and Mr. Wiehand in the basement.

I went there two or three times, but there was no work. I completed certain application forms and produced my identity card, residence papers and whatever was necessary. The second last time I was told to come at the beginning of August. I went there at the beginning of August and spoke to either Mr. Burger or Mr. Wiehand who signed me on. I started work as messenger the same day.

41.

Some days after I started working in the House of Assembly, all kinds of thoughts came to my mind about murdering the Prime Minister. I saw an opportunity of shooting the Prime Minister from the lobby. I thought of obtaining a firearm. I knew that I had to obtain a licence for a firearm. Obtaining a licence would take too long. This I found out at one of the shops where I enquired about purchasing a firearm in Durban. I thought of going to a ship, the Eleni, which I knew was in Cape Town for repairs. I was acquainted with the crew members of the Eleni. While I was unemployed I used to take the crew members to Mike's shop in Main Road, Woodstock where I get commission on goods sold to the crew members. I also got free meals from the ship. I had an idea that I might be able to buy a firearm on the ship because some sailors carry firearms. I went to this ship about three to four weeks before the assassination of the Prime Minister. I saw the man in the engine room (the donkey man), who told me that the 'bosun' foreman of the crew may know where I could obtain a firearm. He said he could get me a "Beretta" revolver and a knife. I also enquired from him about a springleaf knife, which he said he could get for me. He said he wanted 80 dollars for the two items. I told him I wanted the revolver and the knife for self-defence, he said he wanted the money in American dollars. He did not show me a revolver or a knife. I said I would return in a couple of days with the money. I waited until the end of August when I got my pay. It was, I think, R95.00. I went to Barclays Bank, Adderley Street, Cape Town and enquired to buy 80 American dollars. I was told that it would cost R56. The lady teller wanted my passport.

The next day I brought my passport and she gave me the 80 dollars. I took a taxi and went to the ship. There I saw the "bosun" and told him that I have brought the money for the gun and the knife as arranged. He said he did not have the gun, but the galley boy had a small gun which he would try and get for me. The 'bosun' went to the galley boy and brought a small gun which he said I could have for 30 dollars.

I thought it was a small calibre pistol and I decided to buy it. I took it without examining it. They had no bullets. I thought I could buy bullets from local stores. I took the pistol home where I examined it and discovered that it was a gas revolver. On Saturday the 3rd of September, I took the gas pistol back to the ship. I found the 'bosun' with the intention to return the firearm to him. Both the 'bosun' and the galley boy told me that they had spent the money. I wanted another firearm or the return of my money but ended up getting nothing. I went to the captain to protest, but as I saw I could get nothing and did not want to cause a scandal I gave up and left. I returned to my room in Rondebosch.

42.

The next thing is that I decided to use a knife to stab the Prime Minister in the House of Assembly. I never discussed my plans with anybody. The shops were closed over the weekend and the following Monday was a public holiday. At about 9 a.m. on Tuesday, 6/9/66, I went to town to buy the knives. I bought one knife from the first shop which was open. This shop is known as City Guns. Then I went to another shop further down the road and bought another knife. Both shops were closed when I arrived. I walked up and down the pavement waiting for the shops to open. I enquired at a certain shop as to when the sports shop would open. I cannot remember whether I spoke to a man or a woman.

I started work at 7.49 a.m. on 6/9/66. I arrived at the House of Assembly at 6.45 a.m. on 6/9/66. I went to work early in order to do my work and then to go out to buy the knives. I did not ask for permission to go to the town to buy the knives. I entered City Guns first and purchased a dagger. I paid R.3.30 for this dagger. I then went to the other shop where I bought another dagger - the one with the aluminium handle. It was more like a stiletto. I bought two weapons in order to make certain of the job which I had in mind, I thought something might go wrong and that one weapon might be taken away from me. Both weapons were wrapped up in brown paper. After I bought the weapons I returned to the House of Assembly where I removed the paper wrappings from the weapons and left the paper wrappings in my locker. I also left the two daggers in my locker. I started working that morning wearing a khaki overall. When I went to the shops to buy the weapons I changed into a grey suit. When I came back I changed into my navy-blue messenger's uniform, then I changed into my uniform. I had a waistbelt underneath my uniform pant, to which two sheaths were attached. I left the two knives in the locker. I then went to the first floor to serve coffee and tea. I waited for the lights to go on indicating which offices were calling for tea and coffee. I was there until about 2 p.m. that afternoon.

43.

A few minutes before the Assembly bells began to ring for the starting of the session, I went to my locker to fetch the knives. I put them into the sheaths inside my pants and went into the Assembly lobby to wait for the Prime Minister's arrival. I had previously planned to stab the Prime Minister in the Assembly hall whilst walking to his bench. I watched him walk past and followed him into the Assembly hall. I tried to pull the dagger from the sheath but had difficulty in pulling it out. Eventually I managed to pull it out, but by that time the Prime Minister had already sat down in his bench. I was very nervous and confused that I cannot remember where I stabbed him the first blow, but I aimed at his chest. I remember stabbing him twice and then the people caught hold of me. They beat me up, kicked me and dragged me into lobby. I was disarmed and arrested.

44.

I deny that I am a Communist. I am a Christian and I believe in the Bible. I did not think I would get away after murdering the Prime Minister. I did not care what happened to me.

45.

The meeting between Dr. Verwoerd and Chief Leabua Jonathan was a contributory fact in my decision to murder Dr. Verwoerd. I say this because I thought the Prime Minister was dealing with the wrong person. Both Dr. Verwoerd and Jonathan were, to my mind, not the real representatives of their countries. I wanted the Paramount Chief of Basutoland to represent the Basuto notion. I wanted to see a government representing all the South African People. I do not think the nationalist Government is representative of the people and I wanted to see a different government.

46.

I have a savings account at Barclays Bank, Adderley Street, Cape Town. It contains only a few rand. I deny that I ever received an amount of R5,000 from Pretoria while I was in Mozambique. I did receive about £10 to £15 from my brother for furniture he sold for me. I received no financial support from anyone.

(SGD.) Demetrio Tsafendas

Witness: (SGD.) D.J.V. Troost 23505 D/Sgt.

ANALYSIS OF TSAFENDAS'S STATEMENT

Before we discuss the content of Tsafendas's statement, it is important to consider something that Tsafendas told Major Rossouw which has not been placed on record. The following is an extract from Rossouw's testimony to the Commission of Enquiry:

COMMISSION: What was your impression, how does he feel about his deed? Does he regret it, or is he indifferent about it or did he not show any obvious emotion about it?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: I shall answer you to the best of my ability. When I originally questioned him, I accused him of being a horrible murderer. To which he answered: "That is what you think, but the world thinks differently!"

Major Rossouw then testified that at a later stage, when he asked Tsafendas again, Tsafendas told him that "he did feel remorse and that he was very sorry about what he had done." Rossouw also told the Commission that Tsafendas "told the truth – I never got the impression that he tried to evade any question. He answered all the questions spontaneously" and he was "totally prepared to answer everything."⁶⁵⁶

We are not in position to know why Tsafendas's remark that "the world thinks differently" was not written down. What is most likely is that the exchange took place on another occasion, possibly when Rossouw spoke to Tsafendas for the first time, soon after the assassination. What is important is that at that point of time at least, Tsafendas not only had no regrets for killing Dr. Verwoerd but believed that the assassination was applauded by people around the world. He appears to be happy and proud of what he had done.

⁶⁵⁶ Major Rossouw testimony to the Commission of Enquiry, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

It is also very important that we have Major Rossouw's testimony that Tsafendas was "totally prepared to answer everything," that he did not try "to evade any question" and answered "all the questions spontaneously." This statement could have been very important for the State vs. Tsafendas, but it was ignored. As we will see, the psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas claimed that he was unable to function on a reasonable level, unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes, that he was talking in a disjointed manner and suffered from thought blocking. Major Rossouw, not a psychiatrist but a very experienced interrogator, failed to notice any of these symptoms, not only during this two-day interrogation but throughout the whole time that Tsafendas was in custody and interrogated by him.

Looking at the September 11/12 statement now, we see that Tsafendas refers to something he said previously to General van den Bergh, and presumably this was in the statement that went missing, "I must have made a mistake by telling General van den Bergh this." Significantly, Tsafendas does not mention the tapeworm. He does not mention it in the next statement either, the one that was taken on September 19. On the contrary, Tsafendas gives clear political reasons for his actions. He states that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he was "disgusted with the racial policy." That he considered Dr. Verwoerd, to be a dictator is an opinion he expressed to many witnesses. In this instance, he does not use the word dictator but says he did not consider Dr. Verwoerd to be a real representative of his country, and he wanted "to see a government representing all the South African people." He said, "I do not think the nationalist Government is representative of the people and I wanted to see a different government." Dr. Verwoerd represented only the 13.8 per cent of South Africans who were White and eligible to vote, so Tsafendas was entirely correct. Even though Tsafendas did not employ the word "dictator" for Dr. Verwoerd, it is obvious that this is how he saw him.

Furthermore, Tsafendas said he believed that by killing Dr. Verwoerd, "a change of policy would take place." It is clear that Tsafendas assassinated Dr. Verwoerd for political reasons, hoping that a change would come once the architect of apartheid "disappeared." Advocate George Bizos told the author that the reason Tsafendas gave for his motive in killing Verwoerd was "the definition of a political act." Tsafendas's belief that a change would take place afterwards was not far-fetched, and perfectly fitted with his belief that Dr.

Verwoerd was “the brains behind apartheid.” History has shown that many countries or empires have collapsed soon after the death of an instrumental, powerful, charismatic and influential leader, like Dr. Verwoerd; for example, Yugoslavia after Tito, or Alexander the Great’s empire.

Tsafendas characterises his ideology as political, describing himself as against apartheid, slavery and colonialism and “in favour of all colonies controlled by Belgium, France and Portugal being afforded self-government.” He talked freely about his political past in England, where he participated in political meetings, anti-apartheid gatherings and protests, and where he held up placards, all confirmed by witnesses.⁶⁵⁷ Stating that apartheid “oppresses” people and there is no freedom under Dr. Verwoerd is another way of calling him a tyrant, the word Tsafendas had used to more than thirty witnesses.⁶⁵⁸

At one point, Tsafendas denies that he is a leftist (“I did say previously that I was a leftist but I had to say something”⁶⁵⁹) or a Communist (“I deny that I am a Communist”⁶⁶⁰). However, at the beginning of his statement he said he was a member of the South African Communist Party in the late 1930s and 1940s, while many people who knew him told the police that Tsafendas was a Communist, even a dangerous Communist.⁶⁶¹ As we will see later in this chapter, in 1965 Tsafendas was described and reported to the South African Police as “the largest Communist in the Republic of South Africa.”⁶⁶² That Tsafendas was a Communist, was evident even to people who had just met him, as in the case of Father ⁶⁵⁷ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁶⁵⁸ For example: Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 May 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016 and many others.

⁶⁵⁹ See Tsafendas’s statement, paragraph 34.

⁶⁶⁰ See Tsafendas’s statement, paragraph 44.

⁶⁶¹ For example: Johannes Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Christoffel Van Vuuren statement to the police, 14 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Robert Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁶⁶² See J.J. Botha’s statement on October 3, 1966; Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Probst.⁶⁶³ Several witnesses told the author that Tsafendas considered himself a Communist and that he was “preaching” Communism.⁶⁶⁴ He had even joined the DSE, the military wing of the Greek Communist Party which he had joined during the Greek Civil War.⁶⁶⁵ Since Tsafendas himself initially admitted his belief to General van den Bergh, the question is, why did he deny it here?

According to Father Minas, Tsafendas said that the Greek-South African policeman at Caledon Square police station tried to become friendly with him and give him “advice.” Tsafendas told the priest that he believed the policeman had been instructed by General van den Bergh to become friendly with him and to play the “good cop” in a “good cop/bad-cop”⁶⁶⁶ scenario in order to find out more about him. Tsafendas characterised the policeman as “pathetic” and as “van den Bergh’s lackey.” Tsafendas was not even sure if he was Greek, as his name did not sound Greek, and he could not communicate in Greek, although he could speak some Greek. Tsafendas did not give more details about this policeman.⁶⁶⁷ Michalis Michelis met him in the mid-1980s and said that by then he had retired from the police force. He appeared to be in his mid to late sixties, thus in his mid to late forties when he knew Tsafendas.⁶⁶⁸

One piece of advice the Greek-South African policeman gave to Tsafendas was to stop saying he was a Communist and Dr. Verwoerd was a dictator because it irritated the ⁶⁶³ Father Hanno Probst statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁶⁶⁴ For example: Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 May 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016 and many others.

⁶⁶⁵ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

⁶⁶⁶ This was also common practice by the apartheid police (Maxwell Owusu, “Zan Boko: Mapantsula”. City & Society, Vol. 6, No. 2, (December 1992), p. 180; David Schalkwyk, “Chronotopes of the Self in the Writings of Women Political Prisoners in South Africa.” In Nahem Yousaf (ed.), Apartheid Narratives, (Leiden: Brill, 2001), p. 19; Alan Wieder, Ruth First and Joe Slovo in the War Against Apartheid, (New York: Monthly Review Press, 2013), p. 139; Jeremy Wilson, ‘Arsenal’s Chief Executive Ivan Gazidis: Nelson Mandela, Dad and the Fight Against Apartheid’, The Telegraph, 13 December 2013. Retrieved from: <https://www.telegraph.co.uk/sport/football/teams/arsenal/10517295/Arsenals-chief-executive-Ivan-Gazidis-Nelson-Mandela-Dad-and-the-fight-against-apartheid.html>).

⁶⁶⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁶⁶⁸ Michalis Michelis in a personal interview, 12 December 2015.

police and made things worse for himself.”⁶⁶⁹ Tsafendas did not tell Father Minas or anyone else that this policeman was the reason he denied being a Communist or that he had indeed denied being a Communist during interrogation. What he said was that he was “advised” by this man to stop proclaiming his allegiance, so perhaps considered it advantageous to do so at the time. As we will see later, Tsafendas stated frankly in 1976 that he was a Communist then. He would also tell Father Minas Constandinou and Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in the 1990s that he was a Communist and would die a Communist.⁶⁷⁰ We can only assume that Tsafendas denied being a Communist to ease the torture. He had done the same in Portugal in 1952 when he was tortured by the Portuguese, pleading that he was not a Communist anymore. Then in 1963, in order to convince the authorities to give him amnesty and allow him back into Mozambique, he assured them that he was not a Communist and his anti-colonial ideas belonged to the past.

Tsafendas claimed in his police statement that his step-mother asked her brother to rape him when he was nine. In 1946, in Grafton State Hospital, he spoke extensively about his sexual life and past sexual “traumas,” all of which he invented, but he did not mention a rape and instead claimed that his step-mother wanted to have sex with him. Tsafendas brought the rape story up with Dr. Cooper when he examined him for the defence at the summary trial. The author is not in position to know if such a rape occurred. What is almost impossible to believe is that his step-mother asked her brother to do such a thing and that Tsafendas really believed it happened. He spoke negatively about his relationship with his step-mother to two psychiatrists, but never to anyone else. On the contrary, he often described how loving she was and how she treated him as her own child. Tsafendas talked at length about his life and childhood to Fathers Minas, Ioannis and Spiros and invariably praised Marika, calling her mother and not stepmother. Several witnesses, including some who knew Tsafendas since he was a child, declared it impossible that Tsafendas would ever have believed Marika could have done such thing. Even if there had been a rape, he could never have believed Marika was the instigator. In addition, several witnesses told the author that at the time of the alleged rape, there was no uncle in Mozambique.⁶⁷¹

⁶⁶⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁶⁷⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

⁶⁷¹ For example: Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017, and several others.

Later in life, Tsafendas said two claims were necessary to make an “insane act” look real and convince someone you are mad:

- a. To have a family history of insanity and
- b. To have a childhood trauma.

The above seems to explain why Tsafendas said negative things about his step-mother to the psychiatrists, but not to anyone else or to the police, since at the time, he was not trying to prove he was insane. On the contrary, his statements do not show any sign of schizophrenia. It is very possible that Tsafendas made the rape claim to the police because he knew he might need to pretend madness to avoid torture or worse as a consequence of killing Dr. Verwoerd. If a mad act became necessary, having a childhood trauma in his past would add authenticity. The fact that he had talked about childhood traumas at the Grafton State Hospital back in 1946, without mentioning the rape, but by making up another absurd claim, would further strengthen his claim. However, the author has not been able to establish for a fact why Tsafendas made a claim of rape or whether such an incident ever occurred.

Could Tsafendas’s statement to Major Rossouw have been as a result of torture and intimidation? Certainly not for two reasons:

- What Tsafendas said about his political ideas, for example being anti-apartheid and anti-colonialist, is something he told several witnesses. They were his own, undisguised beliefs and no force was needed to make him say these things. Although Tsafendas is quite mild in describing Dr. Verwoerd and does not employ his usual denunciation of him as a dictator and a tyrant, he gets close by declaring that he is not the real presentative of all South African people. Tsafendas’s participation in anti-apartheid activities and demonstrations in London was confirmed to the police by Edward Furness’s statement.⁶⁷² Tsafendas said in his statement that he hoped a change of policy would take place after the death of Dr. Verwoerd, exactly what he told witnesses several years later.
- Assuming Tsafendas had been forced to make this statement, what was its purpose? It was not used during his summary trial or by the Commission of Enquiry and it was not publicised at the time, nor even later. Why would the police force Tsafendas to make such a statement when it was not going to be used anywhere and no one was going to see it?

Perhaps the best indication that the statement represented Tsafendas’s true feelings is that the ideas he set out were the same, cherished beliefs he had reiterated many times to numerous witnesses. If they were couched in milder terms, that would be natural, considering his circumstances at the time.

⁶⁷² Edward Furness statement to the police 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

With reference to Tsafendas's statement about the psychiatrists' testimony at the summary trial, Professor Tuviah Zabow, a forensic psychiatrist, commented as follows:

"I have read the information with interest particularly the collateral background provided. Much of this was not available at time of psychiatric assessments or in the Court. Of interest is the Tsafendas statement which was done early on the investigation and much of the information he must have been able to provide or a least agreed upon if coerced to sign. If he was psychotic and unable to marshal his thoughts, this would not have been possible. This is significant in relation to the expert testimonies which are so central to the discussion that all these were provided without background factual information at than stage."⁶⁷³

Neither Reyner van Zyl, the clinical psychologist who examined Tsafendas for the defence during the summary trial, nor Professors Alban Burke and Tuviah Zabow saw any signs of schizophrenia in the statement, nor any of the symptoms described by the psychiatrists in the court.⁶⁷⁴ Tsafendas's statement was not given to his defence team and maybe not to the State either. Van Zyl stated that "those sentiments expressed in the statement that he made to the police weren't ever mentioned to any of the psychiatrists." Van Zyl believes the statement should have been given to all of those who examined Tsafendas.⁶⁷⁵

Professor Alban Burke told the author about Tsafendas's statement:

"If he had been psychotic at the time that he was committing the murder, he would have been psychotic at the time of his arrest, because it doesn't disappear like that, so you would have picked up traces of that already in his statement. His statement would not have made sense; you would have had a lot of irrelevant detail in there, so it is, again, not the picture of somebody who committed a crime whilst he was under, or in, a state of psychosis."⁶⁷⁶

Advocate George Bizos considers that Tsafendas's whole statement shows he was "a politically minded person and activist who opposed apartheid and colonialism. He clearly killed Verwoerd with the hope that apartheid would collapse without him."⁶⁷⁷ Professor John ⁶⁷³ Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 3 September 2016.

⁶⁷⁴ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016; Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016;

⁶⁷⁵ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

⁶⁷⁶ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

⁶⁷⁷ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017.

Dugard told the author that “the statement completely confirms the view that Tsafendas was not insane. It reads like a very normal story of a politically informed person, angry with apartheid and Dr. Verwoerd, determined to make a change with nothing to lose personally - really an incredible statement which was carefully concealed.”⁶⁷⁸ Denis Goldberg told the author that Tsafendas’s statement “clearly shows that he was politically motivated [for killing Verwoerd] and not insane ... the man is determined to kill the Prime Minister because of the racism... [Tsafendas] has a clear political opinion about racism.”⁶⁷⁹

STATEMENTS

CONRAD OELEFSEN⁶⁸⁰

White male, Durban, 5.18 pm.

I know Demetrio Tsafendas by sight. During 1963, about June, I met this man in Kitwe. He borrowed a lorry-jack from me one day. I often saw this chap afterwards. He was always with a few Bantu in a five-ton truck. I do not know whether he was the owner of the truck. He was carting fish — Luapala river to the Buchu compound in Kitwe, where it was sold. I saw this man for a period of about five months in Kitwe. I did not converse with this man at any time. During that period I did not know his name. I recognised him from a photo in the Sunday Tribune of September 11, 1966. I know nothing else about this man.

COMMENTS ON OELEFSEN’S STATEMENT

The report of the Commission of Enquiry states that “Tsafendas denies that he ever visited that country, and says that he did not leave Portugal until August or September, 1963.”⁶⁸¹

⁶⁷⁸ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

⁶⁷⁹ Denis Goldberg in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

⁶⁸⁰ Conrad Oelefsen statement to the police, 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van vorm Z 204. NASA.

⁶⁸¹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph. 41.

RUI FORJAZ⁶⁸²

Beira, in a Memo to: Mr M.R. Hall.

I presume you know by now that Dimitris Tsafendas, the assassin of Dr. Verwoerd, worked on the Beira/Feruka oil pipeline for a very short time, the Police came and took him away. When he was freed, he called on us to claim a few days' wages with overtime Mr Ballard authorized me to pay him the amount of 1.644#40 as per copy of Debit Note no. 142 attached. This Debit Note is signed by him. I thought this information might be of interest to you.

Yours Faithfully

Rui Forjaz

PRESS REPORTS OF THE DAY

The Johannesburg Sunday Times published that day a strikingly inaccurate portrait of Tsafendas by several anonymous "leading psychiatrists and psychologists," presenting him as "the classic picture of an incipient or an actual paranoid schizophrenic." Basing their diagnosis on scraps of information emerging in the first four days since the assassination, they pegged him as feckless, rootless, lacking in motivation and suffering from an inferiority complex. Contradicting evidence that Tsafendas was reared in a loving family environment, they declared that he was rejected by his family and spent his early years in an atmosphere of hostility. From this, they said, could have developed a fear and distrust of the outside world. This was a travesty of the truth, which, as testified by several people who knew him well, was that Tsafendas was gregarious, talkative and open to people. The psychiatrists concluded that Tsafendas did not get married because it was usual for "paranoiac-schizophrenic" people to see others as "threats," and women in particular could be seen in this light.⁶⁸³

The experts were presumably unaware of Tsafendas's association with Helen Daniels, and, as we will soon see, his interest in marrying Sybie Barendilia or Stella. The medics also referred to Tsafendas allegedly being called “Blackie” at school, something reported by Sakellaridis, the racist Greek editor and supporter of Dr. Verwoerd who had never met Tsafendas and heard it by someone who do not even know if he really knew Tsafendas, which turned out to be a lie.⁶⁸⁴ We will not examine every, invariably mistaken, deduction carried in this ludicrous report, but it is hardly surprising that the “leading psychiatrists and psychologists” mentioned remained unnamed.

⁶⁸² Rui Forjaz in a Memo to Mr. M.R. Hall, 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁶⁸³ Margaret Smith, 'Classic Picture of A Psychotic', Sunday Times (Johannesburg), 11 September 1966: 1.

On the same page, however, the same newspaper carried a markedly different story, in which Tsafendas was described as “a man who loved South Africa and seemed to worry about what he believed to be social injustices.” In addition, under the headline “Assassin – Man With A Chip On His Shoulder,” the paper’s Durban correspondent wrote that Tsafendas had impressed the police in that city as being deeply concerned about South Africa’s Immorality Law. The story said he frequently visited Durban’s North Beach restaurants. Tsafendas was well liked by Mr. Willemse, once his landlord, who described him as a “sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man.” On the other hand, workers at the Mandini, Zululand factory described Tsafendas as a “violent sort of person” on account of his fight with Nikolas Vergos. A fellow interpreter at Durban court described him as a “whiner” who often complained about the working conditions and his lack of money.⁶⁸⁵

The Sunday Tribune of Durban reported what it called an “amazing blunder” concerning Tsafendas’s status. It said he was declared a prohibited immigrant in 1950 and his name was still on the Stop List for visas. Yet this year he was granted permanent residence. The paper said attempts to confirm this with government departments drew a complete blank.⁶⁸⁶

⁶⁸⁴ Smith, ‘Classic Picture of A Psychotic’, Sunday Times (Johannesburg), 11 September 1966: 1.

⁶⁸⁵ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), ‘Assassin - Man With A Chip On His Shoulder’, 11 September 1966: 1, 8.

⁶⁸⁶ Sunday Tribune, ‘Tsafendas-Amazing Blunder is Disclosed’, 11 September 1966: 2.

MONDAY, 12 SEPTEMBER 1966

LT. COL. VAN WYK ARRIVES IN MOZAMBIQUE

On this day, Lt. Col. P.J.P. van Wyk of the South African Police arrived in Lourenço Marques to investigate Tsafendas's past and to interview anyone who knew him or might have useful information about him. His local assistant was sub-Inspector A. Vaz of the Portuguese police, who explained to van Wyk the strict instructions he had received from his headquarters in Lisbon. These were that he should help with the investigation where possible but that he must not become so deeply involved that other organisations might learn of it with possible negative repercussions for his government. Vaz briefed van Wyk about Tsafendas's arrest and release at Beira during 1964-65 and undertook to send a copy of the file to General van den Bergh. Captain Rui Tavora, the Police District Commander in Beira, also gave assistance to van Wyk. This officer circulated an official request for anyone knowing Tsafendas to come forward for interview; he provided a room where such interviews could take place.⁶⁸⁷ As we will see, a copy of the Beira arrest file was duly dispatched to General van den Bergh. However, as instructed by sub-Inspector Vaz's superiors in Lisbon, "all information indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of Mozambique" was left out.

STATEMENTS

BRENDA JESSIE NICHOLSON⁶⁸⁸

Teller at the Adderley Street Branch of the Barclays Bank, Cape Town.

She recognized Tsafendas as the "customer who had shortly previous been to the bank to my counter. I could not place the transaction but have since checked my records. I now remember that this man had been to the bank to purchase some American Dollars. I remember having asked him why he wanted the dollars. He said he was going to Mozambique. I asked him to bring me his passport. According to my sheets I have on ⁶⁸⁷ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁶⁸⁸ Brenda Jessie Nicholson statement to the police, 12 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

1.9.1966 sold 80 American Dollars for R57.78. I am sure that this deal was made with the accused. I also remember that the money he gave me was very dirty, I think all R2-notes.

Statement taken by D/Sergt. D.J.V. Troost.

PRESS REPORTS OF THE DAY

The biggest story of the day, in the Pretoria News, said rumours that Tsafendas had hanged himself in his cell “spread today like wildfire.” A police spokesman dismissed the report with a laconic, “We know nothing about it.”⁶⁸⁹ Most South African newspapers, with Dr. Verwoerd’s funeral over, refocussed on Tsafendas, describing him as a “drifter and an outcast”⁶⁹⁰ and listing his deportations from Britain and America.⁶⁹¹ A front page story in The Cape Times, headed “Tsafendas in turmoil all his life,” presented a lengthy and largely accurate account of Tsafendas’s life, stressing that though he was deported from Britain, the United States and Mozambique and had been treated for mental illness, he still managed to gain employment in South Africa’s Houses of Parliament.⁶⁹²

The Daily Dispatch quoted a spokesman for the British Home Office as saying Tsafendas was given permission to stay in Britain for three months but at the end of that period he appeared to have no money and was required to leave. He did not leave voluntarily and a deportation order was enforced on December 3, 1959. US Immigration Service records showed that Tsafendas was deported from the United States three times.⁶⁹³ The Toronto Globe and Mail quoted US officials in Washington as saying that Tsafendas entered the United States by crossing the Canadian border at St. Stephen, New Brunswick.⁶⁹⁴

⁶⁸⁹ Pretoria News, ‘Suicide of Tsafendas Rumoured’, 12 September 1966: 1.

⁶⁹⁰ The Cape Times, ‘Tsafendas in Turmoil All His Life’, 12 September 1966: 1.

⁶⁹¹ Daily Dispatch, ‘Tsafendas was Deported from Britain and America’, 12 September 1966: 2; The Globe and Mail, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Slayer Entered USA from Canada’, 12 September 1966: 2; The Rhodesia Herald, ‘Britain Deported Tsafendas’, 12 September 1966: 1.

⁶⁹² The Cape Times, ‘Tsafendas in Turmoil All His Life’, 12 September 1966: 1.

⁶⁹³ Daily Dispatch, ‘Tsafendas was Deported from Britain and America’, 12 September 1966: 2.

⁶⁹⁴ The Globe and Mail, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Slayer Entered USA from Canada’, 12 September 1966: 2.

VORSTER: “NO FILE ON TSAFENDAS”

The most important announcement came from John Vorster on his last day as Minister of Justice, Prisons and Police, and the day before he became Prime Minister. Vorster declared that the South African Security Police had no file on Tsafendas. The previous day, Die Beeld had claimed that the Security Police had a file on Tsafendas. Vorster denounced the report as “devoid of all truth.” He said many published reports were unduly sensational and some were totally untrue. He promised that a complete statement would be made when the time arrived. “The whole matter is still being investigated continuously and after the trial it will, as is proper, be disclosed to the public.”⁶⁹⁵

As it turned out, Vorster was “misinformed” and the report was entirely correct since the Security Police did in fact hold a file on Tsafendas. Indeed, three further files on Tsafendas had been created by the Security Police, but only one could be found in September 1966. According to the report of the Commission of Enquiry into Dr. Verwoerd’s death:

*“Tsafendas’s name was in fact on the so-called “stop list”, and the Security Police had had a copy of the list since 1964. However, General van den Bergh was not aware of this when he made his statement to the Prime Minister, and in any case the denial did not refer to this list.”*⁶⁹⁶

Unknown to Die Beeld when the report was printed, and unknown to General van den Bergh when the denial was made, was the fact that there was an old Police file, W.D. 10/10/4102, on Demetrios Tsafandakis. It was not until 13th September, 1966, that this file was traced by the Security Police as a result of information found in the files of the Department of the Interior. It is true that the file was found in a building which is now being used by the Security Police, but it was explained to the Commission that the room in which it was found is actually used to store so-called “dead files” of the Divisional Commissioner of the Witwatersrand.

This file contained, inter alia, the letters dated 13th October, 1941, and 20th October, 1941, quoted in paragraph 25 of Chapter II A of this report. It also appears from these letters that in 1941 the Commissioner of Police in Pretoria had a file 6/1835/3697 (the correct reference is 6/835/3697) on Demetrios Tsafendakis.

⁶⁹⁵ Pretoria News, ‘Vorster: Police Had No File On Tsafendas’, 12 September 1966: 11.

⁶⁹⁶ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter XI, Paragraph 4

The Security Police Branch was established in 1947, and in 1950 files which were of importance to the Security Police were transferred to them. This file was apparently not considered important, and was destroyed in 1963.

*... There were also two other files of the Witwatersrand Division, W.D. 10/3/305 (see paragraph 16 of Chapter II A) and W.D. 2/2078/366, but the former cannot be traced and the latter was destroyed in 1946.*⁶⁹⁷

Thus, according to the Commission, General van den Bergh was not aware of the existence of the file and inadvertently misinformed Vorster. Then the very next day the file was found, but Vorster did not make a new announcement to correct his mistake. Eventually the Commission discovered that there were FOUR files in total on Tsafendas and although two have been destroyed, the fourth had disappeared and no-one was able to locate it. What was in Tsafendas's missing file is something that the author is not in position to know, as the file is still missing.

The Commission's report, like most of the reports by similar Commissions at the time of apartheid, whitewashed the negligence of the Security Police and covered up for Vorster's apparent "mistake," attributing it to misinformation. This, of course, could have been true. However, the possibility that Vorster deliberately lied about the existence of the file in order to protect the Security Police, cannot be excluded. Vorster's waywardness with the truth had already been demonstrated in 1964 when he publicly denied that political prisoners were tortured despite widespread reports to the contrary. It will later be proven that Vorster had lied.⁶⁹⁸

⁶⁹⁷ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter XI, Paragraph 5.

⁶⁹⁸ TRC, TRC Report: Volume Two, p. 198.

TUESDAY, 13 SEPTEMBER 1966

CONFIDENTIAL SECURITY REPORT OF D/S/O/ GRIST OF THE SPECIAL BRANCH OF THE BRITISH SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE IN UMTALI⁶⁹⁹

I refer to report of even referenced dated 8th September, 1966, from P.S.B.O. Mashonaland in connection with the above.

The Katherine HARALAMBOS mentioned therein has been identified as being identical to Mrs. Katherine Cleo PNEUMA (nee TSAFANDAKIS, born Lourenço Marques 1928).

According to Mrs. PNEUMA her father was named MICHAEL TSAFANDAKIS and was a marine engineer carrying on business in Lourenço Marques. Mr. TSAFANDAKIS evidently died in Pretoria four years ago, but her mother, Maria Tsafandakis is still resident there. Mrs. TSAFANDAKIS commutes between two daughters and a son, all resident at various addresses in Pretoria but the only one that Mrs. PNEUMA remembers is that of her younger sister, Mrs. Helen VLACHOPOULOS, 39 Quagga Road, Proclamation Hill, Pretoria.

Catherine Cleo PNEUMA is married to a Greek National Gerald Stephen Peter PNEUMA (Bn. Greece, 15/8/13, ent. Umtali June 1921) who carries the business of General Dealer in Marandellas under the trading name of "Marandellas Trading Company."

Mrs. PNEUMA alleges that DIMITRIO TSAFENDAS is the illegitimate son of her father who was born some years prior to her father marrying her mother. Although DIMITRIO was much older than his step brother/sisters, he nevertheless spent school holidays with the family and to all intents and purposes it was understood by Mrs. PNEUMA and her brother and sisters that he was a member of the family... his complexion was such – as also his manner – that he passed as a European.

It was about this time -1937- that Mrs. PNEUMA states she saw DIMITRIO for the last time for many years, in fact it was some twenty-six years later than she saw him, this time in Pretoria. She was visiting his sisters and mother there where she learned that DIMITRIO had 'turned-up' and was hanging around sponging. He was then met by her at her sister's house and within a short time she could agree with the other members of the family that he was unbalanced, talking nonsense most of the time -to the extent that the young children of the family were laughing at him. He had scrounged money for ... (indecipherable). One of the most outstanding recalls Mrs. PNEUMA had of her half-brother at the time (1964) was that he talked on and on for hours about his travels in various parts of the world and also discussed the bible and Religious teaching. He was well dressed and gave a good appearance although as far as she could see he had no visible means of support.

⁶⁹⁹ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

The next time she saw this man was when he suddenly arrived unannounced in Marandellas. He made considerable inquiry in Marandellas to locate her and from what she says she was thoroughly embarrassed by the intimation that he was her brother and that she did eventually see him in the store, after a short while, she told him to go and that he did. She said that during the time she spoke to him, he was talking rubbish although she could not remember outright to what in fact he had actually said. When he left, he told her that he intended leaving for Portuguese East Africa via Umtali (this would appear the visit to the country that he made in July 1964 when he entered via Bulawayo). The next time she heard of him was during the Easter holiday 1965 which she and her husband spent in Beira, whilst there they learnt that he had been in Prison in Beira. The reason for his detention was not known. The next and last encounter with him occurred when his name and photograph appeared at the front of the Rhodesia Herald.

From other sources it is learnt that the foregoing are well known facts among the more senior and well established Greek families, both in Marandellas and in Salisbury. It is also reliably reported that the TSAFANDAKIS family hold a good reputation among the Greek community and there are suggestions that MICHAEL⁷⁰⁰ TSAFANDAKIS made a big mistake in attempting to raise his illegitimate son as a full member of his family.

At the time of the interview Mrs. PNEUMA was considerably upset and her opinion and facts might be slightly biased and inaccurate. She was unable to assist further with information as to Dimitrio's contacts and movements.

⁷⁰⁰ Michael is the English for the Spanish/Portuguese Miguel. Michalis in Greek.

COMMENTS OF PNEFMA TO THE AUTHOR REGARDING HER STATEMENT

In an interview with the author, Katerina Pnefma said:

“Of course I was upset! He [Tsafendas] had ruined my life. I knew he had the moment I heard about it [the assassination]. I knew the destruction he had caused us. We had to be protected from reporters. My sister-in-law – my brother’s wife – and my two sisters at their businesses, the Afrikaans people would come and spit at them. Their houses, their windows were broken. They used to throw stones. We suffered an enormous amount. Now, I lived in a small town, so people would turn around to see me, to look at me, because I was Tsafendas’s sister.... I had this community, in which I was very high up in business, and we knew the whole little town, in which, of course, after that, I never felt the same. And, as I said before, we never went anywhere, anyway. And, after that, we were all stigmatised. My sister, Michalis’ mother, also never went anywhere. My poor sister that is now alone, she also... none of us, we were all totally destroyed. From then on my brother’s career was at a stop. He never went higher; he remained as he was. So he destroyed my brother’s career. He destroyed us as a family, because wherever we went, they knew who we were.

Then the police came – a lieutenant and two policemen – and I said, ‘Look, I have nothing to do with this man. He is only related to us from our father, but we have had nothing much to do with him.’ I remember it as if it was yesterday. I was by myself in the house ... no, they [the policemen] didn’t have a typing machine; they were keeping notes ... I didn’t say anything. I was so shocked that I don’t think ... all I could think of was, ‘what are we going to do now he has disgraced us?’ I don’t remember saying that he was unbalanced, he certainly was not ... none of thought he was unbalanced. He was perfectly sane. He was very clever, cleverer than any of us [the family]. I must have meant that he had crazy political ideas, I don’t remember saying that at all ... I remember saying that he was talking rubbish! He was always talking rubbish, but I couldn’t tell the police what exactly he was saying! He was saying that the South Africans are Nazis, he was calling Dr. Verwoerd Hitler’s best student ... that us and most whites were exploiting the black Rhodesians ... he was calling the Greeks racists, saying that one day the Rhodesians would kick us all out and take back what we stole from them ... that one day the Blacks in South Africa would throw the Whites into the sea ...

He believed Mozambique and South Africa should have a colourful flag, like a rainbow or something in order for each colour to represent each race! Have you heard anything more absurd? He used to say that Jesus Christ was socialist and that if he was alive today he would have been a revolutionary, fighting apartheid and for the independence of Mozambique! Can you believe it? Well, this is what he was saying, all this kind of nonsense! How could I have told all these things to the police? They would have said ‘Why didn’t you report him to the police since he had such crazy ideas? Didn’t you know he was dangerous?’ You can’t imagine how many people had told my poor father to do something with him and his crazy political ideas. You can’t imagine how many! Even my poor mother told him to talk to him because he would get us into trouble someday, as he was often doing, but my dad did nothing. It was actually all his fault. He taught him all these things, but my father was a cautious man, he was not like Dimitri; he wouldn’t go around saying all these stupidities. His son was the opposite; he couldn’t keep his mouth shut ... what about the other thing? He changed his name because he thought it was insulting to be called Tsafantakis since this was the name given to our ancestors by the Turks! Wasn’t this nonsense?

I must have made a mistake or a lie to the police about seeing him for the first time after twenty or so years in Marandellas. I had seen him in Pretoria the previous Christmas [1963]. Yes, it was also a mistake or a lie that he came unannounced in Rhodesia. I had invited him to come meet my husband...”⁷⁰¹

Finally, Tsafendas’s step-mother, two half-sisters and their husbands, his half-brother and his wife, all gave evidence to the Commission of Enquiry. Every one of them said clearly that Tsafendas “was definitely not insane.”⁷⁰²

STATEMENTS

CHRISTOFFEL JOHANNES VAN VUUREN⁷⁰³

White Male, 56 years old, Mandini, Zululand.

I am employed at the Mandini Paper Factory in Zululand as a security officer. I’ve been in the service of this factory for the past seven years. I have never been a member of the South African police, but have been part of the South African Permanent Force. At 5:55 pm on Friday 05/07/1965, while I was on duty at the factory, a man who was known to me as ⁷⁰¹ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁷⁰² COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁷⁰³ Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Demetrios Tsafendas came to my office and showed me a wound to his right forearm. The wound looked serious and bleeding profusely. Demetrios told me that he was assaulted by one Nick Vergos, who is known generally among us as "Nicky the Greek, with a razor." I then took Demetrios to the emergency room, where he received treatment for the wound. I ordered him to come to me after the treatment. He came back and told me the whole story - I can only remember that he said they had an argument, but I cannot remember why. At the time of this incident Demetrios Tsafendas was employed by Fraser & Chalmers, an engineering company, working for our factory at Mandini. Nick Vergos was also employed by the same company. I fetched Nick Vergos at the recreation club and brought him to my office. On the way to the office Vergos admitted that he assaulted Demetrios with a razor, because the latter tried to assault him with a knife. Meanwhile, Demetrios Tsafendas was waiting at my office for us.

I summoned the SA police from Inyoni and while we waited for their arrival, the two spoke very hostilely and in a foreign language with each other. It was clear that they loathed each other. I suspect that they spoke Greek to each other. Among other things, Vergos told me in English that Demetrios was not a Greek, but a kaffir and a communist. However, I did not pay much attention to their comments and bad mouthing. The SA Police of Inyoni later came and removed both of them. I later learned that Vergos was found guilty and fined and that he paid his fine.

During the afternoon of 05.08.1965, Father Hanno of Mangete Catholic Church came to my office to get some information about a certain person. While Hanno and I stood together chatting, Demetrios Tsafendas stood just outside my office with his arm wrapped in a bandage. Father Hanno pointed to Demetrios and remarked to me: "That man there is a dangerous man - he is a communist. He can also speak nine different languages. Why don't you get rid of him?" That's all he said to me regarding Demetrios Tsafendas. However, I am not much bothered by him, because he (Hanno) is a man who likes to talk a lot and jump to his own conclusions. After Hanno spoke to me, I one day mentioned to Demetrios' employer (Mr. Woods) what Hanno had told me about Demetrios. Mr. Woods then told me that Demetrios will be dismissed anyway.

A few days after my conversation with Mr. Woods, Demetrios left Mandini and about a month afterwards I bumped into him again in West Street, Durban. He recognized me first and greeted me. I then asked him where he was working, which he then said that he does not work, but that he is going to the Cape. He did not say when nor what he would be doing in the Cape. We went our separate ways and I never saw him again. One morning a few days after the attack on Dr. Verwoerd, I noticed the killer's portrait in a newspaper and immediately recognized him as Demetrios Tsafendas that previously worked for the company Fraser & Chalmers at Mandini and who was involved in the assault case.

Mandini 13 October 1966 at 10.00 am.

Statement taken by me ... (Indecipherable name)

VORSTER SELECTED AS PRIME MINISTER

On September 13, exactly a week after Dr. Verwoerd's death and after Leader of the House Barend J. Schoeman withdrew from the contest, Justice Minister John Vorster was chosen unanimously to be South Africa's new Prime Minister.⁷⁰⁴ Vorster was only thirteenth in order of party seniority⁷⁰⁵ and owed his win to the support he got from the National Party's extreme right wingers, the Broederbond, of which he was a member (Broeder number 3737⁷⁰⁶), and the Dutch Reformed Church, of which his brother Jacobus was a leading minister.⁷⁰⁷

In his first statements after his election, Vorster called for unity between English- and Afrikaans-speaking people for the sake of the fatherland. Emphasising his concern for the security of the state, he declared apartheid to be the only practical policy meeting the interests of all sections of the community. Vorster reaffirmed Dr. Verwoerd's assurances that South Africa would not interfere in the affairs of neighbouring states and asked that South Africa should be accorded the same consideration and be left alone to work out her own salvation.⁷⁰⁸

Vorster also promptly gave notice that he would follow in the doctrinaire footsteps of his predecessor, with apartheid remaining the country's guiding principle, promising to "walk

⁷⁰⁴ TIME, 'South Africa: The Security Man', 23 September 1966: 34-37.

⁷⁰⁵ Miller, An African Volk: The Apartheid Regime and Its Search for Survival, p. 29.

⁷⁰⁶ Bell and Ntsebeza, Unfinished Business: South Africa, Apartheid and Truth, p. 28; Wilkins and Strydom, Broederbond: The Super-Afrikaners, p. A290.

⁷⁰⁷ TIME, 'South Africa: The Security Man', 23 September 1966: 34-37.

⁷⁰⁸ South Africa's New Prime Minister. Telegram of Sir H. Stephenson from Cape Town to the Foreign Office. 20 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

further along the road set by Dr. Verwoerd.”⁷⁰⁹ He signalled that there would be no easing of security measures by announcing that he would retain responsibility for the police. Like Dr. Verwoerd, Vorster claimed that apartheid was the will of God, “I believe that we still have a long way to go in the process of fulfilling our calling and that God who has so called us through His Grace, will not abandon us until we have completed our task.”⁷¹⁰ He then declared “I believe in the Nationalist Party and its principles and the full implementation of them with all their consequences” and praised his predecessor saying that no man in the history of South Africa had done more to promote national unity than Dr. Verwoerd. He added “as far as the people of this country are concerned, they want to come together and to stand together not because they are being forced to do so by outside circumstances but because they and I believe in this.” He concluded by saying that as far as God gave it to a man to work out his own destiny, the destiny of South Africa would be decided in this country by South Africans themselves.⁷¹¹

Predictably, Vorster’s accession disappointed the English-speaking press while delighting the Afrikaans media. The best the English newspapers appeared to hope for was some softening of Vorster’s hard line against liberalism under the responsibilities of national leadership. The Cape Argus pointed out that “a demonstration of clemency would not detract from the complexion of strength or from the conviction of all South Africans that they are opposed to any interference in their affairs.” However, the Star feared that Vorster’s past record rendered the outlook for freedom bleak.⁷¹²

The Afrikaans press portrayed Vorster’s appointment as evidence of the continuity of principles within the Nationalist Party, demonstrating the rewards of unity and solidarity. Die Burger said Vorster had become a controversial figure because of “the hard and unpleasant task which Dr. Verwoerd gave him,” but the paper considered he was well equipped for the highest office and expressed confidence that he would “grow into it.” It noted that it had become a familiar phenomenon “to sing praise at the end of a Premier’s career, which began with prophecies of doom.” Afrikaner reaction generally was a closing of ranks in support of a necessarily strong leader. As for the South African Broadcasting Corporation, the British ⁷⁰⁹ The New York Times, ‘South African Party Picks Vorster as Prime Minister’, 14 September 1966: 1.

⁷¹⁰ Mzimela, ‘Nazism and Apartheid: The Role of Christian Churches in Nazi Germany and Apartheid South Africa’, 1980, p. 155; van Jaarsveld, ‘The Afrikaner’s Idea of his Calling and Mission in South African History’, p. 17.

⁷¹¹ Telegram No. 525 of Sir Hugh Stephenson from Cape Town to the Foreign Office. 13 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

⁷¹² Telegram No. 525 of Sir Hugh Stephenson from Cape Town to the Foreign Office. 13 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

ambassador Sir Hugh Stephenson, said it “indulged in fulsome praise of Vorster, which at times was reminiscent of the adulation heaped on Hitler or Stalin.”⁷¹³ The New York Times said that South Africa’s Nationalists had “flouted world opinion in the most dramatic manner possible by selecting Vorster as their new Prime Minister” since “none of the other prospective successors to Dr. Verwoerd symbolise so utterly the Republic’s oppressive racial policies and police-state laws ...”⁷¹⁴

Six days after he became Prime Minister, a confidential report by the British Foreign and Commonwealth Office compared Vorster to Dr. Verwoerd in these terms:

“Vorster apparently did not share Dr. Verwoerd’s idealistic convictions about the policy of apartheid in the sense of separate development in equality. Dr. Verwoerd, despite his preeminence in Afrikaner politics - which Mr. Vorster does not share, was himself never able entirely to carry his followers with him in support of the very great efforts and expenditure he wished to devote to his conception of apartheid.”⁷¹⁵

The Portuguese newspaper Portugal Democratico announced Vorster’s win in an editorial entitled “South Africa’s Hitler.” It said, “It would be hard to find in all of Africa a man more extreme in his opinions about racism, more obstinate in the application of a dogma and more persuaded of the justice of his convictions.”⁷¹⁶ Very soon, Vorster appeared to justify the newspaper’s argument by placing old Nazi supporters and inmates from the internment camps of the Second World War into high positions in the security apparatus. The best known of them were General Hendrik van den Bergh, who became head of state security, and P.J. Rieketer who became his economic advisor.⁷¹⁷

JOHN VORSTER’S BRIEF BIOGRAPHY⁷¹⁸

John Vorster (1915-1983) was the thirteenth of fourteen children of a wealthy Afrikaner farmer. He studied law at Stellenbosch University,⁷¹⁹ graduating with a Bachelor of Arts

⁷¹³ Telegram No. 525 of Sir Hugh Stephenson from Cape Town to the Foreign Office. 13 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

⁷¹⁴ The New York Times, ‘South African Party Picks Vorster as Prime Minister’, 14 September 1966: 46.

⁷¹⁵ Confidential letter from the Foreign and Commonwealth Offices to Certain Missions. 19 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

⁷¹⁶ Portugal Democratico, ‘O Hitler da Africa do Sul’, ANO XI-No. 111- S. Paulo, Outubro de 1966: 1, 3.

⁷¹⁷ Marx, Oxwagon Sentinel: Radical Afrikaner Nationalism and the History of the Ossewabrandwag, p.559; Wilkins and Strydom, Broederbond: The Super-Afrikaners, p. 107.

⁷¹⁸ For more about Vorster see: D’Oliveira, J. (1977) Vorster – the Man; Giliomee, H. (2012) The Last Afrikaner Leaders: A Supreme Test of Power; Schrire, R. (ed.) (1994) Leadership in the Apartheid State: From Malan to de Klerk; Terblanche, H.O. (1983) John Vorster: Ob-General en Afrikanervegter.

degree in 1936 and a Bachelor of Law in 1938. His first job was Registrar for the Judge President of the Cape, Justice H.S. van Zyl.⁷²⁰ Although he graduated as a barrister, he practised as an attorney in Port Elizabeth.⁷²¹ At the age of twenty-six, on December 20, 1941, Vorster married a former fellow student at Stellenbosch, Martini Malan, and they raised two boys and a girl. Martini became active on the public scene, managing Vorster's political campaigns after a spending time as a social, worker.⁷²²

Vorster was a fanatical Nazi supporter and a leading member of South Africa's own pro-Nazi paramilitary organization, the Ossewabrandwag (OB). He first became a "Stormjaer" (Storm Trooper),⁷²³ then, aged twenty-five in 1941, and later was appointed a "general" in the Port Elizabeth district.⁷²⁴ In 1942, he said of the OB, "We stand for Christian Nationalism, which is an ally of National Socialism. You can call this anti-democratic dictatorship if you wish. In Italy, it is called Fascism, in Germany, National Socialism, and in South Africa, Christian Nationalism."⁷²⁵ Later that year, after expressing his admiration for Adolf Hitler and his contempt for democracy, Vorster was arrested as a Nazi agent and spent fourteen months in an internment camp at Koffiefontein in the Orange Free State.⁷²⁶

He was prisoner No. 2229/42 in Hut 48, Camp 1,⁷²⁷ and at one point, he staged a hunger strike.⁷²⁸ His wife was not allowed to tell the rest of his family where he was being held, so she sent a telegram reading "John is staying at the King's Hotel," and they got the message.⁷²⁹ It was there that he met fellow proto-Nazi inmate, H.J van den Bergh.⁷³⁰ They bonded quickly⁷³¹ and before long van den Bergh was Vorster's security advisor, closest ⁷¹⁹ TIME, 'South Africa: The Security Man', 23 September 1966: 34-37.

⁷²⁰ Centre for African Studies, J.B Vorster: A Political Background, (London: Bureau of National and International Communication, South African Embassy, 1978), p. 2.

⁷²¹ Stanley Uys, 'Embitter leader, Lies A Spent Force', The Guardian, 12 September 1983: 8.

⁷²² Joseph B. Treaster, 'John Vorster, Former South African Prime Minister, Dies at 67', The New York Times, 11 September 1983: 45.

⁷²³ Moodie, The Rise of Afrikanerdom, p. 257; Treaster, 'John Vorster, former South African Prime Minister, dies at 67', The New York Times, 11 September 1983: 45.

⁷²⁴ TIME, 'South Africa: The Security Man', 23 September 1966: 34-37.

⁷²⁵ Bunting, The Rise of the South African Reich, p. 98; Okoth, A History of Africa: African Nationalism and the De-Colonisation Process, p. 160; Washington Post, 'Verwoerd's Successor Will be A Racist, Too', 7 September 1966.

⁷²⁶ Legum and Legum, South Africa: Crisis for the West, p. 28; TIME, 'South Africa: The Security Man', 23 September 1966: 34-37.

⁷²⁷ Bunting, The Rise of the South African Reich, p. 98.

⁷²⁸ Treaster, 'John Vorster, Former South African Prime Minister, Dies at 67', The New York Times, 11 September 1983: 45.

⁷²⁹ Donald Woods, South African Dispatches, (London: Penguin Books, 1987), p. 2.

⁷³⁰ Fullard, "State Repression in the 1960s", p. 349.

⁷³¹ O'Meara, Forty Lost Years: The Apartheid State and the Politics of the National Party 1948-1994, p. xxxvii.

confidante and best friend.⁷³² Vorster was released on parole in January 1944 and placed under house arrest in Robertson.⁷³³

Throughout his life, Vorster maintained that what he did during World War Two “was right.”⁷³⁴ His views were too extreme even for the National Party, at least in those early days. In 1948, when the National Party came to power, it turned down his application for membership on grounds that he “believed in the ‘authoritarian state’ principle and advocated the destruction of parties.”⁷³⁵ Rejected by the NP, he stood for Parliament on the old Afrikaner Party ticket and lost by four votes.⁷³⁶ However, times changed and not long after the Sharpeville massacre, Dr. Verwoerd named Vorster as Minister of Justice, apparently signalling a hard-line approach to the enemies of apartheid.⁷³⁷ In his first speech in that office, he made his intentions clear, declaring that “the rights of free speech, assembly and protest are getting out of hand.” Subsequent clampdowns in these areas earned him the nickname “Jackboot John” in some opposition newspapers, which took to caricaturing him as a jackbooted Nazi.⁷³⁸

Fanatically committed to apartheid, an anti-Semite and anti-Communist,⁷³⁹ Vorster targeted South Africans of a liberal disposition, arguing that “wittingly or unwittingly,” liberals were “the prime promoters of Communism.”⁷⁴⁰ He expressed his sorrow that the sons of good white South African parents should turn to violence in opposing the Government. Vorster was greatly admired by Afrikaners. He was seen as the man who had secured their safety by turning the police into a highly efficient force and effectively destroying the illegal opposition to the government. Even the English-speaking South Africans gave Vorster some credit, although he was hated by White liberals and Blacks.⁷⁴¹

Vorster, as Minister of Justice in Dr. Verwoerd’s cabinet, was responsible for the implementation of three of the most inhuman and brutal laws in apartheid’s history: the ⁷³² Rotberg, The Process of Decision Making in Contemporary South Africa, p. 13-14.

⁷³³ Bunting, The Rise of the South African Reich, p. 99.

⁷³⁴ TIME, ‘Vorster: Man on a Wagon Train’, 28 June 1976: 11.

⁷³⁵ The Economist, ‘South Africa: Victory for the Hero of the White Ideal’, 17 September 1966: 1119; Treaster, ‘John Vorster, Former South African Prime Minister, Dies at 67’, The New York Times, 11 September 1983: 45; TIME, ‘South Africa: The Security Man’, 23 September 1966: 34-37.

⁷³⁶ Centre for African Studies, J.B Vorster: A Political Backgrounder, p. 2.

⁷³⁷ The Economist, ‘South Africa: Victory for the Hero of the White Ideal’, 17 September 1966: 1119; TIME, ‘South Africa: The Security Man’, 23 September 1966: 34-37.

⁷³⁸ Treaster, ‘John Vorster, former South African Prime Minister, dies at 67’, The New York Times, 11 September 1983: 45.

⁷³⁹ Bunting, The Rise of the South African Reich, p. 73-77.

⁷⁴⁰ J.E. Spence, “After Verwoerd.” World Today, (Oct 1, 1966), 22, 10, p. 413-415.

⁷⁴¹ Telegram No. 526 of Sir Hugh Stephenson from Cape Town to the Foreign Office. 13 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

Criminal Procedure Amendment Act and the General Law Amendment Acts of 1962 and 1963 (all discussed in Chapter 1).⁷⁴² He justified his actions by declaring that he was “at war with the enemies of the volk”⁷⁴³ and that such acts were necessary because of the Cold War and of the Communist Party in South Africa whose growing strength was a threat to white supremacy.⁷⁴⁴

In 1965, Vorster was accused of turning South Africa into a police state. He replied, “This is no time to be sensitive about principles. In such times, it is the things that weigh heaviest that should count.”⁷⁴⁵ To Vorster’s Justice Portfolio, Dr. Verwoerd added responsibilities for Police and Prisons in 1966, whereupon Vorster gave instructions to van den Bergh that anyone thought to be a threat to the State should “be taken out of circulation one way or another, if there are valid reasons for not bringing that person to trial.”⁷⁴⁶ Aware of these developments, Britain’s Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) characterised Vorster shortly after his accession to power as “probably the most unpopular man in South Africa as far as the non-whites are concerned.”⁷⁴⁷

Vorster lost no time in defending the policy of apartheid. The day after his accession to prime ministerial office, he declared in a radio broadcast that apartheid was “not a denial of human dignity,” but that it “gives the opportunity to every individual within his own sphere to develop and advance without restriction.”⁷⁴⁸ In 1968, he cynically admitted, “It is true that there are blacks working for us. They will continue to work for us for generations, in spite of the ideal we have to separate them completely ... The fact of the matter is this: we need them, because they work for us ... but the fact that they work for us can never entitle them to claim political rights. Not now, nor in the future ... under no circumstances.”⁷⁴⁹

One of his first actions as Prime Minister, on September 19, just six days after assuming power, was to secure the passage of legislation crucial to the National Party’s ⁷⁴² Ballinger, From Union to Apartheid, p. 48; Sachs, The Anatomy of Apartheid, p. 249.

⁷⁴³ Bunting, The Rise of the South African Reich, p. 99.

⁷⁴⁴ Ballinger, From Union to Apartheid, p. 48.

⁷⁴⁵ TIME, ‘South Africa: The Security Man’, 23 September 1966: 34-37; The New York Times, ‘South African Aide Defends Jailing Law’, 12 June 1965: 7.

⁷⁴⁶ D’Oliveira, Vorster – The Man, p. 157-158.

⁷⁴⁷ Confidential letter from the Foreign and Commonwealth Offices to Certain Missions. 19 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

⁷⁴⁸ Treaster, ‘John Vorster, Former South African Prime Minister, Dies at 67’, The New York Times, 11 September 1983: 45.

⁷⁴⁹ David Davis, African Workers and Apartheid, (London: International Defence and Aid Fund, 1978), p. 5; Ruth First, Jonathan Steele and Christabel Gurney, The South African Connection. Western Investment in Apartheid, (Harmondsworth: Penguin Books, 1973), p. 41; Elizabeth Schmidt, Decoding Corporate Camouflage. U.S. Business Support for Apartheid, (Washington, D.C.: Institute for Policy Studies, 1980), p. 2.

prospects. The Prohibition of Improper Interference Bill was drafted while Dr. Verwoerd was still alive, but was held up by his death. According to Sir Hugh Stephenson,⁷⁵⁰ the British ambassador and former High Commissioner in South Africa, the Bill was Dr. Verwoerd's brainchild and "generally held to be very much an expression of his personally rigid, logical conception of "separate development," but his death stopped him from passing it. "Its purpose was to prevent the election of Progressive Party candidates for the four seats in the House of Assembly held by White representatives of the Cape Coloureds. The text of the Bill confirmed that this was its immediate purpose, but it went much further in restricting democratic rights."⁷⁵¹

Furthermore, still according to Sir Hugh, "the Bill (which makes difficult reading because it talks of "interference in the affairs of any population group by persons not belonging to that population group" when it merely means in practice participation by Whites in Black politics) is a complicated one with eleven clauses. The most important of these prevents Whites from helping non-Whites to register as voters (an activity which was the basis of the success of the Progressive Party candidates for the Cape Provincial Council seats the previous year), prevents their help with the organisation of black political parties, and prevents them taking any part in the political activities of non-Whites. The result of this was to make racially mixed political parties illegal. Under the Bill, no White may be elected to represent Coloured voters if he was a member or in any way connected with a White political party during the three years preceding his nomination as a candidate, although the position of sitting members is safeguarded. The press is, however, protected by a sub—clause which says that the terms of the Bill are not applicable to newspapers. The Bill represents a further major step to enforce the Government's policies of racial separation in the political field in one of the few areas in which racial cooperation is still possible. It illustrates the determination of the Government to close the remaining legal doors through which the non-Whites can express their opposition to the Government's apartheid policies."⁷⁵²

Dr. Steytler, leader of the Progressive Party, said about the Bill:

"This is a hideous measure, totalitarian in its concept, extreme in its provisions and measured in terms of its long -term consequences, disastrous for South Africa ... This is an ⁷⁵⁰ Sir Hugh was present in the House of Assembly when Dr. Verwoerd was killed.

⁷⁵¹ Telegram of Sir H. Stephenson from Cape Town to the British Foreign Office. 20 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

⁷⁵² Telegram of Sir H. Stephenson from Cape Town to the British Foreign Office. 20 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

attempt, behind the facade of the ballot box system, to exercise State control of our political parties to give the State the power to approve or withhold approval of candidates for election, to enable the State to impose its will of political discussion in South Africa - to attempt to force South Africans to repudiate the effect of South Africa's multi-racial character."⁷⁵³

In the aftermath of Dr. Verwoerd's assassination, the National Party entered a period of internal conflict which resulted in several hard-line rightists being dismissed from the Cabinet. The conflict reached its peak in 1969 when Vorster accepted the presence of Māori players in the country during a visit by the New Zealand Rugby Union team. The decision alienated NP extremists, who formed a splinter group, the Herstigte (Restored) National Party, led by Albert Hertzog, son of the former Prime Minister, General J.B.M. Hertzog.⁷⁵⁴ At the same time, Vorster turned the Broederbond into a tool of the National Party,⁷⁵⁵ regularly consulting its leaders on important governmental decisions.⁷⁵⁶

His concession to the Maoris apart, Vorster oversaw one of the most violent, brutal and repressive periods in the history of apartheid, with constant accusations of torture and otherwise violating the rights of liberals, anti-apartheid activists and Communists. With van den Bergh, he was accused of responsibility for the deaths in detention of many anti-apartheid activists⁷⁵⁷ and the 1970 report of the U.N. Special Committee on Apartheid noted that "torture at the hands of the Security Police has become the regular feature of political prisoners in South Africa."⁷⁵⁸ Replying to concerns about the number of deaths in dubious circumstances in detention, Vorster said in 1970: "The Opposition can howl until the cows come home and the English-language editors can break down in fits of sobbing, but we will use our powers in the interests of South Africa."⁷⁵⁹

In 1973, Vorster praised the police for their "restraint" in an incident where they shot eleven men dead and wounded seventeen others. The men, workers at Western Deep Levels gold mine in Carletonville, Transvaal, were striking for higher wages. The final indictment of the apartheid system was given unconsciously by the Deputy Minister of Police when ⁷⁵³ Telegram of Sir H. Stephenson from Cape Town to the British Foreign Office. 20 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

⁷⁵⁴ Brotz, The Politics of South Africa: Democracy and Racial Diversity, p. 45; Miller, "Voortrekker or State Builder? John Vorster and the Challenges of Leadership in the Apartheid State", p. 122-123; Murray, South Africa: Time of Agony, Time of Destiny, p. 25; The Illustrated London News, 'Revolt in South Africa', 13 December 1969: 17.

⁷⁵⁵ Callinicos, South Africa: Between Reform and Revolution, p. 30.

⁷⁵⁶ TIME, 'Broederbond's Big Brother Act', 21 November 1977: 85.

⁷⁵⁷ International Defence and Aid Fund, BOSS: The First Five Years, p. 15.

⁷⁵⁸ Farah, "South Africa's Apartheid Policy: An Assessment", p. 86.

⁷⁵⁹ Cook, South Africa: The Imprisoned Society, p. 28.

excusing the killings by his men at Carletonville: “They had no alternative but to shoot. You must remember that there were about 8,500 men in that compound.”⁷⁶⁰

A major crisis during Vorster’s term was the 1976 Soweto uprising, which series of protests led by high school students. It began on the morning of 16 June, when an estimated 20,000 students took to the streets of Soweto to protest against the introduction of Afrikaans as the medium of scholastic instruction. They were met with a brutal response by armed police. The government claimed that “only” twenty-three students were killed by police but a realistic death toll of students and supporters was estimated independently at 600 to 700.⁷⁶¹ During the uprising, which continued for many months, one of the chants sung by the students was, Where are you now that we need you, Dimitri Tsafendas? It echoed Where are you now that we need you, Harvey Oswald? sung by opponents of US President Richard Nixon at the time of Watergate.⁷⁶²

Faced with growing national and international pressures, Vorster sought to rebrand racial segregation and create new networks of legitimacy for the apartheid regime. He reached out to the newly independent African nations, establishing diplomatic relations where feasible, for instance with the Malawi of the dictatorial Dr. Hastings Kamuzu Banda, and with South Africa’s neighbour mini-states, Lesotho, Swaziland and Botswana.⁷⁶³ He held talks with African countries such as Ivory Coast, Zambia and Liberia, whose leaders were less doctrinaire in regard to the apartheid regime, and he permitted diplomats from black Africa to reside in white areas in South Africa.⁷⁶⁴

The height of Vorster’s diplomatic involvement on the continent was working with President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia to bring together Ian Smith’s regime in Rhodesia and the black liberation movements which opposed him.⁷⁶⁵ Vorster engineered the release of several nationalist leaders fighting for an independent Zimbabwe so that they could talk peace with the Salisbury regime. Smith’s white minority government had unilaterally declared independence from Britain in 1965, placing its South African neighbour in a diplomatically tricky situation. Vorster supported Rhodesia publicly but refused to accord ⁷⁶⁰ Cook, South Africa: The Imprisoned Society, p. 18.

⁷⁶¹ Elisabé Brink, Steve Lebelo, Gandhi Malungane, Dumisani Ntshangase and Sue Krige, Soweto, 16 June 1976: It All Started With A Dog, (Cape Town: Kwela Books, 2010), p. 9; Harrison, The White Tribe of Africa: South Africa in Perspective, p. 143.

⁷⁶² Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

⁷⁶³ Bloomberg, Christian-Nationalism and the Rise of the Afrikaner Broederbond in South Africa, 1918-1948, p. 229.

⁷⁶⁴ TIME, ‘Vorster: Man On A Wagon Train’, 28 June 1976: 11.

⁷⁶⁵ Miller, ‘Voortrekker or State Builder? John Vorster and the Challenges of Leadership in the Apartheid State’, p. 115-129.

recognition to the UDI regime for fear of angering America.⁷⁶⁶ White South Africans supported Smith and Vorster sought to appease them by supplying materiel to Rhodesia in the form of helicopters, arms and ammunition. However he withdrew a South African paramilitary police force from Rhodesia.⁷⁶⁷

Despite Vorster's pragmatism, South Africa remained anathema to the newly independent African nations. In 1976, Vorster again became involved in the affairs of another African country, in this case Angola. This vast West African colony of Portugal gained independence in mid-1975, as did Portugal's other African territory, Mozambique, which promptly turned Marxist. Fearing that Angola would follow suit, and encouraged by the US government, Vorster invaded the country in August 1975.⁷⁶⁸ Although the South African army was initially successful, it was driven out of the country by March 1976 after a major counter-offensive by Angolan troops supported by other African countries, but mainly by Cuba.⁷⁶⁹ US Secretary of State Henry Kissinger visited South Africa in August 1976 and was greeted by Vorster.⁷⁷⁰

In 1975, Vorster was interviewed by Mr. Ogunsanwo, Editor of the Sunday Times of Lagos, Nigeria. Asked how he justified apartheid, he replied, "I don't know what you mean." Then the following dialogue took place:

OGUNSANWO: How do you explain separate facilities, separate shop entrances, separate residences etc?

VORSTER: There is no single shop in South Africa having separate entrances for the races, there are different queues and entrances in the post offices but not in shops. This is because of our policy of separate development of the races. We do not discriminate against anybody on account of race or colour, the policy is very often misunderstood, especially by people in Africa. Certain measures are taken to avoid frictions between peoples and furthermore it is the policy that different peoples should be served by their own people and in that job opportunities are created for black people which never existed before. It is only since this government came to power that black postmasters came into being. Previously, there were no ⁷⁶⁶ John de St. Jorre, "Inside the Laager: White Power in South Africa", Foreign Affairs, October 1976.

⁷⁶⁷ TIME, 'Vorster: Man On A Wagon Train', 28 June 1976: 11.

⁷⁶⁸ Giliomee, The Last Afrikaner Leaders: A Supreme Test of Power, p. 120; Marga Holness, Apartheid's War Against Angola, (New York: United Nations Centre against Apartheid, 1983), p. 8-9.

⁷⁶⁹ Piero Gleijeses, Conflicting Missions. Havana, Washington, and Africa, 1959-1976, (Chapel Hill: The University of North Carolina Press, 2002), p. 254-262; Holness, Apartheid's War Against Angola, p. 8-9.

⁷⁷⁰ Miller, "Voortrekker or State Builder? John Vorster and the Challenges of Leadership in the Apartheid State", p. 115.

black policemen. It is my government that made it possible for blacks to become professors, school heads, etc. If and when we find it no longer necessary for the reasons I said to have this policy, it will be abolished, otherwise it will remain.

OGUNSANWO: Is there any possibility that our African political detainees, Nelson Mandela, Robert Sobukwe, would be released someday to lead their normal lives?

VORSTER: I don't have any political detainees. Nelson Mandela and Co. are not political detainees, they are serving sentences. They were convicted by judicial courts after being found guilty of having committed overt criminal acts. As far as Robert Sobukwe is concerned, he is under a banning order.

OGUNSANWO: Would you allow me to go and see Mandela on Robert Island?

VORSTER: I can only allow the International Red Cross to visit him.

OGUNSANWO: Finally, Prime Minister, let me ask you, could you bring yourself to think of the possibility of African majority rule in South Africa in the immediate or remote future?

VORSTER: Oh yes, there will be African majority rule in South Africa in Zululand, in the Transkei, in Botswana.⁷⁷¹

Exulting in a huge parliamentary victory for the Nationalist in November 1977, the largest in history, Vorster gave a speech which mixed bravado and defiance: "Let the world know," he said, "let it know tomorrow, let it know for all future time to come, small as we are, situated as we are, we will fight to the end with what we have got."⁷⁷² However, just a year later, after twelve years in office, Vorster retired as prime minister. In September 1978, he was succeeded by Defence Minister P.W. Botha and became State President, an honorary position, but eight months later, Vorster resigned in disgrace over the Muldergate scandal.⁷⁷³

During his tenure as the country's primary leader, Vorster did not manage to keep apartheid stable and untouchable as Dr. Verwoerd had done. Despite his fierce reputation, it was Vorster who presided over apartheid's deterioration from a halcyon era of economic growth and white control to instability and uncertainty and finally into a landscape of ⁷⁷¹ Sunday Times (Lagos), 'Sunday Times Editor Interviews John Vorster.' 30 March 1975: 8-9.

⁷⁷² Treaster, 'John Vorster, Former South African Prime Minister, Dies at 67', The New York Times, 11 September 1983: 45, p. 45.

⁷⁷³ Treaster, 'John Vorster, Former South African Prime Minister, Dies at 67', The New York Times, 11 September 1983: 45.

rudderless chaos by the time he left the office in 1978.⁷⁷⁴ Vorster's fingerprints were evident in politics at the highest level even after he left office. In 1980, he denounced critics of apartheid as "no friend of the country, of the Afrikaner or of the white man," and in 1983, he rejected suggestions of black and white power-sharing "in whatever form." Later that year, he was rushed to hospital with a lung infection and after a blood clot developed in a lung, he died on September 10, 1983. He was sixty-seven.⁷⁷⁵

⁷⁷⁴ Miller, "Voortrekker or State Builder? John Vorster and the Challenges of Leadership in the Apartheid State", p. 115.

⁷⁷⁵ Treaster, 'John Vorster, Former South African Prime Minister, Dies at 67', The New York Times, 11 September 1983: 45.

WEDNESDAY, 14 SEPTEMBER 1966

BRITISH EMBASSY REPORT

On this day, the British Embassy in Cape Town sent a letter to the South African police which informed them that Tsafendas had made enquiries at the British Consulate-General in Cape Town regarding his application to emigrate to Zambia. The letter also states that Tsafendas had offered his services as Portuguese interpreter to the British ships on the Beira patrol.⁷⁷⁶

STATEMENTS

CHRISTOFFEL JOHANNES VAN VUUREN⁷⁷⁷

*White male, 56 years old, security officer at Mandini Paper Factory, Mandini, Zululand.
11.30 a.m.*

On the 7th of May of 1965 I was on duty when a male person of Greek heritage, Demitrio Tsafendis had lodged a complaint of assault. He had a wound to his arm. I then fetched Nick Vergos from the mess hall in Mandeni with the aim to later hand him over to the South African Police. After I told him that there was a complaint of assault filed against him, he declared that Tsafendis is a bad person and that he was also a dangerous communist. He gave no reason why he said so and I did not question him further on his allegation. Later during the night I handed Tsafendis and Vergos over to the South African Police in Inyoni. I'm not sure, but it is possible that I told the Police officer what Vergos said about Tsafendis. I'm not sure what Police Officer investigated the case, but I think it was Sargent Snyman. During his stay at Mandeni he was a quiet person who always moved around alone, but nevertheless, he appeared to be a person with a cruel nature.

⁷⁷⁶ British Embassy in Cape Town letter to the South African Police regarding Tsafendas, 14 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁷⁷⁷ Christoffel Johannes Van Vuuren statement to the police, 14 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; This is the second statement taken from Van Vuuren, who was also interviewed the day before.

PRESS REPORTS OF THE DAY

The big story in the Press this day was Vorster's unanimous election as South Africa's new Prime Minister. As for the murder inquiry, the Rand Daily Mail quoted a senior police officer in Cape Town as saying that investigations were still far from complete and it was doubtful the case could be ready by Tsafendas's October 6 remand date. "We still have hundreds of inquiries to make into Tsafendas's movements... the questioning of Tsafendas himself has not yet been completed and it is quite likely we shall have to ask for a further remand on October 6," he said. The story added that Tsafendas was believed still to be at Caledon Square police station.⁷⁷⁸

A friend's view of Tsafendas appeared in a Rand Daily Mail interview with a Greek café proprietor in Durban. Peter Pappas said that eighteen months ago Tsafendas often ate at his café, always curry and rice, and he found him pleasant. Tsafendas said he liked the South African police and people generally but complained that South Africa was not the wonderful country he remembered as a child. Pappas, a former Greek army officer, said Tsafendas spoke angrily about the Salazar regime in Portugal and about the Mozambique police; he also denounced America, where he felt he had been badly treated. Tsafendas was friendly with white down-and-outs and when he had some money he would give them a few cents. "When his luck was out, I sometimes gave him a free meal, but when he started work he paid me," Pappas said. Pappas also described Tsafendas as "very powerful. I remember him once picking me up, playfully like a baby, and I am six feet tall." He said Tsafendas had a suitcase containing references he had collected from overseas jobs. One of them, which Tsafendas showed him, was from Frankfurt.⁷⁷⁹

⁷⁷⁸ Rand Daily Mail, 'File On Assassin Far From Completed', 14 September 1966.

⁷⁷⁹ Rand Daily Mail, 'Tsafendas: In the Eyes of A Friend', 14 September 1966.

THURSDAY, 15 SEPTEMBER 1966

PIDE REPORT

On this day, the military attaché at the South African embassy in Lisbon sent a folder containing various documents regarding Tsafendas to the Director of Military Intelligence in Pretoria. It included the following PIDE report written in Lisbon on February 21, 1962, which covered Tsafendas's story, from his entry to Portugal on February 8, 1949 to his applying for permission to work as a hawker on board ships in 1958:

DIMITRIO TSAFENDAS alias DIMITRIE TSAFANDAKIS,

(Portuguese) National

The man under reference entered Portugal on the 8th February, 1949, through the frontier of Barca d'Alva, where he was arrested by this Police and taken to Porto, from where he was transferred to this Office. Having come to the conclusion that he was a Portuguese national, he was handed over to the Headquarters of the Military Government due to the fact that he had not yet come before the Military Inspection Board on the 6th February, 1950. Before the Board, he was exempted from all military service. Once his situation was normalised, he applied for an identity card as a Portuguese national and began to ply the trade of itinerant vendor of various articles on board the ships lying in the Port of Lisbon.

In October, 1931, he proceeded to Lourenço Marques on the ship Sara, but was forced to return to Portugal, on the ship Angola, both owned by the Companhia Nacional de Navegacao, due to the fact that he was not allowed to land by order of the General Administration (Governo geral).

On the 14th January, 1952, he arrived in Portugal on board the ship Angola.

On the 17th March, 1932, he entered the Hospital do Ultramar, at the instance of the Instituto de Medicina Tropical, with the diagnosis of "intestinal parasitosis; maniacal-depressive psychosis (parasitose intestinal; psicose maniaco-depressiva)", having been discharged on the 9th April of the same year.

On the 24th May, 1952, as he was preparing to leave the Country with the passport with which he had entered on the 8th November, 1949, through the frontier at Beira, he was detained by this Police and conducted to this Office, where he was detained until the 23rd April, 1953, date on which he was handed over by this police to the Lisbon Mendicants Shelter (Mitra), and where he remained until the 4th August of the same year. On this date he left the said Shelter due to the fact that he was given permission to make use of a Maritime Card to go on board the ships lying in the Tagus.

On the 8th July 1954, he left the Country on passport No. 12325/53 issued by the Governo Civil de Lisboa on the 26th of November, 1953, travelled through various countries of Europe, and on the 11th February, 1956, he was interned in a hospital for nervous complaints in Hamburg, Germany, suffering from mental depression. As he was destitute, application was made for his urgent repatriation to the Portuguese Consulate in that city, which repatriated him on the 11th June of the said year of 1955 on board the Portuguese ship "India."

During the years 1957 and 1958 he applied for, and was granted, permission to go on board ships lying in the Tagus, in order to ply his trade of itinerant vendor of regional articles and embroideries; after this date there is no further reference to this individual in the records of this Police.

Lisbon, 21st February, 1962.

(sgd) Antonio Teixeira da Silva.

Agent.

The PIDE report stated that in October 1951, Tsafendas was denied entry to Mozambique by order of the General Administration, though it does not give the reason for the refusal. The report also does not say why Tsafendas was arrested on May 24, 1952 and detained until April 23, 1953. It then mentioned his hospitalization in Hamburg, suffering from mental depression, and his subsequent repatriation to Portugal. The report stopped in 1958, stating that "there are no further references to this individual in the records of the Police."⁷⁸⁰

⁷⁸⁰ Letter of the Military Attaché of the South African Embassy in Lisbon to the Director of Military Intelligence in Pretoria with a PIDE report regarding Tsafendas attached, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/6, subject: Departement van verdediging. NASA; Translation of PIDE report regarding Dimitrio Tsafendas alias Dimitrie Tsafandakis, 21 February 1962. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/6, subject: Departement van verdediging. NASA.

PIDE's report does not contain anything about Tsafendas's life prior to 1949, thus none of his political activities in Mozambique before then are included. Most importantly, it stops in 1958 and thus does not contain any information regarding his activities after that year, including, importantly, his arrests and imprisonment in Mozambique in 1964. That PIDE had run a file on Tsafendas since 1938 is also absent.

However, this is to be expected because the 1962 PIDE report was written at the request of the Social Services, who were interested not in his political ideas and activities, but in his life story and medical history, since he was then a patient in the Institute of Psychiatric Welfare of Lisbon. He was admitted there after he had applied for permission to end his exile and return to Mozambique. Since all his previous requests had been turned down, he had proclaimed himself to be a reformed person, no longer a Communist, but harmless and perhaps a little mad. The police had sent him to the Institute for evaluation, and the Institute had asked for information about him from the police. It seems clear that once again PIDE gave the South African authorities another document, the third, withholding vital information about his political activities and containing nothing indicating Tsafendas was a partisan for the independence of Mozambique.

The folder also contained a copy of a certificate written by Dr. Pegado of the Institute of Psychiatric Welfare of Lisbon on April 6, 1962, during Tsafendas's visit there, where it states that: "Demitrio Tsafandakis is fundamentally a psychopath who leads an always unstable and adventurous life. At the moment he does not show signs of psychosis. I agree entirely with Captain Cascais in that one should wait for information regarding his family before finally deciding what destination he is to be given."⁷⁸¹ Thus, PIDE clearly promotes the idea that Tsafendas was a psychopath without any reference to his political ideology and activities.

⁷⁸¹ Dr. Pegado's report regarding Dimitrio Tsafandakis, 6 April 1962. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/6, subject: Departement van Verdediging. NASA.

STATEMENTS

HELEN DOROTHY DANIELS⁷⁸²

Coloured woman, 36 years old, 46 Kasselsvlei Way, Belville South.

During April 1965 I was visiting friends in Boksburg. There I learned of Demitrio Tsafendas. It was told to me that they would want me to meet him - he's a nice man. I never met him and later returned to Cape Town. When I was in Cape Town, I thought to correspond with him and wrote to my friends to find out his address. They said he was in Durban (the time I was in Boksburg), and when I requested his address, the friends did not respond. Other friends of mine went on holiday to Durban and I then wrote a letter to Tsafendas and asked my friends to give this to him. Our preacher is in Durban and I hoped to trace Tsafendas through the church. He was one of our parishioners, as he pretended.

I wrote my letter during the June holidays in 1965 and received a reply from him on July 10, 1965. I wrote in my letter that I would like to meet and wanted to marry him. His answer was that he wanted to meet me first before giving me a positive answer. I wrote to him again - four letters – all of which he answered. I sent him a picture, but he did not send me one in return. He sent word that he would come to Cape Town for our church conference - it would be in November 1965.

I lived with my parents and on August 28, 1965 - he arrived at my parents' house. When I saw him, his clothes were dirty and neglected and I had a very bad impression of him. However, I received him with friendliness. He said he was in Cape Town looking for work and his belongings are at the station. My brother went to fetch his belongings on one of the Cape stations. When belongings came, (there were two suitcases and a bunch of pots and pans and a large bundle of dirty laundry) I was very disappointed when I saw the state of his property. We had a spare room and gave him lodging. After he was with us a few days, I decided that I could never marry such a man. He also did not try to establish a relationship with me. I also heard from him that he has a blank identity card – although I never saw it. He said his father was a white Greek and his mother a native woman from Mozambique and that he is working on it to be registered as a Coloured. It did not impress me, as I had already made up my mind and he never discussed our relationship, thus I was happy that my earlier proposal died a silent death.

⁷⁸² Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

Meanwhile, he got a job at the power station in Cape Town. He had a lot of bad habits such as: helping himself to items in our stove and refrigerator - his table manners were ugly and messy - he simply laid with his shoes on the bedspread and such. When he found work, my father said he should pay lodging. He then became angry and wanted to know why my father never stated that in the first place. Shortly afterwards on October 16, 1965 at 9:00 pm, he left our house and I had never seen him again. Apart from the above, he was interested in the Bible and discussed church matters with us. He attended all of our services, sang together, prayed together, and used communion. On the face of it, his faith was beyond reproach. He said he sometimes gets headaches. Besides his messy ways I did not notice anything abnormal about him. There was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal. His stories about traveling abroad was interesting. He was mostly quiet and very withdrawn – he spent a lot of time in his room.

In March 1966, I left for the Free State. I have not heard anything again from Tsafendas. The Wednesday before the end of August 1966 I arrived back in Cape Town. About two weeks later I saw Tsafendas's picture in Cape newspapers and that he was detained in connection with the murder of Dr. Verwoerd. We never discuss politics in our home. He also never talked politics. When the identity card was mentioned he indeed said he was unhappy that he could not be classified as a Coloured. However, he did not criticize the country's laws and made no negative remarks in our presence. Our church does not have a building and our services are held from house to house mostly. Our rallies are held at Mrs. B. Bezhuidenhout on the farm Bethany, Durbanville. The church in Cape Town is run by Mr. J. Johnson p/a J. Slater, "DELBY" Athlone Avenue, Plumstead. The belief is known as the Christian church. There are many branches of this faith throughout the world.

Statement taken by D/Sergt. D.J.V. Troost.

HELEN DANIELS AFTER HER STATEMENT

Helen Daniels immediately after the assassination, aware that the press would soon or later find out about her, and in advice of her family and friends, went to complete seclusion in a family friend's house, the Snyders. She refused to speak to anyone and to make public appearances. The only people who saw her and spoke to her were the policemen who questioned her, a Post journalist for all of thirty seconds, and later Tsafendas's lawyers.⁷⁸³ According to the Sunday Times (Johannesburg), Daniels was questioned by the police for more than an hour.⁷⁸⁴

On September 18 two articles involving Helen Daniels appeared in the South African Press. One was at the Sunday Times and the other one at the Post. The Sunday Times contained an interview of her brother, Peter Daniels, where he twisted the facts and flatly lied about his sister's relationship with Tsafendas and how they had met. He told the newspaper that it was Tsafendas who had chased and written to Helen several times, but their meeting "did not result in a great friendship." He said, "Helen was not interested in marriage."⁷⁸⁵ This is a contradiction to the statement his sister gave to the police three days ago where she claimed that she heard about Tsafendas and wanted to meet him, so she asked for his address and she wrote to him.⁷⁸⁶ Tsafendas also made a similar statement to the police.⁷⁸⁷ However, Peter Daniels was not the only who twisted the facts in this article. A member of the Snyder family had also stated that "there was never a question of Helen and Tsafendas coming together as husband and wife. She was not interested in this. She has devoted her life to missionary work."⁷⁸⁸

The second article in the Post, written by Security Police and later BOSS agent Gordon Winter, also contained an interview by Peter Daniels. Peter Daniels again completely twisted the facts behind his sister's meeting with Tsafendas. He claimed in this interview that "Tsafendas first came into contact with Miss Daniels through religious correspondence early last year." Tsafendas then travelled to Cape Town to meet her and while he was staying in her house he "became very fond" of her and "later told friends that he loved her. But Helen did not return his love. She was not impressed by his rather abrupt manner and general untidiness." She told her father, "Demetrio does not come up to the standards I am looking for in a man." When she was forced to make this clear to Tsafendas, he told her family: "She would have been just right for me ... It's a pity she is so fussy."⁷⁸⁹

The article suggests that Winter has interviewed Helen Daniels and this is how he got some of these information as it also claims that she asked the Post not to publish her picture.

⁷⁸³ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), 'Tsafendas's Brothers are Quizzed', 18 September 1966: 18: 5; Gordon Winter in a personal interview with Dr. James Sanders on behalf of the author, 19 August 2016.

⁷⁸⁴ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), 'Tsafendas's Brothers are Quizzed', 18 September 1966: 18: 5.

⁷⁸⁵ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), 'Tsafendas's Brothers are Quizzed', 18 September 1966: 18: 5.

⁷⁸⁶ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

⁷⁸⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁷⁸⁸ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), 'Tsafendas's Brothers are Quizzed', 18 September 1966: 18: 5.

⁷⁸⁹ Winter, 'I Jilted Tsafendas, Says Coloured Girl', The Post, 18 September 1966: 1.

However, Helen was not interviewed since she was still in seclusion and the remarks were in fact made by her brother, Peter. Winter saw her and spoke to her for thirty seconds on her doorstep. She refused to comment or answer any questions but asked that her picture should not be published, which the newspaper respected.⁷⁹⁰ It is understandable that the member of the Snyder family and Peter Daniels tried to protect Helen's reputation, especially since she was a missionary of the Christian Church, as it would probably have sounded bad for her if it had become known that she had written letters to Tsafendas, the man who was just assassinated Dr. Verwoerd, asking him to meet and marry. Peter Daniels would be a leading defence witnesses in the forthcoming summary trial and he would again lie and misrepresent the case.

Helen Daniels was not asked to testify at Tsafendas's trial, either for the defence or the State, even though she had been close to Tsafendas and must have been an important witness. On the other hand, her brother and her sister-in-law, neither of whom knew Tsafendas as well as Helen, testified for the defence. As we will see, their testimony was a complete contradiction of the statement given to the police by Helen Daniels. We will examine this case in the Summary Trial Chapter.

MARY KATHLEEN SCOTT⁷⁹¹

Housewife, Woodstock.

I am a housewife and reside at the above address, where I keep some table boarders. Demitrio Tsafendas had his meals with me for about six weeks prior to his working in Parliament house. I do not remember the exact dates but he was with me part of June 66 and July 66 up to two days after his commencing work at Parliament. Before that he was out of work, and had newspaper cuttings to show that he was looking for a job. Whilst out of work he showed some of my boarders a newspaper cutting about a job in S.W.A. It was shown in my presence and purporting to be an engineering job to which a good salary was attached. The boarders suggested that he take the job. He made an odd remark "Oh! No, I cannot go to S.W.A. I have a job to do here before I go back."

⁷⁹⁰ Gordon Winter in a personal interview with Dr. James Sanders on behalf of the author, 19 August 2016.

⁷⁹¹ Mary Kathleen Scott statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

I knew nothing of his life, and that he might have been to S.W.A. previously, apart from him mentioning that he has been to S.W.A. and said that S.W.A. was the only place where one can make money. The remark sounded odd for reason of him being unemployed at time, and knowing that there was money in S.W.A. Whilst the accused had his meals with me, I found him to be very poorly mannered - so-much-so that I named him "Vark" (pig). His clothing however was clean and always tidy. He even appeared fussy about his clothing. I never had conversations with him, as I disliked his manners, eventually giving him notice for that reason. He was a very restless man. I never got the impression that he could be mentally unbalanced. To me he appeared perfectly normal. He talked to the boarders about being a Christian, belonging to no religion or church etc.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

COMMENTS ON SCOTT'S STATEMENT

Pamela Abrahams, a South African, who often visited Scott's house along with her Greek boyfriend and future husband, Panagiotis Peroglou, said Tsafendas was very well mannered, especially with women. She does not remember him having bad manners or being named "The Pig" by Scott. According to Abrahams, "Tsafendas was a gentleman. He would always get up from the table to greet you and he always offered you his seat or went to find you a seat... he was certainly very well mannered."⁷⁹²

Panagiotis Peroglou was a good friend of Scott but also disagreed with her characterization of Tsafendas. He does not remember Scott ever complaining about Tsafendas or calling him a pig and is very surprised to hear such comments. Peroglou remembers Tsafendas as being "very well mannered, especially with women and elderly people ... he was very talkative and friendly and he had a lot of respect for the women. He would bring them a chair or he would offer his chair." Peroglou remembers Tsafendas as being "well educated, especially about Greece's history and Christianity."⁷⁹³ Peroglou and Abrahams associated with Tsafendas for about three months and both "never got the impression that he might be insane. He never did or said anything to make us think he was ⁷⁹² Pamela Abrahams in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

⁷⁹³ Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

insane. He was definitely sane.” Peroglou and Abrahams do not remember Tsafendas talking politics.⁷⁹⁴

Elias Constantaras, another Greek, was friendly with Scott and often ate at her house. He was surprised to be told that she called Tsafendas a pig, saying she never did so in front of him. He also strongly disagreed that Tsafendas had poor manners. The only complaint he remembered from Scott, which she mentioned two or three times, was that Tsafendas talked politics persistently at the table in front of her boarders and she suspected him of being a Communist. According to Constantaras, Scott was afraid of Tsafendas talking like that and she asked him to tell Tsafendas to stop. Constantaras did so and though Tsafendas was not happy that Scott did not tell him herself, he complied with her request. In terms of mental stability, Constantaras remembers Tsafendas as being “perfectly fine. He was not insane. None of us ever got the impression that he could be insane ... I remember I was impressed by the way he was talking ... he talked very nicely; he knew how to speak properly. He sounded like an educated man ... he was very friendly and easy-talking with everyone ...”⁷⁹⁵

Stratis Vamvarapis, another Greek, lodged with Mrs. Scott at the same time as Tsafendas and knew him for about a year. He found Tsafendas to be a “strange man - strange as a character, not mentally strange. He was easily crossed when he disagreed with people.” Initially, Tsafendas had little to say, but became more talkative as they grew to know each other, though he never discussed politics with him. Tsafendas never appeared to be schizophrenic or insane and he never heard him mention a tapeworm. He recalls him eating a lot but does not remember if his manners were messy and he never heard Mary Scott call Tsafendas “The Pig.”⁷⁹⁶

JOHANNES JACOBUS BOTHA⁷⁹⁷

White male, 51 years. Security officer at South African Pulp and Paper Industries, Mandeni.

On or about 7 May 1965 I was on duty at the service office at the entrance to the factory. I received a call about a fight that is going on at the living quarters which are used ⁷⁹⁴ Pamela Abrahams and Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

⁷⁹⁵ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

⁷⁹⁶ Stratis Vamvarapis in a personal interview, 31 May 2016.

⁷⁹⁷ Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

by workers of the different contractors. A little while later after I received the call, a white male of Greek descent, Vergos, reported to me and told me about the incident, which happened to be of the said fight. During his conversation, he told me that Demitrio Tsafendis, the person with whom he was involved in a fight, is the biggest communist in the Republic of South Africa. I told him that I will bring it to the attention of the South African Police. I was not present when the police investigated the matter on the day.

On a certain date afterwards I did in fact share Vergos' comment with a member of the South African Police of Inyoni. I cannot remember to whom I conveyed the information. It had to be one of the white members of the force at Inyoni. The following members were stationed at Inyoni during that time: Germishuys, Francois Ferreira and Jannie Fourie. At a later date, after the fight occurred, a Roman Catholic priest also declared to me that Demitrios Tsafendas is a communist. In both cases, there were no reasons given as to why Tsafendis was suspected of being a communist. The name of the priest is not known to me. I suspect that he is from Stanger. He was dressed in a black suit with a collar that Priests usually wear. He had a full beard. That's all I know about the case.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. 23505 S/Sergt. at 11 p.m.

RICHARD POGGENPOEL⁷⁹⁸

Adult Coloured Male, Rosedene, 10 Walnut Street, Lansdowne.

I'm a member of the "Mission." Our church actually has no name, but is the same faith as Helen Daniels of Belville. Around December 1965, I met Demitrios Tsafendas through our church, at O'Ryan of Westminster Street, Lansdowne. We knew that he was sleeping with the O'Ryan children and there was little space and so offered that he can come stay with us until he finds accommodation and work. During December 1965 he stayed with us for 14 days. During his stay with us, he behaved very well. He attended our services and was generally quiet. He wrote many letters for work and during the day went searching for a job.

⁷⁹⁸ Richard Poggenpoel statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

There was no mention or impression that he was mentally abnormal. He lived a completely normal life. He left as a result of a letter we received. The author pointed out that our daughter who lives with us and who is widowed, could receive a bad reputation because an unmarried man is living with us. I showed him the letter and he made his own decision to leave. He went to live with O’Ryan again. He never talked about any political issues. He just told us of his travels around the world and said that he had faced many troubles. He did not pay lodging, but later brought R4 to the woman.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. 23505 S/Sergt.

COMMENTS OF POGGENPOEL TO THE AUTHOR REGARDING HIS STATEMENT

Richard Poggenpoel stated in a personal interview that Tsafendas often talked politics when people were around, but he personally had no interest in politics. He remembers Tsafendas being “very much against apartheid.” He did not reveal this to the police because he thought that it would be better for Tsafendas.⁷⁹⁹ As we will see, Patrick O’Ryan, a very good friend of Poggenpoel, also did not tell the police about his political discussions with Tsafendas for the same reason.⁸⁰⁰

⁷⁹⁹ Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013.

⁸⁰⁰ Patrick O’ Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

FRIDAY, 16 SEPTEMBER 1966

TSAFENDAS'S NAME MENTIONED IN THE HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY

That day was the first time that Tsafendas's name was heard in the Assembly after the assassination. It was mentioned by Sir de Villiers Graaff, the Leader of the Opposition. He raised the question of Tsafendas's entry into South Africa, the conditions under which he came into the country and how he was granted permanent residence. He stated that he would not pursue the matter himself since the Commission of Enquiry planned to investigate all this.⁸⁰¹ ⁸⁰¹ The Cape Argus, 'Dramatic Moment as Name of Tsafendas is Mentioned', 16 September 1966: 4.

SATURDAY, 17 SEPTEMBER 1966

STATEMENTS

RALPH LIGHTON⁸⁰²

Employed with Marine Diamond Corporation, Cape Town. 9 a.m.

I have known Demitrio Tsafendas for the period of 9-10 weeks, approximately February - March 1966 when he was employed with M.D.C. aboard the Colponton in S.W.A. He was employed as machine operator. For the first half of his employment he worked under the maintenance foreman Mr. Reginald Spence. I got to know that he was lazy and inefficient, so I was requested to show him the care of two auction-dredge pumps which was much less work, and responsibility. By that time I have had conversation with him and knew he was of mixed Nationality and spoke Portuguese which appeared to be his home language. I found him to be a complete boar. He used to mix with the coloureds rather than with the Europeans. He got good audience from them.

He never mentioned to me what his political lookout was. He spoke about his world-wide travels and a woman keeping him in Germany. He stated frequently that he was about to get married, as he was 45 and thought is high time to get a wife. He never complained that he was physically incapacitated. He was a good eater. I have knowledge that he resigned for the following reasons - i.e. that the small transfer boat to get to our transport boat the Marina was too dangerous. He also said that the climbing of the ladders were too much for him.

I am fluent in Portuguese which I spoke to him. I never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers, but despite his former career in Merchant Marine, was unsuitable for our work. He stated that he had been a steward most of his time. He mentioned having been to Canada, the U.S.A about 6 yrs., to Britain, all of Europe, Turkey, Italy, Israel, North Africa, Greece, Portuguese East Africa - stating that he had a Portuguese Passport. He might be known to a security man of M.D.C. a Mr. Martincich (23 Yrs. old) Accused said he had Jewish Religion.

⁸⁰² Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

PATRICK O'RYAN

As we will see in the chapter on the Summary Trial, according to the trial transcripts Patrick O'Ryan was also interviewed this day. The following dialogue took place between Attorney-General Willem van den Berg and Patrick O'Ryan:

VAN DEN BERG: You made a statement to the Police on the 17th September 1966, is that correct?

O'RYAN: Most probably. Yes, the date must be.

VAN DEN BERG: You can have a look at the statement?

O'RYAN: I did make a statement. Correct.⁸⁰³

O'Ryan's statement was not found in the archives. His statement is extremely important, as we will see in the following chapter, because of remarks by Attorney-General van den Berg during his cross examination of O'Ryan. After O'Ryan had referred at length to the importance of the tapeworm in Tsafendas's life, van den Berg noted that O'Ryan had not mentioned anything to the police about the tapeworm and wondered why he had not done so since he claimed that it was so important to Tsafendas. According to the trial transcript, the following are excerpts from Patrick O'Ryan's statement to the police on September 17, 1966: "He (that is the accused) stayed with me for approximately 3 months, 2 weeks of which he stayed at Poggenpoel's, but afterwards returned to me. He read the newspaper and it was apparent that he was against the state policy of both South Africa and Portugal. He made the impression with me that he was favourable towards the Coloureds and he repeatedly applied to be classified as a Coloured.

He said that he had a blank identity card, in other words his race was not recorded on it. He labelled the apartheid policies as unfair. His reasoning was not very intelligent. I did not encourage him, because we advocate the Biblical idea of subservience to a Government. His spiritual view seemed confused, but he was not spiritually or mentally disturbed. On the contrary, even though I did not consider him to be particularly intelligent, he was well spoken and had good vocabulary. I never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind.”⁸⁰⁴

⁸⁰³ Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

COMMENTS ON PATRICK O’RYAN’S STATEMENT

Patrick O’Ryan later said that Tsafendas was “very anti-white, excitedly referring to the treatment of Blacks and Coloureds by the Whites.” One day, Tsafendas told him that if he “ever got hold of Dr. Verwoerd, he “would bash his skull.” O’Ryan said he did not reveal any of their political discussions to the police when they questioned him about Tsafendas.⁸⁰⁵

PRESS REPORTS OF THE DAY

On this day, the first physical description of Tsafendas’s mixed-race mother appeared in the Press, in a Rand Daily Mail interview with Mr. Guglielmo (Willy) Conte, a friend of Tsafendas’s father, Michalis. In an interview with the paper’s reporter, Hazel Goldstein, Conte said he met Michalis soon after he (Conte) arrived in Lourenço Marques, aged eighteen, and they became business associates. He said Michalis and Dimitri Tsafendas’s mother lived together on the first floor of a white, two-storey house on 24th July Avenue, Lourenço Marques. He described Dimitri’s mother as “a plump, clean-looking woman with ivory-coloured skin.” She dressed in “native clothing – a print blouse with a white sash around her body.” Conte said that contrary to reports, Demetrios was not rejected by the family. Except for his school years in Middleburg, he said that he had always stayed with his father and Greek stepmother and their family.⁸⁰⁶

⁸⁰⁴ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁸⁰⁵ Patrick O’ Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

⁸⁰⁶ Goldstein, ‘Tsafendas Timid and Puny As A Boy’, Rand Daily Mail, 14 September 1966.

SUNDAY, 18 SEPTEMBER 1966

No statements or any other evidence were found in the archives for this day.

PRESS REPORTS OF THE DAY

The Sunday Times headlined its top story, 'Tsafendas's brothers are quizzed' by the police. It said Durban, Johannesburg and Cape Town members of the "Fellowship of Christ," to which Tsafendas belonged, had made statements to the police.⁸⁰⁷ They included Helen Daniels, who was interviewed by security officers for more than an hour. It was also the day when the two interviews which her brother Peter Daniels gave to the Post and the Sunday Times that were discussed earlier in this chapter were published. Finally, Attorney General van den Berg told the Sunday Times that Tsafendas would probably appear in court within the next fortnight. Mr. van den Berg said he had read some documents but new evidence was being investigated by the police.⁸⁰⁸

⁸⁰⁷ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), 'Tsafendas's Brothers are Quizzed', 18 September 1966: 18: 5.

⁸⁰⁸ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), 'Tsafendas's Brothers are Quizzed', 18 September 1966: 18: 5.

MONDAY, 19 SEPTEMBER 1966

TSAFENDAS'S SECOND STATEMENT

Tsafendas's interrogation is again recorded this day and this is his second statement found at the archives. As we will see, unlike the previous one, it contains the questions Tsafendas was asked to answer. This is his statement:

Further Questioning of Demitrio Tsafendas at 2.45 p.m. on 19/9/66 by Maj. Rossouw⁸⁰⁹

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Is it true that you told the American authorities that you have joined the Communist Party at the age of 20?

TSAFENDAS: I cannot remember having made such a statement to the American authorities. I was a member of the Communist Party. I joined the Communist Party just before the war in Johannesburg. I was about 19-20 years old then. It was during 1936, 37 or 36 - I cannot remember the date.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Where and with whom did you join the party?

TSAFENDAS: I was a member of the boiler workers and welders union when I joined at the Trades Hall in Johannesburg. I cannot remember whom I joined with - I mean who the person was - but I remember having received a Communist membership card and I used to pay two shillings and sixpence monthly as membership fees. I continued paying membership fees until I left in 1941. I paid my membership fees at an office in the Trades Hall. I paid my Trade Union fees at an office and the C.P. membership fees at a different office in the Trades Hall.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Did you ever attend Communist Party meetings?

TSAFENDAS: I did attend meetings on the City Hall steps in Johannesburg. I went there to listen to their speeches. They used to carry banners. I remember one Wolfson and one named Joffe who made speeches on the City Hall steps. I also went to see two film shows in the public library. The Communist Party was legal then and so was the Ossewa Brandwag. I made one mistake and that is that I told no one that I was leaving South Africa. After I left Johannesburg I paid no more monthly subscriptions. That was the end of my Communist Party membership.

⁸⁰⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Did you contact members of the Communist Party in America?

TSAFENDAS: No, I did not. I did not attend any C.P. rallies in America. I don't remember telling anybody in America that I was a member of the S.A. Communist Party.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Did you associate yourself or attend any Communist Party meetings elsewhere in the world?

TSAFENDAS: No, I did not. I attend meetings at Hyde Park, but not Communist Party meetings. I also attended Labour Party meetings in England at Caxton Hall, but they were not Communist meetings.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Did you lose interest in Communist Party activities after you left South Africa?

TSAFENDAS: I was an inactive person as far as politics were concerned and for that reason did not maintain political connections. Since leaving South Africa I did not consider myself a member of the Communist Party.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Can you name the hospitals in all the countries where you were hospitalised during your absence from South Africa?

TSAFENDAS: I received medical treatment at the Boston Psychosomatic Hospital, Sheepshead Bay Hospital for seamen outside New York, the Grafton State Hospital, Massachusetts. I also received medical attention at St. Pancras Hospital, London and at the Isle of Wight. In Europe I was in Oxensoll Krankenhaus in Hamburg and in the Tropical State Hospital in Lisbon. I was also a patient at the Government Hospital in Beira. I was in Addington Hospital in Durban for a state wound on my right arm. I also had an ear, nose and throat operation in Grootte Schuur Hospital, Gape Town during 1966.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Can you tell me what the nature of your illnesses were for which you received hospital treatment at the various hospitals?

TSAFENDAS: The diagnosis for being sent, to Boston Psychopathic Hospital was depressive psychosis. At Sheepshead Bay Hospital for depressive psychosis and exhaustion, at Grafton State Hospital for schizophrenia. That means a split personality. At St. Pancras Hospital I was also treated for depressive psychosis and at the Isle of Wight I was also hospitalised on account of a nervous condition. Also at Oxensoll⁸¹⁰ Krankenhaus I received treatment for a nervous condition. I don't know what happened but I woke up after receiving shock treatment. At Beira I was hospitalised for recovery from an exhaustive condition.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: I think you left Lisbon out.

TSAFENDAS: There they must have done something to my brain because I was never the same again because I was always suffering from a persecution complex. After that something went wrong with my heart and my nervous system. The last time I was hospitalised for a nervous condition was in 1953 at Oxensoll Krankenhaus.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: You told Gen. van den Bergh about a girl you were interested in somewhere in Woodstock and whom you wanted to marry.

TSAFENDAS: Oh, her name was Miss Baxendella, an Indian girl - she was a mixed breed between Indian and Coloured. That was about six months ago when I was interested in her. She works in a shop near Woodstock Police Station. It is a grocery shop on the right hand side just before you reach Woodstock Police Station from Cape Town. I cannot remember the name of the shop but I can point it out to you.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: When did you first become a member of the Christian Church?

TSAFENDAS: I got to know about the church in 1933. To become a full member one has to be baptized, I left here in 1941 without being baptized. I was baptized in Greece (Athene) on the beach in 1948 or 1949.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Is it true that you must be self-supporting before you can become a member of the Christian Church?

TSAFENDAS: Yes, you must work. I do not consider myself a very faithful member because I did not comply with the requirements of the church.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Can you describe your church to me?

TSAFENDAS: My church consists of a group of people coming together holding a communion of gospel meetings. We have no church temple and we hold meetings according to where you stay. If I stay in Woodstock I attend meetings in the area where I stay. I used to attend meetings in Pinelands. We hold a convention once a year. Last year I attended a convention on n Mr. Bezuidenhout's farm in Durbanville.

⁸¹⁰ The correct spelling is Ochsenzoll.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Can you speak, read and write Arabic language?

TSAFENDAS: I can only speak a little bit of Arab language from what I learned in Egypt, Jordan, Beirut and Siria.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Name the languages in which you are fluent, others which you know less fluently and those in which you can help yourself?

TSAFENDAS: I am fluent in English, Greek, Portuguese. I am less fluent in German, French and Italian. I can help myself in Arabic, Afrikaans, Shangaan. I only know a few words in Turkish.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Were you ever indoctrinated by any person to commit the unlawful act for which you are now charged?

TSAFENDAS: No, I was not. I did not do it at the instigation of anyone. I did it on my own because I thought it was the right thing.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: It appears that you planned the assault on Dr. Verwoerd over a long period - can you tell me when your planning to kill Dr. Verwoerd first started?

TSAFENDAS: The idea of destroying Dr. Verwoerd entered my mind a few days after I started work as a messenger in the House of Assembly. I saw an opportunity to do so in the House of Assembly because I was inside the house. I first thought of buying a gun with which I could shoot him and then run away. I did in fact buy a gun from the crew of the Eleni hut I found that the gun was useless. I bought the gun at the end of the month when I got my pay. I went there before to try and get the gun but I had no money. I then waited until I got my pay. I was going to buy a Beretta but the man didn't keep his word and gave me the other pistol. He made all kinds of excuses. It was only after I found that the gun was useless that I decided on using a knife.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Did you ever discuss your plans of wanting to destroy Dr. Verwoerd with any person?

TSAFENDAS: No, I did not. The crew of the Eleni were discontented because they could not go out and have a good time with the Coloured women. They were bitter about not being able to have the woman outside but I did not discuss my intentions with any of them. I remember some of them mentioning, during casual conversation, that these people should be taught a lesson. The "bosun" was one for example. He did not put it in the same words as I put it. I explain in Greek what he said. His words is translated in English to mean; "The South Africans need a good raping.” I did not express my intentions to the “bosun” or anyone else. I cannot say that the strong feelings of the Eleni crewmen persuaded me to do what I already had in mind, but it did contribute to the final execution of the deed. None of them knew of what I was going to do. They asked me what I wanted the pistol for and I said I wanted it for self-defence.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: And if you managed to escape after assassinating the Prime Minister, where were you going to hide yourself?

TSAFENDAS: I was going to find refuge on the tanker, the Eleni, which I knew was sailing to South America. My plans were, however, upset when I could not get the right pistol. The boat sailed on the Saturday before the Tuesday on which I stabbed the Prime Minister.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Did you know that the Eleni had sailed before you attacked, the Prime Minister? If so, what were your plans to get away?

TSAFENDAS: Yes, I knew the ship had already left. I never thought about hiding if I had to do the job with a knife. I didn't have much of a chance of getting away when using a knife. I didn't care much and didn't give it a second thought that I would be caught. I just happened to do it that way. I always had a grudge against the South African Government on account of its racial policies and I hated Dr. Verwoerd because he was a foreigner - a Hollander.

This statement was read over to the deponent and he was asked whether the contents was correct in every respect, he acknowledged that the replies to questions put to him were answered freely and voluntarily without him being forced to do so in any way.

Are you prepared to sign this statement? Yes, I am prepared to sign it.

You have listened to the statement as read over to you. Is it correct? Yes, it is correct. Do you wish to read it over yourself? No, sir, I do not.

(SGD) DEMETRIOS TSAFENDAS

19/9/1966: CAPE TOWN

ANALYSIS OF TSAFENDAS'S STATEMENT

Once again, Tsafendas does not mention the tapeworm, even when he is asked why he was hospitalised in each hospital. Furthermore, he maintains that he did “the right thing” and that he did not care about the consequences. He also repeats the assertion that he bought a gun from the Eleni and adds that he was planning to escape after the assassination by hiding in the tanker. Tsafendas also referred to the Eleni extensively in his statements on the 11th and now he does so again, therefore it is natural to assume that he also mentioned it when he was first interrogated by General van den Bergh.

Fourteen seamen from the Eleni who came to know Tsafendas in Cape Town and were interviewed by the author all strongly deny that any of the crew were upset about the Immorality Act, describing such a claim as ridiculous. They said those who wanted to have sex with Coloured South African women went ahead and did so, not on board, and Tsafendas knew about it. None of them was “bitter” or discontented. Only very few actually wanted to have sex with Coloured women but opportunities were available for those who did. Some of the crewmen had asked Tsafendas about women and he told them he did not know any prostitutes. The men eventually found ready access to both White and Coloured women through a Greek man named Panagiotis (Peter),⁸¹¹ who was not known personally to Tsafendas, though Tsafendas was aware that he had “business” dealings with some of the crew.

Why would Tsafendas claim that the crew was discontented if there was no problem about sex? The men who were interviewed by the author suggested the existence of a political factor, specifically a hostility among the crew to apartheid. Some of the crew, especially those who were friendly with Tsafendas, were Communists and adopted an unfriendly attitude towards White South Africans since they considered them to be fascists. After the township visit, several of the crew began referring to South Africans as Nazis. Some of the men, especially Vasilakis and Zafiriadis, became quite aggressive towards visiting White South Africans. Vasilakis even got into an argument with one South African supplier over the treatment of the Black South Africans. Tsafendas told them to be careful about the way they talked because they could get into trouble. Vasilakis, Mastromanolis and Kambouris believe Tsafendas might have used that as an excuse to explain the hostility of the crew towards White South Africans that might have been reported to the police after the assassination.⁸¹²

⁸¹¹ None of the witnesses remembers his surname.

Mastromanolis confirms to the author that he said South Africans needed “a good whipping.” He says he made the comment after Tsafendas organised the township visit. Mastromanolis repeated this comment several times in reference to White South Africans he happened to encounter, saying things like, “What a good whipping this racist needs.” The phrase soon became a running joke within the crew and others would repeat it when they came across White South Africans. Tsafendas told Mastromanolis and the others to be cautious since Greek visitors to the Eleni could also be supporters of apartheid. It was also after the township visit that another sailor, probably Dimitris Zafiriadis, said that the South Africans needed to be “taught a lesson.” Both comments were the result of seeing conditions in the Black township and the men’s recognition of the reality of apartheid and had nothing to do with the Immorality Act.

Some of the seamen believe, and it sounds logical, that Tsafendas lied to the police in order to protect them. Their theory is that Tsafendas came to believe that some of the South Africans and the Greek-South Africans coming on board noticed the hostility of the crew towards them or heard them talking negatively about South Africa and that Tsafendas used the Immorality Act as a reason for their hostile behaviour. The fact that Tsafendas attributed Mastromanolis’s comment to the Immorality Act and not to the township visit strongly suggests that he did so to protect him. He may have feared that Greek visitors heard the comment and if so would have told the police about it. Of course, all of this is speculation and the author is not in position to know for certain what Tsafendas’s motives were in referring to the Immorality Act. However, the fact is that the crewmen were not discontented about the Act and freely admit that whoever wanted to have sex with a Coloured woman went ahead and did so.⁸¹³

The importance of the Eleni would also be highlighted later by the Commission of Enquiry for four reasons:

- That Tsafendas visited the vessel almost every day for forty-two days before the assassination, ⁸¹² Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁸¹³ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

- That he bought a weapon from the crew.
- That he was intending to escape aboard this ship.
- Three days before the assassination, Dr. Verwoerd's death was discussed on-board the Eleni. This would be the most intriguing part of the Commission of Enquiry's report.

On the question of the Christian Church, Tsafendas is lying or mistaken or just not very clear about when he first heard of it. He stated here that it was in 1933. He would then have been aged fifteen and living in Lourenço Marques. It is possible that he meant 1943, when he was in hospital in the United States. He told several people he first came across the sect in an American hospital through the person of Tom Tuff. Tsafendas also said this to the doctors in the Grafton State Hospital in 1946. All of the witness interviewed by the author who knew Tsafendas in the 1930s stated flatly that Tsafendas was not associated at the time with this sect.

Tsafendas also declared in the above statement that he got the idea of killing Dr. Verwoerd after he began working in Parliament. In fact, he later claimed that previously he hung around Parliament's precincts to work out whether it would be possible to shoot Dr. Verwoerd or to kill him with a bomb. It was while doing this that, by chance, he got the opportunity to work there. When he realised he could easily kill Dr. Verwoerd, he did not hesitate. He considered that he had the chance of getting rid of a tyrant and if he had not done so, he would have regretted it all his life. He told the police at the time and repeated it thirty years later, that he hoped by killing Dr. Verwoerd "things would change" because Dr. Verwoerd was "the brains behind apartheid." He considered him to be a "monster" and an "evil person." He knew that things would not change overnight, but he hoped the prime minister's death would be a stepping stone towards the end of apartheid.⁸¹⁴

Tsafendas declares in his statement that "I always had a grudge against the South African Government on account of its racial policies and I hated Dr. Verwoerd because he was a foreigner - a Hollander." Tsafendas characterised Dr. Verwoerd in a similar fashion in his interview with Dr. Sakinofsky immediately after the assassination. It is true that Dr. Verwoerd was born in Amsterdam, Holland, but Tsafendas was clearly using the word in his own wider sense. He was not speaking in terms of citizenship, rather from his personal ideology in which "foreigners" were colonialists and oppressors, such as the ruling Whites in South Africa and the Portuguese in Mozambique. Tsafendas considered Rhodesia and South ⁸¹⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

Africa, as well as Mozambique and all the colonized countries in Africa and around the world, to be “occupied lands,” another term he routinely used. His belief was that pre-independent African countries, as well as South Africa and Rhodesia under the oppressive minority rule of White racist dictators such as Dr. Verwoerd and Ian Smith, were “occupied lands,” settled by a ruling minority of foreigners, whereas they should be governed on a democratic basis by the people who were born in those countries, be they Black or White.⁸¹⁵ In 1964, Tsafendas had clearly expressed this belief after his arrest in Mozambique where he was accused by PIDE of “making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses.”⁸¹⁶ When interrogated by PIDE, Tsafendas “clearly stated he was in favour of the independence of Mozambique” and admitted that he wanted to see:

“A Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they White or Black, and therefore separated from the mother nation.”⁸¹⁷

This was a firmly held belief which he mentioned to numerous people. Furthermore, according to several witnesses who knew him exceptionally well, like Father Nikola Banovic, Andreas Babiolakis, Father Minas Constandinou, Fotini Gavasiadis, Helen Grispos, Ira Kyriakakis, Nikos Papadakis, Katerina Pnefma, Father Ioannis Tsafaridis and many others, Tsafendas routinely used the words “foreigners,” “occupiers”, or “conquerors” for all the Whites in Africa, including of course the Whites in South Africa, who supported authoritarian, minority, colonialist and oppressive regimes.⁸¹⁸ Tsafendas believed that all those who supported the Portuguese and the white Rhodesian Government were foreigners who had stolen the land from the native Mozambicans and Rhodesians and set themselves up as unilateral rulers. Equally, he believed that the apartheid government and the apartheid-supporting Whites in South Africa were also foreigners and occupiers who had seized and ⁸¹⁵ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

⁸¹⁶ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁸¹⁷ PIDE Record of questions, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁸¹⁸ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

settled native land forcibly removing and oppressing the Black South Africans. Thus, in referring to Dr. Verwoerd as a foreigner, Tsafendas was expressing his conviction that all colonialists/white supremacists in Africa were foreigners, people from other parts of the world illegally occupying African land.

In regard to Mozambique, Tsafendas's position at the time was that it was just a province, i.e. a colony, of Portugal, and the Portuguese who ruled it were therefore colonialists, foreigners, incomers from Europe. He believed the Portuguese had commandeered the land from its rightful owners. However, it should be noted that Tsafendas exempted Whites in Africa who backed majority rule from such characterizations, but considered as classic occupiers those settler Whites who had made large fortunes from vast tracts of land effectively stolen from the indigenous Blacks.⁸¹⁹

Furthermore, according to these several witnesses, Tsafendas considered apartheid to be a form of colonialism, not very different from the out-and-out colonialism of Mozambique and Rhodesia.⁸²⁰ We should note here that in 1963, the policy of apartheid had been declared by the South African Communist Party to be "colonialism of a special type."⁸²¹ It is possible that this pronouncement confirmed Tsafendas's own convictions on the subject.

Father Minas Constandinou told the author about Tsafendas's political ideas:

"Dimitris used to say that apartheid was like colonialism, because a few Europeans were ruling a land which belonged to Blacks because their ancestors had invaded and conquered it. I remember he used to call the Portuguese in Mozambique and I think the Whites in South Africa too, 'conquerors' and 'occupiers;' he considered Mozambique and South Africa to be 'occupied lands,' conquered by 'foreigners.'"⁸²²

⁸¹⁹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

⁸²⁰ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

⁸²¹ Nicholas Visser, "Postcoloniality of a Special Type: Theory and Its Appropriations in South Africa." The Yearbook of English Studies, Vol. 27, The Politics of Postcolonial Criticism (1997), p. 79; Harold Volpe, Race, Class and the Apartheid State, (London: James Currey, 1988), p. 28-35.

⁸²² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

As for Tsafendas seeing Dr. Verwoerd and the Whites in South Africa as “foreigners,” he was certainly not the only one who thought that way. Even Dr. Verwoerd himself acknowledged this idea in a speech on February 8, 1961:

“There are people who are far away and do not understand us. They see this southern point of Africa only as a White-dominated country in a large continent with over 200 million people who are black. And then they say we do not fit here, we are foreign to the body of Africa.”⁸²³

This is almost exactly as Tsafendas saw the racist Whites in South Africa and Africa in generally; as “foreigners.” Furthermore, Dr. Verwoerd was even seeing as a “foreigner” by members and supporters of his own Party who referred to him as “die Hollander”⁸²⁴; exactly as Tsafendas called him in his statement.

Tsafendas in his statement also gives a detailed account of his various hospitalizations, but he does not mention the tapeworm. What is more, he presents the diagnoses in a less serious fashion than it appeared in the hospital’s reports. For example, he says he was hospitalized on the Isle of Wight and at the Ochsenzoll Krankenhaus Hospital merely for a “nervous condition.” However, the diagnosis by both hospitals was that Tsafendas was suffering from a psychotic illness.⁸²⁵

As with Tsafendas’s previous statement, there are these questions: Could the police have forged it or imputed to Tsafendas things he did not say or did not mean? But then why would they work on something that was never going to be used? The statement was not tabled for the summary trial or the Commission of Enquiry.

⁸²³ Pelzer, Verwoerd Speaks: Speeches 1948-66, p. 494.

⁸²⁴ O’Meara, Forty Lost Years: The Apartheid State and the Politics of the National Party 1948-1994, p. 92; Osada, Sanctions and Honorary Whites: Diplomatic Policies and Economic Realities in Relations between Japan and South Africa, p. 8.

⁸²⁵ Dr. Harold Cooper’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

TSAFENDAS'S MEDICAL EXAMINATION

At 3.30 this day, and after Tsafendas had been interrogated by Major Rossouw, he was examined by a doctor. The doctor's name is indecipherable, but his medical report reads as follows:

"He (Tsafendas) complained of mild breathlessness at times and a feeling of discomfort in the throat. On examination, he appeared in good physical condition and nil abnormal was found in the chest. His temperature was 98.0 F. I came to the conclusion that he was suffering from hyperventilation at times and prescribed a multivitamin tablet containing phenobarbitone gr 1/2."

Signed: ... (Indecipherable name)...⁸²⁶

ACCURACY OF THE MEDICAL REPORT

The author is not in position to know the accuracy of this doctor's report, but as stated before, it must be read against a background of known collusion by physicians with the authorities in those years. Since collusion and cover-up were commonplace in apartheid South Africa, doubt must remain over any doctor's report concerning Tsafendas, especially with regard to his physical condition while in police custody.

STATEMENTS

DR. AUBREY RADFORD⁸²⁷

Specialist surgeon, Member of Parliament representing Durban Central Constituency. 12. p.m.

On 6/9/66 at about 2.13 p.m. I approached the main entrance to the debating chamber of the House of Assembly. This entrance is protected by a screen and as I approached from the northern end Dr. Verwoerd approached from the southern end accompanied by two members of Parliament with whom he was talking. I stopped to allow Dr. Verwoerd to go in before me. He and his companions entered and I followed immediately. Entering the House on the right side of the gangway, just before I reached the seat of the Chief Messenger, I was violently pushed from my left rear. This was so unusual that I glanced to see who had done it. I saw the back of a messenger going towards the left to where Dr. Verwoerd walked. I sat down in my seat almost opposite the seat usually occupied by the Prime Minister.

⁸²⁶ Memorandum to Maj. Rossouw re. Demitrio Tsafendas, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 3, NASA.

⁸²⁷ Dr. Aubrey Radford statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

I heard a scuffle and looking towards the sound I saw arms and legs struggling with someone at Dr. Verwoerd's seat. At the same time Sir de Villiers Graaff ran across and before he reached Dr. Verwoerd he shouted - "Doctor." I ran to Dr. Verwoerd across the floor and found Dr. Fisher already there. Dr. Verwoerd's face was bloodless, his left arm hung over the side of the bench. Dr. Fisher tore open his shirt and waist-coat. There was then visible a stab wound in the area behind which lay the heart. This wound was bleeding slightly and Dr. Fisher put his hand over this wound to control any bleeding. I felt Dr. Verwoerd's left pulse. It was completely absent and never returned. Dr. Fisher lifted his hand from the wound and there was no bleeding. Bleeding came from the wound in the left base of the neck, but had ceased when I looked at the wound. Dr. Morrison came to the second bench and Dr. Fisher asked him to give mouth to mouth breathing, which he did. Dr. Fisher then asked Dr. Morrison to go to his (Dr. Fisher's) office and bring down Coramine and a syringe. Dr. Morrison arrived with a full syringe which I passed to Dr. Fisher, who then injected it into the heart of Dr. Verwoerd. He asked for another syringe full which Dr. Morrison supplied quickly and I injected this into the same area. Dr. Fisher and I speaking quietly decided that Dr. Verwoerd was dead. We waited there until Dr. Verwoerd's body was removed by ambulance ... Coramine is a powerful stimulant for the heart, especially in the case of an emergency.

(SGD.) A.J.P. Louw 16457 SGT.

CHARLES EDWIN WOODS⁸²⁸

White Male, aged 64 years, supervisor at Fraser and Chalmers, Mandeni, Zululand.

On 19.4.1965, Demitrio Tsafendas took-up employment with Fraser and Chalmers, and was posted to Mandeni. He was recruited in Durban, and was employed as a Fitter and Turner. He was qualified as a Fitter and Turner and was a good tradesman. Demitrio Tsafendas was discharged on 9.5.1965 because he had been involved in a fight with another White male, Nicholas Vergos. Demitrio Tsafendas sustained a severe laceration of the right wrist. During the time Demitrio Tsafendas was employed by ay firm, I never had any discussions with him along political lines. We discussed his travels in which he related that he had visited many countries but made no mention of any countries which he may have visited behind the iron curtain.

On the 9.5.1965, Demitrio Tsafendas told me that the fight between him and Nicholas Vergos was as a result of a political argument. He did not state anything further. I also interviewed Nicholas Vergos, who was employed by Congella Erection, who told me that I should get rid of Demitrio Tsafendas “as he is a Communist.” Demitrio Tsafendas was not a person who mixed freely and kept to himself most of the time.

(SGD.) R.D. WILSON. D/SERGT.

COMMENTS ON WOOD’S STATEMENT

Two days after the assassination, Woods had described Tsafendas in an interview with The Cape Times as “a very good worker, far from being a crank, fairly intelligent, but a violent type.”⁸²⁹ ⁸²⁸ Charles Edwin Woods’s statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁸²⁹ The Cape Times, ‘Tsafendas in Brawl in Canteen’, 9 September 1966: 15.

TUESDAY, 20 SEPTEMBER 1966

LT. COL. VAN WYK'S REPORT⁸³⁰

On this day, Lt.-Colonel P.J.B. van Wyk wrote his first report "regarding the activities of Demitri Tsafendas in Rhodesia and Mozambique," from interviews he had conducted in both countries. The report was then sent to the offices of the Commissioner of the South African Police in Pretoria and of the Security Police in Cape Town. This is Lt.-Colonel P.J.B. van Wyk's report:

*A. The Commissioner,
South African Police,
Privatebag 94
Pretoria.*

*B. The officer in Charge,
Security Police
Cape Town.*

Activities: Dimitrio Tsafendas: Mozambique and Rhodesia.

Following my recent visit to Mozambique and Rhodesia and my investigation into the activities and background of the subject, I wish to report the following:

LOURENÇO MARQUES: 12.09.66

While at Lourenço Marques, I spoke with the following persons:

⁸³⁰ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

Members of the P.I.D.E:

Upon my arrival I was welcomed by Sub-Inspector A. Vaz and told that he received instruction from his headquarters in Lisbon to assist us wherever possible with the investigation in this matter, but that they must by no means be involved to such an extent that it came to the knowledge of other organizations and have possible international repercussions for their government. He briefly described the circumstances leading to the arrest and release of the subject at Beira during 1964/65, and promised to personally send a photocopy of the file to General van den Bergh.

George Liberopolis⁸³¹

George Ananiades

These people, both Greek, mentioned to me that they both went to school in Lourenço Marques and the Republic. During the beginning of 1965 they met the subject. He practically forced himself upon them and they treated him and often paid for his meals but further had nothing to do with him. He never spoke about politics with them. They describe him as a normal person with a very high-intelligence.

Manuel Hazis

He immigrated to Mozambique during 1963. During the beginning of 1965, he could not remember the date or period the subject came to his business, a bakery, and started a conversation with him. The subject said that he was an evangelist and he spoke out of the Bible often but never politics. He does not know Tsafendas and cannot furnish further information.

Mr. John Gianouris - Greek Vice Consul at Lourenço Marques

He is a literate and pleasant personality that has received much of his education in the Republic and without any doubt can be seen as a supporter of the Republican policy. He also met Tsafendas during the beginning of 1965 when Tsafendas called on him for financial assistance. Tsafendas could not convince him that he is a Greek citizen and therefore he did not meet Tsafendas's request. He describes the subject as a normal and intelligent person. Mr. John Gianouris promised to make the necessary further inquiries among the Greek community and disclose any information that may be of importance to me. I believe that he will do his utmost to obtain more information for us.

⁸³¹ The surname is misspelled; the correct spelling is Liberopoulos.

Mr. Vaz promised to investigate the allegations of Tsafendas having received money from the Republic.

BEIRA

Here I was met by the District commander of the Police, Captain Rui Tavara who was very helpful during my investigation there. He even had an office made available to me, and people who knew the subject were called to the office. I spoke to the following persons there:

Inspector Horacio Ferreira P.S. Police (Uniform Branch)

He is in charge of the police cells and informs me that Tsafendas was detained in the police cells at Beira for a period of around 14 days from 14 November 1964 due to the fact that he spread subversive propaganda to the Bantu people. According to him, Tsafendas is intense anti-white and went as far as to tell him that the Portuguese Government has never done anything for their non-whites. Otherwise Tsafendas was normal and he regarded him as a very intelligent person. During his detention, it was often seen that he read books which were written in Bantu languages, but never the Bible.

Stelios Marangos

He is the owner of a boarding house and knows the subject who stayed at his lodgings from 28 August 1964 to 8 October 1964. He was unemployed and had only paid his lodgings for the period 28 August to 28 September. When he left he said he was going to look for work at the firm that lies the pipeline from Beira to Rhodesia. During his stay in the boarding house he was very quiet and almost never spoke. It was often seen that he carried a Bible with him. He never talked politics.

John Verghis

He is the owner of a café in Beira and met the subject during 1964. However, he could not remember the month or date. On a day the subject entered his shop where he spoke to other people in the cafe. He then frequently visited the cafe where he spent time in the company of other Greeks. The subject was quiet and never spoke much and never about politics. It seemed to him that the subject always visited the café to see just if someone would give him something to eat or drink. After the subject left Beira, he once received a letter from him that was posted from Durban. In this letter he only enquires of lottery tickets. Tsafendas was not a drinker. He only saw him drinking a beer once. According to him Tsafendas was a normal person. On one occasion Tsafendas told him that he was arrested by the Security Police of Mozambique but that nothing could be proved against him. He did not say why he was arrested.

John Emmanuel Marvis

He was in the Scala Café on the day when Tsafendas entered the cafe. After they determined that he speaks Greek, he was invited to join him and the other Greeks who were present. After that he often came into the cafe and they sometimes bought him food and drink. On one occasion he placed a letter on the table in the cafe and said that he had received it from his sister in Rhodesia. He was very upset and said that his sister is coming to Beira for a marriage ceremony but told him that she does not want to see him whatsoever, because he is a disgrace to the family. He took off his hat, which he never removed, pointed to his hair and said: "You see, my father is a Greek and my mother is a coloured. That is reason why my brothers and sisters do not want anything to do with me." He also told them that he left Lourenço Marques during the last war and travelled around the world. He visited all the countries in Europe except a few. Tsafendas never talked politics. On one occasion, however, he spoke in favour of full integration and intermarriage between coloreds and whites. He said that it is high time that a new race came into being. Tsafendas never had money. He mentioned once that he sold household objects in Johannesburg and made a bit of money. On one occasion he borrowed 10 escudos from Mr. Marvis.

Mr. Marvis did not have a 10 escudo piece and therefore had given him 20 escudos. A few days later Tsafendas came to him and took a 100 escudo note from his money-wallet to repay him with. There was a pack of 100 escudo notes in his wallet. (This money is probably his wages for the four days when he worked at Beira for Huma Pipes. See attached documents marked "A"). During the time Tsafendas lived in Beira, he was away for about 20-30 days. After his return, he said that he worked at the firm that lays the pipeline, but that the Rhodesian government deported him for reasons unknown to him. He left Beira and was never seen again.

Captain P.A. Sanianos, the Greek Consul to Beira

He also visited the Scala Cafe often and was often in the company of the subject, Marvis and others had several conversations with him. He never talked politics and is regarded by him as a very intelligent person. On one occasion Tsafendas visited him at his office and requested help. He refused to help because he did not accept him as a Greek citizen. According to Mr. Sanianos, Tsafendas could also speak Russian. He was usually broke and took advantage others. Tsafendas once told him that he got R5000 from his family in Pretoria. Captain Sanianos is undoubtedly a supporter of the R.S.A policy and promised to convey all information to us regarding the background and associations of Tsafendas that came to his attention.

Jose Lopez Baltazar

He is attached to the fire department in Beira. He knows Demitrio Tsafendas and he met the latter at the beginning of 1965 when Tsafendas came to the fire department and asked permission to sleep on the premises because he had just been released from the police cells and had no money for lodging and food. Tsafendas slept on the premises for 10 nights and made sure that he arrived at mealtimes, he was then also always invited to join in the meal. He accepted Tsafendas as a white, but noticed that when Tsafendas was in the presence of whites he said little or nothing but was friendly and talkative with the Bantu. On one or two occasions Tsafendas, while talking with Bantu, stopped talking when he approached. Tsafendas left without thanking them for their hospitality and was never seen again.

In Beira, it was determined that he (Tsafendas) was examined there by a surgeon. I tried obtaining a copy of his report, but was told that we should formally apply for it; necessary steps are being taken.

RHODESIA

Mrs. C.C. Pneuma, the half-sister of subject.

During my conversation with her, she said she had already made a statement to the Rhodesian Security Police concerning what she knew about the subject. However, I asked her what he came to do at her and what he would have said. She told me that they had absolutely nothing in common, and that he only asked her for money, which she refused. It is noticeable that this lady is very upset about the events and that she never accepted the subject as a brother and had very little or nothing to do with him during her lifetime. She saw him at the beginning of 1964 in Pretoria and said that he talked a lot of nonsense.⁸³²

SUMMARY:

Copies of reports by Security Police of Rhodesia attached, labelled A, B, C & D.

According to available information received and reports by the Security Police of Rhodesia it seems that on 02.11.63 the subject went to Lourenço Marques with a Portuguese passport No. 6511/63 valid until 02.11.65. On 19.07.64 he entered Rhodesia for the first time and gave the following personal details: he is white, single and his nationality is Portuguese, last residence Proclamation Hill Cafe, West End, Pretoria and his career as a linguist, translator, interpreter and mechanic.

He was in possession of £50 and the reason for his visit was that he wanted to visit his sister at Marandellas Store, Marendellas, Rhodesia. He was issued with a temporary tourist permit, valid until 09.08.64. According to an endorsement on his permit, he entered Rhodesia again on 27.07.64. There is no record whatsoever of the date on which he left Rhodesia after his first entry in 1964, nor any indication from which country he came to Rhodesia. On 11.08.64, after the expiry of his tourist permit Tsafendas was asked to show a return ticket to South Africa or to deposit an amount if he wanted to extend his permit. At this stage he was looking for a job as linguist at the Public Services Board of Rhodesia. On 19.08.64, the Department of Immigration wrote a letter to Tsafendas and requested him to report to their offices. On the following day the Public Services Board was notified by the Department of Immigration that Tsafendas was in the country illegally and that they cannot give him employment in Rhodesia. He reported to the Immigration offices on 21.08.64 and said that he did not have money and was looking for work. He was told that he is not in possession of a police-certificate, and that the permit for his stay in Rhodesia which he must apply for will take four weeks to be issued and that he cannot be allowed to remain in the country. On this occasion, he stated that he was a missionary in Egypt and North Africa and that he is a member of a Christian community that is not regarded as a Church Fellowship and that it is from this community that he received the money for his train ticket to Rhodesia. He was ordered to leave the country the next day and crossed the border of Mozambique at Umtali the following day. From the 28th August 1964 to the 8th October 1964 he lived in the boarding house at Stelios Marangos Pension Gloria in Beira.

⁸³² Katerina Pnema's response regarding what she said to Lt. Col. van Wyk is the same as her statement to the Rhodesian Police.

After leaving the boarding house on the 9th October 1964, he again entered Rhodesia via Umtali on 09.10.64, and since he was not in possession of the necessary visa, he was declared a prohibited immigrant and sent out of the country. From there he went directly to Gondola near Beira, where he was arrested by the Security Police of Mozambique because of subversive activities on 16.11.64 while he worked at Hume Pipe, Gondola.

On 26.01.65, he was released again and slept for 10 days at the fire department in Beira. On 17.02.65 he demanded his wages for the few days he worked at Hume Pipe and the amount of 1644 escudos 40c was paid to him, which if it was paid in 100 escudo notes to him, 16 notes would make a thick pack. It is probably these notes which were seen in his possession by Mr. John Marvis. On the 5th March 1965 he left Beira per Indian Ocean liner Karanja for Durban. It is clear that during the period 22.08.64 to 05.03.65 he stayed in Beira.

It is therefore determined that he

- never talked politics with any whites; that he has no political soul mates among whites and that it is not at all possible to obtain any information regarding his political affiliations in Mozambique;*
- was most of the time without money and took advantage of others; (However, he was always neatly dressed);*

- for all purposes can be seen as a normal, intelligent person.
- was an outcast in his family, a fact that grieved him immensely;
- most probably as a result of this and knowing full well that he had Coloured blood in him, was intensely anti-white.

COMMENTS ON LT. COL. VAN WYK'S REPORT

First and foremost, the report confirms what everyone who was questioned by the South African police at the time said, that Tsafendas was not insane. Col. van Wyk concludes that he is a normal, intelligent person. His report also contains a statement by a Portuguese police officer that "Tsafendas is intensely anti-white" and believed "the Portuguese Government has never done anything for their non-whites." The policeman also thought Tsafendas was normal and he regarded him as "a very intelligent person." We have already discussed the "outcast" issue. Katerina Pnema said that everything she said to the author about her previous statement to the Rhodesian Police on September 13 also applied to the one she made to van Wyk.⁸³³

Col. van Wyk's statement that Tsafendas never talked politics is inaccurate, but this is what he was told. None of the Greeks who were questioned by the police would admit that he spoke to them for fear of being suspected as sympathisers and possibly accused of withholding information about someone who was talking against the Portuguese Government. George Ananiades did indeed tell the author that Tsafendas did not discuss politics with him. However, George Liberopoulos told the author that Tsafendas constantly spoke about politics, and that it was clear to him that he was "strongly in favour of independence for Mozambique." Tsafendas also admitted to Liberopoulos that he was a Communist. Liberopoulos told the author that he did not reveal this to the police because "I did not want them to know that. It was not a good time to say that you had been talking to someone who you knew to be a Communist and who was expressing anti-Portuguese ideas, especially after what he did (Tsafendas killing Verwoerd)."⁸³⁴ Several other witnesses, including all the members of Tsafendas's family,⁸³⁵ Patrick O'Ryan,⁸³⁶ Helen Grispos⁸³⁷ and ⁸³³ See Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁸³⁴ George Liberopoulos in a personal interview, 6 July 2015.

⁸³⁵ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

Richard Poggenpoel,⁸³⁸ harboured the same fears as Liberopoulos and would not tell the police about their political conversations with Tsafendas. According to Nick Papadakis, Ira Kyriakakis and Andreas Babiolakis also often present at political discussions with Tsafendas was John Marvis and John Verghis, who presumably adopted the same attitude to the police for the same reasons.⁸³⁹

Verghis testified that when he was in his café, Tsafendas “never spoke much and never about politics.” According to Andreas Babiolakis, Ira Kyriakakis and Nick Papadakis, all of whom knew Verghis well and visited his establishment over many years, this statement is untrue. They said Tsafendas often talked politics in the café and in Verghis’s presence. More importantly, it was in Verghis’s café that Tsafendas called for a toast to the FRELIMO rebels, an incident that became a local talking point. He bought a beer for everyone and asked them to drink with him, paraphrasing Mark Anthony in Shakespeare’s Julius Caesar, “Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your glasses.” However, when he called on them to drink to a recent attack by FRELIMO rebels, everyone froze and lowered their glasses untouched while Tsafendas downed his beer. Verghis politely asked Tsafendas to leave and he never returned, though he left for Durban just a few days later anyway.⁸⁴⁰ It was natural for Verghis to omit the above incident and pretend that Tsafendas never talked politics; all Greeks distanced themselves from Tsafendas at this fraught time.

The report’s conclusion that Tsafendas “was most of the time without money and took advantage of others” is accurate according to the information which Lt.-Colonel van Wyk collected. However, it must have been more than coincidence that such information came only from people who knew him in Beira. The police and the Commission questioned about two hundred witnesses⁸⁴¹ and it was only those in Beira who made such comments. None of ⁸³⁶ Patrick O’ Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁸³⁷ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

⁸³⁸ Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013.

⁸³⁹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

⁸⁴⁰ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

⁸⁴¹ The figure of 200 witnesses is arrived at as follows:

- 112 statements made to the police by witnesses who were questioned after the assassination were found in the archives. The study has established that at least another 37 witnesses were questioned but their statements were not found in the archives. However, these witnesses either spoke to the author about their interviews or the author found evidence that they were interviewed (the remaining 32 Eleni seamen, Eleni Vlachopoulos, Evangelia Nissiotis, Panagiotis Peroglou, and Elias Costantaras) or the content of their statements became known at the trial (Patrick O’Ryan). This takes the total of witnesses questioned by the police to at least 149. It is likely that there were further witnesses who were not located by the author and whose statements have gone missing, therefore we are not in position to know the exact number of people questioned by the police.

the witnesses in South Africa or elsewhere described Tsafendas in such terms, indeed some, such as Bornman and Pappas, testified that Tsafendas was the exact opposite and helped people financially.⁸⁴²

The fact that while he was in Mozambique Tsafendas had problems finding work, was arrested twice and spent three months in solitary confinement might have been contributing factors to any untoward behaviour. At one point during his stay, Tsafendas asked Nick Vlachopoulos, his brother-in-law, to sell some furniture which he had left in storage in Pretoria. Vlachopoulos did so and sent the proceeds to Tsafendas in Mozambique. It is unlikely that Tsafendas would have sold off his furniture unless he was in a desperate financial situation, since he could have done so before he left Pretoria and not left them in storage. The author also asked ninety-six witnesses whether Tsafendas was as described and all strongly denied it. Their statements and comments on the subject will be discussed in the chapter on the Commission of Enquiry.

When interviewed by the author, George Ananiades and George Liberopoulos denied ever telling van Wyk that Tsafendas had “practically forced himself upon them,” and both strongly condemned this use of words as being completely inaccurate. Ananiades remembers being questioned by the police, but he does not remember what he said in his statement. Anyway, he did not know Tsafendas well, and had only seen him only once or twice during the latter’s short stay in Lourenço Marques. When the author read to him the comment regarding Tsafendas “forcing himself upon them,” Ananiades said:

“No, no, no, no. It was nothing like that. I met him one day in Costa do Sol where we had coffee. We spoke and he said he was leaving the next day for South Africa. That was all. He never asked me to pay anything for him or to give him any money. Nothing. Never. I can’t say if he generally was a beggar, but he was not like that with me and did not give me any such impression. He did not look or act like a beggar. It is not true (that Tsafendas forced himself upon him). I don’t know why it is in my statement, but I never said anything like that.”⁸⁴³

• The Commission interviewed 105 people, including Tsafendas, thus 104 witnesses. However, 53 of these had also been questioned by the police, which gives us 51 new witnesses. Therefore the total number of witnesses questioned by the police and the Commission is at least 200.

⁸⁴² Jacobus Johannes Bornman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Rand Daily Mail, ‘Tsafendas: In the Eyes of A Friend’, 14 September 1966.

⁸⁴³ George Ananiades in a personal interview, 21 June 2016.

George Liberopoulos associated more than Ananiades with Tsafendas during the latter's short stay in Lourenço Marques, and they met again later in Beira. Liberopoulos does not remember what he told the police, but he too denies that Tsafendas "forced himself upon them." He told the author that when he first met Tsafendas, he had paid for his dinner over Tsafendas's protests because he was "a stranger in the town," and it was a Greek tradition that those who lived there paid for a visitor's dinner. The next day, "he (Tsafendas) insisted on paying for both" of their meals. Liberopoulos also told the author that although he did pay for some drinks for Tsafendas, "Tsafendas always paid for the next round." This was the custom among Greeks in Mozambique: "one would pay for one round and the other for the next round." Liberopoulos characterised Tsafendas to the author as a "proud man and no beggar."⁸⁴⁴

Babiolakis, Kyriakakis and Papadakis also disagree with Verghis's opinion that Tsafendas "seemed always to visit the café just to see if someone would give him something to eat or drink." It is true that many Greeks offered to buy drinks for Tsafendas, but not because he was begging. Firstly, most Greeks there were quite wealthy and Tsafendas was very poor. The Greeks always sat together and when Tsafendas came in, he would be invited to join them. Whoever had bought the current round of drinks would buy one for Tsafendas, the newcomer, according to drinking tradition. Babiolakis and Papadakis both said Tsafendas would accept such a drink only when he had enough money to buy the next round. Most times, it was obvious that he could not afford to buy everyone a drink, so he would decline the drink, but would sit in their company and talk with them.⁸⁴⁵

Another important issue is that, according to Marvis, Tsafendas "spoke in favour of full integration and intermarriage between Coloureds and Whites" and "said that it is high time that a new race came into being." This is entirely true. Several witnesses confirmed to the author that Tsafendas said that. However, Marvis does not explain the context or the origin of Tsafendas's thinking. Tsafendas was disturbed by racism and conflicts throughout the world and believed that things would never change as long as there were different countries, nationalities, races and religions. Babiolakis and Papadakis, along with Marvis, were in the Scala Café talking politics with Tsafendas when this subject came up. Tsafendas believed that the world would become a better and safer place if there were no countries, no religions, and all people were the same colour. When asked how the last of the three could be achieved, Tsafendas had jokingly said that “everyone should have sex with someone of a different colour, so a new race will be created where everyone will be the same colour or at least they will all be mixed! Only then will there be no racism and discrimination anymore!”⁸⁴⁶ It was clear to them that Tsafendas said the sex part as a joke, but that he was serious about the rest of his theory.⁸⁴⁷ Tsafendas would later repeat his theory and his comment about sex in the same conversational context, half-joke and half-serious, to several people.⁸⁴⁸ As we will see, his comment was misconstrued at the summary trial as meaning that Tsafendas was paranoid and wanted to create a new race, like some mad villain in a movie.

⁸⁴⁴ George Liberopoulos in a personal interview, 6 July 2015.

⁸⁴⁵ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

In an interview with the author, Katerina Pnema offered an explanation of his statements based on her long acquaintance with her half-brother:

“He was saying that the South Africans are Nazis, he was calling Dr. Verwoerd Hitler’s best student ... that us and most Whites were exploiting the Black Rhodesians ... he was calling the Greeks racists, saying that one day the Rhodesians would kick us all out and take back what we stole from them ... that one day the Blacks in South Africa would throw the Whites into the sea ... He believed Mozambique and South Africa should have a colourful flag, like a rainbow or something in order for each colour to represent each race! Have you heard anything more absurd? He used to say that Jesus Christ was socialist and that if he was alive today he would have been a revolutionary, fighting apartheid and for the independence of Mozambique. Can you believe it? Well, this is what he was saying, all this kind of nonsense! How could I have told all these things to the police? They would have said ‘Why didn’t you report him to the police since he had such crazy ideas? Didn’t you know he was dangerous?’ You can’t imagine how many people had told my poor father to do something with him and his crazy political ideas. You can’t imagine how many! Even my poor mother told him to talk to him because he would get us into trouble someday, as he was often doing, but my poor dad did nothing. It was actually all his fault. He taught him all these things, but my poor father was a cautious man, he was not like Dimitri; he wouldn’t go around saying all these stupidities. His son was the opposite; he couldn’t keep his mouth shut.

⁸⁴⁶ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

⁸⁴⁷ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

⁸⁴⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

What about the other thing? He changed his name because he thought it was insulting to be called Tsafantakis since this was the name given to our ancestors by the Turks! Wasn't this nonsense?"⁸⁴⁹

Pnefma also remembered the wedding mentioned by Marvis at which she told Tsafendas that she did not want to see him because he was an embarrassment to the family. She confirmed that this is what she told him. Her anger flared after Tsafendas was dismissed from a job at the docks in Beira which Pnefma and her husband had helped him obtain. Tsafendas had asked the Mozambican workers to strike against the dock owner in support of their working rights.⁸⁵⁰ Pnefma and her husband were rightly embarrassed since they had intervened on behalf of Tsafendas to get him the job. Furthermore, Pnefma learned that Tsafendas had been arrested twice by the Portuguese Security Police and that he had spent three months in prison.⁸⁵¹

PIDE REPORT

The same day, a PIDE report regarding Tsafendas, written in Beira, on January 19, 1965, was sent by PIDE Sub-Inspector A. Vaz to General van den Bergh. It started with the following note:

Dear General,

I attach herewith a photocopy of a document which was requested from me by Col. van Wyk. I must inform you that this is the first time that a copy or the contents of this document has ever been revealed to anybody, not even to my Government.

My most respected compliments.

(SGD.) Vaz.

REPORT.

EXCELLENT SIR:

⁸⁴⁹ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁸⁵⁰ For details about the incident see Chapter 2.

⁸⁵¹ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

SUBJECT: DIMITRIO TSAFENDAS OR DIMITRIUS TSAFENDAKIS, single, without profession, born 14.1.1918. in Lourenço Marques, son of MIGUEL TSAFENDAKIS and of AMELIA WILLIAM, without permanent residence.

On 16th November last year, he was handed over to this sub-delegation by the P.S.P. (Uniformed Branch) of his city (Beira), accused of making subversive propaganda to the native masses.

TSAFENDAKIS or TSAFENDAS among many other phrases, was accused of having said the following:- "This land is not called Portugal, but United States of Mozambique. We already have money and what we do now need is not to be cheated when saying that we are Portuguese. No, we Africans and I do not like the Portuguese flag." When questioned, the accused confessed that he had said this, but that at the time, when he pronounced these words at the hotel bar of Gondola, among many Bantu people, he was under the influence of liquor and also under exultations (excitement). On the other side, he also said that these words were caused by the ideas which he had about the Independence of Mozambique, a Mozambique governed by natives whether white or black, but separate from the mother-country (Portugal).

The accused describes on previous interrogations a history which has been his life, an authentic romance of adventure, in which he has travelled through diverse countries of the world.

The individual referred to states that he had never been a member of any subversive organization, neither has he ever worked for one in the direction of obtaining the independence of Mozambique. He also states that he has never been involved in subversive activities against the security of the State, even though he is all for the Independence of this Province.

After the accused was analysed by his actions and reasons, we have verified that he must be an individual who is mentally deranged and this has also been proved by the overseas hospital in Lisbon, where he was a mental patient, according to pages 19 of information which was given to us by the General Delegation of this Police Force. The individual referred to has on previous occasions been in the cells of this Police Force in Lisbon about twice. This was confessed by himself in statements. The first time in 1940, when crossing the border post of Barca d 'Alva to enter the country, without sufficient documentation. The second time in 1951 after arriving from Mozambique where he was not accepted and forced to return to Lisbon.

Even though, as has been said before, that he is mentally deranged, the truth is that it can be seen in him a certain spirit of revolt in relation to the institutions responsible for holding back the Independence of Mozambique.

On the other hand, as mentioned on the final portion of this information, already referred to, given by the General Delegation, he is an individual with a very bad moral background.

The accused has on many occasion been interned at the poor-house in Lisbon.

On the criminal registers nothing is registered against him. In the meanwhile as mentioned before, the Accused had already previous defaults on his Police register as by himself confessed on the statements.

Here is everything with respect to the accused and which I have the honour to forward to your Excellency, for a better judgement and your convenience.

Finally, I inform your Excellency that the Passport No. 6.511/63 issued in favour of the Accused, in Lourenço Marques on 2.11.63. and valid for S.A. S.R. N. Rhodesia, Malawi, Swaziland, Bechuanaland and Basutoland, is attached to the case docket. With the Passport is also a Bulletin of admission of the Portuguese Airways who escorted this man when he was handed over by this Police Force.

BEIRA, 19th January, 1965.⁸⁵²

COMMENTS ON PIDE'S REPORT

This report is the translation of a report sent by the sub-Director of PIDE in Lourenço Marques to the Director General PIDE on January 19, 1965, while Tsafendas was in police custody for "making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses.”⁸⁵³ The report was accompanied by a letter stating that this report was the “opinion, dispatch and conclusion of the progress indicated in the margin, whose defendant is the national of African race, Demitrio Tsafendas or Dimitrius Tsafendakis.”⁸⁵⁴ Seven days later, on January 26, 1965, Tsafendas was freed,⁸⁵⁵ only to be arrested again a few days later.⁸⁵⁶ Naturally, the second arrest could not have been included in the report. However, this is not the only important omission from the report.

⁸⁵² PIDE report regarding Demitrio Tsafendas or Dimitrius Tsafendakis, 19 January 1965. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

As they did before, PIDE again fed the South African authorities with unimportant or known information. Vital facts regarding Tsafendas’s political activities are once more missing. There is no mention of the fact that PIDE held a detailed file of 130 pages on Tsafendas,⁸⁵⁷ nor that he was arrested in 1964 in Mozambique accused of pretending to be a religious missionary while in reality, preaching “in favour of Mozambique’s independence.”⁸⁵⁸ Missing also are the reasons he was denied entry to Mozambique in October 1951, that he was forced to live in exile from 1951 to 1963,⁸⁵⁹ that he was only given amnesty in 1963 after convincing the Portuguese he was insane, and that he made several applications for permission to return to Mozambique and all were turned down -- each time after PIDE supplied the Ministry of Interior with information about his “political and professional activities.”⁸⁶⁰

Furthermore, parts of this report are identical, word for word, with the PIDE report sent by the Head-Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the sub-Director of the PIDE on September 8, 1966, which asked him not to reveal to the South African authorities any “information indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the Independence of Mozambique.” Obviously, PIDE is ⁸⁵³ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demitrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demitrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demitrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁸⁵⁴ Letter of the Subdirector of PIDE in Lourenço Marques to the Director General of PIDE in Lisbon, 23 February 1965. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT

⁸⁵⁵ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA; Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 19.

⁸⁵⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

⁸⁵⁷ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁸⁵⁸ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demitrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁸⁵⁹ Letter of a police agent to the Ministry of Interiors regarding Tsafendas’s exile. 30 October 1962. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁸⁶⁰ Letter of the Directorate-General of the Political and Civil Administration of the Overseas Ministry to the Director of the International and State Defence Police. 07/04/1958. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

still attempting to downplay, at times omit entirely, his political activities, and to conceal any information picturing Tsafendas “as a partisan for the independence of Mozambique.”

STATEMENTS

J.J. VAN DEN BERG⁸⁶¹

The following is the statement of J.J. van den Berg; a passport control officer at South Africa’s Consulate in Lourenço Marques, who was convinced by George Michaletos and Nick Vlachopoulos to turn a blind eye and issue a visa to Tsafendas despite his being on the “Stop List” of persons forbidden to enter South Africa.⁸⁶² Naturally, van den Berg does not mention his interaction with Tsafendas’s family.

The Consul General

Regarding: Admission to the Republic Demitrio Tsafendas

With reference to par. (3) of your query, I wish to point out that as a rule, the “Stop Lists” in this office are thoroughly checked before Temporary Permits or Visas (if necessary) are issued to persons who wish to enter the Republic for visits.

In the case of Tsafendas, it is extremely difficult to recall the exact circumstances in which this man was granted admission to the Republic. According to the data on the D.I.10, it was a Saturday morning and this office issued 64 actual permits - indicating that it must have been extremely busy. When reviewing the “Stop Lists,” the only explanation I can think of is the possibility that I looked the name up among the index letter “S”, following the sound association in the pronunciation of his surname. Under such busy conditions, I might not have taken the passport or D.I.10 form with me to the lists. (I may mention here that this was indeed the case when I heard the first reports of the incident and reviewed the records - I looked up the name Stafendas.)

⁸⁶¹ J.J. van den Berg statement regarding the ‘Admission to the Republic of Demitrio Tsafendas’, 20 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

⁸⁶² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Eleni Vlachopoulos in Live and Let Live.

Furthermore, if it did so happen that I did not check the list in the case of Tsafendas, the following factors would possibly have lead me to believe that the man's bona fides left no hint of doubt. He presented a Portuguese passport which was issued to him that morning by local authorities. This passport would describe him as a resident of Lourenço Marques and also further state that he was born here. With the knowledge that the Portuguese authorities are extremely thorough when reviewing an applicant's circumstances and background before a passport is issued, it was a determining factor which, together with the other information, made him come across as one of many bona fide visitors.

The fact that he wanted to visit family relatives whom have been staying in the Republic a long time, as well as the address in South Africa that he had given, which spoke of a good neighbourhood, would under the pressure of work contribute to justifying not checking the records extremely intensively. I'm afraid that there is nothing more that I could add. However, I am deeply touched by the fatal consequences of admitting the man and will not easily live with it.

J.J. van den Berg.

Passport control officer.

Lourenço Marques

20 September 1966.

NEW EVIDENCE CONCERNING J.J. VAN DEN BERG'S ROLE IN THE CASE

In October 1964, Marika Tsafantakis, along with her son Victor, his wife Anna, and her son-in-law, Nick Vlachopoulos, Eleni's husband, arrived in Lourenço Marques by car from Pretoria. It was known to the family that Tsafendas was banned from South Africa.

According to Tsafendas, as well as his half-sisters Katerina Pnema and Eleni Vlachopoulos, and his cousins Mary Eintracht, John and Antony Michaletos, the passport officer, J.J. van den Berg, was convinced by George Michaletos (John and Antony's father), Tsafendas's uncle in Lourenço Marques, and Nick Vlachopoulos, Tsafendas's brother-in-law (married to his half-sister Eleni), to overlook the fact that Tsafendas was on South Africa's Stop List and to issue him with a visa. It was Tsafendas's aunt Artemis who convinced her husband, George Michaletos, to arrange it. The family had van den Berg and appealed to his humanity, claiming that Tsafendas posed no threat to the state and that he was a man desperately seeking to visit his father's grave and be reunited with his family for just a few days after a separation of more than twenty years.⁸⁶³ Nick Vlachopoulos had even offered him money to convince him. Van den Berg refused to accept any money, but was moved by the account of Tsafendas's plight and eventually agreed to issue a visa for temporary stay. However, after van den Berg had issued the visa, Vlachopoulos insisted in handing him some money as a "thank you."⁸⁶⁴

The Commission of Enquiry, most likely unaware of what had occurred between van den Berg and Tsafendas's family, would later find him guilty of "a clear case of neglect of duty."⁸⁶⁵ However, the South African police very probably discovered the truth and made van den Berg pay the price. Arriving at his home one day, security officers arrested van den Berg, refused to tell his family where he was being taken, then subjected him to extended torture while in their custody. According to his son, Gavin, his father was interrogated non-stop and not allowed to sleep or to use the toilet. "He was kicked till his ribs were broken ... they made him stand naked for days on end in his own urine and faeces ..." When he was finally released, this former diplomatic officer could find no regular work and the family lived for a ⁸⁶³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Eleni Vlachopoulos in Live and Let Live.

⁸⁶⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁸⁶⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter V.

time in a relative's garage. Van den Berg moved "from job to job" and his children "from school to school."⁸⁶⁶

Even by South African police standards, this was extraordinarily harsh punishment for someone who simply "neglected his duty," raising strong suspicions that the police had learned about what had occurred between van den Berg and his family.⁸⁶⁷ If so, the fact was never revealed, obviously because of the huge embarrassment it would have caused to the Government if it was known that one of its employees accepted a bribe from the man who assassinated the Prime Minister.

Another factor that appears to support the theory that the police found out about van den Berg's conduct is that no action was taken against Piet Burger, the Chief Messenger at the House of Assembly, and two senior messengers, Piet Schuin and Sydney Wiehand, who had approved Tsafendas for employment in Parliament. These three men failed to screen Tsafendas properly and were arguably more to blame than van den Berg for Tsafendas getting so close to Dr. Verwoerd. The report of the Commission said about them:

"They are good, decent people who did their duty as they saw and knew it. One can hardly blame them for the appointment which was made. They simply did not have the knowledge, ability and insight to make a proper selection."⁸⁶⁸

The three continued working in House of Assembly as before. Furthermore, no action was taken against the three officials of the Department of Immigration who on three different occasions interviewed Tsafendas in Pretoria in November 1963 regarding his application for permanent residence. Tsafendas made a very favourable impression on all of them and they issued him with the required certificate.⁸⁶⁹ These three officials were unaware of "the fact that Tsafendas's name appeared on the Department's stop list."⁸⁷⁰

In addition, according to the Commission of Enquiry's Report, "on 10th July, 1964, Tsafendas applied in writing to the Department of the Interior for a return visa to enable him to visit Mozambique and Southern Rhodesia. Miss J. Markram, an assistant in that ⁸⁶⁶ Gavin van den Berg, son of J.J. van den Berg in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

⁸⁶⁷ Again, we can imagine what the South African police must have done to Tsafendas if they did all this to this man.

⁸⁶⁸ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter X, Paragraph 12.

⁸⁶⁹ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

⁸⁷⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 2.

Department, checked the stop list and indicated that Tsafendas's name did not appear on it. In fact, it did appear on the list."⁸⁷¹ Further, always according to the Commission of Enquiry:

“On 5th March, 1965, Tsafendas left Beira on board the Indian liner Karanja and arrived at Durban on 8th March, 1965. When the Karanja arrived at Durban on 8th March, 1965, it was the duty of the officials of the Department of the Interior who went on board, inter alia, to check the passenger list with the stop list. On the stop list the names TSAFENDAKIS: DIMITRIO a TSAFENDAS: DEMETRIO appeared, and on the passenger list the name TSAFENDAS: DEMITRIO. Once again, for some reason or other, it was not ascertained that Tsafendas's name appeared on the stop list.”⁸⁷²

Clearly all the above officials were no less negligent than van den Berg, since, like him, they missed the fact that Tsafendas's name was on the Stop List. However, they all kept their jobs and faced no consequences. Van den Berg was brutally and disproportionately punished for his “negligence,” although his “crime” was exactly the same as that of the Immigration and Interior officials and to a lesser extent that of the messengers in the House of Assembly. The fact that van den Berg received such viciously different treatment suggests that the police might have had discovered what had occurred between him and Tsafendas's family.

⁸⁷¹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 11.

⁸⁷² Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraphs 23 and 24.

SATURDAY, 24 SEPTEMBER 1966⁸⁷³

STATEMENTS

ESPERANZA THERON⁸⁷⁴

Secretary, White woman, Durban. 10.30 a.m.

During 1963 my husband Daniel B. Theron moved his offices as an attorney to 101 Lincoln House, Masonic Grove. The offices occupied by my husband were situated adjacently the offices occupied by the listed communist, Rowley Arenstein. I was my husband's secretary and was thus always in the office. During 1965 or late 1964 I observed a White or Coloured male whom I have since identified from photographs in the newspapers as Demitrio Tsafendas, frequenting the offices of Rowley Arenstein. Demitrio Tsafendas used to pay visits to Arenstein's office regularly and on occasion he would greet me.

I observed Demitrio Tsafendas actually entering the general office of Rowley Arenstein but am unable to state for what purpose he visited Arenstein. I am unable to state the period of time that he used to visit Arenstein, but the visits were very regular. I have also observed Demitrio Tsafendas in the presence of Rowley Arenstein walking down the corridor from Arenstein's office.

(Sgd). R.D. Wilson D/Sgt.

TSAFENDAS AND ARENSTEIN

As a result of Theron's testimony, Arenstein and his secretary, Thelma Beryl Suddes, were questioned by the South African police. She testified that "to the best of her knowledge," she had never seen Tsafendas in Arenstein's office.⁸⁷⁵ Arenstein was questioned on September ⁸⁷³ No statements or other evidence were found in the archives for the previous three days.

⁸⁷⁴ Esperanza Theron statement to the police, 24 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁸⁷⁵ Thelma Beryl Suddes statement to the COE, 22 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

24, 1966, by Brigadier Baster “at office Nr.505, The Grays, Johannesburg in connection with the assassination of the late Dr. Verwoerd.”⁸⁷⁶

Arenstein denied knowing Tsafendas. This was a natural thing for him to do, especially at the time, since he was about to go on trial. On October 31, 1966, he was sentenced to four years’ imprisonment under the Suppression of Communism Act for furthering the aims of Communism.⁸⁷⁷ On the other hand, Tsafendas was forced to admit to the Commission of Enquiry into Dr. Verwoerd’s death that he knew Arenstein once he was confronted with the evidence. He lied though by claiming he had visited him to consult him “in connection with a translation bureau which he wished to buy.”⁸⁷⁸ Tsafendas later spoke at length to Father Minas Constandinou about meeting in Durban with a “Jewish Communist lawyer.” Tsafendas was probably given his address by someone from the anti-apartheid movement in London. Father Minas did not remember the name of the Durban lawyer, but Ronnie Kasrils stated in a personal interview with the author that “Arenstein was the only Jewish Communist lawyer in Durban.”⁸⁷⁹

COMMISSION OF ENQUIRY RAISED IN PARLIAMENT

The previous day, opposition leader Sir de Villiers Graaff listed six questions which he urged should be considered by the Commission of Enquiry into the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. In an intervention in the Assembly, de Villiers Graaff expressed confidence in the Commission judge, Mr. Justice van Wyk, and suggested that his terms of reference should seek answers to the following questions:

- What could be done to ensure, so far as was humanly possible, that nothing of this nature happened in South Africa again.
- How Dimitrios Tsafendas came to be admitted to South Africa and how a person of this sort had gained the right to permanent residence in the light of reports that had subsequently come to light.
- Whether the Department of Labour recommended his employment at Parliament, and if so, whether procedures of scrutiny were adequate.

⁸⁷⁶ Johannes Christoffel Broodryk statement to the COE, 24 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁸⁷⁷ South African History Online, Rowley Israel Arenstein.

⁸⁷⁸ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 33.

⁸⁷⁹ Ronnie Kasrils in a personal interview, 16 May 2016.

- Whether there was sufficient liaison between the various departments of Government in matters of this kind.
- How Tsafendas came to be employed as a messenger at Parliament and how he had secured access to the Assembly Chamber.
- Whether the security arrangements for people occupying high offices were adequate.⁸⁸⁰

Prime Minister John Vorster replied that the terms and references of the forthcoming Commission of Enquiry were wide enough to cover all these points.⁸⁸¹

⁸⁸⁰ The Star, 'Questions on Tsafendas', 24 September 1966: 3.

⁸⁸¹ The Canberra Times, 'South Africa: Assassination Inquiry', 23 September 1966: 5.

MONDAY, 26 SEPTEMBER 1966

THE APPOINTMENT OF TSAFENDAS'S DEFENCE TEAM

Tsafendas was held in police custody without legal representation, a situation which was lawful at the time. Under the Criminal Procedure Amendment Act No 96 of 1965, police officers were permitted to detain anyone suspected of a political crime and to hold him without access to a lawyer for one-hundred and eighty days. For this reason, the legislation was popularly known as the 180-day Detention Act.⁸⁸² Only three days earlier, on September 23, 1966, it was revealed that Hendrik Bahula,⁸⁸³ a member of the PAC, was held in isolation in a police cell for eighteen days without being formally charged.⁸⁸⁴ Tsafendas was held for twenty days after the assassination without legal representation before a defence team was appointed to represent him pro deo, meaning his legal costs were met by the State.

As we have seen, Tsafendas soon after his arrest asked for a lawyer, specifically for human rights and anti-apartheid advocate George Bizos, but his request was turned down. Instead, the State appointed its own choices on September 26, exactly twenty days after the assassination. According to David Bloomberg, an attorney, he was the first lawyer to be appointed by Judge Beyers to represent Tsafendas.⁸⁸⁵ Beyers was a good friend of Bloomberg's father, Abraham (Abe), and a board member at a horse-racing club of which Bloomberg Snr was president. According to Reyner van Zyl (a psychologist appointed by Bloomberg to examine Tsafendas) and Desmond Blow (a Sunday Times journalist), rumour had it that Bloomberg Snr persuaded Judge Beyers to appoint his son, thinking that the case would further his career.⁸⁸⁶ However, advocate Wilfrid Cooper states that he was the first lawyer appointed by Beyers to represent Tsafendas. Beyers made it clear to Cooper that Tsafendas had only one line of defence: insanity. Otherwise, Beyers warned him, "I will not ⁸⁸² Herbstein, White Lies: Canon Collins and the Secret War against Apartheid, p. 75; Nelson Mandela Organization, "Criminal Procedure Amendment Act No 96"; Rudolph, Security, Terrorism and Torture: Detainees' Rights in South Africa and Israel: A Comparative Study, p. 12; World Peace Council, Apartheid is Built on Torture, p. 14.

⁸⁸³ The surname in the newspaper cutting is not clear, but seems to be Bahula.

⁸⁸⁴ Rand Daily Mail, 'Prisoner Complains', 23 September 1966.

⁸⁸⁵ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 74.

⁸⁸⁶ Desmond Blow in a personal interview, 11 May 2015; Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

hesitate to hang him. He will swing.”⁸⁸⁷ Although it is not clear who Judge Beyers appointed first, he definitely appointed both Cooper and Bloomberg, as Tsafendas’s advocate and instructing attorney respectively, while he also finally appointed Willie Burger, a young advocate, to act as Wilfrid Cooper’s junior.⁸⁸⁸

WILFRID COOPER (Advocate) 1927 –2004⁸⁸⁹

Wilfrid Edward Cooper was born in Cape Town in 1926. He matriculated from Wynberg Boys High School, Cape Town, in 1944 and the following year enrolled for a BA (Law) degree at the University of Stellenbosch. He received his degree in 1947. In 1948 he went to work as a clerical assistant in the Senate, where he encountered Hendrik Verwoerd and heard the future prime minister deliver his first Senate speech. For two days, he performed the duties of a parliamentary messenger, exactly like Tsafendas. Between 1950 and 1952, Cooper clerked for Mr. Justice Herbstein while also acting as a prosecutor in Wynberg Magistrates Court and reading for his LL.B degree from the University of South Africa. Obtaining this qualification in 1952, he was called to the Cape Bar, then in 1965 appointed Senior Counsel. Embarking on an illustrious academic career, Cooper held part-time positions as lecturer and examiner at the Universities of Cape Town and the Western Cape. In 1972, he received a Ph.D. from the University of Cape Town for his thesis, “The Letting and Hiring of Immovable Property in South Africa.” He authored fourteen books on such topics as motor law in South Africa, on which he was considered the foremost authority; for example, the 865-page South African Motor Law.⁸⁹⁰ He was also an avid reader of literature and was able to quote extensively from James Joyce.⁸⁹¹

Cooper’s career at the Cape Bar spanned thirty-six years. He was nicknamed “Tiger” by Justice Cyril Newton Thompson for his fearlessness and the cross-examination skills he demonstrated at a number of trials. He is remembered primarily for leading the defence team for Tsafendas, but he also figured prominently in such political cases as the 1962 trial of three ⁸⁸⁷ Gavin Cooper, Under Devil’s Peak: The Life and Times of Wilfrid Cooper, An Advocate in the Age of Apartheid, (Kenilworth: Burnet Media, 2016), p. 101; Wilfrid Cooper in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

⁸⁸⁸ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 74; Cooper, Under Devil’s Peak: The Life and Times of Wilfrid Cooper, An Advocate in the Age of Apartheid, p. 101.

⁸⁸⁹ For a detailed account of Judge Wilfrid Cooper’s life, see his biography Under Devil’s Peak: The Life and Times of Wilfrid Cooper, An Advocate in the Age of Apartheid, (Kenilworth: Burnet Media, 2016), written by his son Gavin Cooper.

⁸⁹⁰ Cooper, Under Devil’s Peak: The Life and Times of Wilfrid Cooper, An Advocate in the Age of Apartheid.

⁸⁹¹ Kahn, Jr., The Separated People: A Look at Contemporary South Africa, p. 154.

members of the Armed Resistance Movement, as defence counsel in 1976 for Jeremy Cronin and David and Susan Rabkin, charged under the Terrorism Act and acted for Steve Biko just before his death in July 1977. He also appeared for the families of a number of anti-apartheid activists who died in detention, such as Imam Abdullah Haron in 1969 and Mapetla Mohapi in 1977. He was also involved in the sensational criminal trial of Marthinus Rossouw for the murder of Baron Dieter von Schauroth in 1961 and in 1975 he successfully appealed the death sentence of Marlene Lehnberg, known as the “Scissors Murderess.” In South West Africa in 1976, he appeared for six members of SWAPO who were charged under the Terrorism Act for acts related to the assassination of Chief Minister Filemon Elifas in August 1975. In August 1988, Cooper was appointed to the bench as an Acting Judge in the Eastern Cape Division and in March 1989 was permanently appointed. In March 1991, he was transferred to the Cape Division and remained there until his retirement due to poor health in January 1991. He died in 2004, having donated part of his private law library to the Cape Bar, now known as the Wilfrid Cooper library.⁸⁹² According to Professor John Dugard, Cooper was one of the very few brave South African lawyers who demonstrated the courage and dignity, in a hostile and fevered political atmosphere, to defend political detainees of all races during the apartheid years.⁸⁹³

DAVID BLOOMBERG (Attorney) (1932-)

David Bloomberg was born in Sea Point, Cape Town, in 1932. His father, Abraham, widely known as Abe, was an attorney and at one time Mayor of Cape Town (1945-1947), and his mother Miriam, was a professional ballet dancer. David Bloomberg followed in his father’s footsteps by also becoming a lawyer and Mayor of Cape Town – in 1973, the youngest in the city’s history – and reflected his mother’s interests by involving himself in South African theatre. Bloomberg, though Jewish, was educated by Roman Catholic teachers at the Christian Brothers’ College before graduating in law from the University of Cape Town. He was a man of many talents. Alongside his legal career, he became a prominent theatrical impresario, responsible for several acclaimed productions; he brought famous performers to South Africa and established the Barn Theatre at Constantia. For more than two decades, he ⁸⁹² Cooper, Under Devil’s Peak: The Life and Times of Wilfrid Cooper, An Advocate in the Age of Apartheid.

⁸⁹³ Dugard, Human Rights and the South African Legal Order, p. 243.

was Director of the Cape Performing Arts Board, and he wrote an arts column for two Cape Town newspapers.⁸⁹⁴

In 1965, Bloomberg caused some controversy in the USA by publicly praising, defending and supporting apartheid. In an article in The New York Times on May 23, 1965, Bloomberg denounced Arthur Miller,⁸⁹⁵ Edward Albee⁸⁹⁶ and other prominent American playwrights for refusing to allow their works to be performed in South Africa unless before mixed audiences, which had recently been prohibited. He said their refusal would “only succeed in harming the theatrical producers and directors who have been endeavouring to keep theatre in South Africa alive” and theatre would be set back fifty years. However, he added that a government as strong and stable as South Africa’s was unlikely to be intimidated by a group of American playwrights into changing its laws.⁸⁹⁷

In an evident endorsement of apartheid and Dr. Verwoerd’s policies, Bloomberg described racial separation as “South Africa’s answer to the problem of achieving peaceful coexistence of different people at different stages of their development ... it is designed to make it possible for various racial groups to enjoy the full privileges of a free society, each in their own area, unhampered by the strains imposed by a multi-racial society. Apartheid is not a political ruse, but merely a notion that people get on best with their own kind.”⁸⁹⁸

Bloomberg also wrote that the government, “in its wisdom,” had decided that separate development was “a more harmonious and peaceful solution than enforced integration” and was “in the best interest of the non-White population.” It was “regrettable” he wrote, that “American playwrights consider themselves qualified to pass judgement on a country about which their knowledge is minimal,” having been influenced by portions of the American Press which presented South Africa in a “most distorted picture.”⁸⁹⁹

⁸⁹⁴ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg.

⁸⁹⁵ Arthur Miller was America’s leading playwright at this time and works by him such as Death of a Salesman, The Crucible and A View from the Bridge were sought out by theatrical companies worldwide. In 1956, Miller was sub-poenaed to appear before the House Un-American Activities Committee but refused to name friends who shared his left-wing political stance. He was found guilty of contempt of Congress, fined, sentenced to prison, blacklisted and had his passport confiscated. This decision was overturned in 1958.

⁸⁹⁶ Edward Albee’s best-known plays, such as Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf? and The Zoo Story, were hailed for their realistic examination of the modern condition. Virginia Woolf (1962) examined the breakdown in the marriage of a middle-class couple and contains dialogue which has been hailed as some of the greatest in all of American theatre. The play was filmed in 1966 with Richard Burton and Elizabeth Taylor as the overwrought couple.

⁸⁹⁷ The New York Times, ‘David Bloomberg: Yes to South Africa’, 23 May 1965: xi.

⁸⁹⁸ The New York Times, ‘David Bloomberg: Yes to South Africa’, 23 May 1965: xi.

⁸⁹⁹ The New York Times, ‘David Bloomberg: Yes to South Africa’, 23 May 1965: xi.

Bloomberg went on, “Little do these self-same authors know of the country’s achievements in the field of racial relations (or in any field); little do they know of what has been done for the non-white in the fields of hospitalization, education, housing and on a hundred and one other fronts, all of which have enabled a race to emerge from the darkness of ignorance and superstition in an astonishingly short time.”⁹⁰⁰ Bloomberg’s defence of apartheid’s achievements for Blacks does not bear scrutiny. What was actually done for Blacks in education was the Bantu Education Act, and what was done for housing were forced removals, the Bantustans, and the denial of any land rights.

Bloomberg told the author in 2014 about Dr. Verwoerd: “Verwoerd was a gentleman, if a person who holds those views can be a gentleman [laughs]. But was a very polite man. I think Verwoerd believed in his theories and the theory of apartheid. He probably was an honest man.” When asked if he thought Verwoerd was racist, Bloomberg replied, “Of course he was a racist, yes.” He then volunteered, “I don’t think he was corrupt. There was never any evidence that he was corrupt. All the subsequent people, particularly John Vorster and one or two of the other people, you know, they had a reputation of being corrupt.”⁹⁰¹

In 1969, Bloomberg was elected a Cape Town city councillor, a position he held for twenty years. In 1971 he was elected Deputy Mayor of Cape Town, then was Mayor from 1973 to 1975. At forty-one years and one month, he was the youngest mayor since his father, who was forty-one years and six months when he assumed office in 1945. A newspaper reporter said of Bloomberg, “He looks like a smoother version of Canada’s heart-throb Prime Minister, Pierre Trudeau.”⁹⁰²

As mayor, Bloomberg was hailed as “hands-on” and “thoroughly modern.” According to him, his main achievements being the tackling of gangsterism on the Cape Flats, the opening of the Nico Malan theatre to people of all races and his campaign against petty apartheid and to speed up the fire department’s responses.⁹⁰³ Four months into his mayoralty, Bloomberg launched what he described as “a campaign against petty apartheid... practices which did not necessarily create hardship but which were extremely humiliating to people of colour.” This was not an attack on the classic structures of apartheid, rather an attempt to address relatively minor complaints, such as discriminatory signs on lifts, toilets and ⁹⁰⁰ The New York Times, ‘David Bloomberg: Yes to South Africa’, 23 May 1965: xi.

⁹⁰¹ David Bloomberg in a personal interview, 6 April 2014.

⁹⁰² Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 158-161.

⁹⁰³ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg; The Cape Argus, ‘Links in the Mayoral Chain’, 19 June 2011: 18.

entrances. After investigation of the complaint, Bloomberg would telephone the responsible parties and “invariably obtained their co-operation.” Other cities joined in the campaign, prompting Prime Minister Vorster to warn that the government would intervene if politically expedient actions by councils caused friction or disturbed the peace. In response to Vorster’s warning, he wrote, “My council is not a political body and does not practise a political system and its views with regard to petty apartheid are certainly not politically motivated.”⁹⁰⁴ Later, Bloomberg played golf with Vorster at the invitation of the district commandant of police.⁹⁰⁵ Bloomberg also claimed that he had tried behind the scenes, though unsuccessfully, to stop the destruction of District Six.⁹⁰⁶

While Mayor of Cape Town, Bloomberg also became involved in at least two incidents which the Western press perceived as propaganda for apartheid. In 1974, South Africa’s Foreign Minister, Hilgard Muller, France’s ambassador to South Africa, M. Michel Legendre and Bloomberg discussed the possibility of twinning Cape Town with Nice, known as the capital of the French Riviera, and “how such a twinning could be the basis for a clandestine, second-tier diplomatic relationship in the event of formal ties between the two countries being suspended.”⁹⁰⁷

Bloomberg liked the idea, even though Nice’s Mayor was the infamous Jacques Medecin,⁹⁰⁸ a fascist and racist politician, anti-Semite and holocaust denier, and according to

⁹⁰⁴ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 175-177

⁹⁰⁵ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 177.

⁹⁰⁶ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 169-174.

⁹⁰⁷ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 177.

⁹⁰⁸ Medecin had admitted publicly to agreeing with 99.9 per cent of the positions held by Jean-Marie Le Pen’s extreme right-wing National Front Party (Gilles Bresson, ‘L’Ancien Maire de Nice est Mort Hier en Uruguay’, Liberation, 18 November 1998; Alan Riding, ‘French Artists Boycott Museum Opening’, The New York Times, 13 June 1990). He had allowed Le Pen to hold a congress of his party in a Nice municipal hall when no-one else would host it (Jewish Telegraphic Agency, ‘Three Jews on City Council of Nice resign to protest ties with Le Pen’, 4 April 1990; Dana Facaros and Michael Pauls, South of France, (London: Cadogan Guides, 2001), p. 145), and subsequently, in his role of Mayor, received Le Pen and Franz Schonhuber, a former SS officer and head of the West German ultra-nationalistic Republican Party (Alan Riding, ‘French Artists Boycott Museum Opening’, The New York Times, 13 June 1990). Three Jewish city councillors resigned in protest against Medecin’s association and cooperation with Le Pen, a man who called the Holocaust fraudulent (Jewish Telegraphic Agency, ‘Three Jews on City Council of Nice Resign to Protest Ties With Le Pen’, 4 April 1990). Medecin was also a fanatical anti-Semite, often making derogatory remarks about Jews, blaming them for his troubles. “It is the Jews who have created a fuss in a scandalous manner,” he said, declaring that they “are ungrateful people after all you have done for them.” He said he “did not know any Jew who will refuse a gift offered to him, even if he doesn’t like the gift” (Riding, ‘French Artists Boycott Museum Opening’, The New York Times, 13 June 1990).

In the early 1980s, Medecin was to gain international notoriety after being accused of corruption by British author Graham Greene in his pamphlet ‘J’Accuse.’ In 1990, exposed as a crook and an embezzler and currently being pursued by the courts and tax authorities for alleged serious financial irregularities, Medecin resigned the mayoralty he had held for 25 years and fled to Argentina and later to Uruguay (Richard Eder, ‘On the Riviera. A Morality Tale by Graham Greene’, The New York Times, 5 February 1982: A2; John Lichfield, ‘Obituary: Jacques Medecin’, The Independent, 20 November 1998; Rone Tempest ‘Mayor of Nice Takes Flight in a Blow

John Lichfield of The Independent an “indefatigable defender of apartheid.”⁹⁰⁹ Medecin’s opinions did not seem to bother the Jewish Bloomberg, and he accepted the twinning idea with enthusiasm. He later did say that he had “fundamental political differences” with Medecin, but they did not stop him from becoming a close friend of the fascist and racist Frenchman.⁹¹⁰

The twinning arrangement came into effect on July 6, 1974. The move caused controversy not only in France⁹¹¹ but around the world, with political parties, trade unions and civil rights organizations denouncing the link-up as “scandalous.”⁹¹² France’s Peace Movement against Racism and anti-Semitism characterised the South African visitors to the ceremony in Nice as a “racist delegation”⁹¹³ and protestors gathered outside Bloomberg’s hotel characterised him as “this fascist Bloomberg representing his racist government.”⁹¹⁴

During the ceremony, Medecin told Bloomberg, “We have much to learn from you. There is no segregation in your country corresponding to slavery, but parallel development of two populations. Life in Africa, the South, should be better understood, better explained.” Bloomberg appeared to be “thrilled” with Medecin’s comments⁹¹⁵ and spoke about South Africa’s need for friendship and understanding abroad, claiming that his country had become “the prey of vultures who take vicarious delight in the troubles of others.”⁹¹⁶ Bloomberg claimed that after his return from France, Foreign Minister Muller sounded him about a to French Politics: Scandal’, Los Angeles Times, 12 November 1990; Craig R. Whitney, ‘Jacques Medecin, 70, Dies; French Mayor’, The New York Times, 19 November 1998). Bloomberg was “deeply shocked” when he heard of the accusations against his good friend (Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 183), but he would later find himself in a similar position, also accused of corruption, and like Medecin, he moved from the country of his birth to escape prosecution.

⁹⁰⁹ Jewish Telegraphic Agency, ‘Three Jews on City Council of Nice Resign to Protest Ties With Le Pen’, 4 April 1990; Lichfield, ‘Obituary: Jacques Medecin’, The Independent, 20 November 1998.

⁹¹⁰ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 179-183.

⁹¹¹ Officially at the time, France had imposed sanctions to South Africa. However, they did not stop France from assisting South Africa with the Koeberg nuclear plant, being involved in a coal-to-petrol project at “Sasol,” importing South African coal and sending “co-operants,” like Pierre-André Albertini, to do their service there. Earlier, in the late 1950s and early to mid-1960s, several South African policemen, members of the security services and military personnel had visited Algeria and France to study the methods of interrogation and torture used by the French there. One of them was General van den Bergh (TRC, TRC Report: Volume Two, p. 16, 195).

⁹¹² The Times (London), ‘Protest in Nice at Twinning with Cape Town’, 8 July 1974: 4.

⁹¹³ Louis Baum, ‘Bloomberg: SA the Prey of Vultures’, The Cape Times, 8 July 1974.

⁹¹⁴ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 180.

⁹¹⁵ Nice-Matin, ‘Quand Jacques Médecin, Maire de Nice, Soutenait les Ennemis de Mandela’, 6 December 2013. Retrieved from: <http://archives.nicematin.com/nice/quand-jacques-medecin-maire-de-nice-soutenait-les-ennemis-de-mandela.1544249.html>

⁹¹⁶ The Cape Times, ‘Protest in Nice at twinning with Cape Town’, 8 July 1974: 4.

foreign diplomatic posting, but he refused because it was conditional upon his becoming a member of the National Party, something he was not prepared to do.⁹¹⁷

A few months later, Bloomberg was involved in another controversial incident as Mayor of Cape Town, when he was accused of seeking to promote South Africa's government at a time when a hostile London government was applying severe sanctions against the apartheid regime. When a flotilla of the British Royal Navy sailed into Table Bay on October 16, 1974, he invited the commander, Vice-Admiral Henry Leach, and his senior officers to lunch at City Hall and in an impromptu speech referred to the many links between the city and Britain's fighting ships.⁹¹⁸

The British government was not pleased and Foreign Secretary James Callaghan accused Bloomberg of "manipulating the visit" and giving it "a badge of respectability." He said the British government had "nothing in common with the policies of apartheid and racialism, which are repugnant to us," and he ordered that in future all British ships which needed to call at Cape Town should refuse hospitality. The London Times said Bloomberg and the South African government had "turned the operation into a propaganda exercise, saying that the visit is a demonstration of Britain's good will towards the Republic."⁹¹⁹

Bloomberg responded that the city council was "not politically structured or motivated" and his invitation "was not a clandestine attempt to influence foreign relations." He described the affair, which received wide international press coverage, as "an absurd incident."⁹²⁰ Bloomberg described his two years as mayor as "a personally exhausting but stimulating experience." Some councillors suggested he stand for a further term, but "I was satisfied that I had done my job and it was time to move on."⁹²¹

According to Bloomberg, he was not a member and never voted for the National Party, "the party of the oppressor" as he characterised it, because of its pro-Nazi and anti-Jewish proclivities."⁹²² However, his hands-off approach to the party did not seem to affect Bloomberg's lofty public status. According to the ANC, it was because of his relationship ⁹¹⁷ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 184.

⁹¹⁸ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 199.

⁹¹⁹ The Times (London), 'Callaghan Apology in Navy Visit Dispute', 25 October 1974: 1.

⁹²⁰ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 200.

⁹²¹ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 222-223.

⁹²² Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 275.

with the National Party that he escaped prosecution in the late 1980s.⁹²³ At that time, Bloomberg, along with casino magnate Sol Kerzner, was accused of bribery, corruption, fraud and perjury.⁹²⁴ The Bantustans were reputed to be places where an easy profit could be guaranteed and many White South African and international business men turned their attention to the Transkei.⁹²⁵

A September 16, 1996 statement by the Parliamentary caucus of the ANC, by then ruling South Africa after the collapse of apartheid, said, “Sol Kerzner and David Bloomberg were accused of paying R2 million in bribes in December 1986 and January 1987 to the former Transkei premier, George Matanzima, in exchange for a gambling monopoly in Transkei. In 1988, Kerzner and Bloomberg admitted the payment to the Harms Commission on cross-border irregularities but claimed they were subject to undue pressure by Premier Matanzima. In 1990, the Transkei Attorney General began preparations for extradition against Kerzner and Bloomberg and forwarded extradition applications to the National Party government in 1991.”⁹²⁶

In 1993, the National Party “tried to kill off the case and defended Bloomberg’s involvement” in the casino contracts when the Transkei Government demanded his extradition⁹²⁷ on grounds that there was no case to answer and the case was shelved, despite the insistence of Transkei’s Attorney General that there was a case to answer. The ANC statement accused the National Party of interfering to prevent the two men’s trial by “dragging its heels for ten years.”⁹²⁸

Later in life, Bloomberg took to writing, publishing six books. Two were novels - Simon’s Destiny (2012) and highly acclaimed The Don: Story of an Actor (2014) – preceded by the story of a Holocaust survivor, Won’t Forgive, Can’t Forget (2006), reflections on politics, Meet the People (1975) and The Chain Gang: Mayors Who Served in Cape Town’s

⁹²³ African National Congress Parliamentary Caucus, Parliamentary Bulletin: ‘Attorney General Says National Party Blocked Sol Kerzner Trial’. (16 Sep. 1996). Available from: <https://ancparliament.org.za/content/attorney-general-says-national-party-blocked-sol-kerzner-trial>

⁹²⁴ African National Congress Parliamentary Caucus, Parliamentary Bulletin: ‘Attorney General Says National Party Blocked Sol Kerzner Trial’.

⁹²⁵ Timothy Gibbs, Mandela’s Kinsmen: Nationalist Elites and Apartheid’s First Bantustan, (Oxford: James Currey, 2014), p. 142.

⁹²⁶ African National Congress Parliamentary Caucus, Parliamentary Bulletin: ‘Attorney General Says National Party Blocked Sol Kerzner Trial’.

⁹²⁷ Gibbs, Mandela’s Kinsmen: Nationalist Elites and Apartheid’s First Bantustan, p. 142.

⁹²⁸ African National Congress Parliamentary Caucus, Parliamentary Bulletin: ‘Attorney General Says National Party Blocked Sol Kerzner Trial’.

City Hall (2011), and his autobiography, My Times (2007). In the mid-1990s Bloomberg moved to England and later to Switzerland, where he currently resides.

BLOOMBERG AND TSAFENDAS

Immediately after Tsafendas's trial ended in his indefinite incarceration, David Bloomberg bought a number of blue neck-ties bearing a pattern of small worms which looked like tapeworms and gave them as gifts to all the members of the defence team, including lawyers, psychiatrists, psychologists and investigators, to celebrate their victory. He named them members of the "Tapeworm Club."⁹²⁹ When asked about this during Liza Key's interview for her documentary, Bloomberg appeared extremely uncomfortable and asked her to stop the camera and "wait a moment, let me think about it." He then conceded that it was a "pretty naughty thing to do," and, referring to the film, asked Key, "You are not running this, are you?"⁹³⁰ Bloomberg made no mention of the Tapeworm Club in his memoir.

During the first ten years of Tsafendas's imprisonment, Bloomberg was the only person who visited him, and that was twice. Throughout this period and for another thirteen years Tsafendas was kept in solitary confinement on Death Row in the maximum security section (Section C) of Pretoria Prison. He was placed in a cell close to the execution room where condemned prisoners were hanged, so he could hear their screams and cries. Tsafendas was forbidden to have any contact with his fellow prisoners and was not allowed access to newspapers, magazines or a radio.⁹³¹ Bloomberg's first visit was in January 1968⁹³² and the second was in 1976.

After visiting Tsafendas in January, 1968, Bloomberg wrote to Brigadier Floris Coetzee, whose position is not specified in the letter, thanking him for arranging the visit. He said in the letter:

"Physically, Tsafendas seems to be very well indeed. He has obviously lost an enormous amount of weight which is satisfactory, as he was previously grossly overweight. He told me that he has been well treated by the prison authorities, and certainly he has a ⁹²⁹ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016; Willie Burger in a personal interview, 9 April 2015; David Bloomberg in A Question of Madness.

⁹³⁰ David Bloomberg in A Question of Madness.

⁹³¹ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017; Beresford, 'Inside Story: The Madness that Destroyed Apartheid', The Guardian, 6 November 1997; A Question of Madness.

⁹³² David Bloomberg letter to Brigadier Coetzee, 26 January 1968. Correctional Service. Demitrio Tsafendas, File number: 80/0043, A123, Vol. 1. NASA.

much happier and friendlier disposition than when I last saw him. As to his mental condition, you will of course appreciate that I am really unqualified to express an opinion. However, through Tsafendas and other legal matters, I have picked up a fair amount of lay knowledge concerning mental conditions. My impression of Tsafendas at the present time is that outwardly he has improved, but that basically he still has the same obvious symptoms which resulted in his being diagnosed as a chronic schizophrenic. My view, for what it is worth, is that he is still mentally disordered in terms of the Mental Disorders Act.”⁹³³

Just eleven months after Bloomberg’s visit, Bernard Mitchell, a former prisoner, revealed in the British Sunday newspaper The Observer that Tsafendas was tortured and kept in a cell built especially for him on Death Row.⁹³⁴ It seems that Bloomberg did not notice that Tsafendas had been tortured or that he was detained in a special Death Row cell. Indeed, he found him to be “very well indeed.” He did notice that Tsafendas had lost a lot of weight, in reality twenty to twenty-five kilos, during the first fourteen months of his imprisonment.⁹³⁵ This he saw as something positive.

On August 1, 1976, the British Sunday newspaper, The Observer, published a lengthy article by Ian Mather entitled “Horror in black and white.” It consisted predominantly of a first-person account of life in Pretoria Central Prison and other South African penal institutions by Brian Price, a Briton who managed to escape while serving an eleven-year sentence for dealing the drug LSD.⁹³⁶ The Observer said it published the story only after its editors “closely cross-examined” Price and checked his allegation as far as they were able. They decided to publish because the story was “consistent with reports from other sources.”⁹³⁷ Ian Mather also confirmed to the author that Price’s story was thoroughly checked as much as possible and that the newspaper had no reason to doubt its authenticity.⁹³⁸

In a long and detailed article about violence to prisoners, Price referred briefly to Tsafendas, claiming that “he was treated with gross inhumanity and was a broken man.” He said that the guards urinated in Tsafendas’s food then forced him to eat it and he was ⁹³³ David Bloomberg letter to Brigadier Coetzee, 26 January 1968. Correctional Service. Demitrio Tsafendas, File number: 80/0043, A123, Vol. 1. NASA.

⁹³⁴ de St Jorre, ‘I Was Glad That Cancer Got Me Out of Vorster’s Jail’, The Observer, 1 December 1968: 7.

⁹³⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁹³⁶ Ian Mather, ‘Horror in Black and White’, The Observer, 1 August 1976: 17.

⁹³⁷ The Observer, ‘South Africa’s Evasions’, 11 November 1976.

⁹³⁸ Ian Mather in a personal interview, 2 February 2015.

routinely beaten and kicked. “For the first five years or so, the warders used to lay into Tsafendas. He was a plaything for sadists.”⁹³⁹

This was not the first or the last time that Tsafendas’s fellow inmates revealed that he was physically abused and psychologically tortured. As we have seen, Breyten Breytenbach, Bernard Mitchell and Alexander Moumbaris, as well as two unnamed inmates in Sunday Tribune in 1994 spoke about it in the Press.⁹⁴⁰ Journalist and BOSS informer Gordon Winter, who interviewed Tsafendas in 1976, confirmed later that Tsafendas was tortured.⁹⁴¹ Professor Barend van Niekerk had become aware of the ongoing abuse and attempted with the help of Helen Suzman to put an end in it.⁹⁴² As far back as 1971, a civil servant, A.M. Towert, also informed Suzman about Tsafendas’s treatment and the fact that he was kept on the “execution block.”⁹⁴³

The Observer article came at a sensitive time for apartheid – just six weeks after the Soweto uprising, which began on June 16, 1976, and coinciding with accusations of atrocities, including torture of prisoners, by South African troops in Namibia.⁹⁴⁴ According to Bloomberg, Price’s story “was syndicated widely and caused quite an international stir.”⁹⁴⁵ The South African government swiftly denied that Tsafendas was ill-treated and called the claim “a travesty of the truth.” The apartheid government then invited The Observer to name a legal expert of its choice, who would be given “complete freedom to investigate the alleged facts contained in Price’s story.” The newspaper nominated Louis Blom-Cooper, QC, an acknowledged penal expert, chairman of Britain’s Howard League for Penal Reform, member of the Home Secretary’s advisory council on the penal system and one of the ⁹³⁹ Mather, ‘Horror in Black and White’, The Observer, 1 August 1976: 17.

⁹⁴⁰ David Beresford, ‘Dr. Verwoerd’s Insane Killer Being Brutalised on SA Death Row: Cell Next to Gallows for 71- Year Old Prisoner’, The Guardian, 9 June 1989: 12; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; de St Jorre, ‘I Was Glad That Cancer Got Me Out of Vorster’s Jail’, The Observer, 1 December 1968: 7; Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017; Peta Thornycroft and Peta Lee, ‘Amnesty for Tsafendas?’, Sunday Tribune, 15 May 1994; Tsafendas in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

⁹⁴¹ Winter, Inside BOSS: South Africa’s Secret Police, p. 476-479.

⁹⁴² Letter to Helen Suzman from Prof. Barend D. van Niekerk of Wits referring to the “cruellest” treatment being meted out to Dimtri Tsafendas in jail, 9 April 1971. Helen Suzman Papers 1944-2009. Mb2.10.1.5. University of the Witwatersrand.

⁹⁴³ Letter to Helen Suzman from A.M. Towert informing her that Tsafendas is held in the “execution block” at Central Gaol, Pretoria, 16 May 1971. Helen Suzman Papers 1944-2009. Mb2.10.1.5. University of the Witwatersrand.

⁹⁴⁴ The Guardian, ‘Pretoria Troops in Rape of Namibia’, 30 August 1976; The Guardian, ‘International Inquiry Demanded Into Namibia Atrocities’, 31 August 1976: 2.

⁹⁴⁵ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 122.

founders of Amnesty International. The South African government turned him down without explanation and instead sent a list to The Observer naming the lawyers they would accept.⁹⁴⁶

The British newspaper refused and naturally asked, “if the South Africans are so keen to let the world know they have nothing to hide in their country, why do they persistently refuse entry visas to our reporters?”⁹⁴⁷ The editor of The Observer said the government’s handling of the matter “served only to reinforce the impression we have had throughout this affair - that your motive has not been to establish the truth about prison conditions in South Africa at all, but to score publicity points against The Observer.” He added, “We found it difficult at first to believe in all the barbarities described by Mr. Price. South Africa’s subtle evasions since then have now persuaded us that they must have something very serious to hide.”⁹⁴⁸

On September 27, 1976, a South African ex-soldier testified before the UN’s 25-nation Council for Namibia that South African military men gave electric shocks and water torture to Namibian prisoners, causing “screams of pain.” His testimony set off a storm of controversy adding to the regime’s embarrassment following The Observer’s allegations only the previous month.⁹⁴⁹

The day after the soldier’s testimony, September 28, and at the height of the Namibian torture controversy, David Bloomberg visited Tsafendas in prison, something no Western journalist, no other lawyer or The Observer’s nominee managed. This was despite the fact that Bloomberg was no longer Tsafendas’s legal representative and therefore the authorities were not obliged to give him access. On October 2, 1976, Bloomberg released a statement to the media, describing Price’s allegations as a “diatribe” and “without foundation.” Bloomberg said he found Tsafendas to have aged, but he was still “alert, has a sound memory, is personable, reasonably well-informed and not without a sense of humour.” He said that while Tsafendas “remembers having spoken to Price briefly on occasions,” he “firmly denies” that he suffered any ill-treatment. Bloomberg said, “Tsafendas spends his days reading, mainly the Bible, helping with gardening and has added Afrikaans to the many languages he speaks.”⁹⁵⁰

The following is an extract from Bloomberg’s statement:

⁹⁴⁶ The Observer, ‘South Africa’s Evasions’, 11 November 1976.

⁹⁴⁷ The Observer, ‘Pretoria Propaganda,’ 19 December 1976: 8.

⁹⁴⁸ The Observer, ‘South Africa’s Evasions’, 11 November 1976.

⁹⁴⁹ The Cape Times, ‘Ex-SA Soldier Tells Of Torture’, 28 September 1976: 6.

⁹⁵⁰ The Cape Argus, ‘Tsafendas - Is No Broken Man-Bloomberg’, 2 October 1976: 1.

“I found Tsafendas in apparently good physical condition and seemingly far healthier than he was ten years ago. His major mental aberration, that he has a giant tapeworm, which dictates his life, remains dominant in his thought processes. However, apart from this obsession, he is mainly rational and one is able to carry on a reasonably intelligent conversation with him.

I questioned him closely as to whether he had been ill-treated in any way. He had no hesitation in stating that he was completely satisfied with his treatment, cell conditions, exercise facilities and with the food given to him. He told me that he received the same rights and privileges as other maximum security prisoners and was perfectly happy in prison and had no desire to be released ... ”⁹⁵¹

According to prison records, Bloomberg’s September 28 visit started at 14.15 p.m. and ended at 14.40 p.m., a total of twenty-five minutes, while two officers, a lieutenant and a prison warder, were present throughout the visit.⁹⁵² Bloomberg must have known there was no chance that Tsafendas would admit in front of his guards that he had been tortured. It was also unlikely that he would make any such confession to Bloomberg, who well knew that Tsafendas had been beaten in custody in 1966 and had done nothing about it then.

Bloomberg said prison officials told him they liked and had “affection” for Tsafendas.⁹⁵³ In this case, surely the guards would not admit that they tortured him. In addition, the fact that Bloomberg spent time talking privately to the guards means that he must have spent at least five minutes with them, leaving a maximum of only twenty minutes for Tsafendas - twenty minutes with a man who was in solitary confinement twenty-three hours per day and had not received a single visitor in eight years.

Furthermore, the similarities in Bloomberg’s description of Tsafendas with the way he described him in 1968 are more than obvious. Bloomberg presents Tsafendas as a satisfied and happy man with no desire to be released. The truth is Tsafendas was allowed only one hour per day outside his cell – presumably enough for Bloomberg to claim that he had access to exercise facilities and gardening. The most extraordinary claims in Bloomberg’s report are that Tsafendas was satisfied with his cell conditions and that he had no desire to be released. The fact that Tsafendas was in a cell in the Death Row and next to the room in which prisoners were hanged is not mentioned.

⁹⁵¹ The Cape Argus, ‘Tsafendas - Is No Broken Man-Bloomberg’, 2 October 1976: 1.

⁹⁵² Hand-written note regarding David Bloomberg’s visit to Tsafendas, 28 September 1976. Correctional Service. Demitrio Tsafendas, File number: 80/0043, A123 Vol 2. NASA.

⁹⁵³ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 102.

On March 1996, Tsafendas was asked during a visit to the Sterkfontein Hospital by former MK fighter and fellow prisoner at Pretoria Maximum Security Prison, Alexander Moumbaris, if he wanted anything. Tsafendas replied, "I want my freedom."⁹⁵⁴ At the same visit, Tsafendas told Marie-Jose Moumbaris, Alexander's wife and also an anti-apartheid activist and former prisoner at the women's section at Pretoria Central Prison, "I want to see the sea once again before I die."⁹⁵⁵ Tsafendas repeatedly told the priests who visited him that he hoped one day he would be released. He often used the Latin saying, dum spiro spero ("While I breathe, I hope").⁹⁵⁶

Bloomberg claimed that he had "retained an interest" in Tsafendas's "mental condition and welfare" ever since he defended him, which was why he visited him on this occasion.⁹⁵⁷ However, this hardly squares with the fact that he only spent around twenty minutes with him. Twenty minutes with a man who had no visitors in eight years and was in solitary confinement most of the time. The fact is he visited his erstwhile client only twice in his thirty-three years in custody. Bloomberg claimed he did not visit Tsafendas more often because the apartheid authorities made it "difficult" for him.⁹⁵⁸ However, the authorities apparently had no problem about him seeing Tsafendas following The Observer's allegations, while refusing the newspaper's nominee and its reporters. Bloomberg no longer had a legal tie to Tsafendas which would have required the government to allow his visit, thus suggesting that the ever-suspicious authorities were confident he would not report anything unfavourable.

It might be purely a coincidence that Bloomberg visited Tsafendas immediately after the ex-soldier's torture testimony. However, it is a fact that The Observer story about Tsafendas was published on August 1, 1976 and it took Bloomberg almost two months after that to visit Tsafendas and check if the newspaper's claims were correct.

Questions about Bloomberg's motives in visiting Tsafendas could also be raised by a letter dated October 7, 1976, which he sent to one of the prison officials who assisted him when he saw Tsafendas. This is what it said:

"Dear ... (the name is censored)

⁹⁵⁴ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017.

⁹⁵⁵ Marie-Jose Moumbaris in a personal interview, 8 March 2010.

⁹⁵⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

⁹⁵⁷ David Bloomberg in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

⁹⁵⁸ David Bloomberg in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

I would like to thank you very much indeed for the courtesy extended to me when I visited Tsafendas recently. I thought you might be interested to read the statements which I issued to the press following this visit, and I enclose herewith a copy of same. This has received prominence in the South African press and, hopefully, will be published in England as well.

You might not have seen the article in the Argus, and I am enclosing a copy of that for you.

*Again, my grateful thanks to you for your co-operation and with kind personal regards ...*⁹⁵⁹

It is normal that Bloomberg should write and thank the official for his assistance. What is surprising is Bloomberg's keenness to tell him of the statement which he issued denying The Observer's allegations and the fact that it had been reported widely in South Africa and hopefully would be published in England, too. It is clear Bloomberg assumes the official will be happy to hear a rebuttal of claims that were damaging to South Africa and to the official's prison. He goes so far as to enclose copies of his statement to the media and the article published in the Cape Argus newspaper, highlighting what he felt to be the main achievement of his visit. Bloomberg makes no direct reference to Tsafendas himself, ostensibly the reason for his visit.

Shortly after Bloomberg's visit, General van den Bergh sent Gordon Winter, a BOSS agent and journalist of The Citizen, the government's mouthpiece, to write a denial about the Observer story. Winter did this, but a few years later had the decency to admit that this was a propaganda stunt and that Tsafendas was indeed tortured.⁹⁶⁰ The Observer characterised the government's handling of the case as "Pretoria propaganda," describing as "extraordinary" the lengths to which it would go "to score a dubious propaganda point."⁹⁶¹ Thus, Bloomberg had once again offered an enormous help to apartheid, most probably not in official co-operation with the government, but as an individual who always knew which way the political winds were blowing. The inescapable question was: If Tsafendas was not tortured and the authorities had nothing to hide, why were the Observer's reporters and nominated lawyer not allowed to see him, but David Bloomberg and Gordon Winter were?

⁹⁵⁹ David Bloomberg letter to unnamed prison official, 7 October 1976. Correctional Service. Demitrio Tsafendas, File number: 80/0043, A123, Vol. 1. NASA.

⁹⁶⁰ Gordon Winter in A Question of Madness, 1997; Winter, Inside BOSS: South Africa's Secret Police, p. 476-479.

⁹⁶¹ The Observer, 'Pretoria Propaganda,' 19 December 1976: 8.

In 1997, Bloomberg was asked by filmmaker Liza Key, who was making a documentary about Tsafendas, whether he thought the assassination “changed the course of history in South Africa.” Bloomberg replied, “I think that by assassinating Dr. Verwoerd, he certainly changed the course of history of that time. I have no doubt that the eventual outcome would have been the same with the passage of time, that one couldn’t suppress the majority of the people of South Africa for all time ... Probably in retrospect, I think Tsafendas may have hurried things a little ...”⁹⁶²

However, sixteen years later, Bloomberg offered a different take on Tsafendas’s place in South Africa’s history. On October 22, 2013, Christian Martins, Eastern Cape MP for the ruling African National Congress, suggested that “homage should be bestowed upon Dimitri Tsafendas, a hero and martyr for the cause of the South African people,” and that his grave should be declared a heritage site.⁹⁶³ Bloomberg was quick to respond. Two days later, he gave a statement to The Cape Times expressing “astonishment” at such an “outrageous request,” since Tsafendas was a schizophrenic without any political motive whatsoever.⁹⁶⁴

Bloomberg’s letter is full of inaccuracies in an attempt to prove that Tsafendas does not merit such recognition. In challenging Martin’s claim that Tsafendas “changed the course of post-war South African history,” Bloomberg contradicted his own statement to Liza Key in 1997. Now, he said, “Dr. Verwoerd was succeeded by John Vorster and P.W. Botha, both strict adherents of the apartheid policy, and business continued as usual.”⁹⁶⁵ This hasty, latter-day analysis does not bear scrutiny. The fact is that Bloomberg contradicted his own 1997 statement to justify his view that Tsafendas should not be honoured by South Africa

TSAFENDAS MEETS HIS LAWYERS

Late in the morning of September 26, 1966, Tsafendas was seen by his three lawyers: Advocate Wilfrid E. Cooper and Willie Burger as his junior, and Attorney David Bloomberg. The first of the defence team to visit Tsafendas was Bloomberg, who, passing through a “succession of locked and barred doors,” arrived in “a large cell guarded on the outside by an armed policeman.” Tsafendas was “huddled in a corner” with a “dazed expression and ⁹⁶² David Bloomberg in A Question of Madness.

⁹⁶³ The Cape Times, ‘South Africans Must ‘Honour’ Dr. Verwoerd, Tsafendas’, 22 October 2013: 6.

⁹⁶⁴ The Cape Times, ‘I Am Astonished that the Eastern Cape ANC MPL, Chistian Martins, has Advanced ...’, 24 October 2013: 12.

⁹⁶⁵ The Cape Times, ‘I Am Astonished that the Eastern Cape ANC MPL, Chistian Martins, has Advanced ...’, 24 October 2013: 12.

seemed uninterested in his visitors.” As we saw earlier in this chapter, Bloomberg quickly noticed that Tsafendas “had some facial injuries, ‘which Major Cerff, the police officer who accompanied Bloomberg to the cell, claimed had “occurred during the struggle to subdue him in Parliament.” Bloomberg doubted this explanation since three weeks had elapsed since the assassination, but he decided “not to reveal” his “misgivings” since “the injuries appear to be superficial.”⁹⁶⁶

Later, Tsafendas was visited by Wilfrid Cooper, who also found Tsafendas as a “bundle in the corner” on a dirty blanket on the floor. When he told Tsafendas that he was appointed to defend him, Tsafendas responded by saying that according to the tenets of his religion, he did not need legal defence. Cooper explained that it was in his best interest to be defended, to which Tsafendas responded: “I don’t know why the good Lord should have chosen such an infirm person like me.” According to Cooper, Tsafendas was aware of the implications of what he had done, but his emotional response was that of someone who “had participated in a dream.” Tsafendas’s description of the cause of Dr. Verwoerd’s death, while very exact in its clinical details, demonstrated what Cooper referred to in the film as “a certain remoteness about him, as if he wasn’t there.”⁹⁶⁷

Cooper recalls his first interview and Tsafendas’s response when he told him that he had been appointed by Judge Beyers to act for him. Tsafendas responded immediately with a lie, saying that he did not believe in legal representation as it was against his religious beliefs.⁹⁶⁸ In fact, it was not against his religion beliefs to have legal representation and Tsafendas had actually asked to be represented by Advocate George Bizos.⁹⁶⁹ In addition, just ten months ago, in November, 1965, Tsafendas had instructed a Cape Town lawyer, Ismail Essop, to represent him in a $100,000 compensation claim from the American government for his “forced deportation” from the United States to Greece in 1947.⁹⁷⁰ Tsafendas was given a full hearing.⁹⁷¹ This is an indication of how Tsafendas’s attitude had changed since he was arrested and a pointer to how he would act in the future, lying when he considered it expeditious to both his defence and to the medics who examined him.

When Cooper asked him why he had killed Dr. Verwoerd, rather than answering the ⁹⁶⁶ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 74-75.

⁹⁶⁷ Cooper, Under Devil’s Peak: The Life and Times of Wilfrid Cooper, An Advocate in the Age of Apartheid, p. 101; Wilfrid Cooper in A Question of Madness.

⁹⁶⁸ Cooper, Under Devil’s Peak: The Life and Times of Wilfrid Cooper, An Advocate in the Age of Apartheid, p. 101-102.

⁹⁶⁹ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

⁹⁷⁰ Demetrios Tsafendakis Affidavit, November 1965. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen, NASA.

⁹⁷¹ Shaw, Believe in Miracles: South Africa from Malan to Mandela – and the Mbeki Era, p. 58.

question, Tsafendas told a long and irrelevant story about horse-racing. After several attempts to get a coherent answer out of him, Cooper said, "I gave up." Cooper noticed a strong "incongruity" about Tsafendas. "He had the appearance of a hobo, a rough looking individual, yet when he spoke, he described his feelings with a certain measure of delicacy."⁹⁷²

The same afternoon, the entire defence team, Cooper, Bloomberg and Burger, saw Tsafendas together. According to Bloomberg, Tsafendas "looked tired and somewhat dazed and at first spoke slowly but coherently. He was polite and co-operative, but generally uninterested in the questions that were put to him. Gently, we tried to extract from him a life history, but this proved difficult as his powers of concentration wavered. When he did answer, he would start in the right direction and then go off at a tangent, with a series of non sequiturs, forgetting what the question was." However, "painstakingly," they "were able to learn" Tsafendas's background and of his travels around the world. Bloomberg opined that "he was not unintelligent, for along the way, he had learned to speak several languages and was reasonably well informed."⁹⁷³

According to Bloomberg, "after a while he relaxed more and what became strangely apparent was that he showed no signs of distress or anxiety. The man knew that he was going to be charged with murder but showed an abnormal emotional attitude to his situation and surroundings. At one stage he said, 'I suppose when this whole thing is over, it will be difficult for me to live in Cape Town. Oh, well, I suppose I will have to live elsewhere!' Later he said: 'You know I didn't really like my work in Parliament. I don't think I will apply again for a job there.' Questioned about his health, he revealed that he had been in hospital a number of times, including the St Pancras Hospital in London, a hospital on the Isle of Wight, the Boston Psychopathic Hospital, the Sheep's Head Hospital and the Grafton State Hospital in New York, and the Ochosen Krankenhaus outside Hamburg in Germany. When pressed for the reasons why he had been a patient in these hospitals, he said it was all to do with a tapeworm that made him feel unwell and nervous."⁹⁷⁴

It is noteworthy to remember that although during his questioning by the police Tsafendas mentioned all these hospitals, he said nothing about the tapeworm, simply telling them the diagnosis he received at each hospital and downplaying its importance. Tsafendas also told his defence team about his examination by Dr. Kossew when he had applied for a disability grant, who had found him to be schizophrenic. However, he did not mention any of the nine doctors who had examined him over the last three years for his permanent residency permit or for various job applications, all of whom had found him to be perfectly sane and healthy.

⁹⁷² Wilfrid Cooper in A Question of Madness.

⁹⁷³ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 76.

⁹⁷⁴ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 76.

According to Bloomberg:

“Tsafendas went on to say that the tapeworm in fact controlled his life and that at one of the hospitals he had received electro-convulsive therapy to rid him of what he variously described as a ‘demon’, a ‘dragon’ and a ‘snake.’ Tsafendas told us that he had consulted many doctors and chemists to obtain medicines to enable him to pass the tapeworm and gave a lurid account of a portion of the worm emerging and snapping off in his hand. He described the tapeworm as being two inches wide with serrated edges and said that he could feel it wriggling around inside. If he passed near food that had good smells the tapeworm became aroused and the only way he could exercise any control over it was to eat and ‘the tapeworm then purred like a cat. He insisted that the tapeworm influenced his behaviour: ‘It has meant a lot to me, sir. It has caused me to see how other people live. If I didn’t have a tapeworm I’d really ... I’d probably only be living for myself, I would not know what the rest of the world was like, what other people thought, their difficulties. I would have taken life, I would have taken life, eh ... I would have only seen things eh ... well I would have taken life for granted, I would have just gone through life enjoying myself, taking life ... eh things easier.’”⁹⁷⁵

Bloomberg claimed that when Tsafendas was asked if he remembered what had happened in Parliament on September 6, he related that on that morning he had walked into the city and purchased two long knives at a shop. He had then returned to Parliament, changed into his parliamentary uniform and concealed the knives beneath his jacket. His account of events then became very vague and his mind constantly wandered. While he acknowledged stabbing Dr. Verwoerd, he could provide no precise details of the attack. “I don’t even remember how it happened, in other words how I began stabbing the man. I can only remember when the people grabbed hold of me. If the people had not grabbed hold of me I would probably be ... probably just kept on stabbing him or how shall I say ... even though he were dead I could just keep on stabbing him but ... eh ... not that I was ... I don’t know if you can call that angry.”⁹⁷⁶

⁹⁷⁵ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 76.

According to Bloomberg, the only motivation that emerged was that Tsafendas had feelings of frustration towards life, in particular towards doctors and heads of state. Tsafendas told them that in the United Kingdom he had had a job for a short while in the Houses of Parliament but couldn't get close enough to Harold Macmillan to attack him; and that in the USA he did not like President Harry Truman but couldn't get employment at the White House.⁹⁷⁷

That Tsafendas was lying to his defence team can easily be deduced by examining the above statement. The South African police received several reports from the British authorities regarding Tsafendas, and a very detailed report regarding his movements in England from the South African embassy in London. In none of them is there any indication that Tsafendas ever worked in the Houses of Parliament, which surely the British authorities would have known about. What's more, the South African embassy's secret telegram of September 9, 1966, states correctly that Tsafendas was not given a permit to work in the UK when he asked for one. In fact, he was refused permission to remain as a student and as a result was in the country illegally.⁹⁷⁸ Furthermore, a confidential PIDE report regarding Tsafendas dated November 25, 1964 states that while in England, Tsafendas was forced to work “clandestinely, because legally he was not authorized.”⁹⁷⁹ Since he was not authorized to work in Britain, or even be in the country, it is inconceivable that he could have got a job in the Houses of Parliament. Tsafendas never told anyone but Bloomberg that he ever held such job.

In addition, Tsafendas, when he was questioned, did not tell the police he was frustrated in London and wanted to attack the British Prime Minister. What he told several people was that London was his favourite city because there were so many people from various races and there was no racism. He said that he supported the Labour Party and admired Macmillan. He said he would have liked to live in London but he could not because he was not able to get a work permit.⁹⁸⁰

⁹⁷⁶ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 77.

⁹⁷⁷ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 77.

⁹⁷⁸ Secret Telegram from the South African Embassy in London to the Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

⁹⁷⁹ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁹⁸⁰ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Fotini Gavasiadis in a

As for Truman, Tsafendas was indeed anti-American, but not only did he not have a work permit, he did not have permission to reside in the United States and was arrested many times for violating its immigration laws. To even have applied for a job at the White House would have been the height of absurdity. More importantly, according to the several reports from various institutions, including the detailed account from the Grafton State Hospital, Tsafendas lived only in Massachusetts and New York, never in Washington. Finally, Tsafendas did not mention any of this to the police or to the psychiatrists who examined him. However, the likelihood is that none of this was known to the defence at the time, since they did not have access to the documents submitted to the South African police and authorities.

Bloomberg said that while Tsafendas could not give any motive for the assassination, he seemed to believe that society was against him and he saw Dr. Verwoerd as the head of that society. According to Bloomberg's 2007 memoir My Times, the tapeworm was paramount in Tsafendas's thoughts, and while he denied that the tapeworm had ordered him to kill the Prime Minister, its presence induced him to perpetrate the attack. However, ten years earlier, in 1997, Bloomberg gave a different story regarding the tapeworm. He said Tsafendas told him that it was the tapeworm which told him to kill Dr. Verwoerd. "I think the tapeworm determined that the time had arrived that Dr. Verwoerd should be removed and the tapeworm delivered this message to him."⁹⁸¹

Bloomberg said the defence team questioned Tsafendas "extensively about whether he had received instructions or advice, locally or from abroad, about the assassination, whether anyone had suggested to him that it would be a good idea to kill Dr. Verwoerd, and whether he had any accomplices. His response was negative on all these counts, and it seemed that his only confidante was the tapeworm. While he never disputed the stabbing, he seemed to fail to appreciate the magnitude of the crime or the consequences of his action."⁹⁸²

Bloomberg quoted Tsafendas as speaking as follows:

"Yes, I see it as very serious ... I see it is very serious, because I doubt very much ... eh ... I wonder at times if... eh ... people see it as serious as I do. Well, not because it involves me ... I ... am practically nothing but ... eh ... from what... eh ... I don't think it takes much thought to see that ... eh ... situation is serious ... me ... the situation is serious where we are getting to a stage in a ... eh ... stage or a period in ... eh ... where it does not concern countries personal interview, 6 May 2015; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁹⁸¹ David Bloomberg in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

⁹⁸² Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 77.

anymore ... it is probably nothing now ... that concerns the whole universe.”⁹⁸³

None of the witnesses interviewed by the author who knew Tsafendas recognised the above as the way he spoke. All strongly denied that he could have spoken in such a way without doing it intentionally. Continuing their observation, the defence listened as Tsafendas “described how the tapeworm climbed into his throat and made him feel weak, feeble and distressed, and sometimes took over his being. He seemed to believe in witchcraft and thought that this might have something to do with the tapeworm.” After more than two hours, the defence team left to consider the information they had obtained. “We felt pretty confident that Tsafendas had been truthful with us and had not deliberately attempted to conceal any facts,” Bloomberg wrote later and added that

“The presence of a tapeworm that controlled one’s life was a revelation to us and, from our laymen’s point of view, we considered our client to be seriously mentally disturbed. It was obviously necessary for us to have Tsafendas examined by experienced psychiatrists, to endeavour to make contact with the overseas hospitals where he had been treated and to interview the people he had lived with recently in Cape Town. To accomplish all this and other necessary investigations, and prepare for trial in the space of three weeks was going to be a gigantic task.”⁹⁸⁴

Bloomberg and his assistants began contacting hospitals and mental institutions in Europe and the USA whilst also searching for people in Cape Town who knew Tsafendas.⁹⁸⁵

Bloomberg demonstrated how inaccurate his picture of Tsafendas was and how little he knew of him when he told the author: “[Tsafendas] was opposed to apartheid, but he wasn’t a political animal at all. I don’t think that politics played a great part in his life and in his thinking.”⁹⁸⁶ However, Bloomberg was unaware that Tsafendas had been arrested four times and imprisoned three times by the Portuguese because of his political activities, that he was banned from entering South Africa and Mozambique for the same reason, that he had been a member of the SACP and the DSE, and that PIDE had opened a file on him as long ago as 1938.

Going back to the Tsafendas’s defence, if the South African authorities wanted a demonstrably fair trial with the world watching, why did it not appoint Advocate George ⁹⁸³ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 77.

⁹⁸⁴ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 78.

⁹⁸⁵ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 78.

⁹⁸⁶ David Bloomberg in a personal interview, 6 April 2014.

Bizos, the lawyer Tsafendas had specifically requested, and promptly when he asked for him, not twenty days later? Without suggesting that the lawyers appointed by the State were incompetent or puppets of the authorities, the fact is that Tsafendas was not allowed to have his preferred lawyer. Bizos was not asked by the authorities at any time to act for Tsafendas.⁹⁸⁷

The other question is why it took twenty days for Tsafendas to get legal representation. If Tsafendas had shown signs of mental disorder while he was in custody, at least during the first two weeks, why did not the police ask a psychiatrist to examine him? If it was such a straightforward case and General van den Bergh believed Tsafendas was insane, as he later claimed, why did he not appoint a psychiatrist to examine him to confirm this?

THE TAPEWORM

The tapeworm, which from now on will be associated constantly with Tsafendas, makes its first appearance when Tsafendas is seen by his lawyers. That was on September 26, twenty days after the assassination, during which time he was in police custody. As we have seen, Tsafendas made no mention of a tapeworm during his questioning by the police, and none of the witnesses interrogated by the police testified that Tsafendas had ever mentioned such a thing. Further, in both of Tsafendas's statements found in the National Archives, he gives clear and logical political reasons for killing Dr. Verwoerd, reasons which were entirely compatible with all the other evidence the South African police collected regarding Tsafendas's political ideologies, namely that he was anti-apartheid, anti-colonialist, considered Verwoerd not to be the real representative of all the South African people and believed that by killing him a change of policy would take place. Tsafendas later repeated this exact statement to three priests who visited him in hospital and in prison, each at different times, Fathers Minas Constandinou, Spiros Randos and Ioannis Tsafaridis.⁹⁸⁸

In response to his police interrogators, Tsafendas's use of language is precise; he does not hesitate, stumble or repeatedly say "eh?" or "er" and his thought processes appear perfectly lucid. Tsafendas's statements to the police are coherent and quite unlike the halting, confused way in which he speaks to his defence team. Not once does he mention a tapeworm; instead he sets out a cogent set of political beliefs and motivations, and more than that, gives ⁹⁸⁷ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017.

⁹⁸⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Father Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

details of how he planned and executed the assassination.

The question then is, why does Tsafendas act so differently with his defence lawyers? The facts: Tsafendas gives the police a clear political motive for his actions and speaks perfectly logically in his statements of both September 11 and September 19, his last statement. On September 11, he said, “I did not think I would get away after murdering the Prime Minister. I did not care what happened to me”⁹⁸⁹ and on September 19, he said, “I didn’t care much and didn’t give it a second thought that I would be caught.”⁹⁹⁰ The September 19 statement is of great importance because it carries the specific questions and Tsafendas’s exact answers. His answers are lucid, logical and to the point and make no mention of a tapeworm or anything like it. Then, on September 26, exactly a week later, when he sees his lawyers, he has completely changed his tune. Obviously, something happened between the 19th and the 26th which led him to this change.

When Fathers Minas Constandinou and Ioannis Tsafaridis asked Tsafendas how the tapeworm had come up, he gave no specifics. He broke down and, weeping, said that he “couldn’t take the pain [of torture] anymore”, especially the mock hangings, which had a severe effect on him. He repeated this phrase and then said that he feared he would experience an “undignified” death, “hanged in his cell” while in custody, and that the police would claim he was insane and had committed suicide. He was led to believe, from what was happening to him during the torture he had endured while in custody, that this was the arranged outcome. He believed that one day one of the mock hangings would turn out to be a real hanging and that would be the end of him. The police had clearly implied to him that David Pratt had been murdered and had not committed suicide, presenting it in this way: they told him repeatedly that the same fate as Pratt awaited him. Tsafendas was certain that he was going to end up like Pratt; murdered by the police who would then claim that he had committed suicide, while presenting him as an apolitical madman; thus, nobody would then know that he had killed Verwoerd for political reasons.⁹⁹¹

Tsafendas was deeply emotional on this subject and was embarrassed to tell the priests the details of how he had pretended to be mad or how he had used the tapeworm to escape death. He clearly considered this to have been an act of cowardice. He said although he had played the fool in the past to escape detention and torture by the Portuguese, this time he was determined not to do so. Tsafendas went on to explain to them that once he had been arrested, he copied the idea of pretending to be mad from the ancient Christians. He said that this tactic dated back to the early years of Christianity, when it had been outlawed by the Romans. It was known as “being foolish for Christ”: Christian believers would pretend to be mad, so that the Romans would leave them alone.⁹⁹²

⁹⁸⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁹⁹⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁹⁹¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

Although Tsafendas did not say so, the priests gathered, that at one point, the prospect of stopping the torture and escaping “death by suicide,” and spending the remaining years of his life in a hospital as a result of playing the fool, attracted Tsafendas. After all, he had done the same thing before with the Portuguese police. Tsafendas said he knew that he was only going to get out of prison as an insane person, the crucial question being insane dead or insane alive. He chose the latter.⁹⁹³

At some point after September 19, Tsafendas apparently did or said something which convinced the South African police that he was insane, and he was then given a team of defence lawyers. He told the priests that soon after he started playing the fool, the police stopped torturing him and allowed lawyers to see him. Observing that Tsafendas was reluctant to talk about that part of his life and appeared to be ashamed of his charade the priests never asked him about it again.⁹⁹⁴

The author is not in position to know how the tapeworm first came into the frame. Although we do not know the exact day that Tsafendas changed his tune, nor what exactly he did or said to make the authorities think he was deranged, we can certainly state that it happened sometime between September 20 and 25. Lacking this specific knowledge, we can nevertheless state that up to September 19, Tsafendas talked perfectly logically to the police and that on September 26 when he first saw his defence team he was a completely different person. It seems abundantly clear that at some point after September 19, Tsafendas decided to “play the fool” once again, in other words pretend madness, to stop the torture and avoid being murdered while in custody.

⁹⁹² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

⁹⁹³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Father Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁹⁹⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Father Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

REACTIONS OF PEOPLE WHO KNEW TSAFENDAS TO THE TAPEWORM STORY AND TO THE WAY HE SPOKE TO HIS DEFENCE TEAM

The most important testimony regarding the tapeworm and how Tsafendas spoke came from the approximately two hundred people who were questioned by the police and the Commission. Not one of them said they had heard Tsafendas mention the word tapeworm or talk in the way described by Bloomberg.⁹⁹⁵ Major Rossouw, who questioned Tsafendas while in custody on at least two occasions and for at least three days, gave testimony to the Commission of Enquiry; he made no mention of Tsafendas speaking in the way claimed. What he said was that he “never got the impression that he (Tsafendas) tried to evade any question, that he answered all the questions spontaneously and that he was “totally prepared to answer everything.”⁹⁹⁶

It is also clear from both of Tsafendas’s statements that he did not speak in the way described by his defence lawyers when he was questioned by the police. In both statements, his speech is clear, as is his logic. More importantly, in the second statement, taken on September 19, which sets out the exact wording of the questions and answers, Tsafendas replies to all the questions perfectly logically. In both statements he gives a lucid and solid account of his movements, his life and his motive in a perfectly normal way.

The author has read everything which Tsafendas, according to David Bloomberg, told his defence team, to forty-six individuals who knew him. Nineteen of them knew Tsafendas very well. They included family members, such as his half-sister, a cousin, his sister-in-law, as well as people who shared accommodation with Tsafendas, who knew him since he was a child, and three priests who were close to him during the last ten years of his life. None of them recognised Tsafendas as talking in the incoherent way he did to his defence team or referring to a tapeworm, while some told me flatly they did not believe Tsafendas ever said these things. The author is not implying that Bloomberg made up these remarks, since Tsafendas came out with similar statements to the psychiatrists who examined him shortly before the trial. However, it is indisputable that no-one, apart from his defence team and the psychiatrists who examined him during this period, ever heard Tsafendas talk in this way.

Apart from Fathers Minas Constandinou, Spiros Randos and Ioannis Tsafaridis, who were aware of Tsafendas’s play-acting with the tapeworm, none of the other witnesses the author interviewed knew anything about such a ruse. Equally important witnesses were Tsafendas's family. As we will see in the Summary Trial Chapter, the defence claimed that Tsafendas had the tapeworm since he lived with his family in Lourenço Marques in the mid-1930s. He lived with them from age six until nineteen and again from age twenty-one to twenty-three and then in South Africa from age forty-five to forty-eight.

⁹⁹⁵ Patrick O’Ryan will mention it to the Commission but not to the police. The issue is discussed in Chapter 5.

⁹⁹⁶ Major Rossouw testimony to the Commission of Enquiry, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

Every member of his family flatly denied any knowledge of a tapeworm when they were questioned by Judge van Wyk for the Commission of Enquiry. They included his stepmother, Marika, who, according to his defence psychiatrists and witnesses in the summary trial, was supposedly responsible for the tapeworm. All told the judge that Tsafendas "never mentioned" any tapeworm and that he was "definitely not insane."⁹⁹⁷ Charles Nissiotis, Tsafendas's brother-in-law, told the police, "As far as I could established he never mentioned the tapeworm story to any of the family."⁹⁹⁸ Tsafendas's half-sister Eleni confirmed this years later in 2007, as did his other half-sister Katerina in 2015.⁹⁹⁹ The issue of the tapeworm and its "existence" will be examined in detail in the following chapter. However, let us examine here what Tsafendas told his defence team and the way he spoke.

An extremely important witness is Fotini Gavasiadis, sister of Nick Vlachopoulos, Tsafendas's brother-in-law. Tsafendas lived in Fotini's and her husband's house for a few weeks, then for the next eight months in an apartment next to hers. Throughout this period in Pretoria in 1963-1964, they were very close; she saw and talked to him every day and they worked together in her brother's café. The author read to her the transcription of Tsafendas's halting remarks to his defence team, she laughed and said:

"There is absolutely no way Dimitri would have talked like that. This is a different man speaking. This is not only nonsense, which Dimitri would have never said, but he did not talk in that way. I don't believe he said these things. It's true, he ate a lot, but he never attributed [his appetite] to any tapeworm. He just liked food, he was a big man; it was natural to eat more than most people."¹⁰⁰⁰

Gavasiadis never heard Tsafendas mention a tapeworm and she ate with him at least once every day for nine months. She is certain that Tsafendas was pretending to avoid being ⁹⁹⁷ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁹⁹⁸ Charles Nissiotis statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁹⁹⁹ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Eleni Vlachopoulos in Live and Let Live.

¹⁰⁰⁰ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

executed, and said, “He was certainly capable of putting on an act like this. He was very, very clever. But he would never, never talk like this under normal conditions. Never! I cannot picture him talking all this nonsense, no way, unless he did it deliberately. He was talking very nicely; if anyone had heard him talking, you would know these couldn’t have been his words.” She said, “Dimitri could buy you and sell you¹⁰⁰¹ any time he wanted, and as many times as he wanted to. He was so clever. I was with him almost every day for a year and we practically lived together for a few months. If he was talking like this or if there was something wrong with him, I would have noticed it.” Furthermore, according to Gavasiadis, Tsafendas had a very distinctive way of talking and this was not it.¹⁰⁰²

Another very important witness is Mary Eintracht, born in Egypt in 1923, was a first cousin of Tsafendas. She first knew him in Egypt and they grew up together in Mozambique. As an adult, Eintracht continued her close relationship and Tsafendas often confided to her his thoughts on various matters. He never mentioned a tapeworm or anything else that might suggest he was schizophrenic. She, too, dismissed the notion that Tsafendas ever spoke the way he was presented. She believed he was perfectly sane and made up the tapeworm story so as not to be executed. “I knew him all my life; we grew up together and he confided, I think, everything that had happened in his life. He trusted me. I was with him every day until 1939 when he went to South Africa. He was like a real brother to me. I don’t believe for a moment he said these things to these people and he meant them. No way ...”¹⁰⁰³

Another important witness is Father Nikola Banovic. Father Nikola had Tsafendas living with him for four months in Istanbul in 1961, saw him there almost every day for another two-three months and kept in touch with him with by letter until 1966. He is one of those who became very close to Tsafendas. Like Gavasiadis, Father Nikola laughed when I read Tsafendas’s words to him and initially refused to believe it was Tsafendas talking. Tsafendas “was not talking like that and would never have spoken like that; these are the words of a madman, this is not Dimitri.” He said that if he had been asked at the time to testify before a court, he would have sworn that Tsafendas was perfectly sane and that the statements attributed to him could not possibly have come out of his mouth. The only reason he might have talked in that way would have been to convince the police he was insane. The priest said Tsafendas never said anything that might suggest he was insane. “I assure you he was not insane. I am positive he made it up in order not to be hanged.”¹⁰⁰⁴

¹⁰⁰¹ This is a Greek expression to describe someone who is extremely intelligent and very able.

¹⁰⁰² Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

¹⁰⁰³ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

Ira Kyriakakis is another very important witness as she grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques. Throughout her life, she was friendly with him and never heard him say anything about a tapeworm or something that would suggest he was insane. She is certain he did not believe he had one, that he would have told her if he thought he did, and that he simply made it up. She also does not believe Tsafendas could have spoken in the disjointed way described by the defence. “Dimitri was a devil since he was child; he was extremely intelligent and capable. If he wanted something, he would find a way to get it. Nothing and no one could stop him. He was not mad, he was very clever. Dimitri was so clever and able that he could even convince the devil to buy a Bible. You will never meet anyone who knew him well, apart from these psychiatrists and lawyers you told me about, who will tell you he was mad. He was not.”¹⁰⁰⁵

Helen Grispos lived for nine years in the house next to the Tsafendas family in Lourenço Marques. George Grispos, who became her husband, was three years older than Tsafendas, but they were boyhood best friends. Helen Grispos’s mother was the best friend of Tsafendas’s step-mother, Marika. Neither Helen nor her husband or mother ever heard Tsafendas talk about a tapeworm and Helen does not believe he would have spoken as claimed. When she and her husband read newspaper trial reports about the tapeworm, they had no doubt Tsafendas was making it up. Because a lot of people knew that her husband had grown up with Tsafendas, they often asked about the tapeworm. George invariably replied that Tsafendas never mentioned such a thing. He was certain that if he believed he had a tapeworm, he would have told him about it.¹⁰⁰⁶

Father Minas Constandinou knew Tsafendas for about thirty-five years. He met him first in 1963 in Lourenço Marques, he visited him in Pretoria Prison in the late 1970s and throughout the 1980s, and he continued seeing him in Pretoria Prison hospital and the Sterkfontein hospital in the 1990s until Tsafendas died. We have just seen what he said about the tapeworm story based on what he was told by Tsafendas. Father Minas was another who laughed when he read Tsafendas’s words to his defence team. He told the author:

“Ha, ha, he told me what he did, but not in such detail. Fascinating! Even, if he had not told me that he had deliberately played the fool, I wouldn’t have believed that these were ¹⁰⁰⁴ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

¹⁰⁰⁵ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

¹⁰⁰⁶ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013

his words. Impossible! Even at the beginning, when I asked him why he did it and he pointed with his finger to his stomach, he did not say all these things. He didn't talk like this even then and he never told me anything like this, his speech was perfect. Even when he told me about the tapeworm, I was not sure that he was mad because everything else he was saying and the way he spoke did not suggest that he was mad ... later, when he told me that everything about the tapeworm was a lie, it all made sense."¹⁰⁰⁷

Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis arrived in South Africa in 1993. He had heard a lot about Tsafendas from Rika Nikolatos and Father Minas Constandinou and was eager to meet him. He was very surprised that both considered Tsafendas to be perfectly sane when officially he was insane, even more that Minas considered him to be a hero of the anti-apartheid struggle, although he had killed a man. One day in 1994, Father Minas took Ioannis to the Pretoria Prison hospital and he met Tsafendas for the first time. The two priests visited him together once again a few weeks later, and Ioannis visited Tsafendas a third and last time, accompanied by Father Spiros, in Sterkfontein hospital at Christmas 1998.¹⁰⁰⁸

Tsafendas eventually confided the truth about the tapeworm to Bishop Ioannis, but the priest said that even if he had not done so, he could have easily told that the words read to him by the author could not have naturally been spoken by Tsafendas under normal conditions. Bishop Ioannis told the author: "He never spoke like this. He never said anything like this; not only about the tapeworm, but generally he never said anything that would make me think 'this man is not mentally well.' He talked beautifully. I am certain that he deliberately talked like this to his lawyers and to the doctors."¹⁰⁰⁹

Father Michalis Visvinis visited Tsafendas very regularly for five years in prison (1989-1994) and got to know him very well. They spent hours and hours talking. He told the author:

"I felt that he [Tsafendas] needed to speak, so several times I would just let him speak. He enjoyed speaking and he could speak for hours. I also often asked him questions about his life, and his answers were always logical and what one would expect. He never evaded any question and I never had to repeat myself to him for a second time, nor was his answer ever off the subject. He never spoke to me this way [the way he did with the defence]. His speech was always absolutely fine. He always spoke like a normal man. [His speech] was ¹⁰⁰⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁰⁰⁸ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

¹⁰⁰⁹ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

not disjointed or anything else. It was perfectly articulate and logical, always very coherent. He never said anything to suggest he had a mental problem or that he had any difficulty speaking or thinking and expressing himself properly. I really can't imagine him talking like this [the way Tsafendas did with his lawyers and those who examined him]. I find it hard to believe that he spoke like this."¹⁰¹⁰

Katerina Pnema, Tsafendas's younger half-sister, remained forever extremely angry with Tsafendas, believing that he ruined her life. She strongly condemned his murder of Dr. Verwoerd. In 1994, efforts were made under the first democratically elected government in South Africa to grant Tsafendas amnesty. He was aged seventy-six at the time and unable to care for himself. Judge Jody Kollapen, and subsequently governmental officials, asked Tsafendas's family to take him into their home and care for him. They refused and Tsafendas spent the remaining years of his life in Sterkfontein Hospital.¹⁰¹¹ Despite her anger towards her half-brother, Katerina Pnema considers "it's impossible" for Dimitri to have spoken as his defence team described. "He would never have said anything like this ... what you read to me, it's nonsense; he never spoke like this and I don't believe he ever said those words ... I don't believe he even said it deliberately to play the fool. He was certainly capable of doing it [pretending to be mad], but to say all this nonsense? No, I don't believe it. Dimitri never spoke like this."¹⁰¹²

Alexander Moumbaris met Tsafendas in late 1972 - early 1973 at Pretoria Maximum Security Prison while awaiting trial on political charges. He was found guilty of "conspiring with the ANC to instigate violent revolution in South Africa, aiding terrorists, distributing ANC pamphlets in Durban in 1968, and reconnoitring the Transkei to find places for seaborne landings."¹⁰¹³ Moumbaris spoke to Tsafendas for at least one hour every day for about three months. Initially, Tsafendas was cautious and although very talkative, it was obvious to Moumbaris that he did not trust him. However, as time passed, Tsafendas began opening up. One day, Tsafendas told him proudly in Greek about Verwoerd: "I got τον Ντρή τους" ("their tough guy" or "their champion," but in a pejorative sense). Moumbaris told the author that Tsafendas never mentioned a tapeworm to him or said anything to suggest he was insane; all the conversations they had were perfectly normal and he found Tsafendas to be "a very intelligent, witty, serious and knowledgeable person." Tsafendas even asked him to ¹⁰¹⁰ Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

¹⁰¹¹ Memorandum of Jody Kollapen of Lawyers for Human Rights, 24 November 1994. Dimitri Tsafendas's file in the Lawyers for Human Rights collection (AL3183). SAHA.

¹⁰¹² Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁰¹³ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017.

teach him Algebra, but the lesson was short-lived as the warders forbade it. Moumbaris is certain that Tsafendas acted the fool in order to not be hanged. Moumbaris told the author: “I not only regard Dimitri Tsafendas as a sane man but also as the bravest and most ill-treated man I have ever met.”¹⁰¹⁴

Andreas Babiolakis lived with Tsafendas for two-three months in 1964 in Beira and had grown up with him in Lourenço Marques. He strongly denies that Tsafendas could have spoken like this or believing to have a tapeworm. He does not recognise the babbling, broken phrases which Tsafendas used to his lawyers and the psychiatrists and is convinced that he made those up, too. Babiolakis heard in Beira in 1964 that Tsafendas had claimed to be Saint Peter while he was in police custody. When he later asked Tsafendas about it, Tsafendas seemed embarrassed and said that he had a nervous breakdown but was now ok. Babiolakis believed then that Tsafendas had made up the Saint Peter act and later believed the same about the tapeworm.¹⁰¹⁵

Of his language to his defence, Babiolakis told the author:

“I never heard Dimitri talking like this; this is someone else talking. He couldn’t have said these things unless he did it deliberately, which is what I think he did. Dimitri’s speech was very good and clear, whether it was in Greek, in English or in Portuguese. I’ve never heard him talking like this and I can’t believe he ever did. We were flatmates for there-four months; he was not talking like this and I never, ever thought even for a second that there could be something wrong with him. Never and not just me, all of us. I was not surprised when I heard about the tapeworm, because I knew he had lied before when he was arrested by the Portuguese and he told them he was the apostle Peter or the apostle Paul.”¹⁰¹⁶

John Michaletos, Tsafendas’s cousin and the son of Artemis, Tsafendas’s aunt who brought him up in Egypt, met Tsafendas in 1951 and got to know him well between 1963 and 1965. During those years, Tsafendas spent a lot of time in John’s house and slept there on several occasions. Michaletos never heard him talking about the tapeworm or anything else that might suggest he was insane. He finds it hard to believe that Tsafendas spoke this way to his lawyers. He is absolutely certain that Tsafendas was perfectly sane. “I have no doubt about it, I never had,” he told the author. Michaletos added to the author:

¹⁰¹⁴ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017.

¹⁰¹⁵ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

¹⁰¹⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

“Dimitris never spoke like this. This is gibberish, I can’t imagine him talking like this. He always spoke clearly and made sense. We talked many times and for very long. He was an excellent story-teller. He could talk about so many things; he was very knowledgeable. We all enjoyed his company because of the way he talked. You could not have been bored talking to him. Never, not even once, he said anything that did not make sense or there was the slightest suspicion that there was something wrong with him. We all considered him to be very intelligent. When we heard about the tapeworm, we all fell off the clouds [a Greek adage, meaning we were completely taken by surprise], but we did not believe that he really thought he had one; we all knew he had made it up and the fact that he was talking like this to the doctors and lawyers confirmed it; he never spoke like this before.”

Irene Michaletos, John’s wife, knew Tsafendas for more than a year in 1964 and 1965 and he often visited and stayed at her house in Beira. They had several long conversations and she never experienced any problems conversing with him; on the contrary, she found Tsafendas to be an excellent and interesting conversationalist. She told the author:

“It is certainly false that he was unable to follow a conversation or that anyone had any difficulty talking to him. As a matter of fact, it was the exact opposite. I found the conversations with him very easy and interesting, too. He was a great storyteller. I had many long conversations with him. He was from the kind of people who have something to tell you, that you could sit and listen to them for hours. And I did that, I very much enjoyed talking and listening to him. He was not boring, he could talk to you about religion, politics and history, his travels and adventures around the world. But he did not show off when talking; he was a humble man, he never tried to show off, like that he had travelled in so many countries or that he was very knowledgeable. He was very modest and very down to earth, a serious man.”¹⁰¹⁷

Antony Michaletos, John’s brother and Artemis’s son, was also present when Tsafendas stayed in their house. He always considered him to be a “very clever and very logical person,” and he never doubted his sanity when he read in the newspaper about the tapeworm. He never believed that Tsafendas really thought he had a tapeworm and concluded immediately that his cousin had made it up “to save himself.” Michaletos also told the author about the tapeworm:

“What a hell of an invention, isn’t it! How he thought that up I don’t know. It was ¹⁰¹⁷ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

Antony [his brother] who first told me [that Tsafendas had spoken to his defence team about a tapeworm] and I did not believe him. I thought John was making it up, I knew Dimitris would have never said that. He insisted, but I still did not believe him. I honestly thought he was joking. I only believed it later that day when he showed me the newspapers. I burst into laughs when I read it. I remember me reading aloud from the newspaper what he had allegedly told the doctors and everyone laughing about it [his brother, his sister-in-law and his parents]. My mother got a real kick out of it; she really enjoyed hearing it. In our house, after we read the first day [of court proceedings] we couldn't wait for the next one to see what else will be said, and again, we will sit around the table all together and I will read out loud. I remember there was also an old woman who lived next door to our house, she lived by herself, and she knew Dimitri since he was a little child. She could not read and she would ask me to read every single thing that the newspaper was writing about Dimitri. She even understood that he was making it up, but found it very amusing to hear all about it. I remember that when I was reading something that sounded very strange to her, especially about the tapeworm, she would ask me 'Dimitri said that?' and then she would cross herself in disbelief. He [Tsafendas] made it up to save his skin, no doubt about that. I knew it, I had no doubt about it, I did not even think about it for a second, it was impossible to believe such a thing, impossible."¹⁰¹⁸

All the above witnesses are willing to swear under oath in any court that Tsafendas did not talk in the manner attributed to him and that he would never have said any of things attributed to him unless he was pretending to be mad.

Further testimony to Tsafendas's cleverness came from his half-sister, Eleni Vlachopoulos, who was closer to Tsafendas than any of his siblings. Eleni Vlachopoulos was born in 1936 and thus spent only her first five years in the Tsafendas family situation, but Tsafendas maintained touch with her thereafter through letters and postcards and he spent nine months in 1963-1964 as her neighbour in Pretoria. Vlachopoulos testified to the police in 1966 that Tsafendas never spoke to her or to anyone in the family about a tapeworm. She said exactly the same thing in 2007 in Manolis Dimelas's documentary about Tsafendas, Live and Let Live, when she also claimed that her half-brother "was not crazy, he was very, very clever; cleverer than any of us and very able. If he wanted to do something, if he had a target, he would always achieve it."¹⁰¹⁹

¹⁰¹⁸ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016.

¹⁰¹⁹ Eleni Vlachopoulos in Live and Let Live - this part is available in the rushes.

Apart from the witnesses mentioned above, the author read out Tsafendas's reported words to another forty-six people who knew him well, and all declared he could not have spoken as claimed, or if he did, it was to mislead his interrogators. Further, they never heard him mention a tapeworm. Of this total, the author has not listed those who did not know Tsafendas well or who were very young at the time – Tsafendas's nephews, for instance. The twenty-nine named here all knew Tsafendas for several months at least, while the Eleni seamen knew him for at forty-two days. Some of the crewmen were with Tsafendas for every one of those forty-two days. Brief accounts of the interviews with them follow.

1. Costas Chagios, a Cape Town café owner, got to know Tsafendas on a friendly basis in 1965 when he walked into his restaurant. In the year up to his arrest in 1966, Tsafendas visited the restaurant more than fifty times. Chagios does not believe “even for a moment” that Tsafendas said what is claimed to his defence team. “If he did, he was lying to save himself ... He was very intelligent and this was not the way he talked, he talked very nicely; excellent use of words.”¹⁰²⁰
2. Irene Michaletos met Tsafendas in 1964 in Beira and associated with him until 1965. She never heard him saying anything about a tapeworm or anything else that might be seen as strange. She does not believe Tsafendas meant what he told his defence team. Tsafendas, she said, was perfectly sane and a “very, very clever man.”¹⁰²¹
3. Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott's boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest. He never heard him say anything “ridiculous” such as what he said to his defence team and has no doubt Tsafendas was perfectly sane. “I remember how he talked and I cannot see these words coming from his mouth. He did not talk like that.”¹⁰²²
4. Peter Protoulis was a supplier of foodstuffs to the tanker Eleni. He met Tsafendas on board and in the forty-two days that the vessel was docked in Cape Town, he never heard him say anything to suggest he was insane.¹⁰²³
5. Alexandra Vaporidis knew Tsafendas for about six months in Istanbul. She doesn't remember everything they discussed, but she is certain Tsafendas was a “completely normal man ... he never mentioned this tapeworm.” Her husband, Father Agathagos Vaporidis, was close to Tsafendas during the six months and Alexandra says he would ¹⁰²⁰ Costas Hagios in a personal interview, 24 March 2015.

¹⁰²¹ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

¹⁰²² Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

¹⁰²³ Peter Protoulis in a personal interview, 28 May 2016.

- have told her if he had noticed anything wrong with him.¹⁰²⁴
6. Nick Papadakis became close to Tsafendas when the latter was in Beira and Gondola. They lived in the same accommodation for two months and worked together for one month at the Hume Pipe Company. He too had heard at the time that Tsafendas had claimed to be Saint Peter while he was in Portuguese custody. He and several other Greeks at the time who had discussed the issue were under the impression that Tsafendas had made it up, as they were with him every single day prior to his arrest and never said anything like this. Papadakis does not recognise Tsafendas's words to his Defence team and to the psychiatrists and he is positive that he was making it up.
 7. Panagiotis Peroglou was another who met Tsafendas in Cape Town in 1965 and kept up with him until his arrest. He never heard Tsafendas say anything crazy and has no doubt that he was quite sane.¹⁰²⁵
 8. Pamela Abrahams met Tsafendas in Cape Town in 1965. He made a good impression on her due to his politeness and good manners and she never heard him say anything to indicate he might be insane.¹⁰²⁶
 9. Stratis Vamvarapis met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott's boarding house. He never heard Tsafendas saying anything like the remarks attributed to him by his lawyers or anything else to suggest he was insane.¹⁰²⁷
 10. Cleanthes Alachiotis was a member of the crew of the Eleni and one of those who became closest to Tsafendas. Tsafendas told him about "pretending to be mad" in order not to not serve in the Portuguese army and Alachiotis believes that his reported speech in custody was another such act since he considered it "completely impossible" that Tsafendas spoke as claimed. "He was either joking or he had a specific reason to do it. Obviously, it was the second, since he wanted to save his head. If the police had asked me to testify in court, I would have sworn that he was making it up. He was nothing like this, but I am not surprised he did it since he had done it before."¹⁰²⁸
 11. Nikolas Billis, Eleni crewman. He was with Tsafendas every day for the 42 days the tanker was in Cape Town. He is not surprised by Tsafendas's words to his defence as he has no doubt that he made up the tapeworm story so as not to be hanged. Tsafendas had told him how he pretended to be mad to avoid service in the Portuguese Army. "No doubt ¹⁰²⁴ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

¹⁰²⁵ Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

¹⁰²⁶ Pamela Abrahams in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

¹⁰²⁷ Stratis Vamvarapis in a personal interview, 31 May 2016.

¹⁰²⁸ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010.

he did it again. If you met him, you could tell that this man's brain was a level above the rest. He could easily manipulate you and convince you of anything. I am not at all surprised that he told this to the police. He definitely made it up. He did not talk like this. He talked very well, like a teacher."¹⁰²⁹

12. Nikolas Kambouris, Eleni seaman, who was with Tsafendas every day for the 42 days the tanker was in Cape Town and became a very close friend. "I would bet my house that Dimitri did not say these things ... well, if he did, he must have had a reason and he did not really mean them. I am positive about it. These are the words of a madman and Dimitri was an intelligent and cultured man ... he must have been pretending with them as he did with the Portuguese. He was saner than a lot of people I knew ... I don't believe that he told these people these things. He was a serious man; he was not talking like this. I was with him for forty-two days and he never said anything stupid like these things." Kambouris states that Tsafendas "did not talk rubbish; he was an idealist; a man with high principles..."¹⁰³⁰

13. Michalis Vasilakis, Eleni seaman, became friendlier with Tsafendas than any of the crew. This was his reaction when I read to him what Tsafendas told his defence:
"A tapeworm? Did Dimitri say that? Are you sure? He couldn't have said that. A tapeworm? It's unbelievable. Dimitri was a very clever man; he was not talking nonsense. He knew as much as all of us knew and he was talking better than a professor. I was the one who first called him 'Professor.' I have no doubt that if he really said these things to the police he must have done it to save himself. He couldn't possibly have believed them and I am telling you he did not believe them. He would have told me if there was such thing. He told me a lot about his life and I can tell you this man was one of the smartest people I have ever met. You could see some rare dignity and pride in him. You could see from the way he was talking about politics and the world how politically passionate he was. You don't meet men like that every day. I don't think that anyone who met him would tell you that he was crazy. This is complete nonsense."¹⁰³¹

14. Georgios Kantas, Eleni seaman, who spent some time with Tsafendas almost every day during the vessel's stay. Like Billis and Alachiotis, he is not surprised that Tsafendas spoke about a tapeworm, although he never mentioned any such thing to him. However, Tsafendas told him about his act with the Portuguese in order to not serve in the ¹⁰²⁹ Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011.

¹⁰³⁰ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014.

¹⁰³¹ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

Portuguese army and Kantas firmly believes that this was just another mad act:

“He never spoke in this way and I can’t imagine him talking like this, though I believe he did it as he was capable of doing it. You could tell that this man was very able. He did not talk this way. I can’t explain it, but I remember that he had a very specific way of talking, using not very common, but absolutely correct words. He was talking like a professor.

That is what we used to say and what he called him.”¹⁰³²

15. Grigoris Pouftis, Eleni seaman, agrees with his crewmates that Tsafendas was putting on another ‘mad’ act as he did with the Portuguese:

“He was certainly not crazy. He was a little peculiar because of the way he was talking. I mean he was sometimes over polite and it seemed to me that his personality did not fit with his job. We met hawkers all around the world and none was ever like him ... I would describe him as an aristocratic hawker, if such a thing exists! I couldn’t believe that a man with his manners and knowledge could be doing this job. That was the only peculiar thing about him.”¹⁰³³

16. Emanuil Mastromanolis, the Eleni boatswain who was involved in procuring a firearm for Tsafendas, spent a lot of time with Tsafendas and never heard him speak in the way he did to his defence team. Mastromanolis does not believe that Tsafendas could have said such things. “He did not talk like that; definitely not,” he told the author.¹⁰³⁴

17. Emanuel Tsabouniaris, Eleni seaman who also spent a lot of time with Tsafendas. He considered Tsafendas to be “a gentleman and a very sophisticated man.” Like Pouftis, he found it strange that Tsafendas, “such an educated and well-mannered man, could do such job.” However, this was the only thing he found strange about him. He believes Tsafendas couldn’t possibly talk as he did and mean what he said unless he did it deliberately to get something out of it.¹⁰³⁵

18. Ioannis Speis, Eleni seaman: Tsafendas never said anything to him that bears the slightest resemblance to what he told his defence.¹⁰³⁶

19. Vasilios Perselis, Eleni seaman and a very good friend of Tsafendas. He never heard Tsafendas say anything like his statement and has no doubt that he did so to escape hanging. “He spoke very nicely; not nonsense like that. He knew how to speak and ¹⁰³² Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012.

¹⁰³³ Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009.

¹⁰³⁴ Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016.

¹⁰³⁵ Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 6 June 2015.

¹⁰³⁶ Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015.

- everything he said made sense. He was not crazy.”¹⁰³⁷
20. Dionisis Lallis, Eleni seaman. He did not associate with Tsafendas as much as some of the other crew members, but he spoke to him several times and never got the slightest impression of insanity.¹⁰³⁸
21. Panteleimon Aspiotis, Eleni seaman. A good friend of Tsafendas, also never thought that he could be insane and could not imagine him saying the nonsense he told his defence.¹⁰³⁹
22. Miltiades Kaldis met Tsafendas in Cape Town in 1965 and kept in touch until his arrest. He never heard Tsafendas say anything close to what he told his defence.¹⁰⁴⁰
23. Antonis Nichas, a supplier to the Eleni, met Tsafendas in 1966. He never heard him say anything to suggest he was insane or anything similar to what he told the police.¹⁰⁴¹
24. George Ananiades met Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques in 1963 and described him to his statement to the police “as a normal person with a very high-intelligence.”¹⁰⁴² He added in a personal interview with the author that “Tsafendas seemed like a very lucid man. He was definitely not insane.” Upon reading to him the Tsafendas’s comments to his defence team and the psychiatrists, he expressed his complete surprise and cannot believe that Tsafendas might have said such things.¹⁰⁴³
25. George Liberopoulos met Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques in 1963 and associated with him for a few weeks. He described him to his statement to the police “as a normal person with a very high-intelligence.”¹⁰⁴⁴ He added in a personal interview with the author that it “never crossed” his mind that Tsafendas “might be a schizophrenic.”¹⁰⁴⁵
26. Nick Augustides is the son of the owner of Mike’s Outfitters in Cape Town for whom Tsafendas worked on commission. He knew Tsafendas for three-four months and never heard him say anything to suggest he was insane. He told the author that Tsafendas “definitely did not look or sound insane.”¹⁰⁴⁶
27. Marina Tsihlikis. She met Tsafendas in Beira in 1964. Her father was good friend of ¹⁰³⁷ Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015.

¹⁰³⁸ Dionisis Lallis in a personal interview, 19 June 2015.

¹⁰³⁹ Panteleimon Aspiotis in a personal interview, 6 June 2015.

¹⁰⁴⁰ Miltiades Kaldis in a personal interview, 12 March 2016.

¹⁰⁴¹ Antonis Nichas in a personal interview, 31 March 2016.

¹⁰⁴² Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

¹⁰⁴³ George Ananiades in a personal interview, 21 June 2016.

¹⁰⁴⁴ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

¹⁰⁴⁵ George Liberopoulos in a personal interview, 6 July 2015.

¹⁰⁴⁶ Nikos Augustides in a personal interview, 19 February 2016.

Tsafendas. She never heard him speak in the way his defence statement conveyed.¹⁰⁴⁷

28. Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis met Tsafendas in Germany at different times in the 1950s and never heard him saying anything that would indicate that he might not be sane. He also visited him in the Ochsenzoll Krankenhaus Hospital. Although Tsafendas was admitted supposedly because of the tapeworm, he did not tell Father Efthimios anything about it. The priest does not remember what Tsafendas told him was the reason for his hospitalization, but he is certain that he did not mention the tapeworm.¹⁰⁴⁸
29. Dimitris Skoularikis met Tsafendas in prison in the early 1990s. He never got the impression that Tsafendas was insane. One day he asked him, “How is the tapeworm Dimitri?” Tsafendas replied, “I don’t have one; they [the prison guards] think I have one.”¹⁰⁴⁹

The author includes here three witnesses who did not meet Tsafendas personally but were close to people who did. The author considers the statements they were told, though second hand, to be entirely reliable.

1. Advocate George Bizos. His mother-in-law was the best friend of Tsafendas’s step-mother and knew Tsafendas very well from childhood. She told Bizos that he was perfectly sane.¹⁰⁵⁰
2. Dr. Costas Gazidis’s¹⁰⁵¹ first cousin Rika Nikolatos was a social worker and visited Tsafendas in prison and then in Sterkfontein Hospital. In total, she spent some ten years meeting Tsafendas and they were extremely close. She told Dr. Gazidis, “He is completely sane, there is nothing wrong with him.” Tsafendas never said anything to her to suggest he might be insane and she always maintained that he was “completely sane.” Dr. Gazidis is willing to sign an affidavit and swear under oath that this is exactly what he was told by Nikolatos.¹⁰⁵² Nikolatos’s statement is also confirmed by Father Minas Constandinou and Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis. She had discussed his case extensively with ¹⁰⁴⁷ Marina Tsihlakis in a personal interview, 3 April 2015.

¹⁰⁴⁸ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

¹⁰⁴⁹ Dimitris Skoularikis in a personal interview, 26 April 2015.

¹⁰⁵⁰ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017.

¹⁰⁵¹ A prominent anti-apartheid activist, member of the Communist Party of South Africa, the Pan Africanist Congress, and of the South African Congress of Democrats (COD). He was arrested in 1964 and spent the next two years in prison. He was released in 1966, only to be banished shortly afterwards for two years (Solomon Makgale, ‘The White Doctor in the PAC’, IOL, 13 November 1999. Retrieved from <https://www.iol.co.za/news/politics/the-white-doctor-in-the-pac-19558>)

¹⁰⁵² Dr. Costa Gazidis in a personal interview, 10 April 2015.

them both and she and Father Minas had often visited Tsafendas together.¹⁰⁵³

3. Janet Gazidis, Costas' wife is also willing to sign an affidavit and swear under oath that this is exactly what Nikolatos, too, was told.¹⁰⁵⁴

Finally, valuable testimony comes in the form of Tsafendas's medical report from Grafton State Hospital, which states that while in the United States in 1943 "he faked mental illness because he was afraid to ship out because of the numerous leakings (sinkings) of ships."¹⁰⁵⁵

How convincing was Tsafendas's play-acting and was he capable of putting on an authentic display of insanity? All evidence says he was, including Judge Jacques Theodore van Wyk of the Commission of Enquiry. In his final report, the judge said that Tsafendas is "quite knowledgeable about mental disorders—he also admitted to the Commission that he had read fairly extensively on the subject in order to determine what was wrong with him... and therefore adopted a somewhat sceptical attitude towards him. It is clear that his word cannot be relied upon, and that he is sufficiently intelligent to put on a fairly good act ..."¹⁰⁵⁶ Finally, Tsafendas's file at the Prison Service, File: A5078, described him as, "A person of Colour, an extremely resourceful and cunning individual who is physically and mentally able to plan and execute escape."¹⁰⁵⁷

STATEMENTS

ALFRED EDWARD GRAY¹⁰⁵⁸

K/S/Sergeant in the S.A. Police stationed at Epping and serve under the command of the District Investigation Officer, Athlone.

During November 1965 to March 1966 I often went to friends of mine in Roy Road, Lansdowne. I then also always went to a Muslim store in Delhi Road, Lansdowne. I kept the owner, Parker, company. During these times I found a male with a Jewish appearance in the ¹⁰⁵³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

¹⁰⁵⁴ Janet Gazidis in a personal interview, 10 April 2015.

¹⁰⁵⁵ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁰⁵⁶ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18.

¹⁰⁵⁷ Jaap Marais, Die Era van Verwoerd, (Pretoria: Aktuele Publikasies, 1992), p. 208.

¹⁰⁵⁸ Alfred Edward Gray statement to the police, 26 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

store about three or four times. The man always bought foodstuffs. I have never seen the man previously. Parker did not tell me that he knew him. On one of those occasions, I stood outside the store when the man came to me. He was alone. He asked me what he should do to procure a Coloured person identity card because he had a white person identity card. I referred him to the Department of Coloured Affairs. He was pleased and walked off.

About 3 to 4 weeks after that I encountered the man in Yorke Road, Lansdowne. He was alone and so was I. He told me that he was unhappy because he was unsuccessful at the Department of Coloured Affairs. He continued and also said that he does not like the police, but that I will be shocked when I saw what he was going to do to one of our big chiefs. I said nothing back to him. I did not take him seriously as many Coloureds had such an attitude. He then walked off. I was aware that he was boarding at a Coloured teacher, O’Ryan, in Westminster Street, Lansdowne. I’ve seen the man go in to the mentioned address.

The man always spoke to me in English. On Thursday, 15/09/1966, I saw the picture of Tsafendas in the Herald as well as the house where he lived. I immediately recognised the man as the man I met in Lansdowne. I am not mistaken about identifying him. On 24/09/1966 I reported the matter to Captain van Niekerk, Athlone.

(SGD) G.A.G van Zyl. NR. 34069 S/A/O.

SAREL JOHANNES VENTER¹⁰⁵⁹

A major in the South African Police Force attached to the staff of the Divisional Commissioner, SA Police in Cape Town.

Major Venter was the officer in charge of police services at the Parliament Building. He described in his statement the disposition of officers and the extent of their authority. He said the police were not informed of new staff appointments, had no control over messengers and that he did not know of the employment of Tsafendas. Had he done so, he would have had him investigated because of his name and the fact that he was a stranger. Nothing else about Tsafendas or the assassination is mentioned in his statement.

¹⁰⁵⁹ Sarel Johannes Venter statement to the police, 26 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: verklaring deur Majoor S.J. Venter, NASA.

TUESDAY, 27 SEPTEMBER 1966

STATEMENTS

ELIZABETH MAGDALENA GROVES¹⁰⁶⁰

Owner of a boarding house for elderly people in Observatory, Cape Town.

Demitrio Tsafendas stayed at my lodgings for about 6-7 weeks from about April to May 1966. He had two roommates, one a Mr. Fisher who disappeared, and the other a young traffic cop, Jacobus Bornman from the Cape Traffic Department. D. Tsafendas was a very good eater. He mastered many languages and behaved properly. Besides his rough table manners, I have nothing against him. He was completely normal. I was a nurse and worked in lunatic institutions. He was a normal person to the best of my knowledge. I received complaints that he was argumentative and towards me he said that we Afrikaners are a backward nation. It was clear that he had nothing good towards Afrikaners. For the sake of my other tenants, I asked him to leave my place. He was referred to me by Mrs. Beeslaar, a social worker from Groote Schuur Hospital. When he left me, I knew he went to another part of Observatory and later at Woodstock, but I never got his address.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

REGINALD ROBERT MAILE¹⁰⁶¹

Shipguard for Larpente Agency, Cape Town.

On 24th July 1966 the Greek ship ELENI docked at the mole in Cape Town Docks. I was informed that the ship was in for repairs due to having lost its rudder. I did the day-shift guard duty to this ship (7 a.m. to 7 p.m.) for the period it remained in harbour, i.e. for 42 days.

¹⁰⁶⁰ Elizabeth Magdalena Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁰⁶¹ Reginald Robert Maile statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

When I saw the photographs of Dr. Verwoerd's assassinator in the local papers, I realised that I knew the man. He was a regular visitor to the ship, and I knew his face quite well, and have also spoken to him, though I have not been introduced to him. During the ships stay the accused came on board approximately every day. He had the captain's permission to come aboard. This ship was not under police protection as it was not discharging or tokening on cargo. I had my meals on the boat in the general crew messroom. I had my own table. The accused also had his meals on this ship. He was eating with the crew, at their table.

The crew of the Eleni were approximately 100% Greek, The accused could speak their language very fluently. I of course could not follow their conversations. On one occasion the accused requested me to call on him if I wanted to tell the crew anything - as they could not understand English and he could then interpret. On the first occasion I asked him to tell the crew that there was a circus in Town, which would be worthwhile to see. On another occasion he asked me if there was a telephone on board. On one occasion he wanted to know if the second engineer was on board - he said this man owed him some money. This happened about 5 days before the ship left. The ship left on Saturday night the 3rd of September 1966.

The accused was on very friendly relations with the crew. It struck me though as very peculiar that on the day when he called for the second engineer, the bosun told me that the accused was mad, I should not let him onto the ship. I got the definite impression that there was some ill feeling from the bosun towards the accused. The bosun was usually eating at my table (also the ships carpenter). I cannot remember that the bosun had contact with the accused in my presence. Apart from my meals, I kept to my office which was on the ship at the telephone. The time when the accused used the phone, I went outside. I never listen to other people's phone conversations. The accused never had personal discussions with me. The times I saw him with the crew, and also when he spoke to me, I never got the impression that he could be mentally defective. He was sober, polite and perfectly normal.

On 3rd of September, 1966, when the ship left, I was on duty. It was about 5 p.m. – 5.30 p.m. The accused came to see the ship off. He joined two Greek women and a gentleman who were also waiting for the ship to depart. These people were also frequent visitors to the ship. I got the impression that they were husband, wife and daughter. I have an idea that one of the crew members was their nephew. They have also visited the captain's office, but mostly spent their time with the crew - also had meals with the crew.

When the gangway was already up I recollected that they were also at the ship in the morning when I arrived. At that time in the morning, the ship was shifted from the top of Jackson Wall to the bottom. The gangway was lifted before my arrival. The three Greeks were waiting, and we all moved down slowly with the ship. I had a Cape Times under my arm. The older woman asked me if "DR. VERWOERD WAS DEAD." I opened the Times quite surprised, and said there was nothing like that in the paper.

Witness: (1) J. Oliver. D/H/CONST. (Railways).

(2) D.J.V. Troost. 23505 D/Sergt.

MARIA KOKKINIDOU¹⁰⁶²

Visitor of the Eleni. Sea Point. 12. p.m.

I know the captain of the Greek ship Eleni. He is Michaelos Fondudos,¹⁰⁶³ who is from Kilimnos, Greece, my place of birth. When I arrived in Cape Town (from Pretoria¹⁰⁶⁴) on about the 26th of July, 1966, I heard that the Eleni had been docked about 3 days earlier. I went to the boat with a lady Mrs. Vyanos, and upon arrival at the ship, was introduced to the captain. I however recognized him as an old acquaintance - though he did not recognize me. I brought my son and daughter with me to Cape Town. My son was out of work trying to find a job in Cape Town. He also visited the ship where he met a young friend (old school mate) of his from Greece. This friend asked him why he did not join the merchant navy. As result I had a chat with the captain and my son was signed on as a crew member on 1st August, 1966.

During the delay of the ship in Table Bay, I went to the ship every day. I had my meals with the crew upon their invitation - this being a friendly Greek Custom. I went there with my daughter, and a male friend Mr. Nicolaou Christodoulos¹⁰⁶⁵. During my visits to the boat, I got to know that two persons who were not members of the crew, were also having meals there. One was a watchman who had his meals at regular mealtimes, twice daily, lunchtime and suppertime. The other man came at odd times. He was a tall man with a beard.

¹⁰⁶² Maria Kokkinidou statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

¹⁰⁶³ The correct spelling is Michalis Fountotos.

¹⁰⁶⁴ Note of the author

¹⁰⁶⁵ Christodoulos is the first name, Nicolaou is the surname.

He looked a real tough customer and had fair hair. I got to understand that he was from another ship docked nearby. I have seen photo's in the local newspapers allegedly of the man Tsafendas. I do not recognize having seen him on the ship.

On the 3rd of September 1966 when the ship was due to leave, I went to the ship again in the morning about 8.30 a.m. That time the ship was to be moved from its moorings to another anchor place. I was on the ship with Mr. Christodoulos, before it was moved. We did not know that the ship was going to be moved. We left about 10 a.m. to fetch my daughter. The ship was still not moved. The three of us went onto the boat upon our return. After lunch it was cold and Mr. Christodoulos left to fetch coats for myself and my daughter. Whilst he was gone, the boat moved with me and the daughter on board. Mr. Christodoulos walked along till the ship docked again. He came aboard and all three of us remained on board till 4.30 p.m. before the ship finally moved off. Then we waved goodbye to my son. That time we were joined by a Mr. Nichas (i.e. the man from Vacuum Dry Cleaners, Sea Point). A lot of other people were around but only the four of us were together.

In the morning when I arrived at the boat, the drawbridge was pulled up. I stood with Mr. Christodoulos on the ground. There were a lot of people waiting for the bridge to come down. The same time the ship's crane was defective and people were trying to repair it, and there were more than one person in uniform. There was one man near us with a newspaper. My son Costa and another man wearing a blue uniform were on the ship. My son called down to me "Did you hear the news - Dr. Verwoerd is dead." I asked who said so? He pointed to the man next to him, saying that this man said that the man with the newspaper had told him so - pointing down to the man next to us. I asked this man for the newspaper. He said there was nothing. (I have asked him if Dr. Verwoerd was dead). He laughed and said the man upstairs had understood him wrong. I recognized the man who was the watchman on the ship, as one man eating upstairs, but I cannot say he was the same man as the person with the newspaper. He might have been the same person, but I am not sure.

I am also not sure who had started the rumour about Dr. Verwoerd being dead. The man standing with my son upstairs, was not a Greek. He was in a blue uniform. Apart from them, there were about 5 other workmen in overalls. These were joined and mingling with other people filling the boat with fuel. In general, there were quite a few people walked about upstairs. I deny that I have on my own account said anything about Dr. Verwoerd being dead. I spoke Greek to my son. I asked for the newspaper trying to speak English. I can understand English, but have difficulty to speak it. Three days after this Dr. Verwoerd was in fact murdered. I got to know this through newspapers. I did not even refer to the incident at the boat, as I have completely brushed this aside as nonsense. I never gave the incident a second thought.

Above statement taken by me. Translated from Greek to English by Mr. Elias Constantoras¹⁰⁶⁶ of Louis fruiterers, Sea Point.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

JAMES SUMMERS¹⁰⁶⁷

Owner of the "Barlings Tea Lounge." Woodstock. 6.55 p.m.

About the beginning of July, 1966, I got to know Demitrio Tsafendas. He came into the Tea Lounge and had tea and smoked snoek. After that he came in more regularly - practically every day. He started telling me about his travels, mentioning that he had been to 57 different countries and could speak 7 or 8 languages. He never had personal or political conversations. Ha once showed me two passports - one Portuguese and one Turkish. On the latter passport he had s beard.

He frequented the place for about 6 weeks. On the last regular occasion he came in about 6 p.m. He ordered tea and cake which I served. I told him I was closing and had to leave in half hr's time, as I was going out. Ha said it was all right, but was reluctant to leave. He was doing his latter writing at the table. I had to push him out eventually. It was his habit to do his correspondence at the table in my tea lounge. I did not really mind. He was no nuisance and appeared to be a quite normal innocent type.

Whilst I know him, I never had reason to even suspect that he could be mentally unbalanced. He acted quite normal. After the night I had to ask him to leave, he stayed away for two weeks. The Sunday morning before the assassination, at about 10.30 a.m. he walked into my Tea Lounge. He then asked as if I was cross with him and if he could have a cup of ¹⁰⁶⁶ The correct spelling is Constantaras.

¹⁰⁶⁷ Herbert James Summers statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

tea and cake. Next I heard of him was through the reports in the newspapers. When he visited me, he always had his Bible with him. I took him for a religious parson and never queried him about the bible.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

COMMENTS ON SUMMERS'S STATEMENT

Summers was interviewed on September 7 by the Cape Argus, when he claimed that he had ordered Tsafendas out of his shop because he called South Africa a "bastard country."¹⁰⁶⁸ However, as we see here, he did not mention any such incident to the police.

ALICE MARY THEYSER¹⁰⁶⁹

Housewife and shop-assistant at the O.K. Bazaars, Woodstock. 7.35 p.m.

On the first of July, 1966, Demitrio Tsafendas came to my house. He said that Mrs. De Vos had told him that I had a room to let. I have previously advertised the room, I knew Mrs de Vos as a member of our Trade Union. I let the room to Tsafendas, not supplying him any meals. After a very short period I found him to be an untidy character. I decided that I would not keep him so at the end of July I told him that I was not satisfied with him as a lodger, and gave him notice in writing. He chucked the notice on the floor. He left on the 30th of August 1966. During his stay with us he was very quiet, and being a lodge only, we did not have much conversations. He kept to his room most of the time. I knew that he went to some church on Sundays - he mentioned Pinelands. He said his faith did not have any church or temple, but that they attend house gatherings. I did not question him on his faith, though.

I never got the impression in any way that he might be mentally unbalanced. To me he appeared a quite normal person. He did not greet for the last two weeks that he lived here, but I took it to be, that he was annoyed because I had given him notice. He never received visitors. When he came to me he was not working. He went out every day and mentioned not having been able to find work. He did mention later that he thought he would get fixed up with a job at Parliament House, where he had been supplied with some form to fill in for a messenger's Job. He later confided that he got the job. After he left ay place, I first saw the reports about him in the papers.

¹⁰⁶⁸ The Cape Argus, 'Tsafendas Seen As A Bitter, Withdrawn Man', 7 September 1966.

¹⁰⁶⁹ Alice Mary Theyser statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

WEDNESDAY, 28 SEPTEMBER 1966

STATEMENTS

REGINALD ROBERT MAILE¹⁰⁷⁰

Shipguard for Larpen Agency, Cape Town.

Reginald Robert Maile further states:

I have now been shown a statement of one Maria Kokkinidou. It is obvious that she is the person to whom I have referred in my original statement.¹⁰⁷¹ I want to stress the following:

- (a) She was already at the Eleni on the quay-side upon my arrival at 7 a.m.
- (b) The person referred by her as standing on the boat with her son, must have been the night watchman, because the drawbridge was drawn up - he could not get off the boat, same as I could not get up to take over from him.
- (c) She must have known Tsafendas, as she had frequent meals with him at the same table.
- (d) She originated the approach to me with the words "Is Dr. Verwoerd dead." Nobody had mentioned Dr. Verwoerd before that. I shouted up to the nightwatch asking if Dr. Verwoerd was dead. She spoke English to me and I am sure I did not misunderstand her.
- (e) I am also sure that when the boat was due to leave, Tsafendas was one of the people to see it off.
- (f) I know the following people who came off approximately the last, i.e. Old Mr. Faros, Captain Lamb who had to go to England by plane, the agent for supplies, a young man of whom I do not know the name, and also the agent for the ship working for J.T. Rennie. The latter is an elderly man who brought the wages for the crew and officers. I now emphatically remember that the nightwatch could not get off the ship for 2 hours - this time he wanted to claim later on as overtime from our office.

¹⁰⁷⁰ Reginald Robert Maile statement to the police, 28 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

¹⁰⁷¹ This was the second statement by Maile, who had given a statement the day before, September 27.

(SGD.) R.R. MAILE.

Statement taken by me. (SGD.) D.J.V. TROOST. 23505 D/Sergt.

HULSE¹⁰⁷²

Student at UCT – SRC member. Rondebosch.

Mr. Hulse knew Tsafendas met him while he was working Marine Diamond Corp during holiday December 1965-12th March ...¹⁰⁷³ Tsafendas was a machine operator. As far as he can remember, Tsafendas was still working there when he left. Tsafendas was very talkative and always expressed his ... (indecipherable word). Mr Hulse can't remember him (?) keen on the Bible. After Tsafendas started work at Parliament, Mr Hulse met him there when visiting a MP. It was approximately two weeks before 6.9.66. He chatted with him on that occasion. He again saw him at the Houses of Parliament on Friday 2.9.66

Tsafendas informed him that he left MD as the work was too hard for an old man like him although the pay was "a ..." He did not appear to be ... disturbed at any stage. Mr Hulse got the impression that Tsafendas was a wanderer. He always ... about everything. He was surprised to see him working in Parliament. When he heard the news 6.9.66, Mr Hulse immediately ... about Tsafendas and asked the police whether the messenger concerned was a man with silver capped teeth. He made a statement to the police.

PETER PROTOULIS¹⁰⁷⁴

E/M/A, manager of Hermes Ship Chandlers, Cape Town.

I know the Greek ship the Eleni since its breakdown and call at Cape Town harbour. A few days prior to the ship's arrival, as result of a message at my office, I went to the Grand Hotel where I met Captain Lamb from Brays Shipping Co., London. He requested me to attend to the ship upon arrival for attending to their supplies. The ship arrived on Sunday, ¹⁰⁷² Hulse statement to the police, 28 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁰⁷³ These queries are missing because the edge of the document was not copied, so words are missing.

¹⁰⁷⁴ Peter Protoulis statement to the police, 28 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Leer W.D. 10/10/ 4102 oor Stafendas. NASA.

July 24, 1966. I went down with Mr. Nichas (a friend) and we met the Captain of the ship — Michaelos Fountotos (pronounced phonetic Fondontos). Since that day I have been in regular contact with the ship and often visited it - every day.

I got to be very well acquainted with the Captain and his wife as also the Chief Officer John N. Toutountsolou and his wife. They often went out with me and Nichas and we took them on picnics, to bioscope and on drives, suppers and dancing. We also dined on the ship and in fact had a few parties with them. I saw who is now known as Dr. Verwoerd's assassinator (Tsafendas) on the boat. The first time I saw him, was on the first Monday after the boat's arrival - i.e. the 25th July, 1966. I went down with my driver to the ship. I looked for the chief steward in process. I went into the ship's kitchen where I saw Tsafendas in conversation with the kitchen staff. They were all attentively listening to him. They were speaking Greek. When I entered he accosted me, asking who I am, also asking if I was from Faros (another ship chandler agency). I did not confirm but said "No I am the other fellow." He said "anyway it makes no difference to me, I am not prejudiced." By that time he spoke English to me. I left him in the kitchen, ignoring him.

Upon my subsequent visits I had no dealings with the crew and do not recollect seeing him until the day the ship sailed. Then I was there with my girl-friend, Nichas and his wife and children. Mrs. Nichas asked the Chief Officer's wife who that man was, indicating Tsafendas. The latter replied that he was a merchant of clothing of sorts. Later I was standing in the Captain's corridor where the latter was busy with the Port and Immigration officials, Tsafendas came to the small inter-leading passage to the Captain's office. He stood diagonally across from me impatient, as someone in a hurry to see the Captain. The Captain's door was open and he later shouted to the Captain - "I want to see you." I thought this very rude, but did not comment. I do not know what happened to him as the Captain later came over to talk to me.

Sometime later I saw Tsafendas talking to a man who I think was the ship's bosun. This man was tall, dark-haired and dark complexioned. I have previously seen him in the Chief Officer's quarters. I did not see him leave the ship. I left the ship at about something past three p.m. for the last time. All of my company left together though Mr. Niohas said that he would return to say good-bye. The next I saw Tsafendas's photos in the local newspapers. I know the shipguard, an elderly short man, by sight. I have often spoken to him, but do not know his name.

I know that a Greek woman who had a son joining the ship, was also a visitor. I was present on the occasion when she first boarded the ship. She told the Captain in my presence that she was from his native origin: - mentioned the island Kalimnos. He stated that he couldn't recollect her, but she started mentioning names of his relatives which probably convinced him. On the day of the ship's departure she came to thank the Captain for certain courtesies he had done for her. There was also another young man on the ship whom this woman knew. I remember that she kissed him twice when greeting him. I saw her taking pictures of a baby from her bag, which she showed to us, and also to this young man. She was Mrs. Kokkinidou.

(SGD.) D.J.V. TROOST. 23505 D/Sergt

COMMENT OF PROTOULIS TO THE AUTHOR REGARDING HIS STATEMENT

Peter Protoulis remembers being questioned at his place of business by two or three policemen.¹⁰⁷⁵

¹⁰⁷⁵ Peter Protoulis in a personal interview, 28 May 2016.

FRIDAY, 30 SEPTEMBER 1966

STATEMENTS

DR. C. BEEN¹⁰⁷⁶

Pretoria.

This is to certify that Mr D. Tsafendas consulted me during 1963 or 1964 for burns on his body whilst employed at Poole's. I also examined him for permanent residence and a certificate was issued.

J. BOISKIM¹⁰⁷⁷

Representative of a Tobacco Company. Cape Town.

Took cigarettes to ... (Indecipherable word) Building. Few days before the opening of Parliament. Nobody questioned me. Wrote down room numbers. Thought "this is funny." Started off with Prime Minister. Had no idea was so easy to get to Private Secretary. Surprised to note that there was no security measures.

JACOBUS JOHANNES DE KOKER¹⁰⁷⁸

Assistant Master of the High Court in Pretoria.

De Koker's declaration talks about the estate and distribution of the personal effects of the deceased Michalis Tsafandakis who died on 14 February 1962. The only mention of Dimitri Tsafendas is on paragraph 10: "according to my records, neither Stafendas nor ¹⁰⁷⁶ Dr. C. Been note to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁰⁷⁷ J. Borskim statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 4. NASA.

¹⁰⁷⁸ Jacobus Johannes De Koker statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

anyone else, except Marika Tsafandakis, received any amount or benefit from the above-mentioned estate.”

IAN JAMES MURDOCK BOSWELL¹⁰⁷⁹

Administrative assistant at the Department of Labour, Cape Town.

I came to know Demetrio Tsafendas in my official capacity as employment officer for the unskilled European Male section of the above department. The abovenamed was originally registered with the skilled section of the department but as he could not produce a certificate of fitness or any documents or testimonials that could prove his claims of being a tradesman, he was transferred to the unskilled section and classified in the category for caretakers or supervisors.

Mr. Tsafendas shortly after produced a certificate to the effect that he had been treated for a nasal complaint at Groote Schuur Hospital. This was accepted as a certificate of fitness and an application for Unemployment Benefits taken by myself. As the applicant had already exhausted all his benefits in a previous claim, the above mentioned application was refused by the claims officer in terms of the relevant section of the Unemployment Act. On informing me that he was fit and willing to commence work as an operator-welder (unqualified welder), I contacted the Chrysler Motor Co., at Elsie's River and was told that they required such a person. I gave the applicant a card (Lab. 141) of introduction to the Chrysler Motor co.

Some days later Mr. Tsafendas returned to the office and informed as that he had not been accepted by the above-mentioned company. This was the last time I interviewed him as a Lab. 23 card issued to him was returned to the employment section by post, informing the office that he had obtain employment in the capacity of messenger in the House of Assembly. (Lab. 23 cards are issued to all persons registering for employment. They are requested to return these cards when obtained employment in order to record the number of unemployed persons obtained employment.)

I did not and would not have sent him to the houses of Parliament, as the vacancies for messengers were always given to the better class of active pensioners. I can only remember this person through originally having difficulty both in spelling and pronouncing his surname. He was at all times neatly dressed and never gave the impression of being destitute. Aside from being over talkative he showed no symptoms of abnormality, during his interviews with me.

¹⁰⁷⁹ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

MONDAY, 3 OCTOBER 1966¹⁰⁸⁰

COLONEL E.G. MCINTYRE'S REPORT ON TSAFENDAS¹⁰⁸¹

THE HISTORY OF THE PERSON HAD INFLICTED THE FATAL WOUNDS TO THE LATE

DR. VERWOERD

DRAFTED BY COLONEL E.G. MCINTYRE:

1. The following details of the person, Demetrio Tsafendas, was compiled after examining the following documents: -
 - a) A voluntary statement he made to major D.J. Rossouw of the Security Police, Cape Town, on 11 and 12 September 1966.
 - b) An examination of the same person by major Rossouw on 09/19/1966.
 - c) Statements of persons who came into contact with him.
 - d) Secret documents from reliable contacts in other countries.
2. Where the subject was vague or uncertain about certain dates, names and places, the dates, names and places were determined from documents in 1(c) and (d) above.
3. Where subject's version of his history and relevant events differed from the documents in 1(c) and (d) above - his as well as the witnesses or reports are set out from documents in 1(d).
4. All the data is, where possible, confirmed by statements or documentary evidence.
5. All the documents and statements are available for inspection, but some documents are of a secret nature and disclosure will not be in the public interest and will likely be an embarrassment to the Government of the Republic of South Africa as the documents are from official sources of other countries and are provided on condition that this fact is not publicly disclosed.

LIFE HISTORY OF DEMETRIO TSAFENDAS:

¹⁰⁸⁰ No evidence from October 1 and 2 were found in the archives.

¹⁰⁸¹ 'The history of the person who inflicted the fatal wounds to the late Dr. Verwoerd' drafted by Col. McIntyre, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Subject: Leer W.D. 10/10/4102 der Stafendas. NASA.

1. Subject is known by the following names and surnames in different countries by different persons:

Surname: Tsafendas alias Tsafendakis, Tsafantakis, Tsafendos, Tsafendis, Tsafantakis and Williams.

Names: Demetrio alias Dimitrio, Dimitro.

2. He is born on 14.01.1918 in Lourenço Marques out of wedlock and is the child of:

Father: Michaelatos alias Michael alias Miguel Tsafendakis or Tsafandakis, a Greek citizen to Candia, Crete, born in 1885.

Mother: Amelia William aka Amelia Williams, a colored woman, citizen of Portuguese East Africa region of Mozambique. Her birth date is not confirmed.

3. Subject's father died in Pretoria on 14.02.1962.
4. His mother died in Lourenço Marques on 12.01.1927 according to him. He is in possession of a note on which his mother's first and last name is written and says that he had confirmed the date at the Registrar of Births and Deaths in Lourenço Marques.
5. He never knew his mother because when he was too young to remember, his father took him to Egypt where he lived until the age of about 8 years with his grandmother - his father's mother.
6. In the meantime, his father married Marika Sakelis, a Greek of Port Said, and during 1926 his father had him return home to Lourenço Marques to stay with him and his wife, as a member of the family.
7. Subject was then placed in an Anglican Missionary School, but according to him, he and his stepmother could not get along, and therefore his father sent him as a boarder to the English medium Primary school in Middelburg (Transvaal). He then went home twice a year with the school holidays.
8. According to him his father landed in financial difficulties during the depression years and could no longer afford to keep him in school in Middelburg. In 1930, when he was in standard three, he was sent back to the Anglican Missionary School in Lourenço Marques until 1933.
9. According to his stepmother, he then refused to continue school and he started work as an assistant in a shop. According to him he was doing evening classes at a Portuguese Missionary School and he passed st. V in English and st. IV in Portuguese in 1935.

10. In 1936 he went to the Transvaal alone where he worked in Pretoria and Johannesburg in various cafes. For some reason he never worked at a place for longer than two or three months.
11. In 1939, he ran evening classes at the "Progress College", Johannesburg, where he only learned for three months to do welding and then got a job at the British Mining Supply Co. in Johannesburg.
12. He worked there until 1942 and then went to Cape Town ... [The rest of the sentence is cut off the page.]
13. He was in possession of a Greek passport nr.27 dated 18.05.1942, issued by the Greek consulate in Johannesburg under the name of Demetrius Tsafantakis and valid for one year. He was also in possession of a Portuguese passport nr.143 dated 05.03.1942, also valid for one year.
14. When the ship arrived in Canada, he absconded and was detained by Canadian Immigration authorities. However, he escaped and entered the United States of America by walking across the ice of the St. Croix River.
15. He went to Bangor, Maine, USA and was arrested in December 1942 for the breach of US Immigration Laws and was then detained.
16. During his detention, he showed symptoms of mental illness and was admitted into the Boston Psychopathic Hospital and from there transferred on 23.04.1943 to the Metropolitan State Hospital. Here his illness was described as "Psychoneurosis-mixed type".
17. He was released from hospital on 14.08.1943 and placed on the American ship "Pillory". He was also issued with American documents that allowed him to perform military service on the said ship.
18. He did service on several US ships but from time to time he was admitted into different hospitals, including an US Army hospital in England.
19. From the latter hospital, he returned to America in 1944 and was then admitted into a hospital in Charleston, South Carolina. However, he ran away from this hospital but was arrested in Boston and sent to the Ellis Island Hospital, New York.
20. On 25.02.1945 he was placed on the Greek ship, "Maria Nicolao", but on 03.12.1945 he returned to New York as a waiter on the ship "Robin Locksley."
21. He was arrested again and charged under the US Immigration Laws.
22. On 10.02.1946 he was placed on the ship "Hood Victory" for deportation, but on 10.03.1946 he returned with the same ship. He showed symptoms of mental illness again and was admitted to the Grafton State Hospital where he remained until 27.09.1947. His illness was then described as “Schizophrenia Hebephrenic¹⁰⁸² Type”.

- 23. On 27.09.1947 he was placed on the ship “Marine Jumper” and deported to Greece.*
- 24. During 1950, 1953 and 1954 while he was in Europe, he applied to be admitted into the United States but his applications were dismissed every time.*
- 25. Previously he has never been in Greece and at first could not find a job, but later found work as a foreman and interpreter at the American Reconstruction Mission. He indicates that he worked there until 1949, when the work was finished ... [The rest of sentence is cut off at end of page.]*
- 26. In Greece he could not get other work, but managed to gain a refugee-passport from the Greek Immigration Authorities. He was however obligated by them to hand in his original Greek passport.*
- 27. He then went to France by ship, but because he was not able to find any work, he went to Portugal.*
- 28. The Portuguese authorities did not want to accept his refugee passport and when he explained that he had lost his Portuguese passport, they did not believe him. Consequently, he was detained there for about six months before being allowed to seek work in Lisbon. He could not find a job but later made an existence by selling embroidery, postcards, watches and costume jewellery to travellers.*
- 29. During 1953, he tried to leave Portugal but was arrested by the Portuguese authorities and detained for about one year.*
- 30. Thereafter a Portuguese passport was issued to him and he went to Germany, Sweden and Denmark. In Germany, he fell ill again and spent about 6 months in Oxensoll¹⁰⁸³ Krankenhaus Hospital. He worked at different places, but because he could not find a suitable, rewarding job in the various countries mentioned he returned to Portugal in 1958 and continued his peddling business.*
- 31. The same year, however, he returned to Germany and again worked at different places until 1939 when he decided to go to England.*
- 32. There he could not find work and the English Immigration authority deported him back to Germany. He then worked in a tractor factory in Germany for about 6 months.*
- 33. He then went to Egypt but was immediately arrested for violating the country’s immigration laws.*

¹⁰⁸² On one document, the word is spelled “Hebephrenic” and on another it is spelled “Hebephremic.”

¹⁰⁸³ The correct spelling is Ochsenzoll.

34. When he was released, he was put on a ship to Beirut.
35. From there he went to Palestine and Turkey where he got work as a teacher of English in Istanbul. He held this job only for two months.
36. He then went through the Balkan states and back to Greece.
37. From there he went to Crete during 1962 to visit his father's family. He only spent a few days and because the family could not house him, he first travelled to Italy and then back to Portugal.
38. In August or September of 1963, he set off to Lourenço Marques and stayed with an uncle for a short while. His stepmother in Pretoria was informed of his arrival and she fetched and took him to Pretoria.
39. From 09.12.1963 to 03.02.1964 he worked at the City Engineering and Carron Company in Pretoria as a fitter ... [The rest of the sentence is cut off at the end of the page.]
40. On 07.02.1964 he got work again as a welder at Pool Engineering, Pretoria. However, on 10.07.1964 he was fired because of shoddy work and the trouble he caused among the other employees. When his foreman, Mr. Albert Vercuil, notified him that he was dismissed, he pointed his finger in Mr. Vercuil's face as if he wanted to assault him and said: -

“You are just like your bloody Government. I will kill your Prime Minister yet.”
41. Shortly afterwards he left Pretoria by train and on 19.07.1964 he arrived in Bulawayo, Rhodesia. He then travelled with a Portuguese passport nr.6511/63 issued on 02.11.1963 at Lourenço Marques. He listed his race as white, his marital status as single and his nationality as Portuguese.
42. He had R100 with him and declared that the reason of his travel was to visit his sister, in fact his stepsister, Catherine Harlanbos of Marandellas. It is now established that his stepsister's married surname is Pneuma and her husband has a business in Marandellas.
43. He was then issued with a stranger tourist permit by the Immigration Officers of Rhodesia, valid until 09.08.1964.
44. It has now been established that he had visited his stepsister in Marandellas, but according to her, she told him that he could not stay and that he immediately left.
45. He had to have left Rhodesia in some way without reporting to any immigration officials because on 27.07.1964 he arrived by plane in Salisbury. It has thus far not been established from where he came. His contact address was then given as O.E. Bottle Store, Avondale.

- 46. He immediately sought work, including at the Public Service Board of Rhodesia, and according to him also at various other towns in Rhodesia and Malawi.*
- 47. When the Rhodesian Immigration Department realized that the subject had not left the country on 09.08.1964, they wrote to him at his contact address at Avondale on 19.08.1964 and ordered him to report to their office immediately.*
- 48. He arrived on 21.08.1964 and asked to be allowed to stay longer and seek work. This request was refused and he was told to leave immediately. On 22.08.1964 he travelled by train to Mozambique.*
- 49. On 09.10.1964, however, he again entered Rhodesia from Umtali. The Immigration Officers issued him a temporary visitor's permit, valid for 14 days, but on 10.10.1964 they received notice of his previous visits and they declared him an illegal immigrant and gave him instructions to immediately leave the country. According to official records he departed on the same day, but according to a Mr. Galamakis, a Greek priest, Contos - and a Mrs. H Crispos, all of Umtali, he only departed on 11.10.1964. He visited many Greeks in Umtali, but as far as known, there is nothing ... [The rest of the sentence is cut off at end of page.]*
- 50. He then went to Beira where he got a job after some time near Gondola at the Central African Construction Corporation. He worked there for about a month when he made certain statements one night in a bar in the presence of non-whites and as a result of which he then was arrested by the Portuguese East African Police.*
- 51. According to himself he was arrested: "Because I criticised the Portuguese Government for their policy in regard to petrol distribution. I was detained for 90 days." According to Portuguese Police, he (Tsafendas) said the following: "This country is not Portugal. It is called the United States of Mocambique. Its flag is of a blue colour with a rainbow. That rainbow represents all the colours. We already have money, and any day now all this will come to an end because what is necessary is not to be fooled into saying we are Portuguese because we are Africans. Long live our country, the United States of Mozambique."*
- 52. According to the Portuguese police, he admitted that he made the remarks. Also, according to the police, he said that he had said this in response to his own ideas of independence of Mozambique separate from Portugal.*

53. After he was released, he travelled by ship and arrived in Durban during February or March 1965.
54. On 15.03.1965 he found accommodation in room 166 of the home E.R. Corney, Fairwood, Durban, and on 16.03.1965, he accepted work as a Shed Attendant in Umbilo, Durban at the South African Railways and worked there until 07.04.1965. On this date he was on a night shift. He worked from 6pm on 06.04.1965 and had to remain on duty until 6am on 07.04.1965. While he was lying on a bed during the aforementioned night, another employee drenched him with a paper bag full of water. He did not see which person did it, but rose, was very angry and said that he could not work with wet clothes. So he walked off and never again returned to this work.
55. During this period he was used as a temporary interpreter in court at Durban on different occasions.
56. On 19.04.1965 he accepted work as a fitter at the company Fraser and Chalmers in Mandeni.
57. On 07.05.1965 he had an argument with another employee in the mess hall and in the fight that followed, he was inflicted a serious knife wound on his right arm and was admitted to the hospital. He reported the incident to the police and the person who inflicted the knife wounds, appeared in the court, but was acquitted. This person cannot be found now. He however said to the other employees on the afore-mentioned date that the subject is a dangerous Communist.
58. In the hospital, he underwent surgery and the scar is still visible on the right arm.
59. After his discharge from the hospital he found accommodation in the "Durban Men's Home" on 31.06.1965. There he ... [The rest of sentence is cut of at end of page.]
60. During his stay in Natal, he didn't contact, as far as could be established, any undesirable, restricted or communist people.
61. He however told a Roman Catholic priest whom he met in Mandeni that the Portuguese Government in Mozambique have no sense and do nothing for the non-white population. When he came to know that the priest belonged to the Roman Catholic Church, he started swearing and said that the Roman Catholic Church should be wiped out and that the Roman Catholic nurses in the hospital injected poison into non-Whites so that they die like flies and they do so with the knowledge and approval of the Mozambique Government.

62. He then travelled with a yet unknown person by car from Durban to Port Elizabeth and from there by train to Cape Town, where he arrived on 28.08.1965 and went straight to the home of a coloured family, Daniels, at 1 San Sousie Street, Belville.
63. He went there because a daughter of the Daniels family, namely Hellen Dorothy, 36 years old and unmarried had written to him in Durban after she attained the subject's address from friends in Boksburg. The Daniels family, as well as the friends in Boksburg, all belong to the same religion as the subject - and while he was in Durban – they exchanged letters.
64. The Daniels family took him in to their home and he immediately started looking for a job.
65. On 13.09.1965 he got a job at the Cape Town Municipality as a fitter in the Table Bay Power Station, Cape Town.
66. On 25.10.1965, however, he received seven days' notice of termination of his employment. He then resigned on the same day to avoid dishonourable discharge. The service he rendered was unsatisfactory.
67. After he got the job in September 1965, Helen Daniels's father told subject that since he is now employed and earns money he has to pay rent. He was angry but remained there until 16.10.1965.
68. He himself claimed that he got accommodation in a boarding house near the traffic-department in Green Point, Cape Town, and stayed there until about the middle of November 1965. The place where he boarded is not yet determined.
69. Around this time he went to the house of a certain Patrick Henry O'Ryan - a coloured teacher - at 9 Westminster Way, Lansdowne, Cape Town, with all his belongings. He met the O'Ryan's during a church conference of his faith on a farm near Durbanville, Cape Town. The O'Ryan's gave him a place to stay, although they did not have a room for him. He had to share a room with the children of the O'Ryan's.
70. Another parishioner of the same faith, namely Richard Poggenpoel of "Rosedene" Walnut Street, Lansdowne, had a spare room that he offered.
71. The subject then lived with them for 2 weeks during December, 1965. When Poggenpoel informed the subject of the contents of the letter, he (Tsafendas) immediately returned to the O'Ryan's.
72. During the period he lived with these people, he daily went for job interviews. He also wrote numerous letters to try and find work.

73. It was established that he was at some company on probation as bus conductor but he told O’Ryan that he was too fat and could not climb the stairs up and down and was therefore not employed.
74. He was without work for about two months and stayed at the O’Ryans for free when he finally found work during February 1966 at the Marine Diamond Corporation on the company’s barge "Colpontoon".
75. This job he held for only about two months and claimed that he had to abandon the work because it was too demanding for him because of his poor health.
76. To others he said that he had to abandon the work because he found it too dangerous when he had to get from the tow boat with a rope ladder onto a small boat to go to the transport ship "Marina".
77. To O’Ryan he said that another employee on the Colpontoon is jealous of him (Tsafendas) and thus does not want to teach him (Tsafendas) the job.
78. When he started earning money again, he got accommodation at Milton House, Milton Road, Observatory, and then departed from the O’Ryans.
79. He stayed there for about two months and then again moved to 5 Wrench Way, Observatory, where he rented a room from a Mrs. Vos. The latter, however, shortly thereafter gave him notice and on 01.07.1966 the subject rented a room from a Mrs. Theyser at 48 Devon Street, Woodstock. He had his meals at a Mrs. Scott at 42 Chamberlain Street, Woodstock. On 30.08.1966 he left.
80. On 31.08.1966 he moved to room 7, Elnor Apartments, Rustenburg Road, Rondebosch, and was arrested there for the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd.
81. Subject admits that before the outbreak of the Second World War he became a member of the Communist Party of South Africa in Johannesburg and that he regularly paid his monthly subscription of 25 cent per month until he left Johannesburg in 1942 and went to Canada. He expressly denies that afterwards he ever had anything to do with the Communist Party or contacted any Communists in South Africa or elsewhere.
82. He does admit however, that while in England he attended various political meetings in connection with:
 - a) Committee of African Organisations
 - b) Anti-Colonial:
83. Subject stated that the following speakers were present at the said meetings:
 - a) Barbara Castle
 - b) Fenner Brockway

c) Callaghan

- 84. Above-mentioned persons are all Communists and members of the British Labour party.*
- 85. In the presence of Mrs. Scott, referred to in paragraph 79 above, he told the other tenants that he can get a good job in S.W. Africa, but that he could not go there because there is a certain task in Cape Town that he first must perform.*
- 86. Mrs. Popkiss, manageress of Eldor Apartments announced that she encountered the subject in the garden on the afternoon of 05.09.1966. She noticed that he looked very worried and talked to him. She asked him if he saw her cat and told him that she is very concerned about the animal. He replied: "I am also very worried. I have some thing on my mind."*
- 87. According to most people in the Republic of South Africa with whom the subject came into contact with, other than those already mentioned above, the subject did not talk about politics. However, he said to several people that he was upset because he was not classified as a colored.*
- 88. To Patrick O’Ryan, mentioned above, he also said that the Republic’s apartheid policy was unfair and that these policies often frustrate him.*
- 89. Subject’s stepmother claimed that he always asked for money; others said that he usually tried to get meals from others and always gave the impression that he is needy.*
- 90. Subject belongs to a religion called the Christian Church, which does not have any solid building which serves as a church. Services are held from house to house. It seems that only non-whites belong to this faith.*
- 91. No members of this faith in the R.S.A. has drawn unfavourable attention to them, and fans of this belief are not suspected of subversive activities.*
- 92. As far as has been established, the subject himself has never before been guilty of any criminal offense other than the offenses under the Immigration Laws of different countries.*
- 93. Subject is a total abstainer of strong drink and does not smoke.*
- 94. From 24.07.1966 to 03.09.1966, the Greek ship “Eleni” was in the Cape Town docks for repairs. The subject visited the ship daily. He befriended the crew and often enjoyed meals with them on ... [The rest of sentence is cut off at end of page].
As a result, one of them offered him a revolver, which he bought. Later he found that the weapon was in fact not a revolver, but only a gas pistol. He tried to get his money back but did not succeed. The seller told him that he had spent all the money.*
- 95. This gas pistol was found among his property when he was arrested for the assassination.*

COMMENTS ON COL. MCINTYRE'S REPORT

The report follows Tsafendas's life from the day he was born until his arrest for the murder of Dr. Verwoerd. It includes his hospitalizations, his travels to and within several countries, and some of his arrests and imprisonments. The report is accurate about his travel and his various jobs, but it misses many important aspects of his life, especially Tsafendas's political ideas and activities in Mozambique. Col. McIntyre and the South African police were not given Tsafendas's complete file by the Portuguese authorities and therefore were presumably unaware of some of his arrests and political activism there. Nevertheless, the report comprehensively downplays Tsafendas's politics, including crucially the fact that he was a Communist. That he was a member of the South African Communist Party before the Second World War is mentioned (par. 81), as is the fact that Nikolas Vergos characterised him as a "dangerous Communist," (par. 57) but little else.

Facts known to Col. McIntyre which are omitted include that Tsafendas was fired from a job in Lourenço Marques and banned from re-entering Mozambique due to his Communist ideas, plus that several witnesses testified that he had Communist ideas. More importantly, the report says in paragraph 87 that "according to most people in the Republic of South Africa with whom the subject came into contact, other than those already mentioned above, the subject did not talk about politics. However, he said to several people that he was upset because he was not classified as a Coloured." As to the first part of the sentence, seven witnesses testified to the contrary:

- Kenneth Ross said Tsafendas was "very fond of discussing politics and gave me the opinion that he was well versed in politics. He was blatantly opposed to the National Party policy, the policy of the present Government and was definitely pro-Russian."¹⁰⁸⁴
- Robert Smith testified that Tsafendas was "definitely pro-Communist. Tsafendas was in my opinion a fanatic on politics and seldom spoke of anything else."¹⁰⁸⁵
- Gladstone Dunn testified that Tsafendas discussed politics with him.¹⁰⁸⁶
- Horacio Ferreira also said Tsafendas discussed politics with him.¹⁰⁸⁷

¹⁰⁸⁴ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁰⁸⁵ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁰⁸⁶ Gladstone Dunn statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

- In addition, Johannes Jacobus Botha had informed the police that Tsafendas was described by Nick Vergos as “the biggest Communist in the Republic of South Africa.”¹⁰⁸⁸
- Father Hanno Probst also characterised him and reported him to a security officer as a “Communist and a dangerous person.”¹⁰⁸⁹

Also omitted is the fact contained in the report of the South African embassy in Lisbon that Tsafendas “has a criminal record in Mozambique, where he is said to have been arrested on several occasions after creating public disturbances including shouting pro-Communist and anti-Portuguese slogans.”¹⁰⁹⁰ Nothing about Tsafendas’s criminal record in Mozambique is mentioned by Col. McIntyre, but this could be because the Portuguese authorities did not reveal such information to the South African police.

The McIntyre report does not give an opinion on whether or not Tsafendas was insane, but merely records the diagnoses from some of the hospitals where he was treated, including the Grafton State Hospital (par. 22). However, McIntyre omits important information regarding this latter hospital. Although he had access to the Grafton’s document, he omits the reference to Tsafendas admitting he “faked mental illness”¹⁰⁹¹ when he was arrested for violating American immigration laws. Also omitted is the statement by the South African embassy in Washington, based on US Immigration Department documents, that Tsafendas was “unstable but not insane.”¹⁰⁹²

ATTORNEY-GENERAL’S MEMORANDUM

The same day, the Attorney-General of Cape Town, Willem M. van den Berg, who had been appointed to lead the case for the State in the forthcoming summary trial of Tsafendas, released the following memorandum:

¹⁰⁸⁷ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

¹⁰⁸⁸ Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁰⁸⁹ Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁰⁹⁰ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Lisbon, to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁰⁹¹ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Dimitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁰⁹² Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Washington to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

*Detailed Information for a Memorandum Regarding Demetrio Tsafendas*¹⁰⁹³

Paragraphs 1 and 2:

Michael Tsafendakis and his common law wife Amelia Williams separated shortly after the birth of Demetrio. On 5 December 1920 Michael Tsafendakis and Maria Sakellis were married in Port Said, Egypt. Demetrio was in the care of his paternal grandmother in Alexandria, Egypt, until around the age of 6.

He was then returned to his father in Lourenço Marques, where he received his first school education at a mixed race school, the "English Mission School." Next he was sent by his father to the Middelburg Primary School, English, in the Transvaal. He possibly stayed there until 1933 and he seems to have passed Standard 6 there (the first year of high school). Thereafter he returned to Lourenço Marques when for 6 years he worked at the "Vulcan Iron Works", General Engineers, as an Oxy-Acetylene electrical welder. According to testimonials from this firm, he had performed his duties in a satisfactory manner. These testimonials were included with his application for permanent residence in South Africa.

Three daughters and one son were born out of the marriage of Michael and Maria, (now known as Marika). They are Victor, Evangeline, Helen and Catherina. Except for Catharina, who is married and lives in Salisbury, Rhodesia, they have all been living near Pretoria, South Africa, for many years. It would seem that Demetrio was estranged from them.

Paragraph 3:

It is not known whether the following kiosk still exists. According to a letter from Demetrio to the Secretary of Home Affairs on 31 December 1935 requesting permanent residence in South Africa:

"Chai et Kiosk,

Praca 7 da Marco,

P.O. Bos 702,

¹⁰⁹³ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkoperij. NASA.

LOURENÇO MARQUES.

Prop. P. Sideris”

Demetrio Tsafendas’ Communist activities were at that time restricted to the distribution of Communist propaganda. Up to 1942, when he left South Africa, no further information in this regard has been found. In a statement to the South African Police on 19 September 1966, Demitrio Tsafendas admitted that he had joined the Communist Party shortly before World War II. He also attended their meetings and paid the fees but denied the he had any further association with the Communists after he left South Africa in 1942; except that whilst in England he attended meetings in Hyde Park and Caxton Hall; he furthermore stated that the participants were Leftist members of the Labour Party and not Communists.

Paragraph 4-7:

Demetrio Tsafendas was found guilty of contravening Article 2(a) of Act 1 of 1937 in the Johannesburg Magistrates’ Court on 6 August 1941. He pleaded guilty and was sentenced to a fine of 12 pounds 10 shillings or a one month jail term. He paid the fine. However, he was not deported, but freed, as a temporary residence permit had been issued to him on the grounds that he had performed important war production work at the “British Mining Supply Company. At that time he worked for the firm as a welder in the transport department. It is not clear whether or not he lost his job there because of malingering. The Secretary of Home Affairs is in possession of a testimonial from the above firm which reads as follows: “During this period (from 7 May 1940 until the date of the testimonial, 8 August 1941) of service we have found his work to be perfectly satisfactory and his conduct good.”

Paragraph 8:

On 8 June 1942 Tsafendas applied for a permit to travel to England to join the British Army.

This request was refused in June 1942 as England refused entry to Tsafendas. His temporary residence permit was nearing the expiration date. He was unemployed and travelled to Cape Town, from where he boarded the “Eugenie Livanos” on 13 June without a permit, with the help of the Greek Consul in Cape Town, who was unaware of the fact that Tsafendas was not permitted to leave the country. He never turned up in Lourenço Marques.

The first news of him is the letter from Boston, Massachusetts, as found in paragraph 7, in connection with the 3 pound deposit received for his expired temporary residence permit. As no notification was received from Tsafendas to his father to authorise this amount, it was declared to be forfeited on 21 July 1955. From various sources, including his own declaration, Tsafendas travelled on the Eugenie Livanos from Cape Town to St. John on the east coast of Canada. He and a friend left the ship there and were sent by the Canadian authorities to Halifax where they were detained. However, they escaped and walked over the frozen St. Croix River near Calais, Maine, in the U.S.A., where they were again arrested and sent to Boston, U.S.A. Tsafendas appeared before the U.S.A. Immigration officials on several occasions for transgression of the time limits given to sailors for temporary residency. During this period he worked on several American ships. During World War II he mainly served on "Liberty" ships. He described this as "risking my life on submarine infested seas."

Between 1942 and 1947 Tsafendas received treatment in various hospitals for "Psychosis, Psychosis undetermined, Schizophrenia" and nervous breakdowns. The U.S.A. refused to grant him permanent residence rights and in 1947 he was deported to Greece where he started work at the American Reconstruction Mission. This had something to do with the Marshall Aid Plan. He also worked as interpreter for three months for Messrs. Steers-Grove in Piraeus Harbour in Greece. This was also an American firm whose HQ was in New York. After this Tsafendas was again unemployed in Greece which led to the request mentioned in para. 8. It is not known how Tsafendas got to London in 1950.

Paragraphs 9 and 10:

Demitrio Tsafendas between his requests to Internal Affairs departments in 1950 and 1959 from Athens and London respectively, are not known. According to him, he was mostly in Portugal from 1950 to 1958, and was again imprisoned there for several years. He declared that he sold clothes in Lisbon and that he also visited West Germany and Brussels. In 1959 he reached England from West Germany and to which he was once again deported by the British in whose hospitals he had also been treated for his nervous breakdowns. In his application to Internal Affairs in SA from London, he named his former employers as "The American Reconstruction Mission, Greece and U.S. Army, Germany." The nature of the work he did for the U.S.A. Defence Force in unknown. He also declared that for 6 months he was treated in the Oxensoll¹⁰⁹⁴ Krankenhaus, but that he absconded and went to friends in Hamburg. Before he went to England in 1959 he also travelled in Sweden and Denmark. After he left England he worked for a while in a tractor factory in Munich.

Then he decided to return to Egypt and travelled by train through the Balkans to Piraeus, Greece and thence by boat to Alexandria, Egypt. In Cairo he was jailed for 6 months. Then he travelled by boat to Beirut and thence by plane to Jerusalem. He roamed around along the Jordan River for 4 months. Then he travelled to Ankara and Istanbul, in Turkey, then returned to Athens, but en route also visited Sofia in Bulgaria. From Athens he visited his father's family on the Island of Crete. He said at he also returned to Portugal and from there decided to return to Africa. He maintained that the Portuguese Social Services gave him a ticket to return by boat to Lourenço Marques in September 1963.

Paragraphs 11 and 12:

From 1935 to 1959 all requests from Demitrio Tsafendas to Home Affairs to grant him permanent residency were dismissed out of hand. But on 2 November 1963 he received a temporary permit from the South African Consul-General in Lourenço Marques to enjoy a holiday in the Republic. It is not known to me who was responsible for issuing this permit, but it was done without reference to the HQ in Pretoria. Tsafendas soon accepted work in Pretoria. Permission was also granted to him to hold the position while waiting for the result of his application to the Immigration Board in Pretoria for permanent residence in SA.

On 20 January 1964 his request for permanent residence was approved. He also received his Identity Document soon thereafter. In March 1964 he wrote to the Dept. of Internal Affairs to complain about corruption amongst the Public Servants and accused them of demanding large amounts of money for obtaining an Identity document. These complaints were investigated by the Police but were dismissed as unfounded.

Paragraphs 13-16:

In June-July 1964 Tsafendas again left the country and travelled to Salisbury, Rhodesia and from there to Malawi. According to him he went there to look for work. He returned to ¹⁰⁹⁴ The correct spelling is Ochsenzoll.

Umtali in Rhodesia and from there he went to Beira. He worked for a while on the Beira-Umtali oil pipeline but was arrested by the Portuguese police and placed in detention for 90 days. Friends of Tsafendas then rallied round him and gave him passage by boat to Durban. He stayed there for a while and worked for Fraser & Chalmers in Mandini for a while. He was dismissed after involvement in fighting. Then he returned to Cape Town where he worked for a while for Marine Diamond Corporation. In Cape Town he stayed in various places for short periods. According to a statement in my possession there was never any question of a marriage between him and the coloured woman Helen Daniels from Bellville South. Information from Home Affairs files indicate that he applied for reclassification as a coloured because he wanted to apply for a business license in a coloured area. Investigations continue, especially overseas and any further developments will be provided as soon as I receive information.

W.M. van den Berg

Attorney-General

Cape Town. 3 October 1966.

COMMENTS ON THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S MEMORANDUM

A great deal of information about Tsafendas, some of it very important and known to the South African police, does not appear in van den Berg's so-called "detailed" account of Tsafendas's life. We are not in position to know for certain why this information is missing; it might perhaps be because van den Berg deemed it unimportant, or he wanted to downplay Tsafendas's Communism and political activities, or he was not given all the information held by the South African police.

It is impossible to state with certainty what was provided to van den Berg, but the content of the memorandum suggests that he had access to Tsafendas's affidavit from 1964, perhaps the PIDE reports given to the South African authorities, the Department of Interior reports concerning Tsafendas's applications for permanent residency, plus letters from Tsafendas to the Department of the Interior seeking permission to enter South Africa. He does not seem to have read the statements given to the police by Tsafendas during his interrogation, or the statements by people who knew Tsafendas, including his family. The secret telegrams from the South African embassies in Washington and Lisbon are also absent. Of course, it cannot be ruled out that van den Berg had access to these documents and chose not to use them.

The memorandum does not cover Tsafendas's political past, including several of his arrests. The South African embassy had informed the SA authorities that Tsafendas "has a criminal record in Mozambique, where he is said to have been arrested on several occasions after creating public disturbances including, shouting pro-Communist and anti-Portuguese slogans"; this information is not included. Analytically, it is surprising that the memorandum does not mention the reason for Tsafendas's arrest in Beira in 1964: that he was accused of "making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses."¹⁰⁹⁵ Van den Berg must have known the reason as it was given in the PIDE report that was sent to the SA authorities and was contained in various other documents in the possession of the South African police. Either he considered it unimportant to mention why Tsafendas was arrested and spent ninety days in prison or he did not want to politicise the arrest. Tsafendas's second arrest by the Portuguese police in ¹⁰⁹⁵ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

February 1965 is omitted altogether. Even though there was no mention of it in PIDE's report, the South African press had referred to two arrests, not one; and since the SA press were aware of this, one would expect van den Berg to have known it also. Also missing are the facts that Tsafendas was not allowed to enter Mozambique in 1951 because of his "communist activities", his arrest that followed, and his subsequent twelve years of enforced exile.

The memorandum downplays Tsafendas's Communist and anti-colonial activities by stating that such activities in Mozambique in the mid-1930s were "restricted to the distribution of Communist propaganda." The way this sentence is written suggests that this was all that Tsafendas did; however, this was not the case. Although the Sideris Kiosk is mentioned, the fact that Tsafendas was fired from his job there for conducting Communist propaganda is not; nor is the fact that while in Mozambique, "he was on two occasions suspected of dedicating himself to communistic activities."¹⁰⁹⁶ Tsafendas was fired from his work not because he distributed Communist propaganda, but because he preached Communism and spoke against the Portuguese colonialist administration and in favour of the independence of Mozambique. Furthermore, Tsafendas had rebelled against the Portuguese government's new cotton policy, publicly speaking against it, distributing leaflets against it, and urging people to strike against it. Tsafendas's communist activities in Mozambique were the reason his early requests for permanent residency in South Africa were turned down, and they were mentioned in several documents held by the South African authorities. The reason Tsafendas's applications for permanent residency in South Africa were "dismissed out of hand" is also not given.

Van den Berg's memorandum states that Tsafendas appeared before US immigration officials "on several occasions for transgression of the time limits given to sailors for temporary residency." It also mentions the medical treatment Tsafendas received in the United States between 1942 and 1947 plus what the diagnosis was. However, that Tsafendas was regarded by American immigration officials as "unstable, but not insane" and the fact that he was caught "faking mental illness" are also not included. Naturally you would have expected the police to provide all these documents regarding Tsafendas to the Attorney-General who was handling the case. However, it seems that they either did not do it or van den ¹⁰⁹⁶ Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA.

Berg did not think that these information were important to include them in his memorandum. We will get back to this issue shortly.

The memorandum contains two evident errors. It says Tsafendas went to London in 1950 when the year was 1959. It also says Tsafendas seemed to be estranged from his family. It is a fact that Tsafendas did not see his relatives between 1941 and 1963. However, he kept in touch with them across those twenty-two years, especially with his father and his half-sister Eleni, and later with his step-mother. They exchanged letters frequently and Tsafendas would send postcards from wherever he was, informing them of his whereabouts. Tsafendas had a loving, life-long relationship with his father. After he died, his step-mother Marika, his half-brother Victor and his half-sister Eleni helped Tsafendas to reunite with them in South Africa. They drove from Pretoria to Lourenço Marques to meet him and then brought him back. Van den Berg must have known about all this, apart from what occurred between Tsafendas's family and J.J. van den Berg, the South African passport control officer, who overlooked the fact that Tsafendas was on the Stop List of the Department of the Interior. On reaching Pretoria, the family gave Tsafendas a rent-free apartment and a job. This was also known to the police. Tsafendas's relations with his other two half-sisters, Evangelia and Katerina, were not as warm, but in no sense was he "estranged" from them. It is important to note that Tsafendas's family sought to distance themselves from him after the assassination, a natural reaction in the emotional frenzy of the time and knowing what the apartheid authorities were capable of.

Costas Michaletos, who knew Tsafendas from infancy, told the police that "Dimetrios Tsafantakis grew up with his half-brothers and sisters and was always treated as part of the family."¹⁰⁹⁷ Guglielmo Conte, a friend and business partner of Tsafendas's father, who also knew Tsafendas from the day he was born, denied that Dimitri was estranged from his family and stated that except for his school years in Middleburg, he always stayed with his father and stepmother and their family.¹⁰⁹⁸

The strangest section of the memorandum concerns Tsafendas's relationship with Helen Daniels and questions of his racial classification. Van den Berg says that, "According to a statement in my possession, there was never any question of a marriage between him and the Coloured woman, Helen Daniels, from Belleville South. Information from Home Affairs files indicates that he applied for reclassification as a Coloured because he wanted to apply for a business licence in a Coloured area.” The Home Affairs files which van den Berg referred to were not found in the archives. Nor was anything discovered relating to Tsafendas’s application regarding his reclassification. As already stated, the author has not been able to establish why Tsafendas applied to be reclassified as a Coloured person. However, that is not the issue here. What is important is that van den Berg appears not to be in possession of the statements which Tsafendas and Helen Daniels gave to the police.

¹⁰⁹⁷ Costas Michaletos statement to the police, 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁰⁹⁸ Goldstein, 'Tsafendas Timid and Puny As A Boy', Rand Daily Mail, 14 September 1966.

In those statements, Tsafendas¹⁰⁹⁹ and Daniels¹¹⁰⁰ stated clearly that there was a question of marriage between them. In his statement of September 11, 1966, Tsafendas said he applied for reclassification in order “to marry a Coloured woman named Helen Daniels.”¹¹⁰¹ Helen Daniels testified to the police on September 15 that she wrote to Tsafendas with the intention of meeting and marrying him. Tsafendas replied to her letter that he was willing to visit, but he wanted to meet her first before agreeing to marry. Daniels also stated that after they met, Tsafendas appeared to have no interest in marrying her since he made no effort to establish a relationship with her.¹¹⁰² Caroline Barbeau also testified that Tsafendas wanted to be reclassified in order to marry Helen Daniels.¹¹⁰³

Van den Berg was either not given these statements - two by Tsafendas and one by Daniels - by the police or he chose to ignore them. As Attorney-General, he was entitled to all statements taken during police interviews, especially those of the accused.¹¹⁰⁴ Had he received them, he must have included them in his memorandum and his failure to do so suggests the police did not provide them. The question therefore is why he not given these statements? Since the marriage question was relatively unimportant, the assumption must be that the documents contained other information which the police did not wish to reveal. That this was indeed the case became obvious during Tsafendas’s summary trial.

As we will see, the three statements, especially the two by Tsafendas, flatly contradicted his portrayal as an insane, apolitical man who killed Dr. Verwoerd because his ¹⁰⁹⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹¹⁰⁰ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File VDSO 17/64, NASA.

¹¹⁰¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹¹⁰² Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File VDSO 17/64, NASA.

¹¹⁰³ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹¹⁰⁴ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017; Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016; Judge Gerald Friedman in a personal interview, 11 April 2016; Judge Robin Marais in a personal interview, 3 June 2016.

tapeworm told him to. Tsafendas declared in his statement that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he was “disgusted with his policies,” that Dr. Verwoerd “did not represent all the people of South Africa,” and he believed that by killing him a “change of policy will occur.” He also testified that he was a former member of the Communist Party of South Africa, that he was against apartheid and colonialism, and that he had participated in anti-apartheid meetings in London. More importantly, there was nothing in his statements to suggest that he was insane, and not once does he mention the tapeworm that would become so central in his summary trial and would be associated with him for the remainder of his life.

It is important to mention here that the report of the Commission of Enquiry flatly contradicts van den Berg’s report. It states that, “On 30th August, 1965, he applied as Demitrio Tsafendas to the Regional Representative of the Department of the Interior to be reclassified as a Coloured person. He gave the reason that he regarded himself as a Coloured and that he wished to marry a Coloured. On 1st September, 1965, he made a sworn statement in support of his application.”¹¹⁰⁵ Clearly, the Commission and van den Berg had different information about the issue and the author is not in position to know for certainty which version is correct. The likelier guess is that the Commission is right since Tsafendas also regarded himself as a Coloured man.

We cannot rule out the possibility that van den Berg was in possession of these statements and deliberately did not use them. However, it seems in the highest degree unlikely that his motive was to cover up such an unimportant issue as Tsafendas’s reclassification. In building a case for Tsafendas’s insanity, the information that would pose the greatest danger to such a line of argument was that concerning Tsafendas’s political activities and beliefs. Therefore the likelier scenario is that the police withheld the Tsafendas and Daniels statements from van den Berg. If so, this would not be the first time the police sought to block important evidence regarding Tsafendas’s background, character and motives.

That said, the Attorney-General’s role in the case is quite strange, even suspicious, and will be examined in detail in the Summary Trial Chapter. It should be mentioned here though that as we saw in his memorandum, van den Berg mentioned that Tsafendas had told the police he was a former member of the South African Communist Party and that he had participated in distribution of Communist propaganda. None of this would become known during the summary trial and the word “Communist” would never even be heard in the court.

¹¹⁰⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 39.

However, on October 30, twenty-seven days after van den Berg wrote his memorandum, The Post revealed that Tsafendas was a former member of the South African Communist Party. Van den Berg was interviewed by the newspaper and when asked whether he knew about Tsafendas's membership, he lied, saying, "This is news to me – I certainly had no knowledge of it until this very moment when you brought it to my notice."¹¹⁰⁶ This was twenty-seven days after he had written about it in his memorandum.

STATEMENTS

MIKE JOSIAS GERMISHUYS¹¹⁰⁷

White male, 29 years old, sergeant in the South African Police, Mandini.

I was stationed at Nyoni from 02/05/1965 to 06/30/1966 when I took my dismissal. I remember there being received a call at Nyoni during 1965, about an assault at Mandini. As far as I can remember, Constable J. Fourie and I went to give the complaint attention. When I arrived at Mandini, I found that a certain Vergos and Tsafendas, two whites who were employed by Frazer and Charles, during duty, was involved in the case. Tsafendas was the plaintiff in the case. Tsafendas claimed that he was assaulted with a razor by Vergos. Tsafendas had lacerations on one of his arms. As far as I can remember, his shirt was also cut across the chest, but he had no cuts on his chest. Vergos was arrested and charged with assault with intent to do grievous bodily harm. Vergos made no report to me that Tsafendas was a dangerous communist. I also know Mr. J.J. Botha, a security officer at Sappi, Mandini, he also never reported to me that Tsafendas was a dangerous communist. Vergos was under the influence of alcohol at the time of the arrest. I cannot furnish the dates, however if I were granted permission to view the registers, I will find it.

JOHANNES JACOBUS BOTHA¹¹⁰⁸

¹¹⁰⁶ Gordon Winter, 'Tsafendas: I Was A Communist', The Post, 30 October 1966: 1.

¹¹⁰⁷ Mike Josias Germishuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹¹⁰⁸ Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

White male, 51 years. Security officer at South African Pulp and Paper Industries, Mandeni.

Further to my statement I made on 15/09/1966, I wish to add, that Vergos told me that Tsafandos is the biggest communist in the R.S.A. I think it was during May, 1965 when he said it to me. Vergos and Tsafandos were both still in the employ of Frazer and Chalmers at Mandeni. I can remember that I told a member of the South African Police, Nyoni, that I heard from Vergos that Tsafandos is the largest communist in South Africa. But I cannot remember who the member is to whom I said it.

Affidavit by J.J. Botha witnessed by ... (Indecipherable name) Nr. 19026 (V) S/SGT at 12.59 p.m.

JACOBUS CHRISTOFFEL SNYMAN¹¹⁰⁹

Nr. 25817 Sergeant in the South African Police, stationed at Nyoni.

Tsafendas, Vergos, M.J. Germishuys and J.J. Botha are known to me. During May 1965, I was stationed at Nyoni. During that time neither Vergos, M.J. Germishuys nor J.J. Botha gave me report that Tsafendas was a dangerous communist. Neither afterwards did any of the three of them report such things to me.

Affidavit by J.C. Snyman Nr. 25817 'V' Sgt at 5 p.m.

¹¹⁰⁹ Jacobus Christoffel Snyman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

NEVILLE JUDSON¹¹¹⁰

Salesman at Mike's outfitters. Woodstock.

During about July 1966 I got to know Demitrio Tsafendas. I met him at the shop where he came to introduce himself. The proprietor (Mr. Mike) asked me to take Tsafendas to the boats as he said he could make business contacts there. I went there about 3 occasions and in fact got some customers, some of whom I brought by car to the shop. Some came in on their own. We only went to one boat, the Greek ship Eleni. During my conversations with the accused I got to know from him about his travels abroad.

I never in no way got the impression that he could be mentally deranged. He appeared to be a normal man with normal reasoning powers. He appeared to be an unsuccessful kind of person. He mentioned being the black sheep in his family. He said nothing detrimental against this country or the people. On the other hand, he said this country was on the right track, especially when buying the new oil tankers. He seemed very impressed by this move.

Accused appeared to have a very friendly way of talking to the sailors at the Eleni. To me he also mentioned that he wanted to married, that is why he had applied for and obtained a job with the Government as an interpreter. He did not mention to me who that woman was he wanted to marry. He mentioned that he had been to the Eleni on his own, apart from our trip there. He mentioned having had lunch and supper on the boat.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

JAN JOHANNES ALBERTUS FOURIE¹¹¹¹

Sergeant of the South African Police, Newcastle, Natal. 2 p.m.

I remember during 1965, I cannot remember the date, Mr. Nick Vergos working at Congella Erection, c/o. South African Pulp and Paper Industries assaulted a certain person, ¹¹¹⁰ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

¹¹¹¹ Jan Johannes Albertus Fourie statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Tsafendas who was working at Fraser and Chalmers, c/o. South African Pulp and Paper Industries.

The case, which was assault with intent to cause serious bodily harm was reported at the Nyoni police station by Tsafendas, I investigated the case. The accused Nick Vergos was later found innocent on the charge by the magistrate in Nyoni. I cannot remember exactly, but it must have been before the court case, Vergos one day told me that Tsafendas was a "Communist Bastard." I cannot remember whether anyone else was present. Vergos said nothing further about Tsafendas. I did not take notice of the comment because Tsafendas and Vergos were angry at each other. I did not ask Vergos why he made such an accusation. I did not report the accusation made by Vergos to my Station Commander. I do not know if Vergos has made any similar statements about any other person. Tsafendas who was the complainant at Nyoni in the assault case was the same person who murdered the late Honourable Dr. Verwoerd. I saw photos of Tsafendas in the newspapers after the murder of late Honourable Dr. Verwoerd.

Statement taken by Captain N.J. Rossouw.

WILHELMINA SOPHIA DE VOS¹¹¹²

White female, manager of "American Maid," Woodstock Observatory.

On 04/06/1966 the Demitrio Tsafendas came to my house to rent a room I advertised. I gave him the room rental. He said he is from the "Marine Diamond Corp." in South West Africa and currently here for treatment in Groote Schuur Hospital to his nose. After a few days he said that he (as outpatient) was dismissed at Groote Schuur and he need not return. I asked if he was going back South West Africa, he said no. I asked whether he should go back, he then said the men there told him if he does not "fit" in with them, then they will throw him overboard. To this I said it does not exist and that I do not believe him, because there is tight security at such places. He gave me the impression that he is work-shy. I have in the meantime discovered that he was dirty and had bad habits and his house manners were poor.

¹¹¹² Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

He later sought work, which he told me about. He said he was looking for messenger or caretaker jobs or as messenger at a bank or something. I asked if he did not have a trade, on which he said he was a "fitter and turner." I told him to look for work in his trade, but he had all kinds of excuses. I told him directly that he was strong and healthy and he had to work. He also said that he applied for a welfare pension. Later he said that if he cannot find work, he will join the Navy which lies in Mozambique. He was talking about the British Navy who was doing the oil blockade. I said to him how can you go against your own people (the Portuguese) with another superpower, then he is a traitor - he then kept quiet and walked away.

After three weeks (late June) I notified him to leave immediately, because I could not endure his messy ways any longer. He went off to Mrs. Theyser whom I saw was advertising a room. He was boastful, but I could see that he had an inferiority complex and his upbringing was not good. I considered him to be a completely normal person.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. 23505 D/Sergt.

FRED FEINAUER¹¹¹³

I am a messenger in the Assembly and I am the senior messenger in the press gallery. I am aware that the press annually holds a function in the parliament house. Many dignitaries get invited to this annual event. The prime minister is usually invited to this annual event. As far as I know, Dr. Verwoerd was invited to the press function which was held on Friday, 02.09.1966. I was in charge of the messengers serving drinks at the press function. Altogether there were seven messengers that helped to serve drinks that evening. Tsafendas was one of the messengers who helped to serve drinks. Tsafendas was one of the messengers who worked under my supervision on the press gallery. I requested Tsafendas to help on 02/09/1966 at the press function. I asked him about two days prior to this function to serve at the function. He arrived that night and helped serve at the press function. Dr. Verwoerd did not attend the function on 02/09/1966.

¹¹¹³ Fred Feinauer statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Statement taken by Major D.J. Rossouw

CORNELIUS FRANCOIS FERREIRA¹¹¹⁴

Sergeant in the South African Police, stationed at Nyoni Station as Commander.

On 07/05/1965 at 1.45 pm. Sergeant Germishuis and I were out on duty. We returned at 9.5 pm. the same day. At my return to the station, I saw that there was a complaint from Mandeni in the incident register, it was about an assault by a white on a white. Sergeant Germishuis was instructed to investigate the matter. He left at 9.20 pm the same day investigate the matter at Mandini. I have no further knowledge of what happened on 07/05/1965 in connection with this assault.

On Saturday, 08/05/1965 at 9.45 I resumed service. In the registers, I noticed that a white man, called Nicholas Vergos, was charged and detained. The white man was released on 08/05/1965 at 8.55 am on bail. I never saw said white man at any time, nor had any conversation with him. At the time of the trial I saw both Vergos and Stafendas, but I had no conversation with them. Raa 14/5/65 refers to the relevant case - Assault with intent to inflict serious injury. Mr. J.J. Botha, a security officer at Sappi, Mandini is known to me. At no time did he report anything to me regarding Stafendas. On 03/10/1966 I had access to the Raa register at Nyoni Police Station. Raa 14/5/66 refers to accused Bantu man Mbotenzi Ngwenya who was charged for failing to show pass book.

Statement taken by ... (Indecipherable name) 19026 S/Sergt at 3.45 p.m.

¹¹¹⁴ Cornelius Francois Ferreira statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

MICHAELIS AUGUSTIDES¹¹¹⁵

White male, owner of Mike's Outfitters, Woodstock

I know the man Demitrio Tsafendas. He was having meals in Woodstock with a Mrs. Scott where some of my assistants also reside and have their meals. He came to the shop about July, 1966. He said he could make contacts with people at the ships in Cape Town docks and could bring some customers to my shop. I said O.K. if he brought any customers to my shop I would give him a commission. I know in fact that some customers were brought to my shop and that I have paid him about R10 commission. I never had other dealings with him. One of my salesmen accompanied him to the boats. I got to know he was Greek and heard that he has been abroad, but did not have personal conversations with him. He appeared to be an unsettled type. He mentioned to me finding a job at court as interpreter.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

BAREND BUYTENDAG¹¹¹⁶

Lt. Col at the South African Police and Dr. Verwoerd's bodyguard.

Buytendag explained at length the measures taken to ensure the security of the prime minister, including the dispositions of his motorcades, the routes his car would use, arrival arrangements at Parliament and searches in contiguous areas. Buytendag stated that Dr. Verwoerd's appointments were made available to him and if there were doubts about any planned visitors, the local security police would be contacted. The PM's office was constantly searched for hidden microphones and his telephones were checked for espionage efforts. Dr. Verwoerd never handled post or packages. A special police guard unit was formed consisting of 82 officers and men. Nothing in Col. Buytendag's statement was directly relevant to Tsafendas.

¹¹¹⁵ Michaelis Augustides statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

¹¹¹⁶ Barend Buytendag statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Verklarings van Lt. Kol. B. Buytendag. NASA.

SYBIE BARENDILLA¹¹¹⁷

Coloured female, 28 years, Shop Assistant at Astoria Stores, Woodstock.

I belong to the Christian fellowship of which Demitrio Tsafendas was a member. During November, 1965, I attended a meeting (church) at Abrahams, 112 Kipling Street, near my house. After I have been in the house, Tsafendas arrived. He was also attending our meeting and had a bible with him. After the service he introduced himself to me.

During about May, 1966 I again met him on a bus when I was returning to work after lunch. He remembered me, spoke to me and said he was on his way to Town to buy a pair of shoes. He enquired how my uncle was in America. I do not know how he came to know that I had an uncle in America and I did not ask him. The next day after this incident he walked past the shop where I was employed. He paused in the door, waved to me and walked on. The following day he came into the shop and bought a chocolate. I got the impression that he wanted to talk to me, but I cut him short and carried on with my work.

On a public holiday, I think the 11th of July, 1966, he came to my house and enquired for me. My sister opened the door and spoke to him. He was insistent to see me, but my sister put him off. I heard the conversation and told my sister that I did not want to see him. That was the last time I have any knowledge of him. After that I saw his picture in the local papers in connection with the assassination of Hr. Dr. Verwoerd.

JACOBUS JOHANNES BORNMAN¹¹¹⁸

White male, 22 years old, Traffic officer at Tramway Company, Cape Town.

I lived at 57 Milton Road, Observatory during May to July 1966. Living with me in the same room was Demitrio Tsafendas. When I started living together with him, I found him to be a friendly and plausible person. He left the impression that he really liked me. On one occasion I had no money and then Tsafendas gave me five cents. I later wanted to return the money to him, but he would not take it.

¹¹¹⁷ Sybie Barendilla statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹¹¹⁸ Jacobus Johannes Bornman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Tsafendas read his bible late into the night and I got the impression that he was a great Christian. He also told me that he was a Christian. He went to church four or five times. It was usually during the night. I do not know what denomination he belonged to, but I believed him to belong to the Catholic Church. This, however, was of little importance to me. On one occasion he told me that he met a woman who attended the same church as he did. As far as I know, Tsafendas loves women, he talked a lot about women and I believed that he attended church services so often to make contact with the woman he met there.

There was also a person, a German, whose name I do not remember, sharing the room with us. I remember that one day Tsafendas told us that if he should marry one day and have children, those children would be either genius or mad because of all the feelings in him over the years and what he has experienced over the years. I want to mention the following incident, which I found odd, to be put on recorded. On Tsafendas's wardrobe were paper bags and on top of the paper bags were three of his hats. I reached up to a paper bag to put in certain items of clothing. When I reached for the paper bag on top of his closet, he leaped swiftly from where he lay on his bed reading. When I saw, Tsafendas stood beside me. It surprised me to see how quickly he can move since he had a big and clumsy posture and I believed that he was a lazy person. I asked him why he so quickly jumped up and he said he was afraid I would knock his hats from the closet. I have often noticed that Tsafendas removed his wallet and personal belongings at night from his pockets and place it under his pillow instead. I often saw that he placed his wallet under his pillow. Maj. Rossouw today showed me a wallet which I know belongs to Tsafendas.

As I said, Tsafendas read Bible late into the night. We had an argument because he left the light burning while I wanted to sleep. After that, he did not talk to me much, but he talked a lot with the German. Tsafendas's conversations were always about women and politics. He never talked about anything else. Tsafendas was dissatisfied with conditions in R.S.A and he has often criticized the government, his exact words I don't remember, but it seemed to me that he had a grudge against Dr. Verwoerd. He stood up a lot for the Coloureds. On a day a Bantu woman brought food for Tsafendas while he was in bed from his illness with his nose operation. He said he would like to have intercourse with her. This he said after she left the room. I rebuked him by saying that it is not allowed in the R.S.A. He said it did not bother him.

During the time I lived with Tsafendas, his behaviour was normal. He did not drink or smoke. I regarded him as a normal and very intelligent person. He told me that he was a sickly person and therefore cannot do very hard work. He told me that he was an interpreter by profession. According to my observation, Tsafendas was a gentle person. He was neat on his person, but his eating habits were not up to scratch. He was messy.

Tsafendas said he was born in Lourenço Marques, he went to school in Middelburg and that he visited many foreign countries. I know that he could speak several languages. Of Germany he talked a lot and he also spoke of the Russians, but not that he had ever visited Russia. He and the German spoke German. What was remarkable was that Tsafendas always told everyone that he is a Christian. As far as I know he just read his Bible in his room. Tsafendas never received any visitors, but he walked around a lot. I got the impression that Tsafendas was very secretive in his actions.

Statement taken by Major D.J. Rossouw and Troost

PIETER BENJAMIN GELDENHUYS¹¹¹⁹

White male, employment officer at the Department of Labour, Cape Town.

On 05/25/1966 I was working at the department as employment officer when a white man, Demitrio Tsafendas came to seek assistance for work. At that time he was unemployed and wanted to register for work. Because he was on sickness benefits and staying in a nursing home "The Milton Convalescent Home", I insisted on a medical certificate which states that he is suitable for work. On 06/06/1966, he again came to the office, but was not in possession of the required medical certificate. On this day he was very talkative and blamed everyone except himself for the fact that he was unemployed. Because he could not produce the necessary medical certificate, I did not refer him to any work.

I got the impression that this man was eager to find work and according to his physical appearance, he appeared to be a person who is able to do work. He was neatly dressed. Because he did not have the necessary certificate, I did not take note at that time of what kind of work he can do. He did report to me that he could speak several languages and stated that he would like to be an interpreter.

¹¹¹⁹ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

I spoke with this man twice and I never got the impression that there was mentally anything wrong with him or that he acted abnormally. The first time I spoke with him, I completed the record report cards with the necessary information.”

Statement taken by J.P.F. van Wyk S/SGT.

ROSENBERGH¹¹²⁰

Demitrio Tsafendas (he has a brother and sister in Pretoria who are classified as whites) has applied to the Dept. of the Interior to be classified as Coloured because his intention was to marry a Coloured woman. Information given by Mr Rosenbergh to Coetzee in the Detective Dept.

WILLIAM MARE VOLBRECHT¹¹²¹

I am an adult white male, vice principal and chief psychologist associated to Porters Reform School, Tokai. I am also known as Billy.

I was born in Middelburg, Transvaal, where I began my schooling at the “English Medium Primary School”. I was a pupil from 1929 and stayed there until St. VI, that is to say more or less until 1935. The principal at that time was Mr. J. C. Cox.

I can remember that while I was a student, there were a group of Greek and Portuguese students who studied there mainly with the aim to improve their English. When they studied there, they were sent to a lower standard to learn the basics first. These students usually created the impression that they were at a higher level in certain subjects and we regarded them as very intelligent.

As I can remember very well, Demitrio Tsafendas was during that time, one of the group of Portuguese and Greek students.

¹¹²⁰ Rosenbergh statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150. Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/7, Subject: Department van Immigrasie. NASA; Rosenbergh's first name is not given in the statement.

¹¹²¹ William Mare Volbrecht statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Verklaring deur Majdor Venter. NASA.

This school was well known for its healthy atmosphere where personal interests in the children are given which is most important for a child in his forming years. This also applies to the residence - Nelson House - where they were living.

At that stage Tsafendas was seen as white and there was never anything that pointed to someone regarding or treating him as a non-white or to him being discriminated against. He participated in the school activities and sports, for example, without excelling.

I cannot remember any case where he was ever guilty of misconduct. He was as far as I can remember, never a loner and freely mingled with us. There were no noticeable deviations. If there are cases of which I am unaware, it is possible that it may be recorded in the punishment book.

It was clear to us during those years that this group of Portuguese and Greeks who were a bit older than us and more often mixed with each other, made a habit of sodomy.

From the time I was in Standard III, I never saw him again.

According to my knowledge Mrs. Looock was the standard II teacher who, if she is still alive, will have a very thorough knowledge of him. A certain Miss. Peters, later Mrs. Verryn and later Mrs. Piking, now residing in Middelburg, was the Grades-teacher and she should remember him very well. The housemaster at Nelson House and later a principal of a school in Potchefstroom, Mr. J. Martindale, is another person who will know him very well.

Statement taken by J.P.F. van Wyk S/Sgt.

TUESDAY, 4 OCTOBER 1966

STATEMENTS

MELDON TILLEK¹¹²²

Coloured man, Reiger Park, Boksburg.

I was born on 17/4/1941 in Benoni. I am married and live with my parents.

Approximately in 1963, on a Sunday morning, I answered the telephone in my parents' home at 100 Montague Street, ACTONVILLE, BENONI. The person on the phone said he was at Benoni station and that he desired to attend the morning church service in our home and that he needed me to give him directions to find the house. A few minutes after the phone call that person arrived alone at our house and introduced himself as DEMETRIO TSAFENDAS and said that he was a member of our Church, which is called "The Way." Our Church is also known as "Two by Two" and "True Saints of Christ." I was also a member of this Church at that time. My Father, Harry Tillek, is an Elder in this Church and he conducts a service in our home every Sunday.

Tsafendas attended the service which my father conducted that morning. We talked together after the service. Tsafendas told me that he worked at ISCOR in Pretoria. He never gave me his home address. He said that he had travelled in many different countries in the world. However, he said that he had experienced many difficulties in the Republic of South Africa because of the strict Apartheid Policies because he had a dark complexion and was regarded as a Coloured person. He added that he had applied to be registered as a Coloured, but that he had been classified as a white person instead. He said that the white people always looked down on him and that consequently he felt more at home amongst Coloured people. He attended the morning service, had lunch with us and also attended the afternoon service. He departed from Benoni Station late that afternoon.

About a month after his visit at my parents' home, Tsafendas again pitched up on a Sunday for a service which was led by my father. He left directly after the service and I do not know what happened to him after that. We did not converse on that occasion. Tsafendas never mentioned the name of Dr. Verwoerd in my presence and he never made any other comments about politics. His behaviour and conversations with me were normal and I never noticed anything unusual about him. I do remember that on the occasion of his first visit to my parental home, that one of the fellow residents suggested to him that as there were many Coloureds in our Church in Cape Town, he would probably find it easier to mix with the people there. I know a Coloured woman named Helen Daniels who is from Cape Town. I met her when she attended Church Conferences in Benoni and she often stayed at my parental home on those occasions. I cannot recall that any of our residents ever mentioned her name to Tsafendas.

¹¹²² Meldon Tillek statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Although Tsafendas never made any comments other than those previously mentioned, he gave the strong impression that he was very unhappy here as a result of the Government policies regarding separate development. I have read that a person named Demetrio Tsafendas has been detained in connection with murder of the late Dr. Verwoerd. I should definitely be able to identify the Tsafendas who visited my parents' house. I am prepared to testify about the facts contained in this declaration in any Court.

The declaration was taken by me in Benoni on 4/10/1966 at 10.15a.m.

Signed by Captain Pretorius.

Witnessed by Sergeant van der Merwe.

WALTER HARRY TILLEK¹¹²³

Coloured man, Reigers Park, Boksburg.

I was born on 29/12/1908 in Johannesburg. I am married and live with my family at the above address. I am a member and Elder of the "TRUE CHURCH OF CHRIST." I have been living at the above address for approximately the last 18 months. Previously I lived for 38 years at 100 Montague Street, ACTONVILLE BENONI. While I live in Actonville, Benoni, we held communal Church Services at my home every Sunday. We did not have a Minister and I conducted the services as an Elder.

¹¹²³ Walton Henry Tillek statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

In about 1963, one Sunday morning, before the Church Service, a person who appeared to be a white person, arrived alone at my home, which was situated in a Coloured area. He introduced himself as Demetrio Tsafendas. He said that he had come to attend the morning Church Service in my home. He said that he was from Pretoria. He did not give me his address or any other personal details. He said that he simply was very interested in the church and that he wanted to attend the service. He never discussed either any church or government policies. I did not notice any abnormal behaviour by him and he behaved in a normal way. I led the service.

As far as I can remember Tsafendas was the only white person present at the service. The rest of the congregation were Coloureds, Bantu, and Indians. After the service which lasted about an hour, all the congregation left, including Tsafendas. About a month after the first service, Demetrio Tsafendas again arrived alone for a service. On that occasion we again did not discuss anything and he left after the service conducted by me. On both occasions Tsafendas stated that he had travelled per train from Pretoria. Tsafendas said that he had been given my address by one of our church's preachers. I know a Coloured woman named Helen Daniels and all I know about her is that she lives in Cape Town. I do not know her areas. I met her in Putfontein, Benoni, about ten years ago, at the time of a conference of our Church.

After that, I saw often saw her at Church Conferences. We never corresponded and I do not know her address. She is unmarried and a preacher in our Church. I am sure that I never gave the name or address of Helen Daniels to Demetrio Tsafendas, or discussed her with him. My church only spreads the good news of the Bible. I have been a member of this church since 1936. This church does not possess any buildings. I have no idea for how long Tsafendas has been a member of this church and do not have any knowledge of his personal details. After the death of the late Dr. Verwoerd I read that Tsafendas was being detained in this connection.

Declaration taken by me at Benoni on 4/10/66.

Signed: Captain Pretorius

Witness: Sergeant van der Merwe, 30849.

KEITH TERRENCE BERTRAM MARTINCICH¹¹²⁴

E/M/A. Lansdowne.

I am employed with Marine Diamond Corporation on the Colpontoon. When I signed on, on the 8th February, 1966, I found Tsafendas employed there as a pump operator. We were on the same shift, in adjoining cabins, and enjoying the same facilities on the boat. He spoke to me every day and I got the impression that he was sociable type. He mentioned to me that he has been to various countries. He did not have much clothing with him, and I got the impression that he was a poor man. I stood him a few drinks. When we were off and to Cape Town I stood him a meal at Cape Town station. After that we had some drinks at the buffet. He could not drink much and usually talked nonsense when he had been drinking.

On quite a few occasions he had discussed politics with me. He said he did not like the Government and that he was given a hard time in South Africa. He said the Government won't reign very long. He always referred to we don't like the Government. I asked him who was 'we'. He said "silence is Golden" and dropped the subject, and walked away. On various occasions he had said that he was staying with a coloured or Malay family in Lansdowne. He also said the coloureds were better than the Europeans. He said they were more friendly, and had more sense than the Europeans, and showed more understanding. When I said he was talking nonsense, he got cross and lifted himself as though he wanted to tackle me. I lifted myself as if I was going to defend myself, in doing so pointed my fingers pressed stiff together towards him. He immediately asked me if I was going to use Karate on him. I said yea, he was a bigger man than myself. He then sat down and asked me pardon.

I noticed that he was very familiar with the coloured crew on the boat, about which I reprimanded him. He mentioned to me about belonging to a gang or crowd of coloured people who were enjoying themselves in Cape Town. He never mentioned the church or that he was a Christian or a religious person. Mentioning the gang, I got the impression he meant a number of people. When off duty on shore leave I saw him travel the train to Lansdowne. He got off towards the coloured area. When I have been with him about 2 or 3 trips he said I must not say anything, as he was not coming back. He said he was expecting a large amount of money and is a big business man and that he was wasting his time with the firm on the boat.

¹¹²⁴ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

He appeared fit, and I never got the impression that he was sick. He never complained that he was sick. I often watched him at his work. He appeared to be one of the laziest persons that I have ever seen. The only complaint he ever had, was about climbing the stairs and the rooking of the boat, and I used to see him walk in the passages as if he had all the time in the world. He was definitely lazy. The dredge pumps sucked up crawfish quite often. He was more interested to catch the crawfish than in his work. I chased him on a few occasions away from the gravel screen on account that diamonds came up there, though it would be very difficult to get to the gravel. The crawfish come on top, and can be caught by hand. He was often saying he wished he found himself a girlfriend for the night.

He said he was against the colour bar in the country. He spoke against the Government, but never against any individual. In many ways he had very childish manners. His table manners were very bad. He had a good appetite at all meals and enjoyed his meals in a messy way. I have watched him at times from behind, and noticed he was mumbling to himself. I overheard him mentioning that he had dived-from our boat to save people, like a hero in a dreamworld. He even clapped hands by himself, and jumped up and down like a child. I found this very amusing, thinking that there was something mentally wrong with him. When he noticed me, he carried on with his work. Once he said he would not mind getting a couple of diamonds. I told him he could try if he wanted to land in gaol.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

WEDNESDAY, 5 OCTOBER 1966

STATEMENTS

CAREL SEBASTIAAN VAN HEERDEN¹¹²⁵

Senior security officer of the Colpontoon, diamond boat of Marine Diamond Corporation, Wynberg.

Around January or February 1966, Demitrio Tsafendas made his first appearance on the same shift as I on the Colpontoon. We were transferred from the Marina with a small outboard boat to the Colpontoon. It was terrible rough seas, so much so that almost all of us old hands got seasick. It struck me that Tsafendas adapted well. He was one of the few who were not sick. With landing he filled the mess-basin on the lower deck with water and started shaving. His calm way struck me that he must know the sea.

Tsafendas was employed as a pump-or engineer operator and did not work under my direct supervision. I introduced myself to him and talked to him. He was friendly, outgoing, and was not aloof.

I noticed that his eating was messy. Otherwise he was completely normal. It was notable that he never slept as long as the others slept after his shift on duty. The shifts are 12 hours on and 12 hours off. Usually the night shift sleeps until about 6 pm. Tsafendas was very often already awake by 3 or 4 pm. He then came across as fit and rested. He never complained to me that the work bored him or made him weary. I have never conducted personal conversations with him with regards to his origin or background.

My shift was 10 days on and 10 days off. He had 20 days on and 10 off with the result that afterwards we were not often together on duty. I was later transferred to another boat and lost contact with him, with the result that I do not know what has become of him. As far as I know he did not drink.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

¹¹²⁵ Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden statement to the police, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

HENDRIK JOHANNES MULDER¹¹²⁶

White male, accountant at Tecosa Knitting Mills, Claremont.

I am an expert in the field “Kung Fu” or better known as Chinese karate. I’m also an expert in the field of firearms, explosives and manufacturing of bombs. From 1944-1950 I was a professional deep sea diver in South America. I learned karate here. During this period I visited Argentina with friends and was arrested and detained, because it was alleged that I and others tried to kill Juan Peron, then the president of Argentina. We escaped and returned via a torpedo boat to Venezuela where I worked. January 1951 I returned to South Africa. I worked in Port Elizabeth for six years and then moved to Cape Town.

During 1960 or 1961, an article in the supplement to “Die Burger” appeared which discussed my skill with firearms, etc. There were also pictures of me with the article. Shortly after the article appeared, three men came to my house one night. All three were white. They did not introduce themselves to me. One person asked me: “do you like money,” I replied, “of course, who does not?” He then said that they wanted me to perform an assignment of theirs. It is dangerous yet easy. I wanted to know what they want me to do. They then told me that I had to shoot Dr. Verwoerd and I will receive £20,000 in compensation. I would receive £10,000 as soon as I sign a document stating that I will do the shooting and £10,000 to me or my wife as soon as the job is done. The people spoke English and seemed to be Jews. I made them understand that I was not interested in such a thing at all. The next day I called the Security Police. The same day, two members of the Security police came to see me and took the statement. The one was Erasmus (I’m not sure, but I know he is now in diamond research), the other one was van Wyk. I gave all details and the description of the three persons.

During April the following year, Dr. Verwoerd was shot by Pratt. Before this incident, the people called me several times and asked if I would not accept their offer. I cannot remember well, but I doubt that the Security Police came to see me after the shooting. I also gave the Security Police information about the South African Freedom Movement. About a year ago, a person called me one night. I do not have a phone in my house, but my neighbours Mrs. Christian, receives phone calls for me and called me to the phone. It happens often so she will not be aware of this particular case. A male person referred to the earlier offer made to me and then said that it could be arranged that I get a job in the Parliamentary house and then I will be near Dr. Verwoerd and can "reach him easier." I once again said that I was not interested in it. I phoned the Security Police the next day and reported the incident. I think I spoke with Captain. Rossouw. It was by telephone. He thanked me and said everything is being done to protect our Prime Minister and I don't have to worry at all. This conversation was a roughly a year before the murder of the late Dr. Verwoerd occurred.

¹¹²⁶ Hendrik Johannes Mulder statement to the police, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

About 14 days ago, someone called me at work and told me that they have someone in the Parliamentary House for their work and that Advocate Vorster will be First minister for exactly six months before he will be killed. After a notice appeared in the press that an investigation will occur and where people were invited to provide information I telephoned and stated my willingness to give a statement. I gained my knowledge about explosives and time bombs in my course as deep-sea diver. The incident about Advocate Vorster I did not report to the Security Police, because I felt that I was making a fool of myself.

COMMENTS ON MULDER'S STATEMENT

On October 6, the police interviewed Petrus Gerhardus Loubser,¹¹²⁷ a former Security Police officer, in connection with Mulder's statement (his statement made on the day in question is included later in this chapter). Subsequently, on October 14 the Commission of Enquiry interviewed Mulder and Loubser again, along with Det. Sgt. Johannes Petrus Francois van Wyk, who was also involved in the case. Mulder's testimony to the Commission is similar to his statement here and is given in the following chapter, in the section titled "The Mulder Case."¹¹²⁸

Loubser testified to the Commission (his testimony is given in the following chapter, see "The Mulder Case") and to the police that he interviewed Hendrik Mulder after he told police he had been offered a large sum of money to blow up the Die Burger newspaper by planting a time bomb, but he could not describe the men who made the offer. On another occasion, he said he was working as a mechanic at a garage when a customer tried to ¹¹²⁷ The surname in his statement to the police is given as Loubser, while in his testimony to the COE it is given as Laubser.

¹¹²⁸ Hendrik Johannes Mulder testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

persuade him to shoot Verwoerd. He said he could not describe the customer and the garage itself was by now closed. Laubser said, “My opinion is he has a fantastic imagination.”¹¹²⁹

Detective van Wyk testified to the Commission (his testimony is available in the following chapter, see “The Mulder Case”) that after Mulder reported the alleged offer to blow up the Die Burger newspaper building, the police secretly observed his house. Mulder later told him the two men had returned during this period, but the police watchers said no-one visited. The detective said Mulder claimed a man at his workplace held Communist meetings, an allegation police found to be false. As for the blindfolded visit to a block of flats, van Wyk said the police considered it “altogether too fantastic and entirely implausible.”¹¹³⁰

By reading the two policemen’s testimonies about Mulder, we may note the inconsistencies in his far-fetched story (for example he was asked to kill Dr Verwoerd in 1959, but he reported it to the police only in 1962); his inability to describe any of these contacts with precision; and his two clear lies (the alleged Communist meetings and his claim that someone visited him while the police secretly had his house under observation). This strongly suggests that both men had every right to think that Mulder was lying. As to his connection with Tsafendas, the only remote connection was when Mulder claimed his contacts told him they could arrange access to Dr Verwoerd by securing a position in Parliament.

That Tsafendas had reached Dr. Verwoerd by just such a method, as a Parliamentary messenger, had been all over the newspapers for more than a month. It is well within the bounds of possibility that an evident fantasist such as Mulder could have made up such a claim retrospectively to strengthen his story.

¹¹²⁹ Petrus Gerhardus Laubser testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

¹¹³⁰ Johannes Petrus Francois van Wyk testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

THURSDAY, 6 OCTOBER 1966

TSAFENDAS'S HEARING

As instructed by the September 8, 1966 remand order of Chief Magistrate C. Willman, Tsafendas appeared on Thursday, October 6, 1966 before a specially constituted court in Caledon Square police station. The hearing lasted for four minutes and fifty seconds and Tsafendas was remanded for summary trial on October 17 at the Criminal Sessions, Cape Town, on an allegation of murder.¹¹³¹ The proceedings took place before Mr. Willman in a room measuring some fifteen feet by fifteen feet and containing seven policemen and four reporters, as well as court officers. Willman presided, Bloomberg appeared on behalf of Tsafendas, (though Wilfrid Cooper was named as defence counsel), and Mr. H. Jacobs appeared as senior prosecutor. Tsafendas wore a crumpled brown suit and white shirt without a tie; he was not handcuffed and stood with his hands clasped behind his back; he had no waist belt and hitched up his trousers from time to time.

At 10.30 am, Willman was ushered into the room and Jacobs asked that the preparatory examination opened on September 9, 1966 against Tsafendas be remitted for trial. He said the indictment had been served on Tsafendas and advocate Cooper had been informed of today's proceedings.¹¹³² The indictment read: *That DEMITRIO TSAFENDAS is guilty of the crime of MURDER IN THAT upon the 6th September, 1966, and at Cape Town, in the District of the CAPE, he did wrongfully, unlawfully and maliciously Kill and murder DR. THE HONOURABLE HENDRIK FRENSCH VERWOERD, Prime Minister of the Republic of South Africa.*¹¹³³

Willman told Tsafendas he was being committed for summary trial and meanwhile would be detained in the cells at the police station. Tsafendas spoke for the first and only time. According to the South African Press of the time, Tsafendas, leaning forward slightly, said, "My lord, I do not understand the word summary." Willman replied, "It means that you will be tried without preparatory examination." Tsafendas responded, "Yes, my lord," and the court adjourned.¹¹³⁴ According to Bloomberg, Tsafendas asked him and not the magistrate

¹¹³¹ The Cape Argus, 'Tsafendas: Question to Court', 6 October 1966: 1.

¹¹³² The Cape Argus, 'Tsafendas: Question to Court', 6 October 1966: 1.

¹¹³³ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 80-81.

¹¹³⁴ The Cape Argus, 'Tsafendas: Question to Court', 6 October 1966: 1.

what “summary trial” meant.¹¹³⁵ With policemen holding onto his jacket sleeves, Tsafendas was escorted across a narrow passage to a lift giving access to the cells.¹¹³⁶

STATEMENTS

PETRUS GERHARDUS LOUBSER¹¹³⁷

White male, former Security Police officer, Bellville.

From September 1961 to 1963 I was involved in the security section of the SA Police in Cape Town. Then I left the police. A white man, Mr. Hendrik Mulder, is known to me. I met him in connection with work that I had done for the security police while I was still in the service. I cannot remember exactly, but it was during 1962 when Mulder telephoned the Head of Safety of that time, Colonel Van der Westhuizen. I was then instructed to meet with him. That same evening I went to see him. He then said to me said that three unknown persons paid him a visit. They told him they had seen a report in a supplication of “Die Burger” reporting his skill with firearms. They would say to him that they could use him. He would have asked them what they wanted to use him for and they would say that they want him to bomb the offices of “Die Burger.” They proposed to him that he return to the offices of “Die Burger” and give a further story about his skill with firearms. He had to take a package with him that contained a time bomb. He had to leave the package somewhere in an office.

Mr. Mulder said he wanted the people to return, therefore he had told them that he would reflect on the matter and that they can come and see him again. He wanted to, in fact, use the time to inform the police, which he did afterwards. Arrangements were made with Mr. Mulder to inform the Security Police when the men arrived again, but he never did that. I was scouting for a long period, but no one was ever noticed at his home. On a second occasion, a few days later, I spoke to Mulder again and he said that when the three persons came to see him, they also told him that they wanted to establish a “Task Force”, that they already have 20,000 members and that they wanted to use to him as an instructor. I found it strange that he didn’t give such an important report to me before. A time later I saw Mr. Mulder again at a shop in Woodstock. He told me that he took his car to a garage in District Six for repairs and that the owner, a Jew, had requested an absurd amount for the repairs, he could not pay the amount. The Jew then offered him an absurd amount of money if he would kill Dr. Verwoerd. Mulder said that the incident happened a few years ago, just after Dr. Verwoerd became prime minister. He could not give the Jew's name and could not give the address where the garage was. He said the garage no longer exists. Mr. Mulder was usually very vague and could give no direct information that could be followed up. I deny that Mulder ever reported to me that three Jews approached him to shoot Dr. Verwoerd. I never took a statement from him.

¹¹³⁵ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 81.

¹¹³⁶ The Cape Argus, ‘Tsafendas: Question to Court’, 6 October 1966: 1.

¹¹³⁷ Petrus Gerhardus Loubser statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

Statement taken by J.P.F. van Wyk S/SGT.

REDVERS QUINTIN WAKFER¹¹³⁸

I am an adult white male employed by the Cape Town City Council at the Power Station, Dock Rd., Cape Town and reside at 25 Forth Ave., Fish Hoek. On 10/09/65, Mr. D. Tsafendas applied for a job as a fitter at the Power Station. I interviewed him and subsequently he was taken on as a fitter in the ash plant. This was on the 13th of September, 1965. He appeared to be quite normal and was neatly dressed. I never worked with him but received a report that he was not a good worker and I have instructions that he should be dismissed. He was then dismissed on 25/10/65. To avoid dismissal he resigned.

(SGD.) R.Q. Wakfer

Statement taken by me – (SGD.) J.P.F. van Wyk D/Sgt.

Cape Town 6/10/66.

¹¹³⁸ Redvers Quintin Wakfer statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub File: 1/5, Subject Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

OWEN SMORENBURG¹¹³⁹

White male, employed at the Power Station, Dock Hd., Cape Town.

The person Tsafendas is known to me. He worked with me during September/October, 1965. He worked with me for about five weeks. At that time I was doing work in the Cape Town docks. Mr. Tsafendas was assisting me with rough engineering fitting. During that time I got the idea that he was very headstrong. He did not want to work according to instructions but wanted to do things his way.

Mr. Tsafendas was very talkative and gave the impression that he was very friendly. He wanted to talk to everybody and it became known to me that he was able to speak different languages. While working there one day he spoke to people on a boat but he was speaking in a strange language and I could not understand him. The job we did in the docks was about 40 ft. underneath the ground and he was obviously scared of working there because it was too dangerous he said. Sometimes Mr. Tsafendas acted childish and did things which you wouldn't expect from a man of his age. One day for instance he loosen a bolt which was rusted. He asked whether he should put on a new one and when told to do so, he went along and put the rusted one back again.

He never discussed politics with me, but one day I told him laughingly that the place where we work was an ideal place for Min. Vorster to put his political prisoners. In a short discussion that followed he mentioned that Min. Vorster was the right man in that job and also said something to the effect that the then Prime Minister, Dr. Verwoerd, was the right man to be in that position. Mr. Tsafendas was never satisfied with his salary. He always complained that it was not enough. He was no good as a fitter and was dismissed for that reason, but instead of dismissing him, he was given the opportunity to resign. On the day when he was dismissed he said that he worked all over the world but now that he was working for a stupid place like the Cape Town City Council, he was told that he was not good enough.

Statement taken by J.P.F. van Wyk S/SGT.

¹¹³⁹ Owen Smorenburg statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Leer W.D. 10/10/ 4102 oor Stafendas. NASA.

HARRY HALL¹¹⁴⁰

European male, lift technician at the Cape Town Medical School.

About during March, 1966 I first met Demitrio (now known as Tsafendas). I am a member of the Christian Church and as such meetings are held at my house for members of the faith. We have evening meetings on Wednesdays and Sundays as well as a morning meeting on Sundays. Demitrio came to my house on advice from one of the elder preachers - Mr. Johnson - who had directed him to my house. I accepted him as such. He did not attend regularly, but about 2/3s of the meetings. He participated at times in our Bible readings and discussions. I got the definite impression that he had no proper understanding at the meaning of the Bible. We could not look upon his as an enlightened person as far as the teaching of the Bible was concerned.

After meetings people never stay socially, so I had very few discussions with him. He told me he had been in the American Merchant Marine during the last war, also that he had been to many places. He never discussed anything political, I did not even know where he worked. He said he was living in Observatory, and after been missing for some time, he said he had moved to Woodstock and that it was out of the way. I regarded him as a sub-standard intellect but otherwise found him to be reasonably normal.

On Sunday 3/9/66 he attended both services at my house. I have on occasions noticed that when he sat with his hands on his knees, his legs would tremble quite violently. I cannot remember if I had noticed anything peculiar about him the very last Sunday. During the following week I learnt through the newspapers that he had been detained in connection with the assassination of the Prime Minister (Dr. Verwoerd).

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost D/Sergt. 23505

¹¹⁴⁰ Harry Hall statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

VICTOR RIBTON¹¹⁴¹

White male, proprietor of Victor Ribton Agencies Camps Bay.

On the morning of the 6th September, 1966 I was on my way to George. I stopped at the General Post Office Cape Town opposite the Darling Street entrance to post letters and to clear my post box, the time being approximately 9.15 a.m. On passing the telephone booths on the right hand side I noticed a white men whom I immediately recognised as one Carrol who served with me in the South African Naval Forces during World War 2. I did not get a full view of his face but, although I only saw him side faced I am 90% certain that it was Carrol. He did not see or recognise me.

I then noticed that he was waiting outside the centre booth, all the booths being occupied at the time. He appeared restless and agitated which I thought at the time was due to the fact that the booths were all occupied. Later on in the day, on the National Road just past Riversdale when I heard the news of the Prime Minister's death on the car radio, I had given Carrol's presence at the Post Office some thought but had not been suspicious until the following day when the newspapers reported that the assassin had left the Houses of Parliament earlier that morning to go to town and I knew that Carrol was employed at the Parliament. When I later read that all information, however trivial, should be reported, I decided to report this incident.

Statement taken by ... (Indecipherable name) D/W/Officer, S.A. Police. Commissioner of oaths.

GILLIAN CLAIRE LIEBERMAN¹¹⁴²

White female, personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation. Cape Town.

About during March 1966 I got to know Demitrio Tsafendas. He came into my office at M.D.C. as an employee with a query. He said that he had some trouble with his ears and ¹¹⁴¹ Victor Ribton statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 3, Sub File: 1/5. NASA.

¹¹⁴² Gillian Claire Lieberman statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

nose and wished to see a doctor. I questioned him to ascertain whether his complaint was private or due to an injury on duty. He mentioned that the vibration and noise in the pump room (on the Colpontoon) were effecting his ears. I made an appointment with the Co. Doctor (Dr. Lazzard. It later came to my notice that he had been referred to Mr. Breme Goldman (ear and nose specialist) in Medical Centre, CT. After this, he came into my office on more than one occasion. I had various discussions with him. I got quite interested in him as an individual. He mentioned that he was well-travelled; he mentioned having been to Portugal, England and the Continent. I think he also mentioned the East. He said he could speak the language of the countries he had been to. He mentioned Portuguese, and I think German. He spoke to me quite good English but with an accent.

He complained about the type of man we had employed — meaning the people who worked with him. He mentioned particularly the Afrikaans co-workers as being intolerant of the white South African people. I asked him how can he generalize, as no person is the same. He inferred that he was a lone person and with no ties or family or friends. He also mentioned that he would like to have his meals alone on the boat. He complained about the stops and ladders which he had to climb as also again about the noise of the pumps. He was a very dissatisfied person. I told him we could not arrange separate facilities for him, and inferred that is he is so very dissatisfied, it would be better for him to resign. He said that would be the best.

About his intolerance of the South African white people, he probed me for my political opinion. By his talks he gave me the impression that he does not agree with authority (Governmental or other). I cut him short, saying that in my capacity of my work I do not discuss politics. I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation, but a strange type of person, a unique character. Apart from him being well travelled etc. I got the impression that he was physically different in dress and appearance. He was a big man, with a particularly striking big hat, stainless steel teeth, sloppy dirty clothing.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505. Commissioner of oaths.

JAMES JOHNSTON¹¹⁴³

Coloured male. Minister of the Christian Church. Plumstead.

We have no church building but we gather together for worship in the homes of members of our denomination. The Christian Church caters for both European and non-European races. We are not multi-racial but we do gather with coloured members of the church during our annual Christian Church conference. We, however, obey the apartheid laws. By this I mean that members of different races eat and sleep separately. We go out in two's and we receive no salary whatever. Our needs are met by voluntary contributions from the members of our church. The Christian Church organisation is worldwide. I am not sure of the membership for the whole of the Republic but membership for the Western Province is in the vicinity of 800. Our church does mission work. The function of the organisation consists of missionary work and evangelistic meetings. We adhere strictly to the teaching and example of Christ. We spread no literature of any kind and members are encouraged to abide strictly by the scriptures. Our members of the church gather together in their respective organs every Sunday morning and evening and Wednesday evening for the study of the scriptures. Members residing in the various suburbs gather together in an appointed home in the suburb. We have no collections. Mr. H. Hall residing at 3 Glenroy, Pinelands, is one of the members in whose home church gatherings are held.

I know Mr. Demitrio Tsafendas. I met him during last year i.e. shortly after he arrived in the Caps. He told me he was residing at Mr. Daniels in Bellville and attending services that were held in the coloured homes in Bellville South. I then asked him seeing he was a Greek or Portuguese, whether he considered himself a European or a coloured man. He told me he classified himself as coloured. I asked him if he had his identity card and he said this was being attended to in Pretoria. I saw Tsafendas periodically after that, but I had no discussions with him.

In the early part of 1966 Tsafendas came to see me at Mr. Slater's home. He then told me that he has work on the Marine Diamond Corporation boats. The subject of his race came up again and he then showed me a small slip of paper, which was typed, with his name and address and identity number. I told him then that it appears that he was classified as a European and that he must on that account withdraw from worship gatherings in the coloured homes. He told me he had a room in Observatory and I then asked him to attend services in Mr. Hall's house in Pinelands.

¹¹⁴³ James Johnston statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

I do not know Tsafendas very well and the longest discussion I had with him was for about 10 minutes at each occasion. He told me he was anxious to get married especially to some coloured girl. I told him he could not do that whilst classified as a European. He told me this could be done by going to Lourenço Marques or Basutoland. I told him it was entirely against the law and advised him strongly against it. Tsafendas never discussed politics with me. He did tell me about his travels and his knowledge of different languages.

After he had left Marine Diamond Corporation, Tsafendas came to see me and said that he would be seeking other employment but did not mention seeking employment in the House of Assembly. He never discussed his reasons for moving among the coloured people, nor did he give me to understand that he was more sympathetic towards the coloureds than towards the Europeans.

The Sunday night before the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd I saw Tsafendas at a service in Mr. Hall's home in Pinelands, but he did not discuss anything or take part in the service that night. He appeared to be perfectly normal. I must say I did not speak to him, apart from saying good night. I did think Tsafendas to be slightly unbalanced and that he seemed to have a mysterious background but otherwise he appeared to be all-right.

Statement taken by Maj. D.J. Rossouw.

FRIDAY, 7 OCTOBER 1966

STATEMENTS

FELIX GEORGE MILES¹¹⁴⁴

European male, 56 years, Messenger at the House of Assembly, Parliament House, Cape Town.

States:

I have been in the employ of the House of Assembly as a messenger since the 1st of August, 1966. I applied for a messenger's position at the House of Assembly in person about a month prior to the 1st of August, 1966. I received a written notification on 29/7/66 to the effect that I must be available on 1/8/66 for an interview.

I arrived at the House of Assembly at about 8 am on 1/8/66. There were about 6 or 7 of us who waited to be interviewed that morning, amongst others TSAFENDAS. We applicants were having a general conversation among ourselves whilst we were waiting for our turn to be interviewed. I never spoke to TSAFENDAS. I do remember him saying to someone or other that he is able to speak seven languages and that he expects to get a position as an interpreter. Both Tsafendas and I were accepted that morning and commenced duties that same day. Tsafendas and I were put to perform duties at the main entrance. I never spoke to him on that day.

The next day I was sent to work at Mr Burger's office, where I still am to this day. I do not know what happened to Tsafendas after this or what his duties entailed. I saw him occasionally after this but never bothered to talk to him. Between 2.10 and 2.15 pm on 6/9/66 I was standing in Mr Burger's office. The bell had just started to ring notifying the members that the House is about to start. I saw Tsafendas entering the office. I do not know where he had come from. He started talking to me and said that he had not seen me for a long time. I told him that I had been away for the long week-end. I was under the impression that he had come to collect newspapers. It was the usual time for various messengers to collect the newspapers for the individual members. I told him that the newspapers have not been delivered yet. At that moment, one of the members entered my office to collect the money for a cheque I had cashed for him.

¹¹⁴⁴ Felix George Miles statement to the police, 7 October 1966. K150, Vol. 2, File: 1. NASA.

Tsafendas must have left the office when the member entered. I cannot say where Tsafendas went after he left Mr Burger's office. After I had given the member his money, the phone rang. I had been on the telephone for about a minute and had just put the receiver down when I heard people shouting at the door leading to the chamber. People were shouting that an ambulance should be requisitioned. I tried to get through to the ambulance but all the lines were engaged. I learned afterwards that Dr. Verwoerd had been stabbed by Tsafendas. When Tsafendas had been with us in Mr Burger's office I did not notice anything unusual about his clothing or behaviour. I consider it rather strange that Tsafendas should have talked to me that day. I have never spoken to him before except to greet him.

Statement taken by ... (Indecipherable signature) Comm. of Oaths

EDMUND GEORGE STOLLENKAMP¹¹⁴⁵

White, Male. 7 Allgate Street, Woodstock.

I'm a night watchman employed by the Larpens Agency. I serve at the ships in Table Bay docks and remember the ship Eleni. The last night of my service, I remember well. I served from 7am on Sunday 04/09/66 until 9am Monday, 05/09/66. My shift was over at 7am, but that morning I could not come down from the ship because the gangplank (drawbridge) was disabled and was drawn up. The ship was also moved and I had to wait until the bridge was lowered. The day guard, Maile, arrived shortly after 7am and waited below. He had the morning newspaper with him. After waiting below for a long time, he talked to me. He told me that Dr. Verwoerd is dead. Next to me stood a young man who worked on the ship. This man's mother was on the quay below. I told Maile he should not say everything. (I thought he made a joke.) He said Dr. Verwoerd - the Prime Minister. I asked the young man next to me if he had heard that Dr. Verwoerd is dead. The young man then spoke with his mother in Greek and I could not understand what he was talking about. I forgot the incident and later went home. Maile did not tell me that the woman said that Dr.

¹¹⁴⁵ Edmund George Stollenkamp statement to the police, 7 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

The Police Investigation

Friday, 7 October 1966

Verwoerd is dead. He made me understand he read it in the newspaper. I am convinced that I understood correctly. I cannot say at what time the woman came there. The young man pointed to a man who was with his mother and said his father was dead and that man is going to become his father. There was no other woman with them.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505. Commissioner of oaths.

MONDAY, 10 OCTOBER 1966

STATEMENTS

REGINALD THOMAS ARTHUR DANIELS¹¹⁴⁶

Adult European male, Cape Town.

I am a European male resides at above address. I am not in possession of a Passport and have never been outside the Union of South Africa, since my date of birth. Demetrio Tsafendas is unknown to me, and I have never seen him before. I don't know any doctor by the name of Ahlhelm and also never received letters from outside the RSA.

(Signed) R. Daniels

Cape Town. 10¹¹⁴⁷/10/66. 11 am.

Statement taken by me (Indecipherable signature.)

¹¹⁴⁶ Reginald Thomas Arthur Daniels statement to the police, 10 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹¹⁴⁷ The date could also be the 18th of October as the number is handwritten and it is not very clear.

WEDNESDAY, 12 OCTOBER 1966

THE ELENI

This was a crucial day for the investigation, when, exactly one month and six days after the assassination, the South African police finally interviewed the crew of the tanker Eleni. The vessel had arrived in Cape Town on the 24th of July 1966 and remained docked there until the 3rd of September 1966, sailing out just three days before Dr. Verwoerd's assassination.¹¹⁴⁸ Tsafendas visited the ship daily and became very friendly with the crew.¹¹⁴⁹

Tsafendas had testified to the police, as seen in his two statements of the 11th and the 19th of September, that he visited the Eleni every day while she was docked in Cape Town. The crew's testimonies were therefore important in determining Tsafendas's movements in the days before the assassination. Tsafendas had bought a gun from two members of the crew and was planning to escape on board the Eleni. Perhaps more importantly, Reginald Robert Maile, a ship guard, had testified to the police that three days before the assassination he was asked by Maria Kokkinidou, a woman who often visited the Eleni, where her son had been hired on a temporary basis, if "Dr. Verwoerd is dead?" Edmund George Stollenkamp, the ship's night watchman, had also participated in the conversation. As we will see in the chapter on the Commission of Enquiry, the Eleni would have a prominent role in the investigation. The Commission of Enquiry had a file specifically on the Eleni and the Report contains a big section of ten long paragraphs about it.

The report of the Commission of Enquiry declared that the statements by crew members (four of which are appended below) were taken on October 12, 1966, in Venice, Italy. Thirteen of seventeen crew members interviewed by the author confirmed that they, along with all other Eleni crewmen, were questioned by the South African police in Venice (The reason the other four were not questioned will be discussed shortly), though no-one remembers the exact date. However, only four statements (plus one sheet of testimony by Dimitrios Zafiriadis) from the thirty-eight men interviewed, were found in the National Archives of South Africa.

¹¹⁴⁸ Michael N. Fountotos statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol 3, File Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

¹¹⁴⁹ Reginald Robert Maile statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA; Peter Protoulis statement to the police, 28 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Leer W.D. 10/10/ 4102 oor Stafendas. NASA.

The report of the Commission of Enquiry talks extensively about the importance of the Eleni. About that specific incident, it states: “It is impossible to establish with any certainty exactly what was said (in the Eleni about Dr. Verwoerd’s death). However, there is no doubt that Dr. Verwoerd’s death was mentioned on that morning three days before his death. What makes these incidents more than a coincidence is the fact that this was said at the ship which was visited daily for almost 40 days by the man who killed Dr. Verwoerd, where he bought a pistol and tried to buy a knife which he wanted to use —according to at least one statement made by him subsequently— to kill Dr. Verwoerd. The fact that Dr. Verwoerd’s death was mentioned at that ship was probably more than pure coincidence.”¹¹⁵⁰

In reference to the above incident, the Commission of Enquiry asked Major Rossouw:

COMMISSION: Another thing is that there is a lot of evidence that on the Friday morning BEFORE the murder people had been running back and forth screaming to one another that Dr. Verwoerd had been murdered – are you aware of this?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes I am aware of that ...¹¹⁵¹

Taking all the above under consideration, it is logical that the police would interview all the crew and sixteen of the seventeen members of the crew interviewed by the author declared that the entire crew was indeed interviewed by the South African police in Venice. The seventeenth sailor interviewed by the author, Dionisis Lallis, met Tsafendas in Cape Town, but he does not remember being questioned by the police nor even of being in Venice at the time. It is very possible that he was not questioned, as he was almost certainly one of those crew members who were replaced by other Greek seamen after the Eleni left Cape Town. Lallis remembers Tsafendas clearly, but has no recollection of anything else.¹¹⁵²

Two men, Vasilis Perselis, a steward and a cousin of Emanuel Perselis who was already working on the Eleni, and Ilias Kokkinos, assistant cook, were with the Eleni in Venice at the time, but they were not questioned by the police because they were not present in Cape Town. They joined the Eleni in Venice as crew replacements. However, they do remember their shipmates being questioned by the police over several hours.¹¹⁵³ Emanuel Sakellaridis was captain of the Eleni up to April 1966, when Michael N. Fountotos took over ¹¹⁵⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 86.

¹¹⁵¹ Major Daniel Jacobus Rossouw testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

¹¹⁵² Dionisios Lallis in a personal interview, 19 June 2015.

¹¹⁵³ Ilias Kokkinos in a personal interview, 30 August 2014; Emanuel Perselis in a personal interview, 30 November 2015.

and was very familiar with the crew. He was not present in Venice or in Cape Town, but said in a personal interview with the author that he was told by Captain Fountotos and several members of the crew that everyone who met Tsafendas in Cape Town was questioned in Venice.¹¹⁵⁴ The fact that the police recorded the few remarks made by Dimitris Zafiriadis, a member of the crew who refused to give a formal statement, suggests that the police must have recorded all the other crewmen's answers or remarks, too. However, as stated before, only four of these statements were found.

THE ELENI AFTER CAPE TOWN AND BEFORE VENICE

According to fourteen of the thirty-eight men who were on board the Eleni in Cape Town, a radio message was transmitted to the ship from the Greek Ministry of Shipping a few days after they left Cape Town and while they were still at sea, though no one remembers the exact date. The message said that the South African police wanted to speak to them urgently regarding the South African Prime Minister's assassination by someone who had visited the Eleni and bought a gun from a member of the crew. The Ministry asked everyone to cooperate to the utmost with the South African authorities. According to Grigoris Pouftis, the Eleni's radio operator, the South African police appeared desperate to speak to the crew and the Greek Ministry even asked the captain to return to Cape Town, so the police could question them there. After consulting with the tanker's owners, Captain Fountotos suggested to the Ministry that it made more sense to meet with the police in Mina Al-Ahmadi port in Kuwait, which was the tanker's destination, as it would take half as long to get there as to return to Cape Town.¹¹⁵⁵

According to the fourteen seamen, everyone panicked when they heard about the assassination. The captain gathered the crew together and told them they were going to be questioned by the South African police in Kuwait. He urged them to be truthful and tell the police everything they knew about Tsafendas, adding that Tsafendas himself, under questioning, would have disclosed all of his activities, including his association with them. Fearing that the ship would be searched, Kambouris and Vasilakis retrieved the banned books about apartheid which Tsafendas had given them and threw them overboard. Zafiriadis thought they were overreacting and just hid his books.¹¹⁵⁶ Zafiriadis also urged his crewmates not to co-operate with the police since this would be tantamount to supporting apartheid and also could incriminate Tsafendas, who he admired for what he had done. Captain Fountotos, though he opposed apartheid, told Zafiriadis and the crew that they would be in trouble if they did not co-operate and he urged Zafiriadis to stop trying to influence his colleagues. Captain Fountotos reminded the crew that many civilians were on board Eleni while they were docked in Cape Town and that the police would already know about Tsafendas's relationship with them.¹¹⁵⁷

¹¹⁵⁴ Emanuel Sakellaridis in a personal interview, 19 January 2014.

¹¹⁵⁵ Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009.

Every day until they reached Kuwait, the crew discussed what they would tell the police. They believed that Tsafendas would have told everything under torture. Kambouris, Vasilakis, Kantas and Zafiriadis did not want to testify to the police at all, seeing them as representatives of apartheid. The crew held several meetings to decide what should be said and to agree a joint approach.¹¹⁵⁸ Vasilis Perselis and other crew members teased young Mavronas about selling a gun to Tsafendas, even though they knew he could not have killed him with it. At the time, they were not aware that Dr. Verwoerd had been stabbed to death.¹¹⁵⁹

Alachiotis, Aspras, Kantas, Billis, Pouftis and Zafiriadis decided not to reveal that they sang Communist songs with Tsafendas, since this would expose them as Communists and possibly cost them their jobs. Captain Fountotos knew that some of his crew were Communists, but did not care and probably did not know about their singing with Tsafendas. According to Alachiotis, Billis, Vasilakis, Kantas, Perselis, Mastromanolis and Pouftis, the majority of the crew were left-wing and quite a few were Communists. Most of those who were not left wingers had no interest in politics and only three-four were rightists or royalists. The Communists knew who the royalists were; they were very careful with them and never discussed politics with them.¹¹⁶⁰

¹¹⁵⁶ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

¹¹⁵⁷ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

¹¹⁵⁸ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

¹¹⁵⁹ Nicolas Mavronas in a personal interview, 25 February 2019; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015.

¹¹⁶⁰ Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Emmanuel Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

That period, late-1966, was a tense one in Greek politics. The wounds of the Greek Civil War were still open and the nation was only months away from a military coup that would herald a seven-year military dictatorship. Most important, the Greek Communist Party was illegal and Communists were watched and prosecuted. Informers were everywhere, spying on political suspects and reporting their activities to the police. The singing of Communist songs had taken place on an evening where none of the right-wingers was on board and it involved only the Communists. Since it would have been impossible for the police to know that such thing occurred, they decided not to reveal it.

The other seamen who had discussed politics with Tsafendas, decided not to reveal the fact, or at least to downplay it. They thought this would be better for them, and many knew little about politics anyway. Billis, Kantas and Zafiriadis decided to say nothing about the books Tsafendas gave them unless they were asked directly. Zafiriadis was adamant that he would not testify because he did not want to incriminate Tsafendas.¹¹⁶¹

An important issue was whether they should tell the police that Tsafendas had taken them to the township in Cape Town. Tsafendas himself had said the police had informers in most of these places. Captain Fountotos, who was aware of their visit, said they should mention it to the police. What's more, most of the crew knew about it and keeping it secret would have been next to impossible. They therefore decided to be open about their visit, saying they just wanted to see how Africans lived and perhaps buy some African souvenirs. There was also the question of sex; some seamen had slept with African women, which was forbidden by apartheid. Tsafendas had warned them against that, since the police had "ears and spies everywhere." The crew decided to take their chances and not mention it.¹¹⁶²

A crucial issue for those who had taken part in it was the discussion about justifiable homicide. On his last night aboard the tanker, Tsafendas had proposed that it was morally justifiable to kill a tyrant and that Dr. Verwoerd came into that category. Whether or not to tell the police about this discussion divided opinion. A lot of the men had been present, including some civilians. Aspras, Kantas and Pouftis believed they should mention it because it was important and the chances were Tsafendas had already told the police. Alachiotis and Billis disagreed, fearing such a topic might get them into trouble and considering it was only a theoretical discussion. The issue was argued about for days. As for Tsafendas's revelation about “playing the fool” to avoid service in the Portuguese army, this was not discussed. No one thought of it as they considered it to be unimportant and irrelevant. By the time the Eleni reached Mina Al-Ahmadi, opinion was still divided. However, this proved irrelevant since the South African police were not there.

¹¹⁶¹ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

¹¹⁶² Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

After the ship left Kuwait, they did not return to the issue, thinking the police would no longer want to see them. Fifteen of the men interviewed by the author said they were not told they would be interviewed in Venice. None of the crew remembers the exact date of the interviews, but according to the report of the Commission of Enquiry, it was October 12.¹¹⁶³ Early that morning, while the tanker was docked in Venice, South African policemen went on board. They wore civilian clothes and were accompanied by an official from a Greek consulate somewhere in Italy¹¹⁶⁴ who translated for those who did not speak English. He was perhaps also intended to demonstrate the Greek Government’s willingness to assist in the matter. Captain Fountotos told his crew that he had only just been informed and asked them to co-operate with the police. Some of the crew believed the police deliberately kept them in the dark so they could not prepare their answers.¹¹⁶⁵

The number of policemen involved in the questioning was probably three, though this is not certain. Six of the men said three while the remaining nine could not remember. However, all say the interviews were conducted on a one-to-one basis, that is, three policemen simultaneously interviewed three witnesses. As soon as the interview with one man was completed, another took his place.

The consular officer advised the crewmen to tell the truth and disclose everything they knew about Tsafendas. He repeatedly stated that the case was almost closed and the investigators knew everything about Tsafendas anyway. He said Tsafendas had told them about his time on the tanker, and warned that the men they would get into trouble, possibly charged as accessories, if they lied or held anything back. He said the Greek Government was co-operating fully with the South African authorities and the Government was asking them to do the same. Some of the men said their consular representative looked more “threatening” than the policemen.¹¹⁶⁶ He said Tsafendas was not Greek, but Mozambican, but that he had ¹¹⁶³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 78.

¹¹⁶⁴ None of the sailors remembers from which Consulate he came from.

¹¹⁶⁵ Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Emmanuel Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

¹¹⁶⁶ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

caused Greeks in South Africa to be attacked by South Africans who considered them responsible for Dr. Verwoerd's death.¹¹⁶⁷

According to the sailors interviewed by the author, every crewman who was on the Eleni in Cape Town had met Tsafendas, including the captain, and was therefore questioned. Two men, Emanuel Perselis and Elias Kokkinos, were not interviewed because they were not on the ship in Cape Town, having joined in Venice. Dionisis Lallis who had met Tsafendas was also not questioned, probably because he was not present in Venice.

The crew said everyone was asked some standard questions, such as, "How did you meet Tsafendas? What did he do? What did he talk about? What was your impression of him? Did he discuss politics? Did he say anything about the Prime Minister? When did he come to the tanker and why? Did you notice anything strange about him?" They wanted to know everything Tsafendas had said to them and they asked about the sale of the gun. According to the sailors who were interviewed by the author and the police, the policemen used pens to make notes, unlike the police in South Africa, who used portable typewriters. Some of the men remember being asked to sign their statement. According to the sailors, the interviews started early in the morning and lasted until late in the afternoon and lasted between twenty and thirty minutes each.¹¹⁶⁸ This is confirmed by the fact that the statements carried times between 10.30 a.m. and 4.10 p.m.

¹¹⁶⁷ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

¹¹⁶⁸ Panteleimon Aspiotis in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Emmanuel Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

THE STATEMENTS FOUND

The following are the statements from the Eleni crew found in the archives:

EMANUIL MASTROMANOLIS¹¹⁶⁹

White male, 37 years, Kasos Island, Greece.

I am the bosun on the Eleni. The Eleni was docked at Cape Town from 24th July, 1966 to 3rd September, 1966. While in Cape Town Harbour a man Demitri Tsafendas came on board to have lunch and to take the crew to a shop in town I did not go with him to town. He was accompanied by a man about 37 years, thin build, with bold hair, little hair on top of his head with a strip of hair in the middle, already grey.

Demitri came on board almost every day. About a week before sailing from Cape Town he asked us on board if we can sell him a pistol or knife. I knew that Nicolas had a pistol which I considered as a toy. I got the pistol from Nicolas and sold it to Demitri for 30 dollars and gave Nicolas 20 dollars.

The day 3rd September, 1966 we left Cape Town, Demitri came on board and—worked to get his money back because he claimed that the pistol did not work. We did not give his money back and he left with the pistol. It is a black pistol with a white handle. The companion of Demitri is unknown to me. I cannot say of what Nationality he is.

10.30 a.m. 12.10.1966.

EMANUIL MASTROMANOLIS IN A PERSONAL INTERVIEW¹¹⁷⁰

As we see from his statement, the police interview with Mastromanolis appeared to focus solely on the gun, but he told the author that discussion of the pistol lasted less than five minutes and the rest of the time was spent answering questions about Tsafendas's character and activities. Mastromanolis said he was questioned by a South African policeman for "around twenty-thirty minutes." He was first asked how he met Tsafendas and about his time with him. He then brought up the matter of the gun without being asked since he was aware the police knew about it.

¹¹⁶⁹ Emanuil Mastromanolis statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol 3, File Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

¹¹⁷⁰ Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016.

Mastromanolis acknowledged that his statement is accurate and was what he told the policeman. He claims, however, that he lied in saying he thought the gun was a toy, because he was actually “under the impression that Mavronas’s pistol was a real one.” He had heard from Perselis that Mavronas had just bought a gun while in Cape Town and he was given the impression that it was real since Perselis also assumed it was real. Mavronas, who was only seventeen, had boasted about buying the gun and believed it was authentic, although some of the crew considered he had been fooled by the seller.

Mastromanolis thought that Mavronas might be willing to sell it to Tsafendas for a quick profit and only found out that the gun was fake when he suggested this to the boy. Mavronas proposed selling the gun to Tsafendas anyway, since Tsafendas had told everyone he needed a pistol to “scare people off,” not to kill anyone, and it could do such a job. Mastromanolis agreed reluctantly, considering it would meet Tsafendas’s requirement for a weapon just “to scare people off.” Mastromanolis claims that he could not have told the police he was willing to sell Tsafendas a real firearm, which was why he called it a toy while hiding his impression that it was real.

After the Eleni left Cape Town for Kuwait, according to Mastromanolis and Perselis, they and Mavronas discussed the issue of the gun’s sale to Tsafendas. Their initial thought was to tell the police that they believed Tsafendas was looking for a fake gun since he had told them that he wanted to “scare people off.” Eventually, they decided to say they intended to play a joke on Tsafendas as they believed he would not be able to tell whether or not the gun was real.

Mastromanolis was surprised and relieved when he realised that the policemen were less interested in the gun than in Tsafendas’s activities and character. Very early in the questioning, he was asked about a comment which Tsafendas attributed to him in his statement, that “the South Africans need a good whipping.” Mastromanolis was surprised and concluded that Tsafendas must have talked extensively to the police since this was something he had said after Tsafendas took some of the seamen to the township in Cape Town. He denied to the policeman making such a remark, but he admitted to the author that Tsafendas had told the truth to the police and that he did make such a statement after they left the township. Mastromanolis does not remember if he was asked or if he told the police about the visit to the township.

Mastromanolis said the rest of the questioning was about the sort of person Tsafendas was, and realising that the police knew all about his frequent visits to the tanker and what Tsafendas talked about, he told them everything he knew. He does not remember everything he told the police, but he described Tsafendas as being a “normal, intelligent person.” He remembered Tsafendas as “a kind man, very much into politics and very well-informed about what was happening around the world,” and he believes this is what he told the police. He is certain that he was not asked whether Tsafendas had mentioned a tapeworm and is adamant that Tsafendas was sane. “I’ve met many men, all around the world, and some of them were mad. I can say for sure that this man was not insane. There was nothing ever to make me believe that he might be insane. It was impossible for him to have been insane.” He clearly remembers the police asking if Tsafendas had said anything about killing Dr. Verwoerd. Mastromanolis replied, “No, never. If he had said such thing, I would have gone to the police.”

During his interview with the author, Mastromanolis recognised his signature on the hand-written statement found in the archives. This statement was later typed out and the typed copy was found in the archives attached to the hand-written statement. However, Mastromanolis is adamant that his interview with the police lasted about “twenty-thirty minutes,” and that he said much more than appeared in his statement, although he can no longer recall precisely what else he told his interrogator. However, he is certain that he referred to Tsafendas’s state of mind and his sanity, and to the “good whipping” comment which Tsafendas attributed to him.

Given that the transcription of the interview focussed almost exclusively on the gun, which may have taken a maximum of five minutes, the questions that require answers are: What other topics were discussed and why were they omitted? Since Mastromanolis is not sure what exactly he told the police, it is difficult to establish why this information was omitted. It is also possible that the policeman who questioned him did not consider Mastromanolis’s opinion about Tsafendas’s sanity and his denial of Tsafendas’s attribution of the “good whipping” remark to be of sufficient importance to be included.

NICOLAS MAVRONAS¹¹⁷¹

White male, 17 years, Sinies Village, Corfu Island, Greece.

I am a Galley boy working on the Eleni. Eleni was docked in Cape Town from 24.7.66 to 3.9.66. I was in possession of a small pistol which I considered as a toy. I got it from a young man which I met in Cape Town namely Mr. D. Ravell, Phone 779820 (friend of his), 25 Haroldene Rd., LANSDOWNE, CAPE.

A man Dimitrio came to our ship almost every day while in Cape docks. He took some of the crew to a shop on shore. I did not go with him. About the 26 - 27 August, 1966 Dimitrio talked to some of us on board and said he wanted to buy a pistol or a knife. He told us that he get a job at a Hotel and will be paid £2000 (two thousand pounds) at this job. He needed a weapon for his protection. We considered him foolish and decided to joke with him. So we sold this pistol to him for 30 dollars. The bosun took 10 dollars and I got 20 dollars. The last day on 3.9.1966 Dimitrio came on board and told me that the pistol is not working and I must give back his money. I refused. He then asked me to sell him an automatic knife. I told him that I don't have a knife to sell. He then asked the bosun to sell him an automatic knife the bosun said "Oh leave me alone, do you think I am a Cowboy." Dimitrio then went to the galley to eat. The ship left the same day and I did not see Dimitrio again. He took the pistol with him. When he complained to me about the pistol he said, I am a poor man. I work a week to get this 30 dollars, do you expect me to lose it. He told us that he joined the Greek army during the war and that he is an expert shot.

1.20 p.m. 12.10.1966.

COMMENTS ON NICOLAS MAVRONAS'S STATEMENT AND HIS OWN COMMENTS IN A PERSONAL INTERVIEW¹¹⁷²

Nicolas Mavronas today, although he remembers Tsafendas quite well, does not remember his statement or what he told the police. He told the author that although he used to see Tsafendas every day, he had not associated with him and had not had a proper conversation with him, apart from a general, casual greeting. Mavronas confirms the sequence of events regarding the sale of the gun, as was described to the author by the other members of the Eleni. Mavronas said that he was “terrified” once he heard that Tsafendas had killed the South African Prime Minister, and that the crew made things even worse by teasing him about the fact that he had sold his gun to him.

¹¹⁷¹ Nicolas Mavronas statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol 3, File Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

¹¹⁷² Nicolas Mavronas in a personal interview, 25 February 2019.

According to Vasilis Perselis, who was a good friend of Mavronas, Tsafendas told them that he was working at a hotel and that he needed a firearm for protection and to “scare people off.”¹¹⁷³ Michael Vasilakis confirmed Perselis’s statement to the author.

Mastromanolis does not remember Tsafendas saying anything about a hotel, but he remembers him saying he needed a gun to “scare people off.”¹¹⁷⁴ Mastromanolis claims that he did indeed tell Tsafendas “Do you take me for a cowboy!” when Tsafendas asked if he could find him another pistol or a knife.¹¹⁷⁵

Billis, Kantas, Vasilakis, Kambouris, Mastromanolis and Perselis all say that Mavronas’s comment that they “decided to joke” with Tsafendas was inaccurate. They were all initially under the impression that Mavronas’s gun was real, as this is what he told them. They said Mavronas was showing off his gun unaware that it was fake. Kambouris was the first to find out that the gun was not real. Kambouris believes, though he is not 100 per cent sure, that Mavronas bought the gun under the impression that it was genuine and was fooled by its owner. Mastromanolis claimed that he only realised the gun was fake when he asked Mavronas to sell it to Tsafendas. Mavronas then admitted that the gun was not real, but still offered to sell it to Tsafendas, believing that it would be “good enough to scare people off.” All the above witnesses believe that Mavronas wanted to downplay the importance of the sale of the gun and wanted to turn it into a joke on Tsafendas. Mavronas does not remember making such a comment or the reasons why he might have made it; he states, however, that he certainly did not consider Tsafendas to have been foolish and that his colleagues’ explanation may very well be correct.

During his questioning, Mavronas said Tsafendas told him he had joined the Greek army and was an expert shot, though he does not state which war. The last war in Greece was the Civil War. According to six of the Eleni crew interviewed by the author, Tsafendas told them he had joined the Democratic Army of Greece during the Greek Civil War, not the ¹¹⁷³ Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015.

¹¹⁷⁴ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

¹¹⁷⁵ Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016.

“Greek army.”¹¹⁷⁶ The South African policeman who questioned Mavronas seems to have misunderstood him, probably unaware that there had been a civil war in Greece and thought he was referring to the Second World War. The full name of the DSE was Democratic Army of Greece. During the Second World War it was called ELAS and some people continued to refer to the DSE as ELAS, since it was basically the same force. ELAS in Greek means Greece, so when Mavronas said the Greek Army, he would have meant ELAS or the DSE, certainly not the regular Greek Army. The six seamen who participated in the conversation remember clearly that Tsafendas told them that he had served with U.S. Liberty Ships during the Second World War and with the DSE during the Greek Civil War.¹¹⁷⁷ Mavronas is not in a position to shed more light on the case as he does not remember his comment or what Tsafendas told him.

The witnesses interviewed by the author do not remember Tsafendas telling them he was “an expert shot,” though they could not swear that he did not say it. The fact that Mavronas mentions the Greek Army is nevertheless important as other seamen said they were asked if Tsafendas had served in any army or if he had any military training. It is thus likely that Mavronas was questioned on this matter rather than volunteering the information. Mavronas is not in a position to shed more light on this matter as he does not remember his comment or what Tsafendas told him.

Although Mavronas did not associate with Tsafendas, he remembers him as a “normal, ordinary man. It never crossed my mind that he might not be of sound mind. None of the other guys mentioned anything being wrong with him either. He looked like a normal man.”

¹¹⁷⁶ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

¹¹⁷⁷ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

MICHAEL N. FOUNTOTOS¹¹⁷⁸

Athens, Greece

I am the Captain of the Eleni. The Eleni lost its rudder and was docked in Cape Town for repairs from 24.7.1966 to 3.9.1966. I saw this man Dimitrio Tsafendas on board of Eleni in Cape Town. He often came on board to eat and took some of the crew to town. He came to me to enquire what was wrong with the ship. He suggested that he will get an engineer to repair the rudder. I thought that he must be foolish because it is not a simple repair but a major repair to fix a rudder. So I merely dismissed him.

The last day on 3rd September, 1966 he came to me and complained that he bought a pistol from one of the crew and the thing is not working and now he wanted me to give him the money and deducted it from the boys pay. I was very busy and he was a nuisance to me, so I told him to go and arrange with the boy because I had nothing to do with their business. So he left. I considered this man as childish. His conversation is normal but very childish. How can he come and tell me that he will get an engineer to repair a rudder, which in the dry dock costs me £30.000. He must be joking. He did not appear to me to be a criminal, his appearance was friendly.

COMMENTS ABOUT CAPTAIN FOUNTOTOS

According to Peter Protoulis, a food supplier to the Eleni while she lay in Cape Town, Captain Fountotos was a “real gentleman, an exceptional and dignified man.”¹¹⁷⁹ The crew also characterised him as a “gentleman, a compassionate, good, quiet man,” who was very attentive to his crew and cared about them.¹¹⁸⁰ None of the crew knew his political stance, but they believed that he was leaning towards the right-centre. However, he was a democratic man and strongly opposed apartheid, and when he discovered what Tsafendas had done, he said, “I feel so sorry for him. Who knows what they are doing to him right now! God help him ...”¹¹⁸¹ However, he insisted that his crew must tell “the truth and everything they knew ¹¹⁷⁸ Michael N. Fountotos statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol 3, File Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA. Michael Fountotos has died.

¹¹⁷⁹ Peter Protoulis in a personal interview, 28 May 2016.

¹¹⁸⁰ Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Dionisios Lallis in a personal interview, 19 June 2015.

¹¹⁸¹ Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009.

about Tsafendas as they might get into trouble if they didn't.”¹¹⁸²

DIMITRIOS ZAFIRIADIS¹¹⁸³

Donkeyman, Eleni.

This man did not want to make a statement. However, he said the following:

Dimitrio Tsafendas said that he wanted to buy a pistol or knife because he travels through a Bantu area to get to his house. He needed the weapon for self-protection. He laughed at Tsafendas and said that he should get a knife from the chef because it is a good weapon. He handed a ticket over of the business to which Tsafendas took him and other members for shopping. Tsafendas was always accompanied by a man who acted as driver. About 35-40 years old, slender, slightly bald with a line of hair in the middle of his head, slightly grey, wearing glasses. They drove a grey Volkswagen station wagon. They never talked politics.

NEW INFORMATION REGARDING ZAFIRIADIS

Zafiriadis died a few years ago and was not interviewed by the author. However, he was a close friend of crew members Nicolas Billis, George Kantas and Panteleimon Speis, all of whom were interviewed by the author. According to these three, Zafiriadis was a Communist and a very good friend of Tsafendas. Zafiriadis was almost always present when Tsafendas was on board and was certainly there when Tsafendas told the crew about pretending to be mad in order to not serve in the Portuguese Army, when he made the spitting gesture towards Dr. Verwoerd and when he said that it would be justifiable to kill Dr. Verwoerd because he was a tyrant.

Zafiriadis was one of the few seamen who agreed with Tsafendas's belief in a justified assassination and strongly supported his argument. Zafiriadis was also the one who ¹¹⁸² Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

¹¹⁸³ Dimitrios Zafiriadis testimony to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol 3, File Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

was most affected by the visit to the township.¹¹⁸⁴ He supported Tsafendas's suggestion that they should not buy anything while in South Africa, apart from absolute necessities, so as not to contribute the country's economy. Zafiriadis clearly admired Tsafendas and urged his crewmates to refuse to talk to the police in order not to incriminate him.¹¹⁸⁵

According to Billis, Kantas, Speis and Vasilakis, Zafiriadis refused to answer any questions about Tsafendas. The South African police interrogator informed the Greek Consul and the Consul tried to change his mind. However, Zafiriadis held to his position and refused to give a statement. The Consul was unhappy and asked Captain Fountotos to intervene, but the captain declined, stating that what he chose to do was up to Zafiriadis.¹¹⁸⁶

Eventually, Zafiriadis agreed to comment about the pistol and the knife since his name had been mentioned by Tsafendas with regard to the pistol. Zafiriadis claimed in this statement that he and Tsafendas never talked politics, a claim that was rejected by Vasilakis, Kambouris, Alachiotis, Kantas, Speis, Pouftis and Billis, who said Zafiriadis was always present when Tsafendas and the crew discussed politics. These men assumed that Zafiriadis lied in order not to incriminate Tsafendas by stating that he was Communist and anti-apartheid. Zafiriadis also kept a book about apartheid which Tsafendas gave him. After the questioning in Venice ended, some shipmates joked with him that he might make a lot of money in a few years by selling Tsafendas's book.¹¹⁸⁷

CONSTANTINOS KOKKINIDIS¹¹⁸⁸

I am a Greek born. My mother is Maria Kokkinidis Olympic CRT. 14, Green Point, Cape Town. My sister is Themis Zagorauou, Grape Vine, 204 Esselen Street, Sunnyside, Pretoria. My mother went to South Africa in 1964. I joined my mother in South Africa July, 1964. I stayed with my mother in Pretoria for 2 years. My mother and I left for Cape Town, July, ¹¹⁸⁴ None of the sailors remembers the name of the places or whether it was a township. The sailors are referring to it as 'village' and 'area' where Black South African lived.

¹¹⁸⁵ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 November 2013; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012;

¹¹⁸⁶ Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 November 2013; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

¹¹⁸⁷ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 November 2013; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

¹¹⁸⁸ Constantinos Kokkinidis statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol 3, File Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

1966. My mother is a widow. I lost my father in 1961.

I was looking for work and so it came that my mother and I went to the Eleni in Cape Town docks. Mrs Vogianou - Caretaker of the flats at Olympic CRT. 14, Green Point, Cape Town, took my mother and myself with her car to the Eleni to introduce us to the Captain because she knows the Captain and told us that he is from our country. We met the Captain and he invited us for dinner at a later date. The three of us came later and had dinner with the Captain and some other people. The Captain asked my mother whether I make enough money, she said that I make good money but I spend it all because of bad friends. He suggested that I came with him on the ship so I can save my money.

I came on board on the 1st August, 1966 and started work on the 2nd August, 1966. I am still on the Eleni. On the 3rd of September, 1966 the day when we left, I was on the ship when the night-watchman told me "Do you know what." I said no. He said "Dr. Verwoerd has been killed." I asked him who said so, he actually pointed to the day watchman and said "He told me." I turned around and spoke to my mother who was standing on the harbour, and told her that "Dr. Verwoerd has been killed." She was upset, and I asked the night-watchman, how did Dr. Verwoerd got killed, he asked the day-watchman again who answered in Afrikaans, the night-watchman said to me, no I did not hear properly nothing happened. So I told my mother that it is not true. Shortly after this the ship left Cape Town.

While in Cape Town docks I saw this Dimitrio Tsafendas he came on board but I never saw how he came to the docks. I did not see anybody coming with him. I did not take much notice of him and neither did I speak to him. My mother don't know him either. I don't know if Mrs. Vogianou knows him. I don't think that they know each other. My mother went to Pretoria in August by train to fetch my sister and Mr. Christos Chistodulu a friend of us. They came to Cape Town during August with Christos' car. I met this friend Christos in Katanga in the Congo. I am sure that Christos and Tsafendas don't know each other.

4.10 p.m. 12.10.1966.

COMMENTS ON KOKKINIDIS'S STATEMENT

Alachiotis and Billis told the author that Kokkinidis strongly urged the crewmen to tell the truth about Tsafendas, warning them of the brutality of the South African police and claiming they would already have made him tell them anything they wanted. He said, "You will go back to Greece, but I have to go back to South Africa.”¹¹⁸⁹ Kokkinidis was not present when the crew and Tsafendas sang Communist songs, or when Tsafendas made his spitting gesture when shown Dr. Verwoerd’s photo and he was probably unaware of their visit to the township. However, though no one remembers for sure, it is very possible Kokkinidis was at the table, or nearby, when the conversation regarding justifiable assassination took place and this is how the question of Dr. Verwoerd’s death being discussed on board began. We will examine his participation in the conversation regarding Dr. Verwoerd’s death in the chapter on the Commission of Enquiry.

INTERVIEWS OF ELENI SAILORS WITH THE AUTHOR

This is what the sailors the author interviewed had to say about their questioning:

CLEANTHES ALACHIOTIS

Alachiotis clearly remembers being interviewed in Venice. He was aged twenty-three and was terrified by the experience. On conclusion, he signed the record of his interview. At the start of questioning, he was asked to provide his address in Greece, which made him feel uncomfortable, thinking the police might want to talk to him again. This convinced him to be as accurate as possible.

Alachiotis says he remembers “that day very well.” He was, “like everyone else, taken by surprise,” because after Kuwait, he thought they had got away and were not going to be questioned. Alachiotis says the policeman who interviewed him was “a tough-looking guy,” but he turned out to be “very friendly and relaxed.” He says he told him the “truth and everything that had happened,” apart from singing Communist songs and the fact that Tsafendas had asked them to spend as little money as possible in South Africa. He explained how he met Tsafendas, described how he took the men to Mike’s Outfitters and to a church, and he mentioned the visit to the township. The policeman wanted to know more about this township, but Alachiotis did not remember its name and said they only went there to meet some friends of Tsafendas and buy some souvenirs from them. He did say that they had tea in a black family’s home.

Alachiotis also told the policeman that Tsafendas often spoke about his travels and about politics, but he did not understand what he was talking about since personally he had no interest in politics. He said he did not understand exactly what apartheid was, and he praised South Africa for its beauty. When asked if Tsafendas had said anything about the Prime Minister, Alachiotis replied that Tsafendas “did not like him much and called him ‘Hitler’s best student.’”⁶ Alachiotis was ready to mention the ‘Hitler’ remark because he believed, as they all did, that the police must have known about it since Tsafendas used the expression so often and so widely. Alachiotis clearly remembers being asked if Tsafendas had said anything about killing Dr. Verwoerd. He assumed that the policeman was referring to the conversation on the Eleni’s last night in Cape Town when Tsafendas argued that it would be justifiable to kill Dr. Verwoerd because he was a tyrant, while the murder of Prince Rwagasore was to be condemned because he was a democratically elected President. Therefore, Alachiotis told the whole story to the policeman, who showed great interest in it.

¹¹⁸⁹ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011.

Asked for his opinion about Tsafendas, Alachiotis could not remember exactly what he told the police, but believes that he must have told them he was a “harmless man, good-hearted, a quiet man ... very polite and well-mannered,” as this is the way he remembered him. When the policeman asked if he had noticed anything wrong with Tsafendas or that he might have been unbalanced, Alachiotis was surprised by the question and said, “No; he seemed 100 per cent normal.”

Alachiotis also said Tsafendas told the crew that “he had played the fool with the Portuguese army in order not to serve his military duty... I wasn’t going to mention that, but they asked me, ‘What were you talking about all these times?’ So I said that we often told stories from our army days and the policeman asked me if Tsafendas had served in the Greek army. I then told him what he had told us, that he had joined the Communists in the Civil War but had not served in the proper Greek Army, and that he had pretended to be mad in order to not serve in the Portuguese Army. I remember him laughing about it.” Other seamen told Alachiotis they were asked specifically whether Tsafendas had served in any army or if he had any military training.

As for the tapeworm, Alachiotis is certain that he was not asked about it. He was questioned about the gun, but he said that he had nothing to do with it and had only found out about it much later from the other guys. He remembers the policeman keeping notes while they were talking. At the conclusion of the interview, the policeman asked him to read over his statement, but he said that was “not necessary” and just signed it. Alachiotis says he was one of the first to be interviewed. When the interview finished, the policeman approached his two colleagues, who were interviewing other men, took them aside and told them something.¹¹⁹⁰

PANTELEIMON ASPIOTIS

Aspiotis remembers that every member of the crew was questioned in Venice and he himself was interviewed for about twenty twenty-five minutes. He does not remember whether he signed his statement or if he was asked for his address in Greece. He recalls that it took the police several hours to interview everyone, that there were probably three policemen and that a Greek consular officer acted as translator.

Aspiotis had a very good relationship with Tsafendas and remembers him taking the crew to a Greek shop and to a church in Cape Town. He recalls Tsafendas singing Greek songs with them and teaching them how to fish for lobster. He was not among the group taken by Tsafendas to the township. He does not remember the details of what he told the police but presumes he told them most of what he remembered about Tsafendas. What he did not mention was fishing for lobster because Tsafendas had told them “not to tell anyone because it was illegal.” He remembers the issue about the gun, but he had nothing to do with it.

Aspiotis was certainly not asked about the tapeworm; “I would have remembered that. I never heard about it before.” One thing he remembered because he found it “a little strange,” was being asked “if I had noticed anything strange about Tsafendas or if I thought that he might have been mad. I said no, he was perfectly fine. He was like any other person. He was definitely not insane. Him? Insane? No, definitely not! I wasn’t expecting such a question because the man was not mad.” He was also asked if Tsafendas had said anything about Dr. Verwoerd and Aspiotis said “No.”¹¹⁹¹

¹¹⁹⁰ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010.

¹¹⁹¹ Panteleimon Aspiotis in a personal interview, 6 June 2015.

NIKOLAOS BILLIS

Billis remembers that he was interviewed in Venice by a South African policeman, that there were three policemen and that everyone in the crew was questioned and required to sign their statements. The questioning lasted from early morning until late afternoon. “I remember everything ... I told them everything I knew. I was terrified. This was a serious case. You couldn’t mess around with it.” He remembers the Greek consul as being “pushy” and pressing them repeatedly to tell everything and to hide nothing. He thought that “Captain Fountotos was a little irritated with him as he was treating us like children, though we were all just in our early twenties ...”

Billis told the police that Tsafendas was a Communist and against apartheid, though he does not remember the details of what he said. He told them that Tsafendas frequently talked about politics, but he did not understand him since he had no knowledge or interest in the subject. Billis also mentioned the trip to the township in Cape Town and claimed they had gone there for touristic reasons, to see where the Black people lived. He does not remember being asked whether Tsafendas had served in any army, but he definitely told them about his mad act with the Portuguese, “I did not think much of this then. They wanted to know what he was telling us, so I told them about it. I thought it was not important, but I remember they wanted to know more about it.” He also told the police that Tsafendas had told them that he had fought in the Greek Civil War with the Communists. Billis believed that the Greek authorities must have known about this and told the South Africans. Billis also told the police about their discussion regarding justifiable assassinations.¹¹⁹²

NIKOLAS KAMBOURIS

Kambouris remembers being interviewed in Venice and asked to sign his statement. Although he gave his statement reluctantly, he told police “practically everything that had happened with Dimitri. The only thing I did not say was that we sang Communist songs ... I told them that he spat towards the Prime Minister’s picture ... yes, I certainly mentioned the ‘Hitler’s best student’ comment - this is something almost every one of the crew had heard.” Kambouris was asked to explain what Tsafendas meant with the remark about Hitler and Dr. Verwoerd but he pretended that he did not understand the reference. He eventually said ¹¹⁹² Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011.

“perhaps Tsafendas meant that Dr. Verwoerd had studied in Germany and Hitler was his tutor,” avoiding any further supposition.

When the policeman asked if Tsafendas had said anything about killing the Prime Minister, Kambouris assumed, like Alachiotis and as we will see Kantas, Pouftis and Vasilakis, that he was referring to Tsafendas’s claim that killing Dr. Verwoerd would be tyrannicide. Kambouris had to explain in detail to the policeman what tyrannicide was and Tsafendas’s theories about it. “I had to explain the whole thing and how it was in ancient Greece ... the policeman was very interested in this. I told him though that Tsafendas did not say he was going to kill the Prime Minister; just that it would have been justifiable if someone does.”

Kambouris was also asked if he had noticed anything abnormal about Tsafendas. “I was surprised by the question. We were all surprised by this question and we later discussed it. We were all asked this question. I said that he did not look mad to me and certainly did not act like a madman. He never said or did anything to make me think he was a madman, he seemed perfectly fine.” Kambouris does not remember being asked about the tapeworm but he was asked about the gun. He replied that Tsafendas had asked him if he had a gun or if he knew anyone among the crew who had one and that he referred him to Vasilis Perselis. He believes that he must also have told the police that Tsafendas had expressed his wish to go and live in Cuba. He described how Tsafendas told them he had fought in the Greek Civil War with the Communists and thinks this arose from a question about whether Tsafendas had mentioned serving in the army or receiving military training. What he did not mention was Tsafendas urging them to avoid spending money in South Africa, that they fished for lobster and sang Communist songs.

Kambouris said the policeman wrote everything down and he signed the statement without reading it. His statement “must have been the longest. It was three-four pages long ... we all discussed the length afterwards.” Kambouris also said:

“I remember being asked about my address in Greece at the beginning of the questioning ... that scared me a lot and I know it did the same to everyone. I thought that they might want to talk to me again or ask me to testify in court. That’s why I couldn’t lie; none of us could. We had to tell everything. We knew that if we missed anything which they knew we knew, it would look bad for us. We were all very young, almost children; if our name was involved in anything bad, we would never have worked on a ship again. Those were hard times ...”¹¹⁹³

GEORGE KANTAS

Kantas remembers being interviewed in Venice and asked for his address in Greece, which frightened him, thinking the police might want to get in touch with him again. He signed his statement without reading it. “I was petrified,” he recalled. “The policeman who interviewed me was massive and looked quite mean. I remember him very well. He was a tall, blond guy; he did not smile at all; he was deadly serious. I thought he was German. He looked like a German, like a Nazi, and I remembered Tsafendas calling White South Africans Nazis. I told him everything I knew. We all told them everything, everything. We couldn’t take a chance and hide something. We did not tell them we were singing Communist songs together because it was only five or six of us and no-one else knew about it.”

According to Kantas, the policeman wanted to know “what kind of man Tsafendas was, what he told us and what he did with us.” Kantas told him how Tsafendas came to the tanker and how he helped them with their shopping. “I did not tell him that Tsafendas asked us to boycott South Africa and not spend any money there. Was I crazy to say it?” He does not remember what exactly he said about Tsafendas’s personality, but he remembers him as a “very well-read and well-mannered man who knew a lot about politics and history,” and he presumes this is what he told the police. When the policeman asked Kantas if he thought Tsafendas was “normal,” he replied, “Yes, perfectly normal.”

He is certain that he mentioned the Tsafendas’s mad act to dodge the Portuguese Army, and that he had joined the DSE during the Greek Civil War. He does not remember if he was asked about this or volunteered it. Like everyone else, Kantas was asked if Tsafendas had said anything about the Prime Minister. He is sure he said that Tsafendas called Dr. Verwoerd “Hitler’s best student,” and that he believed it would be justifiable for someone to kill him because he was a tyrant. He does not remember telling the policeman about the spitting incident, which he had forgotten until was mentioned to him by the author, but he presumes that he did. He remembers going to the township and he assumes he told the police but he cannot be certain. Kantas had nothing to do with the gun and he remembers saying so. He was not asked about the tapeworm. He remembers Tsafendas saying he wanted to live in ¹¹⁹³ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014.

“socialist Cuba,” but he doesn’t remember if he mentioned this to the police.¹¹⁹⁴

ELIAS KOKKINOS

Kokkinos was present in Venice but was not interviewed, as he was not present in Cape Town. He clearly remembers that all those crew members who were in Cape Town being interviewed.¹¹⁹⁵

DIONISIS LALLIS

Lallis was a crew member of the Eleni in Cape Town but was replaced later and was not with the tanker when it docked at Venice. He had no contacts with the crew and knew nothing about the questioning until now. However, he remembers Tsafendas well from Cape Town, although he did not associate much with him. He remembers him as being “perfectly fine. I never noticed anything or thought that he could be crazy or dangerous. I remember he was very polite. It looked like he had a good upbringing. He generally looked like a good man. I did not speak to him much and had no dealings with him, but he was very talkative and very friendly with some of the other guys on the Eleni.”¹¹⁹⁶

EMANUIL MASTROMANOLIS

We have seen what Mastromanolis told the author regarding his statement earlier in this chapter. In addition, he remembers that everyone on board was interviewed by the police, everyone was asked for his address in Greece and everyone had to sign his statement.¹¹⁹⁷

EMANUIL PERSELIS

E. Perselis was present in Venice and remembers the entire crew being questioned by the South African police. However, he was not questioned as he had just joined the tanker as a replacement for another man and had not been on board at Cape Town. He remembers that ¹¹⁹⁴ Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012.

¹¹⁹⁵ Elias Kokkinos in a personal interview, 30 August 2014.

¹¹⁹⁶ Dionisios Lallis in a personal interview, 19 June 2015.

¹¹⁹⁷ Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016.

the questioning lasted “many hours.”¹¹⁹⁸

VASILIS PERSELIS

V. Perselis remembers being interviewed by the South African police in Venice, stating his address at the start of questioning and signing his statement at the end. Perselis remembers, “I was asked about the gun and told them he asked me for a pistol for self-protection because he lived in a rough area, so I referred him to Manolis [Mastromanolis] and to Nikolakis [Mavronas]. I told them I had nothing else to do with the gun issue after that.”

Perselis says he was asked if he thought “there was something wrong with him [Tsafendas].” He does not recall his exact answer, but he remembers Tsafendas as being “a very clever man, not mad at all, one hundred per cent normal.” He remembers Tsafendas telling him that he had got a job which was not paying him well and he had to wear a uniform. Perselis thought that it was in a hotel, not in the Parliament. Tsafendas had told him that he wanted to save money to go and live the rest of his life in Cuba, though he does not remember if he told the police this. He remembers Tsafendas being a Communist and considered him to be well-informed about Greek and world politics and history. Perselis did not go with Tsafendas to the township and never heard him say anything regarding Dr. Verwoerd’s death and presumes that he told the police so. He is certain that he was not asked about the tapeworm. He does not remember telling the policeman about the spitting incident, which he had also forgotten until was mentioned to him by the author, but he presumes that he did.¹¹⁹⁹

GRIGORIS POUFTIS

Pouftis remembers being interviewed in Venice, along with the rest of the crew. He thinks there were two or three policemen, each conducting interviews. He remembers signing his statement, but not being asked about his address in Greece. The policeman who conducted the questioning was “very polite and friendly. It was more like a conversation than a police questioning. Very relaxed.” The policeman wanted to know everything that had happened with Tsafendas. Pouftis described how they met and that Tsafendas visited every day. He is certain that he told the policeman about his mad act with the Portuguese Army and that ¹¹⁹⁸ Emanuil Perselis in a personal interview, 30 November 2015.

¹¹⁹⁹ Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015.

Tsafendas served in the DSE during the Greek Civil War. “I and the rest of us did not know at the time why they wanted to know more about it. I said Greeks were playing the fool all the time to avoid the army.”

Pouftis also told the policeman that Tsafendas was a Communist who despised the South African Prime Minister and mentioned both the spitting gesture and the remark that Dr. Verwoerd was Hitler’s best student. However, he did not reveal that they had sung Communist songs together. “I would have lost my job if the company had found out about it.”

Pouftis remembers being asked if Tsafendas said anything about killing the Prime Minister. “I told him ‘God no; he never said anything like this.’” As for the “justifiable killing” conversation, he remembers it vaguely but cannot remember whether or not he told the policeman. He also remembers going to the township, but doesn’t remember if he told the police. Pouftis does not remember being asked about Tsafendas’s mental state, but his own memory is of “an ordinary man, soft-spoken, knowledgeable and passionate about politics.” He was certainly not asked about the tapeworm. He remembers Tsafendas telling him he wanted to go and live in Cuba, but he doesn’t remember if he said that to the police.¹²⁰⁰

IOANNIS SPEIS

Speis did not associate much with Tsafendas but he spoke to him from time to time and saw him every day on the Eleni. He remembers that he and the entire crew were questioned in Venice by three South African policemen; each conducting his own interview with the help of a Greek consular officer for those who’s English was not good. He remembers his interrogator taking notes and being asked to sign his statement.

Speis does not remember everything he was asked but he recalls being questioned about Tsafendas’s character and asked his opinion of him. He believes that he told the police approximately the following: “I never noticed anything wrong with him; he was very talkative and friendly.” Speis considered Tsafendas to be “a proper gentleman.” He was familiar with hawkers selling their wares on ships but thought Tsafendas “did not look like other hawkers.” He saw him as “a proud, intelligent man with lots of dignity. He never asked for anything from the crew and was always prompt with our financial dealings.” Speis knew that Tsafendas had taken some of his crewmates to the township, but he had not gone along.

¹²⁰⁰ Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009.

However, he was one of those to whom Tsafendas demonstrated how to fish for lobster, but he did not reveal that to the police. He was certainly not asked about the tapeworm.¹²⁰¹

DIMITRIOS STAVRIANOS

Stavrianos remembers being questioned in Venice along with the rest of the crew but does not remember exactly what he was asked and what he told the police. He remembers Tsafendas, but he did not associate with him very much and therefore thinks he could not have told the police a lot about him. He remembers Tsafendas as a “normal man; very well-dressed and well-mannered” who “did not show any signs of being mentally disturbed. He never behaved like a mad man or said anything to suggest that something might be wrong with him. None of us ever thought that he could be mad.”¹²⁰² Although Stavrianos had little to do with Tsafendas, he was still interviewed by the police, confirming the crew’s claim that everyone who met him was interviewed.

EMANUIL TSABOUNIARIS

Tsabouniaris remembers being interviewed in Venice with all the other Eleni crew. He remembers a policeman questioning him and keeping notes and he recalls signing his statement, but he does not remember exactly what he told the police. He remembers being asked whether Tsafendas asked him for a gun or a knife. He said that, “Tsafendas had seen I had a knife and asked me to sell it to him. I did not do so because I liked it and it was a souvenir.” The policeman then asked, “Do you still have it?” and he replied, “Yes.” Tsabouniaris said it was in his suitcase and offered to bring it for him, but the policeman replied, “No, that won’t be necessary.”

Tsabouniaris remembers being asked his opinion about Tsafendas’s state of mind. Although he does not remember exactly what he said then, he presumes he told the police what he remembers about Tsafendas to this day, that he was “a very funny and good hearted man, a very friendly, talkative and polite person, a true gentleman. Always very well-dressed and always very courteous. Everyone liked him. He was certainly perfectly fine, impossible to have been insane. Impossible! This man was definitely not insane. I could swear to God that he was not insane.”

¹²⁰¹ Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015.

¹²⁰² Dimitris Stavrianos in a personal interview, 18 January 2015.

The first day Tsafendas came to the tanker, Tsabouniaris gave him money to buy him a few things ashore. He was the only who handed over cash and the other men made fun of him, saying he could forget his money because Tsafendas would not be back with it. However, the next day, Tsafendas brought everything he had asked for and the change from the money he gave him. “He was always very prompt with our financial dealings, not like other hawkers who I or the other guys had met. He was completely different; he talked more like a teacher than a hawker. He used nice words and had excellent command of the vocabulary. He seemed like a very well-educated and knowledgeable man; a sophisticated man.”

Tsabouniaris told the author:

“The only thing I found strange was that his profession of a hawker did not match his character. He was very educated and very polite for a hawker. I always believed that something must be going on with this man, that he couldn’t be just a hawker. I am sure he could have found a much better job. I thought that perhaps he could have a reason for doing this job; as a cover for something else, so he could walk freely around the harbour and aboard the ships. We discussed this with some of the guys and they also thought that there must be something happening with him... The thing that impressed me more was that he was very proud. He was doing the job with pride, not like a beggar or trying to make you buy in a sleazy way. He was a true gentleman.”

Tsabouniaris remembers Tsafendas teaching him how to fish for lobsters, but he did not mention this to the police because Tsafendas had warned him that it was illegal and he would pay a fine if caught. Tsabouniaris does not remember Tsafendas talking politics with him, but he remembers him singing Greek traditional songs with everyone on board. He was definitely not asked about the tapeworm.¹²⁰³

¹²⁰³ Emanuil Tsabouniaris in personal interview, 14 June 2016.

MICHALIS VASILAKIS

He remembers being interviewed along with all the others. He did not speak good English and the Greek consular officer acted as translator. He was one of the oldest of the crew and had been very close to Tsafendas. He remembers the Greek official asking him questions that were not asked by the policeman, things which the Greek had heard from the other men during the interviews, and this annoyed him. He remembers telling “pretty much everything” he knew about Tsafendas. “The only things I remember not telling him for sure is that he sang partisan songs with us and he gave me this anti-apartheid book. None of us mentioned these things, not even those who had not participated in the singing but just knew about it.”

Vasilakis remembers telling the police that Tsafendas took them to the township but not whether that they had tea in a Black family’s house. He told them that Tsafendas was a Communist who had also fought with the Communists in the Greek Civil War and he is pretty certain that he also told the policeman and that he had “played the fool” so as not to serve in the Portuguese army.

Vasilakis remembers mentioning that Tsafendas had spat at Dr. Verwoerd’s photograph – it was Vasilakis who showed him the picture - and called the prime minister “Hitler’s best student.” The most difficult part of the interview was when he had to explain to the policeman what tyrannicide was after telling him about Tsafendas’s belief that Dr. Verwoerd’s assassination would be justifiable because he was a tyrant. The interview lasted about thirty minutes and he spent at least half of it explaining the philosophy of tyrannicide as understood by the ancient Greeks. The most surprising thing, in the view of Vasilakis, was that the policeman was unaware of the assassination of Prince Rwagasore and he had to tell him about it, although he only knew what he had heard from Tsafendas. He does not remember being asked about Tsafendas’s mental state, but his own opinion is that he was “surely one hundred and ten per cent sane. There is absolutely no way Dimitri to have been mad. He definitely played the mad again to not be executed.”¹²⁰⁴

ANALYSIS OF THE INTERVIEWS

With the exception of Kantas, who said his interviewer was mean-looking and he was scared, the crewmen who were interviewed by the author said the atmosphere at the interviews was relaxed and often felt more like a discussion between friends than an interrogation. The South African officers were polite and often smiled. Every man was asked if he wanted the Greek translator to read out his statements, but no one did. One reason was they felt it was unnecessary, but more importantly, they did not want to look as if they did not trust the policemen. They wanted the whole business out of the way as soon as possible.

¹²⁰⁴ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

The crew said they all discussed their interviews after the policemen were gone. They concluded that all were asked approximately the same questions and everyone had told the truth and volunteered everything that had happened with Tsafendas. The only information withheld was that Tsafendas sang Communist songs with some of them and gave banned books to three of them. They discussed the fact that they were asked about Tsafendas's mental state, but paid little attention to it at the time.

Alachiotis, Billis, Kambouris, Kantas, Perselis, Pouftis and Vasilakis told the police that Tsafendas described Dr. Verwoerd as "Hitler's best student." They are sure others testified to this since that was how Dr. Verwoerd was sometimes jokingly termed between them. By the time they were interviewed by the author, several of the men, had forgotten Dr. Verwoerd's name, but all remembered Tsafendas describing him in those words.

Alachiotis, Billis, Kambouris, Pouftis and Vasilakis told the police about Tsafendas's spitting gesture. Kantas and Perselis remember the gesture but are not sure if they told the police.

Thirteen sailors were asked their opinion of Tsafendas. All told the author they never thought he could have been insane and that is what they told the police. They said the entire crew was asked the same question and all gave the same answer.

That Tsafendas was a Communist was stated by at least six men - Alachiotis, Billis, Kambouris, Kantas, Pouftis and Vasilakis. These men also told the police that Tsafendas had joined the DSE, the military wing of the Greek Communist Party during the Greek Civil War.

As we have seen, a significant item of information given to the police by the crew was Tsafendas telling them that he had "played the fool" in order to evade service in the Portuguese Army. At least six men testified to this: Alachiotis, Billis, Kambouris, Kantas, Pouftis and Vasilakis, while it is very likely Vasilis Perselis did so, too. These crewmen also stated in personal interviews with the author that some of the men were asked if Tsafendas had served in an army or had any military training. According to his statement, Mavronas mentioned that Tsafendas had served in the Greek Army. This was wrong. Either Mavronas misunderstood what Tsafendas had told him or the policeman misunderstood Mavronas. Nevertheless, it shows that he, too, was asked the question. The South African police could easily have checked with the Portuguese Army whether Tsafendas was exempted from military service because he was insane.

The visit to the township was disclosed by at least five men - Alachiotis, Billis, Kambouris, Kantas and Vasilakis. Mastromanolis and Pouftis, who had gone on the trip do not remember if they told the police about it but believe they most probably did.

Perhaps the most important information was that given by Alachiotis, Billis, Kambouris, Kantas and Vasilakis that Tsafendas had characterised any killing of Dr. Verwoerd as morally justifiable because of his tyranny. Tsafendas had used the philosophy of the ancient Greeks, that it was “a democratic man’s duty to remove the tyrant from power.” Pouftis was also present during this conversation but does not remember whether he mentioned it to the police. Aspras who was also in on the conversation, probably testified likewise.

According to the crew, Tsafendas’s theory regarding justifiable homicide, his mad play-acting, their visit to the township and the fact that Tsafendas called Dr. Verwoerd “Hitler’s best student” seemed of more importance and interest to the police than the sale of the gun by Mastromanolis and Mavronas. Men who were unaware of the four issues above were asked about them.

THE ISSUE OF THE MISSING STATEMENTS FROM THE ELENI

It is undisputable that statements have gone missing from the National Archives of South Africa. According to the Commission’s Report, “one hundred and five persons, including Tsafendas himself, gave oral evidence before the Commission.”¹²⁰⁵ However, only forty-one of their statements were found in the archives and the missing statements included the records of Tsafendas’s two testimonies before the Commission. The important question is when these statements went missing, plus were they were available at the time to the Commission and to the Attorney-General?

It is inconceivable that fifteen men, although now aged in their late 60s to early 80s, could be mistaken about being questioned by the South African police. Mastromanolis’s statement was found, but he insists that a statement was taken from everyone on board the Eleni. Even Emanuel Perselis and Ilias Kokkinos, who were not interviewed by the police, but were present in Venice, testified to the author that they clearly remember everyone being interviewed. Furthermore, most of these men have not seen or spoken to each other since 1966, yet all described to the author similar situations, comments and incidents from fifty years ago. The Tsafendas affair would have been the most memorable event in their seamen's lives and if some of the details had gone, the main issues remained in their minds.

¹²⁰⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter I, Paragraph 4.

The time differences between the statements also suggest that more men were questioned than those whose statements were found. The first recorded interview, according to the archives, was at 10.30 a.m. and was of Emanuil Mastromanolis, and the last was at 4.10 p.m. of Constantinos Kokkinidis. The other two were at 11.20 a.m. of Nicolaos Mavronas and at 2.30 p.m. of Captain Michalis Fountotos. The short statement of Dimitrios Zafiriadis does not have a time. Clearly, there is a big gap between each interview and according to the archived statements, the policemen took almost six hours to interview four people, or one hour and thirty minutes per person. However, it is abundantly clear from the length of the statements that the interviews could not have lasted more than twenty minutes each. That there were thirty-eight sailors to be interviewed makes perfect sense, starting early in the morning and finishing late in the afternoon, as testified by several of the men interviewed by the author.

The fact that South African policemen, probably three, were dispatched to Venice to do the interviews supports the argument that all the Eleni crew were interviewed. Would it have taken even one policeman six hours to question four people? There is also a three-hour gap between Mavronas's statement at 11.20 am and Captain Fountotos's at 2.30 p.m. Mavronas does not now remember for how long he was questioned, but his statement is so short, his interview could not possibly have lasted more than fifteen to twenty minutes. There is also a long gap – two hours - between Fountotos's 2.30 p.m. statement and that of Kokkinidis at 4.10 p.m. Fountotos's statement is also very brief and it is not possible that a policeman needed an hour and forty minutes to take it.

It stands to reason that the South African police would question everyone on the tanker who had been in contact with Tsafendas because of the many important issues relating to the Eleni, especially the fact that Dr. Verwoerd's death was discussed there three days before the assassination. From those statements found in the archives it appears that only Kokkinidis was asked about that issue. We should remember here that the police questioned people with minimal contact with Tsafendas, such as James Johnston who had spoken to him for twenty minutes in his life and had nothing significant to say. They also spoke to people who had known Tsafendas two, three and more years ago, so would they not have questioned everyone who was in constant contact with him for almost one and half months up to just before the assassination? Even more so when Tsafendas had attempted to buy a gun, intended to escape with this tanker and more importantly, had discussed Dr. Verwoerd's possible death with them.

The fact that the police went all the way to Venice to question the Eleni witnesses shows their importance, yet only four statements were found in the archives. Piet (Petrus) Cornelius Swanepoel, former policeman/detective in the SA police and BOSS secret agent, told the author that he believes it is "inconceivable" that the SA police would go all the way to Venice but not question everyone from the crew, since they were aware that they had associated with Tsafendas shortly before the assassination, that he had bought a gun from them, and, more importantly, that Dr. Verwoerd's death was discussed on-board before it happened.¹²⁰⁶ Gordon Winter, another former BOSS agent, also concedes that the South African police "certainly" would have questioned all the crew over such an important matter.¹²⁰⁷ It is indeed inconceivable, then, that they only interviewed four people out of the thirty-eight who were in contact with Tsafendas. Serious police work required that every single person be interviewed who had been in touch with Tsafendas shortly before the assassination. Apparently this is exactly what the South African police did, but only four of the aforementioned thirty-eight statements were found in the archives. The question, then, is what happened to the other thirty-four statements.

They could have gone missing by chance, which is not impossible since evidence can go missing in any archives by accident. However, this creates the question, if they went missing by chance, why they were not used by the Commission, since if they went missing accidentally, that must have surely happened sometime after the conclusion of Tsafendas's case and not during it. It seems highly unlikely, if not impossible, that the police would lose some thirty-five statements soon after they took them. However, if they were in the possession of the Commission or the Attorney-General at the time, why they were not used? Nowhere in the Commission's Report or during the summary trial is there any reference to any of the information in these statements.

¹²⁰⁶ Piet Swanepoel in a personal interview, 6 April 2016.

¹²⁰⁷ Gordon Winter in a personal interview with Dr. James Sanders on behalf of the author, 19 August 2016.

However, the fact that there is no mention of this evidence in the Commission's Report or that they were not used by the Attorney-General does not necessarily mean that they were not in their possession. Other evidence which evidently was in their possession was not used. This includes the fact that Tsafendas was exiled by Mozambique for twelve years, also that he was arrested by the Portuguese on two occasions in addition to those mentioned in the Report; namely in Lisbon in 1952 and in Beira in 1965. Also, the Commission for sure and probably the Attorney-General, too, were in possession of several statements by witnesses showing Tsafendas as a completely different person to the one described in the summary trial and in the Commission's Report. However, they were not used by any of them. Therefore, it is also possible that the statements were suppressed by these two bodies and not by the police.

A further question concerns the Eleni statements found in the archives. None contains the name of the policeman who conducted the interviews. All other statements are signed by the policeman who questioned the person concerned. The author is not in position to know why the policemen who conducted these interviews did not sign them. The issue of the missing statements will be discussed in detail later in this chapter and in Chapter 6.

CONCLUSION REGARDING THE ELENI

As we have seen, the crew of the Eleni gave important information to the police about Tsafendas.

- He despised Dr. Verwoerd. He spat at a picture of him and denounced him as "Hitler's best student" because of the similarities between his national policies and those of Adolf Hitler.
- Three days before the assassination, Tsafendas told the sailors that a hypothetical killing of Dr. Verwoerd would have been justifiable because he was a tyrant and a dictator.
- He was a Communist and had fought with the Communists in the Greek Civil War.
- He spoke about politics constantly and unreservedly opposed apartheid.
- He took a group of seamen to a township in Cape Town to show them the hardships caused to Blacks by apartheid.

- The sailors believed Tsafendas was perfectly sane; none had noticed anything wrong with him.

All the above information would have been important to the police, but Tsafendas's remark about justifiable homicide was of paramount importance, given that the police and the Commission of Enquiry were trying to establish how Dr. Verwoerd's death was being discussed three days before the assassination. As we have already seen, the gossip about Dr. Verwoerd's reputed death was subject to intense speculation by the police and the Commission. Extraordinarily, none of the Eleni crew's statements taken in Venice would play any role in the case; neither in Tsafendas's summary trial nor the Commission of Enquiry. Why and how we will examine in the Commission chapter.

As for the fact that only four of the Eleni statements, plus Zafiriadis's short comment, out of thirty-eight statements taken, were found in the National Archives, this could mean only one thing: the statements were mislaid, either deliberately or by accident, the first more likely due to their importance and the fact that the South African police and General van den Bergh had withheld evidence from the judiciary before. It cannot be ruled out though that the statements were given to the Commission and to the Attorney-General and they did not use them and they then disappeared from the archives. Both the Attorney-General and the Commission had evidently suppressed important evidence about Tsafendas, as we will see.

Even if the statements disappeared accidentally through the passage of time, the fact remains that when they were available, they were ignored and not used. We will see in the next two chapters where and how these statements could have been used by the Attorney General and the Commission. The conclusion must be that they were either provided to the Attorney-General and the Commission and were suppressed by them or they were withheld from them. However, the most important issue here is not who withheld the information, but the fact that they were withheld and contributed to a distorted picture of Tsafendas and the assassination.

OTHER STATEMENTS FROM THIS DAY

CHARLES NISSIOTIS¹²⁰⁸

I am the owner of Protea Dry Cleaners and Domestic Appliances, Pretoria. My wife, Evangeline, is the stepsister of Demitrio Tsafendas, who is alleged to have murdered Dr. Verwoerd.

During 1964 I met Tsafendas for the first time. He was unemployed at that time. I asked him to assist my wife in the cafe we owned at that time. He was however so lazy that my wife told him to leave within the first two days. I afterwards heard that he took up employment with Poole's Engineering, Pretoria. After that he never visited me and my wife again. My brother-in-law, Nick Vlachopoulos, sold some furniture of Tsafendas for R40 and gave the money to my mother-in-law. My mother-in-law sent the money to me in two instalments of R20 each to get bank drafts to be sent to Beira.

To the end of 1964 or the beginning of 1965 I took out a bank draft for R20 at Volkskas Bank, Bosman Street, Pretoria and handed it to my mother-in-law, who forwarded same to Tsafendas in Beira. About two to three months later I took out another bank draft for R20 at the same bank. This draft was sent to Tsafendas in Beira. I cannot remember the address in Beira, but I think the address given by Tsafendas was c/o some Greek businessman there. In both cases Tsafendas wrote to my brother-in-law and requested the money to be sent to the address he furnished. As I knew Tsafendas he looked stupid but he was always friendly and happy. He used to talk a lot about the Bible and used to carry a Bible on him. I never saw him to be aggressive towards anybody. To me he appeared to be very absentminded. He was very fond of reading the daily English newspapers and could spend hours in doing so. He never discussed politics in my presence. As far as I could establish he never mentioned the tapeworm story to any of the family.

Statement taken by J.W. Strumpher.

¹²⁰⁸ Charles Nissiotis statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

COMMENTS ON NISSIOTIS'S STATEMENT

Nissiotis was one of those family members who appeared before the Commission. They all testified that "Tsafendas never talked to the family about his tapeworm. According to them, he was definitely not insane. He always had proper accommodation in Pretoria."¹²⁰⁹ Nissiotis had also told the police, "As far as I could established he never mentioned the tapeworm story to any of the family."¹²¹⁰

Tsafendas was indeed employed for a very short time at Nissiotis's café, but laziness was not the reason he was dismissed. Upon his return to South Africa, Tsafendas stayed at Nissiotis's house, where his step-mother was also staying at the time. The family soon discovered that Tsafendas remained a passionate Communist and a critic of apartheid who was not afraid to declare his views. Worse, they discovered that he had brought with him a large amount of banned literature. Nissiotis had no problem with this, but his wife and Marika were terrified and pleaded with Tsafendas to throw it away. Tsafendas refused and was then asked by Evangelina (Evangelia) to leave her house. The same time, he was also asked by Evangelia to stop working at the café shop because she was afraid that sooner or later he would argue with a customer over politics and get them into trouble.¹²¹¹

Nissiotis lied to the police about meeting Tsafendas for the first time in 1964. Tsafendas was a guest at his wedding to his half-sister in 1941 and gave them the gift of a coffee table which remained in Evangelia's possession until she died in 2016. He also lied when he said that Tsafendas never discussed politics in his presence. According to family members like Fotini Gavasiadis, Katerina Pnefma and Mary Eintracht, the exact opposite was the case. Unlike his wife, Nissiotis was sympathetic to Tsafendas's political views, although he avoided making this public. However, like everyone else in the family, Nissiotis could not admit the truth, that Tsafendas was a committed Communist and diehard opponent of apartheid. Nissiotis liked Tsafendas and had a good relationship with him; much better than the one Evangelia had with her half-brother, and even travelled to Cape Town to attend his summary trial as he wanted to show to Tsafendas that he was there for him.

¹²⁰⁹ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

¹²¹⁰ Charles Nissiotis statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹²¹¹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

JOHANNES CHRISTIAAN OOSTHUIZEN¹²¹²

Cape Tramway, Tollgate, Cape Town.

I am an instructor at the above firm and live in No. 3 St. Michaelshof, Bond Street, Tamboerskloof.

On 12/29/65 Demitrio Tsafendas started as my apprentice conductor. He had to attend lectures and study certain bus routes in Deep River Depot. I keep a register of my observations to record the personal progress of each apprentice conductor. I remember Tsafendas well. My registry shows an entry to his name and number, 10236. Every Tuesday pupils should report to me at 9.30 am. On such occasions I ask some questions to see how they progress. The entry show as follows: "Trainee is slow and it seems lazy too. He won't last long if he passes out. Slow in uptake. Will not last. Mind seems blank at times." The entry is in abbreviated form. I meant that he responds slowly to things that are explained to him, and had to be repeated over and over. His mind seemed to wander and he didn't concentrate on what he learned. It seemed as if he was lazy to learn the routes. I believed that he would not stay long if he did pass the test. I also believed that he may not pass the test at all.

Before he left, he said - "This is too much for me I cannot do it and I will resign." Other than his slow response, I did not at all get the impression that mentally anything was wrong with him. He is mentally normal. There are many rejected applicants because they are found to be of a bad standard. Tsafendas resigned from us on 1/12/66. He could not make the standards. He never had any political discussions or let him out against the State in my presence.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

¹²¹² Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

EDWARD CHARLES FURNESS¹²¹³

Duncanville, Vereeniging.

I was born at Vyffontein, Vanderbijlpark on 30.4.1910. I was employed at various mines as a miner, fitter and turner. I have no family and divorced. During 1949 I left for England Where I resided until 10.6.1966 when I returned to the R.S.A. Before I left for England I was granted a disability pension. While in England I occupied myself with small scale farming on hired ground. I was an honorary member of the North Middlesex Cricket Club in Hornsey, London North 8.

While being a member of the mentioned Club I met with so-called Neo-Labour Political party members. The club itself had nothing to do with politics but members of the Neo Labour Party frequented this club. I met several South Africans who emigrated to Britain who are or where members or supporters of that Political Party. I recollect the names of two of them i.e. Tennisson and David Gardener. The latter was an elected councillor of Hornsey, London. He was a member of the Neo Labour Political Party. Gardener is a European but Tennisson is an African.

The Neo-Labour Party frequently held political meetings and was more concerned with South African affairs than local politics in England. They were against the policies of the present Government in South Africa and made sure that their views were published in London Newspapers. I attended several meetings of this party and on each occasion they spent a lot of time condemning South Africa. The following persons are also members of the Party and I have seen them addressed meetings: Canon Collins, Barbara Castle, Ted Castle (Husband of Barbara), F. Brockway (Lord), Ian Me Kardo (M. P.), Ken Robertson (M.P.), Harold Wilson (M.P. Private member) George Brown (M.P.) Frederick Messenger (Sir) (M.P.) Tennisson, David Gardener. Tennisson and David Gardener were often the main speakers at these meetings.

About a week after the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd I saw the picture of the assassin in the newspapers. I identified the photo, as that of Tsafendikis whom I met during about 1960 at the stated club. Although his name was given in the newspapers as Tsafendas, I knew him as Tsafendikis, the name by which he was known by the Neo-Labour Party. I cannot say whether he was a member of this party but he was a regular visitor to the offices of the party and I have seen him in company of several members of the party, including David Gardener, ¹²¹³ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

I never saw him at any of their meetings, but I attended only some of these meetings.

The first time I met Tsafendas was during 1960 at the club. That was during the day and I was alone at the club. He came to me and introduced himself as Tsafendikis and as a Cape Coloured. The way he pronounced "Coloured" was clear to me that he was not a coloured from South Africa. I asked him what the object of his visit was, on which he replied that he requires my help to create a resistance to the regime of South Africa and mentioned Civil disobedience and anything that would get the South African regime out of power. I asked him who gave him the idea to come to me, and his reply was that members of the Neo Labour Party advised him to approach me. He mentioned names, such as Levy, Baily, Phillips, Jelley and Wilson. The latter is not the Prime Minister. They were all local members of the Party. I then told him to go whereupon he became aggressive, but left after a few harsh words. The conversation lasted only about five minutes and that was the last and only conversation I had with this man. The only thing that struck me about Tsafendikis were, that he was obviously not a coloured but rather an Assyrian. He was well dressed and appeared to be wealthy. I do not know when he arrived or when he left Britain, but after that incident I saw him on numerous occasions for several weeks hanging around the offices of the Neo Labour Party which are situated only about half a mile from the Club and on route to places I frequented.

At the time when Pratt endeavoured to assassinate the late Dr. Verwoerd at the Rand Easter Show in Johannesburg. When they received the news, the Neo Labour Party held a meeting in London at which it was decided to collect money for the defence of Pratt. I was approached for a donation but refused. I cannot say whether Tsafendikis was a member of the Neo Labour Party in England, but can say without hesitation and beyond doubt that he associated with that Party.

Statement taken by me at Vereeniging on 12.10.66 at 11 a.m.

(Indecipherable name) ... Capt.

(Indecipherable name) ... Nr. 20365 D/Sgt.

COMMENTS ON FURNESS'S STATEMENT

The person named here as Tennyson by Furness was the ANC representative in London, Tennyson Xola Makiwane. Tsafendas spoke extensively to Father Minas Constandinou about a member of the ANC he had met in London with whom he had a very good relationship. Father Minas does not remember the name, but Tsafendas also told him that the man was assassinated. Makiwane was assassinated in 1980. Tsafendas was surprised that the South African police knew so much about his activities outside South Africa, especially in London. It seems clear that most of this information came from Furness's statement.¹²¹⁴ Furthermore, Tsafendas mentioned associating with and assisting Tennyson Makiwane to David Beresford of The Guardian.¹²¹⁵

DONALD NEVILLE MACKAY¹²¹⁶

E/M/A, City Tramways, Tollgate, Cape Town.

I am the personnel officer of City Tramways at above address, and I reside at 101 Costa Brava, Beach Road, Sea Point. On 12.11.1965 I interviewed D. Tsafendas, who approached me for employment as a conductor. He filled in form P.W. 1 in his own handwriting. Certain red writing in my own on this form. He had to be medically examined which examination he attended on 19.11.1965 and was found to be fit. He was to report for training on 24.11.1965, which he failed to do. He did however report on 29.12.1965, from which date he is considered to be a learner conductor. Then he was passed to the instructor Mr. Oesthuizen. Apart from signing him on, I merely asked him the essential question for Company records. I have noted his identity White – i.n. 963 081129 W, also Registration Certificate 203461, personal description and reasons for leaving previous employments –

(a) Table Bay Power Station – declared redundant, and

(b) Frazer and Chalmers – resigned. He resigned from us 12.1.66.

I remember that this man had a set of peculiar front teeth. They looked filed off and built up with silver or stainless steel.

¹²¹⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹²¹⁵ David Beresford in a personal interview, 11 April 2014.

¹²¹⁶ Donald Neville Mackay statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Cape Town 12.10.1966

Statement made to me. (SGD.) D.J.V. Troost. 23505 Sergt.

PRESS REPORTS OF THE DAY

With a trial date fixed, newspaper coverage of Tsafendas diminished, though on October 12, the big story of the day was the fact that Nikolas Vergos, the man who had fought with Tsafendas at Mandini and a sought-after witness, was finally located. “KEY WITNESS FOUND” announced the front page of the Daily Dispatch,¹²¹⁷ while *The Cape Times*¹²¹⁸ front-paged “IMPORTANT WITNESS TRACED.” Mr Justice J.T. van Wyk, chairman of the Verwoerd Enquiry, had appealed to the media earlier for help in locating the sixty-one-year-old Greek-born Vergos, who was thought to have “vital information” regarding Tsafendas. Six hours later, Vergos walked into the office of the Rand Daily Mail in Johannesburg.¹²¹⁹ The Daily Dispatch and The Cape Times also reported that the scope of the Dr. Verwoerd inquiry had been widened to include the circumstances in which Tsafendas was granted permanent residence.¹²²⁰

Regarding Vergos, even though he was labelled such an important witness by the Commission who had “vital information” regarding Tsafendas and the Commission got into a lot of trouble locating him, he was not asked to testify during Tsafendas’s summary trial. He gave a statement to the police and gave evidence before the Commission, but he was not asked by either the defence or the state to testify in the summary trial. The question is, why such an important and witness, according to the Commission, was not asked to testify in the summary trial. Of course we cannot tell for sure what the reason was, especially by looking at this incident independently. However, by looking, as we will do in the next chapter in the Summary Trial, and by placing this case together with many similar ones, we can see why Vergos was not asked to testify. Vergos was the man who asked his superior to fire Tsafendas as he was a communist¹²²¹ and denounced him to his superiors and to a security officer as

¹²¹⁷ Daily Dispatch, ‘Dr. Verwoerd: Key Witness Found’, 12 October 1966: 1.

¹²¹⁸ The Cape Times, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Inquiry: Important Witness Traced’, 12 October 1966: 1.

¹²¹⁹ The Cape Times, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Inquiry: Important Witness Traced’, 12 October 1966: 1.

¹²²⁰ Daily Dispatch, ‘Dr. Verwoerd: Key Witness Found’, 12 October 1966: 1; The Cape Times, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Inquiry: Important Witness Traced’, 12 October 1966: 1.

¹²²¹ Charles Edwin Woods statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

“the biggest communist in the Republic of South Africa”¹²²² and a “communist bastard.”¹²²³ In addition Vergos had argued with Tsafendas after Vergos had refused to pay two African workers he had illegally employed. Tsafendas had defended them and asked him to pay them and this is how the fight began.¹²²⁴ The reason of their fight was not given by neither Tsafendas nor Vergos. However, given the fact that the police had questioned several workers at the canteen where the fight took place on September 9,¹²²⁵ it seems unlikely, but not of course impossible, that no one told them about it.

¹²²² Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹²²³ Jan Johannes Albertus Fourie statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹²²⁴ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

¹²²⁵ The Cape Times, ‘Tsafendas in Brawl in Canteen’, 9 September 1966: 15.

THURSDAY, 13 OCTOBER 1966

STATEMENTS

ROELOF ERASMUS SWIEGERS¹²²⁶

White Male, Sidwell, Port Elizabeth.

I am employed at General Motors, Port Elizabeth at the testing department. Until 20/09/66 I lived in Durban and then came to Port Elizabeth. During my stay at Durban I met a Greek named Sideri. This person is already elderly. He was unemployed and stayed in Glen Ashley, Durban, but I do not remember his home address. He lives with his son.

The morning after the murder of the late Dr. Verwoerd, Mr. Sideri told me that he knew Tsafendas well. He knows his parents since he (Sideri) stepped ashore in Lourenço Marques during 1915 or 1917. He knows that Tsafendas is the son of a Greek and a black woman. That Tsafendas's father later married a white woman and Tsafendas then stayed with his father and the white woman in Pretoria where his father worked at Iscor. Tsafendas went to Middelburg later on, where he went to school. Tsafendas then left the country and he (Sideri) did not see him for 30 years until he ran into him about 18 months ago in Durban. Tsafendas then told him that he had travelled the world, and he also was in Russia. When Sideri ran into him in Durban, Tsafendas was staying at the "Old Man's Home" in Durban. Tsafendas did not speak with him about politics, but he is of the opinion that Tsafendas leaned towards the communist side. Tsafendas experienced lots of trouble during his travels because he was not in possession of a passport. The latter then went to Lisbon to get a passport since he was born in Lourenço Marques and thus qualifies for a Portuguese passport. There he also encountered a lot of trouble and the Portuguese government took him to Lourenço Marques to make sure that he was born there before they issued him a passport. In total, he stayed in Lisbon for three years.

Statement taken at my presence ... (Indecipherable name)

Port Elizabeth. 13.10.1966. 12 p.m.

¹²²⁶ Roelof Erasmus Swiegers statement to the police, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van vorm Z 204. NASA.

FRIDAY, 14 OCTOBER 1966

STATEMENTS

MICHAEL DAVID ERNEST NORTON¹²²⁷

European male.

I am a journalist on the Cape Town staff (Cape Branch Editor) of the Post (Tel 3 26 73) and I reside at 30 Hancock Road, Steurhof, Cape Town (Tel 774567).

On the morning of 14.10.66 I accompanied Mr Gordon Winter to Thomas Boydell Buildings where he had to give evidence before the Commission of Mr Justice van Wyk. While waiting in the passage on the second floor, I came across Isaac Vallie, who is referred to in the article in the Post. I knew him. Vallie was accompanied by his brother Suleiman Vallie, to whom Mr Winter introduced me. After Mr Winter had gone to give evidence, the two Vallies came over to me and we started chatting, mainly about Tsafendas. Isaac seemed to be worried about the story in the Post about Tsafendas which was given to us by the Vallies. After a while it came out that his friends were upset and cross with him for having talked about Tsafendas. It was a casual chat and I did not question him. He mentioned no names and I did not ask him for any. Suleiman mentioned that in 1964 Tsafendas had come to his father and on that occasion posed as an Egyptian. This is all I have to tell.

(Signed) M.D.E. Norton

Taken by me at Cape Town this 14.10.66 at 4.10 pm.

(Indecipherable signature).

¹²²⁷ Michael David Ernest Norton statement to the police, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12. File: Die post aangelegenheid, NASA.

MONDAY, 17 OCTOBER 1966

STATEMENTS

JOHN PATRICE LEACH¹²²⁸

I am an adult white male employed by Thomson, Watson & Co, Thibault House, Cape Town. On 24/7/66, the "Eleni," which is owned by Brays Shipping Co., London, called at Cape Town for repairs to the rudder. The vessel was on her way to the Persian Gulf but broke down and was brought in from High Seas by the tug Praia Grande, which left again on 27/7/66 for Luanda. My firm was asked to act as agents and if it was not for these repairs, she would not have called at Cape Town. She did not discharge anything here.

When the Eleni left Cape Town on 3/9/66 she went to the Persian Gulf where she called at Mina Al Ahmadi for orders. She left there again on 23/9/66 for Venice where she called on or about the 12th October, 1966. On her way to Venice, she also called at Suez on 5/10/66. At this stage I am unable to say whether she will ever call at Cape Town again. The "Eleni" was bound to call at Dubai, just for bunkers (?), stores (?) and water, but because of the needed repairs, she was brought to Cape Town. While at Cape Town, the crew members were allowed to go ashore and receive visitors.

(Signed) J.P. Leach

Statement taken by me ... (Indecipherable signature) D/Sgt. 17/10/66 10.10 am.

WILLEM NEL VISSER¹²²⁹

No.29097 Sergeant.

I am a sergeant in the South African Police stationed at Durban Central where I was in charge of the Immorality section. On a date before the 11th of September I was spoken to ¹²²⁸ John Patrice Leach statement to the police, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

¹²²⁹ Willem Nel Visser statement to the police, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

by Mr. Brian Rudden who is connected to the Sunday Times as a reporter. Mr. Rudden wanted to know if I knew the alleged assassin - Mr. Tsafendas - of Mr. Dr. Verwoerd. I shared that I knew Tsafendas simply as an interpreter in the Regional Courts of Durban where he (Tsafendas) worked as interpreter in a fornication case I handled. Mr. Rudden wanted to know what Tsafendas's attitude towards the Immorality Law was and I notified him the following: "That Tsafendas have asked what people say when I arrest them under the Immorality Law and whether I catch a lot of these cases. That Tsafendas was interested no more and no less in such business than a normal member of the public is interested when they hear what kind of cases I deal with."

Mr. Rudden also wanted to take a portrait of me to publish in the "Sunday Times" which I refused to allow, because of Captain du Toit, my commanding officer, had not given permission. The report of Mr. Rudden is mere sensation-ism and untrue.

Durban. 17/10/66. 4.35 p.m.

Statement taken by (Indecipherable signature) ... 29097 Sgt.

JAN ABRAHAM SWANEPOEL¹²³⁰

I'm a Lieutenant in the South African Police and in charge of the Diamond Division, Cape Town.

On 20/01/1966 I received a completed application form from the Marine Diamond Corporation, Cape Town in respect of Demitris Tsafendas, in which he applied for employment at the company. Records were checked in my office and it was found that he was not listed as an illegal diamond trade suspect. After that, the records in the office of the Investigation division, Cape Town, were also checked and it was established that there is no such a person registered with criminal records and that there is no such a person being sought for any criminal offenses. On the same day the Head Protection Officer of Marine Diamond Corporation was advised that there is no objection in employing him (Tsafendas).

Details about Demitris Tsafendas, along with a list of other employees, was sent to the South African Criminal Bureau, Pretoria, for inquiry and on 21/02/1966 I was notified in writing that there is no criminal convictions registered against Demitris Tsafendas. Applicants for employment with diamond companies are not seen nor spoken to in person by members of the Diamond Division. After confidential inquiries locally, a copy of a report is sent to any company, also the headquarters of the Diamond Division in Kimberley, where records of illegal diamond trafficking suspects are held for the entire Republic. In cases where it is suspected that an applicant may pose a security risk, inquiries are then also extended to the Security Police.

¹²³⁰ Jan Abraham Swanepoel statement to the police, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Durban, NASA.

Cape Town. 17.10. 1966.

ADDITIONAL EVIDENCE COLLECTED BY THE POLICE

STATEMENTS WITH NO DATES

The following statements were taken by the police, but they bore no dates. The first is by Albert Vercueil. This particular statement was definitely taken by the police as he was also interviewed by the Commission of Enquiry and the statement containing his evidence to the Commission was found. Thus it is safe to assume that this is the one taken by the police. The statement was taken in Pretoria, but it is undated, while the name of the Commissioner of Oaths is also missing.

ALBERT VERCUEIL¹²³¹

I work at F. A. Poole, Pretoria as foreman and reside at 669 17th Avenue, Rietfontein, Pretoria.

I know Demitrio Tsafendas. He began working at FA Poole on 7.2.64, in Pretoria as a welder and was in the firm's service to 10.7.64. His salary was 77 cents per hour. During the period he worked here he was absent from the service for 3 full days and 3 half days. I did not find the accused as a very good worker, but will say that he was an intelligent worker mainly because he quickly grasped when work was entrusted to him. However, I found him very sloppy in his work. I found him to be very friendly, but very opinionated. He would not, for example work according to the assignment, but as he decides.

The accused worked with several other people, but he could not agree with one of them. Accused was well-built and strong, and bullied the other Portuguese workers. He had fights with several white workers. I often admonished him about his sloppy work and because he always quarrelled with the other workmen. He was then usually very cocky and always placed the blame on the other party.

On July 10, 1964 I beseeched him for the sloppy work he performed, and when he began to mumble again, I told him to come to my office. In my office I told him: "Demetri you are no good to me. You are always causing trouble in the shops, and your work is no good. You must leave today. "He became extremely angry and put his finger in my face and it looked like he was going to attack me. He then said "You are just like your bloody ¹²³¹ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

Government. I will kill your Prime Minister yet.” I told him to go or I’ll call the police to remove him. Thereafter I never saw him again.

During the period he worked here he showed no signs of mental disorder or any other abnormality. Personally I would say that he is an intelligent person and completely mentally balanced. I now show some tools and work produced by the accused personally and performed to give you an idea of the degree of initiative he laid to the day.

MARTINUS PETRUS VAN WYK¹²³²

Proclamation Hill, Pretoria.

I am an adult, white male residing at the above address. For the past 37 years I have been employed at “F.A. POOLE” Engineering works, Pretoria West. During 1964, Dimitrio Tsafendas was also employed at the firm. He was a fitter and also did welding. He was quiet by nature and did not easily talk to us employees. He often spoke to the Bantu people. On a certain day he had a quarrel with one of the Bantu. I do not know which Bantu it was. I heard that the accused told the Bantu he would stab him with a knife, or words to that effect. The accused came across normal. He told me that he mastered various languages and that he travelled abroad extensively. After a few months I noticed that the accused no longer worked with the firm. I have never seen him again.

AUGUST KAREL OESTRICH¹²³³

I am employed at F.A. POOLE, Pretoria as a machine shop foreman. I know Dimitrio Tsafendas, who also worked for this firm. Dimitrio used to speak to me in German and I found him very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet. On one occasion he told me to complain about another man who interfered with his work. He then spoke with a raised and excited voice. This was the only time I saw him in a rage and excited. He never spoke to me about any politics. I never noticed anything abnormal about him, except that he had a strange look when I looked him straight in the eyes. He never gave me the impression that he was suffering from any mental disease. The day when he left our firm he told that he had a sister in Lourenço Marques and that he was going to see her. I never saw him again.

¹²³² Marthinus Petrus van Wyk statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹²³³ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

BERNARD MICHAEL GREENBERG¹²³⁴

E/M/A. Assembly Hotel, Main Rd. Green Point.

I am the manager of the above Hotel. On the 7th of July 1966 Dimitrio Tsafendas answered to an advert I had in the papers for a receptionist. He called on me, filled in a form half-way but I decided not to take him on and told him that he would not serve my purpose. The half-filled in form I now hand over to the police. I had a bit of conversation with him. He mentioned that he had been in some kind of embroidery business in Portugal or Spain, and also in Lourenço Marques! He also mentioned that he was a teacher of sorts. He said he spoke various languages of which I have jotted down on his application form i.e. "English, French, Italian, Portuguese + Greek." He dated his form the 6th - I had to change it to the 7th, which was the day of the interview. I think that he had ...¹²³⁵

NICK VLACHOPOULOS¹²³⁶

I am the owner of the Proclamation Hill Store, Pretoria West and married to the stepsister of DEMETRIO TSAFENDAS. During 1964 TSAFENDAS left the following articles at a second hand furniture shop in Pretoria West to be sold: 1 table, 4 chairs, 2 Big chairs, 1 Divan, 1 Bed. In the meantime TSAFENDAS disappeared from Pretoria and we lost trace of him. To the end of 1964 I received a letter from him in Beira requesting that the money for which his furniture was sold be sent to him. He gave his address in Beira as c/o Olimpia Court. At this time only the table and 4 chairs had been sold for R20. I gave the money to my mother in-law to forward to him. During the beginning of 1965 the rest of the furniture was sold for R20.00

¹²³⁴ Bernard Michael Greenberg statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹²³⁵ The document ended in that manner stating s.r.s (see reverse side), but there was nothing further.

¹²³⁶ Nick Vlachopoulos statement to the police, October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

and I also handed this money to my mother in-law. TSAFENDAS also left a locked pedal cycle at my shop which is still in my storeroom. I never associated with TSAFENDAS and know very little about his associations and activities.

Statement taken by ... Indecipherable name ... Commissioner of Oaths

Date: 2 ... (Indecipherable number) /10/66. Place: Pretoria

COMMENTS ON VLACHOPOULOS'S STATEMENT

Nick Vlachopoulos was also questioned by the Commission of Enquiry on October 21, 1966. He stated that Tsafendas “habitually ate a huge amount of food but never mentioned a tape worm.”¹²³⁷ According to Vlachopoulos’s sister Fotini Gavasiadis and son Mike, as well as Tsafendas’s half-sister Katerina Pnefma and first cousin, Mary Eintracht, Vlachopoulos had lied, for obvious reasons, stating that he “never associated with Tsafendas and knew very little about his associations and activities.” On the contrary, Vlachopoulos had a very good relationship with Tsafendas. He had heard about him from his wife, Eleni, Tsafendas’s half-sister, long before and was very anxious to meet him. That was why he had followed Marika, Victor and his wife to Lourenço Marques in 1963.¹²³⁸ ¹²³⁷ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

¹²³⁸ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Michael Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 14 April 2016.

It was Vlachopoulos who begged and convinced and later even gave money to J.J. van den Berg, the official of the South African embassy in Lourenço Marques, to turn a blind eye to the fact that Tsafendas was on South Africa's Stop list and to give him an entry visa. Furthermore, Vlachopoulos gave Tsafendas a rent-free apartment in Pretoria for eight months and Tsafendas regularly worked voluntarily in his café. Vlachopoulos often discussed politics with Tsafendas, as he sympathised with his ideas, but he never discussed issues in public and insisted that Tsafendas do the same. Vlachopoulos, along with Charles Nissiotis, even travelled to Cape Town to attend the summary trial to morally support Tsafendas as he wanted him to know that he had not forgotten him and that he was there at this difficult time.¹²³⁹

MISSING STATEMENTS

As already stated, several statements and other documents have gone missing from the National Archives of South Africa regarding Tsafendas's case. They include statements by Patrick O'Ryan (discussed earlier in this chapter), Eleni Vlachopoulos and Evangelia Nissiotis, Tsafendas's half-sisters, Tsafendas's statement to General van den Bergh, Tsafendas's two testimonies to the Commission of Enquiry into Verwoerd's death etc.¹²⁴⁰

Of course we are not in position to know which other ones have disappeared because there are no references to any other statements. It must also be noted that evidence relating to the Tsafendas case are not the only ones missing from the NASA. Important evidence has disappeared in several other cases, such as for example the Ahmed Timol original inquest, where 600 pages have gone missing.¹²⁴¹

This suggests that there was a systematic removal of documents from the archives. Researcher and filmmaker Liza Key and Dr. James Sanders, journalist, author and researcher specialising in South African affairs and history, told the author that in the early 1990s, with apartheid on the verge of collapse, the South African Security Police burned piles of ¹²³⁹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Michael Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 14 April 2016.

¹²⁴⁰ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹²⁴¹ Nicolson, 'Timol Inquest: He Was Murdered But Culprits are Dead, Court Rules', Daily Maverick, 12 October 2017.

documents in order to destroy evidence contradicting official verdicts, as well to protect themselves, their witnesses and their secret informants.¹²⁴²

Liza Key said about the missing documents from the National Archives:

“Access to government archives in South Africa is a frustrating business. Researchers are subjected to restricted access to the archive by, for example, the Department of Justice and have to go through lengthy bureaucratic manoeuvrings to find - when they are finally given permission to view the holdings - that vital documents are missing, have been redacted or intentionally destroyed. Literally tons of top secret security police documents were incinerated in the early 1990’s. Housed in government diesel they smouldered away for days on the police rugby field in Johannesburg. According to former security branch members, the order to destroy was given by then Minister of Police, Hernus Kriel to protect the names of their informers. The few police files that survive are in the National Archive but names and reference numbers on flimsy dust covers that promise to unlock secrets of the past, are empty inside.”¹²⁴³

Piers Pigou, International Crisis Group’s Senior Consultant for Southern Africa and TRC Investigator, told Liza Key about the destruction of police documents and the state of the South African National Archives: “... we’ve also seen significant numbers of records being destroyed ... Records that were found by the TRC’s own archival investigation team have subsequently gone missing [from the National Archives of South Africa] - records of the security establishment and so forth.”¹²⁴⁴

Yasmin Sooka, a TRC Commissioner, told Liza Key, “The Truth Commission in South Africa did have quite extraordinary powers. It had the power to search and seize information and of course in the South African case that was really necessary because the shredding machines were very, very busy as the former State was destroying records.”¹²⁴⁵

Simanga, head of Soweto Security Branch and former MK rebel, told Liza Key about the destruction of the police documents by the police:

“The Security Police and the Bureau of State Security, which was called BOSS at that time, destroyed thousands and thousands of documents that they had in their possession.

¹²⁴² Liza Key in a personal interview, 6 November 2016; Dr. James Sanders in a personal interview, 4 June 2016.

¹²⁴³ Liza Key in a personal interview, 6 November 2016.

¹²⁴⁴ Piers Pigou to Liza Key, n.d. Liza Key’s Personal Collection.

¹²⁴⁵ Yasmin Sooka to Liza Key, n.d. Liza Key’s Personal Collection.

They used to keep meticulous records of activists in the country. But now towards the formation of the Transitional Executive Council they destroyed all the documentation. And it's not a thousand pages or five thousands of pages, its millions of pages that they destroyed...

Well, they were trying to hide the systematic ways of their operation. The systematic way that they used to kill people. There were people who just disappeared. And they have records of who they killed. That is what they were hiding. They operated exactly like Nazi Germany. Remember, towards the end of World War 2, when Hitler saw that Berlin was about to be taken over, the concentration camps and all these places where people were kept, he ordered them destroyed. That's exactly what they did, to hide evidence.”¹²⁴⁶

General Johan van der Merwe, Former Head of the Apartheid Security Police and Chief of Police, told Liza Key about the destruction of police files:

“Well... you know... you know... it was such a problem to us when the amnesty hearings started because we had no records at our disposal... and the reason why that was done [the destruction of police files] was only to protect our informers... because in all these files, information, reports... were filed in the files. Although they used code-names for the informers the circumstances were such that any person reading the files would immediately have recognized that this can only be that that person was present. And we were afraid that should that [information] fall into the hands of the ANC many of our informers would have been exposed and that would have been the end - not only their careers - but in many cases their lives.”¹²⁴⁷

Asked by Liza Key “who gave the order for the destruction of files?” General van der Merwe replied, “That order actually came from the Minister Adriaan Vlok. He was not a Minister at that time. It was HERNUS KRIEL who was Minister at that time. HERNUS KRIEL last Minister of Law and Order.”¹²⁴⁸

Paul Erasmus, former Security Branch policeman, told Liza Key about the destruction of police files:

“Political events overtook us. There was a big destruction of the entire filing system at John Vorster Square [+ 1989/90] which was something like nine hundred thousand personnel files, weighing tons, tens of tons maybe more. Huge steel filing cabinets ... In the ¹²⁴⁶ Simanga to Liza Key, n.d. Liza Key's Personal Collection.

¹²⁴⁷ General Johan van der Merwe to Liza Key, n.d. Liza Key's Personal Collection.

¹²⁴⁸ General Johan van der Merwe to Liza Key, n.d. Liza Key's Personal Collection.

mid-80s, in fact, that filing system became an engineering problem and they had to bring government PWD engineers in because it looked like the filing system was going to fall out of the building. That a side of the building was going to collapse, which would have meant that the public of Johannesburg would have been subjected to something like nine hundred thousand personnel files of top secret documents lying on the M1 highway ...

In 89/90 the main filing system at John Vorster Square as I mentioned was destroyed. It took days, if not weeks. The filing system was sanitized but some of it remained intact. Probably ninety percent was gutted out by hard labour prisoners were brought in from Johannesburg prison. They parked the trucks in the Security Branch basement and the documents went... hundreds of thousands of files, sub files, all top secret. Secret or top secret files went to the Police Sports grounds at Arthur Bloch Park and were burnt with government diesel. Literally took days. I personally witnessed it.

Well as I mentioned these documents were taken to the police rugby field at Arthur Bloch Park which is still the Police Rugby field in Newlands. They [the docs] were burnt next to the rugby which took days. Tons and tons of documents. The reason that so much documentation existed was - apart from an obsession to document everything - we didn't have computers. One can only imagine the fear of these documents becoming public, because it wasn't only what was happening on the one side, this was a record of what was happening on the other side. Amongst these documents would have been details of who were the informers in the ANC head office, in Lusaka or London or whatever. Going all the way to the right-wing on the other side because we were investigating the right wing as well."¹²⁴⁹

In addition, Paul Erasmus told Liza Key about the treatment of documents he lent to the TRC:

"I am just amazed to find that I have got anything original left, the way it's been pillaged and plundered by the TRC. I had to go down to Cape Town to fetch them and it was just a disaster. We got ten times more stuff back than what I actually gave them but it was hundreds of unnecessary photocopies. Documents disappeared. I don't know who the TRC worked with and what they did with the papers but I certainly registered my extreme discontent. I gave them an inventory of documentation- original documentation and things that I had written which is quite considerable and I got back literally as you can see, this now is how I got it back.”¹²⁵⁰

¹²⁴⁹ Paul Erasmus to Liza Key, n.d. Liza Key's Personal Collection.

Another possibility is that this evidence in Tsafendas’s case was suppressed by General van den Bergh and the police and was never given to the Commission or to the Attorney-General. This would not be surprising since it is something that the police and van den Bergh himself had repeatedly done. That General van den Bergh, who was in charge of the investigation, attempted to downplay and omit from the Commission Tsafendas’s Communist beliefs and political activities seems to be in line with the disappearance of the statements. Since he had already withheld information about Tsafendas’s Communism, it seems logical he would seek to withhold other important information. It would not have been the first or last time that the general withheld evidence from the judiciary. For a detailed account of General van den Bergh’s possible role with the missing evidence, see Chapter 6, The Commission of Enquiry, page 1875.

Another person who was very probably questioned by the police, although no statement was found in the NASA, is Dr. E.L. Fisher, a psychiatrist and a United Party MP. Dr. Fisher was the first doctor to treat Dr. Verwoerd after Tsafendas’s attack in Parliament. We know this because the doctor gave a detailed account of his actions to the South African press. He told the Daily Dispatch, “We did everything we could to stop the bleeding. We gave mouth-to-mouth breathing and tried artificial respiration... we kept on treating him and trying respiratory treatment ... but by then he had no pulse at all. It was hopeless.”¹²⁵¹ Other doctors who rushed to help Dr. Verwoerd, like Dr. Venter, Dr. Radford and Dr. van der Verwe, were questioned by the police and their statements were found in the archives. However, it should be noted that no statements were found in the Archives from two other doctors who were present, G. de V Morrison and Maud Clark, which could mean that not all doctors at the assassination scene were questioned or that statements made by these two doctors also went missing.

What makes Dr. Fisher’s possible statement of some importance is what he told Die Vaderland the day after the assassination. He said, “It was clear that the assassin must have received training in the art of handling a knife. Each time, the knife slipped through the ribs, ¹²⁵⁰ Paul Erasmus to Liza Key, n.d. Liza Key’s Personal Collection.

¹²⁵¹ Daily Dispatch, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Assassinated’, 7 September 1966: 1.

showing that it was not handled haphazardly as a usual stabbing would be carried out.”¹²⁵²

Later the Commission of Enquiry into Dr. Verwoerd’s death wrote in its final report:

*“The doctor who carried out the post-mortem examination informed the Commission that there were no grounds for the rumour that the wounds had been inflicted by an expert stabber. He described them as quite ordinary. The Commission had the opportunity of inspecting all the photographs showing the position and extent of the wounds and is in agreement with this opinion.”*¹²⁵³

The author agrees with the Commission’s conclusion and the issue of whether Tsafendas was an “expert stabber” is discussed later on the Commission of Enquiry Chapter. However, it seems most unlikely that the police would fail to question a doctor and an MP who was present at the assassination and had rushed to help Dr. Verwoerd, particularly after the doctor’s reported comments on the knife handling.

Finally, Mario Ferreira, Panagiotis Peroglou and Elias Constantaras stated to the author that they were questioned by the police, but their statements were not found in the archives. This is what they remember telling the police:

MARIO FERREIRA

Mario Ferreira was twenty-one at the time and worked at the Table Bay Power Station. He signed Tsafendas’s documents when he was employed and spoke to him on several occasions while they both worked there. He was questioned by the police after the assassination, as also were two of his colleagues at the Power Station (Owen Smorenberg and Redvers Quintin Wakfer). He remembers being questioned by Detective Sergeant van Wyk not only because he was Tsafendas’s colleague, but also because they were both Portuguese. Ferreira does not remember now whether his statement was written down or recorded, whether he signed it, or what he told Dt. Sgt van Wyk. However, he still remembers Tsafendas and had found him to be “very polite and easy-going. He never got excited or agitated. He was very calm ... I found him a quiet and reserved guy, perhaps a bit introvert. He never expanded on his conversations. If I asked him something he would answer, but he never expanded on any of ¹²⁵² Crowd and Revo, The Pattern of Assassination, p. 20.

¹²⁵³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II D, Paragraph 12.

the questions he answered.” Ferreira saw no signs of insanity in Tsafendas. “I saw nothing schizo about him or violent about him or fanatical about him, or abnormal.”¹²⁵⁴

PANAGIOTIS PEROGLOU

Peroglou met Tsafendas in Mary Scott’s boarding house where he would take his meals. He remembers being questioned at his shop sometime after the assassination, but does not remember the exact day nor by how many policemen. He does not remember what he was asked by the police nor what he told them, but he believes he must have told them everything he remembered about Tsafendas. His memory is of Tsafendas being “very well mannered, especially with women and elderly people... very talkative and friendly ... he had a lot of respect for women. He would bring them a chair or he would offer his chair ... he was very well educated, especially about Greece’s history and Christianity ...” Peroglou “never got the impression that he might be insane. He never did or said anything to make us think he was insane. He was definitely sane.” Peroglou does not remember Tsafendas talking politics.¹²⁵⁵

ELIAS CONSTANTARAS

Constantaras also met Tsafendas in Mary Scott’s boarding house and became a good friend. He clearly remembers being interviewed by “two or three policemen” who visited him at his work “two or three days after the assassination.” One of the policemen had a portable typewriter and typed his statement, which he signed at the end of the questioning. Constantaras does not remember exactly what he told the police, but says he “must have told them everything” he knew, for instance that Tsafendas talked constantly about politics and that he had fought with the Communists in the Greek Civil War.

Constantaras is certain he mentioned that Tsafendas called Dr. Verwoerd “Hitler’s best student.” He said, “I remember saying this because they asked me why he called him that and I said, ‘I don’t know, he did not say, I just overheard him saying it.’” Constantaras said, “I had to say it because there were others present at the time and I knew that they would have told the police about it, so it would have looked bad on me if I had kept it out. He (Tsafendas) had told us that Dr. Verwoerd was doing to the Africans what Hitler did to the Jews, but I couldn’t say this to the police and fortunately they did not ask me anything else about it.” Constantaras remembers talking about Tsafendas’s time in the boarding house, but not the details. He does not remember what else he was asked or said.

¹²⁵⁴ Mario Ferreira in a personal interview, 21 May 2019.

¹²⁵⁵ Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

Tsafendas had given Constantaras a copy of Jean-Paul Sartre’s Anti-Semite and Jew, and as for his mental state, he remembers him as being “perfectly fine. He was not insane. None of us ever got the impression that he could be insane ... I was impressed by the way he was talking ... he talked very nicely, he knew how to speak properly. He sounded like an educated man ... he was very friendly and easy-talking with everyone ...” Constantaras does not remember if he told any of this to the police.¹²⁵⁶

OTHER DOCUMENTS COLLECTED BY THE POLICE

The archives also contain several letters, memoranda and reports from various institutions, but most of them contain repetition and information we have already seen, or information of no relevance to the case. However, the following are documents of some importance.

THE GRAFTON STATE HOSPITAL REPORT

On September 16, 1966, the US embassy in Cape Town gave to the South African authorities a report on Tsafendas by the Grafton State Hospital, North Grafton, Massachusetts, USA.¹²⁵⁷

This document later became available to the Commission of Enquiry and was mentioned in its final report. The Grafton document is of major importance since it reveals that Tsafendas had “faked mental illness” in the past, something that was not revealed during the trial and received very little attention from the Commission of Enquiry.

Tsafendas was admitted to this hospital on March 27, 1946 and remained there until July 31, 1947. The five-page hospital report, which has two appendices listing his movements in the United States, stated that when he was first admitted, Tsafendas “thought he had a tapeworm” and was “hardly convinced he hasn’t,” but he was “fairly co-operative and in good contact with the environment.” The report also stated that that Tsafendas had told the US Immigration authorities he would commit suicide if they deported him, and that “he faked mental illness because he was afraid to ship out because of the numerous leakings of ships.”

¹²⁵⁶ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

¹²⁵⁷ Letter of the USA Embassy in Cape Town to the South African Security Branch, 3 October 1966. Correctional Service. Subject: Demitrio Tsafendas. File: 80/0043 A123 Vol. 1. NASA.

Furthermore, according to the report, Tsafendas deteriorated in Grafton as time went on. He became “very agitated, assaultive and showed delusions and had to be put in seclusion at times.” On December 12, 1946, he was diagnosed with “schizophrenia, hebephrenic type, with deterioration: prognosis poor.”

The report also contains extensive references by Tsafendas to a man named Thomas Tuff. According to the report, Tsafendas talked often about this man, who he said was a missionary of the Christian Church and had a big influence on him. Years later, Tsafendas spoke at length to Father Minas Constandinou, Father Spiros Randos, Patrick O’Ryan and Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis about a man named Tom, who he said he met at a hospital in the USA. He told these witnesses that Tom was a missionary of the Christian Church and the one who introduced him to the sect. He told them Tom claimed to have a tapeworm inside him which ate his food. Tsafendas did not believe this story and concluded that Tom made it up in order to be found insane and exempted from service in the American military, since this was during the Second World War. Nevertheless, Tsafendas also told these witnesses that he copied Tom’s tapeworm story and used it as his own. Naturally, Tsafendas did not tell the hospital doctors about Tom and the tapeworm and the hospital report makes no mention of it. Tsafendas told the story to O’Ryan and about thirty years later to the priests on separate occasions but with exactly the same details.¹²⁵⁸

The report concludes with an account of Tsafendas’s “clinical course” at the hospital, stating that he smeared the walls with faces, claimed to hear voices from the radiators, and was disoriented as to place and situation. It said, “He is wont to assume silly, grimacing expressions and is prone to misidentify the attendants and the examiner.” The last paragraph of the report stated that a course of electric shock treatment had been started and Tsafendas had shown improvement; he was no longer in seclusion and was oriented as to place and person but not as to time. It said “He could safely be deported to his native country, accompanied by one attendant.” The last line of the report said, “Diagnosis: schizophrenia hebephrenic type. Condition: Improved.”¹²⁵⁹

¹²⁵⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

¹²⁵⁹ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

1941 REPORT BY THE COMMISSIONER FOR IMMIGRATION AND ASIATIC AFFAIRS

This is a report about Tsafendas written by the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs in 1941 and sent to the Commissioner of the South African Police, thus clearly it was in the police files. The report concerns Tsafendas's appearance in court accused of being in South Africa illegally because no permit for permanent residence had been issued to him. A fine was imposed, which he paid. He was then given a temporary permit and released. The report states that Tsafendas's application for permanent residence was refused after the South African Consul-General in Lourenço Marques advised the police that Tsafendas was a "half-caste" and had been dismissed from employment at a kiosk in Portuguese South Africa (Mozambique) on account of his Communist leanings.¹²⁶⁰ ¹²⁶⁰ Report of the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, 14 October 1941. K150, Vol. 3, File: W.D. 10/10/4102. Subject: Enquiry regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis. NASA.

CONCLUSION ABOUT THE POLICE INVESTIGATION

In the course of this chapter, we have looked at all the statements taken by the police during their investigation into Dr. Verwoerd's assassination. In total, 116 statements were found in the National Archives of South Africa, although many other witnesses were questioned, such as Patrick O'Ryan and the crew of the Eleni, whose statements were not found. Most importantly, we have seen Tsafendas's own words in the two statements he gave to the police while he was in custody. In clear and forthright terms, Tsafendas stated that he killed Dr. Verwoerd for political reasons. He said he was "disgusted" with his policies, considered him not to be "representative of all South African people" and wanted to see someone "who would represent all South African people," and he believed that by killing him "a change of policy would take place."

Several witnesses testified that Tsafendas was a Communist who opposed apartheid and considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant, a dictator and "Hitler's best student" since he was applying some of Hitler's policies to the Black South Africans. Tsafendas himself admitted that he had been a member of the South African Communist Party. Witnesses also testified that Tsafendas had joined the Greek Communist Party and fought in the Greek civil war as a member of the party's military wing, the DSE.

Nowhere in either of his statements does Tsafendas mention a tapeworm or say anything that would suggest he was schizophrenic. He stated clearly that it was his own idea to kill Dr. Verwoerd, that no-one asked him to do it, and that he did it because he thought "a change of policy would take place" and "it was the right thing to do." The fact that not one of the 116 people questioned by police mentioned the tapeworm is of major significance since the defence at Tsafendas's summary trial would claim the tapeworm was central to Tsafendas's existence, that he had hosted it since he was a child and that it controlled his life. Tsafendas spoke about the tapeworm to all members of his defence team, plus the psychiatrists for his defence and for the state. Yet he had never mentioned it anywhere else up till then. Not a single person was aware that Tsafendas believed he had a tapeworm, not even his family. Tsafendas told no one all those years but suddenly, while in custody, he started telling everyone about a tapeworm.

Statements made to the police during their investigation portray Tsafendas as a Communist, someone who talks constantly about politics, an opponent of apartheid, colonialism and slavery, who strongly supports the independence of Mozambique. He is described as intelligent, well-read and knowledgeable. Witnesses say he is compassionate and though poor himself, gives money to people in need, such as poor Whites in Durban and his flatmate, John Bornman. The statements are compatible with what Tsafendas himself told the police and with what was said by witnesses interviewed by the author who were not questioned by the police.

There are also contradictory statements by witnesses. Many described Tsafendas as well-mannered and polite, while others considered him selfish and messy. Since social behaviour is a subjective matter, it is not surprising that different people formed different opinions of the man. Several also testified that Tsafendas discussed politics with them while others claimed that he did not. It is perfectly normal that a person would not talk about politics to every person he met, especially in Tsafendas's case, when his views opposed those of most White South Africans at the time. There were certainly others who talked politics with Tsafendas, but did not tell the police out of fear or to protect him.

A very important issue is what happened to Tsafendas while he was in custody, how he was "punished" brutally and systematically by the South African police. This unprecedented physical and psychological torture is something that has never been discussed before. We also saw in this chapter how Tsafendas, although initially he maintained to the police that he had killed Dr. Verwoerd for political reasons, later told his defence that a tapeworm controlled his life.

A factor of crucial importance concerned PIDE, the Portuguese security police. From Lisbon, the Director of PIDE in Portugal ordered the PIDE office in Mozambique not to reveal to the South African police any information "indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of Mozambique." It hid the fact that PIDE had held a file on Tsafendas (Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis) since 1938, containing details of his activities since then, including his five arrests for political reasons and the fact that he was banned from entering Mozambique from 1951 to 1963 due to his Communist and anti-colonial activities.¹²⁶¹ The fact that PIDE had a file on Tsafendas has remained unknown till now. However, as we have also seen, the South African police were warned of the Portuguese attitude by the South African embassy in Lisbon only two days after the assassination. Stating that Tsafendas was a Communist who had been arrested several times by the Portuguese police, the embassy told their national police investigators that the Portuguese authorities would attempt to downgrade or hide Tsafendas's political activities.

¹²⁶¹ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

What puzzled many people about the assassination, both at the time and long after, was how Tsafendas managed to secure and hold onto a job in Parliament if he was "insane." In the first place, as we have seen and we will see later in detail, Tsafendas had three very good references. One was from Limasollu Naci College in Istanbul, one from Fries & Son in Frankfurt and one from Dimitris Apostolidis, a financial supporter and member of the ruling National Party. More germane, but a question that was never asked, was how Tsafendas managed to work for five or six months in a demanding teaching job at Limasollu Naci, the most prestigious private language college in Istanbul. Tsafendas spoke about it in his statement, the police must have had the reference, and his Istanbul employment was also reported in the South African Press.

However, no-one seemed to bother, then or later, –to check on the college and his work there. Had anyone done so, it would have been quickly apparent that six months' teaching foreign languages was much more demanding of any person, whatever his mental state, than carrying messages and bringing meals to newsmen in the Cape Town Parliament. His Istanbul employment, was also a major contradiction to what was stated at his summary trial. Neither the police nor the Press at the time paid much attention to the college and this information was just briefly mentioned.

Important information was also given to the police by the South African embassy in Washington – that Tsafendas had been hospitalised in the United States as unstable but not insane. The South African police were also given Tsafendas's medical report from Grafton State Hospital in Massachusetts, USA, which contained information regarding his time in the United States and his various hospitalisations there. The Grafton hospital's diagnosis of Tsafendas was "schizophrenia-Hebephrenic type. Condition: Improved." However, the report also contained significant information regarding Tsafendas's medical history -- the fact that in 1943 he had "faked mental illness because he was afraid to ship out because of the numerous leakings (sinkings) of ships."¹²⁶²

What's more, at least six of the Eleni crew testified that Tsafendas had also faked mental illness to avoid army service. As we have seen, these statements, along with others, have gone missing from NASA, but the fact remains that they were taken at the time by the ¹²⁶² Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

South African police. As we will see in ensuing chapters on the Summary Trial and the Commission of Enquiry, the vast majority of this information gathered by the South African police would not be used in court and would not be publicised. Only a very, very small amount would play a role at the Commission of Enquiry and almost none at all at Tsafendas's summary trial. Why and how will be examined in the respective chapters.

According to Professor John Dugard, based on the evidence presented here, "The picture comes across clearly of Tsafendas as a political person who was not insane when he killed Dr. Verwoerd. The evidence points overwhelmingly in this direction. Tsafendas was a political revolutionary, whose assassination of Dr. Verwoerd was motivated by a hatred of Dr. Verwoerd and all he stood for. He was not an insane killer but a political assassin determined to rid South Africa of the architect of apartheid."¹²⁶³ ¹²⁶³ Professor John Dugard in personal interviews with the author, 31 August 2016 and 8 September 2016.

CHAPTER 5

TSAFENDAS'S SUMMARY TRIAL

THE JUDICIARY IN APARTHEID SOUTH AFRICA¹²⁶⁴

The South African legal system was an integral part of the repressive machinery of the apartheid system¹²⁶⁵ and was seriously damaged by it. Constitutional law and administrative law were unashamedly used by apartheid in its exercise in racist social engineering, though today are undergoing a process of rehabilitation under a new Constitution.¹²⁶⁶ Over the years, several prominent jurists and scholars had exposed the biased and non-independent nature of the judiciary during apartheid, and how the National Party had appointed judges who supported its policies. The list of prominent jurists and legal experts who have written about and exposed the disgraceful conduct of the South African judiciary during apartheid is endless. For example:

- In 1986, Nicholas Haysom had exposed the bias and inaccuracy of the Kannemeyer Commission of Enquiry into the Langa shootings (discussed in detail in the following chapter).¹²⁶⁷
- In 1998, the TRC exposed the inaccuracies of the Commission of Enquiry into the Sharpeville Massacre (discussed in detail in the following chapter).
- In 2017, Judge Billy Mothle ruled at the conclusion of an inquest that Ahmed Timol was murdered, thereby overruling the verdict of suicide of the original inquest. Judge Mothle said in his judgement that the magistrate at the time had relied on “a limited version of events.” Archbishop Desmond Tutu said: “It is sad that it took so long and there are many other TRC matters that haven’t been resolved.”¹²⁶⁸ ¹²⁶⁴ For some of the most important political trials of the 1950s and 1960s see Chapter 1.

¹²⁶⁵ Southern Africa the Imprisoned Society (SATIS), Political Trials in South Africa: Judicial Instruments of Repression, (London: SATIS, 1985), p. 5.

¹²⁶⁶ John Dugard, “The South African Judiciary and International Law in Apartheid Era.” South African Journal on Human Rights, Vol. 14, Issue 1 (1998), p. 111.

¹²⁶⁷ Haysom, N. (1986) The Langa Shootings and the Kannemeyer Commission of Enquiry.

¹²⁶⁸ Greg Nicolson, ‘Timol Inquest: He Was Murdered But Culprits are Dead, Court Rules’, Daily Maverick, 12 October 2017. Retrieved from: <https://www.dailymaverick.co.za/article/2017-10-12-timol-inquest-he-was-murdered-but-culprits-are-dead-court-rules/>

Sydney Kentridge QC wrote in 1998: "In South Africa, one after another inquest into deaths in detention found that 'no one was to blame' as the security police, the judiciary and district surgeons conspired to keep torture and murder under wraps."¹²⁶⁹ Ahmed Kathrada wrote on the same issue in 2004, "In later years, inquest after inquest – in the cases of Imam Haron, Ahmed Timol, Neil Aggett, to name but a few – returned verdicts of suicide. I cannot recall a single case among the scores of deaths under 90-day detention in which an inquest magistrate held the security police responsible."¹²⁷⁰

According to Adam Sitze, Professor of Law, Commissions of Inquiry under apartheid very often hid more than they revealed. A typical example, he wrote, was the Sharpeville Enquiry, which transformed itself from a fact-finding device into a "whitewashing machine."¹²⁷¹ Austin T. Turk, Professor of Criminology at the University of California, wrote in 1982 that apartheid South Africa may well have had "the world's most elaborate legal structure for the repression of political resistance of all kinds."¹²⁷² According to Peter Parker and Joyce Mokhesi-Parker, the administration of justice under apartheid "systematically favoured the state ... devised rules that turned suspects into convicts ... and moulded the rule of law to serve the law of the legal system in enforcing economic, political and racial oppression."¹²⁷³ In effect, apartheid suborned the law and used it for its own ends.

Professor John Dugard, a leading academic critic of the apartheid legal order, has expressed "outrage and shame" about it, saying that it had "undermined faith and confidence in the whole South African legal system."¹²⁷⁴ In 1978, he characterised the apartheid legal system as an:

"old-fashioned, inquisitional system modelled upon a code produced by the Spanish Inquisition, one which bears little resemblance to the enlightened codes of procedure found in modern Western European countries."¹²⁷⁵ [It] is not a body of rules which preserves domestic ¹²⁶⁹ Quoted in Bizos, No One to Blame? A Personal Account of Inquests into Some Deaths in Detention under Apartheid, p. vii.

¹²⁷⁰ Kathrada, Memoirs, p. 384.

¹²⁷¹ Sitze, The Impossible Machine: A Genealogy of South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission, p. 157, 311.

¹²⁷² Turk, Political Criminality: The Defiance and Defence of Authority, p. 146.

¹²⁷³ Peter Parker and Joyce Parker-Mokhesi, In the Shadow of Sharpeville: Apartheid and Criminal Justice, (Houndmills, Basingstoke, Hampshire and London: Macmillan Press Ltd, 1998), p. 3.

¹²⁷⁴ Heinz Klug, "Review: Law Before and After Apartheid: Abel's Sociolegal Analysis." Law and Social Inquiry, Volume 25, Issue 2 (Spring 2000), p. 659-660.

¹²⁷⁵ Dugard, Human Rights and the South African Legal Order, p. 273.

security and advances commercial opportunity, but a discriminatory order which promotes personal insecurity and denies material advancement.¹²⁷⁶

Professor Dugard also wrote later:

“A legal system that excludes 70% of its population from the franchise, that excludes 70% of its population from owning land in 87% of the country, that arbitrarily deprives 8 million people of their nationality, that has forcibly relocated many millions of people on account of their race, that formally executes some 160 persons per year, that authorizes repression in the name of national security and that permits international aggression, [is] . . . a grossly abnormal one. . . .”¹²⁷⁷

On the subject of Commissions of Inquiry during the apartheid years, Professor Dugard told the author:

“One of the most disgraceful things about South Africa during this period was the way in which judicial commissions were manipulated, and also the way in which inquest inquiries were conducted and the magistrates just ignored the evidence. [The judges] knew how to make a finding that would help the government. That was very clear.”¹²⁷⁸

As for the political trials, Professor Dugard wrote:

“A highly visible, discriminatory set of rules of procedure has been constructed for the South African political trial, rules that seriously undermine the value of the political trial as a process of judicial authentication. Misgivings have been expressed about the ‘drastic process’ both inside South Africa and abroad.”¹²⁷⁹

In his 1998 article, The South African Judiciary and International Law During the Apartheid Era, Professor Dugard set out several instances where the Appellate Division handed down decisions which favoured the State but militated against the interests of justice. These included the court’s approval of South Africa’s unlawful integration of Namibia and the war which followed, making it culpable in part for thousands of deaths; its brushing aside of human rights treaties in regard to the Group Areas Act, thus permitting the Act to be applied in a racial manner; its failure to consider international human rights provisions in a dispute over the rights of the indigent to counsel; its ruling that South African security forces ¹²⁷⁶ Dugard, Human Rights and the South African Legal Order, p. 401.

¹²⁷⁷ Klug, “Review: Law Before and After Apartheid: Abel’s Sociolegal Analysis”, p. 659-660.

¹²⁷⁸ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

¹²⁷⁹ Dugard, Human Rights and the South African Legal Order, p. 273-274.

were permitted to arrest persons in a foreign country, which ran counter to international law.¹²⁸⁰

Professor Dugard wrote after examining some cases that:

“One must therefore assume - an assumption endorsed by the refusal of the court to consult a single international law treatise on a question of international law - that the court did not, quite frankly, give the proverbial damn about international law!” One ruling by the Appellate Division which was hailed as progressive was that South African courts had no competence to try a person abducted from another state. However, this decision was made after the fall of apartheid, showing that the judges were keen to go with the new order.¹²⁸¹

The TRC's findings regarding the role of the judiciary during apartheid were also very critical:

“Part of the reason for the longevity of apartheid was the superficial adherence to ‘rule by law’ by the National Party (NP), whose leaders craved the aura of legitimacy that ‘the law’ bestowed on their harsh injustice ... In the intervening thirty years, however, the courts and the organised legal profession generally and subconsciously or unwittingly connived in the legislative and executive pursuit of injustice, as was pointed out by a few at the time and acknowledged by so many at the hearing. Perhaps the most common form of subservience can be captured in the maxim qui tacet consentire (silence gives consent). There were, nevertheless, many parts of the profession that actively contributed to the entrenchment and defence of apartheid through the courts.”¹²⁸²

The TRC's report contained some examples of how the judiciary had aided apartheid:

- A. Prosecutors who knew that police interrogators had used brutal means to extract information from suspects, but still protected them from being questioned too closely on their methods.
- B. Attorneys-general who too easily launched prosecutions or granted ‘no-bail’ certificates on flimsy evidence.
- C. Magistrates who uncritically granted police search and seizure warrants, and whose inquests conveniently found no one responsible for injuries and deaths in detention.

¹²⁸⁰ Dugard, “The South African Judiciary and International Law in Apartheid Era”, p. 110-126.

¹²⁸¹ Dugard, “The South African Judiciary and International Law in Apartheid Era”, p. 110-126.

¹²⁸² Truth and Reconciliation Commission (hereafter cited as TRC), Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report (hereafter cited as TRC Report): Volume Four, (1998), p. 101-102.

- D. Attorneys who failed to accept unpopular political persons as clients, perhaps for fear of social ostracism or the loss of lucrative commercial clients.
- E. Advocates who were willing to appear for the government in civil actions in which some of the basic building blocks of apartheid, such as racial classification, influx control or group areas, were being attacked as unreasonable and invalid exercises of executive discretion.
- F. Judges who, in the greatest injustices of all, too easily made sense of the illogical and the unjust in legislative language, and who too quickly accepted the word of the police or official witnesses in preference to that of the accused. Kathleen Satchwell in her submission dealt extensively with the case of her client Linda Mogale, who was assaulted and tortured in detention. Despite evidence to this effect, the judge nevertheless rejected “as impossible” the idea of a process of police violence and system of intimidation.¹²⁸³

As for the role of the judges during apartheid, the TRC concluded:

“In the greatest injustices of all, judges who too easily made sense of the illogical and the unjust in legislative language, and who too quickly accepted the word of the police or official witness in preference to that of the accused. Kathleen Satchwell in her submission deals extensively with the case of Linda Mogale, her client who was assaulted and tortured in detention. Despite evidence to this effect, the judge nevertheless rejected ‘as impossible’ a process of police violence and system of intimidation.”¹²⁸⁴

However, the criticism of the judiciary by the TRC seems still very mild in comparison to the real extent of the role it played under apartheid, especially with regard to the role of judges in Government-appointed Commissions of Inquiry. Historically the South African judiciary reflected a largely independent stance. In 1948, when the National Party came to power, most judges supported the old United Party, with a handful backing the NP. The new government lost no time in changing the balance in its favour. Especially during the 1950s and particularly after L.C. Steyn¹²⁸⁵ became Chief Justice, political appointments

¹²⁸³ TRC, TRC Report: Volume Four, p. 102-103.

¹²⁸⁴ TRC, TRC Report: Volume Four, p. 103.

¹²⁸⁵ Steyn's appointment was hugely controversial at the time as he was chosen over Justice Oliver Schreiner, a man described as “the greatest chief justice South Africa never had.” The convention at the time was that the position of Chief Justice was given to the longest-serving judge in the Appellate Division. At the time, that person was Schreiner, while Steyn was a much more junior man. However, what Steyn had that Schreiner didn't was his support for the National Party. Due to the fact that Schreiner was not a supporter of the NP, he was became the rule rather than the exception.¹²⁸⁶ The government appointed judges it knew would support its policies, selecting sympathetic Afrikaner Nationalists in preference to distinguished members of the Bar whose political orientation might lean to the Left. In this way, the ruling party changed the character of the entire judiciary.¹²⁸⁷

In 1977, according to an estimate by Professor Dugard, more than half of South Africa's judges favoured the ruling National Party. Furthermore, the same handful of judges heard virtually all political cases between 1978 and 1982. His figures showed that 17% of the judiciary heard 84% of all the political cases, and four judges heard over 50% of them.¹²⁸⁸ Although there are no official figures for 1966, Professor Dugard told the author that the situation was even worse then and the figures certainly higher.¹²⁸⁹

Thus no eyebrows were raised when Judge Andries Beyers was named to preside at Tsafendas's summary trial and Judge Jacques Theodore van Wyk became the sole member of the Commission of Enquiry into Dr. Verwoerd's assassination. Both judges were NP supporters who favoured racial separation, and both had served the National Party and apartheid in various high-profile cases.¹²⁹⁰ Professor John Dugard told the author:

“So, during the 1950s, most political appointments took place. The government was determined only to appoint its supporters and the result was that Beyers and van Wyk were both appointed. But I think, in fairness to van Wyk, he was, intellectually, one of the better judges. And Beyers, too, was intellectually good ... they were intellectual giants, so to speak, amongst the National Party judges. So I suspect that the government was very careful when it came to appointing judges to hear the Tsafendas case, and so that would explain why both Beyers and van Wyk were involved. They were certainly political persons and they owed their appointments to the government.”¹²⁹¹ twice ignored for the position. (Mungo Sogot, 'Battle Lines Drawn Over Chief Justice', Mail and Guardian, 20 September 1996. Retrieved from <https://mg.co.za/article/1996-09-20-battle-lines-drawn-over-chief-justice>).

¹²⁸⁶ Dugard, "The South African Judiciary and International Law in Apartheid Era", p. 113; Sachs, Justice in South Africa, p. 257.

¹²⁸⁷ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016; Sachs, Justice in South Africa, p. 257.

¹²⁸⁸ Lawyers Committee for Human Rights, The War Against Children: South Africa's Youngest Victims, p. 141; See also Dugard, J. (1978) Human Rights in South Africa Legal Order.

¹²⁸⁹ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 29 January 2016.

¹²⁹⁰ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

¹²⁹¹ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

DEFENCE'S PREPARATIONS¹²⁹²

After visiting Tsafendas and concluding that he was not right in his mind, his defence team set out to establish a case for insanity and proceeded to appoint psychiatrists to examine him.¹²⁹³ By this time, the media and politicians were already declaring Tsafendas a “madman”; given the volatile political situation, they had to do this to preserve the sense that the state was in charge. According to David Bloomberg, when the defence team said they were going to contend that he was insane, Tsafendas “sort of shrugged his shoulders... and said, ‘Well, you just do whatever you think is best.’”¹²⁹⁴

The first specialist physician was Dr. Harold Cooper, a psychiatrist who had worked in psychiatric hospitals in Johannesburg and Cape Town and had subsequently gone into private practice. He was a strange choice, given that in the 1951 case, Rex v. Kennedy, the court refused to accept his psychiatric evaluation. Dr. Cooper had declared the accused in this case to be “mentally disordered,” (as he was later to find Tsafendas), but the judge dismissed this opinion as based on improbable evidence and found the accused fit to stand trial.¹²⁹⁵ The other two psychiatrists were Dr. James William MacGregor, a specialist psychiatrist and neurologist since 1937 who practised in Cape Town; and Dr. Aubrey Zabow, who was working in a private practice in Cape Town and was also a part-time consultant in psychiatry at Groote Schuur Hospital and the Somerset Hospital.

Dr. MacGregor was the first to examine Tsafendas, on September 29. Tsafendas's responses were similar to those he had given at his meeting with his appointed defence team. After a ninety-minute examination in the presence of Bloomberg, Dr. MacGregor immediately diagnosed him as a paranoid schizophrenic, but requested a further consultation to decide whether he was certifiable. He went on to examine Tsafendas on a further two occasions, on October 4 and 11, for ninety minutes each time.¹²⁹⁶

Dr. Zabow examined Tsafendas the following day (September 30), also for ninety ¹²⁹² Due to lack of other sources, a lot of the information regarding the defence team's preparations is taken from David Bloomberg's memoir, My Times. However, we cannot take everything that Bloomberg has stated as unimpeachable, since his account contains some evident inaccuracies.

¹²⁹³ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 78-79.

¹²⁹⁴ David Bloomberg in a personal interview, 6 April 2014.

¹²⁹⁵ Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Responsibility of Mentally Deranged Persons and Related Matters, (Pretoria: Government Printer, 1967), p. 17; Tiffany Fawn Jones, Psychiatry, Mental Institutions, and the Mad in Apartheid South Africa, (New York: Routledge, 2012), p. 103.

¹²⁹⁶ Dr J.W. MacGregor's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA minutes and in the presence of Bloomberg. He concluded that the accused was psychotic and suffering from schizophrenia and was certifiable, but asked to examine him again. He too examined him on two more occasions for ninety minutes each time, on October 4 and 11.¹²⁹⁷ Dr. Cooper examined Tsafendas on October 1, again for ninety minutes and in the company of Bloomberg. The doctor declared that he had no doubt Tsafendas was mentally disordered, but needed to see him again before he could offer a final opinion.¹²⁹⁸ Dr. Cooper would examine Tsafendas again on October 4, 11 and 14, spending a total of six hours with him, and his diagnosis remained unchanged.¹²⁹⁹ Each psychiatrist examined Tsafendas for the first time in the presence of Bloomberg, and the second time on his own. The third time (October 11), all the psychiatrists examined him together. Tsafendas's responses will be examined later in this chapter.

The last doctor appointed by the defence to examine Tsafendas was Dr. Hendrik Muller, a specialist physician with nineteen years' experience in private practice, who happened to be Judge Beyers's personal doctor. Dr. Muller's brief was to examine Tsafendas physically to determine whether he had a tapeworm.¹³⁰⁰ The consultation took place on October 12, but Dr. Muller did not carry out a physical examination as he was supposed to, having concluded from his discussions with Tsafendas that he did not have a tapeworm.¹³⁰¹

When Bloomberg became aware that Tsafendas was examined on the night of the assassination by the psychiatrist Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky, he asked for and received a copy of his detailed report. Dr. Sakinofsky diagnosed Tsafendas to be suffering from paraphrenic schizophrenia, mentally disordered in terms of the Act and thus certifiable.¹³⁰² Bloomberg stated in his memoir, and this is one of his inaccuracies, that Dr. Sakinofsky examined Tsafendas on two more occasions before Bloomberg was appointed as Tsafendas's defence lawyer on September 26, and had come to the conclusion that Tsafendas was schizophrenic. In this he is mistaken. Dr. Sakinofsky testified during the summary trial that after his first examination, he saw Tsafendas for a second time on October 6, one month after the

¹²⁹⁷ Dr Aubrey Zabow's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA

¹²⁹⁸ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 79.

¹²⁹⁹ Dr Harold Cooper's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 17 October 1966, p. 20. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹³⁰⁰ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 79.

¹³⁰¹ Dr. Hendrik Muller's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹³⁰² Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 82.

assassination.¹³⁰³ Bloomberg was appointed on September 26, ten days before Dr. Sakinofsky saw Tsafendas for the second time, and therefore Bloomberg's claim that the doctor had examined his client three times before September 26 is incorrect.

Dr. Sakinofsky, knowing it was "extremely likely" that he would be called to testify as one of the "medical witnesses," since he had examined Tsafendas on the evening of the assassination, wrote on September 19, 1966, to the Medical Director of the Ochsenszoll Krankenhaus Hospital in Hamburg, requesting Tsafendas's medical record.¹³⁰⁴ The hospital would eventually send the record on October 3 and copies would be given to Willem M. van den Berg, the Attorney-General of Cape Town and prosecutor in the case.¹³⁰⁵ Dr. Sakinofsky "wondered what was happening" about his own medical report on Tsafendas and telephoned Judge Beyers. The judge referred him to the office of the Attorney-General¹³⁰⁶ from whom he learned he and his evidence had been "allocated to the defence."¹³⁰⁷

Bloomberg also asked a clinical psychologist, Mr. Reyner van Zyl, who was recommended to him by Dr. Cooper, a friend of van Zyl, to carry out psychological tests on Tsafendas. Van Zyl remembers Bloomberg calling him and "hyperventilating over the telephone" with excitement that Judge Beyers had asked him to defend Tsafendas. Van Zyl was only 31 at the time and admitted in a personal interview with the author that he was not experienced and this was the first time he used the tests which he applied to Tsafendas.¹³⁰⁸ Van Zyl examined Tsafendas on October 13, for three and a half hours divided into two sessions; the first session lasted two hours and the second ninety minutes. Van Zyl concluded that Tsafendas was undoubtedly schizophrenic, but that his intelligence resulted in his schizophrenia not being as "florid" as was often seen in mental hospitals.¹³⁰⁹

In the course of these consultations, Tsafendas told Bloomberg that he had recently applied for a disability grant and that he had been diagnosed as schizophrenic. Naturally, he omitted the fact that he was medically examined on ten more occasions since returning to ¹³⁰³ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky's testimony at Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966, p. 132. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹³⁰⁴ Letter of Dr. Sakinofsky to the Medical Director of the Ochsenszoll Krankenhaus Hospital in Hamburg, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹³⁰⁵ Letter of Dr. Trost to Mr. Mulder of the South African Embassy in Cologne. 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹³⁰⁶ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 82.

¹³⁰⁷ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky's testimony at Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966, p. 132. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹³⁰⁸ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

¹³⁰⁹ Reyner van Zyl's testimony at the trial, 19 October 1966, p. 169. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA; Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 17 April 2016.

South Africa and was found to be perfectly fit and sane. Bloomberg confirmed from records at the Department of Social Welfare that on a date three months before the assassination, his client had indeed applied for a disability grant and was examined for ten minutes by the District Surgeon of Cape Town, Dr. Ralph Kossew.¹³¹⁰ Dr. Kossew had found Tsafendas to be “schizophrenic,” with his degree of disablement as compared with a normal individual as “severe” and listed his incapacity as “permanent.”¹³¹¹

The defence was quick to appoint three psychiatrists and a psychologist to examine their client, but did not seem concerned that Tsafendas had already been in custody for twenty days before they saw him for the first time. Although Bloomberg noticed bruises on Tsafendas's face and knew that he was a prisoner of one of the world's most brutal police forces, these considerations were not enough to convince him to appoint a doctor to examine his client.

As with Bloomberg, the psychiatrists and psychologists showed no awareness of the brutal environment in which Tsafendas was kept. The medical experts spent up to six hours with Tsafendas but it did not occur to them to ask how he was treated and what had happened during the past twenty days. Like the lawyers, they could not have been unaware of the methods used by the police with prisoners. Throughout the early 1960s there were widespread reports in the media of detainees being tortured. The lawyers and the medical men seem to have assumed contrary to widespread belief, a civil and proper police force had treated Tsafendas perfectly correctly during the twenty days he was in their care. What seems clear is that the one thing they cared about was Tsafendas's state of mind, unconcerned that his state of mind might have been affected by the conditions of his imprisonment.

Determined nevertheless to save his client's life, and by using only Telex and telephone, Bloomberg and his assistants contacted hospitals and mental institutions in Europe and the United States to locate Tsafendas's medical records. Despite the limited time at their disposal and the limitations of technology at the time, they managed to track down at least four hospitals.¹³¹² Bloomberg's team also located several people who knew Tsafendas. However, because their names were on the State's witness list, the defence could not consult them without the State's consent and this was refused by the prosecutor, Attorney-General Willem van den Bergh. The defence team then approached Judge Beyers, who gave the ¹³¹⁰ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 79.

¹³¹¹ Dr. Ralph Kossew's testimony at Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966, p. 132. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹³¹² Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 80.

lawyers permission to speak to witnesses on the State's list. The defence thereupon consulted with them without demur from the State.¹³¹³

Several of these witnesses were brought to Bloomberg's office and made detailed statements.¹³¹⁴ From all those interviewed, only the following were eventually chosen to testify for the defence: Peter Daniels, Helen Daniels's brother, and his wife Merle Daniels, Patrick O'Ryan and his wife Louisa, Gerald Shaw, James Johnstone, O.J. Smorenberg, Gillian Lieberman and Gideon Cloete. Finding suitable witnesses to support the chosen line of defence – insanity – must have been extremely difficult for Bloomberg and his associates, since none of Tsafendas's contacts questioned by the police had testified that he was schizophrenic or that he had mentioned a tapeworm. The criteria by which defence witnesses were chosen would be clear during the trial.

The choice of witnesses shows the clear desperation of the defence team to find suitable witnesses to support their defence line and save Tsafendas's life. At first glance, the strangest choices of witnesses were those of James Johnston and Gerald Shaw. Johnstone, a preacher of the Christian Church, had told the police, "I do not know Tsafendas very well and the longest discussion I had with him was for about ten minutes on each occasion." And how many occasions was that? Two. A man who had talked with Tsafendas for twenty minutes in his whole life was called to testify while people who knew him for years or lived with him in the same house for weeks and months, were not chosen. Why was Johnston chosen? Clearly because of he believed that Tsafendas was "slightly unbalanced" and had said so in his statement to the police, "I did think Tsafendas to be slightly unbalanced and that he seemed to have a mysterious background but otherwise he appeared to be all right."¹³¹⁵ As we have seen from the statements taken by the police, this was the closest a witness came to supporting the defence's line.

Similar is the case of Gerald Shaw, a parliamentary reporter for The Cape Times. According to Shaw, he had only a "brief acquaintanceship" with Tsafendas in the Press Gallery and had only spoken to him briefly on three occasions. Shaw had "never found Tsafendas to show signs of insanity," but he believed that he was "rather slow mentally."¹³¹⁶

¹³¹³ Cooper, Under Devil's Peak: The Life and Times of Wilfrid Cooper, An Advocate in the Age of Apartheid, p. 106-107.

¹³¹⁴ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 80.

¹³¹⁵ James Johnston statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹³¹⁶ Shaw, Believe in Miracles: South Africa from Malan to Mandela – and the Mbeki Era, p. 64.

That Shaw did not believe Tsafendas to be insane, only slow mentally, was nevertheless enough for the defence to ask him to testify. The above two witnesses are evidence of the difficulties Bloomberg's team was having difficulty finding anyone to support its defence line. However, probably accidentally and without the defence expecting it, Gerald Shaw would be a vital witness in the summary trial.

Then we have Patrick O'Ryan, the most important defence witness who was Tsafendas's best friend at the time and knew him better than any of the other witnesses. O'Ryan said Wilfrid Cooper asked him if he knew about Tsafendas's tapeworm and he replied hesitantly yes, as he knew the truth behind the tapeworm story. O'Ryan was the only person Tsafendas ever confided to about the tapeworm before the assassination. Determined to save his client's life, Cooper asked O'Ryan to tell the court about the tapeworm and to exaggerate its importance to Tsafendas, as he put it. Cooper told him that this was the only way to "get Tsafendas free."¹³¹⁷

O'Ryan, who knew that Tsafendas did not believe he had a tapeworm, was put in a difficult position. It was not easy for him to lie to the court. Not only was it an unlawful act, but O'Ryan was very religious and considered lying to be a major sin. Nevertheless, he did not hesitate and agreed to testify as suggested to save his friend. The fact that O'Ryan had not mentioned the tapeworm to the police when he was questioned did not seem to bother the defence. Equally ignored was his statement to the police on September 17 that he "never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind."¹³¹⁸ The situation was easier for O'Ryan's wife because she believed Tsafendas really had a tapeworm. Patrick O'Ryan stated thirty years later that his testimony at the trial was the only time he ever lied in his life.¹³¹⁹

Another witness the defence spoke to was Helen Daniels, the young lady who had written to Tsafendas about a possible marriage and in whose home he had lived, along with her and her parents, for one and half months. However, Daniels was not chose to testify in the summary trial, most probably because she had already told the police on September 15 about Tsafendas that she had not "noticed anything abnormal about him. There was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal."¹³²⁰ The defence then asked Helen's brother, Peter ¹³¹⁷ Patrick O' Ryan in A Question of Madness.

¹³¹⁸ Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹³¹⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹³²⁰ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

Daniels, and his wife Merle to testify, as none of them had been questioned by the police. Although they did not know Tsafendas as good as Helen, they agreed to do it in order to save his life.

Chosen to testify was also O.J. Smorenberg,¹³²¹ who had worked with Tsafendas for five weeks at Cape Town docks. When interviewed by the police, he said nothing about Tsafendas being insane, but stated that “sometimes Tsafendas acted childish and did things which you wouldn’t expect from a man of his age.” More importantly, he referred to an incident which would later be used falsely to demonstrate that Tsafendas supported apartheid and Dr. Verwoerd.¹³²² We will look at Smorenberg’s testimony in detail in the summary trial section.

Another witness interviewed by the defence team was Richard Poggenpoel, also a member of the Christian Church and a very good friend of the O’Ryans and the Daniels.¹³²³ He had known Tsafendas for about a year and Tsafendas had lived in his house for a few weeks. However, Poggenpoel had also testified to the police, on September 15, that, “There was no mention or impression that he (Tsafendas) was mentally abnormal. He lived a completely normal life.”¹³²⁴ Poggenpoel was not asked to testify.

Someone who had known Tsafendas for more than a year was Elias Constantaras. He told the police that Tsafendas was a Communist who opposed apartheid and considered Dr. Verwoerd to be “Hitler’s best student.” This clearly contradicted the defence case that Tsafendas had no political interest. Constantaras remembers being interviewed by one of Tsafendas’s lawyers, but does not remember who it was. He was not asked to testify.¹³²⁵

It is obvious from the choice of witnesses that the defence, very rightly so, did not chose people who knew Tsafendas well, but those who had a story to tell about his apparent “strangeness.” Among all his contacts, there were many who knew Tsafendas much better than the ones who testified. First of all was Tsafendas’s family, but none of them was asked to give evidence. Nick Vlachopoulos, Tsafendas’s brother-in-law and Eleni Tsafantakis’s husband, contacted the defence team to enquire about the case. The author does not know to whom he spoke to, but he was told that neither he, nor any other member of the family was ¹³²¹ The name in the statement is given as Smorenburg, however, in the trial transcript is given as Smorenberg.

¹³²² Owen Smorenburg statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Leer W.D. 10/10/ 4102 Oor Stafendas. NASA.

¹³²³ Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013.

¹³²⁴ Richard Poggenpoel statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹³²⁵ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

needed to testify.¹³²⁶ As we will see in the following chapter, every member of the Tsafendas family, including his step-mother, was questioned by the Commission of Enquiry. All said that Tsafendas was perfectly sane and that he had never told them about the tapeworm.¹³²⁷ Vlachopoulos said exactly that to Tsafendas's lawyers, which is almost certainly why the entire family was ruled out. For how could a man have a tapeworm in his stomach which controlled his life since 1935 and no one from his family knew about it?

Although most of those who knew Tsafendas better, including other family members, were in Pretoria, there were also people in Cape Town who knew him well, certainly much better than some of those chosen to testify. For example, John Bornman, a traffic policeman who shared quarters with Tsafendas for three months; Costas Michaletos a Geek man who had grown up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques; Mary Cathleen Scott, the Greek woman in whose boarding house Tsafendas lived for two months and which he visited frequently afterwards to eat; Ralph Lighton who worked with Tsafendas for nine to ten weeks; Elizabeth Groves, Tsafendas's landlady for six to seven weeks; Robert Smith, who lived under the same roof as Tsafendas for ten months; Kenneth Ross, who knew him for two months; Costas Chagios, who knew him for more than a year, James Summers, who knew Tsafendas for six weeks and Alice Theysser, who knew him for two months. We are not in position to know which of them was interviewed by the defence lawyers, but all of them had testified to the police that Tsafendas was perfectly sane and none of them had any strange story to tell about him.

More importantly, some of them had very positive views of Tsafendas while others had declared he was a Communist and against apartheid. Together, they flatly contradicted the picture the defence was trying to build of an insane person without political convictions. However, although all these witnesses were not suitable for the defence, they would have been extremely useful to the State in order to challenge the defence's claims. However, not even one of them was brought as a witness for the Prosecution.

It is important to state here that the police did not give the statements they had taken from Tsafendas to the defence and most likely also not to the State. The reasons are made clear in the summary trial section. According to Bloomberg, the defence also did not ask the police for any statements they might have taken from their client. It seems that neither the ¹³²⁶ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Michael Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 14 April 2016.

¹³²⁷ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

defence nor the State wondered what Tsafendas had told the police during the twenty days he was in custody.

After Tsafendas's brief hearing on October 6, confident that Tsafendas was schizophrenic, as diagnosed by the defence psychiatrists, Bloomberg and Cooper decided to show their hand to Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg. According to Bloomberg, van den Berg was convinced that Tsafendas had been dispatched to South Africa by a foreign agency to murder Dr. Verwoerd.¹³²⁸ However, such claim is completely inaccurate as if van den Berg really believed that he should have used some evidence to support such claim in the summary trial and most importantly to challenge a defence witness who testified that Tsafendas practically supported apartheid and Dr. Verwoerd.

The most important evidence, that could have also challenged the fact that Tsafendas was mentally ill, was the report from the South African Embassy in Washington, on September 9, 1966, only three days after the assassination. This document informed the Secretary of the Foreign Affairs in Cape Town that according to the US Immigration authorities, which had a detailed file on Tsafendas and his hospitalization, Tsafendas had "shown under psychiatric treatment that he was unstable though not (not)¹³²⁹ insane, but type of man who would easily be used as instrument of Communist or hostile organizations. Impression of U.S. Immigration people at the time was that he had been manipulated and was under influence of someone or some organization. He was subsequently deported to Europe." If van den Berg really believed that Tsafendas was sent by some outside agency, this was perfect evidence for him, which could also have challenged the insanity plea.

In addition, there were the statements by several people who had testified to the police that Tsafendas was a Communist, a former member of the South African and Greek Communist Parties, even a member of the DSE, the military wing of the Greek Communist Party during the Civil War. He was reported to the South African Police as a "dangerous Communist" and "the biggest Communist in the Republic of South Africa." None of this evidence was used at the summary trial and the word "Communist" was never heard.

Although, according to Bloomberg, van den Berg acknowledged that Tsafendas had many strange ways and beliefs, he did not accept that he was insane, or so mentally impaired that he could not understand court proceedings and instruct his lawyers accordingly. To ¹³²⁸ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 90.

¹³²⁹ This is exactly how it appears in the telegram. There is a second 'not' within brackets.

support his view that Tsafendas was fit to stand trial, the Attorney-General gave the defence a copy of a report from a State psychiatrist, Professor Adolph Johannes van Wyk, Professor of Psychiatry at the University of Pretoria, senior psychiatrist at Pretoria General Hospital and Deputy Commissioner of Mental Health of South Africa. The government had used Professor van Wyk's services in court in the past and he had examined Tsafendas on three occasions without the knowledge or consent of the defence team.¹³³⁰

Professor van Wyk's report read:

"He is orientated. He gives a good account of himself. His comprehension is good and his answers are relevant. His emotional responses are adequate and apt. His discourse is coherent. At times he is discursive, but not vague and he never strays from the main point of conversation. The tests indicate that his intellectual abilities are above average. He maintains that he is infested with a tapeworm, and that this influences his life. He denies that he suffers from hallucinations. I have found no indications that he is incapable of following the court proceedings or that he is unable to exercise his rights and privileges and instruct his legal advisers and assist them in the conduct of his defence."¹³³¹

According to Bloomberg, he and Cooper wondered whether their three psychiatrists and Professor van Wyk had examined the same man.¹³³² What they did not know was that van Wyk had examined Tsafendas most likely before their client started his act. However, the surprising thing here is that the above diagnosis by Professor van Wyk must have been made on September 23 or 24, as according to his testimony at Tsafendas's summary trial, he examined Tsafendas again on October 4 and reached the conclusion that he was schizophrenic. This is what van Wyk testified:

"During the first two observations, on the 23rd and the 24th, I was a little uncertain, because the man was very evasive, and one could not really place him, to determine to what extent there was simulation, and I felt at that time that I definitely would not certify him with the information and with the interviews which I had had with him until then. I wanted to know more about his background; I wanted to know more about the motivation for the act, ¹³³⁰ Cooper, Under Devil's Peak: The Life and Times of Wilfrid Cooper, An Advocate in the Age of Apartheid, p. 107.

¹³³¹ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 81-82.

¹³³² Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 81-82.

would he be able to give this? Although he was evasive in that respect, it could also be a schizophrenic symptom. They often say 'I don't know... It may be...'»¹³³³

However, after examining him twice on October 4, the first time with David Bloomberg present, Professor van Wyk "definitely decided" that Tsafendas was schizophrenic.¹³³⁴ Therefore, the Attorney-General must have been aware of the new diagnosis by Professor van Wyk when he met with Bloomberg and Cooper after the hearing on October 6. If we assume that Bloomberg is mistaken about the timing of this meeting and that it took place earlier than this, then again, on September 28 and 29, Mr. Jacobus Andreas Johannes Erasmus, a psychologist who was appointed by the Attorney-General and the State, examined Tsafendas. His conclusion was that there were "clear signs of schizophrenia" with Tsafendas.¹³³⁵

Thus, even if the meeting had taken place before the time Bloomberg claims it took place, then again van den Berg must have been aware that one of the experts he had appointed himself had found Tsafendas to display "clear signs of schizophrenia." Bloomberg's claim that van den Berg believed that Tsafendas was sent by a foreign agency appears to be inaccurate. Firstly, the police did not come up with even the slightest evidence to suggest that Tsafendas was sent by a foreign agency.

¹³³³ Professor Adolf Johannes van Wyk's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹³³⁴ Adolph Johannes van Wyk testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 20 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹³³⁵ Jacobus Andreas Johannes Erasmus testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 20 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

In addition, van den Berg in his October 3 memorandum regarding Tsafendas did not mention anything of the sort. If he believed that Tsafendas was anything like this, he must have surely mentioned it there. In addition, since the memorandum was written on the 3rd, that was before Bloomberg and Cooper disclose their hand, therefore he could not have made such an absurd claim, unless he was bluffing. Of course the fact that Bloomberg might be mistaken about van den Berg's alleged claim cannot also be ruled out. As for the supposed claim by van den Berg that Tsafendas's deed was premeditated, this is something that he could easily have proven by using Tsafendas's statement to Major Rossouw in which he confessed how he had planned and executed the act.

POLICE AND STATE BEFORE THE SUMMARY TRIAL

South Africa's ruling circles were in deep shock after Dr. Verwoerd's killing, stunned that an assassin had penetrated to the seat of power. However, what truly worried them was the nature of the assassin and the possibility that his action was politically inspired, perhaps a carefully plotted and defiant demonstration of opposition to the rule of apartheid.¹³³⁶ If that was the case, such a damning revelation would surely come out in a trial and world attention would be focussed on the workings of apartheid. This was not a scenario that appealed to the men of power.

Thus, as we have seen, within a short time of the assassination the South African press and especially the Afrikaans press, manipulated by the apartheid authorities, had already labelled Tsafendas as a psychopath. On some occasions the manipulation was not necessary as apartheid supporters eager to protect the memory of their beloved leader were quick to speculate with conviction that the assassin was probably a psychopath, as no sane person could have killed such a wonderful and adored prime minister. For example, in the Afrikaans-language Dagbreek, on which Dr. Verwoerd was chairman, Lod Spies, an advocate from Johannesburg who had never met Tsafendas, said that "the attack on the Premier was presumably done by a psychopath who was possibly not suffering from an acute form of the abnormality, but possibly shows some characteristics of the abnormality."¹³³⁷

However, this was not enough for the authorities, who wanted to be certain that nothing damaging to them would come out of the trial. Thus they left nothing to chance.

¹³³⁶ Morris, Every Step of the Way. The Journey to Freedom in South Africa, p. 185.

¹³³⁷ Dagbreek, 'Tsafendas: Party se Psigopaat ...', 11 September 1966.

Judge Beyers, the Judge President of the Cape and a supporter of the government, was named to preside over the proceedings, while the prosecution was placed in the hands of the Attorney-General of the Cape, Willem van den Bergh, who, it transpired, was more than willing to aid the government's cause. As we will see, van den Bergh did not hesitate to lie, bluntly and publicly, to protect this aim.

Finally, on September 9, only three days after the assassination, it was decided that Tsafendas would face a summary trial rather than the conventional judicial process.¹³³⁸ During the apartheid years, the Attorney-General was given the right in political cases to order a summary trial without a preparatory examination. This meant that accused persons, such as Tsafendas, were unable to prepare their defence in the normal way, being deprived of opportunities which even a murderer could enjoy in a non-political case.¹³³⁹

As far as the author can establish, Attorney-General van den Berg never interviewed Tsafendas and all the information he received about him was provided by the police. He appointed Professor Adolf Johannes van Wyk, Professor of Psychiatry at the University of Pretoria, and Jacobus Erasmus, a clinical psychologist at Weskoppies Hospital in Pretoria, to examine Tsafendas. Both concluded that Tsafendas was schizophrenic (Their cases are examined in detail later in this chapter as they contained several inconsistencies).

Furthermore, the South African authorities had in their possession more than a hundred and fifty statements by people who knew Tsafendas and none of them had stated that Tsafendas had shown any signs of schizophrenia or mental abnormality or any of the symptoms described by van den Berg's two experts; on the contrary he was characterised as a normal man, very capable and with high intelligence. The authorities were also in possession of at least six statements from people who had testified that Tsafendas had faked mental illness so as to avoid service in the Portuguese Army. In addition, a medical report from Grafton State Hospital revealed that Tsafendas had staged the pretence of madness in the USA. Other medical reports, secret telegrams, documents and PIDE reports stated that Tsafendas was not insane and that his admissions to hospitals were either voluntary or that he was taken there after showing signs of mental illness during interrogation. None of this evidence appears to have been available to the State experts or was simply ignored by them.

¹³³⁸ The Cape Times, 'Top Security for Trial of Assassin', 10 September 1966: 1.

¹³³⁹ A Distinguished South African Lawyer, Verwoerd's Police State, p. 8-10.

As we also saw, the South African police discovered ample evidence that Tsafendas was a committed Communist, that he had been a dues-paying member of the South African Communist Party, was a member of the Greek Communist Party and of the DSE, the party's military wing during the Greek Civil War; that he was fanatically opposed to apartheid, had been a member of the British anti-apartheid movement and that participated in a demonstration in London, holding a placard showing a man in a Ku Klux Klan uniform captioned "Dr. Verwoerd."

Most importantly, Tsafendas had made no secret of the fact that he considered Dr. Verwoerd personally to be a tyrant and a dictator, describing him as "Hitler's best student" who had applied some Nazi policies to South Africa's Blacks. The assassin was also anti-colonialist and had been arrested by the Portuguese police for promulgating propaganda against the Portuguese government. Finally, the police had also discovered that Tsafendas had characterised a possible assassination of Dr. Verwoerd as morally justifiable on grounds that he was a dictator and a tyrant who oppressed his people. Was there the remotest possibility that the South African authorities would allow this derogatory portrayal of South Africa and its leader to become known or permit such things to be stated in open court by a man who was demonstrably political?

PRINCIPALS AT THE SUMMARY TRIAL

The Judge President of the Cape, Mr. Justice Andries Beyers was sitting with two assessors acting in an advisory capacity. These were a Cape Town advocate, Peter William Edward Baker S.C., who was well known to Tsafendas's attorney, David Bloomberg, and who later became a judge, and a psychiatrist from Pietermaritzburg, Dr. P.H. Henning. It seemed sensible for the judge to have access to an experienced psychiatrist of his own. The Attorney-General, Willem van den Berg S.C., led for the State, with Donald Brunette as his assistant.¹³⁴⁰

JUDGE ANDRIES BEYERS (1903-1975)

Andries Brink Beyers known to his friends as Andrew or A.B.,¹³⁴¹ graduated from the ¹³⁴⁰ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 88-89; Marius A. Diemont, Brushes with the Law, (Cape Town: Human & Rousseau, 1995), p. 132-133.

¹³⁴¹ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 60; Diemont, Brushes with the Law, p. 131.

University of Stellenbosch and was appointed as a lecturer there in 1928. It was at Stellenbosch that he met Dr. Verwoerd, who was also a lecturer there at the time.¹³⁴² He quickly gained a reputation as an outspoken and unorthodox thinker and a sound Roman Dutch Lawyer, laying the grounds for his subsequent characterisation by a Cape Bar chairman as “a legend in his lifetime.” Beyers’s introduction to politics came when he served as a secretary to a cabinet minister and came to know many politicians.¹³⁴³ He joined the Cape Bar in 1936 and became Henry Fagan¹³⁴⁴’s junior counsel on the government side in Ndlwana. In 1938, with a formidable reputation as a criminal lawyer behind him, Beyers took silk and went into politics. He stood as the United Party candidate for Oudtshoorn during the general election that year, but was not elected. He later gave up active politics, but he changed his political trajectory and became an adviser to the National Party.¹³⁴⁵

Beyers represented the apartheid government in several high-profile trials,¹³⁴⁶ notably as in the Harris case (Harris v Dönges) concerning the removal of Coloured voters from the Electoral Roll in the early 1950s. Ultimately, the Coloured voters were removed because the government increased the size of the Senate and of the Appellate Division, through the Appellate Division Quorum Act of 1955 and the Senate Act of the same year, and made a raft of judicial appointments.¹³⁴⁷ Beyers and his colleague, the above-mentioned van Wyk, had no hesitation in slapping down junior lawyers of the Cape Bar who dared to speak against the removal of the voters.¹³⁴⁸ The voters’ attorney, Pilkington-Jordan, wrote to United Party leader J.G.N. Strauss as follows:

“Beyers again treated the Court with scant courtesy and both he and van Wyk were thoroughly rude to Duncan (Graeme Duncan KC was the leader of the legal team for the ¹³⁴² Diemont, Brushes with the Law, p. 132.

¹³⁴³ Diemont, Brushes with the Law, p. 131, 136.

¹³⁴⁴ Henry Allan Fagan (1889-1963) was one of South Africa’s most eminent jurists and loved authors. He served as South Africa’s Chief of Justice (1957-1959) and was a member of the Fagan Commission (discussed earlier). He was also critical of apartheid and Dr. Verwoerd’s policies calling them “hopelessly impractical” (TIME, ‘South Africa: Rustle on the Veld’, 29 February 1960: 31).

¹³⁴⁵ Dennis Davis and Michelle le Roux, Precedent and Possibility: The (Ab)use of Law in South Africa, (Cape Town: Double Storey Books, 2009), p. 18; Gerald Friedman and Jeremy Gauntlett, Bar, Bench and Bullshiffters: Cape Tales 1950-1990, (Cape Town: Siber Ink., 2013), p. 8-9; Loveland, By Due Process of Law? Racial Discrimination and the Right to Vote in South Africa 1855-1960, p. 208.

¹³⁴⁶ Francois Marais quoted in Geni.com. Retrieved from <https://www.geni.com/people/Jacques-Theodore-Van-Wyk/600000008317660124>

¹³⁴⁷ Cornell, “The Statutory Background of Apartheid: A Chronological Survey of South African Legislation”, p. 184; Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016; Dugard, Human Rights and the South African Legal Order, p. 31; Sachs, Justice in South Africa, p. 143-145.

¹³⁴⁸ Friedman and Gauntlett, Bar, Bench and Bullshiffters: Cape Tales 1950-1990, p. 8-9.

voters). They really are monkeys in dinner jackets and the sartorial elegance of that garb does not in the least conceal the barbarian beneath ...”¹³⁴⁹

Nevertheless, it was Beyers's performance at these proceedings which led to his meteoric rise. He was rewarded with an appointment to the Cape bench on October 1, 1955,¹³⁵⁰ a move held by many to be nakedly political.¹³⁵¹ Thereafter, he was promoted in short order, to the Appellate Division in 1958, and a year later as Judge President of the Cape High Court, a position he held until his retirement on July 31, 1973.¹³⁵² This latter appointment proved highly controversial. Beyers had been on the Bench for fewer than five years and was junior to Joseph Herbstein, who had been acting as Judge President for some months and was expected to be appointed as the permanent Judge President.¹³⁵³

In the early 1950s there was one Black member of the Cape Town bar, Ndhlovu. He could not be accommodated in Temple Chambers because the Group Areas Act had just been enacted barring him from a building in a “white” area. Beyers and van Wyk refused to go to the common room if Ndhlovu was expected to be there.¹³⁵⁴

According to Judge Wilfrid Cooper (and Tsafendas's advocate) Judge Beyers was

“As deeply racist as the ordinary man in the street. He had his own solution to the problem of race-mixing. He said the problem in this country was that the White man didn't understand the Black man ... and he drew a distinction between the Black man and the Coloured man ... and he said ‘As far as the Coloured people are concerned, we must fuck them white’ ... that was his solution ... The Black man remained an insoluble problem. He didn't understand ... he was at a loss ...”¹³⁵⁵

Despite such racist sentiments as outlined by Cooper and the fact that he was an outspoken government supporter, according to Judge Marius A. Diemont and David Bloomberg, Beyers deplored racial segregation in court and with the support of some of his ¹³⁴⁹ Davis and le Roux, Precedent and Possibility: The (Ab)use of Law in South Africa, p. 25.

¹³⁵⁰ Loveland, By Due Process of Law? Racial Discrimination and the Right to Vote in South Africa 1855-1960, p. 363.

¹³⁵¹ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016; Friedman and Gauntlett, Bar, Bench and Bullshiffters: Cape Tales 1950-1990, p. 25.

¹³⁵² Davis and le Roux, Precedent and Possibility: The (Ab)use of Law in South Africa, p. 18; Friedman and Gauntlett, Bar, Bench and Bullshiffters: Cape Tales 1950-1990, p. 67; Sachs, Justice in South Africa, p. 257-258.

¹³⁵³ Diemont, Brushes with the Law, p. 131.

¹³⁵⁴ Friedman and Gauntlett, Bar, Bench and Bullshiffters: Cape Tales 1950-1990, p. 8-9.

¹³⁵⁵ Wilfrid Cooper in A Question of Madness.

colleagues he managed to keep the Cape Supreme Court free of apartheid notices.¹³⁵⁶

Bloomberg told the author that Beyers

“would not allow apartheid to be practised in his court, and he was quite famous for ensuring that there were no apartheid practices in his court. He wouldn't allow a defendant, White or Black, to be handcuffed or shackled in his court. He was an Afrikaner, and pro-government – which was the apartheid government – but at the same time he was a libertarian. He had liberal instincts as well. I know that sounds a bit of a contradiction.”¹³⁵⁷

According to Reyner van Zyl, Judge “Beyers was a big, tall man – burly, highly intelligent, and emotionally, and in terms of interactions, fairly unsophisticated. He was a rough diamond of sorts – very capable.”¹³⁵⁸ The American writer Ely Jacques Kahn Jr. states that due to his insistence on keeping apartheid out of his courtroom, Judge Beyers was well-liked by many Coloureds, some of whom called him “Big Boy.”¹³⁵⁹ Once, when he went on circuit in Stellenbosch, Beyers refused to go into court because a partition separated White and Black spectators. “Unless that thing is removed, I'll sit and hear all the cases under the oak tree outside,” he said. When an official of the Department for Public Works fixed a notice on the door of a Supreme Court cloakroom saying, “White Judges Only,” Beyers asked the official, “How many Black judges have we got? Take that notice down today.”¹³⁶⁰

On another occasion, at a luncheon in Grahamstown to commemorate the establishment of the High Court in that city, Minister of Justice John Vorster delivered the keynote speech. He declared that South Africa satisfied all the requirements of a democracy in that it had regular, free and fair elections and an independent judiciary. Beyers told Vorster, “Yes, John, you say we are a democracy, but you forgot to say non-whites could not vote!” Vorster smiled and shook his head. It was the equivalent of saying, “Who takes Beyers seriously?”¹³⁶¹

According to Judge Robin Marais, who had acted as Beyers's Registrar for some time, Beyers could never understand Black people but had great empathy with Coloureds. He spoke on one occasion to the Stellenbosch University Law faculty about the injustice being done to a Coloured man who came to Cape Town to give evidence. From the railway station to the court and back again he could not find a place where he could have a coffee or use a ¹³⁵⁶ David Bloomberg in a personal interview, 6 April 2014; Sachs, Justice in South Africa, p. 258.

¹³⁵⁷ David Bloomberg in a personal interview, 6 April 2014.

¹³⁵⁸ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

¹³⁵⁹ Kahn, Jr., The Separated People: A Look at Contemporary South Africa, p. 153.

¹³⁶⁰ Diemont, Brushes with the Law, p. 135.

¹³⁶¹ Friedman and Gauntlett, Bar, Bench and Bullshiffters: Cape Tales 1950-1990, p. 69.

toilet. This, said Beyers, was “disgraceful.” This story did not go down well with the audience who booed him, and finally he sat down, wondering at his listeners’ insensitivity to something he felt was clearly outrageous.¹³⁶²

In 1962, in the Drakenstein case, to the embarrassment of many of his peers, Beyers urged a review of prison conditions. Beyers sentenced a Coloured prison warder to ten years’ imprisonment and ten strokes for killing an African prisoner. Beyers commented that it was strange that only the warder was in the dock. The doctor who gave testimony said that except for victims of train crashes, he had never seen a body so mangled. Judge Beyers said he hoped the case would lift the veil from conditions in the prison service and he suggested a judicial inquiry.¹³⁶³ Such a call from such a quarter made headlines countrywide, but it embarrassed the government, which was forced to explain why it did not feel that such a move was justified. Beyers also encouraged a boycott of the newly-built Nico Malan Theatre which was built with public money but admitted only Whites.¹³⁶⁴

However, Judge Beyers took a hard line when a question arose concerning conditions for detainees under the 90-day law. In 1964, in Rossouw v. Sachs, the argument was whether such a detainee should be allowed reading and writing materials. The detainee in question was Albie Sachs, a Cape Town advocate and anti-apartheid activist. Two senior judges of the Cape Provisional Division, Louis van Winsen and J.J. Banks, ruled that a reasonable supply of such materials should be provided since depriving a prisoner of them amounted to punishment. The judges said, “It would be surprising to find that the legislature intended punishment to be meted out to an unconvicted prisoner.” However, the Appellate Division, in a judgement delivered by Judge Newton Ogilvie Thompson, held otherwise. Judge Beyers concurred with this judgment.¹³⁶⁵

A significant historical case concerned the University of Cape Town. On June 13, 1972, Judge Beyers extended indefinitely an order restraining the police from breaking up meetings on the campus. The decision was welcomed by the students as a step towards their ultimate goal, which was the right to hold peaceful demonstrations. As Judge President of the Cape Province, Beyers ruled that anybody who interfered with students on the steps of Jameson Hall (where police had launched a baton charge) was going beyond the terms of a ¹³⁶² Friedman and Gauntlett, Bar, Bench and Bullshiflers: Cape Tales 1950-1990, p. 67-70.

¹³⁶³ Judge Robin Marais in a personal interview, 3 June 2016; International Defence and Aid Fund, South African Prisons and the Red Cross Investigation, p. 1.

¹³⁶⁴ Friedman and Gauntlett, Bar, Bench and Bullshiflers: Cape Tales 1950-1990, p.: 67-69.

¹³⁶⁵ Dugard, Human Rights and the South African Legal Order, p. 333, 347-348.

proclamation issued a week ago which banned open-air political gatherings in 18 university towns. The governing council of the University of Cape Town had applied for a restraining order on the grounds that the campus was not public property.¹³⁶⁶

Beyers was also characterised as a compassionate man of “pronounced personality and sometimes humanity”¹³⁶⁷ who opposed the death penalty.¹³⁶⁸ In a famous case in Cape Town, Beyers clearly dispensed justice from his heart rather than employing the letter of the law. Ronald Cohen, a prominent businessman, was on trial for murdering his wife. It became clear that there was a hidden factor in the case which Cohen refused to address. The suspicion was that his wife had been having an affair and Cohen was too proud to admit it. In what fellow lawyers described as an extraordinary decision, Judge Beyers declared: “There is no mitigating circumstance that the court has heard from Mr. Cohen, but I know Mr. Cohen is lying. I know he is concealing something. And I find that that is a mitigating circumstance.” He was therefore not sentenced to death. There was widespread sympathy for Cohen and public support for the judgment, but in truth, Beyers acted unprofessionally in that there was no evidence of any mitigating circumstance.¹³⁶⁹

In court, Beyers appeared formidable, even frightening, but his colleagues believed he had a big heart and sympathy for “the little man.” He was famous for not taking notes because he had a photographic memory.¹³⁷⁰ David Bloomberg told the author about Beyers’ ability:

“He was tremendous. In fact, there was one famous case in South Africa where the counsel was appearing before him, and then Judge Beyers closed his eyes, and was slumped over the desk. And the counsel said to him, ‘Judge, I’m afraid it appears as if you are not listening to what I am saying.’ And he came to, and he said, ‘I will repeat to you everything you said in the last three minutes.’ And he rattled off the last three minutes, where he had appeared to be slumped and asleep. So he was a very, very astute judge.”¹³⁷¹

However, as we will see, this was not the case at Tsafendas’s summary trial, when Beyers seemed not to remember exactly what some witnesses had said.

¹³⁶⁶ Michael Knipe, ‘Ban on Cape Town Police’, The Times (London), 14 June 1972.

¹³⁶⁷ Davis and le Roux, Precedent and Possibility: The (Ab)use of Law in South Africa, p. 18.

¹³⁶⁸ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

¹³⁶⁹ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

¹³⁷⁰ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 98; Friedman and Gauntlett, Bar, Bench and Bullshiffters: Cape Tales 1950-1990, p. 74.

¹³⁷¹ David Bloomberg in a personal interview, 6 April 2014.

Although a supporter of Dr. Verwoerd and of the National Party, Beyers was not blind about apartheid and declared, “Dr. Verwoerd is an intellectual giant, but his policy will lead to disaster.” When he was asked by the government to represent the Cape Supreme Court at the State funeral of Dr. Verwoerd in Pretoria, he was in a dilemma. He knew that he had to preside over the trial of Tsafendas and believed that in the eyes of the public his impartiality might be suspect if he attended the funeral. He sent Judge Marius A. Diemont in his place.¹³⁷² In 1975, Andries Beyers was in hospital dying from cancer. By an extraordinary coincidence, just across the corridor, Judge van Wyk was also dying from cancer.¹³⁷³

AUTHOR'S NOTE

In this and the next chapter, I will present again the statements and other evidence that the South African police and the Commission of Enquiry had in their possession at the time. This is necessary in order to compare them with what was heard in the Court during the summary trial and, in the next chapter, with the Commission's Report. Due to this Report's length and to make it easier for the reader to remember each witness's connection with Tsafendas, I have included a short note on how they came to know him; that is why you will see some repetition in this information. Furthermore, and for the same reason, witnesses' statements and other evidence are often repeated when I examine different testimonies during the summary trial and the contents of the Commission's Report.

¹³⁷² Diemont, Brushes with the Law, p. 132.

¹³⁷³ Friedman and Gauntlett, Bar, Bench and Bullshiffters: Cape Tales 1950-1990, p. 77.

DAY 1: 17 OCTOBER 1966INTRODUCTION

As we have seen, the defence team, due to the extraordinary efforts of David Bloomberg, had managed in a very limited time to build a very strong defence line, based on witnesses, medical records and the diagnosis of four psychiatrists and a one psychologist. It was then up to Advocate Wilfrid Cooper, the “tiger” of the courts to use them efficiency in the summary trial. The State, should have been in a much stronger position, especially since knowing what the defence line was going to be and since the South African Police had in its possession overwhelming evidence not only to challenge the Defence’s line, but to easily break it down. However, none of this evidence was going to be used during the summary trial and most probably was never given to the State.

The State’s two experts, obviously unaware of the police’s evidence, had agreed with the Defence’s experts that the accused was schizophrenic. In addition, both sides were in possession of Tsafendas’s medical record which confirmed their diagnosis, so the summary trial should have been a straightforward case. However, this was not going to be so and instead a show (summary) trial took place.¹³⁷⁴

There trial started at 10.00 a.m. when Judge Beyers entered the packed courtroom in his traditional scarlet robes.¹³⁷⁵ Tsafendas wore a double-breasted suit and a light-coloured shirt with a maroon tie.¹³⁷⁶ A maximum three hundred spectators plus forty reporters squeezed into the courtroom, which was heavily guarded inside and out. Security was unprecedented. Plain-clothed police officers were posted inside the courtroom as well as around the court building, while police marksmen took up strategic positions on the rooftops of nearby buildings. The precautions were the most stringent for any case heard at the Cape High Court and lasted for the duration of proceedings.¹³⁷⁷

Judge Beyers briefly addressed the public: “I wish to say a few words to the public who are here in unusual numbers today. You have a right to be here because in this country we believe that justice be done publicly and must also be seen to be done, theretofore it is ¹³⁷⁴ Denis Herbstein and John Evenson, The Devils are Among US: The War for Namibia, (London: Zed Books Ltd., 1989), p. 16.

¹³⁷⁵ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 88-89.

¹³⁷⁶ D’Oliveira, Vorster – The Man, p. 208.

¹³⁷⁷ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 83-84; Schoeman, Die Sluipmoord op Dr. Verwoerd, p. 4.

right that in a case like this the public must be here. This case might stir up emotions in certain people. These emotions would have to be controlled. If I find any behaviour on the part of the public which will disturb the quiet of this court I will not hesitate for a moment to have you all sent out of the court and continue alone.”¹³⁷⁸ Judge Beyers then addressed the press:

“In this country we believe that justice be done publicly and should be seen to be done. We realise that only a small proportion of the public can be accommodated in a court of law, and the Press represents all the many others who cannot be here. For this reason the press is welcome in this court. But this case is at the moment sub judice. This is a serious business, a man is being tried for his life. The trial is in the hands of myself and my two assessors and our hands alone. There is one thing that will not be allowed and which I hope will never be allowed in this country, and that is trial by newspaper. If the newspapers goes beyond the bounds of what is correct in a matter that is sub judice, I shall have not the least compunction in refusing that newspaper further access to this court, and if they should transgress at all the lines which the law allows, I shall not have the least compunction in applying the full rigour of the law-not that I believe it will be necessary to do so.”¹³⁷⁹

Immediately afterwards, the case was called, Advocate Wilfrid Cooper rose and, addressing the Judge, said that in the view of the defence, the accused was mentally disordered in terms Section 28 of the Mental Disorders Act of 1916 which states “This section provide that if a court finds a person to be mentally disordered, he must be committed for detention in a mental institution until the State President orders his release” and therefore unfit to plead.¹³⁸⁰

¹³⁷⁸ Pretoria News, ‘Press and the Public Warned’, 17 October 1966: 1.

¹³⁷⁹ Pretoria News, ‘Press and the Public Warned’, 17 October 1966: 1.

¹³⁸⁰ Pretoria News, ‘Tsafendas Mentally Disordered Defence Contends as Trial Starts’, 17 October 1966: 1.

Cooper reminded the judge that according to the Act, a person was mentally disordered if he was incapable of managing himself or his affairs, or was a danger to himself or others. Advocate Cooper then stressed that the Act referred to the mental condition of the accused at the time of his arraignment or during his trial, that being now, on October 17; the court was not concerned with his mental condition at the time of the alleged offence. Cooper said, "This, my Lord, is on the basis that this court cannot and will not try an insane person, irrespective of his culpability. I accordingly apply to your Lordship at this stage to hold an enquiry into the accused's mental condition."¹³⁸¹

The Attorney-General raised no objection to such an enquiry being held and the judge then ruled that such an enquiry would now take place, a proceeding described by Bloomberg as in effect, "a trial within a trial."¹³⁸² Advocate Cooper then outlined the evidence that the defence would offer to argue that the accused was suffering from schizophrenia and was mentally disordered. The first witness called was the psychiatrist Dr. Cooper.

THIRD-PARTY INFORMATION IN FORENSIC MENTAL HEALTH ASSESSMENTS

Before we consider the testimonies of those who examined Tsafendas, we should take under consideration a very important issue that applies to all those who examined Tsafendas at the time of the judiciary proceedings, namely the collection and evaluation of third-party information (TPI). In "any forensic mental health assessment (FMHA), third-party information is a very important aspect of the assessments in order to provide a more accurate evaluation." This is because it enables the clinician to detect "distortions in self-reported information."¹³⁸³

TPI is defined as "a type of collateral source that is not obtained directly from the individual being evaluated." It serves an essential role in forensic mental health assessment for three primary reasons: greater need for accuracy, issues with response style, and the greater scrutiny that the evaluator's conclusions may receive. TPI may be obtained through interviews with personal and professional collateral informants or through reviews of various ¹³⁸¹ Dr. Harold Cooper's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹³⁸² Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 85.

¹³⁸³ Kirk Heilbrun, Thomas Grisso and Alan M. Goldstein, Foundations of Forensic Mental Health Assessment, (New York: Oxford University Press, 2008), p. 96; Kirk Heilbrun, Barry Rosenfeld, Janet Warren and Steven Collins, "The Use of Third-Party Information in Forensic Assessments: A Two-State Comparison." Bull Am Acad Psychiatry Law, Vol. 22, No. 3 (1994), p. 400.

forms of written documentation. It may be used to help detect response styles and malingering, making it vital to evaluation of the validity of the examinee's self-report.¹³⁸⁴

TPI is important in forensic criminal cases for five reasons:

- The use of TPI to assess response style is an integral part of a comprehensive approach to FMHA and provides valuable collateral information.
- Some measures relevant to FMHA require the forensic clinician to incorporate TPI as part of the assessment and scoring process.
- The use of collateral and corroborative information increases accuracy in detecting deception.
- TPI information can increase the face validity of FMHA and enhance the credibility of the evaluation.
- TPI may be helpful in allowing the forensic clinician to clarify a constellation of symptoms and identify, confirm, and or/disconfirm the various forms of psychopathology.¹³⁸⁵

Forensic clinicians widely recognize the importance and value of TPI, whether in the form of documents and records, third-party interviews, or scientific data produced by researchers. It helps to promote overall accuracy, detects bias from other sources, enhances impartiality, and increases credibility.¹³⁸⁶ It also performs the important role of verifying the information collected by the patient. Putting TPI together with information from the patient greatly improves the ability of the clinician to detect the possibility of malingering. In several cases it has been proven that "lying is not accurately detected by mental health professionals and other professional groups" when their opinion is based solely on information from the patient. People such as relatives, friends, workmates, neighbours and flatmates provided the best TPI because they had close and regular contact with the accused.¹³⁸⁷

¹³⁸⁴ Elizabeth Hunt and Eva R. Kimonis, "Third-Party Information." In Robin L. Cautin, and Scott O. Lilienfeld (eds.), The Encyclopaedia of Clinical Psychology, (John Wiley & Sons, 2015).

¹³⁸⁵ Kirk Heilbrun, Geoffrey R. Marczyk and David DeMatteo, Forensic Mental Health Assessment: A Casebook, (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2002), p. 220-221.

¹³⁸⁶ Kirk Heilbrun, Amanda NeMoyer, Christopher King and Meghann Galloway, "Using Third-Party Information in Forensic Mental-Health Assessment: A Critical Review." Court Review, Vol. 51, pp. 16-35.

¹³⁸⁷ Kirk Heilbrun, Janet Warren and Kim Picarello, "Third Party Information in Forensic Assessment." In Alan M. Goldstein and Irving B. Weiner (eds.), Handbook of Psychology, Vol. 11: Forensic Psychology, (Hoboken, New Jersey: John Wiley and Sons, Inc., 2003), p. 69-79.

Professor Kirk Heilbrun, one of the world's leading forensic psychologists, renowned for his research on TPI in forensic cases, emphasised, in a personal interview with the author, its importance and the significance of its absence in Tsafendas's case, "an important and complex case like this."¹³⁸⁸ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky, a defence witness in the case who examined Tsafendas, told the author that "in psychiatry, after one has interviewed a patient, it is best practice to seek collateral information from family, friends and medical records."¹³⁸⁹ Mr. van Zyl and Professors Tuviah Zabow, Alban Burke, Robert L. Sadoff, Kirk Heilbrun and Phillip Resnick emphasised to the author that to make an accurate diagnosis, additional information was required from outside sources and agreed to the importance of information held by people who knew Tsafendas.¹³⁹⁰ It is standard practice since the lack of input from any one of the three could lead to a wrong conclusion.

The leading forensic psychiatrist Professor John Macdonald, who was renowned for his discovery of the Macdonald triad of sociopathic traits and for his profiling of serial killers, said that "simulation is more frequent when a suspect faces the death sentence."¹³⁹¹ According to Professor Tuviah Zabow, the prime objective in a criminal case where the accused seems to be mentally unstable is to establish whether he is scheming or not. That is why it is important to have his medical records and information from his friends and family.¹³⁹²

In an interview with the author, Professor Alban Burke stressed the importance of talking to people who know the patient. He said:

"In forensic cases, and I work at Weskoppies Hospital where we get these kinds of assessments, if you are doing an assessment for legal purposes, you need to speak to as many people as possible. You need to use as many documents as possible, and it is your right to have access to a document whether the police have produced it or not ... the psychologist and psychiatrist should have questioned, and they should have done extensive interviews, because the problem with any psychiatric order is, you cannot make a diagnosis based on what you see and hear alone. It has to be backed up by your psychological tests; it has to be backed up ¹³⁸⁸ Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017.

¹³⁸⁹ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky in correspondence with the author, 30 March 2016.

¹³⁹⁰ Prof. Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016; Prof. Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017; Prof. Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 17 December 2016; Professor Robert L. Sadoff in a personal interview with the author, 12 August 2015; Prof. Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016; Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

¹³⁹¹ John M. Macdonald, Psychiatry and the Criminal: A Guide to Psychiatric Examinations for the Criminal Courts, (Springfield, Ill.: Charles C Thomas, 1958), p. 61.

¹³⁹² Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky in correspondence with the author, 30 March 2016.

by a wide range of investigations, and with these kinds of observations, you speak to family, you speak to school, you speak to as many people as possible.”¹³⁹³

Despite all of the above, plus the fact that this was a forensic case and Tsafendas was known to have faked illness at least twice in the past, none of those who examined him spoke to anyone who knew him; not even a single one. What is more, none of the examiners asked for any additional TPI, with the exception of Dr. Sakinofsky, who managed, on his own initiative, to get Tsafendas's medical records from the Ochsenzoll Krankenhaus Hospital in Hamburg. None of those who examined Tsafendas was a forensic psychiatrist. Nor were any of them experienced in dealing with similar situations, with the exception of Professor van Wyk. Neither the State nor the Defence found it necessary to call a forensic psychiatrist to examine Tsafendas. Dr. Sakinofsky did tell the court in his testimony that a forensic psychiatrist should have been called to examine Tsafendas, but this was never done. Finally, no-one became aware of the fact that Tsafendas had faked mental illness in the past.

Dr. Sakinofsky cautioned that while “such a maxim certainly holds true as a goal,” it was not always possible in practice:

“Collateral information may not be available when a patient is first seen (as in an emergency room) or may never be available or it may not be available for reasons of confidentiality. Not having such collateral does not necessarily invalidate diagnoses made without such; it depends on the nature of the individual case. Most clinical diagnoses are made in practice on the clinical examination and on the mental state and treatment may be started before collateral information is forthcoming, if available.”¹³⁹⁴

Although Dr. Sakinofsky's reservation is valid and certainly applied to the circumstances in which he examined Tsafendas shortly after the assassination, it did not apply to the wider aspects of this case. It would have been very easy to seek additional information about Tsafendas as there were tens of people who knew him in Cape Town and who were interviewed by the defence and by the police. The specialists who examined Tsafendas, both for the State and the defence, could have found and interviewed these people with the help of the defence and the police. However, not one of those who examined Tsafendas spoke to anyone who knew him personally. This was not entirely their fault, however, considering the obstacles in their path. As we will see, Dr. Cooper was discouraged from making outside contacts, and there was a problem of time, since only fifteen days elapsed between the examinations of Tsafendas and the start of his trial.

¹³⁹³ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

¹³⁹⁴ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky in correspondence with the author, 16 December 2016.

Further, the experts had no access to any written TPI. Neither Tsafendas's statements to the police nor any other information about him or his past were given to them. The only exceptions were Dr. Sakinofsky as stated before, and Dr. Cooper who was shown by the defence three medical reports on Tsafendas, although this was after he had examined him and diagnosed him as schizophrenic. The other experts did not even have sight of Tsafendas's medical records, being told orally of their contents. They were also advised that this was a straightforward case and that the man they examined was a schizophrenic with a long history of schizophrenia.

Reyner van Zyl, the clinical psychologist who examined Tsafendas on behalf of the defence and testified in his summary trial, told the author that he never spoke to anybody who knew Tsafendas and never received any written information about him. Just like some of the other psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas at the time, he was only told verbally about Tsafendas's alleged long history of mental illness by the defence lawyers and by the police. Asked whether he saw Tsafendas's medical records or if he had any TPI about him, van Zyl replied:

“No, no, no, we were just told, we were told, or I was told – the group of guys that examined him – that he had been in various mental hospitals all over the world... Yes. Well, you know, we were given this information – that he was a disturbed, schizophrenic man ... And that was the background that we had available, and nothing else. The third part [the medical reports] was given to us almost in summary. He has been to this hospital, that hospital, that hospital... I think three or four were mentioned – various hospitals overseas.”¹³⁹⁵

It is interesting to compare the Tsafendas case with that of David Pratt, who shot and wounded Dr. Verwoerd in 1960. After his defence team pleaded that he was mentally disordered and unfit to stand trial, Pratt was sent by the judge to a mental hospital for fourteen days' observation under a State psychiatrist, Professor Lamont. In an effort to get a more comprehensive understanding of Pratt, Professor Lamont interviewed five people who had different relationships with him. Two were relatives, one a very good friend, the fourth was his former doctor (a general practitioner) and the fifth was one of Pratt's employees. None of those who examined Tsafendas did anything similar, and because of time pressures, ¹³⁹⁵ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

they were unable to double-check what Tsafendas was telling them, simply taking his word for granted. Dr. MacGregor, psychiatrist and defence witness, referring to a problem common to all those who examined Tsafendas, said that due to lack of time, he “had to take shortcuts” and that he “accepted what was given” to him from the accused, without being able to check the information or to seek third-party input.¹³⁹⁶

Pratt was also examined in the relative comfort of a hospital over a period of fourteen days, seen every day by Professor Lamont.¹³⁹⁷ Tsafendas was examined by Dr. Cooper for six hours and by the other psychiatrists for four and a half hours each while in custody in Caledon Square police station. This was the place where, as well as being physically tortured, he was forced to sleep for one and half months on the concrete floor with a single, dirty blanket. Prof. Tuviah Zabow believes that the environment where the examination takes place is very important, and that Tsafendas should have been taken to a hospital to be examined.¹³⁹⁸

TPI is essential not only for psychiatrists involved in FMHA, but also for psychologists. According to Specialty Guidelines for Forensic Psychologists by the American Psychological Association, a forensic clinician conducting an evaluation actively seeks information “that will differentially test rival hypotheses.”¹³⁹⁹ One of the reasons this is necessary is to determine whether the patient “presents but does not actually experience the symptoms of a mental disorder.”¹⁴⁰⁰ None of the psychologists who examined Tsafendas had access to any TPI about Tsafendas, and as we have seen, van Zyl was advised verbally about his medical record and simply told that he was clearly schizophrenic.

¹³⁹⁶ Dr. James William MacGregor's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹³⁹⁷ Prof. Lamont's psychiatric report about David Prat in Regina vs. David Beresford Pratt, 26 September 1960. The State versus David Beresford Pratt. 712-60. NASA; The Cape Argus, 'Judge Rules Pratt is Mentally Disordered', 26 September 1960: 2.

¹³⁹⁸ Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 2 September 2016.

¹³⁹⁹ Heilbrun et al., Forensic Mental Health Assessment: A Casebook, p. 210.

¹⁴⁰⁰ Heilbrun et al., Forensic Mental Health Assessment: A Casebook, p. 221.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 1: DR. HAROLD COOPER

DR. COOPER'S PROFESSIONAL BIOGRAPHY AS RELATED BY HIM TO THE COURT

Harold Cooper graduated as a doctor in 1944, obtained a Diploma in Psychological Medicine in 1950 and with a thesis in psychiatry became a Doctor of Medicine in 1953. He held the following full-time appointments: Three and a half years at Tara Psychiatric Hospital, Johannesburg, six months at Weskoppies Hospital, a mental institution, in Pretoria, eighteen months at Valkenberg Hospital, also a mental institution in Cape Town. Since 1954 he acted as part-time consultant psychiatrist at Groote Schuur Hospital, Cape Town. He was in private practice continuously since 1954, dealing with a large variety of mental disturbances, including the diagnosis and treatment of schizophrenics.¹⁴⁰¹ It should also be noted, though it was not mentioned at the trial, that in a 1951 case, Rex v. Kennedy, the court refused to accept Dr. Cooper's psychiatric evaluation. Dr. Cooper had declared a person accused of murder to be "mentally disordered" (as he found Tsafendas to be), but the judge dismissed his diagnosis as based on improbable evidence, and found the accused fit to stand trial.¹⁴⁰²

DR. COOPER'S EXAMINATION OF TSAFENDAS

Dr. Cooper testified that he examined Tsafendas at the request of David Bloomberg for the first time on October 1, 1966. He saw him again on October 4, then on October 11 along with Dr. MacGregor and Dr. Zabow, and a final time on October 14. The average length of each session was an hour and a half, thus six hours in all.

Dr. Cooper testified:

"I made a diagnosis of schizophrenia on the basis of my interviews with him, but, in order to try and add either supportive or negative evidence towards this diagnosis, I felt it essential to elicit a history from him and try and decide whether the history I obtained from ¹⁴⁰¹ Dr. Harold Cooper's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹⁴⁰² Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Responsibility of Mentally Deranged Persons and Related Matters, p. 17; Jones, Psychiatry, Mental Institutions, and the Mad in Apartheid South Africa, p. 103.

him was consistent with my impression of him suffering from schizophrenia.”¹⁴⁰³

What Dr. Cooper is saying, and the same applies to some of the other psychiatrists and psychologists who examined Tsafendas, is that he formed his conclusions in the first place on what Tsafendas told him and instead of seeking confirming or contrary evidence from third parties, he went back and asked Tsafendas himself. Although partly forced on him by circumstances beyond his control, including a shortage of time and a rebarbative attitude by the police, this seems an extraordinary method of forming a diagnosis, particularly in a criminal case of such huge importance. As we will see, Dr. Cooper and the other psychiatrists made many assumptions about Tsafendas, and their testimonies contain inaccuracies about his character and life which could have been avoided had they spoken to friends, acquaintances and kin.

Professor Kirk Heilbrun disagreed with the method used by Dr. Cooper (and subsequently the other psychiatrists, too) to diagnose Tsafendas, and was surprised that the doctor relied only on what he was told by him. He told the author that if he was in Dr. Cooper's position, he “would have sought information from the second and third domains [collateral interviews with people who knew Tsafendas and his medical and criminal record] rather than additional information from the first domain [Tsafendas].” He added he did not believe it possible to make an accurate diagnosis about a patient, especially in a forensic case, simply by listening to him over three ninety-minute sessions without additional, extraneous information.¹⁴⁰⁴

However, the lack of TPI, at least in Dr. Cooper's case, is hardly his fault. He was discouraged by the police from probing into Tsafendas's background and his activities prior to the assassination; this, he was told, was their job. Dr. Cooper was also told by the police and the defence lawyers that Tsafendas was a perfectly straightforward case of a schizophrenic. This led Dr. Cooper to have serious misgivings about the whole procedure and to wonder if the authorities were perhaps covering up their lax security procedures and pressing for Tsafendas to be declared insane so that they could avoid any responsibility for assassination.¹⁴⁰⁵

¹⁴⁰³ Dr. Harold Cooper's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹⁴⁰⁴ Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017.

¹⁴⁰⁵ Lambley, The Psychology of Apartheid, p. 239-240, 273.

EXTRACTS FROM DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY¹⁴⁰⁶

BACKGROUND OF THE CASE

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Who requested you to interview the accused in this case?

DR. COOPER: The attorney for the defence, Mr. David Bloomberg.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And how many interviews, to date, have you had with the accused?

DR. COOPER: I have had four interviews.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The first interview that you had, when was that?

DR. COOPER: On the 1st October, 1966.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In whose presence did you interview the accused?

DR. COOPER: In the presence of Mr. Bloomberg.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Any other person present?

DR. COOPER: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The second interview?

DR. COOPER: On the 4th October, 1966.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In the presence of anybody?

DR. COOPER: This interview was held jointly with my colleagues Dr. MacGregor and Dr. Zabow.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And the third interview?

DR. COOPER: Was similarly held jointly on the 11th October, 1966, with Dr. MacGregor and Dr. Zabow.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The fourth interview?

DR. COOPER: The fourth interview was on the 14th October, 1966; this interview was individual, without the assistance of my colleagues.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When you were introduced to the accused at your first interview, ¹⁴⁰⁶ Dr. Harold Cooper's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

was he told what your profession was? How did you introduce yourself?

DR. COOPER: He was told I was a doctor.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: These interviews, could you tell His Lordship how long did they usually last?

DR. COOPER: They varied, but the average length of each interview was an hour and a half.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was the purpose of examining the accused?

DR. COOPER: My purpose was to assess this man's mental condition.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did you find the accused when you spoke to him?

DR. COOPER: At all times I found him soft-spoken, polite, co—operative and apparently fully prepared to co-operate with all questions that were put to him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: As regards intelligence, what is your comment?

DR. COOPER: Concerning his intelligence, at an early stage I decided that this man was of normal intelligence, even quite high intelligence and throughout the interviews nothing arose to make me alter that opinion.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What language did you speak to him?

DR. COOPER: I spoke to him in English.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is his fluency in English?

DR. COOPER: His fluency in English is perfectly adequate, and I was careful in this matter, and decided in my mind that he was perfectly able to do himself justice in replying to questions in English, DEFENCE COUNSEL: What kind of vocabulary has he?

DR. COOPER: Very adequate.

TSAFENDAS'S BEING UNABLE TO FOLLOW A CONVERSATION AFTER FIFTEEN MINUTES

DR. COOPER: This man's difficulty in thinking logically and assessing things and forming reasonable judgments and coming to reasonable conclusions becomes increasingly difficult as the complexity of what he is presented with increased, particularly in respect of time. If one talks to him over quarter of an hour, the first quarter of an hour if one asks him simple questions he gets along quite all right, but as the time goes on his thoughts drift more and more and he tends more and more to lose contact with what is going on around him.

COMMENTS ON TSAFENDAS'S ABILITY TO FOLLOW A CONVERSATION AFTER FIFTEEN MINUTES

Dr. Cooper described Tsafendas as man who is unable to follow a conversation after the first fifteen minutes and "as the time goes on his thoughts drift more and more and he tends more and more to lose contact with what is going on around him." Tsafendas spent one and a half months in police custody and throughout this period was constantly seen by Major Rossouw. Rossouw interrogated Tsafendas for several hours on several occasions and was present in Caledon Square police station throughout the time Tsafendas was held there. He testified to the Commission that Tsafendas "answered all the questions spontaneously" and that he [Rossouw] "never got the impression that he tried to evade any question." He made no mention of Tsafendas's alleged inability to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes or being unable to answer any questions.¹⁴⁰⁷

As stated before, Rossouw was not a psychiatrist, but as a very experienced interrogator, he would have noticed whether a prisoner was able to follow his questions and whether he was able to answer them in a satisfactory manner. Furthermore, both of Tsafendas's statements to the police seem to support Maj. Rossouw's testimony since Tsafendas answered all the questions perfectly sensibly while it is obvious from the length of the transcripts that each interrogation lasted far longer than fifteen minutes.

Furthermore, Tsafendas was in PIDE's custody for three months in 1964. In the transcript of the interrogation, it is obvious that Tsafendas has answered all the questions perfectly logically. None of the PIDE agents observed such symptoms, while even Inspector Horacio Ferreira told the South African police said he considered Tsafendas to be “normal and regarded him as a very intelligent person.”¹⁴⁰⁸ In addition, Judge van Wyk, who questioned Tsafendas twice, wrote in his report: “He answered all the questions freely. At times, especially at the beginning, he stuttered slightly, sometimes he was vague, incoherent, and evasive, but otherwise his answers were logical and well formulated.”¹⁴⁰⁹ Thus, neither Judge van Wyk nor the PIDE agents found Tsafendas to be unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes.

¹⁴⁰⁷ Major Daniel Jacobus Rossouw testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

Professor van Wyk, the State psychiatrist appointed by the Attorney-General himself, had examined Tsafendas three times by October 6. He had written in his report, which was in the possession of the Attorney-General, that Tsafendas was “orientated,” adding, “He gives a good account of himself. His comprehension is good and his answers are relevant. His emotional responses are adequate and apt. His discourse is coherent. At times he is discursive, but not vague and he never strays from the main point of conversation...I have found no indications that he is incapable of following the court proceedings or that he is unable to exercise his rights and privileges and instruct his legal advisers and assist them in the conduct of his defence.”¹⁴¹⁰ However, although the Attorney-General had in his possession the report of his own expert-witness, which flatly contradicted Dr. Cooper’s diagnosis, he did not use it to challenge his testimony.

Furthermore, just the following day at the court, Dr. Muller, also a defence witness, would completely contradict Dr. Cooper’s argument. The following dialogue took place between Dr. Muller and the Defence Counsel:

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You had no difficulty in communicating with him?

DR. MULLER: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he have difficulty in expressing himself?

DR. MULLER: None at all.¹⁴¹¹

In addition, none of the about two hundred witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission mentioned anything like this. On the contrary some commented ¹⁴⁰⁸ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

¹⁴⁰⁹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18.

¹⁴¹⁰ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 81.

¹⁴¹¹ Dr. Hendrik Muller’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

as to the exact opposite:

- Ralph Lighton, who worked with Tsafendas for nine-ten weeks at the Marine Diamond Corporation, “never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers.”¹⁴¹²
- Garnet Muller, Tsafendas’s supervisor at South African Railways for three weeks, testified that Tsafendas gave him to understand that he took the job on a temporary basis. He “observed Demitrio Tsafendas to possess intelligence above that of the average person.”¹⁴¹³
- Neville Judson worked with Tsafendas for Mike’s Outfitters for forty-two days in July and August 1966, frequently driving him to the tanker Eleni while it was docked in Cape Town. Of Tsafendas, he told the police that he “never in no way got the impression that he could be mentally deranged. He appeared to be a normal man with normal reasoning powers.”¹⁴¹⁴
- Gillian Claire Lieberman, personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation, whose office Tsafendas often visited, “I had various discussions with him. I got quite interested in him as an individual. ... I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation.”¹⁴¹⁵
- J. Willemsse was Tsafendas’s landlord for one month in 1965. He characterised him as a “sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man.”¹⁴¹⁶
- Patrick O’Ryan said “he was well-spoken and had good vocabulary.”¹⁴¹⁷
- Cornelius Rudolph, the head court interpreter on the staff of the Magistrate of Durban appointed Tsafendas as a Portuguese and Greek interpreter. Rudolph used him “on several occasions” in a period of six months and “got to know him pretty well.” He testified that “I spoke with him several times, he seemed to be a normal person and ¹⁴¹² Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁴¹³ Garnet Vincent Muller statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁴¹⁴ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

¹⁴¹⁵ Gillian Claire Lieberman statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁴¹⁶ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), ‘Assassin - Man With A Chip On His Shoulder’, 11 September 1966: 1, 8.

¹⁴¹⁷ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

intelligent. He spoke English properly.”¹⁴¹⁸

- Violet Irene Manning was Tsafendas’s landlady for almost two months in 1965. She told the Commission of Enquiry that Tsafendas “was well-dressed, well-spoken, and gave a good impression. From his general appearance he appeared to be a businessman.”¹⁴¹⁹
- Captain P.A. Sanianos, the Greek Consul in Beira “was often in the company of the subject and others had several conversations with him.” He considered Tsafendas to be “a normal and very intelligent person.”¹⁴²⁰

Furthermore, Tsafendas attended many interviews in his working life and appeared perfectly capable of answering questions or he would not have got the jobs:

- Petrus Schuin, the head messenger at the Parliament and one of the three men who had interviewed him and appointed him told the Commission of Enquiry that “there was nothing out of the ordinary about him. Tsafendas was the same as any other person that had worked there.”¹⁴²¹
- Sydney Wiehand, who had also interviewed him at the Parliament, said about Tsafendas, “he was a quiet man. He wasn’t the rough type, or anything like that. He was quiet - quietly spoken, well-mannered.”¹⁴²²
- Horst Hartmann, Tsafendas’s employer at the heavy engineering company Fries and Son in Frankfurt, Germany, characterised Tsafendas “as extremely nice and friendly ... I thought he was more likely to apply for an executive job than as a welder. Well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous, a very pleasant man. He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman...he made a good impression and he spoke good German, so I took him on... we liked him ... always laughing, a good worker.” Tsafendas “left on his own wish” although Hartmann “would have liked to keep him.”¹⁴²³

¹⁴¹⁸ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁴¹⁹ Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

¹⁴²⁰ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

¹⁴²¹ Petrus Robert Samuël Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

¹⁴²² Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

¹⁴²³ Daily Dispatch, ‘He Made A Good Impression’, 8 September 1966: 1; Daily Express, ‘The Assassin’, 8 September 1966: 2; Natal Witness, ‘Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...’, 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, ‘Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte’, 8 September 1966.

- Albert Vercueil, Tsafendas’s boss at F. A. Poole in Pretoria, said that in the five months he worked with Tsafendas, he found him to be “not a very good worker, but will say that he was an intelligent worker.”¹⁴²⁴ He also testified to the Commission of Enquiry that he considered Tsafendas to be “an intelligent man, just untidy and lazy in rounding off his work.” He never got the impression that Mr. Tsafendas was not right in his mind.¹⁴²⁵
- Ian Boswell, administrative assistant at the Department of Labour in Cape Town. He interviewed Tsafendas three times in 1966 and testified to the police that “he was at all times neatly dressed and never gave the impression of being destitute. Aside from being over-talkative, he showed no symptoms of abnormality, during his interviews with me.”¹⁴²⁶
- Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys, employment officer at the Department of Labour in Cape Town, interviewed Tsafendas twice. He testified to the police that Tsafendas was “neatly dressed” and he “never got the impression that there was mentally anything wrong with him or that he acted abnormally.”¹⁴²⁷
- Gideon Cloete, also employed at the Department of Labour, interviewed Tsafendas twice. According to Cloete, Tsafendas “had a neat appearance and made a good impression.” He did not notice any “signs of abnormality” and “appeared totally normal” to him.¹⁴²⁸
- Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen was Tsafendas’s tram instructor in December 1965 and January 1966. He testified to the police that “I did not at all get the impression that mentally anything was wrong with him. He is mentally normal.”¹⁴²⁹

Tsafendas was also interviewed by Limasollu Naci, owner of the private language college in Istanbul in 1961, and given the position of teacher of English. During a week’s probation, he was under observation. Obviously successful, he remained at the college for some six months before leaving on his own volition. Mrs. Advie Vedia Limasollu, wife of Limasollu Naci, does not remember Tsafendas, but stated firmly that her husband would have never appointed or kept on a teacher who was not able to follow a conversation. Teachers had ¹⁴²⁴ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁴²⁵ Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁴²⁶ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

¹⁴²⁷ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

¹⁴²⁸ Gideon Jacobus Cloete testimony at Tsafendas’s summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, NASA.

¹⁴²⁹ Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

also to deal with the students’ parents and someone at some point would have noticed if her had problems.¹⁴³⁰ In fact, Limasollu Naci became a good friend of Tsafendas and spent a lot of time with him during those six months.¹⁴³¹ It seems unlikely that he would not have noticed such a thing about Tsafendas.

More importantly, Tsafendas was examined and interviewed twice by two state doctors for his South African permanent residency permit and neither of them found him to be “unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes,” though they were not psychiatrists:

- On November 11, 1963, Tsafendas was medically examined by Dr. C. Been for his permanent residence application and was found “not to be mentally or physically defective in any way,” and “generally in a good state of health.”¹⁴³² Dr. Been would later examine Tsafendas again “for burns on his body whilst employed at Pooles.” Again nothing about his mental state would be noted.¹⁴³³
- On November 14, 1963, Tsafendas was examined again for the permit by Dr. A.C. McDonald, who also wrote “a favourable report” and subsequently a certificate for permanent residence was issued for him.¹⁴³⁴

In addition to these two doctors, Tsafendas was examined by another eight physicians, none of them psychiatrists, over the course of three years, and no one noticed any inability to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes:

- On March 15, 1965, Tsafendas was examined by a South African Railways’ medical officer whose name is indecipherable in his report. He was found to be perfectly healthy, without any issues and therefore capable of working at the company.¹⁴³⁵
- On September 25, 1965, he was examined by Dr. G.C. Baker and nothing was reported about his mental state.¹⁴³⁶

¹⁴³⁰ Advije Vedia Limasollu in a personal interview, 8 January 2016.

¹⁴³¹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 4 November 2015.

¹⁴³² Demitrio Tsafendas medical certificate issued by Dr. Been for the Aliens Act, 1937. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

¹⁴³³ Dr. Been statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁴³⁴ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

¹⁴³⁵ South African Railways Confidential Medical Examination Certificate of Demitrio Tsafendas. K150, Vol. 7, File: S 83708, Tsafendas: D. NASA.

¹⁴³⁶ Dr. G.C. Baker Statement re: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. No date. K150, Vol. 6, File: 4, NASA.

- On November 19, 1965, Tsafendas was medically examined to insure that he was able to work for City Tramways in Cape Town. He was found fit to work and duly hired.¹⁴³⁷
- On January 13, 1966, Tsafendas applied for work at the Marine Diamond Corporation and underwent a medical check-up that same day. The doctor who examined him¹⁴³⁸ found Tsafendas to be perfectly healthy and capable of working for the company.¹⁴³⁹
- On February 25, 1966, Tsafendas was examined at Groote Schuur Hospital by I. Eisenberg, a registrar on the Ear, Nose & Throat Department, who did not observe anything mentally wrong with him.¹⁴⁴⁰
- On April 18, 19, 26 and May 3, 1966 Tsafendas was examined at Groote Schuur Hospital by Dr. Leon Goldman, a consultant ear, nose and throat surgeon. He did not observe anything mentally wrong with him and discharged him as “fit” on May 17, 1966.¹⁴⁴¹
- From April 19, 1966 to May 15, 1966, Tsafendas was under the medical supervision of Dr. Leon Solomon at Groote Schuur Hospital, suffering from “a deviated nasal septum and epistaxis,” and underwent surgery on his nose. Dr. Solomon during this period did not report any mental disability and found Tsafendas to be fit to return to his work at Marine Diamond Corporation. Dr. Solomon examined him again on June 7, 1966, and again did not notice anything mentally wrong with him.¹⁴⁴²
- Dr. S. Michelson, a specialist physician, examined Tsafendas in the Neurology Department of Groote Schuur Hospital on June 3, 1966 and did not notice Tsafendas’s reported inability to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes. Nothing was reported about his mental state.¹⁴⁴³

¹⁴³⁷ Donald Neville Mackay statement to the COE, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁴³⁸ The doctor’s name in the medical report is indecipherable, but in her statement to the police, Gillian Claire Lieberman, personnel secretary at the Marine Diamond Corporation, referred to Dr. Lazzard as being the company’s doctor..

¹⁴³⁹ Demitrio Tsafendas’s Marine Diamond Corporation Application for Employment, 13 January 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 3. NASA.

¹⁴⁴⁰ I. Eisenberg Statement. RE: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. N.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁴⁴¹ I. Eisenberg Statement. RE: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. N.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁴⁴² Dr. Leon Solomon’s medical report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA; Medical certificate issued by Dr. Solomon for the Employment Insurance Act, 1946. 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA.

¹⁴⁴³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 64.

Apart from the above doctors, Tsafendas was also examined a few hours after the assassination by another two doctors and none of them found him to be unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes.

- Dr. Ralph Kossew examined Tsafendas only half an hour after the assassination. His testimony is highly important due to its timing. Dr. Kossew found Tsafendas “not confused ... he answers questions guardedly but does not appear to be confused ... he didn’t appear anxious ... He may have been a little bit nervous but not in any marked degree ... He was calm ...”¹⁴⁴⁴
- Finally, Dr. T.A. Darby examined Tsafendas on the evening of the assassination but did not report anything to be wrong about his mental state or being unable to communicate with him.¹⁴⁴⁵

It seems inconceivable that of these twelve doctors, some of whom examined him more than once or had him under their care for several days, not one observed that Tsafendas was “unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes.” The extent of the errors in Dr. Cooper’s diagnosis regarding Tsafendas will become even more apparent later in this chapter: as we will see, he testified that he also found him “unable to function on a reasonable level”, unable to care for himself, talking in a disjointed manner, unable to give a coherent account of himself and of his actions and suffering from thought-blocking. It seems rather implausible that Tsafendas was examined by all the above doctors, and none observed any of these symptoms.

The author asked forty-six witnesses who knew Tsafendas if they thought Dr. Cooper was right about Tsafendas not being able to concentrate for more than fifteen minutes. Not a single one agreed with the doctor. Here are responses from some who knew Tsafendas over a long period and who spent a lot of time talking with him:

Father Michalis Visvinis, who visited Tsafendas in prison very regularly for five years (1989-1994) and spoke extensively with him, shook his head in disbelief upon hearing Dr. Cooper’s comment. He told the author:

“No, no, this is not true. He [Tsafendas] was always very alert. I was actually surprised that his mind was so alert after so many years in prison. Most of our conversations lasted about an hour and a half and he never lost track, nor did I feel that he was struggling to cope with our discussion... I felt that he [Tsafendas] needed to speak, so several times I would just let him speak. He enjoyed speaking and he could speak for hours. He always spoke like a normal man.

¹⁴⁴⁴ Dr. Ralph Kossew’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹⁴⁴⁵ Dr. T.A. Darby. Statement re: Demitrio Tsafendas. G.S.H. NO. 65/014-181, 6 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

I also often asked him questions about his life, and his answers were always logical and what one would expect. He never evaded any question and I never had to repeat myself to him for a second time, nor was his answer ever off the subject... [His speech] was not disjointed or anything else. It was perfectly articulate and logical, always very coherent. He never said anything to suggest he had a mental problem or that he had any difficulty speaking or thinking and expressing himself properly. I am positive that this was not the case [Tsafendas being unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes]. This comment is entirely false.”¹⁴⁴⁶

Alexander Moumbaris spent in 1972 three months in the cell next to Tsafendas in Pretoria Prison. Moumbaris spoke to Tsafendas for an hour every day during this period, thus, he must have spent at least ninety hours talking to him. Moumbaris dismissed outright the suggestion that Tsafendas was unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes. Asked by the author if Tsafendas had any difficulty in following their conversations or understanding his questions, Moumbaris smiled dismissively. He said:

“No, no, it was nothing like this. He was absolutely normal and very serious, he always talked like a normal man, like any other man. I enjoyed talking to him, he was very intelligent and witty. He had things to tell you, you could have a serious conversation with him. He never had any difficulty expressing himself or participating in a conversation. Most times he led the conversations. There were never gaps or pauses in his speech, or anything that would make me think that he was struggling to speak or participate in our conversations.”¹⁴⁴⁷

Moumbaris also told the author that even in March 1996 when he visited him for a couple of hours in Sterkfontein Hospital, they had a perfectly normal conversation, despite the deterioration in Tsafendas’s health and hearing. How capable Tsafendas was to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes is also evident from the fact that he asked Moumbaris in 1972 to teach him Algebra. Although the warders stepped in and stopped the lessons not long ¹⁴⁴⁶ Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

¹⁴⁴⁷ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017.

ago after they started, Tsafendas turned out to be an excellent student and more than capable of following Moumbaris’s teaching.¹⁴⁴⁸

Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis told the author:

“We spoke for hours about politics, religion and history and he was one of the most knowledgeable people I ever met in all these subjects. He never got lost in the conversation and he would never drop a subject until I had agreed with him. He would never give up a conversation if you disagreed. He would bombard you with examples and arguments about the point at question. Sometimes I thought he must be making up some of the examples to convince us he was right. I would then go home and check the example he had used only to find out that he was right! He was incapable of letting you go until he had convinced you he was right. The doctor’s diagnosis is 100% wrong, believe me.”¹⁴⁴⁹

Fotini Gavasiadis invited Tsafendas to be a guest in the house where she lived with her husband and small son in Pretoria in 1963. After a few weeks, he moved into an apartment next door where he stayed for the following eight months. During this period, he spent much of his time back in her house, almost like flatmates. Throughout these nine months, Tsafendas and Gavasiadis also worked together in her brother’s café. Fotini got to know Tsafendas very well and ranked among his closest friends. She smiled and shook her head after she heard Dr. Cooper’s comment. “What else am I going to hear!” she exclaimed in disbelief. She told the author:

“This is like a joke, it is ridiculous! This and all the other things you have told me these psychiatrists said are ridiculous and unbelievable. Of course they are untrue. I don’t know what type of doctors they were, but I they certainly lost the plot with Dimitri ... I told you Dimitris could buy and sell you and he could do that at any time during a conversation, in the first ten minutes, then again after thirty minutes or an hour and then again after two hours. He wouldn’t let you get up from the chair until he had made you agree with what he was saying, especially when talking politics.

He was very convincing and persuasive - he could turn black into white! If you disagreed with something with him, he would find a way to convince you that he is right and that you are wrong - even if you know that you are right and that he is wrong! If he made a mistake about something, he would turn things upside-down and at the end, he would even ¹⁴⁴⁸ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017.

¹⁴⁴⁹ Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

make you apologise to him ... In those nine months, I saw him and spoke to him every day and not even once did he appear to have an issue with his speech or his thoughts. He was always the same. We spent hours and hours talking and his speech was never incoherent, disjointed, blocked or whatever else, it was always perfect. He never gave me even the slightest indication that he might be having the issues you mentioned. The doctor’s comment is for laughs.”¹⁴⁵⁰

Katerina Pnema, Tsafendas’s half-sister, was very surprised to hear such a comment. “This sounds to me like a comedy ... the doctor’s comment is entirely false and does not bear any resemblance to the truth. Dimitris was not like this; he was never like this. The doctor is talking nonsense.”¹⁴⁵¹

Tsafendas lived for five months at Patrick O’Ryan’s house and remained close to the family for another year. During this seventeen-month period, none of the family found Tsafendas to be unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes. On the contrary, they all considered him to be a very intelligent and soft-spoken person.¹⁴⁵² Allan O’Ryan, who was very close to him, told the author that Tsafendas was “always very sensible in his answers to anybody.”¹⁴⁵³

Mary Eintracht, Tsafendas’s first cousin, knew him since he was five years old and grew up alongside him in Mozambique and in Egypt. In Pretoria in 1963-1964, she spent a lot of time with him, including two or three weeks when they lived in the same house. She told the author:

“What are you talking about? Is this what the doctor believed about Dimitri? My God, I can’t believe it. What type of doctor was this? Of course Dimitris was able to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes; it’s laughable to suggest otherwise. He could talk for hours and hours about anything, especially politics, trying to convince you that he was right. He would continue talking to you for hours and hours until he would have convinced you that he was right.”¹⁴⁵⁴

Irene Michaletos was visited frequently by Tsafendas in her house in Beira for several months between 1964 and 1965. He even often stayed there. She strongly dismisses Dr.

¹⁴⁵⁰ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

¹⁴⁵¹ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁴⁵² Allan O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019; Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Stanley O’Ryan in a personal interview with the author, 9 April 2015.

¹⁴⁵³ Allan O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019.

¹⁴⁵⁴ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

Cooper’s claim and states that Tsafendas was “very good with words. Of course he was able to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes; he never lost track or there was never any suggestion that he was not capable of doing so. Never, never. He was talking all the time, he was really good with words; he knew how to talk.”¹⁴⁵⁵

In 1951, and between 1963 and 1965, Tsafendas spent a lot of time in his Aunt Artemis Michaletos’s house (Tsafendas’s aunt who brought him up in Egypt) and even slept there on several occasions. John Michaletos, Artemis’s son and Tsafendas’s cousin, who was always present and spent hours talking to Tsafendas, told the author:

“He [Tsafendas] talked very, very passionately about his political ideas, his cheeks sometimes getting red and sweaty from the passion. He was very self-assured about his ideas and you could not have a political debate with him, he would have cut you into pieces. He was very well read, especially in politics, while he had this ability I haven’t seen in anyone to be able to convince you that he is right. He would bring argument after argument and example after example to convince you that he is right. Sometimes, I wondered whether all these [political and historical] examples and facts he was talking about were true. I did not know. I was not aware of any of these. And you couldn’t check at the time, there was no internet, but it all sounded very, very convincing. I used to tell him, and my mother used to tell him too, that he should be a politician or a lawyer.”¹⁴⁵⁶

It is difficult to believe that Artemis and John Michaletos would have envisaged Tsafendas as a successful politician or lawyer if he was unable to follow a conversation for more than fifteen minutes. Artemis had known him since he was two and a half years old and watched him learn and grow through infancy. John Michaletos also smiled and shook his head in disbelief at Dr. Cooper’s comment. Asked by the author to comment, he said:

“What should I tell you? I have told you everything about him. He [Tsafendas] was nothing like this. He [Dr. Cooper] could not have been more wrong. Everything this doctor [Dr. Cooper] has been saying is nonsense, it’s not true about Dimitri. He was nothing like this, it’s like he had either examined a different person or he was a bad doctor.”¹⁴⁵⁷

Antony Michaletos, Artemis’s son and John’s brother, was also present in 1951 and in 1963-1965 when Tsafendas stayed at their house. He dismisses outright Dr. Cooper’s ¹⁴⁵⁵ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

¹⁴⁵⁶ John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

¹⁴⁵⁷ John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

suggestion that Tsafendas was unable to follow a conversation for longer than fifteen minutes. He told the author:

“He [Tsafendas] spoke fine, like a normal, intelligent man, no disjoint, not gibberish, nothing like this... Are you joking? Of course he was able to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes. We were talking for hours. Hours and hours. Almost every night or every other night he would come to our house; we’ll eat and then sit in the living room or the balcony and talk.”¹⁴⁵⁸

Ira Kyriakakis, Tsafendas’s childhood friend who remained very close to him until his imprisonment. She told the author:

“The doctor is making a mistake. Dimitris not only could follow a conversation for indefinite time, but could also participate in any type of conversation because he was very knowledgeable. He was never as the doctor described. Dimitri was so clever and able that he could convince the devil to buy a Bible. He was like a politician, he would turn things upside-down to make you see things from his point of view. He was talking beautifully; slowly and with authority, like a very important man. No, no, he was not like the doctor said.”¹⁴⁵⁹

Thirteen of the Eleni seamen who were with Tsafendas every day for forty-two days until three days before the assassination, and who were interviewed by the author, also rejected the idea that Tsafendas couldn’t follow a conversation after fifteen minutes. The author will include only the more representative of the men’s statements:

Michalis Vasilakis told the author that Tsafendas appeared to be “able to convince anyone that his political ideas were right. ... You couldn’t disagree with him about anything. He always found a way to convince you that he was right. He was very, very able in reasoning and developing and explaining an argument. He was extremely good with words and arguments.”¹⁴⁶⁰

Nikolas Kambouris, another seaman, was very surprised to hear Dr. Cooper’s statement. “I told you he had a very distinctive way of talking. It was slow, but very intelligent and sophisticated ... He was talking like a professor. It was more likely for us to not be able to follow him than him to follow us. We spent hours talking about politics and he was leading the conversation; none of us knew anything about apartheid at the time.”¹⁴⁶¹

¹⁴⁵⁸ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016.

¹⁴⁵⁹ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

¹⁴⁶⁰ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

¹⁴⁶¹ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014.

Shaking his head in a negative manner, Emanuil Mastromanolis said of Dr. Cooper’s comment, “No, no, I never noticed this. He could speak for hours and hours. Always clearly and logically.”¹⁴⁶²

Andreas Babiolakis lived with Tsafendas in the same house in Beira for two or three months and knew him since they were children. “No, no, never ... Dimitri was not just able to follow the conversation, most of the times he was leading the conversation, especially when talking about politics.”¹⁴⁶³

¹⁴⁶² Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016.

¹⁴⁶³ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

The following witnesses all strongly dismiss Dr. Cooper’s diagnosis about Tsafendas being unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes:

- Reuben O’Ryan lived in the same house as Tsafendas for five months.¹⁴⁶⁴
- Mario Ferreira, who worked with him for six weeks at the Table Power Station.¹⁴⁶⁵
- Stanley O’Ryan also lived in the same house as Tsafendas for five months.¹⁴⁶⁶
- Panagiotis Peroglou knew Tsafendas for about a year in 1965-1966.¹⁴⁶⁷
- Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott’s boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest...¹⁴⁶⁸
- Costas Chagios who were Tsafendas’s friends in Cape Town for more than a year.¹⁴⁶⁹
- Nick Papadakis knew Tsafendas for two-three months and lived with him for two months in Gondola and Beira in 1964.¹⁴⁷⁰
- George Liberopoulos met Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques in 1963 and associated with him for a few weeks.¹⁴⁷¹
- Alexandra Vaporidis knew Tsafendas for seven months in 1961 in Istanbul.¹⁴⁷²
- Miltiades Kaldis met Tsafendas in Cape Town in 1965 and kept in touch until his arrest.¹⁴⁷³
- George Ananiades met Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques in 1963. They spent several hours talking.¹⁴⁷⁴

Professors Alban Burke, Phillip Resnick, Robert L. Sadoff and Tuviah Zabow believe that it is extremely unlikely, and very close to impossible, that none of the people who knew Tsafendas, some extremely well, ever noticed that he was unable to follow a conversation ¹⁴⁶⁴ Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

¹⁴⁶⁵ Mario Ferreira in a personal interview, 21 May 2019.

¹⁴⁶⁶ Stanley O’Ryan in a personal interview with the author, 9 April 2015.

¹⁴⁶⁷ Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

¹⁴⁶⁸ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

¹⁴⁶⁹ Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015.

¹⁴⁷⁰ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

¹⁴⁷¹ George Liberopoulos in a personal interview, 6 July 2015.

¹⁴⁷² Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

¹⁴⁷³ Miltiades Kaldis in a personal interview, 12 March 2016.

¹⁴⁷⁴ George Ananiades in a personal interview, 21 June 2016.

after fifteen minutes.¹⁴⁷⁵ Reyner van Zyl, who examined Tsafendas for the defence, told the author that it was “highly improbable.”¹⁴⁷⁶

TSAFENDAS NOT BEING CONCERNED FOR HIS FUTURE AND TALKING IN A DISJOINTED MANNER

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was the first thing that struck you when you saw this man, the accused?

DR. COOPER: The first thing that struck me was an abnormality in this man’s emotional attitude to his situation and surroundings. I was struck by him reacting rather incongruously. I felt that here was a man who had been charged in a very, very serious matter and he displayed a singular lack of anxiety. He showed no sign of agitation, stress or tension. He was not restless. On each occasion when one came to interview him one never found him pacing up and down; one found him usually sleeping or at least dozing. When one discussed this whole matter with him, he did not show any appropriate emotional reaction that one would expect...

JUDGE BEYERS: Have you had experience of murderers before?

DR. COOPER: Yes. I have never found them climbing walls yet. I have defended quite a lot of them in my life. In the instances where I have gone to various gaols to see murderers, I have found them anxious, I have found them frequently complaining of insomnia, frequently asking and pleading for sleeping tablets. They have been agitated. They have constantly intercepted with questions as to their predicament and as to their fate. These features were, I thought, significantly absent in this man...

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I want to put this to you: is the accused concerned about his fate?

DR. COOPER: No. Not as far as I was able to establish.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Have you probed that matter with him?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: This lack of, I think, or inappropriate emotional response to his ¹⁴⁷⁵ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016; Professor Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 17 December 2016; Professor Robert L. Sadoff in a personal interview with the author, 12 August 2015; Professor Tuvia Zabow in a personal interview, 10 October 2016.

¹⁴⁷⁶ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 17 April 2016.

present predicament, why is that important? Or is it important, first of all?

DR. COOPER: I felt it was important, firstly, on the basis that I considered this to be abnormal and different from what one had been accustomed to seeing in such cases, different from what one would expect in such a case, and, furthermore, important in that precisely this type of emotional reaction is frequently seen and completely consistent with a diagnosis of schizophrenia.

... I would describe him, for the most part, as being emotionally flat, except that, again rather incongruously, he would at times smile, at times chuckle at inappropriate moments in the interview, and also one might mention a feature, namely, that he quite frequently tends to grimace rather grossly and extensively during interviews...

... This type of grimacing, one cannot go so far certainly as to say that it is diagnostic of schizophrenia but it does frequently occur in people suffering from schizophrenia ...

DEFENCE COUNSEL: As regards his emotional response, what relevance has that in diagnosing schizophrenia?

DR. COOPER: Simply that this emotional response is commonly seen in schizophrenia and is completely consistent with the diagnosis of schizophrenia.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What does the present emotional state indicate?

DR. COOPER: It indicates to me an indifference to his whole situation, DEFENCE COUNSEL: And in relation to reality?

DR. COOPER: In relation to reality I found him decidedly disturbed in that, although it was clear to me, because he said so, he knew what he had done, he knew that he was going to be tried, but he was unable to understand the magnitude of the situation. He was unable to fully grasp the serious consequences of the situation. This became apparent, apart from his general attitude and his mode of discussion, in certain remarks which he made, remarks that I am completely satisfied he made in all sincerity, such remarks as at one stage, he paused for a moment and he said: "I do not think that I will be able to live in Cape Town after this because of the public opinion, you know." At another stage, when we were discussing various jobs that he had held, he said that if he was ever offered a job in the House of Assembly again he does not think that he would be able to face up to that job again. These remarks perhaps are small remarks, but to me they had deep significance and confirmed my impression of this man being out of touch with reality, unable to grasp the real nature of the situation in which he now finds himself...

... The next sign or indication of mental abnormality that I detected during my first interview, and at all subsequent interviews, concerned his thinking processes. I have already stated that he is an intelligent man. He is able to make certain quite intelligent statements. He is able to provide one with certain facts in quite an intelligent manner. But if one allows him to give free flow to his thoughts and feelings, one finds that one would be discussing a certain point or matter with him and he will start perhaps vaguely answering your questions and then gradually ramble along in a completely disjointed manner. He will lose the trend of his thinking. As a listener, one finds oneself losing the trend of what he is trying to tell you, and you end up not quite knowing at all what he is trying to put across to you... this man is an intelligent individual. In fact, I think I am prepared to go so far as to say he is above average in intelligence. And taking into account his intelligence, I find that his inability to express himself in a coherent fashion is in fact significant...

... I have spent considerable time with this man trying to elicit from him whether he has any views regarding his defence, whether he had any idea of what sort of approach his defending counsel would be adopting in this case, whether he had any personal views on how he would try to defend himself, whether he really understood the implications of this whole matter, and I came to the conclusion that he had no notion of these things, that he had no understanding of these things at all.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is he able to make a proper defence?

DR. COOPER: Most definitely not.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is he able to instruct me properly in this matter?

DR. COOPER: I don't think he is able to instruct you at all, usefully.

DR. COOPER: I found myself comparing this case with other murder cases, other murderers who I have examined, and they have always shown a lot of interest and anxiety concerning their defence, and they have always tendered to offer explanations, excuses, reasons and - whether they be worthwhile or not - ideas they had concerning why they may not be guilty. This man had nothing of this type to offer at all."

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you ever get the impression that the accused was concerned about his rights?

DR. COOPER: His rights?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Yes?

DR. COOPER: He showed a certain amount of concern, but I would say minimal concern and a degree of concern that I thought was completely inappropriate and unusual in circumstances of this sort.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER’S ABOVE TESTIMONY

TSAFENDAS NOT BEING CONCERNED ABOUT HIS FUTURE

Asked about Tsafendas’s lack of response to his predicament, Dr. Cooper states that “this type of emotional reaction is frequently seen and completely consistent with a diagnosis of schizophrenia ...” Tsafendas told the police in a statement he made on September 11, 1966, “I did not care about the consequences, for what would happen to me afterwards. I was so disgusted with the racial policy that I went through with my plans to kill the Prime Minister.” He repeated this in the same interview, saying, “I did not think I would get away after murdering the Prime Minister. I did not care what happened to me.”¹⁴⁷⁷ Clearly, his political convictions overrode his certainty that he would be captured and required to face the consequences of his action. That is entirely different from someone being indifferent to his fate as a result of schizophrenia. However, Dr. Cooper did not have access to Tsafendas’s statements.

In addition to this, Tsafendas could not have claimed that he was innocent. He had killed Dr. Verwoerd in front of more than a hundred witnesses and could hardly have said, “I didn’t do it!” Being aware of the consequences and ready to face them, why would he change his attitude towards Dr. Cooper? He was not the first defendant to follow court proceedings with apathy. In many cases, especially political trials, prisoners are uninterested, either because they don’t care about the outcome or they don’t recognise the authority of the court. Tsafendas knew what the outcome would be: he was going to be found unfit to stand trial and believed that he would be sent to a hospital.

Thirty years later, Tsafendas told Father Minas Constandinou and Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis that it was easy to convince his defence team and everyone who examined him that he was mad. “It was easy because everyone wanted to find me mad, both the government and my defence team.”¹⁴⁷⁸ Hence his apathetic attitude. Defendants who fear death or life imprisonment would demonstrate concern or distress, but Tsafendas did not care about what would happen to him and because he was almost certain about the outcome, he was not fearful.

¹⁴⁷⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

An alternative reason for Tsafendas’s attitude and one that has never been explored was offered to the author by Father Minas Constandinou: that Tsafendas was seeking personal redemption for what he saw as past acts of cowardice. Tsafendas felt guilty that he had not fought the Nazis during the Second World War; instead, he had repeatedly pretended to be ill so as to remain in hospital and avoid being sent into the Atlantic and exposed to German U-boats. Tsafendas often spoke of the shame these actions caused him and how this became worse when he learned of the Nazis’ atrocities. He also regretted that he had not gone to Spain to join the International Brigades against the fascists because he feared dying young. Although Tsafendas never related his guilt for these matters to the assassination, Father Minas got the impression that by carrying out an attack on Dr. Verwoerd without an escape plan and in the certain knowledge that he would be captured, Tsafendas was seeking atonement for his earlier failures.¹⁴⁷⁹

History is replete with examples of men who faced critical situations, including the prospect of death, with an equanimity similar to Tsafendas’s. These people were not schizophrenic, indeed they were entirely sane, many were highly intelligent and all were fully aware of their circumstances. Surely the last thirty days of Socrates’ life give the lie to Dr. Cooper’s conclusions that Tsafendas’s “emotional reaction” was “frequently seen and completely consistent with a diagnosis of schizophrenia.” Was Socrates also a schizophrenic?

TSAFENDAS TALKING IN A DISJOINTED MANNER

Dr. Cooper testified that Tsafendas was vague when answering questions and spoke in a rambling and disjointed manner, and the following day three more defence witnesses, Dr. Sakinofsky, Peter Daniels and Patrick O’Ryan, gave similar testimony. However, Patrick O’Ryan had also testified that Tsafendas “was well-spoken and had good vocabulary.”¹⁴⁸⁰ In addition, O’Ryan later declared that he had lied and exaggerated some of the things he said ¹⁴⁷⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

¹⁴⁷⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁴⁸⁰ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

about Tsafendas in order to save his friend’s life. This was done after Wilfrid Cooper said it was the only way to prevent from being condemned to death. It is also very possible that advocate Cooper gave the same advice to Peter Daniels. We will examine these two testimonies and that of Dr. Sakinofsky later.

However, with regard to Dr. Cooper’s comment about the accused being vague and talking in a disjointed manner, none of Tsafendas’s statements to the police conveyed that impression. His words are coherent and he communicates clearly. Major Rossouw, the head of the Security Police in Cape Town, who interrogated Tsafendas several times and for many hours and who was in constant touch with him while in custody, testified to the Commission that Tsafendas “answered all the questions spontaneously,” he “never got the impression that he tried to evade any question” and reported none of the symptoms mentioned by Dr. Cooper.¹⁴⁸¹

Major Rossouw was not a psychiatrist, but he was a very experienced interrogator having also interrogated John Harris, Stephanie Kemp and other ARM members, who had all been tortured during their interrogation,¹⁴⁸² and must have been able to detect whether Tsafendas talked in a disjointed manner or presented any of the other symptoms described by Dr. Cooper. Having spent so much time with Tsafendas, he could surely tell if something was wrong with him. Both of Tsafendas’s statements to the police support Maj. Rossouw’s testimony, since Tsafendas answered all the questions he was asked perfectly ably and judging by the length of the transcripts, it is clear that each interrogation lasted far longer than fifteen minutes, allegedly Tsafendas’s maximum concentration span.

As stated before, Rossouw was not a psychiatrist, but as a very experienced interrogator, he would have noticed whether a prisoner was able to follow his questions and whether he was able to answer them in a satisfactory manner. Furthermore, both of Tsafendas’s statements to the police seem to support Maj. Rossouw’s testimony since Tsafendas answered all the questions perfectly sensibly while it is obvious from the length of the transcripts that each interrogation lasted far longer than fifteen minutes.

Furthermore, Tsafendas was in PIDE’s custody for three months in 1964. None of the PIDE agents observed Tsafendas having such symptoms, while even Inspector Horacio Ferreira told the South African police that he considered Tsafendas to be “normal and ¹⁴⁸¹ Major Daniel Jacobus Rossouw testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

¹⁴⁸² Fullard, “State Repression in the 1960s”, p. 362.

regarded him as a very intelligent person.”¹⁴⁸³ In addition, Judge van Wyk, who questioned Tsafendas twice, did not mention anything in his report about Tsafendas talking in a disjointed manner. On the contrary, he wrote: “He answered all the questions freely. At times, especially at the beginning, he stuttered slightly, sometimes he was vague, incoherent, and evasive, but otherwise his answers were logical and well formulated.”¹⁴⁸⁴ Thus, neither Judge van Wyk nor the PIDE agents found Tsafendas to talk in a disjointed manner.

None of the two hundred witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission or the forty-six who were interviewed by the author, including several people who knew him very well, said Tsafendas ever lost the thread of what he was saying or talked in a rambling or disjointed manner. For example:

- Gillian Claire Lieberman, personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation, whose office Tsafendas often visited, “I had various discussions with him. I got quite interested in him as an individual. ... I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation.”¹⁴⁸⁵
- Ralph Lighton, who worked with Tsafendas for nine to ten weeks at the Marine Diamond Corporation, testified to the police that he “never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers.”¹⁴⁸⁶
- J. Willemse was Tsafendas’s landlord for one month in 1965. He characterised him as a “sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man.”¹⁴⁸⁷
- Captain P.A. Sanianos, the Greek Consul in Beira “was often in the company of the subject and others had several conversations with him.” He considered Tsafendas to be “a normal and very intelligent person.”¹⁴⁸⁸
- August Karel Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria. He found him to be “very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet. I never noticed anything abnormal about him, ¹⁴⁸³ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

¹⁴⁸⁴ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18.

¹⁴⁸⁵ Gillian Claire Lieberman statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁴⁸⁶ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁴⁸⁷ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), ‘Assassin - Man With A Chip On His Shoulder’, 11 September 1966: 1, 8.

¹⁴⁸⁸ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

except that he had a strange look when I looked him straight in the eyes. He never gave me the impression that he was suffering from any mental disease.”¹⁴⁸⁹

- Patrick O’Ryan said “he was well-spoken and had good vocabulary.”¹⁴⁹⁰
- Captain P.A. Sanianos, the Greek Consul in Beira “was often in the company of the subject and others had several conversations with him.” He considered Tsafendas to be “a normal and very intelligent person.”¹⁴⁹¹
- Cornelius Rudolph, the head court interpreter on the staff of the Magistrate of Durban appointed Tsafendas as a Portuguese and Greek interpreter. Rudolph used him “on several occasions” in a period of six months and “got to know him pretty well.” He testified that “I spoke with him several times, he seemed to be a normal person and intelligent. He spoke English properly.”¹⁴⁹²
- Violet Irene Manning was Tsafendas’s landlady for almost two months in 1965. She told the Commission of Enquiry that Tsafendas, “was well-dressed, well-spoken, and gave a good impression. From his general appearance, he appeared to be a businessman.”¹⁴⁹³
- Johannes Aurets, Tsafendas’s supervisor at the South African Railways, told the police Tsafendas “was a well-mannered and well-spoken person. He associated with those working with him. He was soft-spoken and appeared to be of a good nature.”¹⁴⁹⁴

Furthermore, the author asked forty-six people who knew Tsafendas, some very well, and none ever got the impression that his speech was disjointed: two priests who met him in prison and in the hospital in the 1980s and the 1990s and who spent hundreds of hours with him are positive that Tsafendas did not talk in a disjointed manner.¹⁴⁹⁵

Father Michalis Visvinis, who visited Tsafendas in prison very regularly for five years

¹⁴⁸⁹ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁴⁹⁰ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹⁴⁹¹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

¹⁴⁹² Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁴⁹³ Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

¹⁴⁹⁴ Johannes Jaconus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁴⁹⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

(1989-1994), and spent several hours talking with him, strongly denied to the author that Tsafendas spoke in a disjointed manner, or that there was anything wrong with the way he spoke. He told the author:

“No, no, this is not true; he did not talk like this [in a disjointed manner]. He never spoke like this with me, his speech was always absolutely fine. I felt that he [Tsafendas] needed to speak, so several times I would just let him speak. He enjoyed speaking and he could speak for hours. He always spoke like a normal man. [His speech] was perfectly articulate and logical, always very coherent. He never said anything to suggest he had a mental problem or that he had any difficulty speaking or thinking and expressing himself properly. This comment is also entirely false.”¹⁴⁹⁶

Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis who met Tsafendas in 1994 in Pretoria Prison hospital told the author:

“[Tsafendas] could speak for hours, telling you things about his life, his thoughts and his ideology, but he could also participate in a dialogue. We spoke for hours about politics, religion and history and he was one of the most knowledgeable people I ever met in all these subjects. He was very argumentative and insistent, especially about politics. He would never give up a conversation if you disagreed. He never, not even once, seemed to have difficulty expressing himself or talked incoherently. Every single time, everything he said made sense and was perfectly stated. I don’t believe for a moment that he could have talked in the way described by the psychiatrists unless he did it deliberately. He spoke and argued even better than most people. His speech and thought were perfectly fine.”¹⁴⁹⁷

Alexander Moumbaris, who spoke to Tsafendas for at least one hour every day for about three months in 1972 in Pretoria Prison, dismissed outright the suggestion that Tsafendas talked in a disjointed manner. He told the author:

“No, this is not true. He was not talking in a disjointed manner. I never heard him talking like this, neither in 1972 nor in 1996. He always spoke absolutely fine... There were never gaps or pauses in his speech, or anything that would make me think that he was struggling to speak or participate in our conversations.”¹⁴⁹⁸

Mary Eintracht, his first cousin, who grew up with him in Egypt and Mozambique and was constantly with him for nine months in 1963-1964, said, “Dimitri always spoke very ¹⁴⁹⁶ Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

¹⁴⁹⁷ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

¹⁴⁹⁸ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017.

well. He sounded like a very educated man. There was nothing wrong with his speech or thoughts, both were excellent. He could argue with you for hours and hours on politics. He was very good with words and his brain was bigger than most people’s.”¹⁴⁹⁹

Tsafendas lived for five months at Patrick O’Ryan’s house and remained close to the family for another year. During this seventeen-month period, none of the family heard Tsafendas talking in a disjointed manner or saying anything that would make them doubt his sanity. During the summary trial, the whole family was convinced that Tsafendas was making it all up in order to escape the death penalty.¹⁵⁰⁰ Allan O’Ryan told the author:

“I never experienced a disjointed conversation. It might have been a ploy on his part – again, in retrospect. So, the psychiatrist would bring in things like that and might even have been able to quote situations or questions that Tsafendas didn’t answer directly. But in my mind, retrospectively, I believe, because of his intelligence, and also not to give away what he wanted to do, there could have been a possibility that it was a ploy on the part of Tsafendas to appear disjointed in his train of thought.”¹⁵⁰¹

One of the strongest comments comes from Fotini Gavasiadis, who was with him every day for nine months in Pretoria in 1963-1964. She told the author:

“Dimitris could buy and sell you and he could do that at any time during a conversation, in the first ten minutes, then again after thirty minutes or an hour and then again after two hours. He wouldn’t let you get up from the chair until he had made you agree with what he was saying, especially when talking politics ... He was very convincing and persuasive, he could turn black into white! If you disagreed with something with him, he would find a way to convince you that he is right and that you are wrong - even if you know that you are right and that he is wrong! If he made a mistake about something, he would turn things upside-down and at the end, he would even make you apologise to him.

In those nine months, I saw him and spoke to him every day and not even once did he appear to have an issue with his speech or his thoughts. He was always the same. We spent hours and hours talking and his speech was never incoherent, disjointed, blocked or whatever else, it was always perfect. He never gave me even the slightest indication that he might be ¹⁴⁹⁹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

¹⁵⁰⁰ Allan O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019; Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Stanley O’Ryan in a personal interview with the author, 9 April 2015.

¹⁵⁰¹ Allan O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019.

having the issues you mentioned.”¹⁵⁰²

Gavasiadis was not the only one impressed by the way Tsafendas spoke. None of the crewmen from the Eleni ever got the impression that Tsafendas’s speech was disjointed. In fact, they were impressed by the way he spoke.¹⁵⁰³ The seamen called him “Professor” because of his knowledge and mode of speech.¹⁵⁰⁴ “We were all wondering how come he knew all these things. How could he be talking like this? He talked like a university professor”, said Nikolaos Billis, one of the crew.¹⁵⁰⁵ Another crew member, Michalis Vasilakis, said, “I can’t explain it, but I remember he had a very specific way of talking, using not very common, but absolutely correct words. He knew how to speak and how to pick up words. He was talking like a professor; this is what we used to say between us and what we called him ... He was a very knowledgeable man. No, his speech was definitely not disjointed, it was excellent.”¹⁵⁰⁶

In addition, Tsafendas worked in 1961 for six months as teacher at the best private language college in Istanbul, the Limasollu Naci. He worked initially on trial basis, under observation for a week, and then was appointed permanently. He remained in the post for six months, leaving eventually on his own accord. Mrs. Adviy Vedia Limasollu, wife of Limasollu Naci, the owner of the college, does not remember Tsafendas, but she is certain that her husband would never have appointed, much less retained for a significant period, a teacher who talked in a disjointed manner.¹⁵⁰⁷

Furthermore, while in Istanbul, for about seven months in 1961, Tsafendas gave free English lessons to Greek and Turkish children. Alexandra Vaporidis, who knew him throughout this period and conversed with him at length five or six times, told the author, “He talked perfectly well whenever I spoke to him.” Her husband was Father Agathagos Vaporidis, the priest at Agia Triada Church where some of the lessons took place. He sat in on some of Tsafendas’s classes and never mentioned anything being untoward about Tsafendas’s mode of speech. On the contrary, he was very happy with Tsafendas and his wife ¹⁵⁰² Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

¹⁵⁰³ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

¹⁵⁰⁴ Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

¹⁵⁰⁵ Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011.

¹⁵⁰⁶ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

¹⁵⁰⁷ Adviy Vedia Limasollu in a personal interview, 8 January 2016.

said he would certainly have told her if there were any speech issues.¹⁵⁰⁸

Father Nikola Banovic told the author about the way Tsafendas spoke: “the way he spoke was very distinctive ... he spoke good Greek, but he used the grammar in a very different and distinctive way, talking like a teacher or an author, using nice words.” Father Nikola also observed some of Tsafendas’s teaching in Istanbul and characterised him as a “natural,” “born to be teacher.”¹⁵⁰⁹ He would hardly have used these terms about a teacher who spoke in a disjointed manner.

In 1951, and between 1963 and 1965, Tsafendas spent a lot of time in his Aunt Artemis Michaletos’s house (Tsafendas’s aunt who brought him up in Egypt) and even slept there on several occasions. John Michaletos, Artemis’s son and Tsafendas’s cousin, who was always present and spent hours talking to Tsafendas, told the author:

“He [Tsafendas] was very self-assured about his ideas and you could not have a political debate with him, he would have cut you into pieces. He was very well read, especially in politics, while he had this ability I haven’t seen in anyone to be able to convince you that he is right. He would bring argument after argument and example after example to convince you that he is right. Sometimes, I wondered whether all these [political and historical] examples and facts he was talking about were true. I did not know. I was not aware of any of these. And you couldn’t check at the time, there was no internet, but it all sounded very, very convincing. I used to tell him, and my mother used to tell him too, that he should be a politician or a lawyer.”¹⁵¹⁰

It is difficult to believe that Artemis and John Michaletos would have envisaged Tsafendas as a successful politician or lawyer if he talking in a disjointed manner. Artemis had known him since he was two and a half years old and watched him learn and grow through infancy. John Michaletos also smiled and shook his head once again in disbelief at Dr. Cooper’s statement on which, again, he refused to comment because he found it absurd; he believes that what he already told the author about Tsafendas was enough to demonstrate how wrong Dr. Cooper’s diagnosis was.¹⁵¹¹

Nikolas Kambouris, an Eleni seamen who spent several hours talking with Tsafendas about politics and history, dismissed Dr. Cooper’s diagnosis: “I told you he had a very ¹⁵⁰⁸ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

¹⁵⁰⁹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

¹⁵¹⁰ John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

¹⁵¹¹ John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

distinctive way of talking. It was slow, but very intelligent and sophisticated ... He was talking like a professor. It was more likely for us to not be able to follow him than him to follow us. We spent hours talking about politics and he was leading the conversation; none of us knew anything about apartheid at the time.”¹⁵¹²

For reasons of space, the study will list only a few of the witnesses who were interviewed by the author, those who knew him best or longest. All insist that Tsafendas did not talk in a disjointed manner:

- His half-sister Katerina Pnefma;¹⁵¹³
- Ira Kyriakakis, who also grew up with him and spent a lot of time together in 1964 and 1965;¹⁵¹⁴
- Andreas Babiolakis, who knew him since they were children, lived with him for two months in 1964 and associated with him for about a year then;¹⁵¹⁵
- Mario Ferreira who worked with him for six weeks at the Table Power Station.¹⁵¹⁶
- Thirteen crewmen from the Eleni who saw him every day for forty-two days in 1966;¹⁵¹⁷
- Elias Constantaras, who lived under the same roof for two months in Cape Town in 1966 and knew him for more than a year;¹⁵¹⁸
- Irene Michaletos, who knew him for more than a year (1963-1965), when he often visited her house in Beira;¹⁵¹⁹
- Antony Michaletos, Tsafendas’s cousin and the son of Artemis’s (Tsafendas’s aunt who brought him up in Egypt), met Tsafendas in 1951 and associated with him in 1963-1965, getting to know him very well;¹⁵²⁰

¹⁵¹² Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014.

¹⁵¹³ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁵¹⁴ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

¹⁵¹⁵ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

¹⁵¹⁶ Mario Ferreira in a personal interview, 21 May 2019.

¹⁵¹⁷ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Panteleimon Aspiotis in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 19 January 2016; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

¹⁵¹⁸ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

¹⁵¹⁹ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

¹⁵²⁰ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May April 2016.

- Alexandra Vaporidis, who knew him for about six months in Istanbul in 1961;¹⁵²¹
- Nick Papadakis, who knew Tsafendas for two-three months and lived with him for two months in Gondola and Beira in 1964;¹⁵²²
- Panagiotis Peroglou, Stratis Vamvarapis, Antonis Nichas and Costas Chagios, who were Tsafendas’s friends in Cape Town for more than a year.¹⁵²³

¹⁵²¹ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

¹⁵²² Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

¹⁵²³ Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015; Miltiades Kaldis in a personal interview, 12 March 2016; Antonis Nichas in a personal interview, 31 March 2016; Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016; Stratis Vamvarapis in a personal interview, 31 May 2016.

Also, in July 1966, just two months before the assassination, Tsafendas gave a 75-minute interview to a reporter named N.D. Hartford of the Cape Argus. They had already met at the beginning of the year when Tsafendas came to the newspaper and enquired whether there was any news of the freedom fighters of Mozambique. Hartford's impression was that Tsafendas was normal; he had no reason to believe that he was mentally defective. According to Hartford, Tsafendas spoke fluently without any noticeable gaps in the conversation.¹⁵²⁴

Professors Alban Burke, Phillip Resnick, Robert L. Sadoff and Tuviah Zabow believe that it is extremely unlikely, and very close to impossible, that none of the people who knew Tsafendas, some extremely well, ever noticed that he spoke in a disjointed manner.¹⁵²⁵ Reyner van Zyl, who examined Tsafendas for the defence, told the author that it was "highly improbable"¹⁵²⁶

As for the Attorney-General, it appears that either he did not have Tsafendas's September 11 statement in his possession or he did not think it was important to question Dr. Cooper about what Tsafendas told the police: that he knew he was not going to get away but went ahead and killed Dr. Verwoerd anyway because he was "disgusted" with his race policies and hoped that a change of policy would take place.¹⁵²⁷

COMMENT REGARDING DR. COOPER'S EXPERIENCE WITH MURDERERS

Finally Judge Beyers is unaware of the fact that Dr. Cooper has experienced with murderers from the 1951 case, Rex v. Kennedy. Therefore and more importantly, he is unaware of the fact that the Court in this case had dismissed his psychiatric evaluation of the defendant as based on improbable evidence.¹⁵²⁸

THE TAPEWORM

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is there any other feature that emerged from your examination of the accused?

¹⁵²⁴ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 75.

¹⁵²⁵ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016; Professor Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 17 December 2016; Professor Robert L. Sadoff in a personal interview with the author, 12 August 2015; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 10 October 2016.

¹⁵²⁶ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 17 April 2016.

¹⁵²⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁵²⁸ Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Responsibility of Mentally Deranged Persons and Related Matters, p. 17; Jones, Psychiatry, Mental Institutions, and the Mad in Apartheid South Africa, p. 103.

DR. COOPER: Yes. This feature that I am coming to is perhaps the most striking feature, or let us call it dramatic feature, of his mental state. This man tells a story that in 1935 or 1936 - I am not quite clear whether it was 1935 or 1936 - he became afflicted with a tapeworm. He describes how initially he tried to rid himself of the tapeworm, how he went to a chemist to get medicines, how he consulted a doctor. He describes, rather luridly, how he sat over a pail of water and how part of the tapeworm emerged but snapped in his hand and part of the tapeworm remained inside him. And he then goes on to explain that he had in fact consulted many doctors about this tapeworm; he has in fact been to hospitals which specialise in tropical medicine and this type of disorder; he has had X-rays; he has had numerous investigations; he has been told that he no longer has a tapeworm inside of him, but he is convinced, he has a fixed belief, that he has a tapeworm inside of him, in spite of all these negative medical investigations.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How does he believe it affects his life?

DR. COOPER: There are many aspects to this tapeworm, and it is important, and I ask the Court to bear with me if I can explain what this man says about his tapeworm. First of all, his description of the tapeworm I feel is significant. I in my mind believe, although I cannot prove it, that in 1935 or 1936 he probably did in fact have a tapeworm. But his description of the tapeworm that he now believes he has and the qualities that he attributes to it are highly significant. Firstly, he describes this tapeworm as being, sometimes he says 1½ ins. in breadth, sometimes he says 2 ins. in breadth. He describes it as having serrated edges like a serrated saw. This is a tapeworm much larger than life. It is a grossly exaggerated description of a tapeworm. He insists that he has the tapeworm in spite of all medical evidence against the fact that he has it. He says that he can feel the tapeworm crawling around in him and that if he passes delicious foods the tapeworm smells the foods and he can feel the tapeworm wriggling up towards his neck. I must explain to the Court that an individual suffering from a tapeworm cannot feel the tapeworm wriggling around him in that manner. Then he attributes a great deal to this tapeworm. He says repeatedly DEFENCE COUNSEL: What does he call it?

DR. COOPER: He has referred to this tapeworm at different interviews variously as a devil, as a dragon, as a snake. Demon was another one. He feels that this tapeworm has changed his entire life. He believes that it is in fact because of the tapeworm that he has done many things. He believes that the tapeworm influences his thought He insists that on many occasions he has said things which he would not otherwise have said if it had not been for the tapeworm. He insists that the tapeworm influences his behaviour. He said at one stage: "If I did not have the tapeworm I would not have killed Dr. Verwoerd, I would not have wandered round the world, I would not have become involved in a fight with Nicholas Vergos and I would not have been taken in by certain thoughts." He elaborates further on this tapeworm, particularly during my last interview with him, where he says this time that he is not absolutely convinced that it is a tapeworm, it may be some form of human snake, but whatever this demon, this devil, is inside of him. He believes that it may be possible that there may be an element of witchcraft in this whole affair. He explains that as a child - at that time he was living in the Transvaal - his stepmother indoctrinated him against the natives, and he believes that it is possible that the natives have in fact something to do with this tapeworm. Now, apart from what he says about the tapeworm, when one interviews this man one can find oneself talking about almost anything, from employment, travels, friends, the murder, the trial - virtually anything like - and it does not take very long before you are back to the tapeworm. He incorporates the tapeworm in all his thoughts, and it is as if this tapeworm is to a very large extent governing this man's thoughts, governing his feelings, governing his reaction to his environment, governing his behaviour.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: His wandering around the world, to what does he attribute that?

DR. COOPER: His wandering around the world he attributes to his tapeworm. He is vague about it, he can't elaborate on it, but he insists that it is because of the tapeworm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: His inability to hold down a job for any length of time, to what does he attribute that?

DR. COOPER: That is attributed to the tapeworm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: This belief in the existence of a tapeworm in him, which can be medically proved not to be there, what is that?

DR. COOPER: I believe that this is a delusion.

DR. COOPER: "... This man has built around his tapeworm inside of him a delusion system whereby he believes emphatically that this worm is instrumental in controlling his thoughts, in controlling his actions, in ruining his life, and even in killing Dr. Verwoerd... I asked the accused the question: 'If you had been cured of your tapeworm, would you still have killed

Dr. Verwoerd?’ His reply, his repeated reply, was emphatically ‘No, I would not have killed Dr. Verwoerd.’ I on more than one occasion asked the accused to explain to me why he killed Dr. Verwoerd, and at this point, relevant to the topic we are now dealing with, I would just like to say that he was extremely vague in his attempts to explain why he killed Dr. Verwoerd. He told me that he had a great deal of difficulty in understanding and explaining why he did, but one thing was quite definite, he said the tapeworm was right in the middle of it. I am quoting his words. I asked him whether the tapeworm actually told him to kill Dr. Verwoerd. He said: ‘No, that is not so.’ The reason why I asked him this question, quite incidentally, was from the point of deciding whether this man was simulating or not. I virtually invited him to simulate mental disorder, and he did not take up the bait...

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you consider - I am sure you did - the possibility that the accused invented this story of the tapeworm?

DR. COOPER: Most definitely I did.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did you do to test whether or not he had invented this tapeworm story?

DR. COOPER: Well, this matter tied up with one’s general approach in trying to establish whether this man was inventing or simulating as a whole. I was most careful to try and assess whether his story was consistent, whether there were not perhaps any irregularities, any things that didn’t fit in with the picture as a whole. I felt very strongly that here was a man who, after all, knew a fair amount about mental disorder, because he had told me that he had been in several mental hospitals. Patients in mental hospitals inevitably know, particularly the more intelligent ones, that hearing voices is a common symptom in mental disorder and a common symptom of schizophrenia, so I felt, if ever a man was going to simulate, here was his easy, ready opportunity. If this man had told me that he heard voices, and in fact, if he had told me that the tapeworm spoke to him and told him what to do and what not to do, this would have been difficult, let us say, to disprove; this would have been consistent with schizophrenia. I hammered on this particular angle, and at no time did this patient suggest that he heard voices and at no time did he suggest that the tapeworm spoke to him or actually told him what to do...

... Simulating in cases of serious crime, of course, is quite common, and, I might say, usually readily detected, especially if one spends approximately six hours with the individual, as I did. It is extremely difficult to imitate mental disorder and particularly to imitate the group of symptoms, the picture as a whole, in schizophrenia. Patients often try to simulate mental disorder by telling you that they hear voices, they see visions, they can't remember, they are just confused, they say they are just unable to tell you anything. This patient did none of these things.

...He did not blame Dr. Verwoerd for the existence of it directly, but he implies that if it had not been for the tapeworm he would not have killed Dr. Verwoerd, so presumably he interrelates Dr. Verwoerd and the tapeworm in some way...

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: ... no matter what you talked about - you talked about various things; I think you mentioned various things - no matter what you talked about, you finished with the tapeworm?

DR. COOPER: Yes, my Lord, I am not suggesting ...

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: So that it is constantly there, no matter what you talked about?

DR. COOPER: Constant would mean that he talked about the tapeworm and nothing else. I am not suggesting that. He did talk of other things. But I am saying that the tapeworm played a prominent part in his overall conversation.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do I remember correctly that whatever you talked about you finished on the tapeworm?

DR. COOPER: Frequently that was so.

UNDER CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

DR. COOPER: He is relating this tapeworm in this instance to something that happened in his early life.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: when his mother put him against the blacks, and the blacks in revenge, by witchcraft, put a tapeworm in him?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Isn't that what I understood you to say? Is that right?

DR. COOPER: Yes, that is right.

DR. COOPER: ... After having examined him for several hours (that is six hours including the joint interview), and, after I knew that fellow psychiatrists had also examined him for several hours (maximum five hours each one of them including the joint interview), during the course of a joint interview with him I noticed him, just in passing, saying “I must thank you very much for all the assistance you are giving me.” He rambled on a little bit, and then I took this up and I said to him “In what way do you think we are trying to assist you? In what way are we assisting you?” and he said “Well, the tapeworm is giving me a lot of pain, and you are listening to my difficulties about the tapeworm.” And it was clear to me at that time that this man had not grasped the purpose of our examination...”

DEFENCE COUNSEL: There is the bizarre aspect of the tapeworm. Does that necessarily manifest itself in his dealings with people from day to day?

DR. COOPER: Not necessarily, no. I would say that he is quite likely to refer to his tapeworm in his everyday life but not every time he is confronted by anybody, not constantly in conversation.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY REGARDING THE TAPEWORM

THE EXISTENCE OF THE TAPEWORM

According to Dr. Cooper, the tapeworm was central to Tsafendas's existence as it controlled his life and his thoughts. It appeared responsible for everything that was happening with him. However, Tsafendas's alleged belief that he had a tapeworm is as much as a myth as Mamoru Samuragochi's deafness.¹⁵²⁹

The police and the Commission questioned about two hundred people about Tsafendas and not a single one was aware of the tapeworm. Of the seventy-five witnesses who knew Tsafendas who were interviewed by the author, only four ever heard him talking about the tapeworm, and they were all members of his defence team (Bloomberg, Burger, Dr. Sakinofsky and van Zyl). The other seventy-one not only never heard him mention it; they were absolutely convinced that he had made it up in order to escape the death penalty. Tsafendas did speak of the tapeworm to Fathers Minas Constandinou, Spiros Randos and ¹⁵²⁹ Mamoru Samuragochi is a Japanese composer who claimed for many years that, like the German master, Beethoven, he was totally deaf. This extraordinary claim resulted in his being nicknamed “The Beethoven of the Dital Age.” Later, however, it was discovered that Samuragochi was a liar and could hear perfectly well.

Ioannis Tsafaridis, but made clear that it was simply a ploy to stop the torture and avoid an undignified death while in custody. He told the priests the whole truth about the tapeworm and its origins in America with Tom Tuff. Fathers Minas and Ioannis would later confirm that Tsafendas was telling the truth about the tapeworm and Tom Tuff when they met Patrick O’Ryan, the only man to whom Tsafendas had confided the whole truth about the tapeworm and how he had used it before the assassination.¹⁵³⁰ The meeting between the two priests and O’Ryan and how it came about is discussed later in this chapter in O’Ryan’s testimony.

Dr. Cooper understood Tsafendas to say that the tapeworm was responsible for the killing of Dr. Verwoerd, although it did not actually tell him to do so. However, if the tapeworm was primarily responsible, it is strange that Tsafendas failed to say so in his two statements to the police. Instead, he declared openly that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he was “disgusted with his policies” and hoped that a “change of policy would take place” after the killing. He never mentioned a tapeworm at all.¹⁵³¹

According to Dr. Cooper, Tsafendas said he had the tapeworm since 1935 or 1936. At that time and until 1941, excepting for some short absences, Tsafendas lived with his father and step-mother and his step-siblings. The Commission of Enquiry and the police questioned all family members, including his step-mother Marika, two of his three half-sisters, his half-brother, his two brothers-in-law and his sister-in-law. They all told the Commission that Tsafendas “never mentioned a tapeworm” and that he “was definitely not insane.”¹⁵³² Charles Nissiotis, Tsafendas’s brother-in-law, also testified that “As far as I could established he never mentioned the tapeworm story to any of the family.”¹⁵³³

Two more defence witnesses, Dr. Muller, a specialist physician, and Mr. van Zyl, a clinical psychologist, would testify that they were told by Tsafendas that he had the tapeworm since 1935. This is in line with Dr. Cooper saying Tsafendas told him he had the tapeworm since 1935 or 1936. However, the doctors at Ochsensoll Hospital in Hamburg said he gave the date 1937. If the tapeworm was so important in his life, one would expect him to know exactly when it first arrived. More importantly, defence witness Louisa O’Ryan would ¹⁵³⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

¹⁵³¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁵³² COE report regarding visit to family members of Demetrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

¹⁵³³ Charles Nissiotis statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demetrio Tsafendas, NASA.

testify that Tsafendas told her he had the tapeworm since he was a “little boy.”¹⁵³⁴ In 1935/1936, Tsafendas was seventeen and eighteen and not a “little boy.” The difference in dates clearly indicated that Tsafendas was making up the story as he went along but the errors were not picked up by anyone during the summary trial.

More importantly, Louisa O’Ryan would testify that Tsafendas’s step-mother, Marika, was aware of the tapeworm, indeed partly responsible for its existence, having removed and destroyed only a portion of it while the remainder stayed inside him.¹⁵³⁵ However, Marika denied in her testimony to the Commission that such an incident ever took place and even stated that Tsafendas had never mentioned a tapeworm. She, as well as Tsafendas’s entire family, testified to the Commission that Tsafendas never said anything about a tapeworm and that “he was definitely not insane.”¹⁵³⁶ All were convinced that he had made it up to escape the death penalty.¹⁵³⁷

Between 1935/1936 and 1939, Tsafendas was very close to George Grispos, Helen Kavadias-Grispos, Andreas Babiolakis and Ira Kyriakakis, none of whom ever heard him speak of the tapeworm and none of them ever doubted his sanity. They were all certain that he pretended to be mad in order to not be hanged.¹⁵³⁸ Tsafendas was always very close to his first cousin, Mary Eintracht, who was also at the time in Lourenço Marques, and he said nothing to her. She never doubted his sanity and firmly believed that he invented the tapeworm to escape the gallows.¹⁵³⁹ If this tapeworm was so important in Tsafendas’s life, and since he spoke so freely about it after the assassination, would he not have mentioned something to someone throughout his life?

In addition, while in South Africa in the three years before his arrest, Tsafendas was medically examined by ten doctors, none of whom discovered anything mentally wrong with him. Needless to say, Tsafendas did not mention the tapeworm to any of them, since he wished to be passed physically and mentally sound.

¹⁵³⁴ Louisa O’ Ryan’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹⁵³⁵ Louisa O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹⁵³⁶ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

¹⁵³⁷ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁵³⁸ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

¹⁵³⁹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

- On November 11, 1963, Tsafendas was examined by Dr. C. Been for a permanent residence application for South Africa and was found “not to be mentally or physically defective in any way,” and “generally in a good state of health.”¹⁵⁴⁰ Dr. Been would later examine Tsafendas again “for burns on his body whilst employed at Pooles.” Nothing about his mental state was noted.¹⁵⁴¹
- On November 14, 1963, Tsafendas was examined, also for purposes of residence, by Dr. A.C. McDonald, who also wrote “a favourable report.” Subsequently, a certificate for permanent residence was issued to him.¹⁵⁴²
- On March 15, 1965, Tsafendas was examined by a South African Railways’ medical examiner whose name is indecipherable in his report. He was found to be perfectly healthy, without any issues and therefore capable of working at the company.¹⁵⁴³
- On September 25, 1965, he was examined by Dr. G.C. Baker and nothing was reported about his mental state.¹⁵⁴⁴
- On November 19, 1965, Tsafendas was medically examined to insure that he was able to work for City Tramways in Cape Town. He was found fit to work and duly hired.¹⁵⁴⁵
- On January 13, 1966, Tsafendas applied for work at the Marine Diamond Corporation and underwent a medical check-up that same day. The doctor who examined him found Tsafendas to be perfectly healthy and capable of working for the company.¹⁵⁴⁶
- On February 25, 1966, Tsafendas was examined at Groote Schuur Hospital by I. Eisenberg, a registrar on the Ear, Nose & Throat Department, who did not observe anything mentally wrong with him.¹⁵⁴⁷

¹⁵⁴⁰ Demitrio Tsafendas medical certificate issued by Dr. Been for the Aliens Act, 1937. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

¹⁵⁴¹ Dr. Been statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁵⁴² Memorandum re application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

¹⁵⁴³ South African Railways Confidential Medical Examination Certificate of Demitrio Tsafendas. K150, Vol. 7, File: S 83708, Tsafendas: D. NASA.

¹⁵⁴⁴ Dr. G.C. Baker Statement re: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. No date. K150, Vol. 6, File: 4, NASA.

¹⁵⁴⁵ Donald Neville Mackay statement to the COE, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁵⁴⁶ Demitrio Tsafendas’s Marine Diamond Corporation Application for Employment, 13 January 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 3. NASA.

¹⁵⁴⁷ I. Eisenberg Statement. RE: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. N.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

- On April 18, 19 and May 3, 1966 Tsafendas was examined by Dr. Leon Goldman, a consultant ear, nose and throat surgeon. He did not observe anything mentally wrong with him and discharged him as “fit” on May 17, 1966.¹⁵⁴⁸
- From April 19, 1966 to May 15, 1966, Tsafendas was under the medical supervision of Dr. Leon Solomon at Groote Schuur Hospital, suffering from “a deviated nasal septum and epistaxis,” and underwent surgery on his nose. Dr. Solomon during this period did not report any mental disability and found Tsafendas to be fit to return to his work at Marine Diamond Corporation. Dr. Solomon examined him again on June 7, 1966, and again did not notice anything mentally wrong with him.¹⁵⁴⁹
- Finally, Dr. T.A. Darby examined Tsafendas on the evening of the assassination but did not report anything to be wrong about his mental state.¹⁵⁵⁰

Nor once during all these examinations did Tsafendas mention the tapeworm and not even once did any physician spot anything strange about Tsafendas’s behaviour. What is notable is that when he was in custody, Tsafendas seemed to tell everyone he came across about the tapeworm, especially doctors who examined him, but before that, he never told anyone. The police were in possession of the medical reports written by all ten doctors, but none was used in court since presumably they were not given to the Attorney-General. It should be mentioned here that Tsafendas was also examined, in July 1966, by Dr. Ralph Kossew, Cape Town’s district surgeon, and was found to be a schizophrenic after an examination that lasted “a little bit longer” than ten minutes. However, this was after Tsafendas had applied for a disability grant and had to be found to be unable to do any work in order to qualify for it. This case will be discussed extensively later in this chapter, as Dr. Kossew was one of the defence’s witnesses.

Dr. Cooper also testified that he “is quite likely to refer to his tapeworm in his everyday life but not every time he is confronted by anybody, not constantly in conversation.” However, Tsafendas never mentioned the tapeworm to anyone, not to his family or his friends and not even to one of the about 250 people who were interviewed by the police and the Commission at the time and the author later (apart from the three priests who testified to the author who learned about it thirty years after the assassination).

¹⁵⁴⁸ I. Eisenberg Statement. RE: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. N.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁵⁴⁹ Dr. Leon Solomon’s medical report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA; Medical certificate issued by Dr. Solomon for the Employment Insurance Act, 1946. 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA.

¹⁵⁵⁰ Dr. T.A. Darby. Statement re: Demitrio Tsafendas. G.S.H. NO. 65/014-181, 6 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

The Attorney-General must have been aware at the time that out of the scores of witnesses questioned by the police, no one mentioned the tapeworm. Having also listened to Dr. Cooper's statement above and his vivid description of Tsafendas talking about the tapeworm, should van den Bergh not have asked the doctor how nobody had ever heard of it until now? Tsafendas also did not mention the tapeworm to the police – another puzzle. We will examine some of these witnesses' statements in the section about Tsafendas "being unable to function on a reasonable level."

During the late-1970s, Father Minas Constandinou was assigned by the Greek Orthodox Church of South Africa to visit all the Greek Orthodox inmates in prisons in Gauteng. Thus, Father Minas had the chance to visit Tsafendas in Pretoria Central Prison. He was the first visitor Tsafendas had had since the one-off visit by David Bloomberg in 1976. Tsafendas immediately recognised the priest, whom he had not seen since 1965. Because of his profession, Father Minas was allowed to speak to Tsafendas in Greek and without any of the warders listening. Father Minas considered Tsafendas at that time to be a "highly intelligent person with very deep political convictions," and was sure that he had invented the tapeworm in order not to be executed. But to his surprise, when he asked his old friend about the assassination, Tsafendas pointed to his stomach and said "It was the tapeworm, my Father, the tapeworm." Father Minas understood that Tsafendas was not keen on discussing the issue and dropped the subject.¹⁵⁵¹

During his subsequent visits, Tsafendas spoke perfectly normally to him, as he always had done, and never mentioned the tapeworm again. Their conversations in the beginning were about each man's life up till then and memories of the old days in Mozambique. One day Tsafendas saw Father Minas talking to one of the warders. He then asked the priest whether the warders were asking him to reveal what they were discussing. Father Minas replied seriously, "yes." Tsafendas nodded and did not say a word. Father Minas then informed him that he had been telling the warders that he was mad and that he talked constantly about the tapeworm. Some days, he added, he would tell the warders that Tsafendas had said that the tapeworm "was hungry today", or that "it did not let him sleep last night." Tsafendas gave him a restrained smile and Father Minas smiled back, also in a restrained way.¹⁵⁵²

¹⁵⁵¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

Subsequently, Tsafendas started asking him about politics and current affairs as he had no access to newspapers, magazines or the radio. Thus, Father Minas would always read the day's newspaper before his visit to keep himself up to date. Father Minas kept on visiting Tsafendas for a couple of years. He only asked him once more about the assassination and Tsafendas again pointed to his stomach. It was second and last time Tsafendas spoke to him about the tapeworm.¹⁵⁵³

Sometime in 1994, and after apartheid had collapsed, when Tsafendas was in the Pretoria Prison Hospital, he was visited again by Father Minas, who had not seen him since the late 1980s. The priest asked him, "How is the tapeworm Dimitri?" Tsafendas replied (smiling like he knew nothing about it), "What tapeworm my Father?" Father Minas, pretending to be taken aback, asked, "the tapeworm Dimitri, the tapeworm?" and pointed to Tsafendas's stomach, just like Tsafendas had done a few years previously in Pretoria Central Prison. Tsafendas smiled and replied, "I don't believe I have a tapeworm, my Father." He then pointed to the warders and said "They think I have one." A little later he told Father Minas smiling, "If I believed I had a tapeworm, I would have gone to a gastroenterologist, not to a psychiatrist."¹⁵⁵⁴

Tsafendas, a completely different person now from the one Father Minas had seen in the high-security prison – relaxed and witty just like the old days in Mozambique – explained how the tapeworm story had come into being, from Tom Tuff in the 1940s, and how he had taken possession of the story and used it up to his arrest in 1966.¹⁵⁵⁵ Tsafendas also repeated this account of the tapeworm's genesis a little later to Father Spiros Randos and Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis.¹⁵⁵⁶ Apart from these three priests who were aware of Tsafendas's play-acting with the tapeworm, none of the other witnesses the author interviewed knew anything about such a ruse.

An important witness is Tsafendas's first cousin, Mary Eintracht, who was born in Egypt in 1923. She knew Tsafendas in Egypt in early childhood and they grew up together in Mozambique. As an adult, Eintracht maintained a friendly relationship with her cousin, who often confided to her. However, he never mentioned a tapeworm or anything else that might ¹⁵⁵² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁵⁵³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁵⁵⁴ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

¹⁵⁵⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁵⁵⁶ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

suggest he was schizophrenic. Eintracht dismissed out of hand the notion that Tsafendas ever spoke the way his speech was presented by his defence lawyers and Dr. Cooper. She believed he was perfectly sane and made up the tapeworm story so as not to be executed. “I knew him all my life; we grew up together and I think he confided to me everything that ever happened in his life. He trusted me. I was with him every day until 1939, when he went to South Africa. He was like a real brother to me. I don’t believe for a moment he really believed he had a tapeworm and that he said these things to these people and meant them. No way!”¹⁵⁵⁷

As soon as Eintracht heard about the tapeworm, she knew Tsafendas had made it up to save himself. “If there was such thing, I would have probably been the first person Dimitri would tell. He told me everything. If he wanted advice about how to approach or what to say to a girl, he was coming to me. I never believed, and no one will ever convince me, that Dimitri really believed it or really meant these things he told these people.” She was referring to the statements he made to Dr. Cooper.¹⁵⁵⁸

Another important witness is Fotini Gavasiadis, sister of Nick Vlachopoulos, Tsafendas’s brother-in-law. Tsafendas lived in Fotini’s and her husband’s house for a few weeks, then for the next eight months in an apartment next to hers. Throughout this period in Pretoria in 1963-1964, they were very close; she saw and talked to him every day and they worked together in her brother’s café. When the transcription of Tsafendas’s halting remarks to his defence team and the psychiatrists were read to her by the author, she laughed and said:

“There is absolutely no way Dimitri would have talked like that. This is a different man speaking. This is not only nonsense, which Dimitri would have never said, but he did not talk in that way. I don’t believe he said these things. It’s true, he ate a lot, but he never attributed [his appetite] to any tapeworm. He just liked food, he was a big man; it was natural to eat more than most people.”¹⁵⁵⁹

Gavasiadis never heard Tsafendas mention a tapeworm and she ate with him at least once every day for nine months. She is certain that he was pretending to avoid being hanged, and said, “He was certainly capable of putting on an act like this. He was very, very clever.” She said, “Dimitri could buy you and sell you any time he wanted, and as many times as he wanted to. He was so clever.” Furthermore, according to Gavasiadis, Tsafendas had a very distinctive way of talking and this was not it. She does not believe that Tsafendas could have ¹⁵⁵⁷ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

¹⁵⁵⁸ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

¹⁵⁵⁹ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

meant the things he told Dr. Cooper.¹⁵⁶⁰

Important testimony came also from Father Nikola Banovic. Father Nikola had Tsafendas living with him for four-five months in Istanbul in 1961, saw him there almost every day for another two-three months and kept in touch with him by letter until 1966. He was one of those who became very close to Tsafendas. Like Gavasiadis, Father Nikola laughed when I read Tsafendas's words to him and refused to believe it was Tsafendas talking. Tsafendas "was not talking like that and would never have spoken like that; these are the words of a madman, this is not Dimitri." He said that if he had been asked at the time to testify before a court, "I would have sworn that he was not insane; there is absolutely no way this man to have been insane. I lived with him in the same house for four months; there was never even the slightest indication that he might be even slightly unbalanced, never ... he was a good-hearted man with high principles."¹⁵⁶¹

Father Nikola believes that the words attributed to Tsafendas "could not possibly have come out of his mouth. The only reason he might have talked in that way would have been to convince the police he was insane." The priest said Tsafendas never said anything that might suggest he was insane. "I assure you he was not insane. I am positive he made it up in order not to be hanged." He too did not believe Tsafendas could have meant the things he told Dr. Cooper.¹⁵⁶²

Ira Kyriakakis grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques, having been born in 1927. She was always friendly with him and never heard him say anything about a tapeworm. She is certain he did not believe he had one and was making the story up. If he truly believed he had a tapeworm, he would have told her as they were extremely close. She also does not believe Tsafendas could have spoken in the way described by the defence or the psychiatrists. She told the author:

"Dimitri was a devil since he was child; he was extremely intelligent and capable. If he wanted something, he would find a way to do it. Nothing and no one could stop him. He was not mad, he was very clever. Dimitri was so clever and able that he could convince the devil to buy a Bible. You will never meet anyone who knew him well, apart from these psychiatrists and lawyers you told me about, that will tell you he was mad. He was not."

Kyriakakis does not believe that Tsafendas could have really believed he had a ¹⁵⁶⁰ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

¹⁵⁶¹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

¹⁵⁶² Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

tapeworm or to have meant the things he told Dr. Cooper.¹⁵⁶³

Helen Grispos was born in 1930, when Tsafendas was twelve, but she lived in the house next to the Tsafendas family in Lourenço Marques. George Grispos, who became her husband, was three years older than Tsafendas, but they were boyhood best friends in Lourenço Marques. Helen Grispos's mother was the best friend of Tsafendas's step-mother, Marika in Lourenço Marques. Neither Helen nor her husband or mother ever heard Tsafendas talk about a tapeworm and Helen does not believe he would have spoken as claimed. When she and her husband read newspaper trial reports about the tapeworm, they had no doubt Tsafendas was making it up. Because a lot of people knew that Helen's husband was very close to Tsafendas, they often asked about him. According to Helen, George maintained consistently that Tsafendas never spoke about the tapeworm and that he was making it up in order not to be hanged. As for herself, she refused to believe that Tsafendas could have meant the things he told Dr. Cooper. "He was definitely not insane. He never said or did anything to make me think that he was insane. George always maintained that he had pretended to be mad in order that they would not kill him. He had no doubt about that."¹⁵⁶⁴

Father Minas Constandinou knew Tsafendas for about thirty-five years. He met him first in 1963 in Lourenço Marques, he visited him in Pretoria Central Prison in the 1980s, and he continued seeing him in the prison's hospital and the Sterkfontein Hospital in the 1990s until Tsafendas died. We have just seen what he said about the tapeworm story based on what he was told by Tsafendas. Father Minas was another who laughed when he read what Tsafendas said to Dr. Cooper. He then told the author:

"Ha, ha, he told me what he did, but not in such detail. Fascinating! If he had not told me that he had deliberately played the fool, I wouldn't have believed that these were his words. Impossible! Even at the beginning, when I asked him why he did it and he pointed with his finger to his stomach, he did not say any of these things. He didn't talk like this even then and he never told me anything like this. His speech was absolutely perfect. Even when he told me about the tapeworm, I was not sure that he was mad because everything else he was saying and the way he spoke did not suggest that he was mad ... later, when he told me that everything about the tapeworm was a lie, it all made sense."

Father Minas does not believe that Tsafendas could have really meant the things he ¹⁵⁶³ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

¹⁵⁶⁴ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

told Dr. Cooper.¹⁵⁶⁵

Bishop Ioannis Tsafendaris met Tsafendas in 1994 in Pretoria Prison hospital and had three very lengthy conversations with him. Tsafendas confided to him the truth about the tapeworm. As for Tsafendas's form of speaking, the priest said he could easily tell that these words were not naturally spoken by Tsafendas. "He never spoke like this. He never said anything like this, not only about the tapeworm, but generally he never said anything that would make me think this man is not mentally well. He always talked logically. I am certain that he deliberately talked like this to his lawyers and to the doctors." Bishop Ioannis does not believe Tsafendas could have said what he supposedly said to Dr. Cooper.¹⁵⁶⁶

Artemis Michaletos was Tsafendas's aunt, who helped raise him in Egypt, then lived close to him in Mozambique. The author did not interview her but spoke to her sons, Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousins, and to John's wife, Irene Michaletos, all of whom knew Tsafendas. According to them, Artemis knew Dimitri better than anyone but his father. She was devastated when she heard Tsafendas had killed Dr. Verwoerd, fearing he would be tortured and hanged. When she heard about the tapeworm during the trial and that Tsafendas was declared insane, she was very happy. "I knew it," she cried. "I knew he would find a way not to be hanged." When asked by some of her friends if he had ever mentioned the tapeworm to her, she had responded, "No! Are you crazy? He is not crazy, he is making it up. He is exceptionally clever." Artemis had known Tsafendas since he was one year old and insisted throughout her entire life that he was perfectly sane and that if he believed he really had a tapeworm, he would have told her. He had no secrets from her. Several relatives asked her if Tsafendas ever mentioned the tapeworm and she always gave the same answer, no.¹⁵⁶⁷

John Michaletos also told the author:

"What a hell of an invention, isn't it [the tapeworm]! How he thought that up I don't know. It was Antony [his brother] who first told me [that Tsafendas had spoken to his defence team about a tapeworm] and I did not believe him. I thought John was making it up, I knew Dimitris would have never said that. He insisted, but I still did not believe him. I honestly thought he was joking. I only believed it later that day when he showed me the newspapers. I burst into laughs when I read it. I remember me reading aloud from the newspaper what he had allegedly told the doctors and everyone laughing about it [his brother, ¹⁵⁶⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁵⁶⁶ Bishop Ioannis Tsafendaris in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

¹⁵⁶⁷ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 21 June 2016.

his sister-in-law and his parents]. My mother got a real kick out of it; she really enjoyed hearing it. In our house, after we read the first day [of court proceedings] we couldn't wait for the next one to see what else will be said, and again, we will sit around the table all together and I will read out loud. I remember there was also an old woman who lived next door to our house, she lived by herself, and she knew Dimitri since he was a little child. She could not read and she would ask me to read every single thing that the newspaper was writing about Dimitri. She even understood that he was making it up, but found it very amusing to hear all about it. I remember that when I was reading something that sounded very strange to her, especially about the tapeworm, she would ask me 'Dimitri said that?' and then she would cross herself in disbelief. He [Tsafendas] made it up to save his skin, no doubt about that. I knew it, I had no doubt about it; I did not even think about it for a second, it was impossible to believe such a thing, impossible."¹⁵⁶⁸

Katerina Pnema was Tsafendas's younger half-sister. To this day, she is extremely angry with Tsafendas, believing that he ruined her life. She strongly condemned his murder of Dr. Verwoerd. In 1994, efforts were made under the first democratically elected government in South Africa to grant Tsafendas amnesty. He was aged seventy-six at the time and unable to care for himself. Judge Jody Kollapen, and subsequently governmental officials, asked Tsafendas's family to take him into their home and care for him. They refused and Tsafendas spent the remaining years of his life in Sterkfontein Hospital.¹⁵⁶⁹

Despite her anger towards her half-brother, Pnema considers it "impossible" for Dimitri to have spoken as his defence team and Dr. Cooper described. She told the author:

"He would never have said anything like this ... what you read to me, it's nonsense; he never spoke like this and I don't believe he ever said those words ... I don't believe he even said it deliberately to play the fool. He was certainly capable of doing it [pretending to be mad], but to say all this nonsense? No, I don't believe it. Dimitri never spoke like this."

Pnema does not believe that Tsafendas could have really meant the things he told Dr. Cooper or that he really believed he had a tapeworm.¹⁵⁷⁰

Important testimony comes from Andreas Babioulakis, Nick Papadakis and Ira Kyriakakis. According to these three witnesses, Tsafendas, while in Beira, associated with Dr. Vasilis Tzitzafakos, a Greek general practitioner. The witnesses all discussed Tsafendas's ¹⁵⁶⁸ John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

¹⁵⁶⁹ Judge Jody Kollapen in a personal interview, 16 April 2015.

¹⁵⁷⁰ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

case with him at the time of the summary trial and the doctor had no doubt that Tsafendas was pretending to be mad in order to escape the gallows. According to these three witnesses, although Tsafendas was close to the doctor, he never told him anything about the tapeworm or Saint Peter and the doctor always maintained that Tsafendas was certainly not a schizophrenic.¹⁵⁷¹ If Tsafendas really believed he had a tapeworm, he would almost certainly have discussed it with this physician, whom he knew well and trusted. Likewise with the Saint Peter story. In addition, Dr Tzitzafakos had spent several months with Tsafendas, while Dr. Cooper had spent just six hours with him.

Further testimony to Tsafendas's cleverness came from his half-sister, Eleni Vlachopoulos, who was closer to Tsafendas than any of his siblings. Eleni Vlachopoulos was born in 1936 and thus spent only her first five years in the Tsafendas family, but Tsafendas maintained contact with her thereafter through letters and postcards and he spent nine months in 1964 as her neighbour in Pretoria.¹⁵⁷² Vlachopoulos testified to the police in 1966 that Tsafendas never spoke to her or to anyone in the family about a tapeworm. She said exactly the same thing in 2007 in Manolis Dimelas's documentary about Tsafendas, Live and Let Live, when she also claimed that her half-brother "was not crazy, he was very, very clever; cleverer than any of us and very able. If he wanted to do something, if he had a target, he would always achieve it. He never mentioned this tapeworm." Eleni Vlachopoulos always believed that her half-brother made up the tapeworm story to escape the gallows.¹⁵⁷³

The author has read Tsafendas's alleged words to forty-six people who knew him substantially well, and all declared he could not have spoken as claimed, or if he did, it was to mislead his interrogators. Further, they never heard him mention a tapeworm. Of this total, the author have not listed those who did not know Tsafendas well or were very young at the time – Tsafendas's nephews, for instance. The thirty-five who are named below all knew Tsafendas for more at least a few months and spent substantial time with him. None of them believes that Tsafendas could have meant what he told Dr. Cooper. Brief accounts of the interviews with them follow:

- Costas Chagios, a Cape Town restaurant owner, got to know Tsafendas on a friendly

¹⁵⁷¹ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; Irene and John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

¹⁵⁷² Eleni Vlachopoulos in Live and Let Live; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁵⁷³ Eleni Vlachopoulos in Live and Let Live - this part is available in the rushes.

basis in 1965 when he walked into his restaurant. In the year up to his arrest in 1966, Tsafendas visited the restaurant more than fifty times. Chagios does not believe “even for a moment” that Tsafendas said what is claimed by Dr. Cooper. “If he did, he was lying to save himself ... He was very intelligent and this was not the way he talked, he talked very nicely; excellent use of words.”¹⁵⁷⁴

- Irene Michaletos was very close to Tsafendas between 1964 and 1965. She never heard him saying anything about a tapeworm or anything else that might seem strange. She does not believe Tsafendas meant what he told Dr. Cooper. Tsafendas, she said, was “perfectly sane” and a “very, very clever man.”¹⁵⁷⁵
- Antony Michaletos, Tsafendas’s cousin and son of Artemis Michaletos, Tsafendas’s aunt and his father’s sister who brought him up in Egypt. He first met Tsafendas in 1951 in Lourenço Marques and got to know him between 1963 and 1965 in Mozambique. He told the author “I don’t believe that this is Dimitris speaking. Or at least the real Dimitris. He clearly pretends, he makes it up ...”¹⁵⁷⁶
- Alexander Moumbaris came to know Tsafendas in late 1972 in Pretoria Maximum Security Prison while awaiting trial on political charges. He was found guilty of “conspiring with the ANC to instigate violent revolution in South Africa, aiding terrorists, distributing ANC pamphlets in Durban in 1968, and reconnoitring the Transkei to find places for seaborne landings.”¹⁵⁷⁷ Moumbaris spoke to Tsafendas for at least one hour every day for about three months. Initially, Tsafendas was cautious and although very talkative, it was obvious to Moumbaris that he did not trust him. However, as time passed, Tsafendas began opening up. Moumbaris told the author that Tsafendas never mentioned a tapeworm to him or said anything to suggest he was insane; all the conversations they had were perfectly normal. One day, Tsafendas told him proudly in Greek about Verwoerd: “I got τον Ντσή τους” (“their tough guy” or “their champion,” but in a pejorative sense). Moumbaris found Tsafendas to be “a very intelligent, witty, serious and knowledgeable person.” Tsafendas even asked him to teach him Algebra, but the lesson was short-lived as the warders forbade it. Moumbaris told the author: “I not only regard Dimitri Tsafendas as a sane man but also as the bravest and most ill-treated man I ¹⁵⁷⁴ Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015.

¹⁵⁷⁵ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

¹⁵⁷⁶ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

¹⁵⁷⁷ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017.

have ever met.”¹⁵⁷⁸

- Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott’s boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest. He never heard Tsafendas say anything “ridiculous” such as his supposed gibberish to Dr. Cooper and has no doubt he was perfectly sane. “I remember how he talked and I cannot see these words coming from his mouth. He did not talk like that. He never said anything about the tapeworm.”¹⁵⁷⁹
- Allan O’Ryan lived with Tsafendas for five months at the same house and became very close; they kept in close touch for another year. He told the author that he “never heard him [Tsafendas] talking like this”, and added: “I think Tsafendas had... in his mind, he was trying to confuse these people and the give impression that he was crazy. In order to protect himself. And then they felt for it.”¹⁵⁸⁰
- Reuben O’Ryan lived with Tsafendas in the same house for five months and kept in touch with him for another year. He never heard Tsafendas talking like this and finds it “hard to believe” that this really happened; he “cannot picture him talking this way”. He and his family considered Tsafendas to be “perfectly normal,” saying, “no-one in my family ever thought that he was mad. He couldn’t have been insane.”¹⁵⁸¹
- Stanley O’Ryan lived with Tsafendas for five months at the same house and kept being in touch for another year. He described Tsafendas as a “very down to earth man, a very quiet man and very friendly. I never suspected, even in the slightest, that he might be unstable. No, never, nothing at all. Perfectly normal.” He also finds it hard to believe that Tsafendas spoke in this fashion.¹⁵⁸²
- Allan O’Ryan also lived with Tsafendas for five months at the same house and kept being in touch for another year. He told the author that no one in the house ever questioned Tsafendas’s sanity, “Never. There was no such thing as, ‘This person is mad,’ you know, or something like that. That never came through.” As for the tapeworm, he said, “there was no doubt. There was no doubt that the story about the earthworm and all the other things that went with it – the incoherent speeches that... well, everything that the psychiatrists brought up, I interpreted that as a way of protecting him from the death

¹⁵⁷⁸ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017.

¹⁵⁷⁹ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

¹⁵⁸⁰ Allan O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019.

¹⁵⁸¹ Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

¹⁵⁸² Stanley O’Ryan in a personal intervbiow with the author, 9 April 2015.

sentence.”¹⁵⁸³

- Peter Protoulis was a supplier of foodstuffs to the tanker Eleni and met Tsafendas on board the ship. In the forty-two days that the vessel was docked in Cape Town, he never heard him say anything to suggest he was less than sane.¹⁵⁸⁴
- Alexandra Vaporidis knew Tsafendas for about six-seven months in Istanbul. She doesn't remember everything they discussed, but she is certain he was a “completely normal man ... he never mentioned this tapeworm or anything else that sounded insane. He was always well-dressed and very courteous.” Her husband, Father Agathagos Vaporidis, was friendly with Tsafendas during his stay in Istanbul and Alexandra says he would have told her if he had noticed anything wrong with him.¹⁵⁸⁵
- Andreas Babiolakis knew Tsafendas since they were children in Lourenço Marques. Although they embraced opposing political ideologies, Babiolakis is certain that Tsafendas invented the tapeworm. He does not recognise the words quoted by Dr. Cooper and by the other psychiatrists who examined him and is convinced he made them up, too. Babiolakis heard in Beira in 1964/1965 that Tsafendas had claimed to be Saint Peter while he was in police custody. When he later asked Tsafendas about it, Tsafendas just said that he had a nervous breakdown, but he was now ok. Babiolakis believed then that Tsafendas made up the Saint Peter act and later did the same for the tapeworm. “I never heard Dimitri talking like this, this is someone else talking. He couldn't have said these things unless he did it deliberately, which is what I think he did.”¹⁵⁸⁶
- Nick Papadakis, who knew Tsafendas for two-three months and lived with him for two months in Gondola and Beira in 1964. He too had heard that Tsafendas claimed to be Saint Peter while he was in Portuguese custody. He and several other Greeks discussed the issue and concluded that Tsafendas had made it up since they were with him every single day up to his arrest and never heard him say anything strange. Papadakis does not recognise Tsafendas's words when examined by Dr. Cooper and the rest of his defence team and he is positive he was acting.¹⁵⁸⁷
- Panagiotis Peroglou was another who met Tsafendas in Cape Town in 1965 and kept up with him until his arrest. They were often eating together at Mary Scott's boarding house.

¹⁵⁸³ Allan O' Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019.

¹⁵⁸⁴ Peter Protoulis in a personal interview, 28 May 2016.

¹⁵⁸⁵ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

¹⁵⁸⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

¹⁵⁸⁷ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

- He never heard Tsafendas say anything crazy and has no doubt that he was quite sane.¹⁵⁸⁸
- Pamela Abrahams met Tsafendas in Cape Town in 1965 also at Mary Scott's boarding house which she visited with her husband Panagiotis Peroglou. He made a very good impression on her due to his politeness and good manners and she never heard him say anything to indicate he might be insane.¹⁵⁸⁹
 - Stratis Vamvarapis knew Tsafendas in 1965 as a resident of Mary Scott's boarding house. He never heard Tsafendas saying anything like the remarks attributed to him by Dr. Cooper and his defence team or anything else to suggest he was insane.¹⁵⁹⁰
 - Costas Poriазis met Tsafendas in Beira in 1965. He is certain that Tsafendas was not insane and never heard him say anything absurd. He considered Tsafendas to be "a very smart man" and "the most politicized person" he ever met.¹⁵⁹¹
 - Miltiades Kaldis met Tsafendas in Cape Town in 1965 and kept in touch until his arrest. He never heard Tsafendas say anything close to what he told his defence.¹⁵⁹²
 - Antonis Nichas, a supplier to the Eleni, met Tsafendas in 1966. He never heard him say anything to suggest he was insane or anything similar to what he told the police.¹⁵⁹³
 - George Liberopoulos met Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques in 1963 and associated for a few weeks with him. He described him in his statement to the police as "a normal person with a very high-intelligence." He does not believe that Tsafendas was insane and always maintained that he must have been making g up the tapeworm story.¹⁵⁹⁴
 - Nick Augustides is the son of the owner of Mike's Outfitters in Cape Town for whom Tsafendas worked on commission for about two months in 1966. He knew Tsafendas for three-four months and never heard him say anything to suggest he was insane. He told the author that Tsafendas "definitely did not look or sound insane."¹⁵⁹⁵
 - Marina Tsihlikis. She met Tsafendas in Beira in 1964. Her father was good friend of ¹⁵⁸⁸ Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

¹⁵⁸⁹ Pamela Abrahams in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

¹⁵⁹⁰ Stratis Vamvarapis in a personal interview, 31 May 2016.

¹⁵⁹¹ Costas Poriазis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

¹⁵⁹² Miltiades Kaldis in a personal interview, 12 March 2016.

¹⁵⁹³ Antonis Nichas in a personal interview, 31 March 2016.

¹⁵⁹⁴ Col. van Wyk's report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

¹⁵⁹⁵ Nick Augustides in a personal interview, 19 February 2016.

Tsafendas. She never heard him speak in the way his defence statement conveyed.¹⁵⁹⁶

- Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis met Tsafendas in Germany at different times in the 1950s and never heard him say anything that would indicate that he might not be sane. He also visited him in the Ochsenzoll Krankenhaus Hospital. Although Tsafendas was admitted supposedly because of the tapeworm, he did not tell Father Efthimios anything about it. The priest does not remember what Tsafendas told him was the reason for his hospitalization, but he is certain that he did not mention the tapeworm.¹⁵⁹⁷
- Dimitris Skoularikis met Tsafendas in prison in the early 1990s. He once asked Tsafendas, “How is the tapeworm, Dimitri?” Tsafendas replied “I don’t have one; they [the prison guards] think I have one.”¹⁵⁹⁸

All the above witnesses are willing to swear under oath in any court that Tsafendas did not talk in the manner attributed to him and that he would never have said any of the things attributed to him unless he was pretending to be mad. The following are testimonies from the crew of the Eleni, the tanker that was docked in Cape Town from July 26, 1966 to September 3. Their evidence is important since these men saw Tsafendas every day for forty-two days until three days before the assassination:

- Cleanthes Alachiotis developed a warm relationship with Tsafendas. Tsafendas told him about “pretending to be mad” in order not to serve in the Portuguese army and Alachiotis believes that his reported speech in custody was another such act since he considered it “absolutely impossible” that Tsafendas spoke as claimed. “He was either joking or he had a specific reason to do it. Obviously, it was the second, since he wanted to save his head. If the police had asked me to testify in court, I would have sworn that he was making it up. He was nothing like this, but I am not surprised he did it since he had done it before.”¹⁵⁹⁹
- Nikolas Billis is not surprised by Tsafendas’s words to his defence as he has no doubt that he made up the tapeworm story so as not to be hanged. Tsafendas had told him how he pretended to be mad to avoid service in the Portuguese Army. “No doubt he did it again. If you met him, you could tell that this man’s brain was a level above the rest. He could easily manipulate you and convince you of anything. I am not at all surprised that he told ¹⁵⁹⁶ Marina Tsihlakis in a personal interview, 3 April 2015.

¹⁵⁹⁷ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

¹⁵⁹⁸ Dimitris Skoularikis in a personal interview, 26 April 2015.

¹⁵⁹⁹ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010

this to the police. He definitely made it up. He did not talk like this. He talked very well, like a teacher.”¹⁶⁰⁰

- Nikolas Kambouris became close with Tsafendas. He told the author:

“I would bet my house that Dimitri did not say these things ... well, if he did, he must have had a reason and he did not really mean them. I am positive about it. These are the words of a madman and Dimitri was an intelligent and cultured man ... he must have been pretending with them as he did with the Portuguese. He was saner than a lot of people I knew ... I don't believe that he told these people these things. He was a serious man; he was not talking like this. I was with him for forty-two days and he never said anything stupid like these things.”

Kambouris states that Tsafendas “did not talk rubbish; he was an idealist; a man with high principles.”¹⁶⁰¹

- Michalis Vasilakis became closer to Tsafendas than any of the crew. This was his reaction when I read to him what Tsafendas told his defence:

“A tapeworm? Did Dimitri say that? Are you sure? He couldn't have said that. A tapeworm? It's unbelievable. Dimitri was a very clever man; he was not talking nonsense. He knew as much as all of us knew and he was talking better than a professor. I was the one who first called him ‘Professor.’ I have no doubt that if he really said these things to the police he must have done it to save himself. He couldn't possibly have believed them and I am telling you he did not believe them. He would have told me if there was such thing. He told me a lot about his life and I can tell you this man was one of the smartest people I have ever met. You could see some rare dignity and pride in him. You could see from the way he was talking about politics and the world how politically passionate he was. You don't meet men like that every day. I don't think that anyone who met him would tell you that he was crazy. This is complete nonsense.”¹⁶⁰²

- Georgios Kantas, like Billis and Alachiotis, he is not surprised that Tsafendas spoke about a tapeworm, although he never mentioned any such thing to him. However, Tsafendas told him about his act with the Portuguese in order to not serve in the Portuguese army and Kantas firmly believes that this was just another mad act.

¹⁶⁰⁰ Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011.

¹⁶⁰¹ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014.

¹⁶⁰² Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

“He never spoke in this way and I can’t imagine him talking like this, though I believe he did it as he was capable of doing it. You could tell that this man was very able. He did not talk this way. I can’t explain it, but I remember that he had a very specific way of talking, using not very common, but absolutely correct words. He was talking like a professor. That is what we used to say and what he called him.”¹⁶⁰³

- Grigoris Pouftis agrees with his crewmates that Tsafendas was putting on another “mad” act, as he did with the Portuguese.

“He was certainly not crazy. He was a little peculiar because of the way he was talking. I mean he was sometimes over polite and it seemed to me that his personality did not fit with his job. We met hawkers all around the world and none was ever like him ... I would describe him as an aristocratic hawker, if such a thing exists! I couldn’t believe that a man with his manners and knowledge could be doing this job. That was the only peculiar thing about him.”¹⁶⁰⁴

- Emanuil Mastromanolis, the Eleni boatswain who was involved in procuring a firearm for Tsafendas, spent a lot of time with Tsafendas and never heard him speak in the way he did to Dr. Cooper and to his defence team. Mastromanolis does not believe that Tsafendas could have said such things. “He did not talk like that; definitely not,” he states.¹⁶⁰⁵
- Emanuel Tsabouniaris also spent a lot of time with Tsafendas. He considered Tsafendas to be “a gentleman and a very sophisticated man.” Like Pouftis, he found it strange that Tsafendas, “such an educated and well-mannered man, could do such job (hawker).” However, this was the only thing he found strange about him. He believes Tsafendas could not possibly talk as he did and mean what he said unless he did it deliberately to get something out of it.¹⁶⁰⁶
- Ioannis Speis stated that Tsafendas never said anything to him that bears the slightest resemblance to what he told his defence.¹⁶⁰⁷
- Vasilios Perselis spent a lot of time with Tsafendas and stated that he never heard him say anything like his statement and has no doubt that he did so to escape hanging. “He spoke very nicely; not nonsense like that. He knew how to speak and everything he said made ¹⁶⁰³ Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012.

¹⁶⁰⁴ Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009.

¹⁶⁰⁵ Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016.

¹⁶⁰⁶ Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 19 January 2016.

¹⁶⁰⁷ Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015.

sense. He was not crazy.”¹⁶⁰⁸

- Dionisis Lallis did not associate with Tsafendas as much as some of the other crew members, but he spoke to him a few times and never got the slightest impression of insanity.¹⁶⁰⁹
- Panteleimon Aspiotis, Eleni seaman. A good friend of Tsafendas, also never thought that he could be insane and could not imagine him saying the nonsense he told Dr. Cooper and his defence.¹⁶¹⁰

The author also included here three witnesses who did not meet Tsafendas personally but were close to people who did. The author considers their statements, though second hand, to be entirely reliable.

- Advocate George Bizos’s mother-in-law was the best friend of Tsafendas’s step-mother and knew Tsafendas very well from childhood. She told Bizos that he was perfectly sane.¹⁶¹¹
- Dr. Costas Gazidis’s first cousin Rika Nikolatos was a social worker and visited Tsafendas in prison and then in Sterkfontein Hospital. In total, she spent some ten years meeting Tsafendas and they were extremely close. She told Dr. Gazidis, “He is completely sane, there is nothing wrong with him.” Tsafendas never said anything to her to suggest he might be insane and she always maintained that he was “completely sane.” Dr. Gazidis is willing to sign an affidavit and swear under oath that this is exactly what he was told by Nikolatos.¹⁶¹² Nikolatos’s statement is also confirmed by Father Minas Constandinou and Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis. She had discussed his case extensively with them both, and she and Father Minas had often visited Tsafendas together.¹⁶¹³
- Janet Gazidis, Costas’ wife is also willing to sign an affidavit and swear under oath that this is exactly what Nikolatos, too, was told.¹⁶¹⁴

Finally, valuable testimony comes in the form of Tsafendas’s medical report from Grafton State Hospital, which states that while in the United States in 1943 “he faked mental ¹⁶⁰⁸ Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015.

¹⁶⁰⁹ Dionisios Lallis in a personal interview, 19 June 2015.

¹⁶¹⁰ Panteleimon Aspiotis in a personal interview, 6 June 2015.

¹⁶¹¹ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017.

¹⁶¹² Dr. Costa Gazidis in a personal interview, 10 April 2015.

¹⁶¹³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

¹⁶¹⁴ Janet Gazidis in a personal interview, 10 April 2015.

illness because he was afraid to ship out because of the numerous leakings (sinkings) of ships.”¹⁶¹⁵ Since he play-acted back in 1943 and then did the same several times with the Portuguese police, was it not an easy and natural tactic to use with the South African police in 1966?

Would it have been possible for Tsafendas to believe he had a tapeworm but that he hid it, never telling anyone about it? That, according to Professors Alban Burke, Kirk Heilbrun and Tuviah Zabow, would be almost impossible, or at least “exceedingly unlikely.”¹⁶¹⁶ Professor Heilbrun told the author that it is “exceedingly unlikely that an individual would have a delusion about a controlling tapeworm for thirty years and nobody around him ever heard or noticed anything to that effect.”¹⁶¹⁷

Professor Alban Burke told the author:

“What you need to remember about schizophrenic people is that the world they live in is a real world for them; they have no realisation that the world they are living in is not a real world, so what would be your motive for hiding that away? I mean, if I see an elephant walking in the room, I would truly believe I see it ... why would I pretend that there is not an elephant in the room? I would say to you, ‘What is that elephant doing here?’ and I would be surprised if you don’t see it, because, remember, the image that I have in my brain is a real one. You would often see with schizophrenic patients that they would touch a lot, to make sure that what they’re seeing truly exists....

So you would see very clearly in their behaviour that there is something strange going on; they would talk to themselves, but not ... all people talk to themselves... but what you would see, if there is a voice in your head, I would be speaking, ‘Go away, stop talking, can you shut up?’ So you would see in the person’s behaviour that they are responding to conversations; you would pick that up. It is not the same as just, merely, talking to yourself whilst you were doing something, it’s totally different, and my question would be, Why would you hide it away? Especially in a case like Tsafendas, where he himself goes to hospitals.”¹⁶¹⁸

It is a fact that Tsafendas spoke about the tapeworm before his arrest to some doctors ¹⁶¹⁵ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁶¹⁶ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016; Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 10 October 2016.

¹⁶¹⁷ Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 16 January 2017.

¹⁶¹⁸ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

in various hospitals, but not to friends and companions. Therefore, one can argue that Tsafendas only mentioned the tapeworm to doctors and not to the people around him, that's why nobody knew about it. However, in this case, why did he also mention it to his defence lawyers before he was examined by the psychiatrists they appointed? If he was happy to tell them, since they were not doctors, should he have not told other people too? The fact that Tsafendas mentioned the tapeworm to them suggests that he was happy to talk about it.

After the trial and while he was imprisoned, Tsafendas talked to the prison warders and to David Bloomberg, who visited him twice, about the tapeworm.¹⁶¹⁹ This again suggests that he was willing to talk about it, so to say he only talked to doctors about it is inaccurate. It is noteworthy that he only spoke of it to doctors when he admitted himself to a hospital; he never mentioned the tapeworm to those doctors who examined him for his various job applications or his application for a permanent residency permit in South Africa.

As for how the tapeworm came to feature in the case, please consult the previous chapter.

THE TAPEWORM'S RESPONSIBILITY IN THE KILLING OF DR. VERWOERD

The other important issue with Dr. Cooper's testimony is that he claims the tapeworm was responsible for the killing of Dr. Verwoerd, although he admits Tsafendas told him that the tapeworm did not ask him to do it. Tsafendas told the police on September 11, "I did believe that with the disappearance of the South African Prime Minister a change of policy would take place. I did set myself the task of destroying the Prime Minister. It was my own idea to kill him."¹⁶²⁰

In his second statement on September 19, Tsafendas said, "I did not do it at the instigation of anyone. I did it on my own because I thought it was the right thing."¹⁶²¹ On neither occasion does Tsafendas say anything about the tapeworm; indeed he states clearly that it was his own idea to kill Dr. Verwoerd because he believed a change of policy would take place. Again, we not in position to know whether the Attorney-General had access to these statements or if he ignored them, but certainly their existence could at least have challenged Dr. Cooper's testimony about the tapeworm's role in the killing.

¹⁶¹⁹ The Cape Argus, 'Tsafendas - Is No Broken Man-Bloomberg', 2 October 1976: 1.

¹⁶²⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁶²¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

Tsafendas informed Dr. Cooper about all the hospitals he had been to, as he did with the police. Also while in custody he spoke freely about the tapeworm and his hospitalizations to two other doctors, Dr. Muller, a specialist physician, and Dr. Kossew, Cape Town's district surgeon, both experts for the defence. However, between 1964 and 1966, while in South Africa, Tsafendas was examined by six physicians and did not say anything to them about either subject. These six doctors were not psychiatrists but examined Tsafendas because of his application for permanent residency in South Africa and for several job applications. Wanting a positive response, Tsafendas told the doctors and wrote on his application forms that he was in perfect health. He was passed fit in each case. If something was wrong with him, probably one or more of the six doctors would have spotted it, the same way Dr. Kossew and Dr. Muller did, who were also not psychiatrists.

Sometime in 1994, when Tsafendas was in Pretoria Prison hospital and apartheid had collapsed, he confessed to Father Minas Constandinou and Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis that the tapeworm was an invention. He explained how the story originated with the young seaman, Tom Tuff.¹⁶²² He said he decided to use it when he was in custody after the assassination because he "couldn't take the pain [of torture] anymore" and he also feared that he would be murdered in his cell by the police, who would then claim that he was insane and committed suicide.¹⁶²³ Nevertheless, Tsafendas asked Fathers Ioannis Tsafaridis and Minas Constandinou to tell the staff in Pretoria Prison hospital that he still believed he had a tapeworm and he was definitely insane, so they would "leave him alone." When the priests or Rika Nikolatos brought food for Tsafendas, they always brought extra rations at his request; he wanted to share the food with other patients who had no visitors. However, Nikolatos and the priests, at Tsafendas's request, they would tell the staff that he had asked for the extra to feed the tapeworm.¹⁶²⁴

For additional information regarding the tapeworm and how it was used in court, see Patrick O'Ryan's important testimony and its analysis later in this chapter.

ABOUT TSAFENDAS SIMULATING

¹⁶²² For the incident see Tsafendas's biography, Chapter 2.

¹⁶²³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

¹⁶²⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

Dr. Cooper seems not to know that that Tsafendas had simulated mental illness in the past and that the Grafton State Hospital report said clearly that Tsafendas had “faked mental illness” in 1943.¹⁶²⁵ He also seems to be unaware that he pretended to be mentally ill to avoid service in the Portuguese Army in 1950.¹⁶²⁶ Or that he had faked an attack of appendicitis in 1952 when he was not allowed to disembark from the ship that had taken him to Lourenço Marques from Portugal because of his “Communist tendencies.”¹⁶²⁷ This last incident clearly demonstrates Tsafendas’s tendency to fake illness to get out of trouble. Aware that pretending to be mad would not get him off the ship in Lourenço Marques, he changed tack and staged the appendicitis act, confident that he would then be taken ashore. Of course, he escaped as soon as he entered the hospital where he was taken, proof that it was all an act. All of these deceptions were known to the South African police, but none was brought up during Dr. Cooper’s testimony or indeed throughout the summary trial.

It is possible, though unlikely, that the State was unaware of the simulations. After all, the Grafton State Hospital report was in the possession of the South African Police and the Commission of Enquiry, and it would seem natural for the State to be given this report, too. Certainly, the State was well aware of a time in the past when Tsafendas had “simulated abnormality,” as the Assistant of the Attorney-General put it in his cross-examination of Dr. MacGregor, another psychiatrist and defence witness, the last one to testify at the summary trial.

Although it is not clear from the cross-examination exactly which incident the Assistant was referring to, the fact is that the State was at the time in possession of such information and did not use it with Dr. Cooper. The Attorney-General’s Assistant asked Dr. MacGregor whether he was aware that Tsafendas’s had “simulated abnormality” before.¹⁶²⁸ It ¹⁶²⁵ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁶²⁶ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

¹⁶²⁷ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA; Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; George Liberopoulos in a personal interview, 6 July 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015; Henk van Woerden in the Mouthful of Glass also describes the same scene (2000: 70), presumably because he was told about it by Tsafendas.

¹⁶²⁸ Dr. James William MacGregor’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

was the normal question to ask in the circumstances. However, the State did not find it necessary to ask the same question of the first and most important defence witness. What happened during Dr. MacGregor's examination will be considered later in this chapter, although it should be stated here that the doctor expressed his surprise that Tsafendas had done something like this and stated that he was not aware of it. However, as we will see, nothing much came of this issue and it was easily and quickly brushed aside.

The following incident is a good example of Tsafendas's ability to adjust to a difficult situation. It happened when he was arrested with a suitcase full of "subversive" books and accused of pretending to be a Christian missionary spreading religion while in reality he was preaching "under the guise of religion in favour of Mozambique's independence ..."¹⁶²⁹ While in custody, Tsafendas was asked by the police if he had "dedicated himself to preach as a missionary and, under the guise of this same religion, advertised in favour of Mozambique's independence." Tsafendas replied that he was "a Christian who considers himself a representative of God on earth, a missionary that wishes he could preach the Christian religion but that he is not allowed to because, on this earth, there is no freedom of expression."¹⁶³⁰

Since he faced accusations of pretending to be a Christian missionary and because he carried Bibles and holy books, Tsafendas came up with an idea that neatly fitted the situation. This time, during interrogation, he pretended to be Christ's apostle, Peter, and quoted the Christian scriptures at length. This was easy because he knew much of the Bible by heart and having copies with him made his act convincing. Later, Tsafendas told several witnesses exactly which passages he had parroted from the scriptures.¹⁶³¹ It should be mentioned here that the Saint Peter act was probably not known to the South African police.

Dr. Cooper acknowledges that Tsafendas is well informed about mental disorders as he has spent a lot of time in hospitals. He says that it is common for patients to try to simulate mental disorder by pretending they hear voices, see visions etc. Tsafendas, according to Dr. Cooper, never did any of these things. Dr. Cooper tried a "trick" that would later be used also by Dr. MacGregor; he asked him if he heard "any voices, which is a common thing, for mad people to hear." Tsafendas did not fall into the trap, denying any such thing. Why did ¹⁶²⁹ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

¹⁶³⁰ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

¹⁶³¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

Tsafendas react in this way? Because about twenty years earlier, he had pretended to hear voices and he was then discovered to be simulating.¹⁶³²

Tsafendas told Father Minas and Bishop Ioannis that initially he was “pretending to be mad,” by pretending to hear “voices like Joan of Arc.”¹⁶³³ This matches the Grafton State Hospital report which says Tsafendas claimed he heard voices coming from the radiators. However, Tsafendas also told the priests that this pretence did not work and he was found out, so he then started using the tapeworm story. This also agrees with the Grafton report as it states that Tsafendas had “faked mental illness” before he was admitted.¹⁶³⁴ Tsafendas told the priests that he very well aware that “voices” and “visions” were tactics employed by many people simulating schizophrenia, but the tapeworm, as he told witnesses, was a highly original story. He even “advised” them that if they ever, for whatever reason, wanted to pretend to be mad, not to claim that they heard voices as a psychiatrist could easily find out that someone was making that up. He said that the best thing a person could do was to pretend to believe that “something” lived inside him, or as the second-best solution, that he saw “things”, as this makes it much more difficult for a psychiatrist to discover the stimulation.¹⁶³⁵

The Commission of Enquiry, which had no psychiatrist, noted that Tsafendas is “quite knowledgeable about mental disorders — he also admitted to the Commission that he had read fairly extensively on the subject in order to determine what was wrong with him... and [the Commission] therefore adopted a somewhat sceptical attitude towards him. It is clear that his word cannot be relied upon, and that he is sufficiently intelligent to put on a fairly good act.”¹⁶³⁶ Of course the Commission of Enquiry was in possession of most of the documents gathered by the police, plus others. Dr. Cooper was unaware of anything about Tsafendas except what he heard from him.

Given that Tsafendas was experienced with psychiatrists, it was to be expected that he did not take Dr. Cooper’s bait. It is also evident that Dr. Cooper was not aware of the contents of the Grafton State Hospital report, where it said that Tsafendas had “faked mental ¹⁶³² Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁶³³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

¹⁶³⁴ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁶³⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

¹⁶³⁶ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18.

illness” and had claimed to hear voices from the radiators.¹⁶³⁷ Naturally, Tsafendas’s experience with psychiatrists had increased since 1946 and he did not make the same mistake of claiming to hear voices. Dr. Cooper was not aware of this, unlike the Commission of Enquiry, the South African police and presumably the State. The State must have had this report in its possession as it was given to the South African authorities on September 16.¹⁶³⁸

Professors Alban Burke, Kirk Heilbrun and Tuviah Zabow believe the fact that Tsafendas had faked mental illness in the past was extremely important and should have been made known to those who examined him.¹⁶³⁹ However, even without it, Professor Heilbrun disagrees with the way Dr. Cooper attempted to find out whether Tsafendas was simulating or not. He told the author that “To draw accurate conclusions under these circumstances, you need three domains of information. The first involves interviewing and direct observations of the individual. The second involves testing, including measures of response style that are sensitive to exaggeration or fabrication. The third is historical information, including both relevant records (particularly mental health and criminal justice records) and collateral interviews. Your conclusions would be drawn based on patterns that you see recurring across these three domains.”¹⁶⁴⁰ ¹⁶³⁷ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁶³⁸ Letter of the USA Embassy in Cape Town to the South African Security Branch, 3 October 1966. Correctional Service. Subject: Demitrio Tsafendas. Vol. 1, File: 80/0043 A123. NASA.

¹⁶³⁹ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016; Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017; Professor Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 17 December 2016; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 10 October 2016.

¹⁶⁴⁰ Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017.

TSAFENDAS'S CHILDHOOD AND TRAVELS

DR. COOPER: He explains that as a child - at that time he was living in the Transvaal - his stepmother indoctrinated him against the natives, and he believes that it is possible that the natives have in fact something to do with this tapeworm.

JUDGE BEYERS: When his mother put him against the blacks, and the blacks in revenge, by witchcraft, put a tapeworm in him?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

DR. COOPER: There was a poor relationship between the accused and his stepmother.

DR. COOPER: He did mention that his stepmother, I think it was, induced a relative to commit sodomy on him when he was a small youngster, and he felt that perhaps this was designed to destroy his masculinity, and he also felt it had something to do with the question of making him unfit for any inheritance. If this be true, of course, it is delusional, but one wondered a little at least whether some relative hadn't in fact committed sodomy here. But the deduction that he drew from this incident would point to him being paranoid and deluded.

DR. COOPER:...and as a result of this disturbed relationship between the accused and his stepmother, he says he was sent to a school in the Transvaal, in Middelburg, Transvaal, where he remained until about the age of twelve, and then he returned to Lourenço Marques. I would like to pause there and say that I am mentioning this aspect of his background in that, if it be proved, if it be true, it would lead one to believe that a man with such a background would be rather more prone to develop mental illness later in life than would the individual with a normal family background. Then comes a story of aimless ramblings, wanderings, around the world, from one country to another, with an apparent inability to find any sort of niche for himself; an inability to adjust himself to any one fixed abode. The number of countries that he has been to is obscure, but he listed at least 25.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S ABOVE TESTIMONY

CHILDHOOD

In reference to Tsafendas's relationship with his stepmother and his schooling in South Africa, Dr. Cooper uses the words, "if it be proved, if it be true." He could easily have discovered if it was true by talking to the family or people who knew Tsafendas. Dr. Cooper also stated that Tsafendas did not have a "normal family background," especially in relation to his stepmother, and this played a role in his developing a mental illness. This argument has no basis in truth.

Numerous witnesses declared that Tsafendas had a perfectly normal family background. His stepmother said she brought him up "as one of her own children,"¹⁶⁴¹ and Costas Michaletos, an intimate friend of the family, said Tsafendas "grew up with his half-brothers and sisters and was always treated as part of the family."¹⁶⁴² Guglielmo Conte, a friend and business partner of Tsafendas's father, who also knew Tsafendas from the day he was born, denied that Dimitri was estranged from his family and stated that except for his school years in Middleburg, he always stayed with his father and stepmother and their family.¹⁶⁴³

Tsafendas did not discover that Marika was his stepmother and not his birth mother until he was seventeen, but his relationship with her was the normal one of mother-son. Tsafendas always referred to Marika as his "mother" and not as his "step-mother."¹⁶⁴⁴ If Marika was at odds with Tsafendas, she would hardly have travelled from Pretoria to Lourenço Marques to help him return to South Africa, then give him a rent-free house in Pretoria.¹⁶⁴⁵

Katerina Pnema, Tsafendas's half-sister, Mary Eintracht, his first cousin, Advocate ¹⁶⁴¹ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

¹⁶⁴² Costas Michaletos statement to the police, 10 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁶⁴³ Goldstein, 'Tsafendas Timid and Puny As A Boy', Rand Daily Mail, 14 September 1966.

¹⁶⁴⁴ For example: Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017, and several others.

¹⁶⁴⁵ Marika Tsafantakis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

George Bizos,¹⁶⁴⁶ Ira Kyriakakis, Andreas Babiolakis, Helen Grispos, Irene, Antony and John Michaletos all stated to the author that Marika brought up Dimitri as her own child and that they had a very good relationship. The only arguments they had were about Tsafendas's political activities and these started only when he was around eighteen, not in his childhood.¹⁶⁴⁷

Tsafendas spoke highly of his step-mother to several of the witnesses the author interviewed, praising her for caring for him and treating him like her own child. He talked of how she took him to the cinema, helped him with his studies and taught him many things, especially in the fields of literature and poetry. All of these witnesses were surprised to hear that Tsafendas spoke badly of his step-mother to the psychiatrists, claiming that she indoctrinated him against Black people and induced a male relative to commit a sexual act against him. Why did Tsafendas say such things?

The author has not been able to establish this for a fact, as Tsafendas never discussed this issue with anyone. However, it is quite likely, since Tsafendas was knowledgeable about mental disorders and mental institutions, that he made use of her to convince the psychiatrists that he suffered a trauma when a child, knowing that in a lot of schizophrenic conditions, a childhood trauma frequently played a role. Tsafendas himself had told Father Minas Constandinou that two claims were necessary to make an "insane act" look real and convince someone you are mad:

- To have a family history of insanity and
- To have a childhood trauma.¹⁶⁴⁸

¹⁶⁴⁶ Advocate George Bizos did not meet Tsafendas but was told about his relationship with his step-mother by his mother in law who was Marika's best friend in South Africa.

¹⁶⁴⁷ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John and Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁶⁴⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

As for his schooling at Middleburg, two of his former classmates testified as follows: William Mare Volbrecht, by then a psychologist, said, "At that stage, Tsafendas was seen as white and there was never anything that pointed to someone regarding or treating him as a non-white or to him being discriminated against. I cannot remember whether he was ever guilty of misconduct; he was never a loner and mingled freely with us."¹⁶⁴⁹ And Dr. Samuel Schmahmann, by then a physician, remembered Dimitri as "a popular boy and not the least introverted." "I particularly remember him singing a Greek song at a school concert," he said. "He was very funny and had us all in stitches."¹⁶⁵⁰

Again here, Dr. Cooper attributes the tapeworm to his childhood and to what supposedly happened back then, even though Tsafendas was not a child at the time that Dr. Cooper talks about. If Tsafendas had to create a childhood trauma and problem, he was never going to put the blame to his father whom he worshiped, so presumably he chose the mother.

TRAVELS

Dr. Cooper characterised Tsafendas's travels as "aimless ramblings, wanderings around the world, from one country to another with an apparent inability to find any short of niche for himself; an inability to adjust himself to any one fixed abode." Calling Tsafendas's travels "aimless ramblings" is like calling Odysseus's journeys "pointless wanderings." Tsafendas never travelled aimlessly or for just the sake of it. Wherever he went was for a purpose. Remember he was banned from South Africa and Mozambique and was prosecuted in Portugal. Therefore, he travelled either to find employment (Sweden, Germany, England) or because he was deported there (Greece and Germany again), or because these countries were on the way to his destination (Syria, Lebanon, France, Spain, Denmark, Italy) or simply for a holiday (Bulgaria, Rhodesia, Greece again)

Dr. Cooper seems to be unaware that Tsafendas was forced to spend the years from 1951 to 1963 in exile since he was banned from Mozambique, the country of his birth, because of his pro-Communist and anti-colonialist activities. The same period he was also barred from South Africa because he was a "half-caste" with Communist tendencies. In the years up to 1963, Tsafendas made nine applications for permanent residence in South Africa and all were rejected; he made at least six to be allowed to return to Mozambique, all of which were turned down.

¹⁶⁴⁹ William Mare Volbrecht statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol 3, File Verklaring deur Majoor Venter. NASA.

¹⁶⁵⁰ Rand Daily Mail, 'Boyhood Days of Tsafendas', 8 September 1966.

Mozambique was then a Province of Portugal and Tsafendas was officially a Portuguese citizen. However, not only was he banned from Mozambique, he was prosecuted and imprisoned in Portugal. The authorities objected to his past political activism in Mozambique and the fact that he was a Communist who opposed the dictatorship of Premier Antonio Salazar. As for his “aimless ramblings and wanderings around the world,” Mozambique and South Africa were the only countries Tsafendas lived in prior to being banned from them, although as a child, he had also lived for a year in Egypt. While serving the Allied cause as a merchant seaman in World War Two, he was stationed in Canada and in the United States. In 1947, he was deported from America to Greece and it was then that his odyssey began. With Mozambique, Portugal and South Africa inaccessible, he tried to find a place to live.¹⁶⁵¹

The fact is Tsafendas was travelling because he was not allowed to live where he wished to live, in Mozambique and South Africa. “Forced globe-trotting,” he called it.¹⁶⁵² If one of his visa applications had been successful, he would have gone there immediately. As to the extent of his globe-trotting, the twenty-five countries Dr. Cooper mentioned was an exaggeration. Before the war, Tsafendas had lived in Mozambique, Egypt and South Africa, but since he was only a child and taken there by his parents, this could not be considered globe-trotting.

During the war, the ship he worked on docked in Canada (1) and to the USA (2), where after the war, he was deported to Greece (3). He remained there for two years and then in an attempt to reach Portugal and Mozambique, he passed through France (4) and Spain (5). Over the next twelve years, he visited and worked in England (6), Germany (7), Belgium (8), Sweden (9), Denmark (10) and Turkey (11). He passed briefly through Jordan (12), Lebanon (13) and Syria (14), while later, on his way back to Portugal, he went through Italy (15). During his stay in Turkey, he took in Bulgaria (16) then later in Africa, Rhodesia (17) to visit a half-sister he had not seen since 1941.¹⁶⁵³ That totals seventeen countries, not “at least 25”

¹⁶⁵¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁶⁵² Demetrios Tsafendakis Affidavit, November 1965. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen, NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

¹⁶⁵³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

that Dr. Cooper guessed at and he travelled through at least half of them only because they were the way to his destination.

It is true that Tsafendas travelled much more widely than most people, but an analysis of his journeys and intentions comprehensively disproves Dr. Cooper's conclusion that he wandered about aimlessly, seeking and failing to find a niche in the world. He spent the first twenty-three years of his life in Mozambique, Egypt and South Africa. He lived in those countries because that was where his family was. From 1941 to 1947, he lived in the United States or, during the Second World War, at sea serving in American Liberty Ships. In 1947, and against his will, he was deported to Greece because of his Greek origins, although he wanted to return to Mozambique.

While in Greece, he joined the DSE, the military wing of the Greek Communist Party, and fought with them in the civil war. When it was obvious that the Communists had lost and the war was coming to an end, Tsafendas applied for a visa to return to South Africa. In his application he wrote, "I am here a man without a country, living in strange lands with people who have different ways of living, customs and languages."¹⁶⁵⁴ The application was turned down. He decided to try Mozambique, via Portugal. He managed to do this by taking ship from Greece to France, then travelling on foot to Portugal through Spain.¹⁶⁵⁵

In Portugal, in November 1949, Tsafendas was arrested because the authorities had questions about his identity. It was discovered that he was indeed a Portuguese citizen, but had not served his compulsory term in the military and that he had been dismissed twice from jobs in Mozambique for Communist activities.¹⁶⁵⁶ Tsafendas spent the next year in prison but was then released and boarded a ship to Mozambique. He arrived there in October 1951 but was refused entry because he was listed in official files as a Communist and suspected of involvement in subversive activities.¹⁶⁵⁷ This refusal led to his next twelve years being spent in exile. In January 1952, he was back in Portugal and was arrested in Lisbon. The police discovered that he was a Communist and an avowed anti-colonialist who was under suspicion ¹⁶⁵⁴ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 17.

¹⁶⁵⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁶⁵⁶ PIDE Confidential Report about Demetrio Tsafendas, 7 June 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

¹⁶⁵⁷ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

of “unclear activities” during his time in Mozambique and put him in jail again.¹⁶⁵⁸

Upon his eventual release a few months later, with his chosen destinations South Africa and Mozambique unattainable, he decided to go to Sweden, where he had heard he could get a job as a welder. He travelled there through Denmark, and eventually got a job as a carpenter.¹⁶⁵⁹ He did not stay in Sweden long as the weather was too cold and the money too little, so he moved to Hamburg, Germany and found work as a welder. Tsafendas remained in Germany from early 1954 to June 1955. During his time there, he sent off applications to be allowed to return to Mozambique and to South Africa. All were rejected and in mid-1955 he returned once more to Portugal and spent the next three years working as a hawker in Lisbon.¹⁶⁶⁰

Being constantly under PIDE supervision and police harassment, in 1958 Tsafendas decided to leave Portugal and he travelled to Brussels to sell embroidery at the international exhibition, Expo 58. From there, he went back to Germany and spent the next year and a half in Frankfurt, working for one and half months at Fries and Son, six months for Anglo-American Fashions and Designers, and then another six months at a US Army printing works.¹⁶⁶¹ During his time in Germany, he lived on his own but had a relationship with a German girl who was a Communist.¹⁶⁶² Again he applied several times for permission to return to Mozambique or to South Africa, but all of his applications were refused.¹⁶⁶³

In May 1959, Tsafendas travelled to Britain, hoping to find a job. He was refused a work permit and took clandestine jobs to survive.¹⁶⁶⁴ In London he became politically active with anti-apartheid and anti-fascist organisations. He was discovered to be in the country illegally and in December 1959, the British sent him back to Germany, where he spent the next six months working in a tractor factory in Munich.¹⁶⁶⁵ In March 1960, he read about the Sharpeville massacre and decided to return to South Africa and “do something” against Dr.

¹⁶⁵⁸ Diario Popular, ‘E Conhesido em Lisboa o Assassino do Dr. Verwoerd’, 9 September 1966.

¹⁶⁵⁹ Ochsenzoll Hospital report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas. K150. Vol. 4, File: 1, Sub-file: 1/8. NASA.

¹⁶⁶⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁶⁶¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁶⁶² Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

¹⁶⁶³ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkoperij. NASA; Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter VI, Paragraphs 18 and 20.

¹⁶⁶⁴ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

¹⁶⁶⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

Verwoerd and apartheid.¹⁶⁶⁶

Convinced by now that he would not be allowed to enter the country legitimately, he decided on an illegal route, “through the African states south to South Africa.” The first stage took him through the Balkan States to Piraeus, Greece, then he took a ferry to Alexandria, Egypt. There his passport expired and he was unable to renew it or replace it, but with the help of the Red Cross, he managed to get to Beirut and Jerusalem.¹⁶⁶⁷

With his Africa North-to-South plan blocked, Tsafendas decided to return to Portugal. Travelling through Lebanon and Syria by bus, he crossed the Taurus mountain range and reached Ankara, Turkey in May 1961. A month later, he arrived in Istanbul, where he worked as a teacher of English at the best private language college in Turkey at the time, the Limasollu Naci College.¹⁶⁶⁸ In December 1961, he left to visit a former comrade from the Greek Civil War who lived in Sofia, Bulgaria. His visit lasted two weeks and then he went to Greece to spend Christmas with his good friend John Michaletos and his family.¹⁶⁶⁹ In January 1962, he travelled to the island of Crete to meet his relatives and see where his beloved father and his hero great-grandfather were born. From Greece, he travelled to Italy, then took the train to Lisbon, where he arrived in February 1962.¹⁶⁷⁰

Tsafendas worked as a welder in Lisbon until July 1962, when he went back to England and again participated in anti-apartheid and anti-fascist demonstrations. In late 1962, he learned that his father had died and he determined to visit his grave in South Africa. After several more unsuccessful applications for a visa for Mozambique and South Africa, in August or September of 1963, after twelve years of exile, the Portuguese government relented. Convinced by an “act” he put that he was mad but harmless, and “reformed” in terms of his political ideology, the authorities gave him amnesty and permission to return to Mozambique.¹⁶⁷¹

In October 1963, he arrived in Mozambique and a month later, with the help of his family, he was back in South Africa in Pretoria. He remained in Pretoria until July 1964, ¹⁶⁶⁶ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁶⁶⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁶⁶⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁶⁶⁹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

¹⁶⁷⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁶⁷¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

working for five months for F.A. Poole Engineering and the rest of the time at his half-sister's café. He crossed into Rhodesia to visit another half-sister he had not seen since 1941, and from there went again to Mozambique. He remained in Beira from October 10, 1964, until November 16, 1964, working at the Hume Pipe Company,¹⁶⁷² before being arrested by the Portuguese police for "making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses."¹⁶⁷³

After three months in jail in Beira, he left Mozambique for Durban in March 1965. He remained there until October 1965, working off and on as an interpreter at the Durban Court, as a welder at Fraser and Chalmers for two months and for a month for South African Railways. After receiving a letter from a girl who said she wanted to meet and marry him, he travelled from Durban to Cape Town, where he met her. He remained in Cape Town from October 1965 until September 1966.

None of the above travels can be described as aimless. Tsafendas himself characterised them in his affidavit, but also to friends and family as "forced globetrotting"¹⁶⁷⁴ and he was right. Several countries happened to be on the way to his destination, like France, Italy, Spain, Syria, Lebanon, Denmark and Turkey. Naturally, he spent little time there because he was just passing through. This does not apply to Turkey, where he got a teaching job and stayed for seven months. He visited Greece for the second time, Rhodesia and Bulgaria for holidays. For business and work, he travelled England, Belgium and Sweden, while one of the Liberty ships during the Second World War also took him to Canada. Apart from places where he stayed only weeks or a few months, this is his life story:

- Six years in Egypt, all in Alexandria (1919-1925)
- Seventeen years in Mozambique: 16 years in Lourenço Marques and one in Beira (1918-1919, 1925-1939, 1963-1964)
- Five years in South Africa: approximately two years in Pretoria, one in Johannesburg, one ¹⁶⁷² South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA; Demetrio Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁶⁷³ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

¹⁶⁷⁴ Demetrios Tsafendakis Affidavit, November 1965. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen, NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

in Cape Town and a eight months in Durban (1939-1941, 1963-1966, plus school in Middleburg)

- Six years in the USA in Boston and New York, a lot of this time at sea (1941-1947)
- Two years in Greece, all in Athens (1947-1949)
- Six years in Portugal, all in Lisbon (1951-1953, 1955-1958, 1962-1963)
- Three years in Germany, all in three cities, Munich, Frankfurt and Hamburg (1953-1955, 1958-1959)
- Seven months in Turkey in Istanbul (1961)¹⁶⁷⁵

This is not drifting, it is the odyssey of a man who was forced to live in exile from the country where he was born (Mozambique) for twelve years, who for sixteen years was not allowed to enter the country where his family lived (South Africa) and who was prosecuted and imprisoned because of his political beliefs in the country of his official nationality and where, after Mozambique, he spent most of his time (Portugal). Wherever he was, he always applied for permission to return to Mozambique and South Africa. Had he been allowed to return to either country or left in peace in Portugal, this vast Baedeker of travel would never have been opened.

Tsafendas travelled through so many countries mainly for two reasons:

- In search of a better place to stay and work
- He needed to cross through many countries to reach his destination.

Tsafendas's desperate efforts to return to Mozambique or South Africa and find a place to live and work without being followed by the police do not constitute "aimless ramblings." His life, as he said, was "forced globetrotting," peregrinations similar to those of Odysseus, who travelled for ten years through many different places to reach his destination. Tsafendas's odyssey is misunderstood by Dr. Cooper, who is clearly not aware of the circumstances of Tsafendas's travels.

¹⁶⁷⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

Finally, Tsafendas's travels and their planning and how he managed not only to merely survive, but in some occasions, like in Istanbul, thrive, is further proof of Tsafendas's ability to plan and adjust to any situation, something a schizophrenic is most unlikely to do. Professor Burke told the author, "The other thing, as well, that we have to question is how he could plan his behaviour and his trips, so perfectly? What you typically find with schizophrenic patients, is they become homeless people, so they can't find a job, or whatever the case may be, so, in his case, he was very rational and planning in what he did."¹⁶⁷⁶

TSAFENDAS'S EMPLOYMENT AND BEING "UNABLE TO FUNCTION ON A REASONABLE LEVEL"

DR. COOPER: Then one tried to go into the question of employment...his employment was again of the same ilk, in the sense that it appears from his story that he was never able to hold down a job for more than a couple of months at a time. And I was particularly interested in his employment recently in Cape Town, because there one could at least have some grasp of what he was talking about. And the fact that here was an intelligent man first of all taking up menial, simple forms of employment was to me significant. And furthermore the fact that, having taken up these menial, simple, jobs, that he was unable to hold down these jobs was also important and indicative of something being wrong...

DR. COOPER: He was usually sacked, I think, but occasionally left on his own accord... The explanation again usually revolves around the tapeworm, that because of the tapeworm he could not hold down the job, and this made him move on...

DR. COOPER: He said the tapeworm had destroyed his entire personality, both mentally and physically. That it made him weak, feeble and infirm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: If it is shown that between August 1965 and the 6th of September of this year the accused had five jobs in which he never stayed longer than two months in any one of those jobs, what do you feel about this?

¹⁶⁷⁶ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016.

DR. COOPER: This would be consistent with his mental condition as I saw it, in that I would not be able to, I would not expect this man to be able to hold down sustained employment even of a relatively simple type.

JUDGE BEYERS: May I put the opposite to you – the other side? Again it is not unusual - we in these courts know it is not unusual - for people not to hold jobs. It is not unusual for them never to do a stroke of work?

DR. COOPER: I went into this carefully.

JUDGE BEYERS: That is so, isn't it?

DR. COOPER: That is so.

JUDGE BEYERS: You have come across people who won't work and who don't hold jobs, haven't you?

DR. COOPER: Yes, but, when I do, I try and establish the reason therefore, the reason why they don't hold these jobs.

JUDGE BEYERS: You don't believe that they just don't want to work, and are lazy?

DR. COOPER: I am sure that there are those people, but this man did not fall into that category. He was continually seeking employment; he was continually getting employment, but, having sought it, and got it, he was unable to hold it; he was unable to function on a reasonable level. If his story is correct, there is nothing to suggest, from what he told me, that he is a won't-work.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: His inability to hold down a job for any length of time, to what does he attribute that?

DR. COOPER: That is attributed to the tapeworm.

DR. COOPER: I believe that this type of employment record is completely consistent with a man suffering from chronic schizophrenia and I believe that he is suffering from chronic schizophrenia and, therefore, I relate his employment record to this mental illness.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S ABOVE TESTIMONY

TSAFENDAS'S EMPLOYMENT

Perhaps the most inaccurate statement of all by Dr. Cooper was that Tsafendas was “unable to function on a reasonable level” and that was why he lost his jobs. More than fifty former colleagues testified to the police about Tsafendas. Only one of them, Owen Smorenberg, who would be produced as a witness for the defence, suggested Tsafendas was any kind of failure. He stated that Tsafendas “was no good as a fitter and was dismissed for that reason, but instead of dismissing him, he was given the opportunity to resign.”¹⁶⁷⁷ However, Smorenberg said nothing to suggest that Tsafendas was unable to function on a reasonable level. Not being good at your job is not the same thing as being unable to function on a reasonable level. Far from perceiving functional failure in Tsafendas, many of those who worked with him praised his skills, efficiency and intelligence. For example:

- The Attorney-General himself was in possession of testimonials from the Vulcan Iron Works in Lourenço Marques, where Tsafendas had worked for six years, 1933-1939, stating that “he had performed his duties in a satisfactory manner.”¹⁶⁷⁸ This was during the time when Tsafendas allegedly started believing he had a tapeworm in 1935 or 1936.
- Ralph Lighton, who worked with Tsafendas for nine to ten weeks at the Marine Diamond Corporation, testified to the police that he “never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers.”¹⁶⁷⁹
- Charles Woods, Tsafendas's supervisor at Fraser and Chalmers, characterised him as a “good tradesman,”¹⁶⁸⁰ “a very good worker, far from being a crank, fairly intelligent, but a violent type.”¹⁶⁸¹
- Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden was senior security officer for the Marine Diamond Corporation and worked with Tsafendas for around three months in 1966. He testified to the police:

“We were transferred from the Marina on a small outboard boat to the Colpontoon. It was terrible, rough seas, so much so that almost all of us old hands got seasick. It struck me

¹⁶⁷⁷ Owen Smorenburg statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Leer W.D. 10/10/ 4102 oor Stafendas. NASA.

¹⁶⁷⁸ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkoperij. NASA.

¹⁶⁷⁹ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁶⁸⁰ Charles Edwin Woods statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁶⁸¹ The Cape Times, ‘Tsafendas in Brawl in Canteen’, 9 September 1966: 15.

that Tsafendas adapted well. He was one of the few who was not seasick. Upon landing, he filled the mess basin on the lower deck with water and started shaving. His calm way struck me that he must know the sea. Tsafendas was employed as a pump, or engineer, operator and did not work under my direct supervision. I introduced myself to him and talked to him. He was friendly, outgoing, and not aloof. I noticed that his eating was messy. Otherwise he was completely normal.”¹⁶⁸²

- Johannes Aurets, Tsafendas's supervisor at the South African Railways, told the police Tsafendas “was a well-mannered and well-spoken person. He associated with those working with him. He was soft-spoken and appeared to be of a good nature. During the time he was employed under my supervision, i.e. for approximately three weeks, I did not see him being cross at any time. He was a good worker.”¹⁶⁸³
- Garnet Muller, Tsafendas's supervisor at South African Railways for three weeks, testified that Tsafendas gave him to understand that he took the job on a temporary basis. He “observed Demitrio Tsafendas to possess intelligence above that of the average person who is likely to accept a position with the little responsibility which is attached to that of shed attendant.”¹⁶⁸⁴
- Hulse, who worked with Tsafendas at Marine Diamond Cooperation from December 1965 to March 12, 1966, stated that Tsafendas “did not appear to be disturbed at any stage.”¹⁶⁸⁵
- Antonio Teixeira Da Silva, who worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole's engineering works in 1965, testified that Tsafendas “was acting normal and I never noticed anything wrong with him. I have seen an insane person before but I can state that the accused never behaved as an insane person whilst employed here.”¹⁶⁸⁶
- Gillian Claire Lieberman was a personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation who was often visited by Tsafendas in her office. She “found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation, but a strange type of person, a unique character.

¹⁶⁸² Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden statement to the police, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁶⁸³ Johannes Jaconus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁶⁸⁴ Garnet Vincent Muller statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁶⁸⁵ Hulse statement to the police, 28 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁶⁸⁶ Antonio Teixeira Da Silva statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

I got the impression that he was physically different in dress and appearance. He was a big man, with a particularly striking big hat, stainless steel teeth, sloppy, dirty clothing.”¹⁶⁸⁷

- Albert Vercueil, Tsafendas's boss at F. A. Poole in Pretoria, said that in the five months he worked with Tsafendas, he found him to be “not a very good worker, but will say that he was an intelligent worker.”¹⁶⁸⁸ He also testified to the Commission of Enquiry that he considered Tsafendas to be “an intelligent man, just untidy and lazy in rounding off his work.” He said “Tsafendas was a very friendly, social and talkative person but he was always looking to quarrel with the white workers. Mr. Vercueil would usually receive complaints from the other (white) foremen, but never from the Black workers. He never got the impression that Mr. Tsafendas was not right in his mind. F.A. Poole moved from their warehouse and Mr. Tsafendas was tasked with organizing the move and he handled it effortlessly.”¹⁶⁸⁹
- August Karel Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria. He found him to be “very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet. I never noticed anything abnormal about him, except that he had a strange look when I looked him straight in the eyes. He never gave me the impression that he was suffering from any mental disease.”¹⁶⁹⁰
- Cornelius Rudolph, the head court interpreter on the staff of the Magistrate of Durban, was approached by Tsafendas offering his services as a Portuguese or Greek interpreter. Rudolph appointed him and said Tsafendas “was in the habit of regularly reporting two or three times a week to ask whether there is any interpretation work.” He used him “on several occasions” over a period of six months and “got to know him pretty well.” He told police, “I spoke with him several times. He seemed to be a normal person and intelligent. He spoke English properly.”¹⁶⁹¹

¹⁶⁸⁷ Gillian Claire Liebermann statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁶⁸⁸ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁶⁸⁹ Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁶⁹⁰ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁶⁹¹ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

- Nikolaas Nel worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole and told the police that Tsafendas “seemed normal.”¹⁶⁹²
- Neville Judson worked with Tsafendas for Mike’s Outfitters for forty-two days in July and August 1966, frequently driving him to the tanker Eleni while it was docked in Cape Town. Of Tsafendas, he told the police that he “never in no way got the impression that he could be mentally deranged. He appeared to be a normal man with normal reasoning powers.”¹⁶⁹³ Judson later said that Tsafendas was “competent at his job but overly talkative and sociable.”¹⁶⁹⁴
- Michaelis Augustides, owner of Mike’s Outfitters, also found Tsafendas to be “competent at his job but overly talkative and sociable.”¹⁶⁹⁵
- Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen, was Tsafendas’s tram instructor in December 1965 and January 1966. He testified to the police that “other than his slow response, I did not at all get the impression that mentally anything was wrong with him. He is mentally normal.”¹⁶⁹⁶
- Horst Hartmann, a senior officer at the heavy engineering company, Fries and Son, in Frankfurt, Germany, characterised Tsafendas “as extremely nice and friendly ... I thought he was more likely to apply for an executive job than as a welder. Well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous, a very pleasant man. He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman...he made a good impression and he spoke good German, so I took him on... we liked him ... always laughing, a good worker.” Six weeks later Tsafendas left the company voluntarily with a very good reference in his suitcase. Hartmann said, “He left of his own accord ... we would have liked to keep him.” Hartman gave him a reference which Tsafendas used when he applied for the messenger job in Parliament. Would Hartmann have given him a reference and regretted his departure if Tsafendas was not able to function on a reasonable level?
- Although he worked at Fries and Son for only six weeks, Tsafendas made a lasting impression on Guenter Haafe, the fifty-seven-year -old factory doorman, who eight years

¹⁶⁹² Nikolaas Jacobus Nel statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁶⁹³ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

¹⁶⁹⁴ Lambley, The Psychology of Apartheid, p. 241.

¹⁶⁹⁵ Lambley, The Psychology of Apartheid, p. 241.

¹⁶⁹⁶ Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

later, still remembered the jovial greeting Tsafendas gave him every morning: “He was a jolly man, always smiling and friendly. He would almost always come into my locker to say hi. He was really one of the friendliest workers I have met and trust me, in my twelve years as a doorman I have seen thousands and thousands of faces coming in and out; this man was courteous, they do not make them like that anymore.”¹⁶⁹⁷ Is this the sort of man Dr. Cooper described?

- Tsafendas made a “good impression” on his colleagues in Frankfurt; they said he was “always smiling” and characterized him as being “very kind”, “a nice guy” and a “good comrade.”¹⁶⁹⁸
- Tsafendas lived in the house of Fotini Gavasiadis and her husband Markos for several weeks. When he left, he moved into an apartment next to their house, where he stayed for the next eight months, seeing Fotini and Markos every day, and spending a lot of his time their home. Tsafendas and Fotini also worked together for nine months in her brother’s café. According to Gavasiadis:

“[Tsafendas] had a quick mind and was very intelligent. He worked out prices in head and was invariably correct... he was very good, very polite and friendly. All the customers liked him and some of them used to come just to chat with him, mostly about his travels around the world. Some old men really adored him. My brother was initially not very keen on having him there because he was told that he would start arguing with customers over politics, but he never argued with anyone as long as he was there.”

Some customers angered him but Tsafendas kept his counsel. Gavasiadis told the author:

“Many times he told me, ‘These people are bloody racists,’ but he never told them anything out of respect for my brother because it was his business. A lot of times he complained about some customers, that they were getting into his head with what they were telling him and the blood was going to his head because of his anger, but still he never said anything and carried on his work.”

¹⁶⁹⁷ The Daily News, ‘Tsafendas Seen As ‘Mystery Man’’, 8 September 1966: 17; Natal Witness, ‘Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...’, 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, ‘Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte’, 8 September 1966.

¹⁶⁹⁸ PIDE’s News Digest; Le Courrier d’Afrique, ‘Em Torno Do Assassinado do Primeiro Ministro Sulafricano; Versoes Contraditorias Circulam Sobre A Personalidade Do Assassino’, 9 September 1966: 1. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Daily Dispatch, ‘He Made A Good Impression’, 8 September 1966: 1; Natal Witness, ‘Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...’, 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, ‘Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte’, 8 September 1966.

Tsafendas worked voluntarily at the café because Nick Vlachopoulos had given him a rent-free apartment. Tsafendas was so good that Vlachopoulos offered him a permanent job with good wages, but Tsafendas refused. He did not want to take any money after accepting the free apartment. He worked full-time at the café when he was unemployed and part-time when he was at F.A. Poole Engineering. Gavasiadis strongly denies the suggestion that Tsafendas was not able to hold down a job because he was unable to function on a reasonable level. She states however, that she was told by Tsafendas himself and by members of his family, that he had lost jobs in the past because of his outspokenness with regards to politics.¹⁶⁹⁹

- Nick Augustides is the son of the owner of Mike's Outfitters in Cape Town for whom Tsafendas worked on commission. He knew Tsafendas for three-four months and never heard him say anything to suggest he was insane. He told the author that Tsafendas "definitely did not look or sound insane."¹⁷⁰⁰
- In addition, Tsafendas functioned perfectly well in Istanbul where he was able to hold a teacher's job for five or six months. Mrs. Advije Vedia Limasollu, wife of the college owner, Mr. Limasollu Naci, stressed that her husband would not have kept anyone on the teaching staff who was not good.¹⁷⁰¹ That Tsafendas taught at the college was reported by the South African press¹⁷⁰² and was known to the police,¹⁷⁰³ but apparently not to Dr. Cooper and to the Attorney-General.
- Finally, Tsafendas worked for a little over a month in Parliament. None of the five colleagues who worked with him and were questioned by the police and the Commission of Enquiry mentioned anything being wrong with him.¹⁷⁰⁴ Petrus Schuin, the head messenger, was one of the three who interviewed and appointed him. He told the Commission of Enquiry that "there was nothing out of the ordinary about him. Tsafendas ¹⁶⁹⁹ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

¹⁷⁰⁰ Nick Augustides in a personal interview, 19 February 2016.

¹⁷⁰¹ Advije Vedia Limasollu in a personal interview, 8 January 2016.

¹⁷⁰² The Cape Times, 'Tsafendas Taught Turks English', 8 September 1966; Daily Dispatch, 'Tsafendas Taught English in Turkey', 8 September 1966: 1; The Daily News, 'Tsafendas Seen As 'Mystery Man'', 8 September 1966: 17.

¹⁷⁰³ 'The history of the person who inflicted the fatal wounds to the late Dr. Verwoerd' drafted by Col. McIntyre, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Subject: Leer W.D. 10/10/4102 der Stafendas. NASA.

¹⁷⁰⁴ Piet Bester Burger testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA; Fred Feinauer statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Feliz George Miles statement to the police, 7 October 1966. K150, Vol. 2, File: 1. NASA; Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA; Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

was the same as any other person that had worked there.”¹⁷⁰⁵ Sydney Wiehand, also on the interview panel, said, “he was a quiet man. He wasn’t the rough type or anything like that. He was quiet, quietly-spoken, well-mannered.”¹⁷⁰⁶ The evidence of these witnesses was important because it came from people who had dealt with him recently and in a professional environment.

None of the above statements given to the police or the Commission of Enquiry was used by the Attorney-General to challenge Dr. Cooper’s testimony. We do not know if the Attorney-General was in possession of these documents or if he ignored them. The fact remains that the statements flatly contradicted Dr. Cooper’s testimony, revealing yet another error in his diagnosis. Even if the Attorney-General was not in possession of the above statements, he was certainly in possession of several others from Tsafendas’s bosses at the Vulcan Iron Works, where he was employed for six years stating that “he had performed his duties in a satisfactory manner.”¹⁷⁰⁷ Still, the Attorney-General did not use this evidence.

Dr. Cooper also said, “I would not expect this man to be able to hold down sustained employment, even of a relatively simple type.” This is clearly incorrect and the argument would be contradicted the following day when another defence witness, Dr. Muller, testified that he found Tsafendas to be intelligent and healthy enough to hold down a job with ease. Asked by the Defence Counsel, “With his health and his intelligence, should he be able to hold down a job?” Dr. Muller replied, “Yes. Yes, I would think he could very easily.”¹⁷⁰⁸

However, at this stage, the State should have been able to challenge Dr. Cooper’s argument by itself since the police had ample evidence to contradict it. Firstly, Tsafendas worked in 1961 as a teacher of English for nearly six months at Limasollu Naci, the leading private language college in Istanbul. The State must have been aware of this. Not only did Tsafendas mention it in his statement to the police on September 11, his teaching stint was reported in the South African press,¹⁷⁰⁹ it was mentioned in a report by Col. McIntyre of the ¹⁷⁰⁵ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

¹⁷⁰⁶ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

¹⁷⁰⁷ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkoperij. NASA.

¹⁷⁰⁸ Dr. Hendrik Muller’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹⁷⁰⁹ The Cape Times, ‘Tsafendas Taught Turks English’, 8 September 1966; ‘Daily Dispatch, ‘Tsafendas Taught English in Turkey’, 8 September 1966: 1; The Daily News, ‘Tsafendas Seen As ‘Mystery Man’’, 8 September 1966: 17.

South African police¹⁷¹⁰ and it was known to the Commission of Enquiry.¹⁷¹¹ The police also found a separate note stating that Tsafendas worked at this language school.¹⁷¹² However, the Attorney-General did not mention the Istanbul work.

The obvious question is how could a man as described by Dr. Cooper work as a teacher at a prestigious college for six months? Teaching a foreign language at such a place is not a “menial, simple form of employment.” Tsafendas had to work on a trial basis, under observation by his colleagues for a week, to determine if he was good enough. Professor Burke believes it would have been impossible for a man with schizophrenia as described by Dr. Cooper to hold down an intellectual post for such an extended period: “There would have been symptoms a lot earlier. If it was schizophrenia, why was he able to hold down a job? If his functioning was so impaired, how could he possibly have performed his job?”¹⁷¹³ According to van Zyl, it would have been “impossible” for Tsafendas, as described by Dr. Cooper, to have been able to work at the college, “He certainly was bright and intelligent. The person that I dealt with at the time was so beset by symptoms of schizophrenia that that would not have been possible ...”¹⁷¹⁴ However, Tsafendas managed to keep the job for five or six months and then left of his own accord with a glowing reference that he used to get the job in the House of Assembly.

Advocate Cooper's statement that Tsafendas did not stay longer than two months in any job in the year before the assassination is inaccurate, as he worked for at least four months (December 1965-March 1966) for the Marine Diamond Corporation.¹⁷¹⁵ Tsafendas left all his jobs voluntarily except for one in Mandini, where he was dismissed for fighting with a fellow worker, Nick Vergos. Tsafendas said Vergos had refused to pay Black workers he had illegally employed to do some work for him, and when he intervened, they fought.¹⁷¹⁶ As to the level of expertise required in his various jobs, Tsafendas worked as a welder for five months, from February 7, 1964 to July 10, 1964, at F.A. Poole in Pretoria,¹⁷¹⁷ as a part-¹⁷¹⁰ ‘The history of the person who inflicted the fatal wounds to the late Dr. Verwoerd’ drafted by Col. McIntyre, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Subject: Leer W.D. 10/10/4102 der Stafendas. NASA.

¹⁷¹¹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 37; Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter VI, Paragraph 4.

¹⁷¹² Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter VI, Paragraph 4.

¹⁷¹³ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016.

¹⁷¹⁴ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

¹⁷¹⁵ Hulse statement to the police, 28 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁷¹⁶ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 5 August 2011; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

¹⁷¹⁷ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

time interpreter for seven to eight months at the Court in Durban¹⁷¹⁸ and for nine months at his half-sister's café shop in Pretoria in 1963-1964.¹⁷¹⁹

Tsafendas also worked at several jobs for much longer than two months. The author is not in position to know all the jobs Tsafendas did and has relied mostly on the documents found in the archives. Naturally, not all his jobs are listed there, but here are a dozen:

- For six years (1933-1939) in Vulcan Iron Works, General Engineers, in Lourenço Marques. The Attorney-General was aware of this information as it was contained in his Memorandum about Tsafendas. In addition, he was in possession of “testimonials from this firm” affirming that “he had performed his duties in a satisfactory manner.”¹⁷²⁰
- For two years (1936-1938) at the Imperial Airways factory in Quilemane.¹⁷²¹
- For about two years (1933-1935) at Spanos's bookshop in Lourenço Marques.¹⁷²²
- For about a year (around 1938-1939) as a waiter at Gerry Kyriakakis's restaurant. He was fired after he argued with a German customer who supported the Nazis.¹⁷²³
- For almost two years (May 1940-early 1942) as a welder with the British Mining Supply Company in Johannesburg.¹⁷²⁴
- While in Athens (October 1947-April 1949), Tsafendas was employed for twelve months as an interpreter and foreman with the American Reconstruction Mission, under the US Marshall Plan.¹⁷²⁵

¹⁷¹⁸ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁷¹⁹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

¹⁷²⁰ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkoperij. NASA.

¹⁷²¹ Marika Tsafantakis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

¹⁷²² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁷²³ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

¹⁷²⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁷²⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

- For about three years (1955-1958), Tsafendas worked as hawker in Lisbon, going “on board ships lying in the Tagus to ply his trade of itinerant vendor of regional articles and embroideries.”¹⁷²⁶
- For six months (1958) with Anglo-American Fashions and Designers in Frankfurt.
- For around six months (1958-1959) at a US Army printing works in Hochst, a district of Frankfurt.
- For six months (1959) in a tractor factory in Munich.¹⁷²⁷
- For six-seven months (June-December 1961) as teacher of English at Limasollu Naci College in Istanbul.¹⁷²⁸
- For four months full-time, five months part-time (November 1963-July 1964) at Proclamation Hill Café, Pretoria.¹⁷²⁹
- For five months (2 February-10 July 1964) at F.A. Poole Engineering in Pretoria.¹⁷³⁰
- For seven-eight months (March-October 1965) in the court in Durban; although he only worked there when needed, this was on “several occasions.”¹⁷³¹
- For three-four months (December 1965-March 1966) at Marine Diamond Corporation in Cape Town.¹⁷³²

Tsafendas liked casual work and being his own boss. In 1951, he requested and received from the Director of the International Police in Lisbon a card which declared him to be a maritime salesman.¹⁷³³ He spent the next three years, then after a break another two, in Portugal and then again in South Africa as a hawker, selling “embroidery, postcards and watches, mainly to holidaymakers on cruise ships.” He travelled to Belgium in 1958 for the ¹⁷²⁶ PIDE report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas or Dimitrie Tsafandakis. 21 February 1962. K150, Vol. 4, Sub-file 1/6. Department of Justice. NASA.

¹⁷²⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁷²⁸ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 4 November 2015; Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁷²⁹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

¹⁷³⁰ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁷³¹ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁷³² Hulse statement to the police, 28 September 1966, K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁷³³ Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

Brussels World Fair (Expo 58) to sell his embroidery.¹⁷³⁴ Hawking became Tsafendas's favourite work and he would often return to it when he was out of a steady job. He liked running his own life and working whenever he wanted. If it had been more profitable and less tiring, he would have done it permanently, he said.¹⁷³⁵

There is no doubt that Tsafendas was fired from some jobs, but this was usually due not to incompetence but his outspokenness on politics and workers' rights. As we have seen in his biography, this started shortly after Tsafendas became an active Communist. In 1937, he was dismissed from the Sideris kiosk in Lourenço Marques "owing to his Communist leanings."¹⁷³⁶ The Chai et Kiosk, was owned by P. Sideris, a good friend of his father. Sideris, a conservative Greek loyal to the Portuguese government, often berated his young employee for arguing about politics with his customers.¹⁷³⁷

One day, Dimitri crossed swords with a wealthy Portuguese businessman and city councillor. He denounced the man as a "fascist" and accused him of exploiting Mozambicans. Then aged seventeen, Tsafendas said, "One day the Mozambicans will rebel against the Portuguese and take back everything you stole from them." The businessman reported the incident to Sideris and told him he would inform the police because he considered his employee to be a "dangerous Communist." Although reluctant to do so, but feeling he had no choice, Sideris dismissed Tsafendas. He knew he would be in trouble with the colonial authorities if he did not do so.¹⁷³⁸

In 1938, while working at the Imperial Airways factory in Quilemane, Tsafendas came under suspicion by PIDE of "spreading Communist propaganda."¹⁷³⁹ Tsafendas had distributed the Communist Manifesto to some of his colleagues,¹⁷⁴⁰ but he was not arrested as ¹⁷³⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁷³⁵ Emmanuel Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 January 2014.

¹⁷³⁶ Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II A, Paragraph 16.

¹⁷³⁷ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁷³⁸ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁷³⁹ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

¹⁷⁴⁰ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

the accusation was “never proven.”¹⁷⁴¹ This incident dogged Tsafendas throughout his life since it led to the creation of a file, Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis, by the International and State Defence Police (PIDE), the Portuguese security police, which would only get bigger with the passage of time.¹⁷⁴² A 1961 PIDE report referred to the two above incidents, stating that while Tsafendas was “residing in that Province (Mozambique), he was twice a suspect of Communist activities, but evidence of such activities was never found.”¹⁷⁴³ The SA police also had in its possession PIDEs’ report, which stated clearly that while in Mozambique, Tsafendas “was on two occasions suspected of dedicating himself to communistic activities.”¹⁷⁴⁴

Later in 1938 or in 1939, the twenty-year-old Dimitri worked as a waiter at a hotel owned by Gerry Kyriakakis, a friend of his father. Once again, he argued politics with the guests, despite Kyriakakis’s threats of dismissal. One day he got into an argument with a German guest about the persecution of Jews in Nazi Germany. The German asked if he was a Jew himself, whereupon Dimitri replied proudly that indeed he was and the German dropped the argument. News of this dispute and of Tsafendas’s Jewish background spread through the Greek community and when the political disputes continued, Kyriakakis decided they were jeopardising business and finally dismissed his young waiter.¹⁷⁴⁵

Sometime in early 1965, Tsafendas asked his half-sister Katerina Pnefma and her husband Gerry to help him find a job in Mozambique. Gerry Pnefma was friendly with the manager of a dock in Beira and persuaded him to hire his brother-in-law as an interpreter. Tsafendas lasted only a few days before being dismissed for urging the Mozambican workers to strike because of their working conditions. Tsafendas denounced the manager and the company as “capitalists exploiting the workers.” The manager told Gerry Pnefma about the incident and said the “only reason he did not call the police was that he did not want to cause his family problems.” He urged his friend not to help Tsafendas again because he was a “dangerous Communist.”¹⁷⁴⁶

¹⁷⁴¹ Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

¹⁷⁴² Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

¹⁷⁴³ Letter of the Director of PIDE to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, 04 November 1961. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

¹⁷⁴⁴ Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

¹⁷⁴⁵ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

¹⁷⁴⁶ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

During his time with the Hume Pipe Company in Gondola in October and November 1964,¹⁷⁴⁷ Tsafendas often complained that Portugal was exploiting Mozambique's oil wealth¹⁷⁴⁸ and urged the Black workers to go on strike because they were mistreated by the Whites.¹⁷⁴⁹ During his five months with Poole Engineering in Pretoria in 1965, "Tsafendas bullied the other Portuguese workers and had fights with several white workers",¹⁷⁵⁰ but he never argued with Black workers.¹⁷⁵¹ He was "unpopular among white workers" and "adapted more to the non-whites."¹⁷⁵² The reason Tsafendas was unpopular with White workers and bullied the Portuguese workers is perhaps provided by a Portuguese colleague, Antonio Da Silva. He testified to the police that Tsafendas learned that he had served in the Portuguese army in Mozambique and asked him what he thought of Dr. Salazar, the Prime Minister of Portugal. Da Silva claimed that he did not discuss the issue further with Tsafendas, but Tsafendas became aggressive towards him after that.¹⁷⁵³ In May 1965, while Tsafendas was working for Fraser and Chalmers in Durban, he fought physically with Nick Vergos in an attempt to protect the rights of some African workers, as noted, and was dismissed.¹⁷⁵⁴ Finally, Katerina Pnema said that Tsafendas "couldn't keep his mouth shut about politics" and that "he could not keep his mouth shut if he saw something he considered to be wrong."¹⁷⁵⁵

¹⁷⁴⁷ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA; Demetrio Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁷⁴⁸ Demetrio Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

¹⁷⁴⁹ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

¹⁷⁵⁰ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁷⁵¹ Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁷⁵² Nikolaas Jacobus Nel statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁷⁵³ Antonio Teixeira Da Silva statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁷⁵⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File Verklarings. NASA.

¹⁷⁵⁵ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

Dr. Cooper

Tsafendas “Unable to Function on a Reasonable Level”

TSAFENDAS BEING “UNABLE TO FUNCTION ON A REASONABLE LEVEL”

The South African police and the Commission of Enquiry questioned about two hundred people regarding Tsafendas. Only three raised questions as to his mental stability, one, James Johnston, in a rather confused manner:

- Caroline Barbeau, a member of the Christian Church who met Tsafendas in Durban in 1965, got the impression that he was “not all there,” although she did not state why she got such an impression.¹⁷⁵⁶
- James Johnston, a minister of the Christian Church, spoke to Tsafendas twice for ten minutes on each occasion. He told the police that “I do not know Tsafendas very well and the longest discussion I had with him was for about 10 minutes at each occasion ... He appeared to be perfectly normal ... I did think Tsafendas to be slightly unbalanced and that he seemed to have a mysterious background, but otherwise he appeared to be all right.”¹⁷⁵⁷
- Keith Martincich, who worked with Tsafendas for two to three weeks at Marine Diamond Cooperation, thought that there “was something mentally wrong with him” because Tsafendas sometimes mumbled to himself.¹⁷⁵⁸

Johnston and Barbeau were members of the Christian Church and Johnston’s contradictory statement should be read in that context. The Daniels and O’Ryan families, who would testify as defence witnesses, were also members of the Christian Church and one of them, Merle Daniels, admitted to the Court that she “would like to protect the name of the Christian Church.”¹⁷⁵⁹ According to Patrick O’Ryan, Reuben O’Ryan and Richard Poggenpoel, all three friends of Tsafendas and members of the Church, the assassination embarrassed the Church and some of its members tried to distance themselves and their Church from Tsafendas.¹⁷⁶⁰

Peter and Helen Daniels had asked Gordon Winter, the Post journalist who interviewed them, not to mention that Helen was a preacher in the Christian Church because ¹⁷⁵⁶ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁷⁵⁷ James Johnston statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁷⁵⁸ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁷⁵⁹ Merle Daniels testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹⁷⁶⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

it “would bring disgrace” on the Church.¹⁷⁶¹ Like the majority of the Greek community, some members of the sect tried to portray Tsafendas as not one of them in order to protect their reputation. In addition, Tsafendas also often clashed with leaders and members of the Christian Church because they advocated obedience to rule, including that of the governing National Party and its policy of apartheid.¹⁷⁶² Witnesses did not want to admit to the police that they had discussed various issues with Tsafendas and most likely made their comments so as to persuade the police that they did not respect Tsafendas or hold him in any sort of esteem.

As for Martincich, his conclusion is preposterous. If everyone who talked to himself were to be considered mentally unstable, the world would not be big enough to hold all their asylums. What is more, Martincich was the only one out of some three hundred witnesses who were interviewed by the police, the Commission and the author, who noticed Tsafendas mumbling to himself. This was a man who had known Tsafendas for three weeks, while people who lived with him in the same house or worked with him or socialised with him for many months and even years, failed to spot such a habit.

Others questioned by the South African police about Tsafendas’s mental state testified as follows:

- Reginald Robert Maile was the guard on the Eleni while it was docked in Cape Town from July 26, 1966 to September 3, 1966. He saw Tsafendas every day and told the police that he “never got the impression that he could be mentally defective. He was sober, polite and perfectly normal.”¹⁷⁶³
- Inspector Horacio Ferreira of the Portuguese Security Police was in charge of the cells where Tsafendas was held in custody in Beira in 1964. His statement to the police said he considered Tsafendas to be “normal and regarded him as a very intelligent person.”¹⁷⁶⁴
- Lt. Col. P.J.B. van Wyk of the South African police interviewed several people in Rhodesia and in Mozambique, including in Beira and Lourenço Marques, who knew Tsafendas. He stated in his report that Tsafendas, “for all purposes, can be seen as a ¹⁷⁶¹ Gordon Winter in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes; Gordon Winter in a personal interview with Dr. James Sanders on behalf of the author, 19 August 2016.

¹⁷⁶² Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013.

¹⁷⁶³ Reginald Robert Maile statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

¹⁷⁶⁴ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

normal, intelligent person.”¹⁷⁶⁵

- Captain P.A. Sanianos, the Greek Consul in Beira “was often in the company of the subject and others had several conversations with him.” He considered Tsafendas to be “a normal and very intelligent person.”¹⁷⁶⁶
- Hendrik van Loggenberg knew Tsafendas and his family well in Pretoria. He told the police that Tsafendas “definitely came across as normal ... he also seemed healthy ...”¹⁷⁶⁷
- Helen Grispos knew Tsafendas from birth and grew up with him, while her husband was Tsafendas’s best childhood friend. She told the police that Tsafendas was “well-mannered and intelligent.”¹⁷⁶⁸ She also told the author that she never thought Tsafendas was insane. “He never did or said anything to make me or George (her husband) think that he was insane.”¹⁷⁶⁹
- Albert Vercueil, Tsafendas’s boss at F. A. Poole in Pretoria, said that in the five months he worked with Tsafendas, he found him to be “not a very good worker, but will say that he was an intelligent worker.”¹⁷⁷⁰ He also testified to the Commission of Enquiry that he considered Tsafendas to be “an intelligent man, just untidy and lazy in rounding off his work.” He never got the impression that Mr. Tsafendas was not right in his mind.¹⁷⁷¹
- James Summers, owner of the “Barlings Tea Lounge,” which Tsafendas frequented from July 1966 until the assassination, testified that Tsafendas “was no nuisance, and appeared to be a quite normal, innocent type. I never had reason to even suspect that he could be mentally unbalanced. He acted quite normal.”¹⁷⁷²
- John Gianouris, the Greek Vice Consul at Lourenço Marques, described

¹⁷⁶⁵ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

¹⁷⁶⁶ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

¹⁷⁶⁷ Hendrik Johannes van Loggenberg statement to the police, 8 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁷⁶⁸ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

¹⁷⁶⁹ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

¹⁷⁷⁰ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁷⁷¹ Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁷⁷² Herbert James Summers statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Tsafendas as “a normal and intelligent person.”¹⁷⁷³

- August Karel Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria. He found him to be “very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet. I never noticed anything abnormal about him, except that he had a strange look when I looked him straight in the eyes. He never gave me the impression that he was suffering from any mental disease.”¹⁷⁷⁴
- Kyriakos Skordis who Tsafendas used to visit at his coffee shop in Durban for several months in 1965, testified that he “appeared to be quite normal and was apparently in a poor financial position.”¹⁷⁷⁵
- Costas Michaeletos,¹⁷⁷⁶ who knew Tsafendas from birth, stated, “Ever since I knew Dimetrios Tsafantakis, I never, any time observed that he showed any deviations. He also never was an aggressive type person.”¹⁷⁷⁷
- John Galanakis, who met Tsafendas in Umtali in 1964, told police that he found Tsafendas to be “an intelligent man.”¹⁷⁷⁸
- Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys, employment officer at the Department of Labour in Cape Town, interviewed Tsafendas twice. He testified to the police that Tsafendas was “neatly dressed” and he “never got the impression that there was mentally anything wrong with him or that he acted abnormally.”¹⁷⁷⁹
- Gideon Cloete, an employee in the Department of Labour, met Tsafendas twice and said he “seemed eager to get employment, was neatly dressed and had a clean appearance.” Cloete said he saw no signs of abnormality, that “he seemed perfectly normal.”¹⁷⁸⁰

¹⁷⁷³ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

¹⁷⁷⁴ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁷⁷⁵ Kyriakos Skordis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁷⁷⁶ The correct spelling is Michaeletos, not Michaeletos. Costas Michaeletos statement to the police, 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁷⁷⁷ Costas Michaeletos statement to the police, 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁷⁷⁸ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

¹⁷⁷⁹ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

¹⁷⁸⁰ Gideon Jacobus Cloete testimony at Tsafendas’s summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, NASA.

- George Liberopoulos met Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques in 1963 and described him to the police as a “normal person with a very high intelligence.”¹⁷⁸¹ Liberopoulos also stated to the author that he “never believed that Tsafendas was insane. He was perfectly normal; very clever man.”¹⁷⁸²
- Harry Hall, a member of the Christian Church, knew Tsafendas from March 1966 until his arrest. He testified to the police that he regarded Tsafendas “as a sub-standard intellect, but otherwise found him to be reasonably normal.”¹⁷⁸³
- George Ananiades met Tsafendas in 1963. He described him to the police as a “normal person with a very high-intelligence.”¹⁷⁸⁴ He later told the author that Tsafendas “is impossible to have been insane. He was a very intelligent and educated man. He was definitely able to function on a reasonable level.”¹⁷⁸⁵
- Ian Boswell, administrative assistant at the Department of Labour in Cape Town. He interviewed Tsafendas three times in 1966 and testified that “he was at all times neatly dressed and never gave the impression of being destitute. Aside from being over-talkative, he showed no symptoms of abnormality, during his interviews with me.”¹⁷⁸⁶
- John Verghis, owner of a coffee shop in Beira which Tsafendas visited often for several months, said he considered him to be a “normal person.”¹⁷⁸⁷
- None of Tsafendas’s five colleagues at the Parliament mentioned anything being wrong with him.¹⁷⁸⁸
- Petrus Schuin, the head messenger at the Parliament, was one of the three ¹⁷⁸¹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

¹⁷⁸² George Liberopoulos in a personal interview, 6 July 2015.

¹⁷⁸³ Harry Hall statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁷⁸⁴ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

¹⁷⁸⁵ George Ananiades in a personal interview, 21 June 2016.

¹⁷⁸⁶ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

¹⁷⁸⁷ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

¹⁷⁸⁸ Piet Bester Burger testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA; Fred Feinauer statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Feliz George Miles statement to the police, 7 October 1966. K150, Vol. 2, File: 1. NASA; Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA; Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

messengers who interviewed and appointed him. He told the Commission of Enquiry that “there was nothing out of the ordinary about him. Tsafendas was the same as any other person that had worked there.”¹⁷⁸⁹

- Sydney Wiehand, who was also one of the three messengers who had interviewed him at the Parliament, said about Tsafendas, “he was a quiet man. He wasn’t the rough type, or anything like that. He was quiet - quietly spoken, well-mannered.”¹⁷⁹⁰
- Mrs. Tsafandakis, Tsafendas’s sister in law, testified to the Commission that Tsafendas was “definitely not insane.”¹⁷⁹¹

Several people lived under the same roof or in close proximity to Tsafendas for substantial periods. None of them noticed anything wrong with him:

- Tsafendas lived in Fotini Gavasiadis’s house for a few weeks, then for the next eight months in an apartment next to hers. Throughout this period in Pretoria in 1963-1964, they were very close; she saw and talked to him every day and they worked together in her brother’s café. Gavasiadis never noticed anything wrong with Tsafendas and has no doubt that he was perfectly able to function, not just at a “reasonable level” but beyond that, since he was extremely intelligent and lucid. She told the author:

“Dimitris could buy you and sell you any time he wanted and as many times as he wanted to. He was so clever. He was very convincing and persuasive - he could turn black into white! If you disagreed with something with him, he would find a way to convince you that he is right and that you are wrong - even if you know that you are right and that he is wrong! If he made a mistake about something, he would turn things upside-down and at the end, he would even make you apologise to him.”

Gavasiadis laughed at the suggestion that Tsafendas was “unable to function on a reasonable level”:

“In those nine months, I saw him and spoke to him every day and not even once did he appear to have an issue with his speech or his thoughts. He was always the same. We spent hours and hours talking and his speech was never incoherent, disjointed, blocked or ¹⁷⁸⁹ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

¹⁷⁹⁰ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

¹⁷⁹¹ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

whatever else, it was always perfect. He never gave me even the slightest indication that he might be having the issues you mentioned. It must have been the doctor who said it, who was himself not able to function on a reasonable level if this was his diagnosis about Dimitri. Dimitri was not just able, but much more than able to function on a reasonable level. It’s absolutely ludicrous for someone to say this about Dimitri and it shows how little he knew him.”¹⁷⁹²

According to Professor Burke, “if you lived with somebody for nine months, you would know if this person was strange.”¹⁷⁹³

- Father Nikola Banovic lived in the same house as Tsafendas for four-five months in 1961, and then for another two-three months, he lived in a house next door. In all this time, he saw him every day. He declares that Tsafendas “was perfectly sane” and he does “not have the slightest doubt about it. It is impossible; Dimitri was not schizophrenic. With God as my witness, he was not crazy. He was more than capable of functioning on a reasonable level; he was a very intelligent and capable man. His brain was a level above most of ours.”¹⁷⁹⁴
- Mary Eintracht, Tsafendas’s first cousin, knew him since he was five years old and grew up alongside him in Mozambique and in Egypt. In Pretoria in 1964, she spent a lot of time with him, including two or three weeks when they lived in the same house. She told the author: “Dimitris unable to function on a reasonable level? Are you sure a doctor said that? I don’t know what kind of doctor he was, but he either examined a different person or he had completely lost the plot with Dimitris. Dimitris was one of the most capable and intelligent persons I ever met. Nobody who knew him is going to agree with what this doctor said.”¹⁷⁹⁵
- John Bornman lived with Tsafendas for six-seven weeks in April and May of 1966. He testified to the police that he found Tsafendas to be “normal, intelligent and friendly. He was neat in his person, but his eating habits were messy.”¹⁷⁹⁶
- Patrick O’Ryan hosted Tsafendas in his home for five months in 1965-1966 and was close to him up to his arrest. Tsafendas was described to him by a preacher of the ¹⁷⁹² Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

¹⁷⁹³ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

¹⁷⁹⁴ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

¹⁷⁹⁵ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

¹⁷⁹⁶ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

Christian Church as a “highly cultured gentleman, a very refined gentleman who speaks seven languages.”¹⁷⁹⁷ He formed a “deep liking”¹⁷⁹⁸ for Tsafendas and considered him to be an “enlightened person.”¹⁷⁹⁹ He also testified that “I had confidence in him and used to like him. He was a very kindly man. In my experience of him he had a good heart ... I never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind,” or that he “was mentally disturbed.”¹⁸⁰⁰ He also found Tsafendas to be “well-spoken and had good vocabulary.”¹⁸⁰¹

- Reuben O’Ryan lived in the same house as Tsafendas for five months. He considered him “perfectly normal,” saying, “no-one in my family ever thought that he was mad. He couldn’t have been insane.”¹⁸⁰²
- Stanley O’Ryan also lived in the same house as Tsafendas for five months and described him as a “very down to earth man, a very quiet man and very friendly. I never suspected, even in the slightest, that he might be unstable. No, never, nothing at all. Perfectly normal.”¹⁸⁰³
- Allan O’Ryan also lived with Tsafendas for five months at the same house and kept being in touch for another year. He told the author that no one in the house ever questioned Tsafendas’s sanity, “Never. There was no such thing as, ‘This person is mad,’ you know, or something like that. That never came through. [He was] always very sensible in his answers to anybody.”¹⁸⁰⁴
- Violet Irene Manning was Tsafendas’s landlady for almost two months in 1965. She told the Commission of Enquiry: “it was a serviced room but I found him making his own bed. When he came to me he was well-dressed, well-spoken, and gave a good impression. From his general appearance he appeared to be a businessman. When he paid me, he had a bundle of notes and I took him to be a man of means.”¹⁸⁰⁵
- Elizabeth Groves was Tsafendas’s landlady for six or seven weeks and a retired ¹⁷⁹⁷ Patrick O’ Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

¹⁷⁹⁸ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹⁷⁹⁹ Patrick O’ Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

¹⁸⁰⁰ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹⁸⁰¹ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹⁸⁰² Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

¹⁸⁰³ Stanley O’Ryan in a personal interview with the author, 9 April 2015.

¹⁸⁰⁴ Allan O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019.

¹⁸⁰⁵ Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

psychiatric nurse. About Tsafendas she said, “I was a nurse and worked in lunatic institutions. He was a normal person to the best of my knowledge.”¹⁸⁰⁶

- Alice Mary Theyser was Tsafendas’s landlady from July 1, 1966 to August 30, 1966, just six days before the assassination. She testified to the police that she “never got the impression in any way that he might be mentally unbalanced. To me he appeared a quite normal person.”¹⁸⁰⁷
- Helen Daniels lived with Tsafendas in her parents’ house for six weeks in 1965 and “did not notice anything abnormal about him. There was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal.”¹⁸⁰⁸
- Marika Tsafantakis, Tsafendas’s stepmother, testified to the Commission that Tsafendas was “definitely not insane.”¹⁸⁰⁹
- Victor Tsafandakis, Tsafendas’s stepbrother, testified to the Commission that Tsafendas was “definitely not insane.”¹⁸¹⁰
- Kenneth Ross was Tsafendas’s landlord in Durban for two months in 1965. He did not mention anything to suggest that Tsafendas was unable to function on a reasonable level and even stated that he “was very fond of discussing politics and gave me the opinion that he was well-versed in politics.”¹⁸¹¹
- For two months in 1966 Tsafendas had his meals in Mary Scott’s boarding house. She told police that she “never got the impression that he could be mentally unbalanced. To me he appeared perfectly normal.”¹⁸¹²
- Richard Poggenpoel lived with him for two weeks in his house and kept on associating up to his arrest, “there was no mention or impression that he was mentally ¹⁸⁰⁶ Elizabeth Magdalene Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁸⁰⁷ Alice Mary Theyser statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁸⁰⁸ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

¹⁸⁰⁹ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

¹⁸¹⁰ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

¹⁸¹¹ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁸¹² Mary Kathleen Scott statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

abnormal. He lived a completely normal life.”¹⁸¹³

- J. Willemse was Tsafendas’s landlord for one month in 1965. He characterised him as a “sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man.”¹⁸¹⁴
- In 1972, Alexander Moumbaris spent three months in the cell next to Tsafendas in Pretoria Prison. They spoke every day for an hour when they exercised together in the prison yard. Moumbaris laughed when the author told him of Dr. Cooper’s comment [that Tsafendas was unable to function on a reasonable level]. He said:

“It’s not true. Tsafendas was highly intelligent and lucid. He was very able and determined, if he wanted to do something, he would do it... The fact that he managed to survive the prison and remain sane after all he went through also shows you how capable and how strong he was.”

Moumbaris also told the author that he found Tsafendas to be “perfectly normal, a very intelligent, witty, serious and knowledgeable person.”¹⁸¹⁵

- Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott’s boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest. He, too, disagrees with Dr. Cooper’s diagnosis. “Dimitri was not mad, not even a little. He was an exceptional man, very clever too.”¹⁸¹⁶
- Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos was Tsafendas’s landlady for three weeks in 1966. She testified to the police that she “considered him to be a completely normal person.”¹⁸¹⁷
- Andreas Babiolakis lived with Tsafendas in the same house in Beira for two or three months and knew him since they were children. As for Tsafendas being mad, he told the author:

“If he was mad, then the whole world must be mad. He was not even the slightest disturbed. Every single Greek in Mozambique discussed Dimitri after we heard about the tapeworm; not even one from those who had met him believed that he was mad. He was not; we all said the same thing. He made it up, as he did with the Saint Peter act. If someone believes that he was mad, he did not meet him Dimitri, but someone else.

¹⁸¹³ Richard Poggenpoel statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁸¹⁴ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), ‘Assassin - Man With A Chip On His Shoulder’, 11 September 1966: 1, 8.

¹⁸¹⁵ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017.

¹⁸¹⁶ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

¹⁸¹⁷ Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Dimitris was ahead of his time. Everything he was saying about Africa and Mozambique was correct and have happened. He was telling us [the Greeks], including me, to take our money and leave as long as there was time, because sooner or later the Portuguese would be kicked out and everything we had ‘stolen’ from the Mozambicans would be returned to them. We should have heard him, but none of us did and I told you what happened ... he was a good and bright man. The things he was saying at the time seemed wrong and maybe stupid, but we couldn’t see beyond our noses.”¹⁸¹⁸

- Nick Papadakis also lived with Tsafendas in the same flat for two months in Beira and Gondola. He told the author: “I never believed, not even after I read what happened in the trial, that he was insane. He played the fool and they believed him. It’s impossible that he was insane, he was absolutely fine and very clever.”¹⁸¹⁹
- Eleni Vlachopoulos, Tsafendas’s stepsister, testified to the Commission that Tsafendas was “definitely not insane.”¹⁸²⁰
- Evangelia Nissiotis, Tsafendas’s stepsister, testified to the Commission that Tsafendas was “definitely not insane.”¹⁸²¹
- Irene Michaletos was visited frequently by Tsafendas in her house in Beira for several months between 1964 and 1965. He even spent the night there several times. She never noticed anything wrong with him and was sure that he was perfectly sane. She flatly denied to the author the suggestion that Tsafendas was unable to function on a reasonable level.¹⁸²²
- In 1951 and between 1963 and 1965, Tsafendas slept for several nights in the house of his aunt Artemis Michaletos in Lourenço Marques. Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas’s cousins and Artemis’s sons, who also lived at the same house at the time, spent several hours talking to him. They both strongly denied to the author that Tsafendas was unable to function at a reasonable level. They both consider him to be “a very intelligent and capable person.” Furthermore, they told the author that their mother who had brought Tsafendas up in Egypt and lived in Lourenço Marques while he was growing ¹⁸¹⁸ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

¹⁸¹⁹ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

¹⁸²⁰ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

¹⁸²¹ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

¹⁸²² Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

up there, always maintained that he was “perfectly sane and very intelligent.” John Michaletos also told the author that he and his mother used to tell Tsafendas that “he should be a politician or a lawyer,” on account of cleverness and excellent fluency in talking.¹⁸²³ It is difficult to believe that Artemis and John Michaletos would have envisaged Tsafendas as a successful politician or lawyer if he was unable to function on a reasonable level. Artemis had known him since he was two and a half years old and watched him learn and grow through infancy. It is difficult to believe that Artemis and John Michaletos would have envisaged Tsafendas as a successful politician or lawyer if he talking in a disjointed manner. Artemis had known him since he was two and a half years old and watched him learn and grow through infancy. John Michaletos also smiled and shook his head in disbelief at Dr. Cooper’s statement on which he refused to comment because he found it absurd; he believes that what he already told the author about Tsafendas was enough to demonstrate how wrong Dr. Cooper’s diagnosis was.¹⁸²⁴

- Stelios Marangos was Tsafendas’s landlord in Beira for six weeks. He did not mention anything to the police about Tsafendas being “unstable” or strange.¹⁸²⁵

In addition to the above testimonies, the author asked fifty-eight people who knew Tsafendas and none of them believed that Tsafendas was unable to function on a reasonable level. The statements of those who knew him better are listed in the Tapeworm section.

Furthermore, Tsafendas was a frequent babysitter for the sons of his half-sister Elena Vlachopoulos, who were seven and five-years old, and for the three-year-old son of his sister-in-law Fotini Gavasiadis in Pretoria, as well as for the four-year-old daughter of his friend Patrick O’Ryan in Cape Town.¹⁸²⁶ It is unthinkable that parents would trust a person to look after their children if they thought there was something wrong with him or that he was unable to function on a reasonable level.

Furthermore, Tsafendas’s “activities” while in prison after the assassination is further proof of his ability to function and adjust to any given circumstances. While imprisoned on Robben Island and later in Pretoria Central Prison, he spent most of his time in solitary confinement, separated from other prisoners and without access to books, newspapers, radio ¹⁸²³ John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

¹⁸²⁴ John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

¹⁸²⁵ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

¹⁸²⁶ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015; Michael Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

or magazines. After a few years in Pretoria Central Prison he was allowed to read the Bible and a little later he was allowed to read dictionaries, but nothing else. In both prisons, even the warders were not allowed to talk to him. He was in complete isolation. Sometimes he spent several days without being allowed to come out of his cell. In order to fill his time and to not go crazy (as he said), resourceful as ever, he found ways of passing the time and having something to do. Since he had no one to talk to and nothing to do Tsafendas developed a programme of mind activities to do while in the cell; partly to fill his time, but mostly, as he specifically said, to keep his mind active and sharp. He had loved music since he was a child, and there had not been many days when he had not listened to it. Since he was now not allowed access to a radio, Tsafendas started signing inside himself (in his mind and with the back of his mouth, but not out loud) revolutionary songs, such as the Song of Freedom and Bella Ciao. He believed that the lyrics of the songs gave him strength, but it was also a form of entertainment for him.¹⁸²⁷

Tsafendas believed that in order to keep his mind active and sharp, he had to be creative. Throughout his time in jail, he had created a “reading hour” and a “writing hour” for each day, in which he would read in his mind some of his favourite books and try to recreate them with pictures in his mind, or else create a completely new story. He told Father Minas that it was like watching a movie in his mind. Generally, he tried to sleep as much as possible, so he could dream.¹⁸²⁸

Tsafendas said that he was trying to keep his mind constantly busy and thought that the best way of doing it, also because it was helping to beat the boredom, was to create stories. He claimed that he had created thousands of stories in this fashion. He stopped this technique as soon as he was transferred to the Sterkfontein hospital where he had access to newspapers, radio, books and even TV. On other occasions, while he was trying to sleep, he would think of a historical event, for example the Storming of the Bastille, and imagine how it must have happened; how it must have been, how the events had unfolded as he knew them, based on what he had read.¹⁸²⁹

Furthermore, in order to keep his mind sharp and active, he even came up with mathematical problems. He would quickly come up with large and complicated numbers, usually dividing them and multiplying them with other large numbers. For example, 2.764

¹⁸²⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁸²⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁸²⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

times 23 divided by 8 and things like that. Tsafendas enjoyed this enormously and created each day a “mathematical hour” in which he attempted to solve mathematical problems like this. Books, fictional stories and mathematical problems were not the only things in his mind. He also dreamt of his life outside the prison once he was released. He hoped that one day he would be released. He was dreaming of another life in Cuba or in a democratic South Africa or Mozambique.¹⁸³⁰

Sleeping was Tsafendas’s favourite activity in prison. He went to sleep, hoping that he would have a pleasant dream. It was during his time in prison that he first started sleeping in the afternoons. Before this, he had generally believed that sleeping was a waste of time and had tried to sleep as little as possible: just enough to give him strength. Usually he slept for six hours every day and eight on Sundays. However, in prison, he slept much more than that. He was desperate to dream and carry himself outside of the prison, and he believed that by making up stories in his mind and revisiting books he had read, he was helping himself to dream better.¹⁸³¹

Finally, the Commission of Enquiry questioned all of Tsafendas’s closest family, including his step-mother, Marika, two of his three half-sisters, his half-brother, his two brothers-in-law and his sister-in-law. Every one of them told the Commission that Tsafendas “was definitely not insane.”¹⁸³² Furthermore, the Commission of Enquiry reported that persons who knew Tsafendas and his family in Pretoria considered him to be “eccentric, but did not think he was mentally disordered.”¹⁸³³

According to Professor Burke it would have been impossible for these people, especially those who lived with him under the same roof, not to notice if Tsafendas was mentally unstable. It would not have been possible for Tsafendas to hide his schizophrenia for so long from so many. He said:

“If Tsafendas’s functioning was so impaired, someone would have noticed - all these years and all these people. How would people not have picked this up? His employers, his family members, whatever? Schizophrenia is blatant, you can see it, and there would have been times that he would have been overtly, observably, psychotic, and if you know psychotic people, you see it. Schizophrenic patients, typically, do not look after themselves;

¹⁸³⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁸³¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁸³² COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

¹⁸³³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 6.

they would not bath, they would not shave, they would act in strange ways, you would see that they are hallucinating, so there would be some very clear indicators that there is something wrong with them, in any kind of environment. His family would have picked it up, his employers would have picked it up; those people would have picked it up.

The other thing that we have to question is how he could plan his behaviour and his trips, so perfectly? What you typically find with schizophrenic patients, is they become homeless people, so they can't find a job, or whatever the case may be, so, in his case, he was very rational and planning in what he did. I mean, if the story about the hospital in England is true (about visiting the Isle of Wight and immediately admitting himself to the hospital), that requires a lot of planning: 'I'm going to go there, and I'm going to stay in the hospital, and I'm going to go ...' that, typically doesn't happen. You would see paranoid schizophrenic patients as homeless people, because they drop out of society, they can't think, they can't plan, they can't really care for themselves, and that's the giveaway. So, your first indication of schizophrenia is to what extent personal hygiene is intact, to what extent the person can function properly, because if you have schizophrenia, you can't do any of those things.”¹⁸³⁴

A man who was able to find a job wherever he wanted in almost every country he went to can clearly function on a reasonable level. In addition, Tsafendas was able to plan and find a solution to his financial problem when he was stuck in Istanbul without money. He sold his blood at a hospital in order to earn some money.¹⁸³⁵ Finally, two examples of Tsafendas's powers of observation and his supposed “inability” to function on a reasonable level:

In August 1976, the British Sunday newspaper The Observer published a story which claimed that Tsafendas was a broken, old man, who was being ill-treated by the warders in Pretoria Maximum Security Central Prison. General H.J. van den Bergh, the head of BOSS, the South African intelligence agency, sent Gordon Winter, a journalist employed by the government newspaper *The Citizen*¹⁸³⁶ and an undercover agent for BOSS, to do a story ¹⁸³⁴ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016.

¹⁸³⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁸³⁶ The Citizen was a government-funded English-language newspaper, launched in 1976. It was a pro-apartheid propaganda sheet designed to counter the liberal political position of the long-established Rand Daily Mail and to positively promote apartheid (Hachten and Giffard, The Press and Apartheid: Repression and Propaganda in South Africa, p. 250-251, 275; Sanders, Apartheid's Friends: The Rise and Fall of South Africa's Secret Service, p. 99).

refuting these claims.¹⁸³⁷

Winter visited Tsafendas accompanied by General Jannie Roux, the Deputy Commissioner of Prisons and by Brigadier Gerrie Visser, the Commanding Officer of the Pretoria prison. Speaking in front of the prison officials, Tsafendas denied being ill-treated. However, when Winter found himself alone with Tsafendas for a few minutes, he whispered to him, “Of course, you must have been ill-treated at some time, haven’t you?” Tsafendas turned to him and said coolly, “You are obviously here to do a denial story for the new government newspaper The Citizen, so what’s that question supposed to mean?” Winter was stunned. Tsafendas had not only deduced that Winter’s instructions were to produce a denial of The Observer story, but he had realised that The Citizen, which had only recently been launched, was the government’s mouthpiece. Winter then said, “I can’t write a completely one-sided story saying what a bed of roses you have in jail. I’ve got to put a few small niggles in to make it look credible.” Tsafendas got the point and a little later, when Roux and Visser returned, Winter asked him if he had any complaints. Taking his cue, Tsafendas smiled at Brigadier Visser, “Yes,” he said, “there was one warder who was always abusive and tormented me. One day when he pretended to spit in my tray of food I complained to the Brigadier. And you reprimanded him severely, didn’t you sir?” Visser was caught off guard by Tsafendas and, flustered, agreed that he had done so. Winter said later that Tsafendas was not just sane, but “a highly intelligent man, seriously highly intelligent, remarkably astute, charming and even witty.”¹⁸³⁸

¹⁸³⁷ Gordon Winter in A Question of Madness; Winter, Inside BOSS: South Africa’s Secret Police, p. 477-479.

¹⁸³⁸ Gordon Winter in A Question of Madness; Winter, Inside BOSS: South Africa’s Secret Police, p. 477-479.

The first time Father Minas Constandinou visited him in prison, their guard was walking nervously up and down. Tsafendas said he was trying to decide if the guard was getting a divorce or if his wife was just untidy. When the priest asked what he meant, Tsafendas pointed out that the guard was wearing a wedding ring, proof that he was married. His shoes were always shined but often his uniform was not ironed. While it was easy for a man to clean his shoes, Tsafendas said, many men could not iron their clothes. This suggested to him that either his wife was incompetent or lax in domestic affairs or they were not living together.¹⁸³⁹

The very next defence witnesses, next day, Dr. Muller, would contradict Dr. Cooper's testimony. Dr. Muller, although not a psychiatrist, would find Tsafendas "not particularly disturbed", "intelligent and able to understand what was said to him", with "no difficulty at all in expressing himself" and with no problem communicating and answering his questions.¹⁸⁴⁰

Professors Alban Burke, Phillip Resnick, Robert L. Sadoff and Tuviah Zabow believe that it is extremely unlikely, and very close to impossible, that none of the people who knew Tsafendas, some extremely well, ever noticed that he was unable to function on a reasonable level.¹⁸⁴¹ Reyner van Zyl, who examined Tsafendas for the defence, told the author that it was "highly improbable."¹⁸⁴²

TSAFENDAS NOT BEING LAZY

The Court attempted to claim that Tsafendas was probably lazy, but Dr. Cooper dismissed this suggestion. He said Tsafendas "did not fall into that category" and that it was the tapeworm perception which caused Tsafendas to lose all these jobs. What is surprising here is that the police and the Attorney-General were in possession of evidence supporting the argument that Tsafendas was indeed lazy, which was why he had lost several jobs, but none of this evidence was used. The following facts and statements were available:

- On June 12, 1942, the Deputy Commissioner of Witwatersrand Division of the South African Police, informed the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs that ¹⁸³⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁸⁴⁰ Dr. Hendrik Muller testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹⁸⁴¹ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016; Professor Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 17 December 2016; Professor Robert L. Sadoff in a personal interview with the author, 12 August 2015; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 10 October 2016.

¹⁸⁴² Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 17 April 2016.

when working for the British Mining Supply Company, Tsafendas “was discharged from his employment on account of irregular attendance and loafing.”¹⁸⁴³

- Keith Martincich told the police that Tsafendas “appeared to be one of the laziest persons that I have ever seen ... He was definitely lazy.”¹⁸⁴⁴
- Ralph Lighton told the police: “I got to know that he was lazy and inefficient.”¹⁸⁴⁵
- Jacobus Bornman told the police: “I believed that he was a lazy person.”¹⁸⁴⁶
- Charles Nissiotis told the police: “I asked him to assist my wife in the cafe we owned at that time. He was however so lazy that my wife told him to leave within the first two days.”¹⁸⁴⁷
- Hendrik Johannes van Loggenberg: “the accused was work-shy for hard work.”¹⁸⁴⁸
- Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos He: “he gave me the impression that he is work-shy.”¹⁸⁴⁹
- Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen, Tsafendas’s tram instructor, testified to the police that he was “slow” and “lazy.”¹⁸⁵⁰
- According to a PIDE report given to the South African police, in 1962 Tsafendas was dismissed for being lazy while working as a welder on a bridge over the river Tejo in Lisbon.¹⁸⁵¹

Because none of this bountiful available evidence was led, Dr. Cooper’s misdiagnosis prevailed. What is certain is that his diagnosis would have been entirely different had he been aware of such information. Tsafendas himself admitted to many witnesses that he was lazy.

¹⁸⁴³ Confidential Letter of the Lieutenant for the Deputy Commissioner of Witwatersrand Division to the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs. 12 June 1942. K150, Vol. 3, File: W.D. 10/10/4102. Subject: Enquiry regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis. NASA.

¹⁸⁴⁴ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁸⁴⁵ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁸⁴⁶ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁸⁴⁷ Charles Nissiotis statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁸⁴⁸ Hendrik Johannes van Loggenberg statement to the police, 8 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁸⁴⁹ Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁸⁵⁰ Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁸⁵¹ Confidential PIDE report regarding Dimitro Tsafendas, 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

He said that he would work only hard enough to make ends meet and only when absolutely necessary.

His half-sister Katerina Pnefma described him to the author as being “bone-lazy.” She said: “If you told him to come and help clean the house, he would tell you, ‘I can’t be bothered.’ But if you told him, ‘Let’s go to clean the place where a political meeting was going to take place or to distribute political leaflets,’ he would have come immediately.”¹⁸⁵² Andreas Babiolakis stated to the author that Tsafendas “was one of the laziest persons I have ever seen. You could tell from the way he was walking he was lazy; he was so slow.”¹⁸⁵³ Generally, he found work boring, except when he liked the job. He said his favourite job was that of a teacher, and said that he could even do it for free, which was one reason why he taught children voluntarily in Mozambique and in Istanbul.

Although Tsafendas’s tendency was to indolence, he would often work without pay when he wanted to help people. He taught the children freely in Turkey and Mozambique because he thought it was important for them to learn. He helped an elderly Indian man in Beira to build an additional room to his house for his daughter’s wedding, joining in the physical labour.¹⁸⁵⁴ He helped the sister of his brother in law in her café in Pretoria. The volunteering jobs, were probably unknown to the State, but his teaching stint in Istanbul and the one with F.A. Poole must have been known and could have been used against the argument that Tsafendas was unable to hold a job, and only simple and menial ones at that - unless the Attorney-General considered college-level teaching to be simple and menial.

During Dr. Cooper’s testimony, he refers to something Tsafendas told him, adding “if his story is correct.” However he does not check if it is correct when it would have been relatively easy to do so. In fairness, much of the evidence for Tsafendas’s laziness would have been unknown to Dr. Cooper. As for the Attorney-General, once again, the author is not in position to know whether he was given all relevant information or chose not to use it.

There is further evidence which contradicts Dr. Cooper’s conclusion regarding Tsafendas’s employment record and activities. This will be considered in relation to Dr. Kossew as some of it is more relevant to his testimony.

¹⁸⁵² Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁵³ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

¹⁸⁵⁴ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

TSAFENDAS'S RELATIONSHIPS

DR. COOPER: In this type of mental illness, the individual tends to be rather isolated from his surroundings in the sense that he tends to not make any close friends, not maintain any close friendships - he does not really concern himself terribly with any intimate relationship and is in fact quite unable to form and maintain any intimate relationships. He tends to be rather untidy, neglectful of his appearance; he tends to have difficulties in concentrating and applying himself consistently; he tends in fact to be a daydreamer, preoccupied with his own inner thoughts which are not in fact directly related to the environment around him; and he quite often tends to lead an aimless, almost vagrant, useless sort of life, with very little go, very little ambition, very little achievement, very little worthwhile.”

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S RELATIONSHIPS

a. “In this type of mental illness the individual tends to be rather isolated from his surroundings in the sense that he tends to not make any close friends, not maintain any close friendships - he does not really concern himself terribly with any intimate relationship and is in fact quite unable to form and maintain any intimate relationships.”

To relate this condition to Tsafendas and claim that he was “isolated from his surroundings,” unable to form an intimate relationship and that he did not maintain any close friendship is entirely inaccurate. Tsafendas had two very good childhood friends and kept in touch with them all his life.

The first was Manuel, who he knew as a small boy when they played together. After leaving Mozambique, Tsafendas kept in touch with Manuel, corresponding regularly and often sending him gifts from wherever he was in the world at that time. In 1951, when Tsafendas was denied entry in Lourenço Marques, he took refuge in Manuel's house, and when he returned to the city in 1963, they were together almost every day. He also spent a few evenings in Manuel's house. He stayed in touch with Manuel up until his arrest for Verwoerd's assassination.¹⁸⁵⁵

Another childhood friend was John Michaletos,¹⁸⁵⁶ who corresponded with Tsafendas even while he was in jail; in 1947 he recruited Tsafendas to the Greek Communist Party and ¹⁸⁵⁵ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁵⁶ Again we do not know whether it is the doctor or the professor.

its military wing the DSE, and Tsafendas spent Christmas with him in 1961. The two were together consistently from 1926 to 1941 and from 1947 to 1949.¹⁸⁵⁷

Another friend from school days was George Grispos, who also kept in touch over the years; Tsafendas visited him in Umtali in 1963.¹⁸⁵⁸ Another friendship which endured over the years was between Tsafendas and Ira Kyriakakis¹⁸⁵⁹ and he was also very friendly with Irene Michaletos, daughter-in-law of his aunt Artemis Michaletos.¹⁸⁶⁰

Tsafendas's best friend was Patrick O'Ryan. Tsafendas lived in his house for five months and then visited him at his home at least once every ten days. He rated him the best person he ever met. Patrick O'Ryan testified openly that he thought very highly of Tsafendas.¹⁸⁶¹ When he died, O'Ryan travelled from Cape Town to Sterkfontein for his funeral.¹⁸⁶²

Father Nikola Banovic who lived with Tsafendas for four to five months in Istanbul in 1961 also formed a strong relationship with Tsafendas and they kept in touch until Tsafendas was imprisoned. Tsafendas formed a strong bond with Limasollu Naci, the language college owner in Istanbul who hired him to teach English.¹⁸⁶³ Tsafendas also had a very warm friendship with Fotini Gavasiadis, the sister of Nikos Vlachopoulos, his brother in law. Fotini invited Tsafendas to be a guest in the house where she lived with her husband and small son in Pretoria in 1963. After a few weeks, he moved into an apartment next door where he stayed for the following eight months. During this period, he spent much of his time back in her house, almost like flatmates. Throughout these nine months, Tsafendas and Gavasiadis also worked together in her brother's café. Fotini got to know Tsafendas very well and ranked among his closest friends.¹⁸⁶⁴ Finally, he also had a very good friendship with Helen Kavadias-Grispos, Giorgos Grispos's wife, another he had known since they were children.¹⁸⁶⁵

The above were all "close friendships." When it came to "intimate relationships," ¹⁸⁵⁷ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁵⁸ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

¹⁸⁵⁹ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

¹⁸⁶⁰ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

¹⁸⁶¹ Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA; Patrick O' Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

¹⁸⁶² South African Press Association, 'Small Group Gather for Tsafendas' Funeral', 9 October 1999.

¹⁸⁶³ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

¹⁸⁶⁴ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

¹⁸⁶⁵ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

Tsafendas was keen to marry and raise a family, as was testified Helen Daniels,¹⁸⁶⁶ Caroline Barbeau¹⁸⁶⁷ and Tsafendas himself.¹⁸⁶⁸ Tsafendas, Helen Daniels and Caroline Barbeau¹⁸⁶⁹ told the police that he wanted to be reclassified as Coloured in order to marry Helen Daniels. Tsafendas also had a special interest in Sybie Barendilla.¹⁸⁷⁰

It is impossible to know specifics of the love life of a peripatetic person such as Tsafendas, but as an adult, he certainly had at least two long and serious relationships. They were both in the 1950s; with a German woman while he lived in Germany which lasted for at least two years, and with a Portuguese woman while he lived in Lisbon which lasted at least a year. In addition, Tsafendas also had a relationship with a Turkish woman in Istanbul which lasted a few months but ended because neither was willing to accept the other's religion in order to marry, and with a Greek woman in Athens in the late 1940s. In his younger years, he had another two relationships of at least a year each with Stella, a Mozambican woman around 1936-1939, and a Jewish woman in South Africa for a year around 1940.¹⁸⁷¹ Jacobus Bornman, Tsafendas's flatmate for two months told the police, "As far as I know, Tsafendas loves women, he talked a lot about women and I believed that he attended church services so often to make contact with the woman he met there."¹⁸⁷²

Dr. Cooper characterised the Tsafendas type as "isolated... a day-dreamer preoccupied with his own inner thoughts." While two witnesses out of around two hundred who testified to the police and to the Commission that Tsafendas "did not mix freely and kept to himself most of the time",¹⁸⁷³ and that he was "not very talkative,"¹⁸⁷⁴ the vast majority declared the opposite.

¹⁸⁶⁶ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

¹⁸⁶⁷ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁸⁶⁸ Demitrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁸⁶⁹ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁸⁷⁰ Sybie Barendilla statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁸⁷¹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; van Woerden, A Mouthful of Glass, p. 139.

¹⁸⁷² Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁸⁷³ Charles Edwin Woods statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁸⁷⁴ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

- William Mare Volbrecht, a friend and schoolmate at the English Medium Primary School in Middleburg, testified to the police that Tsafendas was “never a loner and freely mingled with us.”¹⁸⁷⁵ Tsafendas’s half-sister, Katerina Pnefma, his first cousin who grew up with him in Egypt and Lourenço Marques, and Ira Kyriakakis, Helen Grispos and Andreas Babiolakis, who also grew up with him, said that from childhood Tsafendas was sociable, friendly and very talkative.¹⁸⁷⁶
- Johannes Aurets, Tsafendas’s supervisor at the South African Railways, told the police Tsafendas “was a well-mannered and well-spoken person. He associated with those working with him. He was soft-spoken and appeared to be of a good nature. During the time he was employed under my supervision, i.e. for approximately three weeks, I did not see him being cross at any time.”¹⁸⁷⁷
- An unnamed “respected member of the Press gallery” in the House of Assembly “who knew Tsafendas well” spoke to René MacColl, Daily Express’s chief foreign correspondent, about Tsafendas. He said that “far from being a withdrawn sort of man, he seemed to be intent on impressing his personality on one. There was always the big smile, the ready chat and an almost obsessive intention to make you remember him. There couldn’t have been a less grey or faceless figure.”¹⁸⁷⁸
- J. Willemse was Tsafendas’s landlord for one month in 1965. He characterised him as a “sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man.”¹⁸⁷⁹
- Keith Martincich who worked with him at the Marine Diamond Corporation testified that Tsafendas “spoke to me every day and I got the impression that he was sociable type.”¹⁸⁸⁰
- Hulse, who worked with him at the Marine Diamond Corporation for nine or ten weeks said “Tsafendas was very talkative and always expressed his...”¹⁸⁸¹
- Ian Boswell of the Department of Labour, in his description of Tsafendas, included the ¹⁸⁷⁵ William Mare Volbrecht statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Verklaring deur Majdor Venter. NASA.

¹⁸⁷⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁷⁷ Johannes Jaconus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁸⁷⁸ Daily Express, ‘Was It Murder Incorporated?’, 9 September 1966: 2.

¹⁸⁷⁹ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), ‘Assassin - Man With A Chip On His Shoulder’, 11 September 1966: 1, 8.

¹⁸⁸⁰ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁸⁸¹ Hulse statement to the police, 28 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; The edge of the document was not copied, so the word is missing.

phrase, “aside from being over talkative ...”¹⁸⁸²

- Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys, another employment officer at the Department of Labour, testified that “he was very talkative.”¹⁸⁸³
- Owen Smorenberg, who worked with him for five-six weeks, testified that “Tsafendas was very talkative and gave the impression that he was very friendly. He wanted to talk to everybody and it became known to me that he was able to speak different languages.”¹⁸⁸⁴
- Albert Vercueil, his boss at F.A. Poole Engineering for five months, found him to be a “very friendly, social and talkative person.”¹⁸⁸⁵
- Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden worked with Tsafendas for some three months at the Marine Diamond Corporation and testified that “he was friendly, outgoing, and was not aloof.”¹⁸⁸⁶
- Jacobus Bormman, his flatmate for two months, summed Tsafendas up as “a friendly and plausible person.”¹⁸⁸⁷
- Michaelis Augustides, Tsafendas’s employer for two months, found him to be “overly talkative and sociable.”¹⁸⁸⁸
- Mario Ferreira, who worked with him for six weeks at the Table Power Station, found him to be “very polite and easy-going ... I don’t think he struck up conversations, I think you basically had to talk to him.”¹⁸⁸⁹
- His colleagues in Frankfurt found Tsafendas to be “always smiling,” and characterized him as being “very kind”, “a nice guy” and a “good comrade.”¹⁸⁹⁰

¹⁸⁸² Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

¹⁸⁸³ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

¹⁸⁸⁴ Owen Smorenburg statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Leer W.D. 10/10/ 4102 oor Stafendas. NASA.

¹⁸⁸⁵ Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁸⁸⁶ Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden statement to the police, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁸⁸⁷ Jacobus Johannes Bormman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁸⁸⁸ Lambley, The Psychology of Apartheid, p. 241.

¹⁸⁸⁹ Mario Ferreira in a personal interview, 21 May 2019.

¹⁸⁹⁰ PIDE’s News Digest; Le Courrier d’Afrique, ‘Em Torno Do Assassinado do Primeiro Ministro Sulafricano; Versoes Contraditorias Circulam Sobre A Personalidade Do Assassino’, 9 September 1966: 1. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Daily Dispatch, ‘He Made A Good Impression’, 8 September 1966: 1;

- August Karel Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria. He found him to be “very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet. I never noticed anything abnormal about him, except that he had a strange look when I looked him straight in the eyes. He never gave me the impression that he was suffering from any mental disease.”¹⁸⁹¹
- Jose Lopez Baltazar a fireman in Beira, testified that “when Tsafendas was in the presence of Whites he said little or nothing, but was friendly and talkative with the Bantu. On one or two occasions Tsafendas, while talking with Bantu, stopped talking when he approached.”¹⁸⁹²
- Reginald Maile, shipguard on the Eleni, testified that Tsafendas was “on very friendly relations with the crew.”¹⁸⁹³
- Neville Judson worked with Tsafendas for two months and testified to the police that he had “a very friendly way of talking.”¹⁸⁹⁴ Judson later said that Tsafendas was “overly talkative and sociable.”¹⁸⁹⁵
- Jose Baltazar, a fireman in Beira, testified to the police that when Tsafendas “was in the presence of whites he said little or nothing, but was friendly and talkative with the Bantu.”¹⁸⁹⁶
- Panagiotis Peroglou who knew Tsafendas for about a year, testified to the police but his statements have gone missing, However, in a personal interview, he and his wife Pamela Abrahams, who had also met Tsafendas, characterised him as “very talkative, courteous and friendly.”¹⁸⁹⁷
- Peter Pappas said that Tsafendas often ate at his cafe and he found him pleasant. Pappas also stated that Tsafendas was friendly with white down-and-outs and when he had some Natal Witness, ‘Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...’, 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, ‘Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte’, 8 September 1966.

¹⁸⁹¹ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁸⁹² Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

¹⁸⁹³ Reginald Robert Maile statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

¹⁸⁹⁴ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

¹⁸⁹⁵ Lambley, The Psychology of Apartheid, p. 241.

¹⁸⁹⁶ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

¹⁸⁹⁷ Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

money he would give them a few cents.¹⁸⁹⁸

- Colleagues at Durban Magistrate's Court described him as the "chatty Greek."¹⁸⁹⁹

Perhaps, the most convincing proof that Tsafendas was not "rather isolated from his surroundings in the sense that he tends to not make any close friends, not maintain any close friendships - he does not really concern himself terribly with any intimate relationship," as Dr. Cooper suggested, comes from Guenter Haafe, doorman at the Frankfurt factory where Tsafendas worked for six weeks in 1958. Haafe was interviewed eight years later, shortly after the assassination, and vividly remembered the jovial greeting Tsafendas gave him every morning. "He was a jolly man, always smiling and friendly. He would almost always come into my locker (room) to say Hi. He was really one of the friendliest workers I have met and trust me, in my twelve years as a doorman I have seen thousands and thousands of faces coming in and out. This man was courteous, they do not make them like that anymore."¹⁹⁰⁰ Horst Hartmann, Tsafendas's chief on the Frankfurt job, said Tsafendas was "well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous ... a very pleasant man... he looked like a satisfied, successful businessman we liked him ... always laughing, a good worker."¹⁹⁰¹

As well as the witnesses questioned by the police, most of the seventy-five interviewed by the author characterised Tsafendas as very friendly, very sociable and very talkative. None agreed with Dr. Cooper's diagnosis. Their testimonies cannot be listed here for reasons of space, but the words of those reproduced above clearly prove Dr Cooper's diagnosis was wrong.¹⁹⁰² Again, none of the statements given to the police was used to challenge Dr. Cooper.

b. "He tends to be rather untidy, neglectful of his appearance."

Wholly or partly inaccurate is the reference to Tsafendas looking untidy and neglected. Four witnesses made statements to the police supporting Dr. Cooper's testimony:

¹⁸⁹⁸ Rand Daily Mail, 'Tsafendas: In the Eyes of A Friend', 14 September 1966.

¹⁸⁹⁹ O Primeiro de Janeiro, 'Algumas Versoes Sobre A Vida de Tsafendas', 8 September 1966.

¹⁹⁰⁰ The Daily News, 'Tsafendas Seen As 'Mystery Man'', 8 September 1966: 17; Natal Witness, 'Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...', 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 'Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte', 8 September 1966.

¹⁹⁰¹ Daily Dispatch, 'He Made A Good Impression', 8 September 1966: 1; Daily Express, 'The Assassin', 8 September 1966: 2; Natal Witness, 'Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...', 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 'Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte', 8 September 1966.

¹⁹⁰² If someone is not satisfied with the evidence presented here, the study can produce all the statements regarding this issue.

- Helen Daniels testified to the police that when she first saw Tsafendas his “clothes were dirty and neglected.” However, Tsafendas had just arrived in Cape Town from Durban after a twenty-four-hour journey by train but also hitch-hiking. Helen Daniels also testified that Tsafendas had with him a “large bundle of dirty laundry.” All this suggests is that Tsafendas had not been able to wash his clothes. This was confirmed by Merle Daniels, Helen’s sister-in-law, who testified that as soon as Tsafendas arrived, he gave her all his clothes to be washed and after that, his clothes were always clean.¹⁹⁰³
- Nickolas Nel, who had an argument with Tsafendas while they were working at F.A. Poole Engineering, testified that he “had a messy and dirty appearance.”¹⁹⁰⁴
- Landlady Wilhelmina de Vos testified that Tsafendas was “dirty.”¹⁹⁰⁵
- Gillian Claire Lieberman, personnel secretary with Marine Diamond Corporation, told the police that Tsafendas had “dirty, sloppy clothes.”¹⁹⁰⁶ But she had only seen Tsafendas at work, where dirty clothes were the norm.

However, the majority who talked to the police said Tsafendas’s appearance was neat and clean and that he was very well dressed:

- The report by Police Col. van Wyk, which contained interviews with people from Rhodesia and Mozambique, concluded that Tsafendas “was always neatly dressed.”¹⁹⁰⁷
- Violet Irene Manning was Tsafendas’s landlady for almost two months in 1965. She told the Commission of Enquiry, “It was a serviced room but I found him making his own bed. When he came to me, he was well-dressed, well-spoken and gave a good impression. From his general appearance he appeared to be a businessman. When he paid me, he had a bundle of notes and I took him to be a man of means.”¹⁹⁰⁸

¹⁹⁰³ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

¹⁹⁰⁴ Marle Daniels testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹⁹⁰⁵ Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁹⁰⁶ Gillian Claire Liebermann statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁹⁰⁷ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

¹⁹⁰⁸ Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

- Ian Boswell, an officer at the Department of Labour, testified that Tsafendas was “at all times neatly dressed and never gave the impression of being destitute.”¹⁹⁰⁹
- Gideon Cloete, an officer at the Department of Labour, testified that Tsafendas “was neatly dressed and had a clean appearance.”¹⁹¹⁰
- Jacobus Borman testified that “according to my observation, Tsafendas was a gentle person. He was neat in his person, but his eating habits were not up to scratch.”¹⁹¹¹
- Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys of the Department of Labour in Cape Town interviewed Tsafendas twice. He told the police that Tsafendas was “neatly dressed.”¹⁹¹²
- Redvers Quintin Wakfer, who worked with Tsafendas for six weeks at the Power Station in Cape Town, testified that Tsafendas was “neatly dressed.”¹⁹¹³
- Edward Furness testified that Tsafendas “was well-dressed and appeared to be wealthy.”¹⁹¹⁴
- Katerina Pnema, his half-sister, testified that Tsafendas “was well-dressed and gave a good appearance” although as far as she could see he had no visible means of support.¹⁹¹⁵ She later also stated that Tsafendas was always very well dressed and never saw him wearing dirty clothes except when he was coming back from work. “He was always well-dressed. I remember my poor mother often knitting something for him.” She also remembers Tsafendas being overly clean as a child, refusing to eat without washing his hands first. “When we were playing outside the house and someone had a chocolate or some bread, he would first go to the house, wash his hands and then he would eat it.”¹⁹¹⁶
- For two months in 1966 Tsafendas had his meals in Mary Scott’s boarding house. She told the police, “Whilst the accused had his meals with me, I found him to be very poorly

¹⁹⁰⁹ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

¹⁹¹⁰ Gideon Jacobus Cloete testimony at Tsafendas’s summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, NASA.

¹⁹¹¹ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁹¹² Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

¹⁹¹³ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA; Redvers Quintin Wakfer statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub File: 1/5, Subject Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

¹⁹¹⁴ Edward Furness statement to the police 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁹¹⁵ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

¹⁹¹⁶ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

mannered - so-much-so that I named him "Vark." His clothing however was clean and always tidy.¹⁹¹⁷

- Sidney Wiehand, one of the three senior messengers who interviewed Tsafendas for a job in Parliament, said that in order to be hired, one "must always be neat."¹⁹¹⁸ The fact that Tsafendas was appointed suggests that he met the dress criterion.

The author asked forty-six witnesses who knew Tsafendas well about the way he was dressed. Only two of them, Andreas Babiolakis and Costas Poriазis, said that they once saw Tsafendas looking neglected and wearing a torn shirt. However, that was on the day he was released from jail in Beira in February 1965. Having just spent several days in a prison cell, wearing the same clothes every day and being beaten up, he could hardly have appeared otherwise. Both witnesses said this was the only time they saw Tsafendas looking less than perfectly dressed.¹⁹¹⁹ None of the rest said Tsafendas was of a dirty or neglected appearance. Indeed, the vast majority remembered him as dressing well and looking like a gentleman. It is not possible to reproduce here more than a hundred statements that contradict Dr. Cooper's view. The following are only from those who knew Tsafendas well or saw him very often:

- Father Nikola Banovic, in 1961, lived in the same house as Tsafendas for four months and in a house next door for another two or three months. He saw Tsafendas virtually every day and says he was always a very clean person and well-dressed, wearing a different hat each day.¹⁹²⁰
- Allan O'Ryan lived with Tsafendas for five months and kept in touch for another year. He remembers Tsafendas being always "very well-dressed. Firstly, he always went out in a suit. He had a grey striped suit that he always wore. He was always very smart when he left the house. That I picked up – that he always looked very business-like. He was never casual about his dress. And his hair, though it was crinkly, it was neatly brushed. He was always well-dressed and he seemed to be going on business or going out for the day. And even the people in the street got to know him and greeted him as a man of... you know, as a distinguished gentleman, because of the way he dressed." However, O'Ryan also stated that Tsafendas had some messy habits. He said, "for example, sometimes, when he did ¹⁹¹⁷ Mary Kathleen Scott statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

¹⁹¹⁸ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

¹⁹¹⁹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Costas Poriазis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

¹⁹²⁰ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

bathe, the bathroom would be wet. The floor would be wet, the way he had splashed the water. And I remember my mum, she complained once or twice, you know, 'When Dimi has finished bathing, then I have to clean the floor of the bathroom.'"¹⁹²¹

- Fotini Gavasiadis invited Tsafendas to be a guest in the house where she lived with her husband and small son in Pretoria in 1963. After a few weeks, he moved into an apartment next door where he stayed for the following eight months. During this period, he spent much of his time back in her house, almost like flatmates. Throughout these nine months, Tsafendas and Gavasiadis also worked together in her brother's café. Fotini got to know Tsafendas very well and ranked among his closest friends, along with Patrick O'Ryan, Manuel and Father Nikola.

Gavasiadis told the author that it is "nonsense" to say Tsafendas was not well-dressed or dirty, that in fact he always very well dressed and clean. "Sometimes it took him longer than it took me to get ready, trying to find a more suitable hat or tie. He adored hats and ties. He never wore the same clothes for two days in a row and when it was hot he would even change twice per day. He adored hats and ties."¹⁹²²

- Reuben O'Ryan lived with Tsafendas in the same house for five months and kept in touch with him for another year. He said Tsafendas "was always very clean and well-dressed, apart from when he was coming home from work. That was the only time I saw him wearing dirty clothes. He always wore nice clothes and he always shaved."¹⁹²³
- Stanley O'Ryan lived with Tsafendas for five months at the same house and kept being in touch for another year. He remembers Tsafendas as "clean and well-dressed person."¹⁹²⁴
- Mary Eintracht, Tsafendas's first cousin, knew him since he was five years old and grew up with him in Mozambique. She spent a lot of time with him in Pretoria in 1964, when they occupied the same house for two or three months. She insists that Tsafendas was always well-dressed and clean. She was impressed by his suits and Tsafendas told her that most of them were bought in Europe. "He was always well-dressed, very often wearing a hat, and was a very clean person. He was very fussy with clean hands when he was a child, and I think he was also like this when he grew up, but I can't remember for ¹⁹²¹ Allan O' Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019.

¹⁹²² Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

¹⁹²³ Reuben O' Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

¹⁹²⁴ Stanley O' Ryan in a personal interview, 9 April 2015.

sure.”¹⁹²⁵

- Ira Kyriakakis, who grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques and remained a lifelong friend, described as “absolutely absurd” claims that Tsafendas was not well-dressed and clean. “He was always very well dressed; since he was a child. He looked like a gentleman. He used to wear hats he had bought from all over the world. He loved hats and he must have had tens of them. He came back to Lourenço Marques in the 1960s and brought me a hat for a present from Lisbon.”¹⁹²⁶
- Irene Michaletos was very close to Tsafendas between 1964 and 1965 and remembers him as always well dressed and clean.¹⁹²⁷
- Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas’s cousins, first met him in 1951 in Lourenço Marques and got to know him between 1963 and 1965 in Mozambique. They both remember Tsafendas being “always well dressed and clean.”¹⁹²⁸
- Andreas Babiolakis knew Tsafendas since they were children and had lived in the same house as him in Beira for about two-three months. He finds the thought that Tsafendas had a dirty and neglected appearance as “absurd.” He recalls that Tsafendas “had a shower every morning when he woke and in the evening when he returned from work. He believed that he sweated in the night, so he had one in the morning.” Apart from the day mentioned before, he never saw Tsafendas with dirty clothes.¹⁹²⁹
- Costas Chagios, a Cape Town café owner, got to know Tsafendas in 1965 when he walked into his restaurant, which thereafter he patronised more than fifty times. Chagios remembers Tsafendas as always well dressed and clean.¹⁹³⁰
- Alexandra Vaporidis knew Tsafendas for about six-seven months in Istanbul in 1961. She was impressed by his many hats and remembers people commenting about how neatly he dressed. “I remember him coming to the church always wearing a tie.”¹⁹³¹
- Joyce Dick, one of Helen Daniels’s best friends at the time, stated to the author that ¹⁹²⁵ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

¹⁹²⁶ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

¹⁹²⁷ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

¹⁹²⁸ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

¹⁹²⁹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

¹⁹³⁰ Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015.

¹⁹³¹ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

whenever she saw Tsafendas, “he was always very neatly dressed.”¹⁹³²

- Peter Protoulis was a supplier of foodstuffs to the tanker Eleni. He met Tsafendas on board and says, “I was very impressed by the way he was dressed. He always wore a suit and very often a tie and a hat. I never show him wearing the same clothes two days in a row.”¹⁹³³
- Mario Ferreira, who worked with him for six weeks in 1966, found Tsafendas to be “clean.” Asked whether Tsafendas’s appearance was neglected or dirty, Ferreira replied, “no, no; not all.”¹⁹³⁴
- Miltiades Kaldis knew Tsafendas for about a year, having met him in 1965 in Cape Town. He remembers him “looking clean and well-dressed.”¹⁹³⁵
- Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott’s boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest. He remembers Tsafendas as always well-dressed and clean, often wearing suits and hats.¹⁹³⁶
- Helen Grispos was another who grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques, and her mother was the best friend of Tsafendas’s step-mother. “He was always very well dressed, even as a child; his step-mother always looked after him. When he visited us in the 1960s, I remember he wore a big hat he said he had bought somewhere in Europe. I don’t remember what he was wearing, but I remember the hat. It was very distinctive. He was certainly well-dressed.”¹⁹³⁷
- Peter Peroglou ate at the same place as Tsafendas for several months in 1966. He remembers him being well-dressed and very courteous.¹⁹³⁸
- Pamela Abrahams, Peroglou’s wife, also ate at the same place as Tsafendas for several months in 1966. She also remembers him being well-dressed and very courteous.¹⁹³⁹
- Nick Augustides is the son of the owner of Mike’s Outfitters in Cape Town for whom Tsafendas worked on commission for about two months in 1966. He knew Tsafendas for ¹⁹³² Joyce Dick in a personal interview, 6 August 2016.

¹⁹³³ Peter Protoulis in a personal interview, 3 August 2016.

¹⁹³⁴ Mario Ferreira in a personal interview, 21 May 2019.

¹⁹³⁵ Miltiades Kaldis in a personal interview, 12 March 2016.

¹⁹³⁶ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

¹⁹³⁷ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

¹⁹³⁸ Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

¹⁹³⁹ Pamela Abrahams in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

three-four months and his memory is of “a well-dressed man.”¹⁹⁴⁰

- The thirteen Eleni crewmen were impressed with the way Tsafendas dressed. He told some of them that most of his suits were bought in Europe a few years ago and that he had not bought any new clothes since he returned to South Africa.¹⁹⁴¹

In addition, Horst Hartmann, senior personnel officer at the heavy engineering company Fries and Son in Frankfurt, where Tsafendas worked as a welder, said in a newspaper interview in 1966:

“He drove up here in a big, battered American car. He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman. I thought he was more likely to apply for an executive job than as a welder. Well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous, a very pleasant man...he made a good impression and he spoke good German, so I took him on... we liked him ... always laughing, a good worker.”

Tsafendas “left on his own wish” although Hartmann “would have liked to keep him.”¹⁹⁴²

A point worth making is that opinions on dress and appearance are subjective. A man who seems dirty and neglected to one person is simply dishevelled or workaday to another. It is important also to remember that Tsafendas was a poor man, often forced to stay in cheap places without laundering facilities. Plus, his jobs, as a welder or fitter, for instance, were not conducive to smart dressing. The most important point regarding Dr. Cooper’s statement, however, is not so much Tsafendas’s appearance as the fact that the Attorney-General did nothing to challenge Dr. Cooper’s deposition, despite witnesses’ testimony to the contrary. Again, we do not know if this happened because of van den Berg’s incompetence or because he was not given the necessary information. The result was that Dr. Cooper’s diagnosis, much of it inaccurate, went seriously unchallenged.

¹⁹⁴⁰ Nick Augustides in a personal interview, 19 February 2016.

¹⁹⁴¹ Kleanthis Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

¹⁹⁴² Daily Dispatch, ‘He Made A Good Impression’, 8 September 1966: 1; Daily Express, ‘The Assassin’, 8 September 1966: 2; Natal Witness, ‘Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...’, 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, ‘Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte’, 8 September 1966.

- c. “He tends in fact to be a daydreamer, preoccupied with his own inner thoughts, which are not in fact directly related to the environment around him; and he quite often tends to lead an aimless, almost vagrant, useless sort of life, with very little go, very little ambition, very little achievement, very little worthwhile.”

This third part of the psychiatrist's testimony is partly accurate. Tsafendas could be considered a daydreamer insofar as he dreamt that one day the people of South Africa would storm Parliament, as the French revolutionaries did at Versailles, and that apartheid would then collapse and everyone would be allowed to live altogether without any kind of separation. He also dreamt that Mozambique would become independent.¹⁹⁴³

As for an “aimless... useless sort of life,” Tsafendas taught English without charge for six months to Greek and Turkish children in Istanbul and did the same for poor children in Mozambique. He became an active member of the British anti-apartheid and anti-fascist movements, participated in demonstrations and smuggled anti-apartheid literature into South Africa. By standing up for his political beliefs, he was exiled for twelve years from Mozambique, while in Portugal he was prosecuted, arrested, imprisoned and tortured. He toured villages in Beira trying to raise awareness of the independence cause and for this suffered further imprisonment and torture.¹⁹⁴⁴ He joined the Greek Communist Party and its military wing, the DSE, during the Greek Civil War and fought for a cause was the achievement of an aim.¹⁹⁴⁵

However his political activities may be viewed by others, they cannot be considered “aimless” and representative of a “useless sort of life.” Many people go through life without really achieving anything or just live a simple life with very little “go” or “ambition.” Are they all schizophrenic? Tsafendas did enough during his lifetime to render significant service to society and far from being, aimless, he had well-defined goals that could never be described as “daydreaming.” He wanted “to create a resistance to the regime of South Africa” and was willing to do “anything that would get the South African regime out of power.”¹⁹⁴⁶

¹⁹⁴³ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

¹⁹⁴⁴ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

¹⁹⁴⁵ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

¹⁹⁴⁶ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

The removal of Dr. Verwoerd was aimed at a change of national policy.¹⁹⁴⁷

Tsafendas fearlessly told the PIDE agents who were questioning him that he wanted to see “a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the Mother-nation” and that he was strongly in favour of the independence of Mozambique.”¹⁹⁴⁸ The fact that the Director-General of PIDE in Portugal instructed the Sub-Director of PIDE in Mozambique that “information indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of your country should not be transmitted to the South African authorities,”¹⁹⁴⁹ can also be seen as an achievement for Tsafendas.

Tsafendas worked tirelessly and at a hands-on level to achieve his goals of independence for Mozambique and political change in South Africa. He toured villages in Beira conducting “subversive” propaganda, distributing leaflets and books and telling people of the possibilities of independence for Mozambique, his country, always seeking to raise their awareness. The fact that PIDE considered him to be “a partisan for the independence of Mozambique” and deliberately hid his detailed file from the South African authorities certainly proves that he was far from just a “daydreamer.”

As for South Africa, smuggling anti-apartheid literature into that country, asking visitors not to spend money there which would boost the apartheid economy and finally killing the man he believed had “created apartheid” and was “the brains behind apartheid,”¹⁹⁵⁰ hoping that it would bring a change of policy¹⁹⁵¹ were the actions of a practical man with practical aims, He was no dreamer.

¹⁹⁴⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁹⁴⁸ PIDE Record of questions, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

¹⁹⁴⁹ Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

¹⁹⁵⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

¹⁹⁵¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

TSAFENDAS'S MEDICAL REPORTS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Have you been shown a copy of a report from the University College, St. Pancras Hospital, London?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I don't want you to tell the Court what is in that report, but would you describe whether that report relates to the accused's state of mind, mental health?

DR. COOPER: It does relate to his state of mind, and in fact describes the state of mind.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Are the contents of that report relevant to the present enquiry?

DR. COOPER: I believe so, yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How important are they to the present enquiry?

DR. COOPER: Very important.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How important will it be for the Court to hear the evidence of the medical practitioners who in fact interviewed the accused and who wrote up these reports?

JUDGE BEYERS: When was that?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: 1959.

DR. COOPER: That would depend on the Court's attitude towards this matter. If the Court would require evidence in addition to what evidence has been presented now, to satisfy or to elaborate on the evidence, then it would be very important.

JUDGE BEYERS: It would be somebody else's opinion on the clinical examination which he held?

DR. COOPER: More than that. It would be somebody else's opinion and the fact that, if this other opinion was to the effect that this man was suffering from schizophrenia at that time, it would be very relevant to whether he is suffering from schizophrenia or not.

JUDGE BEYERS: That I follow. I will put it to you again: it will merely be some other person's opinion.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I don't know if it was a psychiatrist or what it was - on certain observations made by that person as to what his opinion is?

DR. COOPER: That is correct. Except - I would like to elaborate on that and explain that when a patient is admitted to a mental hospital, eventually a report may emerge which will almost always be signed by the superintendent, but very often it is in fact the opinion of the group of psychiatrists who have dealt with this particular individual. So it is the opinion of perhaps several people ... I am unable to say whether the individual who wrote this report actually was involved in the examination or not...

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Assume the investigators are alive and are able and willing, in London, to give evidence that this man was a paranoid, they diagnosed him to be a paranoid schizophrenic, that he did attribute everything to the tapeworm - assume that - how relevant, and how important would that be?

DR. COOPER: It would be important, very important, from many points of view. It would tend to certainly confirm one's present clinical impressions of the man, and I feel strongly it would obliterate finally and conclusively any question of simulation in this case, malingering.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You have also seen a report from the Whitecroft Hospital, Newport, Isle of Wight?

DR. COOPER: Yes, I have.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is your observation on that report?

DR. COOPER: The general observation is that again there is reference, extensive reference, to the tapeworm, and again there is a diagnosis of psychotic illness. I don't know whether I am permitted to read a line or not ...

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Don't read. There is reference, you say, to tapeworm, reference to a psychotic illness?

DR. COOPER: Yes. And there is reference to the fact that he has not recovered, on discharge.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Again, how important would it be if we are able to find the doctor who did examine the accused, who did make this diagnosis, and I am led to believe that he is available? How important is that, to have that evidence before this Court?

DR. COOPER: It is important. And I must point out that in this report the person who has signed the report said "I found this" and "I found that," so presumably he is reporting on his own findings.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In regard to the White Croft Hospital, there are in fact two doctors, not so, who have signed reports — it is actually a composite report?

DR. COOPER: I have not got the report here.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: We will deal with it at a later stage. Furthermore, you have seen a report from a German hospital near Hamburg?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Does that contain a diagnosis of the accused's mental condition in 1955?

DR. COOPER: Yes. That also refers to him as suffering from a psychotic illness.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Again there is reference to the tapeworm, and that the patient attributed everything to the tapeworm?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How important is that in your opinion?

DR. COOPER: That is very important.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Again, if we are able to get the evidence of the practitioner or practitioners who diagnosed the accused's condition at the time, would that be material evidence?

DR. COOPER: Yes, it would.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And further, you have seen the American report as well, haven't you?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What do they show?

DR. COOPER: There is a report from America in 1946 describing or, let us say, making a diagnosis of schizophrenia.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Again, would it be relevant and material to this enquiry, if possible, to obtain the evidence and have it before the Court?

DR. COOPER: Yes, it would.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I want you to give us your final assessment?

DR. COOPER: My final assessment of this man's mental condition is that he is suffering from a mental illness known as schizophrenia; that I feel I have good reason to believe that he has been suffering from this mental illness for probably at least twenty years, and that this mental illness is of such a degree as to make him certifiably mentally disordered in terms of the Mental Disorders Act.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S MEDICAL RECORDS

Advocate Cooper refers to a number of Tsafendas's medical reports which he has in his possession, and which obviously Dr. Cooper saw at one point since he refers to signatory doctors who might be asked to testify. Apparently the purpose of this exhibition of documents is to demonstrate to the court that Tsafendas had a long history of mental illnesses.

Tsafendas had given a detailed account of all the hospitals where he had been treated, including how he was diagnosed each time, in his statement to the police on September 19. However, he only revealed information about the occasions on which he was diagnosed as schizophrenic or psychotic, not the times when he was found to be perfectly healthy. He also hid the fact that he was caught faking mental illness in the United States and that he once claimed to be Saint Peter. That the South African authorities possessed at least some of these records is evident from the fact that some were found by the author in the National Archives of South Africa. Documents reveal that the South African authorities had the reports from the US hospitals from the 16th of September.¹⁹⁵² There are also references to them in the report of the Commission of Enquiry. However we cannot be sure if they were in the State's possession at the time of the summary trial.

Reyner van Zyl, the clinical psychologist who examined Tsafendas at the request of the defence, told the author that he never saw any of the medical reports from the hospitals where he was treated, as was the case with others who examined the prisoner. He said he was verbally informed by Tsafendas's defence lawyers that he had been diagnosed as schizophrenic in overseas hospitals and took it for granted. Asked by the author if he and the other psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas had read or seen any of these medical reports, van Zyl conceded that Tsafendas's alleged long medical history was only verbally transmitted to him and to some of the psychiatrists; they were not given any actual medical reports. He said:

¹⁹⁵² Letter of the USA Embassy in Cape Town to the South African Security Branch, 3 October 1966. Correctional Service. Subject: Demitrio Tsafendas. File: 80/0043 A123 Vol. 1. NASA.

“No, no, no, we were just told. We were told, or I was told – the group of guys that examined him – that he had been in various mental hospitals all over the world... Yes. Well, you know, we were given this information – that he was a disturbed, schizophrenic man ... And that was the background that we had available, and nothing else. The third part [the medical reports] was given to us almost in summary. He has been to this hospital, that hospital, that hospital... I think three or four were mentioned – various hospitals overseas.”¹⁹⁵³

Advocate Cooper's questioning of Dr. Cooper revealed one major issue that is extremely important for the summary trial. Advocate Cooper refers to a “report from America in 1946” where Tsafendas was diagnosed as schizophrenic. This is the report from the Grafton State Hospital and it is entirely true that the diagnosis for Tsafendas was “Schizophrenia – hebephrenic type. Condition: Improved.” However, this report also contains important information that is not mentioned. It states that in 1943, Tsafendas “faked mental illness because he was afraid to ship out because of the numerous leakings of ships.”¹⁹⁵⁴ It is understandable that neither Dr. Cooper nor advocate Cooper mentioned this as it had the potential to cause serious problems for their line of defence.

The author is not in position to know whether Dr. Cooper had actually read all of the Grafton report or if the diagnosis was just conveyed to him verbally, as was the case with his friend van Zyl. Certainly, the report was not available to Dr. Cooper at least during his first two consultations with Tsafendas, on October 1 and 4. Indeed, it was not available to anyone from the defence because on October 3, 1966, the Consul of the US Embassy in Cape Town wrote to the South African Security Branch that “Mr. Tsafandakis's legal representatives have asked permission to see the medical reports in question.” The letter also states that the US authorities discussed the matter and agreed to provide the defence with the files in question. However, they ask the “appropriate South African authorities” to give the reports to the defence representatives if “they deem it appropriate.”¹⁹⁵⁵

That this letter was written on October 3 suggests that it would have been highly ¹⁹⁵³ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

¹⁹⁵⁴ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁹⁵⁵ Letter of the USA Embassy in Cape Town to the South African Security Branch, 3 October 1966. Correctional Service. Subject: Demitrio Tsafendas. File: 80/0043 A123 Vol. 1. NASA.

unlikely for the “appropriate authorities” to have discussed the matter and given their permission the same or the following day. Since it was an official request, certainly a written response must have been made to the US Embassy. Even if it had arrived at the Embassy the next day, which would be highly unlikely, still the defence would not have had the records on the 4th as it would have certainly taken at least one day for them to receive them from the Embassy. This suggests the 5th as a more likely date, though that is a very optimistic scenario, given the bureaucracy involved and the fact that mail services at the time were not as fast as today.

If at any point Dr. Cooper had read the complete Grafton report, he would not have mentioned the fact that Tsafendas had faked mental illness in the past since such a claim would have raised serious questions about the defence case. Although it was understandable for the defence to conceal such information, is this not something that the State should have enquired about? The State must have had this report in its possession as it was given to the South African authorities on September 16.¹⁹⁵⁶ Yet the State did not find it important enough to mention it, assuming that it did have the report among its files. This was the first, but not the only, time that the State overlooked evidence, or was ignorant of evidence, which stated clearly that Tsafendas had faked mental illness in the past.

An equally important issue is the following: Advocate Cooper mentions four medical reports, one from Hamburg, one from the Isle of Wight, one from London and one from America, and states that all agree that Tsafendas is schizophrenic. He also states that the first three (Hamburg, Isle of Wight and London) refer to the tapeworm which Tsafendas blames for everything. Then Advocate Cooper mentions the report from America which also diagnoses Tsafendas as schizophrenic. However, he does not mention the tapeworm and says nothing else about the hospital's diagnostic report. This goes on to say that Tsafendas “is in the habit of smearing the walls in his room with faeces and is hallucinated and suspicious. He hears voices coming though the radiators. He is orientated as to the month but completely disorientated as to place and situation. He has peculiar mannerisms. He is wont to assume silly grimacing expressions and is prone to misidentify the attendants and the examiner.”¹⁹⁵⁷ This is very important information for a psychiatrist as it shows that Tsafendas, apart from believing that he has a tapeworm, also believed, at least at one point in his life, that he also ¹⁹⁵⁶ Letter of the USA Embassy in Cape Town to the South African Security Branch, 3 October 1966. Correctional Service. Subject: Demitrio Tsafendas. File: 80/0043 A123 Vol. 1. NASA.

¹⁹⁵⁷ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

heard voices from radiators. Dr. Cooper was asked by the Attorney-General in reference to the tapeworm:

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: That is the only delusion he had, isn't it, that you discovered? You didn't discover any other delusion?

DR. COOPER: No, but I found other aspects of his mental disorder which in my opinion are equally important to simply his being deluded.

This surely suggests that Tsafendas's delusions from 1946 were gone by 1966, or that Dr. Cooper had not read the Grafton report carefully or he had not seen it at all or that he ignored information which any psychiatrist would consider highly important. Again, the Attorney-General does not raise the issue of the "other delusion." According to Dr. Cooper, Tsafendas had the tapeworm since sometime in the mid-1930s, thus he still had it in 1946. However, the Grafton report suggests that Tsafendas was hearing voices from the radiators when he also had a tapeworm, meaning he had two delusions at the same time. How possible is it for someone to be doubly deluded?

The information about the radiators takes on extra importance because in 1965, Tsafendas had claimed to be suffering from a third delusion, that he was the Apostle Peter. This diagnosis was made after Tsafendas was arrested by the Portuguese Security Police in Beira accused of pretending to be a Christian missionary, while in reality he was preaching "under the guise of religion in favour of Mozambique's independence."¹⁹⁵⁸ During interrogation, Tsafendas had claimed to be Jesus Christ's Apostle Peter.¹⁹⁵⁹ Tsafendas used this act as it fitted nicely with his missionary pretext. Therefore, again Tsafendas had simultaneous delusions involving at any one time, the tapeworm, radiator voices and Saint Peter.

Then on June 26, 1966, just two months before the assassination, Tsafendas was examined by Dr. Kossew and appeared to have yet another delusional idea, this time of a persecutory nature. He claimed that more than twenty people had died from food poisoning in the house where he was staying.¹⁹⁶⁰ The author interviewed several people who knew Tsafendas at that time, including two of his flatmates and two others who took their meals

¹⁹⁵⁸ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

¹⁹⁵⁹ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

¹⁹⁶⁰ Dr. Ralph Kossew testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

there. Tsafendas never told them about this “suspicion,” but he continued eating there up to the assassination - for two months taking food he had told the doctor was poisonous!¹⁹⁶¹

According to Professor Burke:

“There are a lot of contradictions in the story ... let's assume he was schizophrenic, for the sake of this argument, and that in the past, he had the delusion of being one of the apostles, that delusion would have stayed. So why would he, then, have created a new delusion around a tapeworm? It does not make sense, because your delusion stays fixed, so if he really did believe he was one of the apostles, early on, that story would have stuck because the delusions will not have shifted. What happens with delusions is, they can become bigger and they could include more things, but a shift from one delusion to another one is highly unlikely. Why would you go from the apostle and that worked for you ... well, let's say he truly believed he was an apostle, why did that change as he went along? It makes no sense.

Even if the schizophrenia had been treated, and it came back, then the same delusion would have come back, so it's inconsistent in terms of the delusions. You typically have a very fixed delusion, and it becomes bigger, but it doesn't change significantly, so if he had been truly schizophrenic, and he had been admitted to these hospitals previously, based on what he said, that he believed he was an apostle, then he would have killed Dr. Verwoerd based on the delusion that he was an apostle. He wouldn't have changed to say there was a tapeworm, or whatever the case may be. So, there's, already, some kind of inconsistency.”¹⁹⁶²

The Grafton report contains another important piece of information which was not mentioned in court. It states that while in custody in Bangor, Maine¹⁹⁶³ on charges of contravening US immigration laws,¹⁹⁶⁴ Tsafendas “showed symptoms of mental disorder” and was admitted to the Boston Psychopathic Hospital, Massachusetts.¹⁹⁶⁵ This perhaps did not sound very important at the time, especially to the defence, but it was very important for the State. There was also, as we will see, a report from a hospital in Lisbon which stated the same thing, that Tsafendas, “during his interrogations, gave signs of having some sort of ¹⁹⁶¹ Pamela Abrahams and Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016; Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015; Stratis Vamvarapis in a personal interview, 31 May 2016.

¹⁹⁶² Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016.

¹⁹⁶³ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁹⁶⁴ Demitrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw, 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 2.

¹⁹⁶⁵ ‘The history of the person who inflicted the fatal wounds to the late Dr. Verwoerd’ drafted by Col. McIntyre, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Subject: Leer W.D. 10/10/4102 der Stafendas. NASA; Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

mental disability, which was confirmed by the Hospital do Ultramar.¹⁹⁶⁶

There was also a third report, from the Government Hospital in Beira, which is not in the possession of the author. This must have contained a similar statement about Tsafendas's behaviour, as he was taken there by the Portuguese police after he had claimed to be St Peter.

What makes these reports so important is the fact that Tsafendas had also shown signs of mental illness while in custody for Dr. Verwoerd's assassination, at least the fourth time that something like this happened. Significantly, no ordinary person testified to the police that Tsafendas was unstable or had mentioned the tapeworm to them. When he rambled about the tapeworm and appeared insane was invariably when he talked to the police in custody or to doctors in hospitals where he was taken by the police or to which he had admitted himself. Apart from those hospitals to which he was taken by police, all the others had admitted Tsafendas at his own request, indicating that Tsafendas had a reason of his own for seeking admission. The Grafton State Hospital report also states that Tsafendas voluntarily admitted himself to the Boston Psychiatric Hospital on March 1946 before he was transferred to the Grafton.¹⁹⁶⁷

The South African embassy in Washington informed the South African Ministry of Foreign Affairs on September 9, 1966, just three days after the assassination, that the US Immigration authorities had a file on Tsafendas which contained "full particulars" of his time in the United States. The embassy's letter stated that Tsafendas "is understood to have shown under psychiatric treatment that he was unstable though not (not)¹⁹⁶⁸ insane, but the type of man who would easily be used as an instrument of Communist or hostile organizations." It said the impression of American Immigration officials was that Tsafendas had been manipulated and was "under the influence of someone or some organization." He had subsequently been deported to Europe.¹⁹⁶⁹ This information was also not used during the summary trial and most likely was not given to the psychiatrists for consideration.

The Grafton State Hospital report stated that Tsafendas had a paternal uncle who was mentally ill and had died in a mental hospital. According to his close relatives Katerina Pnema, Michael Vlachopoulos, Mike Pnema, John Michaletos and Mary Eintracht, this is a ¹⁹⁶⁶ PIDE Report regarding Tsafendas, 5 May 1956. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

¹⁹⁶⁷ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁹⁶⁸ This is exactly how it appears in the telegram. There is a second 'not' within brackets.

¹⁹⁶⁹ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Washington to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

lie.¹⁹⁷⁰ The Commission of Enquiry pointed out that Tsafendas was knowledgeable about mental disorders and well-acquainted with hospital situations.¹⁹⁷¹

Presumably Tsafendas claimed there was mental illness in the family to strengthen his own claims. In fact he later said he knew that to appear convincingly mad, it was helpful to invent insanity in the family and suggest suffering a childhood trauma. That Tsafendas lied whenever it was convenient for him is also evident from the fact that on at least one other occasion when he was hospitalised, after an alleged suicide attempt, he stated that there was no history of mental illness in the family.¹⁹⁷² Whenever he needed to back up his claim that he was schizophrenic, Tsafendas referred to a history of mental illness in the family, an “uncle” who was mentally ill and had died in a mental hospital. However, when he was hospitalised for other reasons, he denied that there was a history of mental illness in the family.

Advocate Cooper also referred to a report from a hospital in Hamburg – clearly the Ochsenzoll Krankenhaus Hospital in whose psychiatric section Tsafendas stayed from February 11, until June 7, 1955. Tsafendas had admitted himself to the hospital claiming he had taken twenty sleeping pills. This was soon after he was discharged from the Tropen Krankenhaus in Hamburg, where he had admitted himself claiming to suffer from tapeworm trouble. However, nothing was found and he was discharged immediately.¹⁹⁷³ Advocate Cooper said the Hamburg hospital report referred to a “psychotic illness” and that Tsafendas attributed everything to the tapeworm. Both references are correct, but they tell only half of the story.

Advocate Cooper phrased his words carefully and in such a way as to reveal only what was helpful for the defence. There was no mention in the hospital’s report of schizophrenia as such, although Tsafendas did refer to the tapeworm. Furthermore, there were two concluding diagnoses made at this hospital: Dr. Bieser, a senior physician, labelled Tsafendas’s condition as “mixed – pictured phasic psychose,”¹⁹⁷⁴ and Dr. Nachtwey, a ¹⁹⁷⁰ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Mike Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Michael Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁹⁷¹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18.

¹⁹⁷² Medical Buletin of Dimitrio Tsafendas. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

¹⁹⁷³ Dr Bieser’s medical report on Tsafendas, Ochsenzoll Krankenhaus Hospital, 6 April 1955. K150. Vol. 4, Sub-file 1/8. NASA.

¹⁹⁷⁴ Dr. Bieser and Dr. Schmidt-Janssen report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 7 June 1955. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

psychiatrist, diagnosed “endogenous depression, mixed-picture.”¹⁹⁷⁵ Tsafendas's condition thus appears to be much less serious than that depicted. He was diagnosed as suffering from depression and so treated and not for schizophrenia. Naturally, Advocate Cooper took from the report only what was convenient for the defence's case.

Professor Tuviah Zabow told the author about Tsafendas's condition as it appeared in the hospital's records:

“He was admitted without escort from his residence suggests he came voluntarily to the hospital requesting admission and presented with depression and an account of an overdose suicidal attempt. The impression recorded initially and ultimately concluded as diagnosis was ‘depression with hypochondriacally features’ or psychosomatic symptoms. He spontaneously presented the ‘tapeworm’ story mentioning it as present since 1937 and continued to emphasise this at interviews in detail. Was this again the method he uses to gain admission? Supporting a mood disorder rather than a process psychosis such as schizophrenia is the record that his thought processes were normal but slower. This would be again in keeping with depression rather than schizophrenia. Schizophrenia would have been more representative of a syndrome i.e. presenting with a group and other symptoms as well such as disordered thought processes.

Notably if this had been present since 1937 or even since 1955 it would have been expected to have deteriorated in his general function. He recovered rather quickly and was treated with only two shock treatments and left with a sympathetic acquaintance who provided the care he again required or manipulated for. The diagnosis of ‘Endogenous Depression – mixed picture’ was referring to the old terminology of manic-depression but no clear note of hypomanic features are recorded. The ‘mixed picture’ label or the ‘phasic psychosis’ label also fits this suggested clinical picture and the recovery so rapid.”¹⁹⁷⁶

What is also strange about Dr. Cooper's questioning is that there is no mention of how Tsafendas came to be admitted to the Whitecroft Hospital, on the Isle of Wight. The Isle of Wight is a small island in the English Channel off the country's south coast. No one seemed to wonder how Tsafendas ended up in a hospital there. Patients in such a hospital were either local islanders or were referred from other hospitals in Britain.¹⁹⁷⁷

Tsafendas was unique in presenting himself in the lobby and being admitted on his ¹⁹⁷⁵ Medical Bulettn of Dimitrio Tsafendas. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

¹⁹⁷⁶ Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 10 October 2016.

¹⁹⁷⁷ E.F. Laidlaw, A History of the Isle of Wight Hospitals, (Newport: Cross Publishing, 1994), p. 100-103.

own cognisance. Why would he travel all the way to this small island and admit himself to a hospital there? The only logical explanation, and it fits with Tsafendas's impetuous curiosity and love of travel, is what he later said: that he had heard about this beautiful island that it had a hospital which looked like a castle and he decided to visit it. According to Professor Burke, this sort of planning is not something that a schizophrenic can do: "That requires a lot of planning -- I'm going to go there, and I'm going to stay in the hospital, and I'm going to go ... that, typically doesn't happen."¹⁹⁷⁸

Dr. Cooper, referring to Tsafendas's medical report from the Isle of Wight hospital, states that, "there is reference to the fact that he has not recovered, on discharge." According to the report of the Commission of Enquiry¹⁹⁷⁹ and to a secret telegram from the South African embassy in London, Tsafendas was given a certificate which described his mental condition as good enough for him to travel to any country.¹⁹⁸⁰

As we have seen before, Tsafendas was medically examined over the previous three years while he was in South African by at least nine doctors on ten separate occasions and none of them noticed anything wrong with him. None of these doctors was a psychiatrist, but then one of the defence's main witnesses was a district surgeon who diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic.

¹⁹⁷⁸ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016.

¹⁹⁷⁹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 33.

¹⁹⁸⁰ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, London to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

Another fact nobody appeared to notice was that Tsafendas told the police and his defence team the names of all the hospitals to which he was admitted and the exact dates of his stays there, as well as the precise diagnosis in every case. However, he concealed all the examinations he had by doctors and hospitals where nothing was reported about his “schizophrenia” and the tapeworm. A fact that also seems to have been overlooked is how Tsafendas managed to avoid being certified and detained in hospital before 1966 if he was as described by Dr. Cooper and later by other psychiatrists. He was admitted in several hospitals and examined by numerous doctors and no one thought he was certifiable or as bad as Dr. Cooper described. Indeed no doctor described him in the way Dr. Cooper did. It is true that his condition could have deteriorated since 1959, when he was last hospitalised because of the tapeworm, if he was really a schizophrenic. However, seven years had passed since then and no change was noted in his behaviour.

More importantly, between November 1963 and September 1966, Tsafendas was examined by ten doctors and he did not mention the tapeworm to any of them, which again suggests that either the tapeworm had not become more important in his mind or that he simply did not use it to his advantage. Finally, if his health had deteriorated, he would almost certainly have admitted himself to a hospital, something he had no problem with. He had admitted himself to all the hospitals claiming a “fixation about a tapeworm.”¹⁹⁸¹ If he had no problem admitting to the tapeworm problem in 1946, in 1955 and in 1959, why would he hide it afterwards, especially since he was not “cured”?

Finally, the medical records mentioned in court told only half the truth about Tsafendas's hospitalizations, with important information, for example from the Grafton State Hospital report, omitted by the defence and not raised by the State. None of Tsafendas's medical records mentioned by the defence would be submitted as evidence during the summary trial and no one will know the detailed contents, apart from the diagnosis. However, as we have already seen, the contents of two of the four records mentioned in court were misrepresented by the defence in order to suit its needs, mentioning only what was convenient for them. It is highly likely therefore the same thing happened with the other two reports that the author did not have access to.

THE ISSUE OF TSAFENDAS'S HOSPITALIZATIONS

¹⁹⁸¹ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, London to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

What is interesting about all these hospitalizations is that no-one enquires how or why Tsafendas ended up there. He admitted himself to the mental ward of St Pancras Hospital in London, telling doctors that “he had a fixation about a tapeworm.” Then he did the same on the Isle of Wight.¹⁹⁸² He admitted himself to the Ochsenzoll Hospital in Hamburg by claiming, falsely, that he had taken twenty sleeping tablets.¹⁹⁸³ The Grafton State Hospital had confirmation that Tsafendas had admitted himself to the Boston Psychopathic Hospital, Massachusetts, before he was transferred there.¹⁹⁸⁴

Why did Tsafendas admit himself to these hospitals? He gave a frank explanation to three different witnesses, the priests Minas Constandinou, Spiros Randos and Ioannis Tsaftaridis, when he spoke to them on separate occasions after the assassination. He said he did it when he had no money and needed a place to stay. He said he saw hospitals as “hotels.” At other times, he told the priests, he was taken to hospitals after he “pretended to be mad,” but this was to stop police questioning and sometimes torturing him.¹⁹⁸⁵

The only hospital which Tsafendas named to the priests the Whitecroft on the Isle of Wight. He told two of them on separate occasions that he admitted himself there because he wanted to see the island and he was without money and a place to stay.¹⁹⁸⁶ In all of his travels, Tsafendas admitted himself to hospitals in only three countries, England, the United States and Germany. What is the common factor? Tsafendas was not permitted to work legally in those three nations and sometimes he was there illegally. At the same time, he was jobless, penniless and without a place to stay. In each case, the medical records confirm that Tsafendas himself sought admission and was not taken to the hospitals.

The most obvious example of his hospital ruse was in Britain. In 1959, the first time he visited that country, he was unable to get a work permit and therefore could not work legally. He remained in the country from May until October. His money ran out at some point and he had nowhere to stay. Tom Fox Pitt, the secretary of the Anti-Slavery Society, who Tsafendas had met on his frequent visits to the Society's office, arranged for him to stay at a ¹⁹⁸² Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, London to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA; Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁹⁸³ Dr. Bieser and Dr. Schmidt-Janssen report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 7 June 1955. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

¹⁹⁸⁴ ‘The history of the person who inflicted the fatal wounds to the late Dr. Verwoerd’ drafted by Col. McIntyre, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Subject: Leer W.D. 10/10/4102 der Stafendas. NASA; Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demetrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁹⁸⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

¹⁹⁸⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

hostel in Victoria, London. Concluding that Tsafendas was destitute, Pitt gave him a grey, flannel suit.¹⁹⁸⁷ Tsafendas chose not to stay permanently at the hostel while having his costs met by Pitt or the Society, so he left and admitted himself to the hospital in St. Pancras. He later followed the same pattern at the Whitecroft Hospital, on the Isle of Wight.

Tsafendas made one more visit to Britain, in 1962, although he stayed a shorter time. Still, he was not hospitalized. However, nor did he have any financial concerns, with enough money saved from Portugal to get by or from illegal jobs. Edward Furness, who met him then said Tsafendas, “was well-dressed and appeared to be wealthy.”¹⁹⁸⁸ It is clear that when Tsafendas was without money, jobless and on the run from the British police because of his illegal status, he got himself admitted to the two hospitals. When he was financially secure, however, he had no need of free bed and board.

Germany followed the same pattern. Tsafendas was hospitalised in Hamburg in 1955 when he had spent a few months in the city unsuccessfully looking for work. However, in 1958, when he was back in Germany and stayed there for one and a half years, he was not hospitalised anywhere since he was constantly in work. In 1955, after spending a few weeks unsuccessful seeking a job in Hamburg, Tsafendas told his friends that he was going to look for work in Frankfurt. However, it appears that instead he admitted himself to the hospital, where he was discovered by Fathers Damaskinos Doxiartis and Efthimios Eleftheriadis, from the Greek Orthodox church of St Nicholas in Hamburg. They were surprised to see Tsafendas there as they thought he had gone to Frankfurt.¹⁹⁸⁹

According to Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis, Tsafendas “seemed perfectly fine... I can’t remember what he told us about why he was hospitalised, but he definitely never told me or Father Damaskinos anything about this tapeworm, not even when we were in the hospital, I would have remembered such thing ... I remember he looked embarrassed when he saw us, but I really can’t remember what he told us; why he was there ... he came to the church to see us when he was released from the hospital and he seemed fine ... he never said or did anything to make me or Father Damaskinos believe that he was insane or even a little unbalanced.”¹⁹⁹⁰

¹⁹⁸⁷ The Guardian, ‘Winding Back’, 30 September 1966: 10.

¹⁹⁸⁸ Edward Furness statement to the police 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁹⁸⁹ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

¹⁹⁹⁰ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

Asked by the author if he or Father Damaskinos got the impression that Tsafendas might be faking his illness, the priest said, "He did not give me that impression ... I am not sure about Father Damaskinos, but I think he also did not get such an impression. I certainly did not get the impression that he was faking it, why would he do such thing? But I also certainly did not get the impression that he was mentally ill. Definitely not, he was perfectly normal."¹⁹⁹¹

Tsafendas spent most of his time in Mozambique and in South Africa. Surprisingly, he was not hospitalised in any hospital in these countries for psychiatric problems, apart from when he was taken by PIDE to the hospital in Beira while he had claimed to be Saint Peter during integration. The rest of his time in these countries, he was not only never hospitalised, but examined by several doctors and no one noticed anything. Tsafendas also spent two years in Greece, seven months in Turkey, some months in Sweden and one and a half year in Germany in 1958-1959. He had jobs all these times and he was not hospitalised at any of these places during this time, which again it confirms what Tsafendas told the witnesses, about admitting himself when he was penniless and homeless.

Tsafendas also told several witnesses that he had "pretended to be mad" on some occasions in order to stop being tortured while he was in detention.¹⁹⁹² Again, Tsafendas's medical record seems to confirm this too. Whenever he did not admit himself to the hospital, he was taken there by the police after he had shown signs of mental illness during his interrogation, as happened in the USA, in all the hospitals in Portugal and in Beira.

In addition, the psychiatrists claimed in court that Tsafendas had the tapeworm since 1935. However, he made no mention of such a thing to any of his family or to a doctor, nor did he ever seek treatment in a hospital. The tapeworm made its appearance for the first time in 1946, eleven years later. When he was admitted to a hospital for the first time in 1943, while in detention in a prison in Bangor, Maine,¹⁹⁹³ on charges of contravening US immigration laws,¹⁹⁹⁴ Tsafendas "showed symptoms of mental disorder." He was admitted to the Boston Psychopathic Hospital, Massachusetts, from where he was transferred on April 23, 1943 to the Metropolitan State Hospital. He was initially diagnosed as having ¹⁹⁹¹ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

¹⁹⁹² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

¹⁹⁹³ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁹⁹⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw, 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 2.

“psychoneurosis – mixed type” plus “many psychopathic traits.”¹⁹⁹⁵ However, psychiatrists in this hospital discovered that Tsafendas was play-acting. According to a report by the Grafton State Hospital, Massachusetts, to which he was admitted in 1946, Tsafendas then confessed that in 1943 “he faked mental illness because he was afraid to ship out because of the numerous leakings (sinkings) of ships.”¹⁹⁹⁶ The tapeworm finally emerged in 1946 while he was in Grafton State hospital in Massachusetts, eleven years after he was allegedly infected and three years after his first hospitalization. If Tsafendas really believed what was stated in court about the tapeworm, he must have told the doctors when he was first hospitalised in 1943 or someone else before that. Furthermore, Tsafendas's claim that he began talking about a tapeworm only after he was first found pretending to be mad is confirmed by the above.

As stated above, Tsafendas spoke extensively to Fathers Minas Constandinou, Spiros Randos and Ioannis Tsafaridis about his hospitalizations. He said that the first time he ever did it was in the USA when he was arrested and put to jail for being illegally there. He said that it was very tough there and feared for his life, so he pretended to be mad by hearing voices, as he did not know what else to say or do, in order to be taken away from there. Although he was later caught faking it, he then came across Tom Tuff who gave him the idea for the tapeworm and began using it.¹⁹⁹⁷ While the time was passing, he developed his “performances” further and he knew what to say and what to do whenever he wanted to be found insane.¹⁹⁹⁸

In January 1952, Tsafendas was arrested in Lisbon as security reports from Mozambique told the Portuguese that Tsafendas was a half-caste, a Communist and an anti-colonialist who was under suspicion of “unclear activities” during his time in Mozambique.¹⁹⁹⁹ Tsafendas spent more a year in a prison cell in the Cascais Fort.²⁰⁰⁰ Tsafendas told several witnesses that at the time he was severely tortured, including been given electric shocks and at one point, he said, he could not take the pain and so played the ¹⁹⁹⁵ ‘The history of the person who inflicted the fatal wounds to the late Dr. Verwoerd’ drafted by Col. McIntyre, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Subject: Leer W.D. 10/10/4102 der Stafendas. NASA; Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁹⁹⁶ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁹⁹⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

¹⁹⁹⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017; Gordon Winter in A Question of Madness.

¹⁹⁹⁹ Diario Popular, ‘E Conhesido em Lisboa o Assassino do Dr. Verwoerd’, 9 September 1966.

²⁰⁰⁰ PIDE Report regarding Tsafendas, 05 May 1956. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

madman again and the police then stopped torturing him.²⁰⁰¹ He was then taken to the Instituto de Medicina Tropical and then to the Hospital do Ultramar for psychiatric examination. A PIDE report said that “during his interrogations he gave signs of having some sort of mental disability, which was confirmed by the Overseas Hospital.”²⁰⁰²

In 1964, after he was arrested in Beira accused of campaigning for the independence of Mozambique, once again during interrogation he showed signs of mental illness and was taken to the Government Hospital in Beira. Soon, he was declared to be mentally ill and was subsequently released.²⁰⁰³ It must be more than coincidence that Tsafendas showed signs of mental illness to his interrogators, but not to any of the people who came across him. This fact was not picked up by the State although Tsafendas showed signs of mental illness while he was in custody for Dr. Verwoerd's death, as he had done at least three times before in a similar situation; meanwhile, one hundred and fifty people who were questioned by the South African police failed to notice any signs of mental disturbance in Tsafendas.

In 1998, Gordon Winter, a former BOSS agent, journalist and very close friend of General van den Bergh, was interviewed by David Beresford, South Africa correspondent for the British newspaper, The Guardian. He said:

“Wherever Tsafendas went, he usually booked himself into a hospital under some pretext, for the simple reason that after having enjoyed a good look round as a tourist, Tsafendas himself admitted to me that he was lazy and hated working, that he always got himself booked into some hospital for a while. He said he loved hospitals because in them, he got a comfortable bed, clean sheets, three meals a day, the company of other patients - and, equally important, the attention of nurses and doctors.

When Tsafendas really liked a hospital (or the country it was in) and he looked as though he would be thrown out, he would go into his ‘mad’ mode, which lengthened his stay. If that didn't work he would tell them about his tape worm. That story lengthened his stay so that the doctors could check to see whether he had a tape worm or not. When they discovered he did not have a tape worm inside him, he would act madder and insist that the doctors were part of a conspiracy against him - which also lengthened his stay so that psychiatrists could ²⁰⁰¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁰⁰² PIDE report regarding Demetri Tsafendas to the Minister of Interior. 7 June 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; PIDE report regarding Demetri Tsafendas to the Director General of the Civil and Political Administration Overseas Ministry. 18 April 1958. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰⁰³ Alberto Henriques de Matos Rodrigues conclusion to the Subdirector, 23 January 1965. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

then examine him. Tsafendas himself told me in Pretoria Central, that psychiatrists were stupid and that (from their questioning) he had learnt their verbals and was thus able to work out what they wanted him to say - which would fit in with their theories. No, I will never believe Tsafendas was as mad as they say. As I told Liza and Sylvia, Tsafendas loved mind games and he was very clever at playing stupid when it suited him.”²⁰⁰⁴

What Winter told Beresford is exactly what Tsafendas later told the three priests. Tsafendas's modus operandi with hospitals was very easy to figure out for anyone who had carefully studied his medical and police files and also talked to him. Furthermore, eighteen years after he talked to Beresford, Winter repeated the exact same story of Tsafendas and the hospitals virtually word for word to Dr. James Sanders. He added that General van den Bergh had asked Tsafendas when he interrogated him how he came to be admitted to all these hospitals. Tsafendas gave him precisely the same reason he later gave to Winter and finally the three priests; that he saw the hospitals as hotels whenever he was penniless and homeless.²⁰⁰⁵ As we have also seen, the other witnesses who had access to Tsafendas's first interrogation transcript (Terry Bell, David Beresford, Liza Key, Jan-Ake Kjellberg), also confirmed the content of it as described above by Winter.

As for Tsafendas admitting himself to hospital, how common is it for a “deluded schizophrenic” to seek treatment in a hospital, admitting that he has a fixation, a delusion he told no-one else about? According to Professor Burke, it makes no sense: “He admits himself, so why would he want to hide any of this away? I mean, it's paradoxical. If I was scared that I was going to be hospitalised, I would keep this to myself, but here's a man who goes to the hospital, and reports by himself, so why would he hide it away, because he was clearly not scared of a mental hospital, so what would be his motive for hiding it away?”²⁰⁰⁶

In later life, Tsafendas was deeply embarrassed about misusing hospitals as he had in America, Britain and Germany, and he avoided talking about it, simply saying he had wanted a place to stay and found refuge in hospitals.²⁰⁰⁷

MISSING MEDICAL REPORTS FROM MOZAMBIQUE AND PORTUGAL

²⁰⁰⁴ Gordon Winter to David Beresford, 8 September 1998. From David Beresford's personal collection.

²⁰⁰⁵ Gordon Winter in a personal interview with Dr. James Sanders on behalf of the author, 19 August 2016.

²⁰⁰⁶ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016.

²⁰⁰⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

The defence refers to medical reports from hospitals in the United States, England and West Germany, the most recent being from England in 1959. However, Tsafendas was also admitted to the Government Hospital in Beira sometime in late 1964 or early 1965, when he claimed that he was Saint Peter.²⁰⁰⁸ This was after he was arrested by the Portuguese Security Police accused of pretending to be a Christian missionary while actually campaigning for Mozambique's independence.²⁰⁰⁹

The South African police were aware of this because Tsafendas stated it in his statement of September 19, it was mentioned in PIDEs report given to the South African police on September 7 and Lt.-Colonel P.J.B. van Wyk had mentioned it in his report from Beira on September 20. More importantly, van Wyk had then taken the "necessary steps" and "formally applied" to obtain a copy of Tsafendas's medical report from the hospital.²⁰¹⁰ It must have been a simple formality to obtain it, since the Portuguese authorities had provided all of Tsafendas's medical reports from Portugal, and it must have been by then in the possession of the South African police. However, the author is not in a position to know this for a fact, nor is it in a position to know whether Tsafendas's defence team was aware of this hospitalization. The fact that this was the last time Tsafendas was in a hospital before the assassination, with the exception of his cosmetic nose surgery in Groote Schuur hospital in April/May 1966, makes the Beira admission extremely important.

It is also important because seven years had passed since the last time Tsafendas was hospitalised for a psychiatric condition, according to his defence, and such a report would have strengthened their line that he was still a schizophrenic and diagnosed as such also in 1965. The South African police and the defence team got hold of all of Tsafendas's other medical reports, from hospitals in Europe and the United States going back decades, in the case of the Grafton State Hospital to 1946. A report from Beira was important because it would contain the most recent medical information on Tsafendas and it would surely have been quite easy to get, given the excellent bilateral relationship between South Africa and Portugal and their collaboration on Dr. Verwoerd's murder investigation. That the PIDE had deliberately hidden all "information indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of Mozambique" while highlighting that he had been declared mentally disable by their ²⁰⁰⁸ This report was not found in the archives and therefore the study is not in position to know its content.

²⁰⁰⁹ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰¹⁰ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

hospitals, demonstrates their willingness to impart such information to the South African police.

Indeed, the PIDE had already included in one of its reports an earlier diagnosis by Dr. Pegado of the Institute of Psychiatric Welfare, who examined Tsafendas in Lisbon and on April 6, 1962 diagnosed him as a psychopath.²⁰¹¹ This is when Tsafendas had pretended to be slightly but harmlessly mad in order to convince the Portuguese to give him amnesty to return to Mozambique. However, still, his detailed medical report is missing and we have only the final diagnosis. The Commission of Enquiry evidently had access to one of Tsafendas's medical reports from Lisbon since it stated that in 1952 he was diagnosed with "intestinal parasitosis, manic-depressive psychosis."²⁰¹² The fact that the above two reports were given to the South African authorities confirms that the Portuguese had no problem in handing Tsafendas's medical records to the South African police. Since, as we have already seen, it would be to their benefit that Tsafendas be found to be insane, the Portuguese were only too happy to co-operate.

The fact is, however, that neither the State nor the defence make any reference to a Beira report of Tsafendas's 1964/1965 hospitalization. If we assume that both the Defence and the South African police got hold of this report, what would they have found? That Tsafendas, apart from believing he had a tapeworm, also believed he was Saint Peter. They were not his only imaginings. When he was examined by Dr Kossew on June 16, 1966, Tsafendas appeared to have a delusion of a persecutory nature, believing that twenty people had been murdered in the house where he lived.²⁰¹³ Over the years, Tsafendas mentioned four different delusions:

- hearing voices from the radiators;
- believing he has a tapeworm inside him;
- believing that he is Saint Peter;
- having feelings of a persecutory nature and believing that twenty people died in the house where he was staying from deliberate food poisoning.

Chronologically, Tsafendas heard voices from the radiators in the 1940s, later in the following decade he believed he had a tapeworm, then on one occasion in 1965 concluded that he was Saint Peter and in June 1966 expressed illusions of persecution. Since the tapeworm delusion was constant since the 1930s, as Dr. Cooper and the other psychiatrists claimed, then Tsafendas had at different periods, one different and additional delusion.

²⁰¹¹ Dr. Pegado's report regarding Dimitrio Tsafandakis, 6 April 1962. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/6, subject: Departement van Verdediging. NASA.

²⁰¹² Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 24.

²⁰¹³ Dr. Ralph Kossew testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

Psychiatrists say that it is highly unlikely if not impossible for a person to have multiple delusions. That is why as we have seen, the Grafton hospital reference to Tsafendas hearing voices from the radiators is also not mentioned. According to Professor Alban Burke, to have two delusions at the same time or for a delusion to come and go or be replaced by another delusion is not impossible but unlikely:

“It’s not impossible, because the human brain is difficult to understand. It’s not impossible, but it is unlikely. It’s possible but it’s improbable. Let’s assume he was schizophrenic... and, in the past, he had the delusion of being one of the apostles, that delusion would have stayed. So why would he then have created a new delusion around a tapeworm? It does not make sense because your delusion stays fixed, so if he really did believe he was one of the apostles, early on, that story would have stuck because the delusions will not have shifted. What happens with delusions is, they can become bigger, so they could include more things, but a shift from one delusion to another one is highly unlikely, so why would you go from apostle, and that worked for you, let’s say he truly believed he was an apostle, why did that change as he went along?”

Even if the schizophrenia had been treated, and it came back, then the same delusion would have come back, so it’s inconsistent in terms of the delusions. You typically have a very fixed delusion, and it becomes bigger, but doesn’t change significantly, so if he had been truly schizophrenic, and he had been admitted to these hospitals previously, based on what he said, that he believed he was an apostle, then he would have killed Dr. Verwoerd based on the delusion that he was an apostle! He wouldn’t have changed to say there was a tapeworm, or whatever the case may be. So, there’s, already, some kind of inconsistency.”²⁰¹⁴

Reyner van Zyl, agrees that it is almost impossible, “One may disappear, and the other one may then appear, but two at the same time? I don’t think so, because these delusions are usually very powerful.”²⁰¹⁵

²⁰¹⁴ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

²⁰¹⁵ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

Naturally, the defence lawyers, even if they were in possession of this report, were never going to use it as it would have damaged their argument. However, if the State had the report, it could easily have used it and raised the issue of the three different delusions. It was already aware of the tapeworm issue because the defence had “opened their hands” about it two weeks before the summary trial,²⁰¹⁶ but also because Dr. van Wyk, the State’s expert psychiatrist, was also told about it by Tsafendas.²⁰¹⁷

Thus, why did Tsafendas use the tapeworm story and not the more recent one of Saint Peter? Tsafendas never discussed it. However, it seems logical that he would have wheeled out his most “experienced” act, the one he had used often and which always worked. The Saint Peter show was a one-off, which fitted the religion-related Portuguese accusation, and as for hearing voices a la Joan of Arc, this had failed once before, and anyway hearing voices was the most common way for someone to pretend madness. Tsafendas himself said later that “everyone hears voices or pretends to be Napoleon, but who would ever suspect anyone who believes he has a tapeworm?”²⁰¹⁸

Although there is no evidence to confirm that the Beira report was in the possession of the South African police, everything indicates that it must have been. The fact that Tsafendas had claimed that he was Saint Peter, while in custody just two years before the assassination was of major importance for the summary trial and for his psychiatric evaluation. Even though it did not become known at the time, it demonstrates Tsafendas ability to pretend to be “unstable” whenever necessary. That he managed to adjust himself to his circumstances - accused of pretending to be a Christian missionary, but in reality pressing for the independence of Mozambique – and dream up the Saint Peter idea, so fitting to the situation, suggests that Tsafendas was more than capable of pretending to be unstable, improvising according to his needs at each time.

TSAFENDAS’S ABILITY TO MANAGE HIMSELF

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is he capable of managing himself?

DR. COOPER: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Why? Because of the mental disorder?

²⁰¹⁶ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 90.

²⁰¹⁷ Professor Adolph Johannes van Wyk testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 20 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²⁰¹⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

DR. COOPER: Why? Because I believe that he is quite incapable of fending for himself. He is incapable of holding down employment. He is dependent all the time on others for help and assistance.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Therefore you say he is incapable of managing his own affairs?

DR. COOPER: And he is incapable of managing his own affairs.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: To what extent is he a danger to himself or others?

DR. COOPER: He has certainly proved himself to be a danger to others. And in schizophrenia the thought processes are so confused and unpredictable that one might say he may well become a danger to himself. I believe that this man has been suffering from schizophrenia for longer than five years, and therefore, on this basis alone, I believe that his outlook is now extremely unfavourable. I am of the opinion that the accused is not able to understand the exact nature of the evidence which will be led here, that he is not able to grasp...

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S ABILITY TO MANAGE HIMSELF

Once again, an entirely inaccurate diagnosis by Dr. Cooper. Here was a man who travelled on his own through a large number of countries, who found employment wherever he went, who, when penniless, sold his blood to earn some money,²⁰¹⁹ who was arrested five times by the Portuguese Police on serious accusations and secured his release each time. Could such a man be incapable of managing his own affairs? Tsafendas was forty-eight years old at the time of his arrest and did not seem to have any problem getting through life up to then.

If we accept for a moment that Tsafendas was indeed schizophrenic, he must have been extremely good at hiding it from doctors, since he was invariably found sane whenever it was in his interests to be found sane. For example, between 1964 and 1966, a period in South Africa when he was looking for jobs, he was examined by six doctors and no one noticed anything wrong with him. On none of his job application forms did he report any hallucinations or that he had been hospitalised in the past, always claiming to be in exceptional health. Furthermore, he flatly lied when he applied for permanent residency in South Africa, denying anything that might result in a refusal. He wrote in his application that he had “never previously applied for permanent residence in South Africa, had never been found guilty of a criminal or unlawful action, had never been refused entry to any South African harbour and had never been deported from South Africa or any other country.”²⁰²⁰

²⁰¹⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

He then attended three interviews with three different officers at the Department of Immigration and made a favourable impression on all of them.²⁰²¹ In addition, on November 11, 1963, he was examined by Dr. C. Been for his permanent residence permit and was found “not to be mentally or physically defective in any way,” and “generally in a good state of health.”²⁰²² On November 14, 1963, Tsafendas was examined again for the same reason by Dr. A.C. McDonald, who also wrote “a favourable report.”²⁰²³

If Tsafendas was unable to manage himself, how did he manage to survive the forty-eight previous years of his life? A man who, although penniless most of the time, managed to travel to sixteen countries where he knew no-one yet never spent an evening without a bed. A stranger in all these countries, he always managed to find a job and sometimes he even thrived, as he did in Istanbul, where he worked for almost half a year at the Limasollu Naci College.

Tsafendas always seemed to find a way of achieving his goals. During the Greek Civil War, he managed to join the Democratic Army of Greece, the military wing of the Greek Communist Party, and he survived. Arrested five times by the Portuguese police because of his political ideas and political activities, he managed to secure his release each time. Banned from entering Mozambique due to his anti-colonialist beliefs, he convinced the Portuguese that he was harmlessly mad so they allowed him to return. He also attended several job interviews and no one noticed anything wrong with him, and that included three officials at the Ministry of the Interior who interviewed him three times over his application for permanent residency in South Africa.²⁰²⁴ PIDE would not have held a detailed 130-pages file ²⁰²⁰ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

²⁰²¹ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

²⁰²² Demitrio Tsafendas medical certificate issued by Dr. Been for the Aliens Act, 1937. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

²⁰²³ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

²⁰²⁴ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

on Tsafendas and withheld from South Africa information on his political activities if he was a man who was not able to look after himself.

The author asked forty-six relatives and friends of Tsafendas if they ever got the impression he was not able to care for himself. Not a single one agreed. Again, we list opinions by those who knew him well:

Fotini Gavasiadis, who was with Tsafendas every day for nine months in 1963-4, was shocked and asked, "Are you serious? Are you sure the doctor said this about Dimitri? He must have examined a different man."²⁰²⁵ Mary Eintracht, the cousin who grew up with him in Egypt and Mozambique, his half-sister Katerina Pnema, childhood friends Helen Grispos, Ira Kyriakakis and Andreas Babiolakis, Father Nikola Banovic who knew him for seven months in Istanbul and Nick Papadakis, who was close to him for two-three months in 1964 in Mozambique all discounted Dr. Cooper's diagnosis as, at least, inaccurate. Other comments they used to describe it were "ludicrous" and "for laughs."²⁰²⁶

The following are some incidents and statements which are indicative of Tsafendas's character and ability to manage himself:

- Tsafendas lived with the O'Ryans for five months. No one in the family saw him as someone unable to care for himself. On the contrary, they thought of him as a "resourceful and capable" man. Because Patrick O'Ryan refused to take any rent from him, Tsafendas would bring food to the house almost every day. He often bought sweets and toys for the children,²⁰²⁷ and he also gave money to Allan O'Ryan for his bus fare to school when his mother was unable to do so.²⁰²⁸ Reuben O'Ryan, Patrick's son said about Tsafendas: "We all loved him ... he was an adorable man ... he was the answer to our prayers. We were poor and he brought food to our house."²⁰²⁹
- Peter Pappas, owner of a Greek café in Durban, said when Tsafendas had some money he would give "a few cents to the white down-and-outs of the city." Furthermore, Pappas said about Tsafendas "When his luck was out, I sometimes gave him a free meal, but ²⁰²⁵ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 18 March 2016.

²⁰²⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²⁰²⁷ Allan O' Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019; Stanley O' Ryan in a personal interview, 9 April 2015; Reuben O' Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

²⁰²⁸ Allan O' Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019.

²⁰²⁹ Reuben O' Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

when he started work he paid me,”²⁰³⁰ These are hardly the actions of a man who is unable to look after himself.

- Jacobus Bornman was Tsafendas's flatmate. He told the police, “On one occasion I had no money and then Tsafendas gave me five cents. I later wanted to return the money to him, but he would not take it”²⁰³¹
- On January 25, 1965, Tsafendas was released after three months' imprisonment in Beira for subversive propaganda. Penniless as without a roof over his head, Tsafendas asked if he could sleep at the Beira fire department premises and the fire-fighters agreed. He slept there for ten nights, making sure that “he arrived at mealtimes, when he was invited to share in the food.”²⁰³²
- Tsafendas was penniless when he arrived in Istanbul in June 1961. He went to a hospital and donated blood for money to survive.²⁰³³
- When Tsafendas was arrested in Beira by the Portuguese police with a suitcase full of anti-fascist and anti-colonialist books, but also some Bibles, he was accused of pretending to be a Christian missionary spreading the word about religion, while in reality preaching “under the guise of religion in favour of Mozambique's independence.”²⁰³⁴ Questioned in custody, Tsafendas came up with the idea of pretending to be Saint Peter, which fitted perfectly with his story of Christian missionary preaching. The Portuguese thought he was mad and released him.²⁰³⁵
- In 1964, in Beira, John Emmanuel Marvis lent him twenty escudos, which Tsafendas paid back a few days later.²⁰³⁶
- When Tsafendas was ordered to fulfil his duty of compulsory military service in the ²⁰³⁰ Rand Daily Mail, ‘Tsafendas: In the Eyes of A Friend’, 14 September 1966.

²⁰³¹ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁰³² South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

²⁰³³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁰³⁴ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰³⁵ Alberto Henriques de Matos Rodrigues conclusion to the Subdirector, 23 January 1965. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Conclusion, signed by António Fernandes Vaz, 22 January 1965. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰³⁶ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

Portuguese army, he pretended to be mad and got away with it.²⁰³⁷

- In 1963, Tsafendas managed to convince the Portuguese that he was a “reformed man,” no longer a Communist or a supporter of the independence of Mozambique, but just a little bit mad and harmless, so they granted him amnesty and allowed him to return to Mozambique after twelve years of exile.²⁰³⁸

This Report could go on listing evidence to prove how wrong Dr. Cooper’s testimony was, but the author feels that this particular statement is best disproved by reading Tsafendas’s biography, Chapter 2. It is obvious there that he was well able to manage himself.

Dr. Cooper’s statement that Tsafendas depended “all the time on others for help and assistance,” is inaccurate. The author asked forty-six people who knew Tsafendas well if this was the case and they all strongly denied it. Twenty-four of these witnesses who knew him very well told the author that this was untrue and that he was not like this. Some of them even characterised him as a very proud man and no beggar. Another forty-two witnesses who met him and knew him reasonably well agreed with the above statement.

However there were people who testified to the police and to the Commission that Tsafendas had asked them for help. For example: his family told the Commission of Enquiry that Tsafendas “only wrote to them when he needed money.” According to his half-sister, Katerina Pnefma, this was not true. She said that as far as she could remember, Tsafendas never asked for money. On the contrary, his father continually asked in letters to his son if he needed money or anything else. Michalis was deeply concerned about Dimitri’s welfare while living abroad. Pnefma believes her family made that remark in order to explain why Tsafendas wrote to them from overseas and in an attempt to show that they did not have a close relationship. Pnefma said Tsafendas corresponded regularly with her father and her sister, Eleni, and often sent presents for everyone in the family from overseas, including his step-mother.²⁰³⁹ Mary Eintracht and Fotini Gavasiadis also strongly denies that Tsafendas wrote to the family asking for money and confirm that he often sent gifts along with his ²⁰³⁷ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²⁰³⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁰³⁹ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

letters from overseas.²⁰⁴⁰ Some of the gifts are still in the family's possession. Pnefma, Gavasiadis and Eintracht are "absolutely certain" that Marika made this comment in order to show that she had very little relationship with Tsafendas.²⁰⁴¹

Two more witnesses are John Gianouris, the Greek Vice Consul at Lourenço Marques, and Jose Lopez Baltazar, a fire-fighter in Beira, who testified that Tsafendas asked for their help. Gianouris told the police that he "met Tsafendas during the beginning of 1965 when Tsafendas called on him for financial assistance. Tsafendas could not convince him that he was a Greek citizen and therefore he did not meet Tsafendas's request. He describes the subject as a normal and intelligent person."²⁰⁴² What was not stated here is that Tsafendas had just been released, having spent the previous three months (16 November 1964- 26 January 1965) in police custody.²⁰⁴³ Tsafendas had asked the firemen for permission to sleep in the fire station and was allowed to do so, sharing in the men's meals.²⁰⁴⁴ Looking for a bed in a fire station was unusual, but this was also the same day Tsafendas was released from prison, and he was penniless and homeless.

Tsafendas himself had also admitted to the police that he had to borrow money from some Greeks in order to leave Mozambique for South Africa by boat in March 1965. However, he had spent three of the previous five months in solitary confinement in Beira accused of "making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses."²⁰⁴⁵ Penniless, homeless, jobless and with PIDE following him closely, Tsafendas needed to leave Mozambique. Some of his friends in Mozambique, including Costas Poriazis and Andreas and Giangos Babiolakis, voluntarily gave him money to travel from Beira to Durban. About a month later, Tsafendas paid back the money, even though they had insisted they did not want it back.²⁰⁴⁶

Another person who had helped Tsafendas was Peter Pappas, a Greek café proprietor in Durban. Pappas said he would "sometimes gave him (Tsafendas) a free meal, but when he ²⁰⁴⁰ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

²⁰⁴¹ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²⁰⁴² South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁰⁴³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 19.

²⁰⁴⁴ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁰⁴⁵ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰⁴⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Costas Poriazis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

started work he paid me.” Pappas also said that Tsafendas was friendly with white down-and-outs and when he had some money he would give them a few cents.²⁰⁴⁷ This was not the first time Tsafendas helped poor people, though penniless himself. In Cape Town, he helped his young flatmate, Jacobus Bornman, when he was out of funds, and then declined to take the money back.²⁰⁴⁸ He constantly bought food and sweets and toys for the family of Patrick O’Ryan who was hosting him²⁰⁴⁹ and he voluntarily helped a colleague in Beira to build a room for his daughter who was to get married.²⁰⁵⁰

Regarding Tsafendas being incapable of keeping a job, this is arguable. It is a fact that he was lazy, doing the minimum of work, especially when it did not interest him. However, he was perfectly capable of keeping a job when he wanted to, as he did for six months at the language college in Istanbul, for another six months in the tractor factory in Munich, for six-seven months as part-time interpreter in the court in Durban and when he worked for three years as a hawker in Portugal. He also taught English voluntarily for a year or so in Lourenço Marques in the late 1930s, for six-seven months in Istanbul in 1961 and for five-six months in Beira in 1964.²⁰⁵¹ Tsafendas was always able to find work, even when he was not legally permitted to do so, as happened in England.

²⁰⁴⁷ Rand Daily Mail, ‘Tsafendas: In the Eyes of A Friend’, 14 September 1966.

²⁰⁴⁸ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁰⁴⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁰⁵⁰ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

²⁰⁵¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Irene and John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 April 2015; Costas Poriazis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 4 November 2015.

Far from being incapable of managing his own affairs, Tsafendas worked all over Europe, as a welder and an engineer in Germany, as a carpenter in Sweden, as a teacher in Turkey, as an interpreter in Greece and as a welder and hawker in Portugal. In England, he was refused a work permit but still managed to find work ‘clandestinely’ and therefore survive.²⁰⁵² In Portugal in 1952, he requested and received from the Director of the International Police in Lisbon a certificate which declared him to be a maritime salesman.²⁰⁵³ Whenever he was jobless, he would return to this form of work, which he liked because he was his own boss could work whenever and wherever he wanted. Had it been more profitable and less tiring, he would have done it permanently, he said.²⁰⁵⁴

Dr. Cooper was probably unaware of all this, but the police knew of it and one would have expected the State to be aware, too. However, no effort was made by the Attorney-General to challenge Dr. Cooper’s testimony with this bountiful evidence that Tsafendas was perfectly capable of managing his affairs. Once more, we are not in position to know whether van den Berg was given this information by the police or that he just did not use it.

DR. COOPER ON WHAT A SCHIZOPHRENIC CAN ACHIEVE

DEFENCE COUNSEL: If you had a man that you found was a schizophrenic - at least you thought he was - you go and find out who he is; you find he is a capitalist, he’s got a match factory or something like that, would you then discard your diagnosis?

DR. COOPER: If he was - yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: He is a successful business man?

DR. COOPER: Oh yes, I would say there was something wrong with me because a schizophrenic...

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Can’t be a successful business man?

DR. COOPER: No.

²⁰⁵² PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰⁵³ Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰⁵⁴ Emmanuel Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 January 2014.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY REGARDING WHAT A SCHIZOPHRENIC CAN ACHIEVE

Dr. Cooper stated that he would disregard his diagnosis of schizophrenia if his patient was found to be a successful businessman. Tsafendas worked for five years as a hawker-salesman and obviously made enough money to meet his living costs. Perhaps this was not enough to characterise him as a successful businessman in Dr. Cooper's eyes, though it is more likely that he was not aware of it. Dr. Cooper believes that a schizophrenic cannot be a successful businessman. Perhaps this was a reflection on Dr. Cooper's knowledge at the time, because there have been many examples of schizophrenic people who became exceptionally successful in their field. To name a few, Elyn R. Saks, a Law Professor at the University of Southern California²⁰⁵⁵; John Nash, a mathematician who won a Nobel Prize in Economic Sciences; Rufus May, prominent clinical psychologist; Jack Kerouac, the author of On the Road;²⁰⁵⁶ Robin Cunningham, successful businessman and scientist.²⁰⁵⁷

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL AND THE JUDGE

TSAFENDAS'S MOTIVE, PART I

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: If there is evidence that the accused gave other reasons for killing the deceased as well as for his travels, do you still say that this delusion is constant?

DR. COOPER: Yes, but I have not said that the accused gives the tapeworm as an excuse for killing Dr. Verwoerd. All I have said is that the accused has said that the tapeworm was in the middle of whatever that may he identified Dr. Verwoerd as the leader. I think he was fed up with society as a whole, and the obvious man to attack was the man that he considered to be the leader of the society in which he was...

JUDGE BEYERS: I don't quite follow. You told me you think the real reason is that this man found all society was against him?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: This was the leader of society, and he kills him. Aren't you now ²⁰⁵⁵ Elyn Saks, 'Successful and Schizophrenic', The New York Times, 25 January 2015.

²⁰⁵⁶ Schizophrenia.com, (n.d.) 'Famous People and Schizophrenia.' Retrieved from: <http://schizophrenia.com/famous.htm>

²⁰⁵⁷ HealthCentral.com, (n.d.) 'Meet Robin Cunningham, Schizophrenia Expert Patient', retrieved from: <https://www.healthcentral.com/article/meet-robin-cunningham-schizophrenia-expert-patient>.

describing to me a paranoid par excellence? Isn't this a paranoid that you are describing to me, a man who believes the hand of all society is against him at all times. You told me this man only showed very slight paranoid tendencies. I am a layman, I am not an expert. I don't know where I am?

DR. COOPER: I don't regard this as being particularly paranoid, in that I don't think - he doesn't feel that people have been persecuting him or trying to poison him or any of these things that paranoids sometimes do believe. But he believes that his whole life has been hopeless, that he is helpless, that he just can't make any headway, and he is only being paranoid in the sense of being unable to understand that this failure is the product of his own sick mind, and he is rather blaming society for this hopeless and helpless situation he finds himself in.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Then he should have had a grudge against the doctors?

DR. COOPER: Which doctors?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: The doctors who couldn't kill the tapeworm?

DR. COOPER: Yes, he certainly has a grudge against these doctors, which he expressed.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Why didn't he kill a doctor, why did he kill the Prime Minister?

DR. COOPER: It is very hard. If one could creep into this man's mind one would be able to understand. But I think the Prime Minister was a much bigger and greater authority figure in this man's mind than a doctor.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Was that the reason or was that not the reason for killing the Prime Minister?

DR. COOPER: I believe that the reason for killing the Prime Minister can only be explained on the basis of a very complex, confused, deluded mind; that one cannot say there was any one element and blame that one element for his killing of Dr. Verwoerd. I believe it was a complex, confused, muddled issue, of which the tapeworm played a part, and which other things also played a part.

DR. COOPER: If the Court wishes me to expound on why I think this man killed Dr. Verwoerd, I am afraid it is the only way in which I can answer this question. This is very complicated ground that we are on now, and it is impossible for me just to answer in a simple way, but perhaps just as a preliminary answer I believe that this man has feelings that throughout his life he has been frustrated, that he has been up against it. I believe that he feels that society as a whole is against him. And I believe that he, in his peculiar assessment, assessed Dr. Verwoerd as the head of society, I think he identified Dr. Verwoerd as the leader. I think he was fed up with society as a whole, and the obvious man to attack was the man that he considered to be the leader of the society in which he was.

DR. COOPER: I asked him whether he blamed Dr. Verwoerd for everything. No, he didn't care to go so far as to say that he blamed Dr. Verwoerd for everything.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: How far did he go?

DR. COOPER: There was a big pause, there was a big 'or' and a hesitation, as there is in so many of the questions one put to him, but he said no, he cannot blame Dr. Verwoerd directly for what happened to him.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: How far did you probe this? You are a trained psychiatrist?

DR. COOPER: I probed it very far.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And did you get anything at all beyond that he didn't kill him because he disliked him? Did you get any idea as to why he did kill him?

DR. COOPER: I spent a great deal of time on this question of "Why did you kill Dr. Verwoerd?" In fact I tried to give him the impression that in fact I was getting fed up. I said to him - this I said to him at my last interview again. - I said "Look, I am going to ask you a simple question: why did you kill Dr. Verwoerd? And I want a simple answer." He said "I don't know. I can't explain. It is complex. Frustrations, you know", and we got no answer to this question. I asked him this question many times. I probed as forcefully as I could, and I could not get him to tell me why he killed Dr. Verwoerd, and, with respect, I came to the conclusion that he doesn't really exactly know why he killed Dr. Verwoerd.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: If he killed him as a result of the machinations of a delusion and he was a deluded individual, wouldn't he immediately be able to tell you what his delusion was and why he killed him?

DR. COOPER: My answer is yes, provided that the reason for him killing the man was purely and simply in response to the delusion. Then I would say yes, he would.

JUDGE BEYERS: I am sorry, I do not understand that. I have asked you that before, and I don't understand it now. You did tell me that in his telling you about killing the Prime Minister there was a political motive as well as other things probably. Didn't you tell me that he did not like his politics?

DR. COOPER: He told me that he didn't like his politics.

JUDGE BEYERS: And wasn't that associated with his killing?

DR. COOPER: It was associated with it but only indirectly.

JUDGE BEYERS: Then I cannot understand your giving an answer and saying he didn't give you any reason for doing so. I cannot understand that answer.

DR. COOPER: I say that because I repeatedly asked him to try and explain to me why he killed Dr. Verwoerd, and at no time was he able to offer me any explanation. When I am talking about these political issues, these are things I elicited from him quite apart from this question of: "Why did you kill Dr. Verwoerd?" He did not tell me about his political feelings directly in relation to my question of: "Why did you kill Dr. Verwoerd?" When I asked him that question, at no time was I able to elicit any coherent account of why he thought he did it. He said, in fact, that he doesn't know why he did it. He can hardly believe that he did do it. He knows he did it but he doesn't know why and

JUDGE BEYERS: Again I am having difficulty with this, as you have just told me that at least - according to what he told you - for days, if not longer - at least for a matter of days he was considering and contemplating and premeditating this killing.

DR. COOPER: That is correct.

DR. COOPER: He pointed out to me that there are many people that he hasn't liked in this world, that there are many people that have made him fed up, that he has been resentful towards, and he said that his not liking Dr. Verwoerd, that his dislike of Dr. Verwoerd was not such that he would therefore kill Dr. Verwoerd, and that he in fact couldn't understand really why exactly he killed Dr. Verwoerd.

JUDGE BEYERS: So this really had nothing to do with the tapeworm?

DR. COOPER: It did have something to do with the tapeworm, because the tapeworm has, in his mind, been instrumental in placing himself in a society and having been placed in that situation in society he is resentful of Dr. Verwoerd as an authority figure, and resentful in a personal sort of confused way to his policies... He said that he felt that the reasons underlying his killing of Dr. Verwoerd were far too complex. He couldn't explain to me why. And then he started talking about frustration, frustration, and the tapeworm, and not holding jobs, and having nowhere to live, and the whole thing became jumbled in his mind.

JUDGE BEYERS: I am sorry, I do not understand that. I have asked you that before, and I don't understand it now. You did tell me that in his telling you about killing the Prime Minister there was a political motive as well as other things probably. Didn't you tell me that he did not like his politics?

DR. COOPER: He told me that he didn't like his politics.

JUDGE BEYERS: And wasn't that associated with his killing?

DR. COOPER: It was associated with it but only indirectly.

JUDGE BEYERS: Then I cannot understand you're giving an answer and saying he didn't give you any reason for doing so. I cannot understand that answer.

DR. COOPER: I say that because I repeatedly asked him to try and explain to me why he killed Dr. Verwoerd, and at no time was he able to offer me any explanation. When I am talking about these political issues, these are things I elicited from him quite apart from this question of: "Why did you kill Dr. Verwoerd?" He did not tell me about his political feelings directly in relation to my question of: "Why did you kill Dr. Verwoerd?" When I asked him that question, at no time was I able to elicit any coherent account of why he thought he did it. He said, in fact, that he doesn't know why he did it. He can hardly believe that he did do it.

JUDGE BEYERS: That is the only delusion he had, isn't it, that you discovered? You didn't discover any other delusion?

DR. COOPER: No, hut X...

JUDGE BEYERS: Except vague ones that "society isn't very nice to me"?

DR. COOPER: No, but I found other aspects of his mental disorder which in my opinion are equally important to simply his being deluded.

JUDGE BEYERS: I must put it again. The fact that he could not give you a definite answer when you pressed him as to why he had killed Dr. Verwoerd shows that he did not kill him as a result of any definite delusion. Am I wrong in that?

DR. COOPER: That is correct. He did not kill Dr. Verwoerd because he believed he had a tapeworm ... I believe delusion did play a role in the killing.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he give you any other considerations that played a role, other than this political side?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What were the others?

DR. COOPER: The other consideration was his own personal feelings - what has happened to him personally. He talked in terms of: "Frustration, frustration, for years frustration, Doctor. You don't understand what it has meant to me this terrible frustration." Then one would say to him: "What frustration"? And he would say: "Well, for years I have just been wandering about. I have never been able to do anything." And then you'd say to him: "What has this got to do with killing Dr. Verwoerd?" "Well, you don't understand, it is frustration and tension building up."

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: If there is evidence that the accused killed the deceased for political motives, would this factor strongly suggest that he is responsible for his actions?

DR. COOPER: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You say "No"?

DR. COOPER: That is what I said.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Why not?

DR. COOPER: Because I believe that there was at least that there certainly was at least an element of political resentment in this man's mind. This man's background was such that he did in fact talk in terms of being opposed to certain aspects of Dr. Verwoerd's policy. He admitted that quite openly. It was clear to me that he had no liking for Dr. Verwoerd, and I asked him - I told him in fact that it seemed to me that this was a straightforward affair that he didn't like Dr. Verwoerd and therefore he killed Dr. Verwoerd. He pointed out to me that there are many people that he hasn't liked in this world, that there are many people that have made him fed up, that he has been resentful towards, and he said that his not liking Dr. Verwoerd, that his dislike of Dr. Verwoerd was not such that he would therefore kill Dr. Verwoerd, and that he in fact couldn't understand really why exactly he killed Dr. Verwoerd.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused tell you that he may have killed the Prime Minister because he blamed him for his own troubles? The accused's own troubles?

DR. COOPER: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: He never said that?

DR. COOPER: No. I put that specifically to him and he said he could not go so far as to say that.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused perhaps say to you that he didn't know why he killed the deceased?

DR. COOPER: He did definitely say he didn't know why he killed the deceased.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you know that on the night of the day that Dr. Verwoerd was killed, the accused only gave political reasons for the killing of Dr. Verwoerd to Dr. Sakinofsky?

DR. COOPER: I think he gave predominantly political - he spoke about things political in attempting to explain what happened.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you have Dr. Sakinofsky's report there?

DR. COOPER: Yes, I've got Dr. Sakinofsky's report and if I can read just one paragraph that my eye happened to light on to explain why I have difficulty with this political angle. Dr. Sakinofsky reports: "He said that Dr. Verwoerd had been against the ideal of a Cape to Cairo union which he (the patient) identified with the Commonwealth," I don't know what that means and I...

JUDGE BEYERS: I do.

DR. COOPER: If one wishes one can place some interpretations into it.

JUDGE BEYERS: I certainly can.

DR. COOPER: But if that was produced in an English examination it would be sent back as not a completely rational, coherent sentence. This is an intelligent man writing this, and he speaks all the time of these vague concepts.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: If I may interrupt, doctor, I don't think you read the whole paragraph. According to this report, it is reported as follows: He said that Dr. Verwoerd had been against the ideal of a Cape to Cairo union which he (the patient) identified with the Commonwealth. He claimed that his mother, from whom he had been separated, was called Von Willem, and that she was a member of an overseas Royal family, and this idea he apparently connected with his concern for the Commonwealth. He stated that he had brooded over the weekend.

JUDGE BEYERS: Why does that come before me, Mr. van den Berg? If that witness is being called then he can say that that is what he had been told. Now you are putting it to somebody else for what purpose? It does not go in via this witness, I can tell you that.

JUDGE BEYERS: So you mean that he was emphatic that his idea of killing the Prime Minister arose in his mind only after he had taken the job?

DR. COOPER: He spoke in terms of vaguely associating his mind with thoughts of killing Dr. Verwoerd at odd times long before, for instance, when he was in England. He heard people talking and he thought vaguely, he says, about the killing of Dr. Verwoerd. But he is quite adamant that when he took this post it was not in any way related to his wanting to plan to kill Dr. Verwoerd.

JUDGE BEYERS: So in England already - which I presume now puts us not days but possibly years before the event, does it?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: He was already - his mind was on this assassination of the Prime Minister?

DR. COOPER: Except that it was on the assassination of a lot of people. He says he thought vaguely in terms of killing a lot of people. It was not an isolated thing.

JUDGE BEYERS: That may be. It is a fair correction you make to what you have said. But let me get back again: You said years ago, when he was still in England, he admitted to you that he had formed an idea (you said a vague one) of wanting to kill the Prime Minister of South Africa?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: He then comes to this country and he takes a position in the House of Assembly?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: On the floor of the House, which is only by virtue of that position, he kills the Prime Minister?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: He doesn't, you say, relate all this lot together, but I must.

DR. COOPER: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: You say he never did it?

DR. COOPER: No, he said that at the time of taking this post at the Assembly it was not with the intention of killing Dr. Verwoerd. That this final plan to kill Dr. Verwoerd came up in his mind after he took this position.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S MOTIVE FOR KILLING DR. VERWOERD, PART I

Dr. Cooper's testimony and his cross-examination by van den Berg constitute the most persuasive proof that the Attorney-General is incompetent, or unaware of Tsafendas's statements to the police, or deliberately does not use the evidence in his possession in order to challenge Dr. Cooper's testimony. According to Dr. Cooper, Tsafendas could not really understand or explain to him why he killed Dr. Verwoerd. Dr. Cooper believed that it was because of his deluded mind, because Dr. Verwoerd was head of a society which was against Tsafendas, that the tapeworm was partly responsible and that he was "frustrated." Nevertheless, Dr. Cooper admits that Tsafendas never said to him that the tapeworm told him to kill Dr. Verwoerd or that it influenced his decision to do it; it is Dr. Cooper's conclusion that the tapeworm delusion played a role in the killing. In addition, Dr. Cooper testified that Tsafendas said he "didn't know why he killed the deceased."

However, Tsafendas knew perfectly well why he killed Dr. Verwoerd, according to the two statements he gave to the police. He explained it very clearly and in detail, with no suggestion that he was deluded or psychotic. Tsafendas told the police that he was “anti-apartheid, anti-colonialist,” that he had “a grudge against the South African government on account of its racial policies” and that he was in “sympathy with people fighting racialism.” He told the police that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he was “disgusted with his policies” and hoped that by killing him “a change of policy would take place.” He considered the Nationalist Government not to be “the real representative of all the South African people” and wanted to see a government that would represent all South Africans.²⁰⁵⁸ Tsafendas never said anything to the police about society being against him, or that he was frustrated or that he believed he had a tapeworm which controlled his life. What he told the police was exactly what he told people who knew him, which is what they testified to the police and to the author. Not a single one of those who were interviewed by the police or the author stated that Tsafendas ever told them what Dr. Cooper said that he told him.

The Attorney-General's comments showed that he had knowledge of Tsafendas's plan and his movements prior to the assassination. This information could have only been supplied to him by the police. This could have been done by giving him Tsafendas's statements or perhaps by a precis of them. If the Attorney-General had Tsafendas's statements, he would have seen all of the above and could have very easily used them to challenge Dr. Cooper's testimony. Again, we are not in position to know for sure what happened and whether van den Berg was in possession of this evidence.

The most astonishing thing of the cross-examination regarding Tsafendas's motive is the fact that van den Berg claims Tsafendas had given political reasons for killing Dr. Verwoerd and attempts to support his argument by using Dr. Sakinofsky's medical report on Tsafendas instead of Tsafendas's two statements to the police. The report stated clearly that Dr. Sakinofsky had found Tsafendas to be a schizophrenic based on what he was told by him, which were allegedly mostly his “political ideas.” Dr. Sakinofsky was the only person in the world who ever heard Tsafendas mention any of these “political ideas” of his. This section from Dr. Sakinofsky's report is extensively analysed in his testimony later in this chapter and therefore it is not included here. However, it would be best for the reader to read the analysis before proceeding further in this section. It is there proven that everything Tsafendas told Dr.

²⁰⁵⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

Sakinofsky was a deliberate lie, the same way he lied to Dr. Cooper.

Therefore, instead of using Tsafendas's two statements where he had given clear and logical political reasons for the killing of Dr. Verwoerd, van den Berg attempts to challenge Dr. Cooper's testimony about Tsafendas's motive by using a report where Tsafendas has also been diagnosed as schizophrenic. A report which, apart from the fact that it states that Tsafendas was diagnosed as schizophrenic, also does not contain Tsafendas's real political ideas as expressed by him to the police and to tens of witnesses! A report whose content's would appear as the words of a schizophrenic and not as a politically motivated man to anyone who might have heard it; but still van den Berg used it in an "attempt" to challenge Dr. Cooper.

The astonishing thing with this move by the Attorney-General is that while he could have very easily broken down Dr. Cooper's testimony about the motive by using Tsafendas's own words, he used instead a report that contained "confused and deluded ideas," similar to the ones mentioned by Tsafendas to Dr. Cooper. The result, instead of challenging Dr. Cooper's testimony, was to further reinforce the idea of Tsafendas as a schizophrenic but also, and perhaps more importantly, that he did not have any clear political thought! The damage for the Attorney-General could have been far bigger if he was not stopped from proceeding further with the report by Judge Beyers.

Instead of attempting to challenge the motive by giving Tsafendas's reasons as he told them to the police and which have been much quoted here – disgust with Dr. Verwoerd's racial policies, hopes that his death would change things etc. etc. - van den Berg claims the reasons were that Dr. Verwoerd was against the Cape to Cairo movement etc.! These are ideas that not a single witness ever heard Tsafendas mention while they were the exact opposite of his true ideas.

Van den Berg is shooting himself in the foot, and apparently deliberately. Was there any possibility that van den Berg really believed he could have challenged Dr. Cooper's testimony by using the report of Dr. Sakinofsky, a report where Tsafendas was diagnosed as schizophrenic? This must be unique in the history of law, where an Attorney-General attempts to challenge a diagnosis of schizophrenia by using a medical report that has found the accused to be schizophrenic. In addition, he attempts to challenge Tsafendas's supposedly deluded motive, but only presents more deluded and confused ideas about his motive. All this when van den Berg could have so easily challenged Dr. Cooper's testimony about motive by simply using Tsafendas's own two statements to the police.

None of Tsafendas's "political reasons" in Dr. Sakinofsky's report were really his own. More importantly, there couldn't have been a person who would have heard these reasons and would not have concluded that the person was not schizophrenic, apart from van den Berg. Even if we accept that van den Berg did not have in his possession Tsafendas's statements to the police, still he could surely not have believed he could challenge Dr. Cooper on the motive issue by using Dr. Sakinofsky's report. The above incident should be taught in law schools about how to NOT cross-examine someone, although the author has serious doubts if anyone in a fair trial in a democratic country would have even done what the Attorney-General did here.

Professor Alban Burke commented to the author about the motive and the 'delusion':

"It doesn't matter what the delusion is, what the content of the delusion is, the fact that he killed Dr. Verwoerd has got nothing to do with the tapeworm, because if he had heard voices, if the voice had said to him, 'kill Dr. Verwoerd', it was an idea that he already had, that was triggered by this hallucination, but he already had the idea that he was going to kill him. If he had been psychotic at the time that he was committing the murder, he would have been psychotic at the time of his arrest, because it doesn't disappear like that, so you would have picked up traces of that already in his statement. His statement [to the police] would not have made sense; you would have had a lot of irrelevant detail in there, so it is, again, not the picture of somebody who committed a crime whilst he was under, or in, a state of psychosis. I just want to give you a counter-argument on this, and it doesn't take anything of this away. The human brain does not create new information out of nothing, so let's say he had been exposed to stories of tapeworms, during a state of psychosis that story would have come out, that he could have blamed this on a tapeworm, but the motive for killing Dr. Verwoerd must have been there altogether, so whether he committed the crime whilst he was psychotic, or not, the motive must have been there. You don't suddenly decide, I don't like someone, when you're psychotic.

Whether he was psychotic or not, the motive was there before he was psychotic, so you can argue it a number of ways, whether he was psychotic or not doesn't really matter, but there was already the plan that he was going to ... or there was enough anger and hostility towards Dr. Verwoerd, for him to have created that. If he was a psychotic person, with murderous intent, there would have been other incidents of him attacking people, 'Don't look at me a strange way, don't follow me, I think you're a spy', whatever the case may be. There would have incidents of him, then, at least assaulting somebody else, which we don't find any evidence of, anywhere. So, if you say that Dr. Verwoerd is a dictator, yes he was; was he oppressing his people, yes, so by saying that Dr. Verwoerd is all these things, does not make him delusional. The fact that he killed Dr. Verwoerd still doesn't make him delusional. Assuming that he had an auditory hallucination that instructed him to kill Dr. Verwoerd, that could maybe have been the trigger for it, but the thinking, the planning, all of those things, were in place before he got the instruction to do it. He didn't walk into the parliamentary chamber that day and suddenly the voice came up and said, 'I must kill this person.'²⁰⁵⁹

Furthermore, as we have already seen, the police gathered evidence during their investigation which supported Tsafendas's statements regarding his political ideas. They took statements from people who knew him, declaring that Tsafendas was a Communist and anti-colonialist, politically engaged and a strong opponent of Dr. Verwoerd's policies and of apartheid:

- Edward Furness testified that Tsafendas wanted to "create a resistance to the regime of South Africa and mentioned civil disobedience and anything that would get the South African regime out of power."²⁰⁶⁰
- Tsafendas himself had testified to the police that he was a member of the South African Communist Party from 1937 to 1942, that he was against apartheid and colonialism, that he had joined the British anti-apartheid movement and the anti-slavery movement, and that he took part in anti-apartheid demonstrations in London.²⁰⁶¹
- The South African police had FOUR files on Tsafendas because of his Communist beliefs and political activities.²⁰⁶²
- PIDE held a 130-page file on Tsafendas, the Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis.²⁰⁶³ It opened in 1938, when he was just twenty-years old, when he ²⁰⁵⁹ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

²⁰⁶⁰ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁰⁶¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁰⁶² Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter XI, Paragraphs 4 and 5.

²⁰⁶³ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

was “suspected of distributing communist propaganda”²⁰⁶⁴ and went up to his release from PIDE custody on January 26, 1965 after spending three months in a cell in Beira accused of pretending to be a Christian missionary while in reality preaching “under the guise of religion in favour of Mozambique’s independence.”²⁰⁶⁵

- PIDE had withheld from the South African police the fact that they had such a file, along with other information “indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of Mozambique,”²⁰⁶⁶ thus hiding the extent of Tsafendas’s political activities. However, the South African embassy in Lisbon was aware of all this and on September 7, the day after the assassination, informed the Secretary for Foreign Affairs in Cape Town that Tsafendas “has a criminal record in Mozambique, where he is said to have been arrested on several occasions after creating public disturbances, including shouting pro-Communist anti-Portuguese slogans.” The communication said he had “never been convicted as courts have found him to be of unsound mind” and added, “If information correct, we suspect Portuguese may play down assassin’s previous political activities and we would suggest full details in this connection be sought.”²⁰⁶⁷
- Tsafendas was on the Stop List of the Department of Immigration because of his Communist beliefs and activities.²⁰⁶⁸ This list was also in the possession of the Security Police.²⁰⁶⁹
- The Department of Immigration had two files on Tsafendas:
 - a. “On file B.7771 there were, inter alia, references to Demitrios Tsafendakis’s alleged communist activities, as well as references to his unsuccessful applications for permanent residence. It is also evident from the file that he had been placed on the stop list.”²⁰⁷⁰
 - b. “On file G.8226 there were references to his alleged communist activities, and detailed references to his unsuccessful applications of 1936, 1938, 1941, 1946, 1947, 1948, 1950

²⁰⁶⁴ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰⁶⁵ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰⁶⁶ Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰⁶⁷ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Lisbon, to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 07 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁰⁶⁸ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter IV, Paragraph 19.

²⁰⁶⁹ General H. J. Den Bergh memorandum to the COE, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File VDSO 17-64, NASA.

²⁰⁷⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter IV, Paragraph 19.

and 1959 to enter the Union of South Africa.”²⁰⁷¹

- It was known to the South African police that Tsafendas was deported and exiled from Mozambique due to his Communist and anti-colonialist beliefs and activities.²⁰⁷²
- It was known that Tsafendas was arrested in Mozambique by the Portuguese Public Security Police on November 16, 1964 and subsequently handed to PIDE accused of “making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses.” It was also known that he had spent three months in custody being interrogated because of the accusations.²⁰⁷³
- It was known to the South African police that while he was in South Africa from 1939 to 1942 Tsafendas was “engaged actively in Communistic propaganda.”²⁰⁷⁴
- It was known that in 1938 in Mozambique he was dismissed from a job “owing to his Communist leanings” and that he was suspected of being “engaged in disseminating Communistic propaganda.”²⁰⁷⁵
- It was known that Tsafendas supported Mozambique’s independence from Portugal and wanted to see “a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the Mother-nation.”²⁰⁷⁶
- It was known to the police that Tsafendas, while in London, had associated with Commander Thomas Fox-Pitt, the secretary of the Anti-Slavery Society and one of the leading figures in the modern anti-slavery movement.²⁰⁷⁷
- It was known to the police that Tsafendas, while in London, had associated with prominent anti-apartheid activists David Gardener, Solly Sachs and Canon John ²⁰⁷¹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter IV, Paragraph 20.

²⁰⁷² Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Lisbon, to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 07 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA; Pretoria News, ‘Dimitrio A Red, They Alleged’, 7 September 1966: 1; The Chronicle (Bulawayo), ‘Tsafendas: Mystery Man of Parliament’, 8 September 1966: 1; The Daily News, ‘Tsafendas Seen As ‘Mystery Man’’, 8 September 1966: 17; The Herald (Melbourne), ‘The Killer: Five Passports and A Record of Subversion’, 8 September 1966: 1; The Rhodesia Herald, ‘Assassin Said To Have Been Deported From P.E.A. for Communist Connections’, 8 September 1966: 1.

²⁰⁷³ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰⁷⁴ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II A, Paragraph 26.

²⁰⁷⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II A, Paragraph 16.

²⁰⁷⁶ PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰⁷⁷ The Guardian, ‘Winding Back’, 30 September 1966: 10; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

Collins.²⁰⁷⁸

- Although PIDE had concealed important information about Tsafendas's political activities, it confided in a report which it gave to the South African police that Tsafendas had admitted after being arrested on one occasion that he was "a partisan of the independence of this province." The same report also stated that although "Tsafendas is mentally deficient", "it is true that one finds in him an obvious spirit of revolt in relation to the Portuguese Administration, and favouring the independence of Mocambique."²⁰⁷⁹
- Kenneth Ross was Tsafendas's landlord in Durban for two months in 1965. He told the police that Tsafendas "was very fond of discussing politics and gave me the opinion that he was well versed in politics. Tsafendas objected to the Communists being banished to Robin-Island [sic] because of their political opinions and actions. In general, Tsafendas opposed to every decision taken by the South African Government and freely voiced his opinion to me. He was blatantly opposed to the National Party policy, the policy of the present Government, and was definitely pro-Russian."²⁰⁸⁰
- Patrick O'Ryan told the police that Tsafendas "was against the state policy of both South Africa and Portugal" and that he "labelled the apartheid policies as unfair."²⁰⁸¹ Later O'Ryan described Tsafendas as getting "excited" when he talked about politics and saying that Dr. Verwoerd was a tyrant who was oppressing his people, that he was 'Hitler's best student' and if he (Tsafendas) ever get hold of him "he would bash his skull." He did not tell the police about Dr. Verwoerd being a tyrant as he believed it would be bad for Tsafendas.²⁰⁸²
- Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren, a security officer at the Mandini Paper Factory in Zululand, told the police that Nick Vergos said Tsafendas "was not Greek, but a kaffir ²⁰⁷⁸ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁰⁷⁹ Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰⁸⁰ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁰⁸¹ Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²⁰⁸² Patrick O'Ryan in A Question of Madness, this part is available in the rushes; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

and a Communist.”²⁰⁸³

- Robert Smith was a night clerk at the Durban Men’s Home where Tsafendas stayed for two months in 1965. He testified that Tsafendas was a Communist, “a fanatic on politics and seldom spoke of anything else” and had described “United Party and National Party officials and members as capitalistic roughs.” Tsafendas had told him that the “South African government’s policy was ‘rotten’” and often compared conditions in South Africa with those of Russia, stating, “Look at all the poor people in South Africa... such conditions don’t exist in Russia because Russia is a Communistic state.”²⁰⁸⁴
- Albert Vercueil said Tsafendas told him, “You are like your bloody government, but I will get you, and I will get your Prime Minister too.”²⁰⁸⁵
- Johannes Botha, a security officer, told the police that Nick Vergos characterised Tsafendas in a remark to him as the “biggest Communist in the Republic of South Africa.”²⁰⁸⁶
- Jan Johannes Albertus Fourie, a sergeant of the South African police, testified that Nick Vergos reported Tsafendas to him as “Communist bastard.”²⁰⁸⁷
- Father Hanno Probst reported Tsafendas to a security officer as a “communist and a dangerous person.”²⁰⁸⁸ He also suspected Tsafendas of being a political agitator, stirring up disaffection among young Blacks in the Mangete Reserve. “I say this because during the period Demetrios Tsafendas stayed at Mandini, the youngsters in the Mangete Reserve became unruly and aggressive. This, however, is only suspicion, because since the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd everything became quiet again and the youngsters controllable... He started swearing at the Mozambique government, saying it did nothing

²⁰⁸³ Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁰⁸⁴ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁰⁸⁵ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁰⁸⁶ Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁰⁸⁷ Jan Johannes Albertus Fourie statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁰⁸⁸ Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

for the black people.”²⁰⁸⁹

- Roelof Swiegers testified that Tsafendas “leaned towards the communist side.”²⁰⁹⁰
- Jacobus Bornman testified that Tsafendas “stood up a lot for the Coloureds” and “often criticised the South African government and seemed to have a grudge against Dr. Verwoerd.”²⁰⁹¹
- According to Inspector Horacio Ferreira, of the Portuguese Security Police in Mozambique, Tsafendas was “intense anti-White” and told him that “the Portuguese Government has never done anything for their non-Whites.”²⁰⁹²
- Keith Martincich testified that Tsafendas “on quite a few occasions he had discussed politics with me. He said he did not like the Government and that he was given a hard time in South Africa. He said the Government won’t reign very long.”²⁰⁹³
- Elizabeth Groves was Tsafendas’s landlady for six or seven weeks and a retired psychiatric nurse. About Tsafendas she said, “I received complaints that he was argumentative and towards me he said that we Afrikaners are a backward nation. It was clear that he had nothing good towards Afrikaners.”²⁰⁹⁴
- Antony Maw testified that the Portuguese authorities in Mozambique did not allow Tsafendas to enter the country on grounds of suspected Communist tendencies.²⁰⁹⁵
- A report by of Col. van Wyk of the South African police characterised Tsafendas as being “intensely anti-white.”²⁰⁹⁶
- A 1941 report from the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs said that Tsafendas was “dismissed from employment at a kiosk in Portuguese South Africa

²⁰⁸⁹ Father Hanno Probst statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁰⁹⁰ Roelof Erasmus Swiegers statement to the police, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van vorm Z 204. NASA.

²⁰⁹¹ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁰⁹² Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁰⁹³ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁰⁹⁴ Elizabeth Magdalene Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁰⁹⁵ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub File: 1/8. NASA.

²⁰⁹⁶ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

(Mozambique) on account of his Communist leanings.”²⁰⁹⁷

- Peter Pappas, whose café in Durban Tsafendas often visited, said Tsafendas “spoke angrily about the Salazar regime in Portugal and about the Mozambique police.”²⁰⁹⁸
- In July 1966, just two months before the assassination, Tsafendas gave a seventy-five-minute interview to a reporter named N.D. Hartford of the Cape Argus. They had already met at the beginning of the year when Tsafendas came to the newspaper and enquired whether there was any news of the freedom fighters of Mozambique. He described himself as an “anti-Portuguese rebel and an antagonist of the Portuguese dictatorship.”²⁰⁹⁹ Hartford’s impression was that Tsafendas was normal; he had no reason to believe that he was mentally defective. According to Hartford, Tsafendas spoke fluently without any noticeable gaps in the conversation.²¹⁰⁰
- Reports from Mozambique which emerged after the assassination said that Tsafendas was “violently anti-Portuguese.”²¹⁰¹
- Gillian Claire Liebermann, personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation, testified to the police that Tsafendas had attempted to discuss politics with her and that she had got the “impression that he does not agree with authority (Governmental or other). I cut him short, saying that in my capacity of my work I do not discuss politics. I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation.”²¹⁰²
- Jorge Perestrelo, who met Tsafendas in Lisbon, told Diario Popular that “one could see how anxious he was to oppose the authorities.”²¹⁰³

Nine witnesses told the author that Tsafendas believed the Whites in Mozambique, South Africa and Rhodesia had commandeered the land from its rightful owners. Thus these territories were “occupied lands” ruled by “occupiers” such as Dr. Verwoerd and Ian Smith. However, Tsafendas considered that Whites who accepted majority rule and opposed colonial ²⁰⁹⁷ Report of the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, 14 October 1941. K150, Vol. 3, File: W.D. 10/10/4102. Subject: Enquiry regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis. NASA.

²⁰⁹⁸ Rand Daily Mail, ‘Tsafendas: In the Eyes of A Friend’, 14 September 1966.

²⁰⁹⁹ The Cape Argus, ‘Brainwashed in Jail Held Man Told Argus.’ 7 September 1966: 3; Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 75.

²¹⁰⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 75.

²¹⁰¹ The Cape Argus, ‘180-Day Prison for Tsafendas?’, 7 September 1966: 1.

²¹⁰² Gillian Claire Liebermann statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²¹⁰³ Cuttings from the Diario Popular of 9.9.66. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

government had the right to live there.²¹⁰⁴

Eight more witnesses, Cleanthes Alachiotis, Nikolaos Billis, George Kantas, Nickolas Kambouris, Vasilis Perselis, Grigoris Pouftis and Michalis Vasilakis, Elias Constantaras, the first seven of them from the Eleni tanker, whose statements were not found in the NASA, maintained that they were interviewed by the South African police and testified that Tsafendas was a Communist, opposed apartheid and considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant and a dictator. They also testified that Tsafendas joined the military wing of the Greek Communist Party during the Greek Civil War.²¹⁰⁵

Six of the Eleni crew, Alachiotis, Billis, Kantas, Kambouris, Pouftis and Vasilakis, said they told the police that Tsafendas had characterised a possible assassination of Dr. Verwoerd as justifiable because he was a tyrant and the oppressor of his people; exactly the same thing Tsafendas repeated thirty years later to the three priests.²¹⁰⁶ The fact that Tsafendas said this just three days before the assassination adds strength to their claim. These six witnesses had also testified to the police, as Elias Constantaras had done,²¹⁰⁷ that Tsafendas described Dr. Verwoerd as “Hitler’s best student” and that he spat at his photograph in a newspaper. None of the above statements was used by the Attorney-General to challenge Dr. Cooper’s testimony, although they were in the possession of the police.

Several other witnesses who knew Tsafendas very well like Ira Kyriakakis, Father Nikolas Banovic, Katerina Pnefma, Helen Grispos, Fotini Gavasiadis, Nick Papadakis, Mary Eintracht, John and Antony Michaletos, Nick Augustides and Andreas Babiolakis stated to the author that Tsafendas was a passionate Communist who considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant, a dictator, and “Hitler’s best student.”²¹⁰⁸ Tsafendas kept characterising Dr. Verwoerd ²¹⁰⁴ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²¹⁰⁵ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nickolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²¹⁰⁶ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nickolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²¹⁰⁷ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

²¹⁰⁸ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

with those words as long as thirty years after the assassination.²¹⁰⁹ Andreas Babiolakis told the author that Tsafendas made no attempt to hide his detestation for colonialism and apartheid. Tsafendas told Babiolakis one day that “Verwoerd and [Portuguese Prime Minister] Salazar are fascist dictators and should be executed like Mussolini.”²¹¹⁰ Six years after the assassination, Tsafendas proudly told anti-apartheid activist and Umkhonto we Sizwe fighter Alexander Moumbaris, a fellow prisoner in Pretoria Maximum Security Prison, “I got τον Ντράη τους” (“their tough guy” or “their champion,” but in a pejorative sense).²¹¹¹

The vast majority of witnesses who were interviewed by the author – some 90% of them, excluding the four members of his defence team – testified that Tsafendas talked constantly about politics, that he was strongly against apartheid and colonialism, and that he was a passionate Communist. The rest had not discussed politics with him. Several witnesses, including Katerina Pnema, Mary Eintracht, Ira Kyriakakis, Antony, Irene and John Michaletos, Andreas Babiolakis and Michael Vlachopoulos characterised him as a “political animal.”²¹¹² Nick Augustides, for instance, remembers Tsafendas “talking violently about politics and about the apartheid system ... he was very passionate about politics.”²¹¹³

Furthermore, Tsafendas admired Ahmed Ben Bella, Fidel Castro, Amílcar Cabral, Frantz Fanon, Kwame Nkrumah and Patrice Lumumba, extensively quoting them until his death.²¹¹⁴ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis said of Tsafendas:

“He was very passionate about the independence of Mozambique, and generally about the independence of all colonies. He supported Pan-Africanism and deeply admired anti-colonialist leaders like [Fidel] Castro, [Ahmed] Ben Bella, [Kwame] Nkrumah, [Amílcar] Cabral ... His favourite was [Patrice] Lumumba; he cried when talking about him [because he was murdered]. He had read a lot about them and quoted them often; he could tell you everything about their lives. He even suggested books about them for me to read. He ²¹⁰⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²¹¹⁰ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

²¹¹¹ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017.

²¹¹² Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; Irene and John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²¹¹³ Nick Augustides in a personal interview, 19 February 2016.

²¹¹⁴ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

also often quoted [Frantz] Fanon, especially with regard to the assassination [of Dr. Verwoerd], when he was trying to justify it as a justifiable political act. He made me read two of his [Fanon's] books."²¹¹⁵

Father Minas Constandinou told the author about Tsafendas ideology:

"Dimitris was the most political person I ever met. He lived and breathed politics. Most of his conversations were about politics... he was very Communist, very, very Communist. But you know he was not one of those Communists who just say they are Communists. Dimitris had read a lot about Communism and he practised and preached Communism, he did not just claim to be one... he was also anti-colonialist and anti-apartheid. I think above all, he was that. He was very much for the independence of Mozambique and actually, not just Mozambique, but all the colonies in Africa.

Dimitris used to say that apartheid was like colonialism, because a few Europeans were ruling a land which belonged to Blacks because their ancestors had invaded and conquered it. I remember he used to call the Portuguese in Mozambique and I think the whites in South Africa too, 'conquerors' and 'occupiers;' he considered Mozambique and South Africa to be 'occupied lands,' conquered by foreigners. He used to say that Verwoerd was Hitler's best student, because he had learned from him some of his methods and laws and he was applying them to the Blacks."²¹¹⁶

Costas Poriakis told the author that Tsafendas was "a political animal. The most politicized person I've ever met," and that "there was fire in his eyes when talking politics, especially about the struggle for the independence of Mozambique and other countries in Africa. He was clearly pro-violence [for political reasons]."²¹¹⁷

Allan O'Ryan told the author that he often talked politics with Tsafendas, and that "He called the Afrikaans language a 'creole'. And he made it quite clear that Afrikaans was not a language, it was a Creole. That opened up the door for me to understand that he was with me in opposition to the Afrikaner people. He made it clear that he also didn't very much have time for the Afrikaners as a people. He was well read. I can tell you that he was well read and he knew very well what was happening in our own country. He knew what was happening there. So, in that sense, I had respect for him and I learnt a lot from him about ²¹¹⁵ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²¹¹⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²¹¹⁷ Costas Poriakis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

world history and about places that he'd travelled to."²¹¹⁸

Another issue is the disclosure that Tsafendas formed the idea of killing Dr. Verwoerd while in England. This might be correct, or partly correct. Tsafendas told Father Minas Constandinou that he decided to "do something against apartheid and Dr. Verwoerd" upon reading about the Sharpeville massacre.²¹¹⁹ The massacre took place on March 1960 and Tsafendas was deported from England to Germany in December 1959, so presumably and according to his statement to the police he was in Germany at the time and not in England. However, he also mentioned to the police in his statement that while in England in discussions he had with anti-apartheid activists and leftists it was argued that the "South African Prime Minister deserves to be shot."²¹²⁰

All the witness statements gathered by the police flatly contradicted Dr. Cooper's testimony, indeed challenged it at many points. Tsafendas never spoke to any of them about Dr. Verwoerd being responsible for his troubles, or that society was against him or that he was frustrated. Most importantly, Tsafendas, according to the witnesses, had a clear political mind and would have had no difficulty explaining why he acted as he did. Although several witnesses testified to the police that Tsafendas was a Communist, the word Communist was never heard during Dr. Cooper's testimony. Indeed, it was not to be heard throughout the entire summary trial and the fact that Tsafendas was deeply political would be concealed.

The Attorney-General could easily have challenged Dr. Cooper's statement and conclusions simply by reading Tsafendas's statement or by using some of the evidence mentioned above. However, he did nothing. Whether this was because of incompetence or because he was unaware makes no great difference to Tsafendas. The fact is that the evidence which would have proved Dr. Cooper wrong, or at least raised serious doubts, was not used. Instead van den Berg's cross-examination, though sounding aggressive, did not lead anywhere.

In 1994, when Tsafendas was in Pretoria Prison Hospital and apartheid had collapsed, Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis asked him, "Why did you do it, Mr. Tsafendas [kill Verwoerd]?" Tsafendas told the priest that he considered Verwoerd to be "a dictator and a tyrant" and that because he was the "brains behind apartheid," he hoped his death would lead to the collapse of that racist policy. He knew everything would not be transformed overnight, but he hoped Verwoerd's "removal" would be a stepping stone towards the end of apartheid.²¹²¹

²¹¹⁸ Allan O' Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019.

²¹¹⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²¹²⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

Tsafendas denounced the slain Prime Minister as a "monster" and an "evil person," and set out in detail the steps Verwoerd had taken to establish his iron rule and earn his title, "the architect of apartheid." Tsafendas told Bishop Ioannis that "Verwoerd was a dictator and a tyrant who oppressed his people. People were like slaves. He created apartheid... Even if you had lived here, you would not have been able to tell of its real extent [of apartheid] unless you had lived with Coloureds and Blacks. People were like slaves, they were only living to serve the Whites. Verwoerd did that. He was a monster, almost as bad as Hitler. I call him 'Hitler's best student' because he copied some of Hitler's Nurnberg Laws and applied them to the Blacks here ... Verwoerd would have done to the Blacks what Hitler did to the Jews if he did not need them to serve the Whites."²¹²²

Tsafendas then argued that his act was "an act of profound moral principle," morally justifiable because Verwoerd was a tyrant and a dictator. He quoted at length from the works of Frantz Fanon, the Martinican revolutionary, philosopher and psychiatrist, who had argued that violence against colonialism was not only necessary in order to free the people, but also legitimate. Tsafendas spoke at length of his admiration for Fanon and urged both priests to read his works. He then said that since he had the opportunity to rid the world of such monster, it was his "duty," his "social responsibility" to do so, a "tyrannicide." Tsafendas also argued that if he had not acted, his guilt would have equalled that of Verwoerd, because any person who is aware of a crime and does not intervene, or worse allows it to continue when he has the power to end it, is as guilty as the criminal himself. Father Minas disagreed with all this and reminded him that he had killed a man and that was unacceptable and a mortal sin, no matter who the person was and what he had done. Tsafendas then put this question to Bishop Ioannis and Father Minas:

"Every day, you see a man you know committing a very serious crime for which millions of people suffer. You cannot take him to court or report him to the police, because he is the law in the country. Would you remain silent and let him continue with his crime, or would you do something to stop him?”²¹²³

²¹²¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²¹²² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

Both priests replied that they would have wanted to stop the crime but they would not have killed a person to stop it. Tsafendas said, “Then you would have been as guilty as Dr. Verwoerd. You are guilty not only when you commit a crime, but also when you do nothing to prevent it when you have the chance.” The debate went on and on but Tsafendas refused to accept that he was wrong, producing arguments and counter-arguments to support his contention. He even used examples from history where tyrants and dictators were executed by the people. He characterised the killings of the Italian dictator Benito Mussolini and of Reinhard Heydrich, Gestapo chief and one of the architects of the Holocaust, as justifiable and as tyrannicides.²¹²⁴

Father Minas refused to accept that such acts were morally justifiable and asked Tsafendas if he would also have killed Hitler to save the people. Tsafendas replied “Yes” without hesitation. The priest then asked if he could travel back in time whether he would have killed Hitler or Dr. Verwoerd as babies, so that they would never grow up to become the monsters they became. Tsafendas replied, “No” and justified it with an answer that took both priests by surprise. He told them that if he was able to go back in time, instead of killing the infant Hitler and the infant Verwoerd, he would have tried to raise the two babies in a different environment so that they would have been protected from the influences of the time which helped turn them into the monsters they became. Tsafendas then used Jan-Jacques Rousseau’s observation that “all people are good by nature, but corrupted by society.”²¹²⁵ Nevertheless, Father Minas Constandinou remained adamant and insisted that Tsafendas had done the wrong thing by killing Verwoerd. At some point during the discussion, Tsafendas told Father Minas, “To paraphrase Dostoyevsky in Demons, it’s easy to condemn the offender; the difficulty is to understand him.”²¹²⁶

Father Minas had asked Tsafendas exactly that question (the infant Verwoerd) when he first visited him in prison the mid-1980s. He was so impressed by the answer, that when he first spoke to Bishop Ioannis about Tsafendas, the first thing he mentioned was his answer ²¹²³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²¹²⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²¹²⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²¹²⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

to the infant Hitler and infant Verwoerd question. When Bishop Ioannis put the identical question to him many years later, Tsafendas again gave him the same answer.²¹²⁷ Tsafendas's answers to the priests hardly fit with the way he was described by Dr. Cooper.

Sometimes, Tsafendas, in the presence of the priests, would proudly make a stabbing gesture and denounce Dr. Verwoerd yet again as "Hitler's best student." He told them that at first, he intended to kidnap the Prime Minister and offer to exchange him for political prisoners. When he realised that this was not possible, he considered placing a bomb in Parliament to kill all the MPs. However, he dismissed this idea because journalists and other innocent people and the only "good" MP, Helen Suzman, could also have died.²¹²⁸ Tsafendas always referred to his killing of Dr. Verwoerd as "the execution." He refused to use the word assassination. When the priests referred to "the assassination," Tsafendas would invariably correct them, saying, "the execution!"²¹²⁹

Tsafendas also always maintained to Liza Key that he had killed Dr. Verwoerd for political reasons; because he was an "immoral man" and "disagreed with his policies" as he specifically told her.²¹³⁰ Over the four years that she visited him in the Sterkfontein Hospital (1995-1999), he never told her anything to make her think that he could have been insane. She never doubted his sanity.²¹³¹

Henk van Woerden, a Dutch author and painter, who visited and interviewed Tsafendas in Sterkfontein Hospital in 1996 on a number of occasions and later wrote a book about him,²¹³² was interviewed by Carte Blanche Interactive in 2001. He said that when he asked Tsafendas why he killed Verwoerd, he replied, "I didn't like the man, I dislike what he's doing to the country, I don't agree [sic]. It was politically motivated." Van Woerden also stated that "the records that I have looked at suggest without a doubt that at the time he murdered Verwoerd, he was completely compos mentis."²¹³³

It should be noted here that on October 9, 2015, the sixteenth anniversary of Tsafendas's death, Rev. Ioannis Tsafaridis, then Bishop of the Greek-Orthodox Church in ²¹²⁷ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²¹²⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²¹²⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²¹³⁰ A Question of Madness.

²¹³¹ Liza Key in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

²¹³² van Woerden, H. (2000) A Mouthful of Glass.

²¹³³ Bronwyn Harris, "Arranging Prejudice: Exploring Hate Crime in Post-Apartheid South Africa", (Race and Citizenship in Transition Series, Centre for the Study of Violence and Reconciliation (SWOP), University of the Witwatersrand, 2004), p. 28.

Mozambique (now Bishop in Zambia and Malawi), described Tsafendas as “the Greek Che Guevara.” The bishop was laying the foundation stone for the church of Saint Dionysius, also to serve as a Greek Orthodox missionary centre, at Murakela village in Nangoma Murumbi, North Mozambique. Reminding the congregation that it was Tsafendas’s anniversary, Bishop Ioannis went on to describe him as the “man who killed apartheid,” as “a modern Greek hero who wanted to set the people of Mozambique and South Africa free,” “a man who wanted to liberate South Africa and Mozambique from the oppressors,” “an idealist,” “a concerned man about the people’s sufferings,” and as “a humble man, a man with dignity,” while he described Verwoerd’s assassination as “tyrannicide.” Finally, the bishop said that the new church was “in the memory of the revolutionary Dimitri Tsafendas.”²¹³⁴ ²¹³⁴ Manolis Dimelas, ‘Ο Πρώτος Ναός στη Μνήμη του Ελληνα “Φονιά του Απαρτχάιντ” [‘The first church in memory of the Greek assassin of apartheid’], The TOC, 20 October 2015. Retrieved from: <http://www.thetoc.gr/koinwnia/article/o-prwtos-naos-sti-mnimi-tou-ellina-fofia-tou-apartxaint>; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

Furthermore, nine days later, on October 18, 2015, Rev. Ioannis Tsafendaris, led a memorial service for Tsafendas in the Greek Orthodox Church in Maputo. The service was announced in the Press and by posters distributed throughout the city in which Bishop Ioannis heralded Tsafendas as “The Idealist.” During the service, Bishop Ioannis declared that Tsafendas was “was not an ordinary man, but a man who gave up his life for a principle and for the good of his fellow citizens ... an idealist who removed a tyrant ... a freedom-fighter who struggled for the independence of Mozambique and against apartheid.” He said that Tsafendas “laid a stepping stone towards the end of apartheid” and that his actions “were borne out of selflessness and for the public good.” He also said that although he never got the recognition he deserved, Tsafendas did not care that he was not hailed as a hero; according to his conscience, he did the right thing, regardless of what others might think. The bishop quoted Tsafendas as saying, “Do a good thing and then throw it in the sea; when you do a good thing, you don’t go around advertising it.” Bishop Ioannis concluded by saying that Tsafendas opened the “door of freedom” in South Africa and that “Mozambique and South Africa should recognise his efforts and stop believing apartheid’s lies.”²¹³⁵

Finally, Rev. Seraphim Kykkotis, currently Bishop of the Greek Orthodox Church in Zimbabwe and Angola and former Archbishop of Johannesburg and Pretoria, never met Tsafendas. However, he was very impressed from what he heard about him from the priests who were visiting him in prison and in the hospital, as well as Greeks who knew him in South Africa and elsewhere. Thus, Bishop Seraphim, in his 2013 book about Nelson Mandela (Αναφορές στο Νομπελίστα Νέλσον Μαντέλα), praised Tsafendas and his act. He characterised Tsafendas as “A Greek soul, a brave Cretan who raised in his stature the dignity of humanity against apartheid” and described his act as “heroic.” He concluded about Tsafendas that “people in his time called him a murderer, while others thought that he was crazy ... However, his motives were absolutely pure: he was a selfless fighter for people’s dignity who acted only out of love, to protect people’s rights.”²¹³⁶

TSAFENDAS’S MOTIVE, PART II: DR. VERWOERD’S MEETING WITH CHIEF JONATHAN

JUDGE BEYERS: There was the political motivation; is there anything else that made up ²¹³⁵ Press Release of the Orthodox Metropolis of Mozambique, 18 October 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafendaris in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²¹³⁶ Serafim Kykkotis, Αναφορές στο Νομπελίστα Νέλσον Μαντέλα, (Athens: Παπασωτηρίου, 2013), p. 47.

this complex of his intention to kill?

DR. COOPER: Yes. Well, again, this was, if you like to call it, a political thing again, but in my mind it was an irrational political thing. I recall that the question of Dr. Verwoerd's meeting with Jonathan, he says, came into it. Now, when one asks him exactly in what way it came into it, how it came into it, what this meeting had to do with his killing Dr. Verwoerd, one is again confronted with a very vague account, but one gathers that his idea concerning that meeting was that he felt that Dr. Verwoerd was not truly representative of the White population in this country, and he felt that Chief Jonathan was not truly representative of the non-European population in this country, and in some rather muddled perplexed way that seems to upset the accused and in his words, he says, that might have had something to do with it. But one cannot from that deduce that the accused killed Dr. Verwoerd because of that meeting. But his thoughts revolving around this meeting further muddled his mind, further confused his feelings and ideas about the political situation, and apparently contributed in some way to the mass of irrational thinking that collected in his mind and eventually burst forth in this aggressive act.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S MOTIVE FOR KILLING DR. VERWOERD, PART II

The above short but crucial testimony from Dr. Cooper is a good example of what was happening in the summary trial. Dr. Cooper said Tsafendas told him that "he felt that Dr. Verwoerd was not truly representative of the White population in this country." That is a very, very important statement.

What Tsafendas told the police in his statement of September 11, 1966 was that he believed "Dr. Verwoerd and Jonathan were, to my mind, not the real representatives of their countries. I wanted to see a government representing all the South African people. I do not think the Nationalist Government is representative of the people and I wanted to see a different government." Tsafendas did not say that Dr. Verwoerd was not truly representative of the White population of South Africa, but that he was not representative of all the people of South Africa. He also said that the Nationalist Government, formed from Dr. Verwoerd's party, was not representative of all the South African people.

The first important point here is that the Attorney-General again does not make any attempt to challenge Dr. Cooper's statement, which has a completely different meaning from what Tsafendas told the police. The Attorney-General could easily have challenged Dr. Cooper's statement just by reading out Tsafendas's statement. There is a massive difference between someone who is representative of the white population and someone who is representative of all the population. The Attorney-General either is not aware of Tsafendas's police statement or chose to ignore it and let Dr. Cooper's version pass unchallenged. A statement such as Dr. Cooper's, along with many that will follow, including some in the media, portray Tsafendas as completely different to the person he really is. They show him as a man who supported apartheid or disagreed with it for the wrong reasons, a man with confused political ideas.

What Tsafendas said in his statement, that Dr. Verwoerd was not representative of all South African people, clearly states his opposition to Dr. Verwoerd and to his government. What Dr. Cooper said, that Tsafendas believed Dr. Verwoerd did not truly represent South Africa's Whites, suggests Tsafendas accepted racial divisions. Tsafendas's statement to the police on this matter is compatible with statements taken by the police, and separately by the author, from people who knew Tsafendas's thinking. Tsafendas called Dr. Verwoerd a "dictator" long after the assassination to people like Fathers Minas Constandinou, Spiros Randos and Ioannis Tsafaridis, but also before the assassination to Patrick O'Ryan, Father Nikola Banovic, Andreas Babiolakis, Elias Constantaras, Nick Papadakis, Cleanthes Alachiotis, Nikolaos Billis, George Kantas, Nikolaos Kambouris, Katerina Pnefma, Michalis Vasilakis and many others.

As for the statement which Dr. Cooper alleges Tsafendas made, we do not know what Tsafendas's exact words were. It is possible that he said what Dr. Cooper claimed he said, perhaps in an attempt to mislead the psychiatrist about his true political ideas. It is also possible that Dr. Cooper misunderstood what Tsafendas said. Finally, it is possible that Dr. Cooper changed Tsafendas's statement and replaced his words "all South African people" with the "the White population" to support the defence's line. The author is not in position to know what happened for sure, but the fact is that another inaccurate statement by Dr. Cooper regarding Tsafendas's character and political ideology was accepted by the State when it would have been easy not only to challenge it, but to break it down.

It is also worth raising the possibility that Tsafendas is lying about the meeting in question being a motive. He told the police that the "idea of destroying Dr. Verwoerd entered my mind a few days after I started work as a messenger in the House of Assembly.”²¹³⁷

Tsafendas also told two witnesses that he decided to assassinate Dr. Verwoerd as soon as he got the job in the Parliament.²¹³⁸ The author is not in position to know whether Tsafendas was aware at the time of the forthcoming meeting, but it is likely that he was not. However, it is possible that he was aware of the meeting in advance since he read the newspapers every day but also because he was working at the Parliament. It is a fact though, that Tsafendas never mentioned this meeting as a motive to any of the witnesses he spoke to about the assassination.

²¹³⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²¹³⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

Although the police had ample evidence to prove that Dr. Cooper's statement was inaccurate, the Attorney-General did not use it. Again, we are not in position to know whether this was from incompetence, or a deliberate attempt to conceal Tsafendas's real political ideas, or because he did not have the information. The result was that another false statement by Dr. Cooper was accepted by the court and subsequently by the public.

TSAFENDAS'S PLANNING OF THE ASSASSINATION

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Was it weeks before he did it that he conceived the intention of committing this crime?

DR. COOPER: I gathered from him it was at least several days.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: From what he told you, when did he say he wanted to kill the Prime Minister?

DR. COOPER: I can't answer that. I just got from him that he had vaguely in his mind planned to kill him, and then, on that particular day he decided that this was now going to be the time he was going to do it.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Didn't he tell you that he wanted to kill the Prime Minister on the 3rd September?

DR. COOPER: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he tell you that he originally wanted to shoot the Prime Minister?

DR. COOPER: Yes, he told me that he had originally tried to buy a revolver and that he had bought some sort of gas pistol but that it did not function properly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he tell you that he arranged to buy a Beretta pistol?

DR. COOPER: I don't recall the name Beretta, no.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Didn't he say that he had arranged to buy a Beretta pistol from a seaman on the tanker Eleni?

DR. COOPER: He did give me a vague, garbled account of his thoughts and the happenings on that vessel. He did talk vaguely in terms of references made on that boat to ill-feeling concerning the political policies of Dr. Verwoerd, and he did tell me of thoughts crossing his mind concerning the killing of Dr. Verwoerd.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Didn't the accused say that he waited for his salary at the end of August, 1966, before buying the pistol?

DR. COOPER: No. He didn't tell me that.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Didn't he tell you that he intended escaping on the tanker Eleni after shooting the Prime Minister?

DR. COOPER: Yes, he did tell me, again in vague terms, of how he contemplated escaping on this ship. This was when he was thinking in terms of the shooting, not when he was apparently thinking in terms of the stabbing. He was very adamant that he had no plan of escape although thought of escape after committing this act.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he tell you that he had obtained American dollars at the bank in order to purchase the pistol?

DR. COOPER: Yes, I do recall him saying something about American dollars.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused say that he changed his plans after he had purchased the gas pistol, which was not suited to his purpose?

DR. COOPER: No, he didn't really talk to me in terms of plans; when he discussed the eventual stabbing with me he didn't really know why he did what he did.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Didn't the accused tell you that he...

JUDGE BEYERS: I am sorry, I do not understand that. I have asked you that before, and I don't understand it now. You did tell me that in his telling you about killing the Prime Minister there was a political motive as well as other things probably. Didn't you tell me that he did not like his politics?

DR. COOPER: He told me that he didn't like his politics.

JUDGE BEYERS: And wasn't that associated with his killing?

DR. COOPER: It was associated with it but only indirectly.

JUDGE BEYERS: Then I cannot understand you are giving an answer and saying he didn't give you any reason for doing so. I cannot understand that answer.

DR. COOPER: I say that because I repeatedly asked him to try and explain to me why he killed Dr. Verwoerd, and at no time was he able to offer me any explanation. When I am talking about these political issues, these are things I elicited from him quite apart from this question of: "Why did you kill Dr. Verwoerd?" He did not tell me about his political feelings directly in relation to my question of: "Why did you kill Dr. Verwoerd?" When I asked him that question, at no time was I able to elicit any coherent account of why he thought he did it. He said, in fact, that he doesn't know why he did it. He can hardly believe that he did do it. He knows he did it but he doesn't know why and...

JUDGE BEYERS: Again I am having difficulty with this, as you have just told me that at least - according to what he told you - for days, if not longer, at least for a matter of days, he was considering and contemplating and premeditating this killing.

DR. COOPER: That is correct.

JUDGE BEYERS: I think you told me that he went and bought the knives on that morning?

DR. COOPER: That was what he told me.

JUDGE BEYERS: Then I don't follow why he told you that he does not know why he killed him, because he must have been thinking about it for days.

DR. COOPER: I know, but this is the point, he premeditated it apparently from what he said, and he did it. But when one asks him why he did it, he cannot gather a coherent system of ideas in his mind to explain why he did it. He thought of doing it apparently, he planned to do it, he did it. But why he did it, what was in his mind concerning the doing of it, this he was unable to tell me despite repeated interrogations.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S PLANNING OF THE ASSASSINATION

The surprising thing here is not Dr. Cooper's testimony, but the cross-examination by the Attorney-General. Van den Berg demonstrates knowledge of Tsafendas's movements prior to the assassination, information which could only have come from Tsafendas himself and presumably from the statements he gave to the police. However, up to this point, van den Berg seemed not to have access to the Tsafendas's statements since he did not use any of the information in them to challenge Dr. Cooper's statements, especially with regards to his motive and the tapeworm.

The question therefore is, where did he get the information from? If it was from Tsafendas's statements to the police, why did not he use the rest of the information to challenge Dr. Cooper? Of course, there could be other explanations as to how van den Berg got the information, perhaps from the police but possibly only on specific areas, the rest being withheld. It is also conceivable of course that van den Berg only used those parts from the statement he wanted and deliberately did not mention the rest in an attempt not to reveal Tsafendas's real motive. Whatever the explanation, the fact that van den Berg used only parts of Tsafendas's statements is secondary to the main issue, being why he failed to challenge Dr. Cooper by citing Tsafendas's statement with regard to why he killed Dr. Verwoerd.

TSAFENDAS'S "NEW RACE" THEORY AND BEING UNSYMPATHETIC TOWARDS COLOURED AND NATIVES

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused perhaps say to you that he didn't know why he killed the deceased?

DR. COOPER: He did definitely say he didn't know why he killed the deceased

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: he tell you that he may have killed the deceased because he blamed the deceased for all his troubles - the accused's troubles?

DR. COOPER: No, he did not word it in that way.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Didn't the accused tell you that he believed, as he called it, in evolution?

DR. COOPER: Evolution? Yes, he did talk in terms of evolution.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And didn't he explain that by this he meant that members of all the races in South Africa should be free to intermarry so that a new race could develop?

DR. COOPER: Well, he gave me an exposition on evolution and its relation to the...

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Please reply to my question?

DR. COOPER: But he didn't tell me the job properly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Yes. Did the accused explain that members of all races in South Africa should be free to intermarry so that a new race could develop?

DR. COOPER: He put forward that view, as well at another time putting forward a view that he felt unsympathetic towards the Coloureds and natives.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And didn't he tell you that he was against the Immorality Act?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Didn't he say that he thought that Dr. Verwoerd was standing in the way of this evolution?

DR. COOPER: I don't recall him saying that in so many words but I accept that he implied something of that sort.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused tell you that he may have killed the Prime Minister because he blamed him for his own troubles the accused's own troubles?

DR. COOPER: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: He never said that?

DR. COOPER: No. I put that specifically to him and he said he could not go so far as to say that.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S ABOVE TESTIMONY

TSAFENDAS BEING UNSYMPATHETIC TOWARDS COLOUREDS AND NATIVES

Here Dr. Cooper makes the most extraordinary of his statements - that Tsafendas was unsympathetic towards South Africa's Coloureds and natives. Firstly, the Attorney-General himself is aware that Tsafendas applied to be reclassified as Coloured since he had included this information in his memorandum of October 3, 1966, regarding Tsafendas.²¹³⁹ Tsafendas had given as one of the reasons for his application the fact that he regarded himself as a Coloured.²¹⁴⁰ This was hardly the act of a man who did not like such people.

In addition, Tsafendas testified to the police that he was anti-apartheid, anti-colonialist, and anti-slavery, that he had “a grudge against the South African government on account of its racial policies,” that he was in “sympathy with people fighting racialism” and that he had participated in anti-apartheid demonstrations.²¹⁴¹ He also wanted to “create a resistance to the regime of South Africa and mentioned civil disobedience and anything that would get the South African regime out of power”²¹⁴² and he “opposed every decision taken by the South African government.”²¹⁴³ For a more detailed account of Tsafendas’s political ideas and preferences, see the references in Dr. Cooper’s testimony regarding his motive for killing Dr. Verwoerd.

²¹³⁹ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkoperij. NASA.

²¹⁴⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 39.

Out of approximately two hundred people who were questioned by the police and the Commission, not one said anything to agree with Dr. Cooper’s statement. On the contrary, several people told the police that Tsafendas was friendlier to Coloureds than to Whites and that he supported them:

- Patrick O’Ryan testified that Tsafendas was “favourable towards the Coloureds and he repeatedly applied to be classified as a Coloured.”²¹⁴⁴
- Jacobus Bornman testified that Tsafendas “stood up a lot for the Coloureds.”²¹⁴⁵
- A report by Col. van Wyk of the South African police characterised Tsafendas as being “intensely anti-White.”²¹⁴⁶
- Col. McIntyre of the South African Police wrote in his report regarding Tsafendas on October 3 that Tsafendas told “several people that he was upset because he was not classified as a Coloured.”²¹⁴⁷
- According to Inspector Horacio Ferreira, of the Portuguese Security Police in Mozambique, Tsafendas was “intense anti-White” and told him that “the Portuguese Government has never done anything for their non-Whites.”²¹⁴⁸
- Albert Vercueil, Tsafendas’s boss at F.A. Poole Engineering, testified that Tsafendas

²¹⁴¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²¹⁴² Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²¹⁴³ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²¹⁴⁴ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²¹⁴⁵ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²¹⁴⁶ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²¹⁴⁷ ‘The history of the person who inflicted the fatal wounds to the late Dr. Verwoerd’ drafted by Col. McIntyre, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Subject: Leer W.D. 10/10/4102 der Stafendas. NASA.

²¹⁴⁸ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

“bullied the other Portuguese workers. He had fights with several white workers”²¹⁴⁹ but he never argued with Black workers.²¹⁵⁰

- Jose Baltazar told police that when Tsafendas “was in the presence of Whites he said little or nothing, but was friendly and talkative with the Bantu. On one or two occasions Tsafendas, while talking with Bantu, stopped talking when he approached.”²¹⁵¹
- Gladstone Dunn testified that Tsafendas had told him that the South African Government “was not playing fair with the non-Whites. He said that the wages paid to non-Whites was very unsatisfactory, as well as the political situation.”²¹⁵²
- Meldon Tillek said Tsafendas told him that “the White people always looked down on him and that consequently he felt more at home amongst Coloured people.”²¹⁵³
- Ralph Lighton testified that Tsafendas “used to mix with the Coloureds rather than with the Europeans.”²¹⁵⁴
- According to Nikolaas Nel, Tsafendas “was certainly unpopular among White workers” and “adapted more to the non-Whites.”²¹⁵⁵
- Elizabeth Groves was Tsafendas’s landlady for six or seven weeks and a retired psychiatric nurse. About Tsafendas she said, “I received complaints that he was argumentative and towards me he said that we Afrikaners are a backward nation. It was clear that he had nothing good towards Afrikaners.”²¹⁵⁶
- Keith Martincich testified that Tsafendas “said the coloureds were better than the Europeans. He said they were more friendly, and had more sense than the Europeans, and showed more understanding. When I said he was talking nonsense, he got cross and lifted himself as though he wanted to tackle me. I noticed that he was very familiar with the ²¹⁴⁹ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²¹⁵⁰ Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²¹⁵¹ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²¹⁵² Gladstone Dunn statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²¹⁵³ Meldon Tillek statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²¹⁵⁴ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²¹⁵⁵ Nikolaas Jacobus Nel statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²¹⁵⁶ Elizabeth Magdalene Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

coloured crew on the boat, about which I reprimanded him.²¹⁵⁷

The next day in the summary trial, Peter Daniels, a defence witness, testified in court that Tsafendas “preferred to be amongst the Coloured community” and that “he would like to be among the Coloured community, make himself a Coloured man.”²¹⁵⁸ Although all this evidence gathered by the police proved that Dr. Cooper’s statement was inaccurate, the Attorney-General made no attempt to challenge it. Again, we do not know if this was through lack of access to the information or incompetence or if he decided it would be better for Tsafendas to appear “unsympathetic towards the Coloureds and the natives.”

The author asked forty-six people who knew Tsafendas well about Dr. Cooper’s statement that he was unsympathetic towards the Coloureds. No-one agreed, indeed all stated that the reality was the exact opposite. These are some of the responses from people who knew him best:

- Katerina Pnefma said Dr. Cooper “does not know what he is talking about. Dimitri always defended the Coloureds and the Blacks from the Whites. He was fired from jobs because he supported them.”²¹⁵⁹
- Father Michalis Visvinis told the author that Dr. Cooper “could not have been more wrong.”²¹⁶⁰
- Alexander Moumbaris characterised the comment as “absurd” and a “lie.”²¹⁶¹
- Antony Michaletos laughed at the suggestion and said “What!” in disbelief when he heard about it. He described the suggestion as “preposterous.” He added, “This is real slander. Dimitris was teaching here in Lourenço Marques English to Black children for free, for free, because he wanted to, he wanted to help them because they were poor.”²¹⁶²
- Father Nikola Banovic told the author: “Everything this doctor [Dr. Cooper] has been saying is inaccurate; it’s not true about Dimitri. He was nothing like this, it’s like he had either examined a different person or he was a bad doctor.”²¹⁶³
- Father Minas Constandinou told the author: “I would not say that Dimitris was more or ²¹⁵⁷ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²¹⁵⁸ Peter Daniels testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²¹⁵⁹ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²¹⁶⁰ Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

²¹⁶¹ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017.

²¹⁶² Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016.

²¹⁶³ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

less sympathetic towards a race, for him all the people were the same and he believed they should all have equal rights. He was very much against the injustices, he wanted to correct them if he could. If, let us assume, apartheid was the other way around and the Blacks were treating the Whites they way were treated by them during apartheid, Dimitris would still have opposed it and fought against it.”²¹⁶⁴

- Fotini Gavasiadis called the statement “ridiculous,” stating that Tsafendas was “the exact opposite.”²¹⁶⁵
- Mary Eintracht said she was completely surprised to hear such a statement. “Are you serious? I never heard that. It can’t be true. No one would have said that about Dimitri.”²¹⁶⁶
- Andreas Babiolakis said, “These people [Dr. Cooper and Smorenberg] must have been hallucinating, not Dimitri, if this is what they said about him.”²¹⁶⁷
- Ira Kyriakakis told the author that Tsafendas was “an idealist. He was very passionate about politics; he despised racism and colonialism and wanted Mozambique to get rid of the Portuguese; he was very strong in favour of Mozambique’s independence.”²¹⁶⁸
- Michalis Vasilakis said Dr. Cooper’s statement was “one of the biggest nonsense I have heard in my life.”²¹⁶⁹

²¹⁶⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²¹⁶⁵ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

²¹⁶⁶ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

²¹⁶⁷ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

²¹⁶⁸ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

²¹⁶⁹ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

It should also be noted that even David Bloomberg told the author that Tsafendas "felt Coloured, and he was more comfortable with the Coloured people, and he had been living with Coloured people in Cape Town."²¹⁷⁰ In addition, Tsafendas got into a fight with Nick Vergos after he supported two Black workers who were exploited by Vergos.²¹⁷¹ Finally, Tsafendas took some of the Eleni seamen to a township in Cape Town where Blacks lived in an effort to show them at first-hand how some people lived under apartheid. He had also urged the seamen to spend as little money as possible while in Cape Town in order not to contribute to South Africa's economy.²¹⁷² These are hardly the attitudes of someone who was unsympathetic towards Coloureds. It seems unlikely that Dr. Cooper was right of Tsafendas's ideological and political beliefs after six hours of discussion with him rather than people who knew him all his life, or who lived with him for many months.

TSAFENDAS'S "NEW RACE" THEORY

Regarding Tsafendas's "new race" theory, Dr. Cooper and van den Berg talked about it as if Tsafendas had an insane idea about creating a new race of humans. In fact, what he meant is not clear from what he told the police and the genesis of the statement was published in the Press in a distorted form. John Marvis also spoke about it in his statement to Col. van Wyk on September 20, 1966, but did not give all the details.²¹⁷³

Tsafendas spoke about a "new race" one evening in the Scala Café in Beira.²¹⁷⁴ According to Nick Papadakis and Andreas Babiolakis, who were present, they were all discussing politics. Tsafendas believed that the world would become a better and safer place if there were no countries, no religions, and all people were the same colour. When asked how the last of the three could be achieved, Tsafendas had jokingly said that "everyone should have sex with someone of a different colour so a new race will be created where everyone will be the same colour or at least they will all be mixed! Only then will there be no ²¹⁷⁰ David Bloomberg in a personal interview, 6 April 2014.

²¹⁷¹ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 5 August 2011; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²¹⁷² Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 5 August 2011; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²¹⁷³ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²¹⁷⁴ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

racism and discrimination anymore!"²¹⁷⁵ It was clear to them that Tsafendas said the sex part as a joke but that he was serious about the rest of his theory.²¹⁷⁶ Many a serious idea has been told in such a way as to indicate it is intended as half-truth and half-joke. When Barack Obama was asked by Stephen Colbert why he got the Nobel Peace Prize, he replied, "to be honest, I still don't know."²¹⁷⁷

Tsafendas would later repeat broadly the same theory and comment about sex in the same conversational context, still half-serious and half-joking, to several people. He repeated the same idea about the three things that, according to him, needed to be done for the world to become a better place; he never told anyone only about the sex part (the sex part was always a part of the three and not a separate issue). He truly believed that the only way to eradicate racism was to dismantle barriers such as colour, religion and national borders; he believed this until he died.²¹⁷⁸ It was hardly an insane notion. Sir Antony Sher, the British-South African actor and playwright, considered Tsafendas's idea a "rather wonderful ideal for the future."²¹⁷⁹

It is worth mentioning here that in 1998, the American actor and film director Warren Beatty produced, wrote, directed and starred in a film titled Bulworth. The movie's hero, US Senator Bulworth, played by Beatty, declared that in order to eradicate racism, "[we should] eliminate white people, black people, brown people, yellow people ... get rid of 'em all! All we need is a voluntary, free spirited, open-ended program of procreative racial deconstruction. Everybody just gotta keep fuckin' everybody till they're all the same colour." This is effectively what Tsafendas said thirty-five years earlier. Audiences laughed and no-one questioned Warren Beatty's sanity. The film was described by The New York Times as a "political satire with jubilant wit and energy,"²¹⁸⁰ and the prominent critic Roger Ebert said, "You realize that if all politicians were as outspoken as Bulworth, the fragile structure of our system would collapse, and we would have to start all over again ... It's better when ²¹⁷⁵ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

²¹⁷⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

²¹⁷⁷ Heather Saul, 'Barack Obama on Stephen Colbert: "To Be Honest, I Still Don't Know What My Nobel Peace Prize Was For"', The Independent, 18 October 2016. Retrieved from <http://www.independent.co.uk/news/people/barack-obama-stephen-colbert-nobel-peace-prize-a7367321.html>

²¹⁷⁸ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

²¹⁷⁹ Unsworth (Sunday Times), 21 September 2003, 'A Play About Assassination, A Tapeworm and Notions of Madness.'

²¹⁸⁰ Janet Maslin, 'White Bread Senator Turns Homeboy', The New York Times, 15 May 1998.

Bulworth abandons political correctness and says what he thinks, however reckless, as when he theorizes that the solution to racial difficulties is for everybody to bleep everybody else until we're all the same colour."²¹⁸¹ People applauded the line when it was delivered by Beatty, but Tsafendas was ridiculed for saying the same thing thirty-two years earlier.

²¹⁸¹ Roger Ebert, 'Bulworth.' Rogert Ebert.com, 22 May 1998. Retrieved from: <http://www.rogerebert.com/reviews/bulworth-1998>

Furthermore, Tsafendas's comment was taken out of context. Even worse, the rest of his thinking, the eradication of countries and religions, was removed and only the part about the "new race" was kept, in order to present his theory as the product of lunacy. It is possible that Tsafendas did not explain his beliefs to Dr. Cooper in detail and did not include the other two "necessities" for a better world, and that was why the doctor only mentioned this. However, Tsafendas never told anyone about the race issue as a separate issue, always mentioning it as part of his wider beliefs.

We should remember here that Tsafendas had told the police in his statement that he considered Dr. Verwoerd not to be the representative of all South Africans. He had repeated the same to more than fifty witnesses and had repeatedly called Dr Verwoerd a dictator. Nevertheless, Dr. Cooper told the court that Tsafendas had told him that he considered Dr. Verwoerd not to be the real representative of the White South Africans. None of the witnesses questioned by the police, the Commission or the author mentioned that Tsafendas ever said anything like this, while more than fifty testified that he had told them the same thing he told the police. Although it is possible that Tsafendas made such comments to Dr. Cooper, the possibility that the doctor deliberately slightly paraphrased Tsafendas's words or took them out of context in order to support the defence's line cannot be excluded.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S EFFICIENCY AS MESSENGER

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: If I put it to you that he performed his work in the House of Assembly normally and efficiently, would you agree with that?

DR. COOPER: I would like to know details of that. I would say that a highly intelligent man performing as a messenger in court may well be able to perform fairly reasonably, but I would suspect in this man that he didn't in fact perform all that reasonably. I would be surprised, in fact, that he performed altogether satisfactorily.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: But he was a messenger in the Press Gallery, and if he didn't perform his duties efficiently wouldn't he have been dismissed?

DR. COOPER: I understand that he was only there for a short time.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: He was there from the 1st August to the 6th September?

DR. COOPER: Yes. I must draw a conclusion from this that he wasn't completely and obviously hopeless and inefficient in his duties.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: But if there is evidence that he performed his duties normally and efficiently, you won't deny that?

DR. COOPER: If the evidence is such, I must accept it.

COMMENTS ON THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S STATEMENTS REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S EFFICIENCY AS MESSENGER

The Attorney-General here does something strange. He suggests that Tsafendas's work in the House of Assembly was efficient and normal. He seems to know this for a fact, but he doesn't adduce any evidence and leaves the issue hanging. This might not look quite odd until we see what happens the next day. With the topic now introduced by van den Berg for debate and discussion, the defence took full advantage. Gerald Shaw, a defence witness and parliamentary correspondent for The Cape Times, testified that Tsafendas's work was not satisfactory. Even though this contradicted the Attorney-General's reference to Tsafendas's efficiency, van den Berg did nothing to support his claim and the evidence he mentioned never made an appearance in court. We will look at this case in greater detail in the following day's proceedings.

Going back to the evidence of efficiency that van den Berg referred to, five messengers from the Assembly testified to the police and the Commission of Enquiry. They were Piet Burger²¹⁸² the Chief Messenger, senior messengers Sydney Wiehand²¹⁸³ and Petrus Schuin,²¹⁸⁴ all three of whom interviewed and appointed Tsafendas, and another two messengers, Fred Feinauer²¹⁸⁵ and Felix Miles.²¹⁸⁶ None of the five stated that Tsafendas was not efficient or that they had noticed anything wrong with him. On the contrary, Schuin described Tsafendas as an ordinary man and "same as any other person that had worked there."²¹⁸⁷ Sydney Wiehand said that for a person to be appointed as a messenger, "he must be of sober habits. He must be always neat, and then also we ask him if he's got any sickness, ²¹⁸² Piet Bester Burger testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

²¹⁸³ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

²¹⁸⁴ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

²¹⁸⁵ Fred Feinauer statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²¹⁸⁶ Felix George Miles statement to the police, 7 October 1966. K150, Vol. 2, File: 1. NASA.

²¹⁸⁷ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

or anything like that, then he must tell us. If so, then he must get a report from the doctor that he is fit for duty.²¹⁸⁸ Since he was appointed, Tsafendas must have fulfilled all of these conditions.

Wiehand testified that he never received any complaints about Tsafendas's work, but he was told by fellow messenger, Pienaar, that Tsafendas was eating a lot, then sitting and sleeping. However, Wiehand did not see this as a complaint, testifying that most messengers, including himself, ate and then slept until they were required to work again. In fact, Pienaar's comment had more to do with his observation of Tsafendas's eating habits; he thought he was overeating.²¹⁸⁹

The messengers' statements should have been known to the Attorney-General, but none of them was used to support his argument that Tsafendas's work was efficient. More surprisingly, none of Tsafendas's colleagues at Parliament was asked to testify at the summary trial. The State could certainly have used their testimonies to support its argument about Tsafendas's efficiency and challenged Dr. Cooper's diagnosis. It would also have been useful also for all those who examined Tsafendas to speak to the messengers, not only to find out what type of man he was, but to hear their opinions as to his mental state shortly before the assassination. After all, the messengers had seen him virtually every day for five weeks.

TSAFENDAS'S NO ESCAPE PLAN

ASSESSOR: You mean he never planned an escape?

DR. COOPER: He not only never planned an escape, he says he gave no thought to escape. The question of escape, in fact, did not enter his mind, and from what he did and the way he did it, it does seem to support that. It seems to me that anybody who had given it any thought should have realised that there was no possible hope of escape.

JUDGE BEYERS: But a lot of rational people have done things with no hope of escape. Every Kamikaze pilot who went down on an American warship had no hope of escape, and he wasn't a madman.

DR. COOPER: Yes. This is related to a fanatical patriotic drive that some of these people ²¹⁸⁸ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

²¹⁸⁹ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

had during the war. But I don't believe that this is applicable in this case at all.

ASSESSOR: You said a little while ago in your opinion the accused has never given the eventualities of this crime a thought. I think you said that as a fact he never got as far as thinking about it. Did you perhaps ask him whether he had thought about escape?

DR. COOPER: Oh yes. I asked him in some detail as to whether he thought about the escape; whether he thought he had a chance of escape; what sort of plans of escape he visualised, and he was persistent - apologetically I may say - he quite apologetically said: "I am sorry, my mind is blank about that. My mind was blank about that. I just never gave the question of escape any thought at all, I just didn't think one way or the other about escaping," Following on this, I said to him: "Then does this mean that you decided to sacrifice yourself, because I assume that if a man decides that he is not worried about escape, this means that he is going to sacrifice himself? He was adamant. He said: "No, there was no question of sacrifice." He says his mind was blank. He did not think one way or the other.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S NO ESCAPE PLAN

The above testimony is another example that the Attorney-General was either not in possession of Tsafendas's statement or incompetent. Again he makes no attempt to challenge Dr. Cooper's testimony, even though Tsafendas's statement to the police plainly contradicts it. Tsafendas did give thought to his escape and told the police about his plan: "I was going to find refuge on the tanker, the Eleni, which I knew was sailing to South America. My plans were, however, upset when I could not get the right pistol. The boat sailed on the Saturday before Tuesday when I stabbed the Prime Minister ... I never thought about hiding. If I had to do the job with a knife, I didn't have much of a chance of getting away when using a knife. I didn't care much and didn't give it a second thought that I would be caught." In another statement to the police, Tsafendas said "I did not care about the consequences, for what would happen to me afterwards. I was so disgusted with the racial policy that I went through with my plans to kill the Prime Minister."²¹⁹⁰

Dr. Cooper also seems unable to understand that a man with deep political convictions would proceed to such a desperate act without having an escape plan. The Court's example about Kamikaze pilots is not irrelevant to Tsafendas's case, although it is not identical. Tsafendas, too, wanted to kill the enemy without regard to the personal consequences. Professor Dugard said that Tsafendas's remarks showed him as a "politically informed person, angry with apartheid and Dr. Verwoerd, determined to make a change, with nothing to lose personally."²¹⁹¹

²¹⁹⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

History is full of people committing desperate acts out of deep political conviction; to raise awareness of their cause, to make a visible protest or simply to carry forward their fight. In 1936, Stefan Lux, a young Czechoslovakian Jew, committed suicide inside the League of Nations in Geneva while the members were in session. His aim was to raise awareness of the early persecution of Jews in Germany and to warn that Hitler must be stopped. He was not schizophrenic. In 1970, Kostas Georgakis, a Greek student of geology in Genoa, set himself on fire in protest against the dictatorship in Greece. He was not schizophrenic; a statue of him has been erected in Corfu and he was honoured by a commemorative postage stamp. Several Shaolin monks have publicly burned themselves to death over the years for their cause. None of them was schizophrenic. In 74 CE, during the First Jewish-Roman War at the Siege of Masada, 960 Jews committed suicide in order not to be enslaved by the Romans. No-one ever characterised them as schizophrenic.

Many have chosen to fight a battle in the full knowledge that there was no escape and certain death was awaiting. Salvador Allende in 1973 was given the chance by Pinochet to surrender and leave Chile. He refused and remained in the besieged Presidential Palace knowing that his death was inevitable, as proved to be the case. Constantine Palaiologos XI was the last Byzantine emperor. In 1453, he was given the chance of surrendering Constantinople, then capital of the Byzantine Empire, or of fighting and losing the city and his life. Palaiologos refused the surrender offer, fought and lost the city and died in the fighting. Jozef Gabčík and Jan Kubis, the two Czechs who assassinated Reinhard Heydrich in Prague in 1942, fled afterwards to a church. The SS surrounded the church and the two men, knowing there was no escape, chose to fight rather than surrender and lost their lives.

In 1994, twenty-eight years after Dr. Verwoerd's assassination, Fathers Ioannis Tsaftaridis and Minas Constandinou asked Tsafendas why he chose to stab Dr. Verwoerd in Parliament, knowing he could not possibly escape. Tsafendas replied that when he first conceived the idea of killing Verwoerd, he planned that he would have a chance of escape. He gave the priests a detailed account of how he would shoot Verwoerd, then flee the building and take refuge in the Eleni. He had rehearsed the scenario several times. It was when he was unable to get hold of a reliable firearm that he considered the alternative of a knife attack. He knew that if he stabbed Verwoerd there would be no escape and he debated the issue mentally for two or three days. In the event, he decided to go ahead with the knife because he did not care what would happen to him. This is exactly what he told the police twenty-eight years earlier. After all, he explained to the priests, he had no wife or children or responsibilities for anyone else, so he chose to act confident that there would be no human collateral damage while fully aware of what awaited himself.

²¹⁹¹ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

Father Minas likened the act to a suicide mission and suggested that it could have been better planned. Tsafendas said there were time pressures in that his House of Assembly work terms were temporary and he feared he would never find a gun before possibly being redeployed. Minas asked if he had planned in advance to use the tapeworm to escape the death sentence. Tsafendas insisted that he never planned such a course and always wanted to claim “political responsibility” for his act. This was borne out by his two statements to the police after his arrest. Minas suggested it was madness to kill Verwoerd knowing he would be caught, a remark that angered and upset Tsafendas. He turned to Minas and said, “If I don't burn, if you don't burn, if we don't burn, how will the light vanquish the darkness?” He explained immediately that these were not his words, but a verse from Nazim Hikmet's poem Like Karem (Kerem Gibi). Had he failed to try, he would have regretted it for the rest of his life. “Freedom demands virtue and courage,” he then told the priests. He then cited Andreas Kalvos's poem, Eis Samon (To Samos), saying, in part: “Those who feel fear's unbending hand weighing on them may bear the yoke of bondage. Freedom demands virtue and courage...”²¹⁹² ²¹⁹² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

The priests asked him if he regretted his act, since it cost him more than thirty years in prison and took almost as long for apartheid to collapse. Passionately, Tsafendas declared, “No, never!” He said he would have regretted not doing it. He said he believed apartheid would have collapsed earlier with Dr. Verwoerd out of the way and did not expect it to last so long without him. Still, he maintained that he did not regret his action. He insisted that it was worth it, as apartheid after Verwoerd was never as strong and stable as it was when its so-called architect lived. Even though it took so many years for the system to collapse, killing Verwoerd alone was justifiable because of his crimes, he said. “Look at Vorster, look at Botha,” he told the priests. “Just like Verwoerd they were responsible for the enslavement of twenty million people and the death and torture of thousands and they were not punished for their crimes. At least Verwoerd got what he deserved.” After this, the priests never asked him again about the assassination.²¹⁹³

DR. COOPER ON TSAFENDAS’S STATEMENT THAT HIS ACT WOULD BE JUDGED BY HISTORY AND TSAFENDAS’S FEELINGS REGARDING DR. VERWOERD’S DEATH

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused say that he must have been abnormal when he killed the deceased because no normal person would have done it? Yes or no?

DR. COOPER: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused tell you that history will judge whether he was right in killing the deceased?

DR. COOPER: Words to that effect. It is very difficult for me to remember his exact words. Whether he said he was abnormal when he killed the deceased or whether he said that he was out of his mind, I cannot recall the exact words, but I do recall him saying something to the effect that history will prove whether he is right or wrong.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What are the accused’s feelings about the death of the Prime Minister?

DR. COOPER: I find the question difficult to answer because this man’s feelings show a characteristic emotional blunting, which was referred to from the text book a short while ago. He doesn't seem to show any depth of feeling one way or another about Dr. Verwoerd, himself or, in fact, anybody else. He is emotionally flat concerning this matter.

²¹⁹³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is he proud of the fact?

DR. COOPER: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is he happy that he has killed the Prime Minister?

DR. COOPER: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he indicate to you that he has achieved something of which he should be proud?

DR. COOPER: No. He doesn't seem to, in his mind, now at this stage be able to put together in his mind really why he did it at all, what purpose he was going to achieve.

JUDGE BEYERS: I can't take this answer in the light of history going to prove whether he was right or wrong. He becomes an historical figure; he has told you that and you told me what he told you. If history is going to prove him right or wrong, he must have a feeling of pride or achievement about this thing?

DR. COOPER: I don't know what he means. It is a funny sort of answer to give, that history is going to prove whether he is right or wrong. Those are his only views. He hasn't got any views, in fact, on whether he is right or wrong, or what this was all about. He just says he must wait for history to prove that. He has got no feelings or real thoughts about the matter at all.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S STATEMENT THAT HIS ACT WOULD BE JUDGED BY HISTORY AND TSAFENDAS'S FEELINGS REGARDING DR. VERWOERD'S DEATH

Through this testimony we learn something important: that Tsafendas told Dr. Cooper that history would judge whether or not he did the right thing. What is surprising here is that Dr. Cooper does not appear to understand the statement and even finds it "a funny sort of answer to give." On the contrary, it is an intelligent response. Tsafendas is well aware that his deed would find only condemnation in South Africa under the current regime, but believed it would be hailed when apartheid fell.

This is a conviction that has been widely used by people defending an action or decision they have taken. For example, Fidel Castro made a similar statement from the dock when he was tried in 1953 for his revolutionary activities against the Cuban dictator, Fulgencio Batista. Castro concluded his testimony by saying “history will absolve me.”²¹⁹⁴ Dimitris Koufontinas, a member of the Revolutionary Organization 17 November, told the court that history would judge whether or not its victims were rightly targeted.²¹⁹⁵ The British Prime Minister Tony Blair and the American President George W. Bush both said “history will judge” whether they were right to go to war in Iraq,²¹⁹⁶ obviously believing that they were right. Tsafendas, too, believed he did the right thing. In his September 19 statement to Maj. Rossouw, he said that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he “believed it was the right thing to do.”²¹⁹⁷

Dr. Cooper also claims that Tsafendas does not have any views, feelings or real thought regarding the killing. However, Tsafendas told the police that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he was “disgusted with his racial policies” and hoped that “a change of policy would take place.” Most importantly, he believed that “he did the right thing.” Even more importantly, on October 14, three days before the trial began and Dr. Cooper testified, Maj. Rossouw gave evidence before the Commission of Enquiry and the following dialogue took place:

COMMISSION: “How does he feel about his deed? Does he regret it, or is he indifferent about it or did he not show any obvious emotion about it?”

MAJOR ROSSOUW: “When I originally questioned him I accused him of being a horrible murderer. To which he answered, ‘That is what you think, but the world thinks differently!’ At a later stage I asked him whether he regretted his deed yet and he answered that he did feel remorse and that he was very sorry about what he had done.”²¹⁹⁸

However, according to the report of the Commission of Enquiry, when Tsafendas was questioned by the Commission, which was after the summary trial had ended, “he showed no ²¹⁹⁴ Peter G. Bourne, Fidel: A Biography of Fidel Castro, (New York: Dodd Mead, 1986), p. 101.

²¹⁹⁵ Ta Nea, ‘Η Απολογία του Δημήτρη Κουφοντίνα’, 25 July 2003.

²¹⁹⁶ Jackie Ashley and Ewen McAskill, ‘History Will Be My Judge’, The Guardian, 1 March 2003; John King, ‘Bush: History Will Ultimately Judge ... I Am A Content Man’, CNN, 25 April 2013.

²¹⁹⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²¹⁹⁸ Major Daniel Jacobus Rossouw testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

signs of remorse.”²¹⁹⁹ Tsafendas also told the police officer that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he “thought it was the right thing to do,”²²⁰⁰ and hoped that “a change of policy would take place,”²²⁰¹ which reflects the same mind-set. Tsafendas’s replies showed that far from being emotionally blunt, as Dr. Cooper claimed, he was fully aware of the situation. They also demonstrate that he had no regrets, indeed was proud of what he did. These statements were not used by the Attorney-General to challenge Dr. Cooper’s testimony. As for Tsafendas appearing to change and showing some remorse at a later stage, this would surely be expected in someone who has brutally tortured, both psychologically and physically, for at least three weeks.

What is also important here is not so much that Tsafendas had told Dr. Cooper history would prove whether he was right or wrong for killing Dr. Verwoerd, as the fact that the Attorney-General refers to it. During his examination of Dr. Cooper, the Attorney-General referred to several things Tsafendas told the police and asked the psychiatrist if he was told the same. For example, van den Berg asked Dr. Cooper, “Did he tell you that he originally wanted to shoot the Prime Minister?” This question, and others along the same line, were based on what Tsafendas had told the police. This suggests that Tsafendas had also told the police at some point that history would prove whether he was right or wrong for killing Dr. Verwoerd. As we have seen, not all of Tsafendas’s statements during his interrogation were recorded. For example, when Major Rossouw “originally questioned him,” he “accused him of being a horrible murderer.” Tsafendas’s answer, “That is what you think, but the world thinks differently,”²²⁰² is not in any of the recorded statements found in the archives. We know of it because of Major Rossouw’s testimony at the Commission of Enquiry.

²¹⁹⁹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18.

²²⁰⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²²⁰¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²²⁰² Major Daniel Jacobus Rossouw testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

Sometime in 1994, at Pretoria Prison hospital, twenty-eight years after the assassination, Tsafendas was asked by Father Minas Constandinou and Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis whether he regretted killing Dr. Verwoerd. He replied: “No, never. It was the right thing to do, he was a tyrant and a dictator,” “the monster who created apartheid.” When the priests suggested he might have come to regret his act, Tsafendas replied, “No, no, no, not even for a moment, never, never. I did the right thing. He was a dictator, he created apartheid; it was him who did everything. You did not live then to see how it was, people were like slaves ... Verwoerd had taken away their dignity.”²²⁰³

When asked by the two priests whether it was worth it, since apartheid continued for another twenty-eight years and his action seemed like a failure and a lost cause, Tsafendas said, “I hoped things would change ... I had the chance to kill this monster... if I had not done it, I would have regretted it all my life ... there is no such thing as a lost cause, any cause can be won ... no cause or battle is ever lost until it is fought. If you fight, you always have a chance to win ...” He then quoted Jan-Paul Sartre, saying “A lost battle is a battle one thinks one has lost.” He maintained that he had done the right thing and it was worth it because apartheid never again reached the heights and strength it enjoyed before Dr. Verwoerd’s death. He said he never expected apartheid to collapse overnight, though he admitted that he did not expect it to last as long as it did without Dr. Verwoerd.²²⁰⁴

When asked by the two priests about his posthumous fame and how he would like people to remember him, Tsafendas said he did not care about it, that he felt he had done his duty, the right thing and his conscience was clear. When Fathers Ioannis and Minas told him that they were going to tell his story to the world Tsafendas urged them not to do so. Tsafendas said, that “when you do a good thing, you can’t go around advertising it. You do it because it is the right thing to do, not to be applauded by the others. Do a good thing and then throw it into the sea²²⁰⁵ ... I believed it was my social responsibility, my duty, to do it when I had the chance and I did it... I had the chance to kill the tyrant.”²²⁰⁶ Tsafendas also told the priests that he feared that White racists would kill him if they found out he was not insane ²²⁰³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²²⁰⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²²⁰⁵ “Do a good thing and then throw it into the sea” is an old Greek adage.

²²⁰⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

and had killed Dr. Verwoerd for political reasons. He believed that he had remained alive all these years because everyone thought he was mad.²²⁰⁷

COMMENTS ON THE CROSS-EXAMINATION OF DR. COOPER

It appeared through the cross-examination that both Judge Beyers and the Attorney-General were highly sceptical of Dr. Cooper's testimony. The defence team found the Judge to be so hostile to Dr. Cooper that they decided to speak to him and ask him to be less aggressive towards their witnesses. When Beyers adjourned the proceedings for lunch, Wilfrid Cooper and Willie Burger went to see him in his office and told him of "the impression of bias and hostility he was creating." The Judge did not accept their view.²²⁰⁸

However, it is the Attorney-General's attitude throughout the duration of the testimony of Dr. Cooper which is surprising, given that his own two experts who had examined Tsafendas (Professor van Wyk and Mr. Erasmus), had already found him to be schizophrenic, thus agreeing with the defence witness's diagnosis. If the Attorney-General believed Tsafendas was sane, thereby disagreeing with the two experts he had himself appointed, the logical thing to do was to bring in more psychiatrists to examine Tsafendas. In challenging Dr. Cooper, he was also challenging his own expert witnesses.

Furthermore, the Attorney-General was aware of the defence's line since October 6. According to their testimonies in the court, Professor van Wyk had found Tsafendas to be schizophrenic, thereby agreeing with the defence's line from October 4, while Erasmus had also diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic since September 29. The Attorney-General had another two weeks to find new psychiatrists to examine Tsafendas. Even David Bloomberg and Wilfrid Cooper were puzzled. Bloomberg wrote: "One presumed that the Attorney-General knew what evidence his psychologist and psychiatrist would be giving. If that was the case, why did he challenge, in cross-examination, the evidence of the defence witnesses, when he knew that his own witnesses agreed with them, and allow Dr Harold Cooper, in particular, to be tested so vigorously and sceptically by the judge?"²²⁰⁹

²²⁰⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²²⁰⁸ Willie Burger in a personal interview, 9 April 2015; Cooper, Under Devil's Peak: The Life and Times of Wilfrid Cooper, An Advocate in the Age of Apartheid, p. 115-116.

²²⁰⁹ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 98.

Advocate George Bizos and Professor John Dugard who discussed the issue with the author of the author also found it puzzling and believe that it is almost impossible for the Attorney-General to not have been aware of the diagnosis of his two expert witnesses.²²¹⁰ Professor Dugard said that he is “quite sure” that van den Berg, although he did not know him personally, knew what to do, as most prosecutors did at the time, with the case and characterised as “possible” the suggestion that this could have been a charade laid on for public consumption, stating that the prosecutors during apartheid “were never very independent.”²²¹¹

Since both sides had come to the conclusion that Tsafendas was a schizophrenic, the summary trial should have been a straightforward case, but as can see from its beginning, this was not the case and it was becoming something of a show trial. If the Attorney-General really wanted to challenge Dr. Cooper’s testimony, many of his conclusions had been refuted in the depositions of the two hundred-plus witnesses and other evidence gathered by the South African police and the Commission of Enquiry at the time. None of this evidence supported Dr. Cooper’s testimony, but it was never used against his conclusions.

A very important issue of Dr. Cooper’s testimony was Tsafendas’s motive. Both the Attorney-General and judge Beyers cross-examined Dr. Cooper intensively about it. The Attorney-General could have easily gone beyond challenging Dr. Cooper’s testimony, and could have broken it down. However, instead of using Tsafendas’s statements in order to do so, he used Dr. Sakinofsky’s medical report from his interview with Tsafendas where he had also diagnosed him as schizophrenic based on Tsafendas’s delusional and confused alleged “political ideas.” The result was not only that the Attorney-General did not challenge Dr. Cooper’s testimony, but he reinforced it as more “delusional and confused ideas” supposedly held by Tsafendas became publicised. It is hard to believe that the Attorney-General was so incompetent or so naïve as to think that he could challenge Dr. Cooper with such a report. The alternative must be that he wanted to underline the theory that Tsafendas was indeed a schizophrenic.

It is also surprising that the Attorney-General does not seem to use the medical reports from the various hospitals where Tsafendas was treated, although we are not in position to know whether they were in his possession. These reports had all been tracked down and ²²¹⁰ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017; Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

²²¹¹ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

assembled by the police. Since Professor van Wyk, the State's expert witness, was instructed to examine Tsafendas, one would have expected the police or the State to provide him with these records. Had he seen them, Professor van Wyk could have attacked the defence's line because of the various contradictions they contain; for instance, that Tsafendas had three different delusions, that he had faked mental illness at least twice in the past, and that nine South African doctors had examined him the last three years and had found him to be perfectly sane. If this information was known to the State, then one would have expected the Attorney-General to use it after it was evaluated by his two expert witnesses. However, this did not happen.

We cannot exclude the possibility that the State was in possession of all the above evidence but deliberately did not use them so that Tsafendas would be found insane, which would be more convenient for everyone. Knowing how some of the judiciary worked during apartheid, this should not be ruled out and as Professor Dugard highlighted the prosecutors during apartheid "were never very independent"²²¹² and van den Berg was a supporter of apartheid and of the National Party.²²¹³

OTHER ISSUES IN DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY

Dr. Cooper arrived at his diagnosis exclusively by talking to Tsafendas for six hours in a room in the police station. Although he wanted to get more information about Tsafendas, he was unable to do so due to the lack of co-operation from the police and the shortage of time. He was also fobbed off by both the defence and the police, who stated that this was a straightforward case.²²¹⁴

It was important for Dr. Cooper to know Tsafendas's emotional and mental state in the days preceding the assassination. This should not have been difficult since witnesses like the Eleni crew, his colleagues at the Parliament and Patrick O'Ryan, who were with Tsafendas at that time, had testified to the police. However, Dr. Cooper did not receive any of this information. It was not the police's duty to provide Dr. Cooper with their statements but it would not have been difficult for him to find such information since David Bloomberg had located many who were around Tsafendas in the days before September 6.

²²¹² Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

²²¹³ Judge Gerald Friedman in a personal interview, 11 April 2016.

²²¹⁴ Lambley, The Psychology of Apartheid, p. 239-240.

A vitally important issue that was not picked up by the Attorney-General was that in the case of Dr. Verwoerd, Tsafendas used exactly the same modus operandi he had employed with PIDE, just a year and a half earlier. On November 16, 1964, Tsafendas was arrested in Mozambique and accused of “making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses.”²²¹⁵ The following day, after anti-apartheid, anti-colonialist and Communist books were found in his suitcase, along with several Bibles, Tsafendas was handed in to PIDE and was transferred to a police substation in Beira for interrogation.²²¹⁶ He was accused of pretending to be a religious missionary while in reality preaching “under the guise of religion in favour of Mozambique’s independence.”²²¹⁷

At first in custody, Tsafendas gave clear and valid political reasons for his actions. He told the police that he supported “a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the Mother Nation,” and “clearly stated he was in favour of the independence of Mozambique.”²²¹⁸ Furthermore, Inspector Horacio Ferreira, who was in charge of the cells where Tsafendas was held for the first fourteen days, testified to the South African police that Tsafendas was “intense anti-white and went as far as to tell him that the Portuguese Government has never done anything for their non-whites.” He characterised Tsafendas as “normal and he regarded him as a very intelligent person.”²²¹⁹

Sometime later, Tsafendas changed his stance and began claiming he was Saint Peter. At some point during his detention, Tsafendas was taken to the Government Hospital in Beira for examination because of his Saint Peter act. On January 23, 1965, PIDE in Lisbon informed its counterparts in Lourenço Marques that “having seen the archives, it is remarked with a minimal margin of error, that the defendant Demitrio Tsafendas (id. a fls. 10), is mentally ill and therefore not chargeable at a juridical or penal level. Given this, it seems to us a pure waste of time to continue working on these archives, since we already know what ²²¹⁵ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demitrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demitrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demitrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²²¹⁶ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demitrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demitrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demitrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²²¹⁷ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demitrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²²¹⁸ PIDE Record of questions, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²²¹⁹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

their end will be. Therefore, considering the probable fact that the defendant cannot be charged, and he is not at all dangerous, I propose the release of the defendant, and closure of the archives.”²²²⁰

Tsafendas was subsequently released, whereupon he was perfectly normal again with everyone he met. Indeed, he admitted proudly that he had pretended to be Saint Peter so that the PIDE would release him. Precisely the same thing happened with Dr. Verwoerd. Tsafendas initially gave clear and valid political reasons for the killing, and then, obviously after the torture and threats he sustained in custody, he changed his stance and started claiming that a tapeworm had taken control of him. However, the Attorney-General failed to see the similarities in the two cases and did not bring up the issue.

Another important issue which was not raised during Dr. Cooper’s testimony is that whenever Tsafendas was admitted to a hospital, he either presented himself or was taken there by the police while in custody. He was never referred by a doctor or taken there with an illness or a suspected nervous breakdown. Why did Tsafendas admit himself to hospitals? He said he did it only when he was penniless and had nowhere to stay. He said he saw “hospitals as hotels.”²²²¹

Perhaps the most important issue with Dr. Cooper’s testimony is that it is incompatible with the statements Tsafendas made to the police when they questioned him, the statements by about two hundred witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission of Enquiry and the statements of seventy-one people who were interviewed by the author. All the witnesses’ statements are compatible with Tsafendas’s statements to the police, but they are not compatible with Dr. Cooper’s diagnosis and description of Tsafendas. Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky, Mr. van Zyl and Professors Alban Burke, Kirk Heilbrun, Tuviah Zabow and Phillip Resnick also emphasised that to make an accurate diagnosis, additional information was required from outside sources.²²²² Professor John Dugard and Advocate ²²²⁰ Alberto Henriques de Matos Rodrigues conclusion to the Subdirector, 23 January 1965. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²²²¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017; Gordon Winter to David Beresford, 8 September 1998. From David Beresford’s personal collection.

²²²² Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016; Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017; Professor Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 17 December 2016; Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky in correspondence with the author, 30 March 2016; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016; Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

George Bizo stated to the author that Tsafendas's statements, along with all the other evidence collected by the police, should also have been given to the State.²²²³

²²²³ Advocate George Bizo in a personal interview, 18 November 2017; Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

Van Zyl was “surprised” to read Tsafendas’s statements and the depositions the police and the Commission of Enquiry took at the time from some two hundred people. He felt that they showed Tsafendas as a completely different man to the one he examined and to the way he was described in court. The perceptions were so different he found it “hard to believe” that Tsafendas said what he did to the police and that all those people described Tsafendas in the way they did. Van Zyl agreed that this evidence should have been available to the specialists who examined Tsafendas since it would have played an important role in each one’s diagnosis. He told the author:

“Yes. Look, obviously that is important information, and information that influences one’s findings in the end. There is no doubt about it ... the fact that those sentiments [that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he was disgusted with his policies and believed a change would take place with his death] expressed in the statement that he made to the police weren’t ever mentioned to any of the psychiatrists.”²²²⁴

Professor John Dugard agreed that the statements should have been made available to the State. Of Tsafendas’s statement, he said it: “completely confirms the view that Tsafendas was not insane. It reads like a very normal story of a politically informed person, angry with apartheid and Dr. Verwoerd, determined to make a change with nothing to lose personally. Really an incredible statement which was carefully concealed.”²²²⁵

TSAFENDAS FAKING MENTAL ILLNESS IN THE PAST

As we have seen, there were at least two occasions when Tsafendas faked mental illness and this was known to the South African police. However, neither was mentioned during Dr. Cooper’s testimony or indeed throughout the summary trial:

- The Grafton State Hospital report stated clearly that Tsafendas had faked mental illness in the past.²²²⁶
- At least six men from the Eleni, Alachiotis, Billis, Kambouris, Kantas, Pouftis and Vasilakis, testified to the police that Tsafendas “played the fool” to avoid serving in the Portuguese Army.²²²⁷ ²²²⁴ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

²²²⁵ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

²²²⁶ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

²²²⁷ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal

In addition to the above, just three days after the assassination a secret telegram from the South African embassy in Washington was sent to the South African Foreign Minister in Cape Town. It informed him that that the US Immigration Department, which had dealt with Tsafendas often during his time in the United States and was aware of his hospitalizations, had a file on him which contained “full particulars” of his time in that country. In telegram form, it said, “He is understood to have shown under psychiatric treatment that he was unstable though not (not)²²²⁸ insane, but type of man who would easily be used as instrument of Communist or hostile organizations. Impression of US Immigration people at the time was that he had been manipulated and was under influence of someone or some organization.”²²²⁹

According to Professor Alban Burke:

“In these kinds of cases, any kind of legal cases, the first thing you want to eliminate is malingering, so is this person lying or not? That’s your first thing that you have to decide, because, obviously, especially in those days, it was a decision between life and death, so ‘I’m going to lie so that I don’t get hanged, so I’ve got a very strong motive to lie, to malingering.’ If I was the consulting psychologist or psychiatrist at that point in time, I would want to eliminate the malingering thing, and if there was evidence that he had used this in the past, already it puts a lot of doubt on whatever conclusion I’m going to arrive at.

So, even in those days, malingering was something you wanted to look at because, I mean, the malingering can ... it’s not an unknown thing, because for years now, especially during World War One, a lot of people malingered, so that they wouldn’t have to go to the army; the same thing with World War Two. So, the malingering was always there, and if you’re dealing with a forensic case, where there could be a death penalty, you would want to eliminate that.”²²³⁰

All the above information was known to the South African police, but with the possible exception of the Grafton State Hospital report, was not given to the psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas. Mr. van Zyl and Professors Burke, Heilbrun, Resnick and Tuviah Zabow agree that it was extremely important that such information should have been made interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²²²⁸ This is exactly how it appears in the telegram. There is a second ‘not’ within brackets.

²²²⁹ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Washington to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

²²³⁰ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

available to the psychiatrists.²²³¹

²²³¹ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016; Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

REACTION OF THE PEOPLE WHO KNEW TSAFENDAS AFTER THE FIRST DAY OF THE SUMMARY TRIAL

Katerina Pnema, Tsafendas's step sister who lived in Rhodesia at the time, had not gone outside her house or even smiled since the assassination. "We were barely talking to each other," she said about the climate of deep depression in her house. "We were like zombies." However, after the first day of the summary trial, her husband came running into the house, waving some local newspapers. "Look," he shouted, "look what he said ..." Pnema picked up the newspapers, scanned the trial stories and burst out laughing, "I couldn't believe it," she said, "it was the first time I laughed in a month, our house was like a graveyard before."²²³²

Pnema said of Tsafendas:

"He was always very, very smart, a devil, but how on earth he thought of this tapeworm story? I couldn't control myself and laughed. It was then I felt sorry for him for the first time, thinking what was going to become of him now. I was very angry before, I knew he had ruined my life, but after that, I felt very sorry for him ... after that I began reading everything in the newspapers about the trial. I had stopped reading before as most of the things they were saying about him were complete lies. What was said in the trial were lies too, but it was amusing, as he had told them! It was really amusing, even though I felt sorry for him that he had to say such things ..." Katerina Pnema had no doubt then and has no doubt now that her half-brother invented the tapeworm story to escape the gallows.²²³³

Mary Eintracht and Fotini Gavasiadis said that the whole's family reaction was similar to Pnema's; Tsafendas's step-mother, his other two half-sisters and his half-brother were all convinced he had made it up.²²³⁴ Eleni Grispos, who knew Tsafendas since he was a child, and her husband, who was Tsafendas's best friend in Lourenço Marques, were also certain that he had made up the tapeworm story. Ira Kyriakakis and her sister Alik, who also knew him from childhood, thought the same.²²³⁵

Others convinced that it was a ploy to avoid the death penalty included Father Nikolas Banovic, who lived under the same roof as Tsafendas for four months in Istanbul in 1961 and ²²³² Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

²²³³ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

²²³⁴ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

²²³⁵ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

who prayed for him after hearing about the assassination, Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousins in Lourenço Marques, Irene Michaletos, John's wife, Artemis Michaletos who had brought him up in Egypt, his first cousin Mary Eintracht who also knew him since Egypt, Nick Papadakis who associated with Tsafendas in Beira and Gondola and became close friends of his, and his childhood friends Andreas Babiolakis and George Grispos.²²³⁶ Of the seventy-five witnesses who knew Tsafendas who were interviewed by the author, only four thought that he really believed he had a tapeworm and that he was insane; all of them were members of his defence team (Bloomberg, Burger, Dr. Sakinofsky and van Zyl). The other seventy-one were convinced that he had made it up, just as he pretended to be insane in order to escape the gallows.

²²³⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 May 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; Irene and John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

A FINAL NOTE ON DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY AND THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S RESPONSE

Dr. Cooper found Tsafendas to be unable to function on a reasonable level, unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes, talking in a disjointed manner and isolated from his surroundings in the sense that he could not make and keep good friends. However none of some two hundred witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission of Enquiry noticed any of these characteristics. Not even one. The same applies to the forty-six people who knew Tsafendas well and were interviewed by the author. On the contrary, Tsafendas was described several times as being the direct opposite of the person described by Dr. Cooper. Furthermore, none of these symptoms were observed by either Major Rossouw, a highly experienced interrogator, who interrogated Tsafendas while in custody after the assassination, or the PIDE agents who interrogated him for three months in 1964. On the contrary, PIDE Inspector Horacio Ferreira had testified to the South African police that Tsafendas was “normal and he regarded him as a very intelligent person.”²²³⁷

Is it possible for a man to have all the symptoms mentioned by Dr. Cooper if no one around him ever observed even one of them? Professors Alban Burke, Phillip Resnick, Robert L. Sadoff and Tuviah Zabow believe that it is extremely unlikely, if not impossible, that none of the people who knew Tsafendas, some extremely well, ever noticed that he spoke in a disjointed manner or that he was unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes.²²³⁸ They must have been very unobservant, unless the symptoms were simply not there; because Tsafendas made them up when talking to the doctors. Reyner van Zyl, who examined Tsafendas for the defence, conceded to the author that it was “highly improbable” that none of those who knew Tsafendas ever spotted any of the symptoms mentioned by Dr. Cooper, especially the issues of concentration and disjointed speech.²²³⁹ Professor Phillip Resnick told the author that such a scenario is “extremely unlikely,”²²⁴⁰ while Professor Sadoff said that “I find it hard to believe it [that a man has all these symptoms and no one ²²³⁷ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²²³⁸ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016; Professor Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 17 December 2016; Professor Robert L. Sadoff in a personal interview with the author, 12 August 2015; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 10 October 2016.

²²³⁹ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 17 April 2016.

²²⁴⁰ Professor Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 7 May 2017.

noticed any of them].”²²⁴¹

Father Nikola Banovic told the author: “Everything this doctor [Dr. Cooper] has been saying is inaccurate; it’s not true about Dimitri. He was nothing like this, it’s like he had either examined a different person or he was a bad doctor.”²²⁴² Fotini Gavasiadis told the author:

“Everything you have been telling me [as to what Dr. Cooper and the other doctors said] is gibberish. Everything that they were saying is gibberish. Everything. I don’t know how they came to these conclusions and how they managed to get away with it. It’s absolutely gibberish. Dimitris must have had a lot of fun sitting [in the court] and listening to all this gibberish about him. I can imagine him [in the court] laughing inside him ... I am sure he must have had enjoyed it ... especially since he succeeded in fooling them and getting away with it.”²²⁴³

Dr. Cooper diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic based on what the accused told him and without getting any information about him from other sources. He therefore could not compare different avenues of information and so judge that what Tsafendas told him was true or not. Instead of attempting to confirm or reject what Tsafendas told him by checking other sources, he simply asked Tsafendas again. As we have seen, Reyner van Zyl and Professors Tuviah Zabow, Kirk Heilbrun, Alban Burke and Phillip Resnick have all highlighted the importance of third-party information in order to make an accurate diagnosis in such cases, assessing information taken from people who know the patient, as well as his medical and criminal records. This is standard practice in criminal cases.

However, Dr. Cooper did not speak to even one person who knew Tsafendas. He was told by both the defence and the police that it was a straightforward case and the only information he had about Tsafendas was most probably given to him verbally, as was the case with van Zyl, and this was after he had already diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic. If Dr. Cooper was given the statements gathered by the police or if he had spoken to people who knew Tsafendas, he would have seen immediately that this information did not accord with what he had heard from the accused. If he had read the medical reports, he would have seen the inconsistencies and, most importantly, the fact that Tsafendas had faked mental illness in the past. However, Dr. Cooper seems to have been discouraged to seek outside information about his patient by the police and was led to believe that Tsafendas was a clear-cut case of schizophrenia.²²⁴⁴

²²⁴¹ Professor Robert L. Sadoff in a personal interview with the author, 12 August 2015.

²²⁴² Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²²⁴³ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 22 April 2016.

The most striking thing about Dr. Cooper's evidence, however, was not the fact that he diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic, but that the Attorney-General did very little to challenge the diagnosis, and much more to reinforce it. The police had gathered a vast amount of information. The author cannot know whether the Attorney-General was in possession of all this information, but none that could have broken down Dr. Cooper's testimony was used.

The most important evidence should have been Tsafendas's statements to the police. In them, Tsafendas testified that he had killed Dr. Verwoerd for political reasons: because he was against apartheid, because Dr. Verwoerd was not the real representative of all the South African people, because he was disgusted with his policies and he hoped that a change would take place by removing him. These statements clearly showed Tsafendas as a well-informed, opinionated person with a lively interest in national politics. Professor Dugard said about the statement:

“(It) completely confirms the view that Tsafendas was not insane. It reads like a very normal story of a politically informed person, angry with apartheid and Dr. Verwoerd, determined to make a change, with nothing to lose personally. Really an incredible statement, which was carefully concealed.”²²⁴⁵

The evidence gathered by the police and the Commission from some two hundred interviewees along with reports from agencies and organizations around the world demonstrated that Tsafendas was far from the hopeless, helpless individual without any political thought described by Dr. Cooper. However, none of these statements, reports or interviews was used to contradict Dr. Cooper's views. We are not in position to know the reasons, but the fact remains that the Attorney-General did very little to challenge Dr. Cooper's testimony generally, even though the police had gathered considerable information.

Although the court heard much discussion of Tsafendas's possible motives for killing Dr. Verwoerd, what was never mentioned was Tsafendas's statement to the police that he murdered the Prime Minister because he was disgusted with his policies, considered him a dictator and hoped a change of policy would take place by killing him. Also not mentioned ²²⁴⁴ Lambley, The Psychology of Apartheid, p. 239-240.

²²⁴⁵ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

were the statements of several witnesses that Tsafendas called Dr. Verwoerd “Hitler’s best student” and a tyrant and dictator. Instead, Tsafendas appears to have no idea why he killed Dr. Verwoerd and was unable to explain his reasons. However, thirty years later Tsafendas was able to explain his reasons for the assassination, as he had done to the police, which again suggests that he deliberately told Dr. Cooper all this.²²⁴⁶

The Attorney-General appeared to “attempt to challenge” Dr. Cooper’s testimony on Tsafendas’s motive, by using Dr. Sakinofsky’s medical report. The astonishing thing with this move is that van den Berg could have very easily broken down Dr. Cooper’s testimony about the motive by using Tsafendas’s own words, but he used instead a report that contained “confused and deluded ideas,” similar to the ones mentioned by Dr. Cooper. The result, instead of challenging Dr. Cooper’s testimony, was to further reinforce the idea of Tsafendas as a schizophrenic but also, and perhaps more importantly, that he did not have any clear political thought.

Much was said about the tapeworm, but what did not become clear was the gulf between those who heard about it and those who did not. Tsafendas made sure to mention the tapeworm to every single person connected with his defence or the State, but up to then he had never mentioned it to friends and family. Dr. Cooper came back time and again to the tapeworm, but statements to the police by Tsafendas and witnesses contained not a single reference to it. Also not mentioned was that Tsafendas did not speak of the tapeworm to at least nine doctors who examined him in the three years prior the assassination, all of whom declared him, as he wished to be declared, perfectly healthy, both physically and mentally. It could hardly be clearer that in telling Dr. Cooper, the police and his defence team about the tapeworm he wanted to be considered insane, while hiding it from the nine doctors he wished to be declared mentally fine so he could get jobs and the permanent residency permit he had applied for.

Several other life issues were inaccurately presented and wrongly interpreted, for example his supposed inability to care for himself, to make friends, to function properly, to live a meaningful life, as well as his relationship with his step-mother. Tsafendas was presented as a man without any political ideology or concerns. That he was a member of the South African Communist Party and the Greek Communist Party and its military wing (the DSE) and that he participated in the Greek Civil War were not mentioned. Nor was the fact that he was reported at least twice to the South African police as a “dangerous Communist.” The court did not hear that he was exiled from Mozambique for twelve years and arrested several times by the Portuguese police because of his Communist and anti-Portuguese activities. In fact, the word Communist was never heard in court, although several witnesses told the police that Tsafendas was a passionate Communist and was even described as the “biggest Communist in the Republic of South Africa”²²⁴⁷ or simply as a “dangerous Communist.”²²⁴⁸ The fact that PIDE had a very detailed file on Tsafendas since 1938 was also not mentioned, but this was perhaps not known to the South African authorities as PIDE had withheld from the South African police all the information “indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of Mozambique.”²²⁴⁹

²²⁴⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

Dr. Cooper seemed not to know that Tsafendas had faked mental illness, although it was stated in the Grafton State Hospital medical report, which was in the hands of both the police and the defence. At least six witnesses told the police that Tsafendas pretended to be crazy to avoid serving in the Portuguese Army. None of this came up in court.

Importantly, Dr. Cooper was also apparently unaware that Tsafendas spoke not of one delusion but three. The tapeworm, according to Dr. Cooper, made its first appearance in the mid-1930s and was still there up to his trial. However, in 1946, Tsafendas had claimed to hear voices from radiators and at one point in 1964 or 1965 he “believed” he was Saint Peter, while in 1966, just two months before the assassination, he “believed” that people were murdered by poisoned food in the house where he lived. Thus since the 1930s, Tsafendas at least had two simultaneous delusions - the tapeworm and the radiator voices in 1946, the tapeworm and Saint Peter in 1965 and the tapeworm along with the people being murdered by poisonous food in 1966. Tsafendas was later to remark, “Everyone hears voices or pretends to be Napoleon, but who would ever suspect anyone who believes he has a tapeworm?”²²⁵⁰

Speaking of having two delusions at the same time, Professor Burke said, “It’s not impossible, because the human brain is difficult to understand. It’s not impossible, but it is ²²⁴⁷ Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²²⁴⁸ Father Hanno Probst statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²²⁴⁹ Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²²⁵⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

unlikely. It's possible but it's improbable."²²⁵¹ Mr. van Zyl agreed, "One may disappear, and the other one may then appear. But two at the same time? I don't think so, these delusions are usually very powerful."²²⁵²

None of the statements taken from the Eleni sailors was used, not even those found in the archives. These statements were particularly important since many of these men were with Tsafendas every day for forty-two days up to three days before the assassination and were cognisant of Tsafendas's behaviour and state of mind at a crucial time. Tsafendas had bought a gun from one of the crew and was planning to escape by hiding aboard the tanker. Even more important, he told the crewmen that any assassination of Dr. Verwoerd would be morally justifiable because he was a tyrant and a dictator. Dr. Cooper and Tsafendas's defence team did not know about these statements and could not talk to the men because the Eleni left Cape Town on September 3, but the police had heard from the seamen's own lips. One would have expected the Attorney-General to have knowledge of such statements, but there was no mention of them.

A very important fact of Tsafendas's life was never raised at the trial. Although there was considerable discussion of his employment record and apparent inability to hold down a job, Tsafendas's six months teaching English at the best private language college in Turkey passed without mention. The teaching stint was reported in South African newspapers,²²⁵³ the Commission also found out about it, Tsafendas told the police about it and he used his reference from the college to get the job in Parliament. Dr. Cooper found Tsafendas to be unable to hold down a job, care for himself, function on a reasonable level and follow a conversation after fifteen minutes while he was also talking in a disjointed manner.

Professors Burke and Zabow and Mr. van Zyl agreed that it would have been impossible for a man with his reported level of schizophrenia to hold down such a job, especially for an extended period. Furthermore, this was not the only job Tsafendas kept for a substantial length of time; he worked for six years at the Vulcan Iron Works, General Engineers, for two years at the Imperial Airways factory in Quilemane, for almost two years as a welder with the British Mining Supply Company in Johannesburg, five months at F.A. Poole Engineering in Pretoria and six months at a tractor factory in Munich and none of his fellow workers noticed anything odd about him. He also worked satisfactorily as an interpreter for another five-six months, although part-time, at Durban Court, being recruited periodically as the need arose. He worked off and on for nine months at his brother-in-law's coffee shop, the Proclamation Hill Café in Pretoria. Colleagues praised Tsafendas for his work and character. Finally, none of his superiors or colleagues at Parliament mentioned anything being wrong with Tsafendas's ability to perform his duties.

²²⁵¹ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

²²⁵² Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

²²⁵³ The Cape Times, 'Tsafendas Taught Turks English', 8 September 1966; Daily Dispatch, 'Tsafendas Taught English in Turkey', 8 September 1966: 1; The Daily News, 'Tsafendas Seen As 'Mystery Man'', 8 September 1966: 17.

It is possible that the Attorney-General was unaware of some of the information gathered by the police and therefore did not bring it up in court, despite the fact that most of it had been published in the newspapers. However, the same could not be said of Tsafendas's employment record and ability to hold down a job. The Attorney-General himself wrote in October 3 in his Memorandum for Tsafendas that in 1933 Tsafendas returned to Mozambique and "for 6 years he worked at the Vulcan Iron Works, General Engineers, as an oxyacetylene electrical welder. According to testimonials from this firm, he had performed his duties in a satisfactory manner. These testimonials were included with his application for permanent residence in South Africa."²²⁵⁴ This important evidence directly contradicted Dr Cooper's testimony, yet the Attorney-General did not use it to challenge it.

At least twice, Dr. Cooper seemed to misunderstand or manipulate Tsafendas's words, although Tsafendas might well have lied to him. One of these instances concerned Tsafendas's statement to the police that he did not consider Dr. Verwoerd representative of all South African people. Dr. Cooper's version was that Tsafendas considered Dr. Verwoerd was not the real representative of the White population. What is important here is not whether Dr. Cooper misunderstood Tsafendas or if he was lied to, but that the Attorney-General did not challenge him when the police had ample evidence to break this down.

Tsafendas's "globetrotting" is also misunderstood. That he was forced into exile for twelve years from Mozambique, persecuted and imprisoned in Portugal and banned from entering South Africa is not mentioned. Neither are the more than twenty applications he made to be allowed back into these countries. Ignored, too, is that most of the countries he visited were on the way to his destination and he had to pass through them to get there. Missing also is the fact that Tsafendas was forced to travel through some of these countries in a desperate attempt to get back to Mozambique by illegal means since he was officially banned. Tsafendas's travels are those of a man desperate to return to his home and family, but prevented from doing so because of his political beliefs, and so he was forced to spend much time living in “strange lands,” as he put it himself.²²⁵⁵

²²⁵⁴ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkoperij. NASA.

It is also a fact that the police possessed sufficient evidence not only to challenge Dr. Cooper’s testimony but to break it to pieces. None of it was used. The fact that the Attorney-General wrote a memorandum about Tsafendas on October 3, 1966 which contained misinformation regarding his reclassification application, strongly suggests that van den Berg was perfectly competent but was not given all relevant information by the police. However, we are considering a case which took place under apartheid and we cannot exclude the possibility that the Attorney-General was indeed in possession of all the information but deliberately did not use it, assuming or being “advised” or simply knowing what he had to do in such case, that it would be better for everyone if Tsafendas were to be found insane. As Professor Dugard said, the prosecutors during apartheid “were never very independent” and knew what they had to do each time.²²⁵⁶ The fact that he attempted to challenge Dr. Cooper’s testimony without trying very hard while his own witnesses had already come to the same conclusion as those of the defence, strengthens the suspicion that the whole thing was a charade intended to secure a verdict of insanity.

Tsafendas spoke at length about the assassination and his life while he was in prison and in the hospital where he ended his days, but only to people he trusted. He never mentioned any of the things he told Dr. Cooper but repeated what he told witnesses prior to the assassination and which some of them told the police. For example, that Dr. Verwoerd was a dictator and not the real representative of ALL the South African people, that he was a tyrant oppressing his people, that he considered Dr. Verwoerd to be Hitler’s best student because he copied some of his Nuremberg Laws concerning Jews and applied them to the Blacks, and that he hoped that his death would bring a change of policy in South Africa or at least provide a stepping stone towards it, as he considered Dr. Verwoerd to be the “brains behind apartheid.”

If Tsafendas was really schizophrenic when he was examined by Dr. Cooper, he must still have been schizophrenic when he was in the prison and then in the hospital. His situation must even have deteriorated, given that he had been in solitary confinement for twenty-three hours per day for about twenty years, deprived of contact with his fellow prisoners, systematically assaulted and kept in a room next to the execution chamber, often forced to ²²⁵⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 17.

²²⁵⁶ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

watch those who were going to be executed passing in front of his cell, possibly a reminder of what to expect if he ever became “sane” again. All this was still happening when Tsafendas was seventy.²²⁵⁷

According to Professor Tuviah Zabow, if Tsafendas was really a schizophrenic, his condition, because of these conditions and the fact that he received no treatment, should have remained at least the same or more likely worse.²²⁵⁸ However, Tsafendas appeared to be perfectly sane to those who met him; he remained faithful to the ideas and philosophy he had before the assassination until he died and never repeated to anyone any of the things that Dr. Cooper said he told him.

A trained psychiatrist should be able to understand whether a person is schizophrenic more authoritatively than a lay person. However, psychiatry does not deal with wounds and conditions that can be touched and seen, are broken and can be healed. It deals with aspects of a personality upon which there may be differing opinions. Dr. Benjamin Chesler, a specialist psychiatrist, who examined David Pratt in 1960, admitted to the court that his diagnosis “could have been wrong.” He added, “I was not certain that I was correct. Psychiatry is not a factual science, a lot of it is subjective interpretation.”²²⁵⁹

That is also why it is very important to have as much additional third-party information as possible. John J. Broderick, Distinguished Professor Emeritus of Law at Notre Dame University, said that in an important murder trial, where the defence is insanity, it is not uncommon for psychiatrists of equal eminence to be lined up on opposite sides of the case. It was the same when the issue being contested was a will.²²⁶⁰ This implies that the psychiatrists from one side or other misdiagnosed the accused.

Is it possible or common for psychiatrists to misdiagnose a patient? The answer is “Yes”, and there have been countless high-profile cases where prominent psychiatrists provided wrong or contradictory diagnoses. A recent and infamous one is that of Anders Breivik, a Norwegian far-right terrorist who killed seventy-seven people in two separate attacks in July 2011. After his arrest, the court appointed two psychiatrists to examine him; after they had interviewed him thirteen times, they concluded that he had been a ²²⁵⁷ Beresford, ‘Dr. Verwoerd’s Insane Killer Being Brutalised on SA Death Row: Cell Next to Gallows for 71-Year Old Prisoner’, The Guardian, 9 June 1989: 12.

²²⁵⁸ Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016.

²²⁵⁹ Dr. Chesler’s testimony in the Enquiry regarding the mental condition of David Beresford Pratt in Regina vs. David Beresford Pratt, 13 September 1960. The State versus David Beresford Pratt. 712-60. NASA.

²²⁶⁰ John J. Broderick, “Role of the Psychiatrist and Psychiatric Testimony in Civil and Criminal Trials.” Notre Dame Law Review, Vol 35, Issue 4, (8 January 1960), p. 517.

psychotic paranoid schizophrenic before, during and after the attacks. However, while awaiting trial, Breivik was examined by a further four psychiatrists, who completely disagreed with their two colleagues' diagnosis, finding the accused to be perfectly sane, although with a narcissistic personality disorder. The court eventually accepted the verdict of the latter four psychiatrists, dismissing the original diagnosis.²²⁶¹

A US study dating from 1949 focused on a sample of 52 men from a state-owned clinic. They were individually interviewed by a panel of two or three psychiatrists, who were then asked to identify precisely which mental condition each of the men was suffering from. However, each psychiatrist had to make his own diagnosis without conferring with his colleagues. They could choose from a list of five main categories of disease: mental retardation, psychosis, psychopathic personality, neurosis and normality. Within each of these categories, they then had to identify the correct subcategory (for example, the subcategories for "psychosis" included schizophrenia and manic depression.) Thirty-five of the men were interviewed by a panel of three psychiatrists. Only 45 per cent of the time did the psychiatrists pick the same major category of disorder; in only 20 per cent of the cases did they agree on the subcategory.²²⁶²

In 1972, the book Psychiatric Diagnosis revealed the outcome of the major US–UK Diagnostic Project, focusing on the diagnostic practices of psychiatrists on both sides of the Atlantic. The conclusion was that not much had changed since the earlier 1949 US study. Most worryingly, there were dramatic national differences: British and American psychiatrists only agreed a fifth of the time when diagnosing major depression, with the former group diagnosing depressive disorder five times more often.²²⁶³

A 1988 study by Marti Loring (U.S. Center for Mental Health and Human Development) and Brian Powell (Indiana University) explored the effects of race. A sample of 290 psychiatrists were presented with an interview transcript; half of them were told that the patient being interviewed was Black, the other half that the patient was White. The researchers found that "clinicians appear to ascribe violence, suspiciousness, and dangerousness to black clients even though the case studies are the same as the case studies for the white clients. Interestingly, black clinicians seem to have internalized this view ²²⁶¹ BBC News. (2012) 'Norway Killer Breivik is "Not Psychotic", Say Experts.' BBC, 4 January 2012.

Retrieved on 12 December 2017 from: <https://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-europe-16416791>; Mark Lewis and Alan Cowell (2012) 'Norwegian Man Claims Self-Defense in Killings.' The New York Times, 16 April 2012.

²²⁶² Lawrie Reznick, Peddling Mental Disorder: The Crisis in Modern Psychiatry, (Jefferson, North Carolina: McFarland & Company, Inc., Publishers, 2016), p: 76.

²²⁶³ Reznick, Peddling Mental Disorder: The Crisis in Modern Psychiatry, p. 75 because they also assign paranoid schizophrenic disorders to black men (although less frequently than do white clinicians).”²²⁶⁴

Other similar cases include the following:

- Issei Sagawa murdered and ate a girl in Paris in 1981. He was examined by several French psychiatrists and was found to be legally insane and unfit to stand trial. He was later deported to Japan and committed to a mental hospital. However, when examined by Japanese psychiatrists, they declared him perfectly sane and he was released. He still lives free.²²⁶⁵
- Joseph Paul Franklin was an American serial killer. A forensic psychiatrist for the defence testified that he was a paranoid schizophrenic and unfit to stand trial. However, the court found him fit to be tried and he was executed in 2013.²²⁶⁶
- Nathan Leopold and Richard Loeb murdered a little boy in the United States in 1924. Several prominent psychiatrists of the time testified that they were insane, while other equally prominent psychiatrists testified that they were perfectly sane.²²⁶⁷
- In October 2016, in the Spalding murders trial, Dr. Indranil Chakrabarti, a psychiatrist, testified that the fifteen-year-old accused girl was suffering from a mental disorder. However, consultant forensic psychiatrist Dr. Philip Joseph gave as his opinion that Dr. Chakrabarti’s diagnosis was wrong and the accused was not suffering from a mental disorder. At the time of writing, the trial is still ongoing.²²⁶⁸
- In February 1965, Professor Lewis A. Hurst,²²⁶⁹ Professor of Psychology at the University of the Witwatersrand, diagnosed John Harris, who planted a bomb in the Johannesburg railway station, as unfit to stand trial. His opinion was that Harris “was suffering from a mental disease which rendered him incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong” and that he harboured “paranoidal traits of a nature sufficient to impair his judgment.” On the other hand, Professor van Wyk, who also examined Tsafendas, ²²⁶⁴ Marti Loring and Brian Powell, “Gender, Race, and DSM-III: A Study of the Objectivity of Psychiatric Diagnostic Behavior”, Journal of Health and Social Behavior, Vol. 29, No. 1 (Mar., 1988), p. 1-18.

²²⁶⁵ Steven Morris, ‘Issei Sagawa: Celebrity Cannibal’, New Criminologist, 20 September 2007. Retrieved from: <https://web.archive.org/web/20110714172725/http://www.newcriminologist.com/article.asp?nid=17>; Murder in Mind, The Japanese Cannibal, (London: A Marshall Cavendish Reference Collection, 1997), p. 1-37.

²²⁶⁶ Malcolm Gladwell, ‘Damaged’, The New Yorker, 24 February 1997: 132-147.

²²⁶⁷ Illinois v. Nathan Leopold and Richard Loeb. Retrieved from: <http://law2.umkc.edu/faculty/projects/ftrials/leoploeb/leopold.htm>

²²⁶⁸ BBC, ‘Spalding Murders: “Toxic Relationship” Behind Killing of Mum and Daughter’, BBC, 12 October 2016. Retrieved from <http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-england-lincolnshire-37631891>

²²⁶⁹ Incidentally, Prof. Hurst was also one of the psychiatrists who examined David Pratt.

disagreed with that diagnosis and found Harris perfectly sane. The Court accepted Prof. van Wyk's diagnosis and dismissed Prof. Hurst's.²²⁷⁰

In the above-mentioned cases and very many more, psychiatrists disagreed about the mental state of a person. One side must be wrong, which means that some of the psychiatrists misdiagnosed the person concerned. Clearly, a psychiatrist's diagnosis, especially when unaccompanied by third-party information, cannot be taken for granted. In addition, in the cases mentioned above, the psychiatrists had far more information available about their patient than the psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas. In large part, a diagnosis depends on what the patient tells his examiner and Dr. Cooper and the psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas relied on what he told them. However, Tsafendas told his psychiatrists stories he never told anyone else, most of them clearly lies, as witnesses told the police, the Commission and the author. Furthermore, he talked and behaved in a manner that none of the witnesses described or recognised.

Simple inaccuracy is not the only problem with diagnoses; they are also vulnerable to being influenced. This was demonstrated in a U.S. study, undertaken in 1968 by Maurice K. Temerlin, a Professor of Psychology at the University of Oklahoma. Professor Temerlin took a perfectly normal and healthy man, "a professional actor trained to portray a healthy man", and provided him with a script; through the script, and in an audio-recorded interview with a psychiatrist, the man described himself and his life, indicating a normal and average person, with absolutely normal behaviour.²²⁷¹ The main participants in the experiment listened to the audio recording of the interview:

a. The first group consisted of seventy clinical psychologists (twenty-five practising and forty-five graduate students). Soon after the recording began to play, a prominent, much-garlanded psychologist remarked to them: "I know the man being interviewed today. He's a very interesting man because he looks neurotic but actually is quite psychotic."²²⁷²

b. The second group consisted of twenty-five psychiatrists, who were told that they had to give a diagnosis to be used as a base criterion for the correlation of test scores. They were further informed that "two board-certified psychiatrists, one also a psychoanalyst, felt the patient looked neurotic, but actually was quite psychotic".

²²⁷⁰ State v. Harris (Appellate Division), 11 February-1 March 1965: 340-341.

²²⁷¹ Maurice K. Temerlin, "Diagnostic Bias in Community Mental Health." Community Mental Health Journal, Vol. 6 (2), 1970, p. 110-112.

²²⁷² Temerlin, "Diagnostic Bias in Community Mental Health", p. 111-112.

However, it was stated that “two opinions are not enough for a criterion group in a research project.”²²⁷³

In addition to the above, forty law students were asked to participate as jurors in a mock sanity hearing which took place in a county courthouse; 156 undergraduates were also asked to offer their opinion about the “patient”.²²⁷⁴

After they had listened to the audio recording, the various groups of participants were asked to choose their diagnosis from a list of thirty options. This included various mental diseases and personality types, but also an option for “normal or healthy personality” (the correct answer). However, 15 of the 25 psychiatrists (60%) and 7 of the 25 psychologists (28%) diagnosed the man with psychosis, mostly schizophrenia; the remaining 10 psychiatrists (40%), and 15 of the psychologists (60%), diagnosed neurosis and character disorder. Only 3 psychologists (12%) diagnosed him as perfectly normal! Thus, over 90% of the psychiatrists and psychologists diagnosed a perfectly healthy man, who acted and talked normally during his interview with a psychiatrist, as “psychotic”, simply because of the effect of the suggestion from a prestigious source.²²⁷⁵

The effect of the prestige suggestion became even more evident with the diagnoses of the two matched control groups that participated in the experiment, who made completely different diagnoses to those of the experimental groups:

- Control Group 1 was given the suggestion that the interviewed man was perfectly normal; all 20 participants (100%) diagnosed him as such.
- Control Group 2 was not given any information at all about the interviewed man. Only 12 of the 21 participants (57%) diagnosed him as perfectly healthy; the other 9 (43%) diagnosed neurosis or personality disorders.²²⁷⁶

We should remember here that Dr. Cooper later admitted that he was told by the police and the defence lawyers that Tsafendas was a straightforward case of schizophrenia.²²⁷⁷ Reyner van Zyl confirmed to the author Dr. Cooper’s claim and added that ²²⁷³ Temerlin, “Diagnostic Bias in Community Mental Health”, p. 111-112.

²²⁷⁴ Temerlin, “Diagnostic Bias in Community Mental Health”, p. 112.

²²⁷⁵ Temerlin, “Diagnostic Bias in Community Mental Health”, p. 111-112.

²²⁷⁶ Temerlin, “Diagnostic Bias in Community Mental Health”, p. 112-115.

²²⁷⁷ Lambley, The Psychology of Apartheid, p. 239-240, 273.

he and the psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas were also given the same impression by both the police and the defence lawyers. He also told the author:

“We were just told, we were told, or I was told – the group of guys that examined him – that he had been in various mental hospitals all over the world... Yes. Well, you know, we were given this information – that he was a disturbed, schizophrenic man ... And that was the background that we had available, and nothing else. The third part [the medical reports] was given to us almost in summary. He has been to this hospital, that hospital, that hospital... I think three or four were mentioned – various hospitals overseas.”²²⁷⁸

Now, is it possible to simulate symptoms of psychiatric illness? Can a sane person fake mental illness and convince the psychiatrists who examine him that he is insane? The answer is again “Yes”, and there have been countless such cases. For example, in Greece, it is common practice for men to fake mental illness in order to evade compulsory military service. Other well-known cases include that of Nellie Bly, who in 1887 feigned mental illness in order to gain admission to the Women’s Lunatic Asylum on Blackwell’s Island (now Roosevelt Island), New York.²²⁷⁹ A further example is a condition known as Ganser Syndrome, which involves conscious imitation of the behaviour of a sufferer from mental illness, giving nonsensical and irrelevant answers to questions.²²⁸⁰

The most famous case of people faking mental illness and fooling their psychiatrists is the Rosenhan Experiment, which was conducted in 1973 in the USA by Professor David Rosenhan, Professor of Law and Psychology at Stanford University. Prof. Rosenhan and seven other perfectly sane people, including a painter and a housewife, admitted themselves to twelve different psychiatric hospitals in five different US States. The purpose of the experiment was to test the validity of psychiatric diagnoses.²²⁸¹

Most of these “pseudopatients” had not previously been to a psychiatric hospital, and the hospital staff was not aware of the experiment. The pseudopatients feigned hallucinations; convincing their examiners that they needed treatment, they secured admittance to the hospitals after they were all diagnosed with psychiatric disorders. After admission, each ²²⁷⁸ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

²²⁷⁹ Alice Gregory, “Nellie Bly’s Lessons in Writing What You Want To.” The New Yorker, 14 May 2014.

²²⁸⁰ Robert M. Kaplan, Dark Tales of Illness, Medicine, and Madness: The King Who Strangled His Psychiatrist, (Newcastle upon-Tyne: Cambridge Scholars Publishing, 2019), p. 108.

²²⁸¹ David L. Rosenhan, “On Being Sane in Insane Places.” Science, New Series, Vol. 179, No. 4070. (Jan. 19, 1973), p. 250-252.

patient remained in hospital for an average of nineteen days. In no case did any of the hospital staff catch on to the hoax.²²⁸²

As soon as they had been admitted, the pseudopatients stopped feigning madness; each of them then had to individually secure their release by convincing staff of their sanity. They behaved entirely rationally and informed those treating them that they were no longer hallucinating. In every case but one, they began asking to be released almost straight away. However, the staff were not convinced. One of the pseudopatients was discharged having been diagnosed as schizophrenic; the rest were labelled as having schizophrenia “in remission”. Before they could be set free, they had to accept that they were mentally ill and consent to take a course of antipsychotic drugs.²²⁸³

Professor Rosenhan’s study was published in 1973 by the journal Science under the title “On Being Sane in Insane Places”, to great controversy due to the deception but also to massive acclaim. The study proved that it was quite possible – easy, in fact – for a sane person to deceive psychiatric hospital staff, and even psychiatrists, into diagnosing them as suffering from schizophrenia. Rosenhan summed up his findings as follows:

“The facts of the matter are that we have known for a long time that diagnoses are often not useful or reliable, but we have nevertheless continued to use them. We now know that we cannot distinguish sanity from insanity. It is depressing to consider how that information will be used ... It is clear that we cannot distinguish the sane from the insane in psychiatric hospitals. The hospital itself imposes a special environment in which the meaning of behavior can easily be misunderstood.”²²⁸⁴

The study remains highly influential and is still considered to be an important critique of how psychiatric diagnoses had been conducted up to that point.²²⁸⁵ In 2005, Peter C. Gaughwin, Barrister and Solicitor at the Crown Solicitor’s Office, Adelaide, Australia, wrote:

“As Rosenhan’s experiment [1973] shows, it is not difficult to simulate symptoms of psychiatric illness. A NSW Parliamentary Committee and research from overseas have shown that, in the medico-legal context, such practices continue to exist, notwithstanding that, despite many advances in the general public’s understanding of psychiatric illness, there ²²⁸² Rosenhan, “On Being Sane in Insane Places”, p. 251-252.

²²⁸³ Rosenhan, “On Being Sane in Insane Places”, p. 251-253.

²²⁸⁴ Rosenhan, “On Being Sane in Insane Places.” p. 257.

²²⁸⁵ Peter C. Gaughwin (2005) “On Being Insane in Medico-Legal Places: The Importance of Taking a Complete History in Forensic Mental Health Assessment”, Psychiatry, Psychology and Law, 12:2, p. 299.

continues to exist a pejorative attitude towards psychiatric illness... Such practices not only bring the mental health area into disrepute, they also have the effect of distorting negatively the outcomes of litigation and raise ethical questions about the misuse of mental illness for personal benefit. It remains the case that expert mental health practitioners have an ethical duty to educate both the practitioners who employ them and the courts in general as to the reality of what constitutes mental illness.”²²⁸⁶

It is worth mentioning here that in the 1950s, 1960s and early 1970s, a large number of psychiatrists, especially Americans believed that homosexuality was a psychiatric condition, a mental disease, and it could be treated. The American Psychiatric Association listed homosexuality as a mental disease. Advice often given to those who experienced homosexual feelings was that they should consult a psychiatrist or psychologist. Some psychiatrists even tried to “cure” homosexuals with psychiatric therapy.²²⁸⁷ In the 1950s, and indeed up until 1967, homosexuality was illegal in the UK and was placed in the category of a mental disorder, to be dealt with via chemical castration. The most infamous case took place in 1952, when Alan Turing, founder of computer science and Enigma codebreaker, accepted chemical castration as a term of his probation in order to avoid imprisonment after he had admitted having a homosexual relationship.²²⁸⁸

As for South Africa, from the mid-1960s to the late-1980s, the apartheid government attempted to “cure” homosexual soldiers under the so-called “Aversion Project” of forensic psychiatrist Dr. Aubrey Levin. Possibly as many as 900 military draftees of both sexes (a rate of about fifty a year for eighteen years), mostly aged 16-24, were subjected to chemical castration, electric shock treatment and “sexual reassignment” surgery, intended to remove their homosexuality, which was seen as a “disease.”²²⁸⁹

It was only in the early and middle 1970s that attitudes to homosexuality in the areas of medicine and psychiatry began to change. In 1973, the American Psychiatric Association removed homosexuality from its official list of mental disorders, giving rise to a series of ²²⁸⁶ Gaughwin, “On Being Insane in Medico-Legal Places: The Importance of Taking a Complete History in Forensic Mental Health Assessment”, p. 306-307.

²²⁸⁷ Daniel K. Williams, “Sex and the Evangelicals; Gender Issues, the Sexual Revolution, and Abortion in the 1960s.” In Axel R Schafer, American Evangelicals and the 1960s, (Madison: University of Wisconsin Press, 2013), p. 104.

²²⁸⁸ Andrew Hodges, Alan Turing: The Enigma: The Book That Inspired the Film The Imitation Game, (London: Vintage Books, 2014), p. 593-597.

²²⁸⁹ Robert Kaplan, “The Aversion Project – Psychiatric Abuses in the South African Defence Force during the Apartheid Era.” South African Medical Journal, (March 2001), Vol. 91, No. 3, p. 216-217.

jokes about the “instant cure.”²²⁹⁰ However, as late as 1979, the US Public Health Service was carrying out psychiatric examinations of visiting foreigners with a view to diagnosing those who presented as homosexual as having “psychopathic personalities.”²²⁹¹ Even so, in South Africa the forced “sexual reassignment” surgeries continued until the late-1980s.²²⁹²

Was this the first time Tsafendas had faked mental illness? The answer is “No”, and the police was very well aware of this as Tsafendas’s medical report from Grafton State Hospital stated clearly that while in the United States in 1943 “he faked mental illness because he was afraid to ship out because of the numerous leakings (sinkings) of ships.”²²⁹³

Was Tsafendas capable of convincing Dr. Cooper that he was schizophrenic? That he had done so in the past with the tapeworm story and the Saint Peter fixation suggests that he could. Judge Jacques Theodore van Wyk of the Commission of Enquiry said in his final report that Tsafendas was “quite knowledgeable about mental disorders—he also admitted to the Commission that he had read fairly extensively on the subject in order to determine what was wrong with him—and therefore [the Commission] adopted a somewhat sceptical attitude towards him. It is clear that his word cannot be relied upon, and that he is sufficiently intelligent to put on a fairly good act.”²²⁹⁴

The unavoidable conclusion concerning Dr. Cooper’s evidence is that his portrayal of Tsafendas was a travesty of the truth. A long list of Tsafendas’s actions and opinions which would have provided an entirely different picture of the man went unmentioned throughout the summary trial. They included: that Tsafendas considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant, a dictator, an evil man, the brains behind apartheid and Hitler’s best student; that Tsafendas hoped killing him would bring about a change of policy; that he wanted to do everything possible to get the ruling regime out of power and see a government representing all the South African people in its place; that philosophically he detested apartheid, slavery, colonialism and racism; that he was a partisan for the independence of Mozambique, was arrested and imprisoned five times by the Portuguese Police because of his anti-Portuguese and Communist activities, and that PIDE had a 130-page file on him from 1938. None of ²²⁹⁰ Charalampos Dousemetzis, The Presidency of Jimmy Carter and the Emerging Politics of Gay Rights and Evangelical Religion, (Ph.D. Thesis, Durham University, England, July 2018), p. 40.

²²⁹¹ Dousemetzis, The Presidency of Jimmy Carter and the Emerging Politics of Gay Rights and Evangelical Religion, p. 30.

²²⁹² Kaplan, “The Aversion Project – Psychiatric Abuses in the South African Defence Force during the Apartheid Era”, p. 217.

²²⁹³ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

²²⁹⁴ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18.

these facts came to light and Tsafendas was presented as a schizophrenic who believed he had a tapeworm which controlled his life, who did not like Coloureds and who assassinated Dr. Verwoerd because he was frustrated. This became the public perception of Tsafendas and has remained so to this day.

Professors Alban Burke, Kirk Heilbrun, Robert L. Sadoff and Tuviah Zabow believe that Dr. Cooper's diagnosis would not have been seen as credible in any modern and democratic court today.²²⁹⁵ Professor Heilbrun told the author:

“It [Dr. Cooper's diagnosis] would not be given much credibility in a U.S. court. Many of the points we have discussed [above] would be incorporated into cross-examination to challenge the credibility of the opinions based only on self-report.”²²⁹⁶

Professor Zabow also agrees with the author's analysis of Dr. Cooper's diagnosis. He said:

“Just a few comments further to our interesting discussion this afternoon where we seem to concur on the issues of psychiatric expert testimonies. I have read the information with interest particularly the collateral background provided. Much of this was not available at time of psychiatric assessments or in the Court. Of interest is the Tsafendas statement which was done early on the investigation and much of the information he must have been able to provide or a least agreed upon if coerced to sign. If he was psychotic and unable to marshal his thoughts, this would not have been possible. This is significant in relation to the expert testimonies which are so central to the discussion that all these were provided without background factual information at than stage. The focus should have been on mental state examination in its 'form' and not therefore dependent on the content. The uncertainties expressed as to conclusions in relation to the nature of the disorder and the features are evident.

As mentioned previously in discussion with you, the evaluation should consist of supportive history as available and observation of behaviour and functioning. Forensic assessments are undertaken in hospital-like setting where function and behaviour outside of the consulting room are observed. I am also concerned as to when the examinations took place relevant to other activities and interrogations. Many appear to have taken place under ²²⁹⁵ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016; Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017; Professor Robert L. Sadoff in a personal interview with the author, 12 August 2015; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016.

²²⁹⁶ Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017.

some pressure of time and in various environments such as the EEG laboratory etc. The time of the assessments clearly were during the severe and ongoing torture and abuse so this effect on his mental status in the ‘sample’ period needed consideration. The observed symptoms may be explained somewhat in other ways due to the above.”²²⁹⁷

Tsafendas’s file at the Prison Service, File: A5078, while imprisoned in Pretoria Central Maximum Security Prison described him as:

“A person of Colour, an extremely resourceful and cunning individual who is physically and mentally able to plan and execute escape.”²²⁹⁸

This description hardly fits the Tsafendas described by Dr. Cooper as someone unable to function on a reasonable level, unable to care for himself and unfit to stand trial. However, the description fits perfectly with the way Tsafendas was described by people who knew him well and according to a plethora of evidence gathered by the South African police and the Commission of Enquiry into Dr. Verwoerd’s death. Finally, Advocate George Bizos found the evidence showing Dr. Cooper’s testimony as wrong to be “overwhelming and unquestionable.”²²⁹⁹

²²⁹⁷ Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 3 September 2016.

²²⁹⁸ Marais, Die Era van Verwoerd, p. 208.

²²⁹⁹ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017.

DAY 2: 18 OCTOBER 1966

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 2: DR. HENDRIK MULLER

Dr. Muller, a Cape Town physician, was appointed by David Bloomberg to examine Tsafendas and offer an expert opinion on whether or not he harboured a tapeworm. It was an astute appointment since Dr. Muller was not only well known and widely respected, he was also the personal doctor of Judge Beyers.²³⁰⁰

EXTRACTS FROM DR. MULLER'S TESTIMONY²³⁰¹

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When did you examine the accused?

DR. MULLER: On the 12th October.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where did you examine him?

DR. MULLER: At Caledon Square.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did you ask the accused?

DR. MULLER: I asked him if he suffered from any physical illness. I explained to him that it was my purpose to examine him physically.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was his reply?

DR. MULLER: He said that his only trouble was this worm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did he tell you about the worm?

DR. MULLER: He first became conscious of the worm in 1936. He stated that for some two to three months he had been feeling irritable and unwell and during this period he had noticed that he was passing segments of worm by rectum; segments which passed spontaneously and would fall into his trousers, and he described them as being like macaroni, which nevertheless moves spontaneously, and this led him to believe that he had a worm. This had happened while he was in Lourenço Marques, and he went to a chemist there who told him how to treat ²³⁰⁰ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 79; Cooper, Under Devil's Peak: The Life and Times of Wilfrid Cooper, An Advocate in the Age of Apartheid, p. 105.

²³⁰¹ Dr. Hendrik Muller's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

this condition.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: From his description did you form the impression that, in fact, in 1936 he did have a worm which?

DR. MULLER: Yes, I was fully convinced about that, especially when he described the result of taking this treatment.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Shortly, what was the result?

DR. MULLER: He passed a long length of the worm, but he felt that he had not passed the whole worm, that part of it still remained in his rectum. It broke off when he pulled on it.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is his present complaint about?

DR. MULLER: He says that the worm has changed his whole character and his whole physique, whereas before he was thin and wiry, he has now become fat and flabby. It has made him irritable, changed his nature; that he can no longer be friendly with people, he was bad-tempered. It has made him eat excessively and made him put on weight to a great extent. He states he can feel the worm moving about inside him, causing severe pain at times, and generally making him feel thoroughly miserable and unwell.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How does he describe the worm? What does he call it?

DR. MULLER: He referred to it on two or three occasions as an abominable thing inside him, and as a worm, but he didn't use any other terms.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Have you tried to ascertain from him whether he has passed any segments since taking medicine in 1936?

DR. MULLER: Yes, I asked him that on two occasions, whether he had again passed any segments of the worm or whether he had passed a long length of the worm, and he was quite sure that he had never again passed a segment or a length of the worm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you ascertain from him whether he had had any treatment for this worm since 1936?

DR. MULLER: Yes, he stated he had had many treatments, some of them very severe. In fact, one of the treatments, he says, almost killed him but in spite of this he never again passed any part of the worm. And no treatment at any time made him feel better.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Does he presently believe that he still has the tapeworm?

DR. MULLER: He appears to be quite convinced about that.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What impression did you form as to the veracity; does he genuinely believe in the existence of this worm?

DR. MULLER: Yes, I believe that is so. I think he really does feel that he still harbours this worm and that it still is affecting him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Your examination was directed to - obviously after this worm story - find out whether he still had a worm?

DR. MULLER: Well, I didn't do anything more extensive. I examined him clinically, palpated his abdomen, examined the heart, lungs and nervous system generally. I did not have stool examinations or other examinations to demonstrate whether the worm is still present.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is your opinion?

DR. MULLER: I am quite convinced he does not have a worm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: If evidence is led that in May, 1959, the accused received treatment at the University College Hospital, that is, St. Pancras Hospital, to ascertain whether or not there was a worm and that no tape-worm was produced, how important would that evidence be to you as a physician?

DR. MULLER: Well, it would confirm my feeling that he just does not have a worm. It is a very reputable hospital and I am sure that they must have done the job properly.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: If they came to the conclusion that there was no worm in 1959, you would not quarrel with that?

DR. MULLER: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is the overall physical condition of the accused?

DR. MULLER: Physically he is fat and rather unfit but there is no organic disease demonstrable. He is as healthy as most people of his age are.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You had no difficulty in communicating with him?

DR. MULLER: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he have difficulty in expressing himself?

DR. MULLER: None at all.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How was the accused during your examination? Was he in a state of anxiety?

DR. MULLER: It was difficult to say. He appeared vague in his manner and almost, one could say, detached. It is difficult to describe exactly how he was.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I just want to ask the doctor this, what impression did the accused make upon him?

DR. MULLER: He appeared an ordinary enough man, certainly not exceptional, particularly not ill, not particularly disturbed, you know; not anxious or upset; intelligent and able to understand what was said to him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I just want to ask you finally: With his health and his intelligence should he be able to hold down a job?

DR. MULLER: Yes. Yes, I would think he could very easily.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I am talking about his physical health?

DR. MULLER: Yes.

COMMENTS ON DR. MULLER'S TESTIMONY

According to Dr. Muller, Tsafendas was able to understand what was said to him, had no problem communicating with him and was not particularly disturbed. More importantly, Dr. Muller contradicted Dr. Cooper's beliefs that Tsafendas was not able to hold down a job and unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes.

Tsafendas spoke to Dr. Muller at length about the tapeworm and its origins. As we will see, it is something he does with any doctor who examines him in custody. Tsafendas also spoke about the tapeworm in most of the hospitals where he was treated, saying roughly the same things he told Dr. Muller. However, these were hospitals to which Tsafendas himself sought admittance or to which he was taken by police who believed they had noticed "something wrong with him" during interrogation. Tsafendas was never taken to a hospital or recommended to one by anyone other than the police.

Significantly, Tsafendas was examined by at least nine physicians during the three years up to the assassination and did not tell any of them anything about a tapeworm. They were not psychiatrists, so Tsafendas may have felt it was an irrelevance, however, Dr. Muller is not a psychiatrist either and Tsafendas told him clearly that “his only trouble was this worm.” If Tsafendas really believed he had a tapeworm and always told the medics who examined him in custody, would he not also have told the other nine doctors? After all, he said that this was his only health problem.

Surprisingly, although Dr. Muller was appointed to discover if Tsafendas had a tapeworm, he did not carry out any of the relevant physical examinations, including rectal investigation, as he appeared to be convinced simply by listening to Tsafendas that the worm was a figment of his imagination. However, his remit was to discover the truth of the tapeworm, not by talking to Tsafendas - that was the psychiatrists’ task - but by examining him, and this he did not do. He produced no physical evidence, either pro or con, and his conclusion was based on an assessment of Tsafendas’s words, upon which, not being a psychiatrist, he was not qualified to pronounce. What was the point of Dr. Muller testifying that Tsafendas did not have a tapeworm when he did not examine him? For all anyone knew, he could very well have had one. It is germane that the nine physicians who examined Tsafendas over the previous three years did so after he applied for permanent residence in South Africa and in connection with several job applications. In every case, he was found to be perfectly sane, capable of doing the work he applied for and fit for permanent residence. Not only did Tsafendas remain silent on the tapeworm, he also concealed his previous hospitalisations.

Dr. Muller stated that Tsafendas had the tapeworm since 1936. At that time, Tsafendas was still living at his parents’ home, yet everyone in his family stated in their testimony to the Commission that Tsafendas never mentioned a tapeworm to them and that he was “definitely not insane.”²³⁰² Charles Nissiotis, Tsafendas’s brother-in-law, told the police, “As far as I could established he never mentioned the tapeworm story to any of the family.”²³⁰³ Tsafendas’s half-sister Katerina Pnefma and his first cousin Mary Eintracht also were never told by Tsafendas about the tapeworm. Eintracht had grown up with Tsafendas in Egypt and then in Mozambique and was very close to him. The private conclusion of all the family members was that Tsafendas made up the tapeworm story to save himself from the ²³⁰² COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

²³⁰³ Charles Nissiotis statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

gallows.²³⁰⁴ Family apart, three good friends of Tsafendas from that time, Ira Kyriakakis, Helen Grispos and his schoolmate George Grispos, never heard Tsafendas say anything about a tapeworm.²³⁰⁵

The most surprising thing about Dr. Muller's testimony is that he contradicts Dr. Cooper's evidence on a number of points and no attempt is made by the Court or the Attorney-General to clarify these issues. Dr. Cooper had found Tsafendas "unable to function on a reasonable level," "incapable of holding down employment" and unable to "express himself in a coherent fashion." Dr. Muller found no communication issues with Tsafendas, he believed that he could "very easily" hold down a job and did not report anything regarding his being "unable to function on a reasonable level."

It is important to remember that Dr. Muller is not a psychiatrist with the necessary expertise to comment on Tsafendas's state of mind, therefore Dr. Cooper's is the expert opinion. However, the next defence witness is Dr. Kossew, a district surgeon, who is also not a psychiatrist and therefore not an expert; he will diagnose Tsafendas as schizophrenic and his testimony will prove vital for Judge Beyers to reach his verdict in the end.

²³⁰⁴ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²³⁰⁵ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 3: DR. RALPH KOSSEW

Dr. Kossew, the District Surgeon in Cape Town, although not a psychiatrist, was an important witness for the defence because he had diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic three months before the assassination. Judge Beyers would state in his verdict how much he valued and gave weight to Dr. Kossew's testimony. However, as we will see, it is by far the weakest evaluation of Tsafendas by any of the doctors who examined him.

EXTRACTS FROM DR. KOSSEW'S TESTIMONY²³⁰⁶

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The accused, have you seen him before?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you see him during June, 1965?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: On what date?

DR. KOSSEW: On the 17th of June.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where did you see him?

DR. KOSSEW: At our offices - the District Surgeon's offices.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was it 1965 or 1966?

DR. KOSSEW: 1966.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Why did the accused come to you?

DR. KOSSEW: He was referred to us by the Department of Social Welfare for a disability grant.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And tell me, doctor, did you examine him then?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you fill in a form as a result of your examination and the ²³⁰⁶ Dr. Ralph Kossew's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

opinion that you formed?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Have you a carbon copy of that form before you?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes. I have typed copies for the benefit of the Court, M' Lord. This will be R.S.C.A.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you read out this document?

DR. KOSSEW: The name was given as Dimitrio Tsafendas, born on the 14th January, 1918. He was not at work at this time I examined him, and he had last worked in March, 1966, and was a handyman at that time at the Engineering Works, Marine Diamond Corporation.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was the applicant's complaint?

DR. KOSSEW: Well, I had to DEFENCE COUNSEL: Read out what you have written down?

DR. KOSSEW: I found that he was vague and did not give a coherent account of himself, and that he was hypochondriacal. I have a note here that he talks about nothing else but his complaints and has ideas of a persecutory nature. He says that in his boarding-house they deliberately give certain food to people to cause their deaths. And he says that 20 people had died in a year that way. His memory was defective, I noted.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was this what you put in under the heading "Applicant's complaints - (history, symptoms and previous treatment)"?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In your general examination, what did you find his general physical and nutritional state to be?

DR. KOSSEW: I found nil abnormal in all his systems.

JUDGE BEYERS: In "General physical and nutritional state" you've got "Good."

DR. KOSSEW: Yes. His respiratory system was normal. His cardiovascular system was normal. His blood-pressure was 150/100. His genito-urinary system was normal, and so was his alimentary and other abdominal systems. His musculo-skeletal system was normal, as was his central nervous system.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And his mental condition?

DR. KOSSEW: I put down “Schizophrenic.”

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did you put down for a prognosis for ‘Schizophrenic’?”

DR. KOSSEW: I put down: “Prognosis - Poor.”

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did you say was his degree of disablement?

DR. KOSSEW: I put the degree of disablement as compared with a normal individual as: “Severe.”

DEFENCE COUNSEL: So where you have whether the disablement is slight, moderate or severe, you put it in a high class?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: His present incapacity, do you find it to be temporary or permanent?

DR. KOSSEW: Permanent.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you consider that medical treatment would improve or cure his schizophrenia?

DR. KOSSEW: I put: “No.”

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What labour did you find him suitable for?

DR. KOSSEW: I suggested that he would be a suitable candidate for subsidised labour.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: As regards the open market, what was your opinion?

DR. KOSSEW: I said he is not suitable for the open market.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: As regards sheltered employment?

DR. KOSSEW: I put: “No.”

CROSS-EXAMINED BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Were you busy on that particular day in June, 1966?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes, we are normally very busy in the mornings.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Were you very busy?

DR. KOSSEW: I can’t remember if I was very busy. I suppose an average morning’s work.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And normally you are very busy, not so?

DR. KOSSEW: In the mornings, yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: How long were you with the accused?

DR. KOSSEW: Between a quarter of an hour to 20 minutes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Weren't you only busy with him for 10 minutes?

DR. KOSSEW: Well, I can't say exactly how long I was busy with him but I...

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You may have been busy with him for only 10 minutes?

DR. KOSSEW: He presented himself without any form of certificate or reference from anybody. He just came in as a person, I had to start from scratch, so that would have taken me a little bit longer.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Have you any qualifications in psychiatry?

DR. KOSSEW: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you agree that there is a difference between ideas of a persecutory nature and of a persecutory delusion?

DR. KOSSEW: Well, I don't think I can - my psychiatric knowledge is not so detailed that I can make these intricate definitions or distinctions.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you agree that many people are preoccupied with their health?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Don't many people exaggerate the poor quality of boarding-house food?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Wasn't the accused fabricating?

DR. KOSSEW: Well, I had no idea of verifying his statements, and no means of verifying his statements, I'd say.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What test did you apply to find that the accused was vague?

DR. KOSSEW: Well, not actually any tests, but I got the impression that he was not able to remember things clearly and he was sort of uncertain. My questions actually were mostly concerned with his physical condition and the type of work he had previously done in order to assess his degree of disability.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Normal people also often forget these things?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What test did you apply to find that the accused's memory was defective?

DR. KOSSEW: Well, the defective memory I got as a general picture; I remember questioning him about the type of work he did and the nature of his complaints. Well, he was very uncertain as to some details of his complaints and his previous working habits, and that induced me to put down that his memory may be defective.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What test did you apply to find that he was vague?

DR. KOSSEW: A similar thing applies to the fact that he was vague. I got the impression that he didn't remember things very clearly and he was often very uncertain.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Isn't this also a normal phenomenon?

DR. KOSSEW: It could be, yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You didn't consider it necessary to have the accused sent for treatment or observation?

DR. KOSSEW: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Why didn't you certify the accused when you saw him in June, 1966?

DR. KOSSEW: Well, in my opinion he wasn't certifiable. To me he appeared to be a person who could take care of himself. He didn't look as if he needed care and attention, and I did not get the impression that he was dangerous to himself or to others.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: He did not complain to you that he was not capable of doing his work at the Marine Diamond Corporation?

DR. KOSSEW: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he ever mention to you that he was suffering from a tapeworm in June, 1966?

DR. KOSSEW: He didn't mention it in June, 1966, but I did see him subsequently when he made some mention of it.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: When did you see him subsequently?

DR. KOSSEW: I saw him about - I can't remember the exact date - it was about two weeks ago when I was asked by Major Rossouw to come and see him, as he was complaining of some ailment.

JUDGE BEYERS: This is rather interesting because you did fill in "Alimentary and other abdominal systems: nothing abnormal detected." Now, I suppose a tapeworm would fall under that heading wouldn't it?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: It would certainly be intestinal, so you must have enquired, made some enquiry into his intestinal condition?

DR. KOSSEW: I did.

JUDGE BEYERS: And he didn't tell you anything about this?

DR. KOSSEW: He never mentioned a tapeworm.

JUDGE BEYERS: He told you about the tapeworm only after the alleged murder?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You saw the accused at 2.50 p.m. on the 6th September, 1966?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You then also examined him?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he then mention anything about this so-called tapeworm?

DR. KOSSEW: That examination was at the request of the Police, to ascertain his injuries that he sustained, and I was asked to fill in form J.88 which - I don't know the exact wording - for examination of a person who alleges he's been assaulted.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Is this the form that you filled in? (R.S.C.B).

DR. KOSSEW: Yes, this is the form.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What exactly did you find on that occasion?

DR. KOSSEW: Must I read this form?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: No. You can refresh your memory from it.

DR. KOSSEW: Must I read this form in its entirety?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: But on that occasion you found that he was not confused?

DR. KOSSEW: No, he was not confused.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And that was only 35 minutes after the murder had been committed?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Then he was not confused?

DR. KOSSEW: He was not confused. I did add in my remarks that he answers questions guardedly but does not appear to be confused.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You have already said that he never mentioned a tapeworm to you on that occasion?

DR. KOSSEW: No.

Re-Examined by the DEFENCE COUNSEL: When you examined the accused at 2.50 on the 6th September, 1966, was he anxious?

DR. KOSSEW: No, he didn't appear anxious.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did he appear?

DR. KOSSEW: Well, he was quiet. He may have been a little bit nervous but not in any marked degree.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Generally he was calm?

DR. KOSSEW: He was calm.

COMMENTS ON DR. KOSSEW'S TESTIMONY

Even though he was not a qualified psychiatrist, Dr. Kossew was able to determine, after an examination which lasted "a little bit longer" than ten minutes, that Tsafendas was a schizophrenic and unable to work in the "open market" or in "sheltered employment." Dr. Kossew also admits that he had no intention and "no idea" and "no means" of verifying Tsafendas's statements and he obviously took as truth whatever Tsafendas told him. The fact that he was not a psychiatrist must have made it even more difficult for Dr. Kossew to understand whether the patient was lying. He stresses, however, that his intention was mostly to make a determination of his physical condition and not his mental condition.

Dr. Kossew did not consult any medical reports on Tsafendas and did not get any information about him from anyone who knew him; he took his words for granted. After examining Tsafendas for the first time, Dr. Sakinofsky and Dr. Cooper, both psychiatrists, shared the impression that he was schizophrenic, but both wanted to examine him again before reaching a conclusion. For the non-psychiatrist Dr. Kossew, a very brief consultation was enough to diagnose him as schizophrenic and find him eligible for a disability grant. However, we should also note the circumstances under which Tsafendas was examined. The psychiatrists examined a man who had murdered the Prime Minister and were naturally very thorough, while Dr. Kossew examined an applicant for a disability grant on a very busy morning.

What is extraordinary about Dr. Kossew's role in the case is that no-one raises the fact that Tsafendas was seeking a disability grant, having been referred to Dr. Kossew by the Department of Social Welfare. In order to qualify for such a grant, an applicant had to be found "unable, owing to infirmity of mind or body, to undertake regular work."²³⁰⁷ This is exactly what Tsafendas was found to be; had he been found sane, he would not have qualified for the grant.

During the previous two and half years, however, whenever Tsafendas needed to prove he was perfectly healthy and sane, in order for instance to secure a job or a permanent residence permit, all five doctors who examined him found him to be so. Tsafendas did not tell any of these doctors about the tapeworm. We should not forget that Tsafendas did not tell Dr. Kossew about it either, at least during their first two meetings, but mentioned it in the third, which was four weeks after the assassination while he was in custody.

These are the five doctors who examined Tsafendas:

- On November 11, 1963, Tsafendas was examined by Dr. C. Been for his permanent residence application and was found "not to be mentally or physically defective in any way," and "generally in a good state of health."²³⁰⁸ Dr. Been would later examine ²³⁰⁷ House of Assembly, Question No. 17. 3 February 1967. K150, Vol. 12, File: Social Welfare and Pensions, NASA.

²³⁰⁸ Demitrio Tsafendas medical certificate issued by Dr. Been for the Aliens Act, 1937. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

Tsafendas again “for burns on his body whilst employed at Pooles.” Again nothing about his mental state was noted.²³⁰⁹

- On November 14, 1963, Tsafendas was examined again in reference to his residence application by Dr. A.C. McDonald, who wrote “a favourable report.” A certificate for permanent residence was subsequently issued.²³¹⁰
- On March 15, 1965, Tsafendas was examined by a South African Railways’ medical examiner whose name is indecipherable in his report. Tsafendas was found to be perfectly healthy, without any issues and therefore capable of working for the company.²³¹¹
- On November 19, 1965, Tsafendas was examined to assess his fitness to work for City Tramways in Cape Town. Again, he was found to be fit to work and duly hired.²³¹²
- On January 13, 1966, Tsafendas applied for a job at the Marine Diamond Corporation and was medically checked that same day. The doctor who carried out the examination found Tsafendas to be perfectly healthy and capable of working for the company.²³¹³

In addition, the previous three years Tsafendas was also examined by another five doctors who also did not discover anything being wrong with him and he did not tell them anything about the tapeworm:

- From April 19, 1966 to May 15, 1966, Tsafendas was under the medical supervision of Dr. Leon Solomon at Groote Schuur Hospital, suffering from “a deviated nasal septum and epistaxis,” and underwent surgery on his nose. Dr. Solomon during this period did not report any mental disability and found Tsafendas to be fit to return to his work at Marine Diamond Corporation. Dr. Solomon examined him again on June 7, 1966, and again did not notice anything mentally wrong with him.²³¹⁴

²³⁰⁹ Dr. Been statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²³¹⁰ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

²³¹¹ South African Railways Confidential Medical Examination Certificate of Demitrio Tsafendas. K150, Vol. 7, File: S 83708, Tsafendas: D. NASA.

²³¹² Donald Neville Mackay statement to the COE, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²³¹³ Demitrio Tsafendas’s Marine Diamond Corporation application for Employment, 13 January 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 3. NASA.

²³¹⁴ Dr. Leon Solomon’s medical report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA; Medical certificate issued by Dr. Solomon for the Employment Insurance Act, 1946. 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA.

- On April 18, 19, 26 and May 3, 1966 Tsafendas was examined at Groote Schuur Hospital by Dr. Leon Goldman, a consultant ear, nose and throat surgeon. He did not observe anything mentally wrong with him and discharged him as “fit” on May 17, 1966.²³¹⁵
- On February 25, 1966, Tsafendas was examined at Groote Schuur Hospital by I. Eisenberg, a registrar on the Ear, Nose & Throat Department, who did not observe anything mentally wrong with him.²³¹⁶
- Finally, Dr. T.A. Darby examined Tsafendas on the evening of the assassination but did not report anything to be wrong about his mental state.²³¹⁷
- On September 25, 1965, he was examined by Dr. G.C. Baker and again nothing was reported about his mental state.²³¹⁸

All of the above medical reports were in the possession of the South African police but none of them was used to challenge Dr. Kossew’s testimony. None of these doctors was a psychiatrist, but neither was Dr. Kossew, and if Dr. Kossew was acceptable as a witness, surely all the other doctors who examined Tsafendas over the previous three years should also be acceptable. However, they were not asked to testify and their diagnoses were not used in court.

The obvious reason Tsafendas did not mention the tapeworm to the ten doctors is that questions would have been raised about his mental state and he would have been refused a residence permit and turned down for the jobs he was seeking. Importantly, Dr. Leon Goldman, a consultant surgeon, who examined Tsafendas just one month before Dr. Kossew did not report anything about his mental state or his ideas of a persecutory nature. Then, why did Tsafendas eventually tell Dr. Kossew? Obviously because he wanted to qualify for the grant. Tsafendas admitted openly to several witnesses in later life that “wherever I had to be found insane, I was found to be insane; wherever I had to be found sane, I was found sane.”²³¹⁹

Furthermore, Tsafendas never appeared to be a schizophrenic to Dr. Vasilis

²³¹⁵ I. Eisenberg Statement. RE: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. N.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²³¹⁶ I. Eisenberg Statement. RE: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. N.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²³¹⁷ Dr. T.A. Darby. Statement re: Demitrio Tsafendas. G.S.H. NO. 65/014-181, 6 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²³¹⁸ Dr. G.C. Baker Statement RE: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. No date. K150, Vol. 6, File: 4, NASA.

²³¹⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Gordon Winter in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

Tzitzafakos, a Greek general practitioner he became friendly with in Beira in 1964. The doctor always maintained that Tsafendas was a very intelligent person and certainly not a schizophrenic.²³²⁰

The Attorney-General raised the issue of the ten-minute examination, but did not make much of it or of Dr. Kossew's professional status as a physician and not a psychiatrist. We do not also know if the Attorney-General was aware of Tsafendas's many medical examinations over the previous three years or their resulting decisions with regard to residence and employment. However, the South African police and the Commission of Enquiry were well aware of them and one would have expected the Attorney-General to know about them, too. Once again, it seems van den Berg was either not aware of certain facts or did not think it was important to raise them. The fact remains that Tsafendas was never found to be unhealthy or disturbed when he needed to be found healthy and sane; but he was invariably found unhealthy and disturbed when that was the condition he wanted.

Another aspect of the case which nobody seemed to notice was that Tsafendas told the police and his defence team not only the names of the hospitals and exact dates of his various hospitalisations, but also his exact diagnosis in each case. However, he concealed all the examinations where nothing was reported about his schizophrenia and the tapeworm. For instance, he mentioned the examination by Dr. Kossew when he was declared schizophrenic but was silent on all those ten mentioned above when he was pronounced healthy.

Dr. Kossew said when he first saw Tsafendas he seemed unable to give a coherent account of himself, which was not something any of the ten doctors who examined him ever noticed. The Attorney-General, as mentioned earlier, was in possession of a report by his own expert psychiatric witness, Professor van Wyk, which contradicted Dr. Kossew's assessment. The report said that Tsafendas "is orientated. He gives a good account of himself. His comprehension is good and his answers are relevant."²³²¹ However, just as in Dr. Cooper's case, the Attorney-General did not use it to challenge this testimony either.

Dr. Kossew also considered Tsafendas's memory defective because he could not give details about his previous work. However, Tsafendas had no such problem when he spoke to the police about his employment record, and Dr. Cooper characterised Tsafendas's memory defect as "negligible" and said that "on the whole his memory was satisfactory." In further ²³²⁰ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

²³²¹ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 91.

contradiction of Dr. Cooper's diagnosis, Dr. Kossew found Tsafendas "to be a person who could take care of himself."

An extremely important issue that is not mentioned at all is the fact that Tsafendas did not mention the tapeworm when he was first examined by Dr. Kossew and instead appeared to have ideas of persecutory nature. Dr. Kossew examined Tsafendas twice, on June 17, 1966 and then on the day of the assassination. On neither occasion did Tsafendas mention the tapeworm, only doing so when he met Dr. Kossew a third time, some two weeks before the trial commenced. This would have been around the first week of October, a time when Tsafendas was telling everybody he met about the tapeworm. Again, if Tsafendas believed he had a tapeworm, why did not he mention it to him before, as he did with the rest of the doctors and lawyers?

Dr. Cooper testified that Tsafendas attributed his inability to work and stay in a job to the tapeworm. However, Tsafendas did not give the same excuse to Dr. Kossew, indeed he did not even mention the tapeworm when he was examined for the disability grant. Instead he made up a preposterous story about the people in his boarding house being murdered. It is difficult not to assume that for Tsafendas, the tapeworm act was something like the "flavour of the month," alternating with his other tricks such as pretending he was Saint Peter and hearing voices like Joan of Arc. He could have used the tapeworm on this occasion with Dr. Kossew, but it may have sounded rather complicated and with possibly serious ramifications for himself than just a persecution complex. If he believed that a tapeworm was responsible for his inability to work but also to find work, then almost certainly he would have told Dr. Kossew, too, as it would have fitted perfectly with his claim for his alleged inability to work. The important point here is that Dr. Kossew was not asked to comment on the fact that Tsafendas blamed the tapeworm for his job problems to Dr. Cooper but made no such claim to him.

More importantly, no one questioned the fact that Tsafendas, two months after Dr. Kossew first examined him, did not repeat any of the things he told the doctor then about people being murdered in the house where he lived. If Tsafendas believed that then, would not have believed it two months later? Since it was clearly a "delusion," would it have just come and go so easily or he had two delusions in September and October 1966? Is it possible Tsafendas to not have believed he had a tapeworm at the time of the June 16 examination by Dr. Kossew if he really believed he had one? That would have meant that the tapeworm delusion had gone and a new one was created. Then, two months later, the tapeworm reappeared again and the persecutory ideas disappeared.

The same thing appeared to have happen again in 1964 when he was arrested by the Portuguese. In 1959 he was diagnosed as schizophrenic because of the tapeworm and in 1964 he was diagnosed again as schizophrenic but this time because he believed he was Saint Peter. This also suggests that the tapeworm delusion had gone and was replaced at the time by the belief that he was Saint Peter. Then, in June 1966, Saint Peter disappeared and the poisonous food appeared. In September 1966, the tapeworm re-appeared and the poisonous food disappeared.

According to Professor Burke, to claim two delusions at the same time or to have delusions coming and going as they were supposedly doing with Tsafendas, stretches credulity. He said:

“It’s not impossible, because the human brain is difficult to understand. It’s not impossible, but it is unlikely. It’s possible but it’s improbable. Let’s assume he was schizophrenic, for the sake of this argument, and, in the past, he had the delusion of being one of the apostles; that delusion would have stayed, so why would he, then, have created a new delusion around a tapeworm? It does not make sense, because your delusion stays fixed, so, if he really did believe he was one of the apostles, early on, that story would have stuck because the delusions will not have shifted. What happens with delusions is, they can become bigger, so they could include more things, but a shift from one delusion to another one is highly unlikely, so why would you go from apostle, and that worked for you ... well, let’s say he truly believed he was an apostle; why did that change as he went along?”

It makes no sense. Even if the schizophrenia had been treated, and it came back, then the same delusion would have come back, so it’s inconsistent in terms of the delusions. You typically have a very fixed delusion, and it becomes bigger, but doesn’t change significantly, so if he had been truly schizophrenic, and he had been admitted to these hospitals previously, based on what he said, that he believed he was an apostle, then he would have killed Dr. Verwoerd, based on the delusion that he was an apostle; he wouldn’t have changed to say there was a tapeworm, or whatever the case may be. So, there’s, already, some kind of inconsistency.”²³²²

Reyner van Zyl agrees that it is next to impossible, “Yes, one [delusion] may disappear, and the other one may then appear. But two at the same time, I don’t think so, ²³²² Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016.

because these delusions are usually very powerful.”²³²³

At the time of the June 17 examination by Dr. Kossew, Tsafendas lived at Wilhelmina de Vos’s boarding house, presumably the house he referred to in his remarks to Dr. Kossew about murders. De Vos testified to the police that she “considered him to be a completely normal person.”²³²⁴ At the same period Tsafendas also had his meals at Mary Scott’s boarding house. Scott testified to the police that she “never got the impression that he could be mentally unbalanced,” indeed she thought that he “appeared to be perfectly normal.”²³²⁵ These are the two boarding houses that Tsafendas visited at the time.

Tsafendas was extremely close at the time to Patrick O’Ryan, Richard Poggenpoel, Costas Chagios and Elias Constantaras. Constantaras, Panagiotis Peroglou and his girlfriend, Pamela Abrahams, took their meals, together with Tsafendas, in Mary Scott’s boarding house. He never told any of them anything about his “suspicion” that twenty people died because of “certain food.” All the above witnesses laughed when they heard this claim.²³²⁶

Constantaras, Chagios and Poggenpoel have no doubt that Tsafendas would have told them if he believed such a thing since they discussed many things, including De Vos’s and Scott’s boarding houses and the way they ran them. Tsafendas also loved the cooking of both his landladies and ate at both houses throughout June 1966 – hardly something to do if you believe people are dying from the food there. Constantaras has no doubt that Tsafendas made up the story.²³²⁷ Again, Tsafendas seems to be telling a doctor more than he ever said to his friends and certainly it was not because he trusted him.

Another significant issue is that Tsafendas got a job in the Parliament after he was examined by Dr. Kossew and found to be schizophrenic. According to Sidney Wiehand, a senior messenger who was present at Tsafendas’s interview, a person seeking such an appointment “must be of sober habits. He must be always neat, and then also we ask him if he’s got any sickness, or anything like that, then he must tell us. If so, then he must get a ²³²³ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

²³²⁴ Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²³²⁵ Mary Cathleen Scott statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²³²⁶ Pamela Abrahams and Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016; Stratis Vamvarapis in a personal interview, 31 May 2016; Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015.

²³²⁷ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015; Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016; Stratis Vamvarapis in a personal interview, 31 May 2016.

report from the doctor that he is fit for duty.”²³²⁸ Tsafendas said nothing about the tapeworm or the mysterious deaths he had mentioned to Dr. Kossew just a month ago, and he was duly appointed. A second senior messenger who was also present at the interview, Petrus Schuin, described Tsafendas as an ordinary man, the “same as any other person that had worked there.”²³²⁹

In addition, in July 1966, just two months before the assassination, Tsafendas gave a seventy-five-minute interview to a reporter named N.D. Hartford of the Cape Argus. They had already met at the beginning of the year when Tsafendas came to the newspaper and enquired whether there was any news of the freedom fighters of Mozambique. He described himself as an “anti-Portuguese rebel and an antagonist of the Portuguese dictatorship.”²³³⁰ Hartford’s impression was that Tsafendas was normal; he had no reason to believe that he was mentally defective. According to Hartford, Tsafendas spoke fluently without any noticeable gaps in the conversation.²³³¹

Dr. Kossew also found Tsafendas unable to work either in the “open market” or in “sheltered employment” and capable only of subsidised labour. However, five of Tsafendas’s colleagues at Parliament were questioned by the police and the Commission of Enquiry and none of them said he was inefficient or incapable. Gerald Shaw, a reporter for The Cape Times, would testify the following day that he found Tsafendas’s work as a messenger not good enough. However, he would later state that he had only a “brief acquaintanceship” with Tsafendas and that he did not think he was insane. Interestingly, the incidents which made Shaw think that Tsafendas’s work was not good occurred on September 2 and September 6, both days when Tsafendas had planned to kill Dr. Verwoerd, to shoot him at a party on the 2nd then to stab him in Parliament on the 6th. We will examine both incidents in detail in his testimony that follows.

Tsafendas also worked as interpreter for the court in Durban for six-seven months. However, the overriding single fact that contradicted Dr. Kossew’s diagnosis regarding Tsafendas’s working abilities was that he worked for nearly six months as a teacher of English at the Limasollu Naci, the most prestigious private language college in Turkey.

²³²⁸ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

²³²⁹ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

²³³⁰ The Cape Argus, ‘Brainwashed in Jail Held Man Told Argus.’ 7 September 1966: 3; Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 75.

²³³¹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 75.

Equally important is that Dr. Kossew examined Tsafendas just twenty minutes after the assassination and found him to be “calm” and not confused. Tsafendas did not mention the tapeworm again and Dr. Kossew did not make any note of Tsafendas being a schizophrenic.

CONCLUSION

Dr. Kossew’s testimony persuades us like no other testimony that Tsafendas could be found sane or insane whenever he wanted. He was examined at least three times by doctors to determine if he was healthy enough to be hired for a job and he was found to be healthy. He was examined twice by state doctors to assess if he was healthy and capable of working in South Africa in order to get permanent residence and he was found healthy and capable. On the other hand, when Tsafendas deemed it necessary to be found mentally or physically unable to work, he was duly found unfit. Since he was always perfectly well physically, Tsafendas could not pretend otherwise, and therefore had to demonstrate mental defects, which is precisely what he did.

Dr. Kossew stated that he came to his conclusions after an examination that lasted “a little bit longer than ten minutes,” and even though he was not a psychiatrist and therefore not an expert on the subject, still he declared Tsafendas to be schizophrenic. His diagnosis was accepted by the court and was taken seriously and accepted by Judge Beyers.

It is also noteworthy that Tsafendas told his defence team about Dr. Kossew’s examination, but not about the other ten examinations where he was found to be perfectly healthy. However, the South African police were aware of these examinations but none of them was used to challenge Dr. Kossew’s testimony.

Dr. Kossew diagnosed Tsafendas’s condition as permanent and his prognosis for him as “poor,” but how seriously can his testimony be taken? Here is a district surgeon and not a psychiatrist who examined a patient for “a little bit longer” than ten minutes and found him to be a schizophrenic; who came to his conclusions without looking at the patient’s medical records or receiving any other information about him; who admitted that he was not able to verify his patient’s words and therefore took them for granted. Is there any possibility that such a diagnosis would be taken seriously today in any modern courtroom? Or even being brought before such a court in the first place? However such a diagnosis was given serious consideration in apartheid South Africa.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 4: PETER HENRY DANIELS

INTRODUCTION

The fourth defence witness was Peter Daniels, Helen Daniels's brother. Although Helen lived in the same house as Tsafendas for fifty days, while her brother did not, Helen was not chosen as a defence witness while Peter Daniels was. Helen had written to Tsafendas when he was in Durban asking him to meet and marry her. She wrote five letters to him and sent a photograph of herself. Tsafendas travelled from Durban to Cape Town at her invitation, having replied that he wanted to meet her but to wait before making any commitment.

The defence lawyers spoke to Helen but she was not asked to testify to the court, presumably because she had told the police on September 15 that she had "not noticed anything abnormal" about Tsafendas and "there was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal."²³³² Instead, they asked Peter Daniels and his wife, Merle to give evidence, as neither of them had been questioned by the police. They agreed to do so in order to save Tsafendas's life. Peter Daniels's testimony was followed by that of his wife, Merle. Peter Daniels had also been interviewed by the Post and the Sunday Times, on September 18, 1966, and had lied about his sister's relationship with Tsafendas. He said it was Tsafendas who pursued Helen, writing to her and asking her to marry him,²³³³ while in reality it was the other way around.

PETER DANIELS'S TESTIMONY²³³⁴

MEETING TSAFENDAS AND HIS STAY IN HIS MOTHER'S HOUSE

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When did you see Tsafendas for the first time?

P. DANIELS: On the 28th August, 1965, Tsafendas knocked at my mother's door and in her kitchen the first time I saw Tsafendas.

²³³² Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

²³³³ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), 'Tsafendas's Brothers are Quizzed', 18 September 1966: 18: 5; Winter, 'I Jilted Tsafendas, Says Coloured Girl', The Post, 18 September 1966: 1.

²³³⁴ Peter Daniels's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you know he was coming?

P. DANIELS: I did not know that he was coming.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: But did you know about him?

P. DANIELS: I had never heard of him before.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did he come to your place?

P. DANIELS: He had a correspondence with my sister, Ellen, who is at present in this great ministry.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In which part of the house did he live?

P. DANIELS: He stayed in the front room in my mother's house.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you charge him any lodging?

P. DANIELS: We never charged him any lodging until the day that he went to work. From then on my dad spoke to him, but before that he never paid a penny.

IN CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And did I understand correctly that he never paid for board and lodging?

P. DANIELS: Not while he was not working. But when he started to work my dad spoke to him, and then he contributed something towards the house, towards the family.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Were you satisfied with his contribution?

P. DANIELS: My dad was.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you have much to do with him? Did you see him often?

P. DANIELS: All his free time he spent in my house. Most of his free time, shall I say.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I want you to make one thing clear to the Court. Your religious group, do you believe in putting up members who come to visit a town?

P. DANIELS: We fully believe if a brother is a brother, irrespective of his race, we fully accept him as a brother, because we believe that was from the beginning in the Lord Jesus.

COMMENTS ON P. DANIELS'S ABOVE TESTIMONY

Peter Daniels testified that he was not aware of Tsafendas coming to his mother's house and that he had never heard of him before. He refers to Tsafendas's correspondence with his sister, but does not reveal anything else about it. Furthermore, the exchanges between himself and Advocate Cooper imply that Tsafendas was uninvited and accepted into the house for humanitarian reasons. That is entirely inaccurate. Helen Daniels, had testified to the police on September 15, 1966, that:

“During April 1965 I was visiting friends in Boksburg. There I learned of Demitrio Tsafendas. It was told to me that they would want me to meet him, he's a nice man. I never met him and later returned to Cape Town. When I was in Cape Town, I thought to correspond with him and wrote to my friends to find out his address ... Other friends of mine went on holiday to Durban and I then wrote a letter to Tsafendas and asked my friends to give this to him. Our preacher is in Durban and I hoped to trace Tsafendas through the church. ... I wrote my letter during the June holidays in 1965 and received a reply from him on July 10, 1965. I wrote in my letter that I would like to meet and wanted to marry him. His answer was that he wanted to meet me first before giving me a positive answer. I wrote to him again - four letters – all of which he answered. I sent him a picture, but he did not send me one in return. He sent word that he would come to Cape Town for our church conference - it would be in November 1965. I lived with my parents and on August 28, 1965 - he arrived at my parents' house ... We had a spare room and gave him lodging.”²³³⁵

Peter Daniels made no mention of the fact that his sister wrote five letters to Tsafendas, sent him her picture and asked him to meet and marry her. The fact that Tsafendas replied that he wanted to meet her first, as most sensible men would do, he also omitted. Is it possible that Peter Daniels was unaware of these facts? It is not impossible, but must be highly unlikely. First, Peter and his sister lived next door to each other and the whole family was very close. Patrick O’Ryan and Richard Poggenpoel, good friends of the Daniels family, were aware of the situation,²³³⁶ so one would expect a brother to be, too. Even if he was ignorant of the truth before the assassination, he must have become aware of it after Helen's interview by the police, when she freely set out the facts. After the police interview, Helen Daniels went into seclusion with friends and did not appear in public up to the trial.

²³³⁵ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

²³³⁶ Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013.

Why, if he knew about it, would Peter Daniels not mention the marriage proposal? Most likely because he felt it would be embarrassing for his sister if the world learned that she wanted to marry the man who assassinated Dr. Verwoerd, and that it was she and not Tsafendas who initiated the relationship. This was not the first time that Daniels concealed the truth about his sister's relationship with Tsafendas. On September 18, 1966, in interviews with the Post and the Sunday Times, he declared wrongly that it was Tsafendas who had pursued Helen, writing to her several times after obtaining her address from a fellow member of the Christian Church.²³³⁷ As we have seen, the reality was the exact reverse. It should also be mentioned here that Peter and Helen Daniels had asked Gordon Winter, the Post journalist who wrote the article to not mention the fact that Helen was a preacher of the Christian Church because it "would bring disgrace" on the Church.²³³⁸

Daniels also erred in the interview by saying Tsafendas came from Johannesburg when he had travelled from Durban. He said Tsafendas was accepted in the house because he had nowhere to stay and because he was a member of their Church, with again no mention of Helen's proposal. He also claimed that their meeting "did not result in a great friendship ... Helen was not interested in marriage."²³³⁹

²³³⁷ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), 'Tsafendas's Brothers are Quizzed', 18 September 1966: 18: 5; Winter, 'I Jilted Tsafendas, Says Coloured Girl', The Post, 18 September 1966: 1.

²³³⁸ Gordon Winter in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes; Gordon Winter in a personal interview with Dr. James Sanders on behalf of the author, 19 August 2016.

²³³⁹ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), 'Tsafendas's Brothers are Quizzed', 18 September 1966: 18: 5.

It is understandable that Peter Daniels would try to protect his sister's reputation. However, his concealment of the facts and the exchanges between Daniels and Advocate Cooper gave the impression that Tsafendas had turned up at the house out of the blue and was allowed to stay for reasons of Christian charity. That his sister asked to meet Tsafendas and even proposed marriage is not revealed at all during the trial. The Helen Daniels-Tsafendas connection has further significant implications. Daniels was a highly respected minister in her Church and the way she heard about Tsafendas suggests that he was held in high esteem by the Church members who recommended him. The fact that Daniels went to considerable trouble to get in touch with him, attempting to find his address, sending him a letter with a friend of hers and then sending him four more letters and a picture of hers, implies that she expected to meet a good man who was warmly recommended by her friends in Boksburg. Patrick O'Ryan, too, had heard good things about Tsafendas, having heard him praised by fellow Christians as a "highly cultured gentleman, a very refined gentleman who speaks seven languages."²³⁴⁰

That the Attorney-General would make no attempt to challenge Peter Daniels's testimony by using his sister's statement suggests that he was not in possession of it or that he simply allowed a lie to prevail in order to miserportray Tsafendas.

TSAFENDAS'S APPEARANCE

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How was Tsafendas dressed when you saw him for the first time?

P. DANIELS: He impressed me as a man shabbily dressed, poorly dressed.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Describe his clothing.

P. DANIELS: I can remember fully the day he arrived he had on a brown suit, a black jersey with a hole right in front, a big brown hat. He was shabbily dressed.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What impression did it make upon you, his appearance?

P. DANIELS: He impressed me as a poor man.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Tell us what his habits were. Was he a clean man, a neatly dressed man?

²³⁴⁰ Patrick O' Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

P. DANIELS: Well, during the weeks he impressed me as a shabby man. He never impressed me as careful about his way of dress. He never impressed me as a man who was careful about himself.

COMMENTS ON P. DANIELS'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S APPEARANCE

Tsafendas was indeed a poor man, but the majority of witnesses questioned by the police stated that he was nevertheless clean and neatly dressed. Only four witnesses out of two hundred who were questioned by the police and the Commission testified in negative terms about Tsafendas's way of dressing. One of them was Helen Daniels: "I lived with my parents and on August 28, 1965, he arrived at my parents' house. When I saw him, his clothes were dirty and neglected and I had a very bad impression of him. However, I received him with friendliness. He said he was in Cape Town looking for work and his belongings are at the station. My brother went to fetch his belongings from one of the Cape stations. When the belongings came, (there were two suitcases and a bunch of pots and pans and a large bundle of dirty laundry) I was very disappointed when I saw the state of his property."²³⁴¹

Three other witnesses made similar statements. Nickolas Nel, who had an argument with Tsafendas when they worked at F.A. Poole Engineering, testified that he "had a messy and dirty appearance,"²³⁴² landlady Wilhelmina de Vos described Tsafendas as "dirty,"²³⁴³ and Gillian Claire Lieberman, personnel secretary at the Marine Diamond Corporation, told the police that Tsafendas had "dirty, sloppy clothes."²³⁴⁴ However, she and Nel had only seen Tsafendas at work, where rough clothes would be normal. Although Lieberman described Tsafendas's clothing as sloppy and dirty, she said, "I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation, but a strange type of person, a unique character. Apart from him being well-travelled etc., I got the impression that he was physically different in dress and appearance. He was a big man, with a particularly striking big hat, stainless steel teeth, sloppy, dirty clothing."²³⁴⁵ She characterised him as "different" not mad.

²³⁴¹ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

²³⁴² Nikolaas Jacobus Nel statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²³⁴³ Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²³⁴⁴ Gillian Claire Liebermann statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²³⁴⁵ Gillian Claire Liebermann statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Most of the witnesses questioned by the police said Tsafendas was neat, clean and well-dressed. They included:

- South Africa Police Col. van Wyk, who reported from Rhodesia and Mozambique on interviews with people in those countries who knew Tsafendas. His report stated that Tsafendas “was always neatly dressed.”²³⁴⁶
- Violet Irene Manning was Tsafendas’s landlady for almost two months in 1965. She told the Commission of Enquiry about Tsafendas: “It was a serviced room but I found him making his own bed. When he came to me he was well-dressed, well-spoken, and gave a good impression. From his general appearance he appeared to be a businessman. When he paid me, he had a bundle of notes and I took him to be a man of means.”²³⁴⁷
- Ian Boswell testified that Tsafendas was “at all times neatly dressed and never gave the impression of being destitute.”²³⁴⁸
- Gideon Cloete, an official at the Department of Labour, testified that Tsafendas “was neatly dressed and had a clean appearance.”²³⁴⁹
- Jacobus Bormman, a one-time flatmate of Tsafendas, observed that “according to my observation, Tsafendas was a gentle person. He was neat in his person, but his eating habits were not up to scratch.”²³⁵⁰
- Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys, employment officer at the Department of Labour in Cape Town, interviewed Tsafendas twice. He testified to the police that Tsafendas was “neatly dressed” and he “never got the impression that there was mentally anything wrong with him or that he acted abnormally.”²³⁵¹
- Redvers Quintin Wakfer worked with Tsafendas for six weeks at the Power Station in ²³⁴⁶ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²³⁴⁷ Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

²³⁴⁸ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

²³⁴⁹ Gideon Jacobus Cloete testimony at Tsafendas’s summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, NASA.

²³⁵⁰ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²³⁵¹ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

Cape Town and he was 'neatly dressed.'²³⁵²

- Edward Furness testified that Tsafendas "was well-dressed and appeared to be wealthy."²³⁵³
- Katerina Pnema, his half-sister, testified that Tsafendas "was well dressed and gave a good appearance," although as far as she could see, he had no visible means of support.²³⁵⁴ She later stated that Tsafendas was always well dressed and she never saw him wearing dirty clothes except when he was coming back from work.²³⁵⁵
- Mary Scott was Tsafendas's landlady in Cape Town for two months in 1966. She told the police, "His clothing however was clean and always tidy."²³⁵⁶
- Sidney Wiehand, a senior messenger at the House of Assembly was one of three messengers who interviewed Tsafendas. He said that in order to be hired, a messenger "must always be neat," indicating that Tsafendas fitted that description.²³⁵⁷

The author asked forty-six witnesses who knew Tsafendas well about the way he was dressed. Only two of them, Andreas Babiolakis and Costas Poriazis, said that they once saw Tsafendas looking neglected and wearing a torn shirt. However, that was on the day he was released from jail in Beira in February 1965. Having just spent several days in a prison cell, wearing the same clothes every day and being beaten up, he could hardly have appeared otherwise. Both witnesses said this was the only time they saw Tsafendas looking less than perfectly dressed.²³⁵⁸ None of the rest said Tsafendas was of a dirty or neglected appearance. Indeed, the vast majority remembered him as dressing well and looking like a gentleman. It is not possible to reproduce here forty-six statements that contradict Dr. Cooper's view. The following are only from those who knew Tsafendas well:

²³⁵² Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA; Redvers Quintin Wakfer statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub File: 1/5, Subject Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

²³⁵³ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²³⁵⁴ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²³⁵⁵ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²³⁵⁶ Mary Kathleen Scott statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²³⁵⁷ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

²³⁵⁸ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Costas Poriazis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

Without quoting everyone's statement about Tsafendas, the study offers these words from people who knew him well:

- Father Nikola Banovic in 1961, lived in the same house as Tsafendas for four months and in a house next door for another two or three months. He saw Tsafendas virtually every day and says he was “always a very clean person and well-dressed, wearing a different hat each day.”²³⁵⁹
- Allan O’Ryan lived with Tsafendas for five months at the same house and kept being in touch for another year. He remembers Tsafendas being always “very well-dressed. Firstly, he always went out in a suit. He had a grey striped suit that he always wore. He was always very smart when he left the house. That I picked up – that he always looked very business-like. He was never casual about his dress. And his hair, though it was crinkly, it was neatly brushed. He was always well-dressed and he seemed to be going on business or going out for the day. And even the people in the street got to know him and greeted him as a man of... you know, as a distinguished gentleman, because of the way he dressed.” However, O’Ryan also stated that Tsafendas had some messy manners. He said “for example, sometimes, when he did bathe, the bathroom would be wet. The floor would be wet, the way he had splashed the water. And I remember my mum, she complained once or twice, you know, ‘When Dimi has finished bathing, then I have to clean the floor of the bathroom.’”²³⁶⁰
- Joyce Dick, one of Helen Daniels’s best friends at the time, stated to the author that whenever she saw Tsafendas, “he was always very neatly dressed.”²³⁶¹
- Reuben O’Ryan lived with Tsafendas in the same house for five months and kept in touch with him for another year. He said Tsafendas “was always very clean and well-dressed, apart from when he was coming home from work. That was the only time I saw him wearing dirty clothes. He always wore nice clothes; he was a clean person and always shaved.”²³⁶²
- Stanley O’Ryan lived with Tsafendas for five months at the same house and kept being in touch for another year. He remembers Tsafendas as “clean and well-dressed ²³⁵⁹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²³⁶⁰ Allan O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019.

²³⁶¹ Joyce Dick in a personal interview, 6 August 2016.

²³⁶² Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

person.”²³⁶³

- Mary Eintracht, Tsafendas's first cousin, knew him since he was five years old and grew up with him in Mozambique. She spent a lot of time with him in Pretoria in 1964, when they occupied the same house for two or three months. She insists that Tsafendas was always well-dressed and clean. She was impressed by his suits and Tsafendas told her that most of them were bought in Europe. “He was always well-dressed, very often wearing a hat, and was a very clean person. “He was very fussy with clean hands when he was a child, and I think he was also like this when he grew up, but I can't remember for sure.”²³⁶⁴
- Tsafendas lived in Fotini Gavasiadis's and her husband's house for a few weeks, then for the next eight months in an apartment next to hers. Throughout this period in Pretoria in 1963-1964, they were very close; she saw and talked to him every day and they worked together in her brother's café. She told the author that it is “nonsense” to say Tsafendas was not well-dressed or dirty, that in fact he always very well dressed and clean. “Sometimes it took him longer than it took me to get ready, trying to find a more suitable hat or tie. He adored hats and ties. He never wore the same clothes for two days in a row and when it was hot he would even change twice per day. He adored hats and ties.”²³⁶⁵
- Ira Kyriakakis, who grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques and remained a lifelong friend, described as “absolutely absurd” claims that Tsafendas was not well-dressed and clean. “He was always very well dressed; since he was a child. He looked like a gentleman. He used to wear hats he had bought from all over the world. He loved hats and he must have had tens of them. He came back to Lourenço Marques in the 1960s and brought me a hat for a present from Lisbon.”²³⁶⁶
- Helen Grispos was another who grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques, and her mother was the best friend of Tsafendas's step-mother. “He was always very well dressed, even as a child; his step-mother always looked after him. When he visited us in the 1960s, I remember he wore a big hat he said he had bought somewhere in Europe. I don't remember what he was wearing, but I remember the hat. It was very distinctive. He ²³⁶³ Stanley O' Ryan in a personal interview, 9 April 2015.

²³⁶⁴ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

²³⁶⁵ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

²³⁶⁶ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

was certainly well-dressed.”²³⁶⁷

- Irene Michaletos met Tsafendas in 1964 in Beira and saw him often until 1965. She remembers him being always well dressed and clean.²³⁶⁸
- Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousins, first met him in 1951 in Lourenço Marques and got to know him well between 1963 and 1965 in Mozambique. They both remember Tsafendas being “always well dressed and clean.”²³⁶⁹
- Andreas Babiolakis knew Tsafendas since they were children and had lived in the same house as him in Beira for about two-three months. He finds the thought that Tsafendas had a dirty and neglected appearance as “absurd.” He recalls that Tsafendas “had a shower every morning when he woke and in the evening when he returned from work. He believed that he sweated in the night, so he had one in the morning.”²³⁷⁰
- Costas Chagios, a Cape Town café owner, got to know Tsafendas on a friendly basis in 1965 when Tsafendas walked into his restaurant. In the year up to his arrest in 1966, Tsafendas visited the restaurant more than fifty times. Chagios remembers Tsafendas being always well dressed and clean.²³⁷¹
- Alexandra Vaporidis knew Tsafendas for about six months in Istanbul. She was impressed by his many hats and remembers that a lot of people commented about how neatly Tsafendas dressed. “I remember him coming to the church always wearing a tie.”²³⁷²
- Peter Protoulis was a supplier of foodstuffs to the tanker Eleni. He met Tsafendas on board and says, “I was very impressed by the way he was dressed. He always wore a suit and very often a tie and a hat. I never show him wearing the same clothes two days in a row.”²³⁷³
- Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott's boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest. He recalls Tsafendas

²³⁶⁷ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

²³⁶⁸ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

²³⁶⁹ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

²³⁷⁰ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

²³⁷¹ Costas Hagios in a personal interview, 24 March 2015.

²³⁷² Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

²³⁷³ Peter Protoulis in a personal interview, 3 August 2016.

being well dressed and clean, often wearing suits and hats.²³⁷⁴

- Peter Peroglou and his wife Pamela Abrahams ate at the same place as Tsafendas for two or three months in 1966 and they remember him as always well dressed and very courteous.
- Nick Augustides is the son of the owner of Mike's Outfitters in Cape Town, for whom Tsafendas worked on commission for about two months in 1966. He knew Tsafendas for three-four months and remembers him as "a well-dressed man."²³⁷⁵
- Miltiades Kaldis knew Tsafendas for about a year, having met him in 1965 in Cape Town. He remembers him "looking clean and well-dressed."²³⁷⁶

²³⁷⁴ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

²³⁷⁵ Nick Augustides in a personal interview, 19 February 2016.

²³⁷⁶ Miltiades Kaldis in a personal interview, 12 March 2016.

- The thirteen Eleni crewmen were impressed with the way Tsafendas dressed. He told some of them that most of his suits were bought in Europe a few years ago and that he had not bought any new clothes since he returned to South Africa.²³⁷⁷

In Europe, Horst Hartmann, senior personnel officer at the heavy engineering company Fries and Son in Frankfurt, where Tsafendas worked as a welder, said in a newspaper interview, “He drove up here in a big, battered American car. I thought he was more likely to apply for an executive job than as a welder. Well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous, a very pleasant man. He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman ... he made a good impression and he spoke good German, so I took him on... we liked him ... always laughing, a good worker.” Tsafendas “left on his own wish” although Hartmann “would have liked to keep him.”²³⁷⁸

Personal appearance is a subjective matter. What is sloppy and dirty to one person may be casual and comfortable to another. It is germane that Tsafendas was a poor man, who often lived in basic lodgings, possibly without the facilities to wash his clothes. In addition, the kind of jobs he did, welder and fitter, would require rough working attire. The fact is only the four people noted above – Helen Daniels, Nel, de Vos and Lieberman - out of the two hundred the police and the Commission of Enquiry interviewed and another seventy-one interviewed by the author, testified that Tsafendas was dirty. The vast majority not only disagreed, but stated that Tsafendas was neatly dressed.

TSAFENDAS’S “STRANGE” HABITS AND SOME “STRANGE” INCIDENTS

TSAFENDAS AND HIS HAT

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Can you remember any incidents, any things that happened, in which he featured?

P. DANIELS: Are you talking about his strange habits now?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Yes.

P. DANIELS: I can remember Tsafendas, seeing him sitting at my dad’s table, coming from ²³⁷⁷ Kleanthis Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²³⁷⁸ Daily Dispatch, ‘He Made A Good Impression’, 8 September 1966: 1; Daily Express, ‘The Assassin’, 8 September 1966: 2; Natal Witness, ‘Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...’, 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, ‘Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte’, 8 September 1966.

work one day, with a hat on. He still had his overcoat on. He was reading his paper at the table with his hat on. And I can remember me taking him to my mother-in-law in Woodstock, and in this particular instance, as we walked down the passage I myself took off my hat, hanged it on the hanger, but he (Tsafendas) walked straight down the passage into my mother-in-law's kitchen. He never took his hat off.

Then we came back into the lounge and sat down in conversation, and he was now telling about his travels all over the world, and he never took his hat off yet. Then, as the conversation went on, tea was served, and at this time I thought that Tsafendas would now take his hat off, but as tea was served he rather adjusted himself much better in his seat, pulling the collar of his coat up, and pulling his hat further down on to his head, which gave me a very poor impression of the man. Shall I say that to my mind I now thought this man was mentally affected.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Do you normally with your friends, etc., behave normally and take your hat off when you are inside?

P. DANIELS: We respect our friends with great diligence, and as a body of Christians we respect each other very highly.

COMMENTS ON P. DANIELS'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S HAT

According to P. Daniels, Tsafendas was mentally affected because he did not take off his hat inside his mother-in-law's house in Woodstock. Daniels had referred to this incident when he was interviewed by Gordon Winter of the Post on September 18. He said that Tsafendas was "a genuinely religious man who did not smoke, drink or use bad language," but behaved "very oddly" at times, though he did not suggest that he was mad or "not at all there," as his wife would soon claim in court. What did Tsafendas do which was very odd? "Normally well-mannered," Tsafendas had "astounded the family when he once wore his hat throughout a tea party at a friend's home."²³⁷⁹

For a man to wear a hat in someone's home would be considered rude in most cultures, but few would describe a person who committed such a breach of etiquette as mentally affected. According to several witnesses, Tsafendas always wore a hat. Johanna Hendrieka Mulrenan, Tsafendas's landlady said he "never removed his big hat and wore a coat all the time.” However, she did not take it as a sign of mental deficiency.²³⁸⁰

²³⁷⁹ Winter, 'I Jilted Tsafendas, Says Coloured Girl', The Post, 18 September 1966: 1.

Hats were a Tsafendas trademark. He had many and would wear a different one each day. According to Katerina Pnema, Tsafendas began wearing hats when he was a teenager after Russian sailors in Lourenço Marques gave him one which was supposed to be similar to the hat worn by Vladimir Lenin. Tsafendas would buy a hat from each country he visited. He even bought a bonnet rouge, the soft red cap associated with the French Revolution, though he never wore it.²³⁸¹ According to Father Nikola Banovic, Katerina Pnema, Ira Kyriakakis, Andreas Babiolakis and Mary Eintracht, Tsafendas often wore a hat, especially on those occasions when his hair would not succumb to control by brush and comb. However, none of them ever remembers him wearing a hat indoors.²³⁸² Also, none of the two hundred or so witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission referred to anything of the sort, suggesting that this occasion was a one-off and Tsafendas might have had a good reason for keeping his hat on.

The following incident described to the police by his flatmate Jacobus Bornman demonstrates Tsafendas’s concern for his headgear: “On Tsafendas’s wardrobe were paper bags and on top of the paper bags were three of his hats. I reached up to a paper bag to put in certain items of clothing. When I reached for the paper bag on top of his closet, he leaped swiftly from where he lay on his bed reading. When I saw, Tsafendas stood beside me. It surprised me to see how quickly he could move since he had a big and clumsy posture and I believed that he was a lazy person. I asked him why he jumped up so quickly and he said he was afraid I would knock his hats from the closet.”²³⁸³

²³⁸⁰ Johanna Hendrieka Mulrenan statement to the COE, 26 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

²³⁸¹ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²³⁸² Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²³⁸³ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Tsafendas is not the only person who wore a hat indoors. It is generally considered to be impolite to do so, however a lot of people are doing it, mostly because of stylistic issues. For example British MP and Respect Party leader George Galloway is famous for constantly wearing a fedora hat, even indoors, and it is considered to be his trademark style. Galloway has worn hat in indoor public speeches, public lectures etc.²³⁸⁴ Johnny Depp and Steven Spielberg often wear a hat indoors, as can be seen in their publicity photos. A long-established British strip cartoon character, Andy Capp, a typical working man, wears his cap at all times, including in bed, and Thomas Magnum, from the 1980s television series, Magnum p.i., wears a baseball cap indoors. None of these characters, real or fictional, ever succumbed to mental illness. It could be argued that manners change over the years. However, whatever the strictures of the time, wearing a hat indoors could be considered a sign of rudeness, but certainly not of insanity.

However shocked Peter Daniels may have appeared, Helen Daniels did not say anything about the hat incident, since presumably she did not find it strange. In fact, she testified that “besides his messy ways, I did not notice anything abnormal about him. There was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal.”

Once again, the Attorney-General could have challenged this testimony since Daniels’s sister had not noticed “anything abnormal” and “there was never any indication” that Tsafendas was “mentally abnormal.” The fact that Daniels had lived under the same roof as Tsafendas and knew him better than her brother adds value to her testimony.

P. DANIELS ON OTHER “STRANGE” INCIDENTS BY TSAFENDAS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Any other strange incidents that you recall?

P. DANIELS: There are many instances that we can recall of Tsafendas. There is an instance now where one hot day he tried to cool the fowls off, which proves to me that he was also mentally deranged.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did he try to cool the fowls off?

P. DANIELS: He got hold of the hosepipe and tried to cool the fowls down, because he thought that they were hot, too. (Laughter in Court.)

²³⁸⁴ Hadley Freeman, ‘A Man Refusing to Take his Hat Off Indoors? This Once, I Doff My Cap to George Galloway’, The Guardian, 1 June 2015; Frances Perraudin, ‘George Galloway Tweets his Intention to Run for London Mayor’, The Guardian, 28 May 2015.

JUDGE BEYERS: One does it with fowls when it gets hot. I keep fowls. When it gets very hot you may have to do it. They die if you don't, sometimes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Any other strange incidents?

P. DANIELS: There are instances when in our meetings, as we worship in our homes, he was one of the members in the gathering, and we as a rule each give our testimony as Christians, discussing the word of God, and he (Tsafendas) after he had said something, would put his Bible and hymn book down and be unconcerned about his surroundings, which impressed me too that this man is a strange man.

COMMENTS ON P. DANIELS'S TESTIMONY REGARDING OTHER "STRANGE" INCIDENTS

The Court's response to Tsafendas spraying water on the family chickens highlights the desperation of Peter Daniels's attempt to portray Tsafendas as mentally unbalanced. To his surprise and no doubt that of the defence team, the judge intervened to say that he kept chickens and it was sometimes necessary to cool them off in very hot weather. Thus what Tsafendas did, far from being insane, was the right thing to do and may have saved the lives of the birds.

The second incident, concerning Tsafendas's demeanour at a prayer gathering, defies analysis. That Tsafendas appeared "unconcerned about his surroundings" is neither here nor there and certainly in no way strange, even in a context of meditative prayer. The likelihood is that Peter Daniels knew perfectly well that none of these incidents meant Tsafendas had mental problems, but he did not have much else to say to support the defence's insanity claim. Patrick and Louisa O'Ryan were asked by Advocate Cooper to exaggerate stories about Tsafendas to "get him free."²³⁸⁵ It is very likely that Peter Daniels was asked to do the same, especially since Helen, who knew Tsafendas better, was not asked to testify.

TSAFENDAS'S EATING HABITS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Can you tell us anything about his eating habits?

P. DANIELS: Yes. There is a very incident that will go down with me in all my life. This was the day of the morning when Tsafendas left us. It was round about 7 o'clock the morning ²³⁸⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Patrick O'Ryan in A Question of Madness; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

when this knock came at our door. My wife and myself got up. As a matter of fact, she got up before me. And here was Tsafendas with a parcel under his arm, a parcel of meat, eggs and some other victuals, and blood dripping down his coat. He was unconcerned about that. The next thing he was looking for a stove and a pan. The wife handed it over to him, showed him the stove, gave him the pan. He started, without washing this meat that he had - just gave it a shake, and into the pan it went. And before it was even done, Tsafendas got a plate from the wife and settled down to this big meal. We surmised it was approximately two to three pounds of T-bone steak. On this particular morning I can well remember DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was it just meat, or what else did he have?

P. DANIELS: There were meat and eggs and tomatoes and onions. It was all in one dish. And then Tsafendas settled down to this great plate of meat, and I was sitting next to the table, looking at the man, and as he dugged into it, I could hear him chewing away.

JUDGE BEYERS: What did you expect him to do except chew at his T-bone steak? Did you expect him to swallow it whole?

P. DANIELS: The way he settled down to it - he settled down to it like a dog.

JUDGE BEYERS: He really enjoyed this T-bone steak?

P. DANIELS: He really and thoroughly settled down to this meat. (Laughter.)

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You say he settled down to it like a dog?

P. DANIELS: Really and truly getting his teeth into it.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Had you seen a human being behave like this before?

P. DANIELS: Not in all my life.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did he eat it - with a knife and fork?

P. DANIELS: He first started off with knife and fork, after he was finished he dugged in, two hands and all. And he was dirty as far as of the mouth here (indicates down outer edges) and then he told me personally - my wife was present - "Pete", he told me, "I am making a pig of myself", and I told him I could see it.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did he say, why was he eating this?

P. DANIELS: He said he had to feed the worms.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How many could have fed off this food that he consumed in this way?

P. DANIELS: Easy two people.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: On any other occasion did he bring food?

P. DANIELS: There was an occasion in my dad's house. I saw the half a sheep that Tsafendas brought in there, and I believe the family said that on this day also blood was dripping from the meat on to his clothes, which he was unconcerned about. There was another occasion when he came with approximately half a cheese and a full liver poloney. And all these things were queer to the family, because we are not accustomed to things like that.

COMMENTS ON P. DANIELS'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S EATING HABITS

Peter Daniels claimed that Tsafendas had messy eating ways and that he ate a lot. This is something that several witnesses told the police, including his sister, but no one found anything sinister about that, including Helen Daniels, who said, "besides his messy ways I did not notice anything abnormal about him. There was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal." Many people can eat sloppily and consume enough for two without being insane. Actor Marlon Brando and actor-writer-director Orson Welles famously ate hugely and messily. They were not mad.

What Peter Daniels did not mention about the morning that Tsafendas arrived in their house at seven o'clock, and subsequently cooked and ate such a big meal, was that Tsafendas had just come back from his night shift and therefore this was his dinner and not his breakfast. Naturally, when he worked on the night shift, he always used to eat his dinner after he finished work, which was very early in the morning; then he would go to sleep. He did exactly the same thing when he was at the O'Ryans' house, the Poggenpoels' and elsewhere. None of them thought it an act of madness or anything strange.²³⁸⁶ When was he supposed to eat his dinner, when he was working from six in the afternoon until six in the morning? People tend to eat after they finish work, no matter what time it is.

What Daniels also fails to explain adequately is that Tsafendas also brought food for the whole family, something his family was not accustomed to. Neither was the O'Ryan family when Tsafendas lived there but they saw it differently. Reuben O'Ryan told the author: "He was the answer to our prayers. We were poor and he brought food to our house."²³⁸⁷ That Tsafendas did not wash his meat did not point to a lack of hygiene. The UK Food Standards Agency warns to not wash chicken before cooking it because bacteria in raw meat and poultry juices can spread to other foods, utensils, and surfaces.²³⁸⁸ Tsafendas probably knew that, having also lived in England; but even if he did not, many people do not wash meat because they believe all the bacteria dies in the cooking. Whatever the reason for not washing a chicken before you cook it, it certainly cannot be taken as a sign of insanity.

²³⁸⁶ Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013; Reuben O'Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

The strangest line in Daniels's testimony is his reference to "worms," not to a "worm," but to "worms," plural. The five psychiatrists, one district surgeon, one specialist physician and two psychologists who testified at the summary trial all said Tsafendas told them about a worm, one worm not many worms. The author is not in position to know why Daniels said worms and not worm. It could have been a slip of the tongue, or Daniels misheard Tsafendas, or Tsafendas misspoke saying worms when he meant worm, or Daniels mention the word in order to support the defence's line, as Patrick O'Ryan would do. It is possible, though highly unlikely, that Tsafendas mentioned "worms" to Peter Daniels but not to the other members of the family.

It is also possible that Peter Daniels might have heard about the tapeworm at Patrick O'Ryan's house, when Tsafendas joked with him as he had done with Louisa O'Ryan. A further possibility exists, that Patrick O'Ryan asked Daniels, who was a good friend, to mention the word in court in the same way that he was urged to do by Advocate Cooper. It is also equally possible that Advocate Cooper himself asked Daniels to refer to it in his testimony, as he had the O'Ryan's to do. Tsafendas often made play of the tapeworm with the O'Ryan children, demonstrating what happened when it became hungry, and as we have seen, he staged such a performance once after a prayer gathering,²³⁸⁹ when the Daniels must have been present.

²³⁸⁷ Reuben O' Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

²³⁸⁸ Rebecca Smithers, 'Don't Wash Chicken Before Cooking it, Warns Food Standards Agency', The Guardian, 16 June 2014.

²³⁸⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

TSAFENDAS'S INTEREST IN WOMEN

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Do you know if he was interested in any woman while he was staying with you?

P. DANIELS: Yes. Not with us, but we learned afterwards that he was.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he discuss his matrimonial problems with you?

P. DANIELS: Not with me.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: He is not married, is he?

P. DANIELS: He is not married.

COMMENTS ON P. DANIELS'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S INTEREST IN WOMEN

Again, Peter Daniels does not mention anything regarding his sister's proposition to Tsafendas regarding marriage. He must surely have known about his sister writing letters to Tsafendas, who then arrived at the Daniels house specifically to meet her. Daniels's parents naturally knew about it.

TSAFENDAS'S RACIAL PREFERENCES

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Whose company did he prefer, Coloured or white, while he was staying with you?

P. DANIELS: He preferred to be amongst the Coloured community.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was there any discussion about the identification card?

P. DANIELS: Yes. He said he would like to be among the Coloured community, make himself a Coloured man, so that he can easily be accepted, because he said he was really never accepted among the white folk, and for that reason he make application to be made a European, but that was refused him, and afterwards he told ...

JUDGE BEYERS: You mean to be declared a non-European?

P. DANIELS: A non-European.

JUDGE BEYERS: To be declared a Coloured man?

P. DANIELS: He preferred to be a non-European. But that was refused, because it was told him that there are more privileges on the other side.

COMMENTS ON P. DANIELS'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S RACIAL PREFERENCES

Peter Daniels here directly contradicts the conclusion Dr. Cooper arrived at after examining Tsafendas, that he was "unsympathetic towards the Coloureds and the Natives." If he was unsympathetic towards the Coloureds and the Natives, he would hardly have preferred to live with them and even apply for reclassification as Coloured.

TSAFENDAS'S INTENTION TO START A BUSINESS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: He was unemployed. Did he ever discuss with you starting any businesses or anything like that?

P. DANIELS: Yes. He discussed with me of putting up such a tremendous business where all could have - in other words, what can I term this - do-it-yourself workshop, where people can come to him and they can either fix their cars or make their furniture or do anything, and make it your own shop. He had that in mind. And the next thing he would tell us he is going away. That to me was very strange, that a man talking about settling down in a place and the very next moment talk about going away. That also proves to me that this man was not altogether.

COMMENTS ON P. DANIELS'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S INTENTION TO START A BUSINESS

The fact that Tsafendas suddenly changed his mind about starting a business suggested to Peter Daniels that Tsafendas "was not altogether." There are many reasons why Tsafendas may have considered such a move then changed his mind. He may have thought things might work out between him and Helen and that a do-it-yourself workshop would support them in married life. Perhaps he decided that it would not work with Helen and it was best to put the episode behind him. He could then hardly stay on in the Daniels household when no relationship eventuated with Helen. What seems most plausible is that Daniels was aware of all this and was just trying to find support for the notion that Tsafendas “was not altogether.”

P. DANIELS’S OVERALL IMPRESSION OF TSAFENDAS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What then is your overall impression that you have of Tsafendas?

P. DANIELS: Well, my own words at one time were “This man is mad.”

JUDGE BEYERS: I am interested. When did you have occasion to say this, and why?

P. DANIELS: Because this man, the accused, would talk about doing a business, doing something, and never really getting to the actual thing. He would even start making a thing. I can remember at one instance he was very zealous in doing something for us - he even had the thing - and he just left it and never touched it again.

JUDGE BEYERS: When you used the words to yourself - did you say it to somebody or did you say it to yourself?

P. DANIELS: I said that to my brothers.

JUDGE BEYERS: “This man is mad”?

P. DANIELS: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: I am very interested. The reactions of the ordinary man may be very helpful. Did you mean mad in the sense of queer, off his rocker, or did you mean something else?

P. DANIELS: I meant that he was half off his rocker. He wasn’t altogether there, because a man in his full and true senses would never discuss nor would he have done the things which the accused has done.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How was his flow of speech?

P. DANIELS: He used to speak in a manner - he would speak a few words, then break off, and then continue with some other subject rather than the one he was talking about at the first.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In conversation, would Tsafendas stick to the point?

P. DANIELS: No. He would often wander from what he would say and he would oftentimes have ended up with, before he would finish a verse, “You know, Pete”, or “You know.” He used to get a blank spot in his mind. That was very often.

COMMENTS ON P. DANIELS'S TESTIMONY REGARDING HIS OVERALL IMPRESSION OF TSAFENDAS

Peter Daniels concluded that Tsafendas was mad because a “man in his full and true senses would never discuss nor would he have done the things” which Tsafendas did. However, from he has said, none of the things he mentions are things that a sane man would not do. That he kept his hat on in the house, had bad table manners and suddenly changed his mind about something do not suggest that he was insane.

Daniels also fails to explain what the “thing” was that Tsafendas was going to make for them, and neither the judge, the Attorney-General nor his own advocate asked him to clarify it. At the same time, Helen Daniels, who knew Tsafendas better than he did, flatly contradicted his view of Tsafendas’s sanity, saying that “besides his messy ways, I did not notice anything abnormal about him. There was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal. His stories about travelling abroad was interesting.”²³⁹⁰

Regarding Tsafendas’s flow of speech and the blank spots, this seems to be something that only Peter Daniels noticed. None of the two hundred people questioned by the police and the Commission of Enquiry mentioned anything like that. On the contrary, several people were impressed by the way Tsafendas talked:

- Gillian Claire Lieberman, personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation, whose office Tsafendas often visited, “I had various discussions with him. I got quite interested in him as an individual. ... I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation.”²³⁹¹
- Ralph Lighton, who worked with Tsafendas for nine to ten weeks at the Marine Diamond Corporation, testified to the police that he “never got the slightest impression

²³⁹⁰ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

²³⁹¹ Gillian Claire Lieberman statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers.”²³⁹²

- J. Willemse was Tsafendas’s landlord for one month in 1965. He characterised him as a “sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man.”²³⁹³
- Neville Judson worked with Tsafendas for Mike’s Outfitters for forty-two days in July and August 1966, frequently driving him to the tanker Eleni while it was docked in Cape Town. Of Tsafendas, he told the police that he “never in no way got the impression that he could be mentally deranged. He appeared to be a normal man with normal reasoning powers.”²³⁹⁴
- Patrick O’Ryan said “he was well-spoken and had good vocabulary.”²³⁹⁵
- August Karel Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria in 1964. He found him to be “very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet. I never noticed anything abnormal about him, except that he had a strange look when I looked him straight in the eyes. He never gave me the impression that he was suffering from any mental disease.”²³⁹⁶
- Cornelius Rudolph, the head court interpreter on the staff of the Magistrate of Durban appointed Tsafendas as a Portuguese and Greek interpreter. Rudolph used him “on several occasions” in a period of six months and “got to know him pretty well.” He testified that “I spoke with him several times, he seemed to be a normal person and intelligent. He spoke English properly.”²³⁹⁷
- Violet Irene Manning was Tsafendas’s landlady for almost two months in 1965. She told the Commission of Enquiry that Tsafendas “... was well-dressed, well-spoken, and gave a good impression. From his general appearance he appeared to be a businessman.”²³⁹⁸
- Johannes Aurets, Tsafendas’s supervisor at the South African Railways, told the ²³⁹² Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²³⁹³ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), ‘Assassin - Man With A Chip On His Shoulder’, 11 September 1966: 1, 8.

²³⁹⁴ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

²³⁹⁵ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²³⁹⁶ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²³⁹⁷ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²³⁹⁸ Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

police Tsafendas “was a well-mannered and well-spoken person. He associated with those working with him. He was soft-spoken and appeared to be of a good nature. During the time he was employed under my supervision, i.e. for approximately three weeks, I did not see him being cross at any time. He was a good worker.”²³⁹⁹

- Helen Grispos grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques and her mother was Tsafendas’s step-mother best friend there described him to the police as “well-mannered and intelligent.”²⁴⁰⁰
- Lt. Col. P.J.B. van Wyk of the South African police interviewed several people in Rhodesia and in Mozambique, including in Beira and Lourenço Marques, who knew Tsafendas. He stated in his report that Tsafendas, “for all purposes, can be seen as a normal, intelligent person.”²⁴⁰¹
- Captain P.A. Sanianos, the Greek Consul in Beira “was often in the company of the subject and others had several conversations with him.” He considered Tsafendas to be “a normal and very intelligent person.”²⁴⁰²

None of the seventy-one witnesses interviewed by the author also mentioned anything like that. Two priests who met and talked with Tsafendas in prison and in hospital in the 1980s and the 1990s and who spent hundreds of hours with him are positive that he did not suffer from thought blocking, that he did not talk in a disjointed manner and that he was able to participate perfectly in a conversation with others.

Father Michalis Visvinis, who visited Tsafendas in prison very regularly for five years (1989-1994), and spent several hours talking with him, strongly denied to the author that there was anything wrong with the way Tsafendas spoke. He told the author:

“No, no, this is not true; he did not talk like this [in a disjointed manner]. He never spoke like this with me, his speech was always absolutely fine. I felt that he [Tsafendas] needed to speak, so several times I would just let him speak. He enjoyed speaking and he could speak for hours. He always spoke like a normal man. [His speech] was perfectly articulate and logical, always very coherent. He never said anything to suggest he had a ²³⁹⁹ Johannes Jaconus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁴⁰⁰ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁴⁰¹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁴⁰² South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

mental problem or that he had any difficulty speaking or thinking and expressing himself properly. This comment is entirely false.”²⁴⁰³

Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis told the author:

“[Tsafendas] could speak for hours, telling you things about his life, his thoughts and his ideology, but he could also participate in a dialogue. We spoke for hours about politics, religion and history and he was one of the most knowledgeable people I ever met in all these subjects. He was very argumentative and insistent, especially about politics. He never got lost in the conversation and he would never drop a subject until I had agreed with him. He would never give up a conversation if you disagreed. He never, not even once, seemed to have difficulty expressing himself or talked incoherently. Every single time, everything he said made sense and was perfectly stated. I don’t believe for a moment that he could have talked in the way described by the psychiatrists unless he did it deliberately. He spoke and argued even better than most people. His speech and thought were perfectly fine.”²⁴⁰⁴

Tsafendas lived for five months at Patrick O’Ryan’s house and remained close to the family for another year. In this seventeen-month period, none of the family heard Tsafendas talking in a disjointed manner or saying anything that would make them doubt his sanity. During the summary trial, the whole family was convinced that Tsafendas was making it all up in order to escape the death penalty.²⁴⁰⁵ Allan O’Ryan told the author:

“I never experienced a disjointed conversation. It might have been a ploy on his part – again, in retrospect. So, the psychiatrist would bring in things like that and might even have been able to quote situations or questions that Tsafendas didn’t answer directly. But in my mind, retrospectively, I believe, because of his intelligence, and also not to give away what he wanted to do, there could have been a possibility that it was a ploy on the part of Tsafendas to appear disjointed in his train of thought.”²⁴⁰⁶

Mary Eintracht, his first cousin, who grew up with him in Egypt and Mozambique and was constantly with him for nine months in 1963-1964, said “Dimitri always spoke very well. He sounded like a very educated man. There was nothing wrong with his speech or his thoughts, both were excellent. He could argue with you for hours and hours about politics. He ²⁴⁰³ Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

²⁴⁰⁴ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁴⁰⁵ Allan O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019; Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Stanley O’Ryan in a personal interview with the author, 9 April 2015.

²⁴⁰⁶ Allan O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019.

was very good with words and his brain was bigger than most people's."²⁴⁰⁷

Alexander Moumbaris spoke to Tsafendas for at least one hour every day for about three months in 1972 in Pretoria Prison. He flatly denied to the author that there was anything wrong with the way Tsafendas spoke. He told the author: "No, this is not true. He was not talking in a disjointed manner. I never heard him talking like this, neither in 1972 nor in 1996. He always spoke absolutely fine."²⁴⁰⁸

One of the strongest comments comes from Gavasiadis, who was with him every day for nine months in 1964. She said about Tsafendas:

"Dimitris could buy and sell you and he could do that at any time during a conversation, in the first ten minutes, then again after thirty minutes or an hour and then again after two hours. He wouldn't let you get up from the chair until he had made you agree with what he was saying, especially when talking politics ... He was very convincing and persuasive - he could turn black into white. If you disagreed with something with him, he would find a way to convince you that he is right and that you are wrong - even if you know that you are right and that he is wrong. If he made a mistake about something, he would turn things upside-down and at the end, he would even make you apologise to him...

In those nine months, I saw him and spoke to him every day and not even once did he appear to have an issue with his speech or his thoughts. He was always the same. We spent hours and hours talking and his speech was never incoherent, disjointed, blocked or whatever else, it was always perfect. He never gave me even the slightest indication that he might be having the issues you mentioned."²⁴⁰⁹

Gavasiadis was not the only one impressed by the way Tsafendas spoke. None of the crewmen from the Eleni ever got the impression that Tsafendas's speech was disjointed. In fact, they were impressed by the way he spoke.²⁴¹⁰ The seamen called him "Professor" because of his knowledge and mode of speech.²⁴¹¹ "We were all wondering how come he knew all these things. How could he be talking like this? He talked like a university ²⁴⁰⁷ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

²⁴⁰⁸ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017.

²⁴⁰⁹ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

²⁴¹⁰ Nick Augustides in a personal interview, 19 February 2016; Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015; Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

²⁴¹¹ Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

professor”, said Nikolaos Billis, one of the crew.²⁴¹² Another crew member, Michalis Vasilakis, said, “I can’t explain it, but I remember he had a very specific way of talking, using not very common, but absolutely correct words. He knew how to speak and how to pick up words. He was talking like a professor; this is what we used to say between us and what we called him ... He was a very knowledgeable man. No, his speech was definitely not disjointed, it was excellent.”²⁴¹³

In addition, Tsafendas worked in 1961 for six months as a teacher at the best private language college in Istanbul, the Limasollu Naci. He worked initially on trial basis where he was under observation for a week before he was appointed permanently. Obviously he successfully passed this stage as he remained as a teacher in the college for about six months. Mrs. Advije Vedia Limasollu, wife of Limasollu Naci, the proprietor, does not remember Tsafendas, but is positive that her husband would never have appointed or retained a teacher who talked in a disjointed manner.²⁴¹⁴ In fact, Mr. Naci became a very good friend of Tsafendas and spent a lot of time with him during these six months.²⁴¹⁵

For reasons of space, the study will list only a few of the witnesses who were interviewed by the author and stated that there was nothing wrong with Tsafendas’s speech:

- His half-sister Katerina Pnefma;²⁴¹⁶
- Father Nikola Banovic who lived with him at the same house for four months in 1961 and then lived right next to his house for another three;²⁴¹⁷
- His first cousin Mary Eintracht, who grew up with him and was constantly with him for nine months in 1964;²⁴¹⁸
- Ira Kyriakakis, who also grew up with him and spent a lot of time together in 1964 and 1965;²⁴¹⁹
- Andreas Babiolakis, who knew him since they were children, who lived with him for two months in 1964 and associated with him for about a year then;²⁴²⁰

²⁴¹² Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011.

²⁴¹³ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

²⁴¹⁴ Advije Vedia Limasollu in a personal interview, 8 January 2016.

²⁴¹⁵ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 4 November 2015.

²⁴¹⁶ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²⁴¹⁷ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²⁴¹⁸ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

²⁴¹⁹ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

²⁴²⁰ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

- Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott's boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest;²⁴²¹
- Irene Michaletos, who was close to him for more than a year (1964-1965) and whose house he often visited;²⁴²²
- Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousins, who first met him in 1951 in Lourenço Marques and got to know him well between 1963 and 1965 in Mozambique.²⁴²³
- Costas Poriазis who met him in 1965 in Beira;²⁴²⁴
- Alexandra Vaporidis, who knew him for about six months in Istanbul in 1961;²⁴²⁵
- Nick Papadakis, who lived under the same roof for two months and associated with him for another two months in Mozambique in 1964;²⁴²⁶
- George Liberopoulos met Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques in 1963 and associated with him for a few weeks.²⁴²⁷
- Panagiotis Peroglou and Costas Chagios who were Tsafendas's friends in Cape Town for more than a year.²⁴²⁸

²⁴²¹ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

²⁴²² Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

²⁴²³ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

²⁴²⁴ Costas Poriазis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

²⁴²⁵ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

²⁴²⁶ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

²⁴²⁷ George Liberopoulos in a personal interview, 6 July 2015.

²⁴²⁸ Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015; Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

Finally, in July 1966, only a few weeks, after he was examined by Dr. Kossew, Tsafendas gave a seventy-five-minute interview to a journalist named N.D. Hartford on the Cape Argus. They had met earlier in the year when Tsafendas enquired whether there was any news of the freedom fighters of Mozambique. He described himself as an “anti-Portuguese rebel and an antagonist of the Portuguese dictatorship.”²⁴²⁹ Hartford’s impression was that Tsafendas was normal; he had no reason to believe that he was mentally defective and stated that Tsafendas spoke fluently without any noticeable gaps in the conversation.²⁴³⁰

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: The accused came from Durban, not so?

P. DANIELS: The accused told me he came from Durban by way of hitchhiking and by train from Port Elizabeth

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he come alone?

P. DANIELS: He came all alone.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: I believe he had four suitcases with him?

P. DANIELS: Not four.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: How many?

P. DANIELS: I can remember him having one or two suitcases. He had with him a bundle of dirty washing and he had a bundle of tools with him. His welding kit he had with him,

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you ever see him use the tools?

P. DANIELS: I never saw him use the tools.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Just give us the date again when he arrived at your home?

P. DANIELS: He arrived approximately Saturday midday, the 28th of August, 1965.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: It was not the 10th of July?

P. DANIELS: It was not on the 10th of July.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: The 28th August?

²⁴²⁹ The Cape Argus, ‘Brainwashed in Jail Held Man Told Argus.’ 7 September 1966: 3; Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 75.

²⁴³⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 75.

P. DANIELS: The 28th August, 1965.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And he lived in your house until the 16th of October?

P. DANIELS: October.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And did I understand correctly that he never paid for board and lodging?

P. DANIELS: Not while he was not working. But when he started to work my dad spoke to him, and then he contributed something towards the house, towards the family.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Were you satisfied with his contribution?

P. DANIELS: My dad was.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: For how long was he out of employment?

JUDGE BEYERS: Three weeks, the witness said.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he receive letters while he lived with you?

P. DANIELS: Yes. He received letters from - I think from Greece, this man John Micheletos,²⁴³¹ whom he knew so well, and from other correspondents which I don't know.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What was his address in Greece, do you know? Was it Athens?

P. DANIELS: I would not know what his address was.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You don't know whether he lived in Athens?

P. DANIELS: That I can't say, whether he was in Athens.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused also write letters?

P. DANIELS: He used to write letters himself.

COMMENTS ON THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S CROSS-EXAMINATION

²⁴³¹ This John Michaletos, Tsafendas's childhood friend who recruited him to the Democratic Army (DSE) during the Greek Civil War and spent the Christmas 1961 in his house in Athens.

Van den Berg's cross-examination of Peter Daniels sheds no new light on the case and does not attempt to challenge his testimony in the slightest. It demonstrates either his incompetence or ignorance of the information gathered by the police and therefore his inability seriously to challenge Daniels's testimony. One cannot help but wonder what was the purpose of this cross-examination and line of questioning. None of the points Daniels made was challenged. Instead, the Attorney-General asked about statements Daniels had already made, a point which the Court highlighted, or asked him irrelevant or unimportant questions such as how many suitcases Tsafendas had, whether he used his welding kit and if he received and wrote letters. Daniels twice said that Tsafendas arrived on August 28, 1965, but the Attorney-General still asked if it was July 10. What was the purpose of this question? Helen Daniels had testified to the police that Tsafendas arrived on August 28, 1965. Van den Berg did not suggest that August 28 might have been the wrong date, so why press this? Even if the date was wrong and Tsafendas had stayed for a longer or shorter period with the family, what difference would that have made to the case?

What highlights the pointlessness of this cross-examination is that the Attorney-General could easily have broken it down by using Helen Daniels's testimony to the police on September 15, 1966. Not only did she not mention any of the things which Peter Daniels mentioned, but she stated clearly that Tsafendas's behaviour was normal and that she had not "noticed anything abnormal about him. There was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal."²⁴³² Nothing at all would have changed in Peter Daniels's testimony if the cross-examination had not taken place, and it would have saved everyone some time.

TSAFENDAS AND HIS RELATIONSHIP WITH THE DANIELS FAMILY

Peter Daniels and his family were not happy with Tsafendas, primarily because of his failure to form a relationship with Helen Daniels with a view to marriage. Helen had initiated the contact, stating frankly that she wanted to marry him. His first response, she said, was that "he wanted to meet me first before giving me a positive answer." When he did meet her, he clearly decided that he did not want to marry her. As she said in her statement to the police, "He also did not try to establish a relationship with me ... and he never discussed our relationship, thus I was happy that my earlier proposal died a silent death.”²⁴³³

²⁴³² Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

Tsafendas appears to be logical and calculating in this business. He was careful to meet Helen Daniels in the flesh before deciding whether or not to marry her; deciding he did not wish to do so, he made no effort to establish a relationship with her. This seems perfectly sensible behaviour, perhaps beyond the reach a man who was “not altogether there.” Nevertheless, Tsafendas always spoke well of Helen Daniels and her family and never made reference to the marriage issue. He was grateful to them and in later years acknowledged the part he believed they played in saving his life by exaggerating the stories about him.

²⁴³³ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

CONCLUSION

There are three major points:

- Daniels conceals the fact that his sister pursued Tsafendas, writing to him and asking him to meet and marry her.
- Daniels claims that Tsafendas is mad because of some things he said and did, although all of these things could have been done by any normal man.
- The Attorney-General could have easily challenged, indeed broken down, Daniels's testimony, just by using the statement his sister gave to the police, but he did not do it.

Peter Daniels omitted from his testimony the fact that his sister wrote five letters to Tsafendas, including one with her picture, asking him to meet and marry. It was not the first time he had lied. In two interviews with the Post and the Sunday Times on September 18, 1966, he claimed that it was Tsafendas who pursued his sister, writing to her several times and that their meeting "did not result in a great friendship ... Helen was not interested in marriage."²⁴³⁴ It is understandable that Daniels tried to protect his sister from the inevitable negative reaction had it become known that she wrote letters to the man who assassinated the country's Prime Minister, asking him to meet and marry her.

However, there are wider implications as to the way Tsafendas is portrayed, since Daniels offers a picture of a homeless person who practically forced himself on the family or was offered bed and board for humanitarian reasons or because he was a fellow member of their Church. If Tsafendas was mad or even strange, Helen Daniels's friends would not have told her about him with the suggestion that she should meet him and marry him. Helen was a minister in their Church and her friends were also very religious and their view was that Tsafendas would be a good and suitable husband, indicating how highly they thought of him.

Some of the strange things Peter Daniels imputed to Tsafendas turned out not to be strange at all. The perfect example concerned Tsafendas spraying the family chickens with water to cool them in hot weather. Daniels believed Tsafendas was insane for doing so and Judge Beyers had to explain to him that this was a necessary procedure sometimes to save the birds' lives and that he personally did that, too.

²⁴³⁴ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), 'Tsafendas's Brothers are Quizzed', 18 September 1966: 18: 5; Winter, 'I Jilted Tsafendas, Says Coloured Girl', The Post, 18 September 1966: 1.

That Tsafendas's actions during his stay with the Daniels family were perfectly normal is supported by Helen Daniels, who lived in the same house at the same time and later told the police that she had not "noticed anything abnormal about him. There was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal. His stories about travelling abroad was interesting."²⁴³⁵ If she thought Tsafendas was acting as a mad person, she would have told the police. What is more, she lived under the same roof as Tsafendas, which her brother did not.

What is most likely is that Daniels himself did not believe that the things Tsafendas said and did were crazy, and he was merely supporting the defence's line to get Tsafendas "free." Patrick O'Ryan and Louisa O'Ryan said they were asked by advocate Cooper to exaggerate some stories about Tsafendas and to "make sure to mention the tapeworm." The Daniels family, close friends of the O'Ryan, may well have been asked to do the same by Advocate Cooper. The fact that Helen Daniels, who knew Tsafendas better than her brother and played a more important role in his life, was not asked by the defence to testify while her brother and his wife were, also suggests that the defence's aim, and rightly so, was not to find someone who knew Tsafendas well, but someone who could support their line of argument.

Although Helen Daniels was not a suitable witness for the defence, she surely was for the State. She had lived in the same house as Tsafendas for about fifty days, she had corresponded with him and she had asked him to marry her. In addition to this, she had testified to the police that Tsafendas was perfectly sane, a complete contradiction to her brother's testimony. The Attorney-General should have been aware of her statement and he could have easily used it to challenge her brother's testimony. He could even have asked her to testify as a witness for the prosecution to challenge the defence's line that Tsafendas was insane. However, not for the first time, evidence that could have challenged or broken down the case for insanity was not used.

It is important to remember here that Attorney-General van den Berg had made a mistake regarding the reclassification issue in his memorandum about Tsafendas on October 3, 1966, making it obvious that he was not, even then, in possession of Helen Daniels's statement. It seems more likely that van den Berg was never in possession of her statement rather than choosing not to use it to challenge Peter Daniels's testimony. Despite the fact that none of the things mentioned by Peter Daniels could really be considered as actions of an insane man, Judge Beyers, as we will see in his final verdict, found it as very convincing as to the fact that Tsafendas was mad.

²⁴³⁵ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 5: MERLE DANIELS²⁴³⁶

EXTRACTS FROM MERLE DANIELS'S TESTIMONY²⁴³⁷

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The man before Court here, Demitrio Tsafendas, when did you see him for the first time?

M. DANIELS: The first time I saw him was on the 28th August.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Of which year?

M. DANIELS: 1965.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where did you see him?

M. DANIELS: I saw him in my mother-in-law's home.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you see much of him, did you talk often to him?

M. DANIELS: Well, in his free time he used to come in there, you know, and speak to us a little, about his travels.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was he also a member of your religious persuasion?

M. DANIELS: Yes, well, we accepted him as a brother of our faith, that is how we took him in.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you expect him to pay for his lodgings when he arrived at your home?

M. DANIELS: When he first came there he wasn't working, so my father-in-law did not expect anything from him until he started to work.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When he arrived there, what impression did he make on you?

M. DANIELS: Well, he seemed to be a strange person. I mean, he was shabbily dressed, and to me he seemed strange the first day I saw him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: His shabby dress, did that make/him strange? Anything else?

M. DANIELS: No, well, just because of the way he was dressed and he started speaking to ²⁴³⁶ Merle Daniels is the wife of Peter Daniels and sister-in-law of Helen Daniels.

²⁴³⁷ Marle Daniels's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

us of the different preachers he had met all over the world from the same faith.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Were there any strange incidents that you can remember in connection with the accused?

M. DANIELS: Yes. I can very well remember one afternoon. This particular day he had gone out to look for work, and this particular afternoon when he came home - it was about mid-afternoon - and I asked him to come over and have a cup of tea with us, because my mother and aunt had visited me that day, and I asked him to come and have tea with us this day. He said that he would, he was first going to take his coat off as it was a hot day and he had his big overcoat with him. And he went next-door, but before he left I asked him to tell us a little about his travels and where he has been all over the world, and he said that he would come and tell my mom and aunt a little about it. He went next-door and he came back and he brought his bible along with him, which seemed such a strange thing, because I had asked him to speak about his travels. I spoke to him at the table and I said: "Well, Demitrio, tell us a little about your travels", and he looked at me but he was unconcerned about the question I had asked him, and he was reading about the experiences of Paul and relating it, telling me a bit about the life of Paul. He said that his own life, when he examined himself, he felt that he came so far short when he thought of the life of Paul. And after that he just left. He asked us to excuse him and he went home, still with his bible under his arm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: On this occasion, after he started talking about Paul, did you try to bring him back to talking about his travels?

M. DANIELS: Yes. I said to him: "Well, Demitrio, tell us a bit about your travels. That is the purpose-that I asked you", and he wasn't concerned about the question that I had asked him. He was just reading his bible and speaking about the travels of Paul.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Can you think of any other incidents?

M. DANIELS: Well, there was a time in my mother-in-law's home that he would lie on the bed with his boots on, on her clean quilt, and he would not think of removing them before he would go and lie down.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I don't want to go into the other incidents that the Court knows of, but what is your overall impression of this man, Demitrio Tsafendas?

M. DANIELS: Well, I often said, we even said amongst ourselves, surely Demitrio is not all there; by the things that he did and the strange way that he acted sometimes we felt that he wasn't all there.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S ASSISTANT

BRUNETTE: Was he a bit eccentric?

M. DANIELS: Could you explain that word to me?

BRUNETTE: Well, I mean he did strange things here and there, but it wasn't anything in particular.

JUDGE BEYERS: It was something particular. He spoke about St. Paul when he should have been speaking about himself, and he lay with dirty boots on the clean coverlet. That is what I have got at the moment - particulars.

BRUNETTE: When you asked him to come and tell about his travels, could he perhaps have misunderstood you?

M. DANIELS: No, I don't think he could, because I spoke to him quite a few times. I said to him "Demitrio, tell us about your travels" and he looked at me and said "Yes, Merle", but he wasn't concerned about the question of us asking him.

BRUNETTE: Did he perhaps read to you about the travels of Paul?

M. DANIELS: That is right. He sat at table with his Bible and just pushed the cake plate aside and he started telling us about the travels of Paul.

BRUNETTE: Did he pay to stay with you, or what was the arrangement?

M. DANIELS: He did not stay with me.

BRUNETTE: With your father? Do you know?

M. DANIELS: Well, after the first few weeks he did not work and my father did not expect him to pay anything, but when he started work my father-in-law spoke to him and asked him if he would contribute something towards the family, towards the home.

BRUNETTE: Was he willing to do that?

M. DANIELS: Yes, he was.

BRUNETTE: Do you know whether he paid after that? Did he pay for any boarding or lodging after that?

M. DANIELS: While he stayed in my father-in-law's house?

BRUNETTE: Yes?

M. DANIELS: Yes, well, he did. After my father-in-law spoke to him he did pay, because then he worked.

BRUNETTE: Are you perhaps worried that a member of your Church is in trouble?

M. DANIELS: Well, when we heard about it we were shocked. We were upset about it, and in a way felt sorry that he could have done such a thing.

BRUNETTE: Is it worrying you?

M. DANIELS: It has to a certain extent. I mean, we accepted him as a brother of the Faith and it is not of us people to do any violence of that sort.

BRUNETTE: Did you ever have anything to do with his washing?

M. DANIELS: Well, the first day he came there he asked me to wash shirts for him for the meeting of the Sunday, and I said I would, but then he came with a big bundle of washing, dirty washing, which I did do for him the first day. But after that he stayed with my mother-in-law, so she did the rest of his washing. But the first day I did his washing.

BRUNETTE: So as far as you know he generally had his clothes washed, and he wore clean clothes?

M. DANIELS: Yes, well, my mother-in-law kept him clean. I mean, she did his washing and ironing for him.

BRUNETTE: Would you like to protect the name of your Church in this matter?

M. DANIELS: Yes, well, I would.

COMMENTS ON M. DANIELS'S TESTIMONY

Before we analyse this testimony, we should consider the issue of Tsafendas's clothes. Helen Daniels testified to the police that Tsafendas was wearing dirty clothes when she first saw him and he had dirty laundry with him. According to Merle Daniels, the day Tsafendas arrived at their house, he immediately asked her to wash his clothes, which suggests that he was aware of their condition and was not habitually a dirty person.

As with Peter Daniels's testimony, there is nothing in Merle's statements to indicate that Tsafendas was schizophrenic. The word eccentric is unknown to her and the incidents she describes as “strange” are things that any normal man might do. Albert Einstein had several habits which could be described as “strange” by some people, for example playing as an adult with a toy telescope, wearing shoes with holes and having his wife cut his hair because he was parsimonious. He was also absent-minded, often forgetting his own address.²⁴³⁸ Einstein was not mad, but if Merle Daniels had come across him, it is very likely that she would have also considered him very strange and perhaps “not all there.”

TSAFENDAS WAS “STRANGE” BECAUSE OF THE WAY HE WAS DRESSED

One of the reasons Tsafendas seemed strange to Merle Daniels was the way he dressed – “shabbily,” she said. None of some two hundred witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission of Enquiry thought Tsafendas was strange because of how he dressed. The only person among those interviewed who found Tsafendas’s style of dressing to be “different” was Gillian Claire Lieberman, personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation, whose office Tsafendas often visited. “I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation, but a strange type of person, a unique character. I got the impression that he was physically different in dress and appearance. He was a big man, with a particularly striking big hat, stainless steel teeth, sloppy dirty clothing.”²⁴³⁹ Still, she found him “different,” not mad. Tsafendas never had much money, so dressing for fashion might not have been a priority. Nonetheless, several witnesses referred to his frequent purchases of stylish headwear.

In addition, several testified that Tsafendas was neatly dressed. For example:

- The report of Col. van Wyk from Rhodesia and Mozambique which contained interviews with people who Tsafendas in these two countries, stated that Tsafendas “was always neatly dressed.”²⁴⁴⁰
- Ian Boswell testified that Tsafendas was “at all times neatly dressed and never gave the impression of being destitute.”²⁴⁴¹

²⁴³⁸ Martin Chilton ‘Albert Einstein: He Really was An Egghead’, The Telegraph, 19 April 2016.

²⁴³⁹ Gillian Claire Lieberman statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁴⁴⁰ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁴⁴¹ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

- Violet Irene Manning was Tsafendas's landlady for almost two months in 1965. She told the Commission of Enquiry that Tsafendas paid for a serviced room, "but I found him making his own bed. When he came to me he was well-dressed, well-spoken, and gave a good impression. From his general appearance he appeared to be a businessman. When he paid me, he had a bundle of notes and I took him to be a man of means."²⁴⁴²
- Gideon Cloete, an employer at the Department of Labour testified that Tsafendas "was neatly dressed and had a clean appearance."²⁴⁴³
- Jacobus Borman testified that 'according to my observation, Tsafendas was a gentle person. He was neat on his person, but his eating habits were not up to scratch.'²⁴⁴⁴
- Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys, employment officer at the Department of Labour in Cape Town interviewed Tsafendas twice. He testified to the police that Tsafendas was "neatly dressed" and he "never got the impression that there was mentally anything wrong with him or that he acted abnormally."²⁴⁴⁵
- Redvers Quintin Wakfer who worked with Tsafendas for six weeks at the Power Station in Cape Town testified that Tsafendas was 'neatly dressed.'²⁴⁴⁶
- Edward Furness testified that Tsafendas 'was well dressed and appeared to be wealthy.'²⁴⁴⁷
- Katerina Pnema, his half-sister, testified that Tsafendas 'was well dressed and gave a good appearance although as far as she could see he had no visible means of support.'²⁴⁴⁸ She later also stated that Tsafendas was always very well dressed and never showed him wearing dirty clothes except from when he was coming back from work.
- Sidney Wiehand, a senior messenger at the Assembly who was one of the three messengers who interviewed Tsafendas. He said that one in order to be hired, he "must ²⁴⁴² Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

²⁴⁴³ Gideon Jacobus Cloete testimony at Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, NASA.

²⁴⁴⁴ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁴⁴⁵ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

²⁴⁴⁶ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA; Redvers Quintin Wakfer statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub File: 1/5, Subject Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

²⁴⁴⁷ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁴⁴⁸ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

always be neat” and suggested that Tsafendas was like this.²⁴⁴⁹

- Mary Scott was Tsafendas’s landlady in Cape Town for two months in 1966. She told the police, “His clothing however was clean and always tidy.”²⁴⁵⁰
- Horst Hartmann, senior personnel officer at the Fries and Son in Frankfurt, where Tsafendas worked as a welder, said about him, “He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman. I thought he was more likely to apply for an executive job than as a welder. Well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous, a very pleasant man...he made a good impression.”²⁴⁵¹

Furthermore, none of the seventy-one witnesses interviewed by the author said that Tsafendas had a dirty or neglected appearance. Two of them, Andreas Babiolakis and Costas Poriazis, said that they once saw Tsafendas looking neglected and wearing a torn shirt. However, that was on the day he was released from jail in Beira in February 1965. Having just spent several days in a prison cell, wearing the same clothes every day and being beaten up, he could hardly have appeared otherwise. Both witnesses said that this was the only time they saw Tsafendas looking less than perfectly dressed; at all other times he was clean and neatly dressed.²⁴⁵²

In addition, all the witnesses remembers him as being always very well-dressed and that he looked like a gentleman. For example, the thirteen sailors of the Eleni tanker who spent forty-two days with him told the author that Tsafendas had a clean appearance and was always very well dressed. They were all surprised by the fact that he was so well-dressed while he seemed to be a poor man because of the job he was doing. Again, in order to not include everyone’s statement about Tsafendas appearance, the study includes here the statements of people who knew him more:

- Father Nikola Banovic lived at the same house with Tsafendas for four months in 1961 and for another two-three in one right next to his, practically seeing him again every day all this time. According to him, Tsafendas was a very clean person and was always ²⁴⁴⁹ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

²⁴⁵⁰ Mary Kathleen Scott statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁴⁵¹ Daily Dispatch, ‘He Made A Good Impression’, 8 September 1966: 1; Daily Express, ‘The Assassin’, 8 September 1966: 2; Natal Witness, ‘Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...’, 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, ‘Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte’, 8 September 1966.

²⁴⁵² Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Costas Poriazis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

very well dressed, each day wearing a different hat.²⁴⁵³

- Reuben O’Ryan, Patrick O’Ryan’s son. He lived with Tsafendas in the same house for five months and kept in touch with him for another year. Tsafendas had moved to his house immediately after he had left the Daniels’s house. He said Tsafendas “was always very clean and well-dressed, apart from when he was coming home from work. That was the only time I saw him wearing dirty clothes. He always wore nice clothes; he was a clean person and always shaved.”²⁴⁵⁴
- Allan O’Ryan lived with Tsafendas for five months at the same house and kept being in touch for another year. He remembers Tsafendas being always “very well-dressed. Firstly, he always went out in a suit. He had a grey striped suit that he always wore. He was always very smart when he left the house. That I picked up – that he always looked very business-like. He was never casual about his dress. And his hair, though it was crinkly, it was neatly brushed. He was always well-dressed and he seemed to be going on business or going out for the day. And even the people in the street got to know him and greeted him as a man of... you know, as a distinguished gentleman, because of the way he dressed.” However, O’Ryan also stated that Tsafendas had some messy manners. He said “For example, sometimes, when he did bathe, the bathroom would be wet. The floor would be wet, the way he had splashed the water. And I remember my mum, she complained once or twice, you know, ‘When Dimi has finished bathing, then I have to clean the floor of the bathroom.’”²⁴⁵⁵
- Stanley O’Ryan, another of Patrick O’Ryan’s sons also remembers Tsafendas being “neatly and nicely dressed” and a “clean person.”²⁴⁵⁶
- Mary Eintracht, Tsafendas first cousin, knew him since he was five years old and grew up together in Mozambique. She spent a lot of time with him within a year while he was in Pretoria in 1964, while he also lived at the same house as her for two-three months. She insists that Tsafendas was always well-dressed, very often wearing a hat and was a very clean person. “Since he was a child, he would never eat anything without washing his hands. Even when we were out playing, he would pump into the house to wash his hands before eating something. He was very fussy with clean hands when he ²⁴⁵³ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²⁴⁵⁴ Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

²⁴⁵⁵ Allan O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019.

²⁴⁵⁶ Stanley O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 9 April 2015.

was a child, and I think he was also like this when he grew up, but I can't remember for sure."²⁴⁵⁷

- Fotini Gavasiadis saw and talked to Tsafendas every day for a period of nine months. She told the author that "it is nonsense" that Tsafendas was not well-dressed or a dirty person and she is surprised from this comment. She maintains that he was always very well dressed and clean. "Sometimes it was taking him longer than it was taking me to get ready, trying to find the more suitable hat or tie. He adored hats and ties."²⁴⁵⁸
- Ira Kyriakakis who grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques and remained a very good friend of his until his arrest believes that the statement that Tsafendas was not well-dressed and clean is absolutely absurd. "He was always very well dressed; since he was a child. He used to wear hats he had bought from all over the world. He loved hats and he must have had tens of them. He came back to Lourenço Marques in the 1960s he brought me a hat for present from Lisbon."²⁴⁵⁹
- Helen Grispos grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques and her mother was Tsafendas's step-mother best friend there. "He was always very well dressed, even as a child; his step-mother always looked after him. When he visited us in the 1960s I remember he wore a big hat he said he had bought somewhere in Europe. I don't remember what he was wearing, but I remember the hat. It was very distinctive. He was certainly well-dressed."²⁴⁶⁰
- Joyce Dick, one of Helen Daniels's best friends at the time, stated to the author that whenever she saw Tsafendas, "he was always very neatly dressed."²⁴⁶¹
- Irene Michaletos met Tsafendas in 1964 in Beira and closely associated with him until 1965. She remembers Tsafendas being always well dressed and clean.²⁴⁶²
- Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousins, first met him in 1951 in Lourenço Marques and got to know him between 1963 and 1965 in Mozambique. They both remember Tsafendas being "always well dressed and clean."²⁴⁶³

²⁴⁵⁷ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

²⁴⁵⁸ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

²⁴⁵⁹ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

²⁴⁶⁰ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

²⁴⁶¹ Joyce Dick in a personal interview, 6 August 2016.

²⁴⁶² Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

²⁴⁶³ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

- Andreas Babioulakis knew Tsafendas since childhood and lived with him in the same house in Beira for about two-three months. He remembers Tsafendas having a shower every morning, being very well dressed and with clean clothes.²⁴⁶⁴
- Costas Chagios, a Cape Town café owner, got to know Tsafendas on a friendly basis in 1965 when he walked into his restaurant. In the year up to his arrest in 1966, Tsafendas visited the restaurant more than fifty times. Chagios remembers Tsafendas being always well dressed and clean.²⁴⁶⁵
- Alexandra Vaporidis knew Tsafendas for about six-seven months in Istanbul. She was impressed with the many hats Tsafendas was wearing and remembers that a lot of people she knew were commenting about how neatly Tsafendas was dressed. “I remember him coming to the church always wearing a tie.”²⁴⁶⁶
- Peter Protoulis was a supplier of foodstuffs to the tanker Eleni. He met Tsafendas on board and in the forty-two days that the vessel was docked in Cape Town and remembers him being always very well dressed.²⁴⁶⁷
- Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott’s boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest. He remembers Tsafendas being always well dressed and clean, often wearing suits, ties and hats.²⁴⁶⁸
- Peter Peroglou and his wife Pamela Abrahams were eating at the same place as Tsafendas for two-three months in 1966. They remember him being always very well dressed and very courteous.²⁴⁶⁹
- Nick Augustides is the son of the owner of Mike’s Outfitters in Cape Town for whom Tsafendas worked on commission for about two months in 1966. He knew Tsafendas for three-four months and remembers him always being “a well-dressed man.”²⁴⁷⁰

Albert Einstein who was a little stingy with money wore old, worn clothes and even his shoes had holes in them and kept on wearing them even if they were no longer watertight. “He would wear them until it was no longer possible,” said Herta Waldow, who was his live-

²⁴⁶⁴ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

²⁴⁶⁵ Costas Hagios in a personal interview, 24 March 2015.

²⁴⁶⁶ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

²⁴⁶⁷ Peter Protoulis in a personal interview, 28 May 2016.

²⁴⁶⁸ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

²⁴⁶⁹ Pamela Abrahams and Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

²⁴⁷⁰ Nick Augustides in a personal interview, 19 February 2016.

in housekeeper for six years. The way he was dressed often suggested that he was a poor man.²⁴⁷¹ So, we could safely assume that if Merle Daniels had come across Einstein, she would have thought that he was “not all there.”

TSAFENDAS WAS STRANGE BECAUSE HE TOLD THEM ABOUT THE PREACHERS OF THEIR FAITH HE HAD MET ALL OVER THE WORLD

Merle Daniels also testified that Tsafendas seemed strange to her because he told them about the preachers of their faith he had met all over the world. All the Daniels family were very religious and members of the same Christian sect as Tsafendas, therefore what could be strange about Tsafendas talking about the preachers he met? Helen Daniels was a preacher, therefore it seemed perfectly natural to mention others he met. She had also told the police that Tsafendas’s “stories about traveling abroad were interesting.”²⁴⁷²

TSAFENDAS WAS “STRANGE” BECAUSE ON ONE OCCASION HE DID NOT SPEAK TO THEM ABOUT HIS TRAVELS, BUT ABOUT SAINT PAUL’S TRAVELS

Another reason Tsafendas seemed strange to Merle was that when she asked him to talk about his travels, he insisted on speaking about the travels of Saint Paul, the Christian Evangelist. Helen Daniels testified to the police that Tsafendas’s “stories about travelling abroad were interesting”²⁴⁷³ and several others said he spoke widely about his travels. The fact that on this occasion, he chose not to talk about them, hardly seems sufficient to characterise him as strange.

TSAFENDAS WAS STRANGE BECAUSE HE LAY ON THE BED WITH HIS BOOTS ON

Finally, according to Merle Daniels, Tsafendas was “not all there” because he lay on her mother-in-law’s clean quilt with his boots on. This might argue that Tsafendas was inconsiderate and maybe even rude, but does it mean that he was mentally strange? He may have been exhausted after work or simply thoughtless. In the finale of Steven Spielberg’s movie, “Bridge of Spies,” which is based on fact, the leading character, played by Tom ²⁴⁷¹ Chilton, ‘Albert Einstein: He Really was An Egghead’, The Telegraph, 19 April 2016.

²⁴⁷² Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

²⁴⁷³ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

Hanks, stretches out on his clean bed with his shoes on. I doubt if any movie-goer thought that the Tom Hanks character was therefore “not all there.”

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH AND TSAFENDAS

Merle Daniels admitted she wanted to protect the name of the Christian Church. Patrick O’Ryan²⁴⁷⁴ and Richard Poggenpoel²⁴⁷⁵ said the assassination brought embarrassment on the Church and several members tried to distance themselves and their Church from Tsafendas. As with most members of the Greek community, some from the Christian Church tried to portray Tsafendas as not one of them, in order to protect their reputation.

CONCLUSION

Merle Daniels, who makes no mention of the tapeworm, found Tsafendas to be “strange” and “not all there” because of how he acted and the way he dressed. However, the examples she gives are actions which any normal person could perform. She seems not to know about eccentricity (at least she needs the word explained to her) and that people may behave in ways unfamiliar to her.

We must also consider the possibility that she portrayed Tsafendas as strange in order to support the defence’s insanity argument and save his life and that she did not really find all these things strange. Just as Patrick O’Ryan and his wife were asked by advocate Cooper to exaggerate some stories about Tsafendas, Merle and her husband, who were good friends of the O’Ryans, may have been asked to do the same. By any modern standards, Merle Daniels’s testimony would never be accepted as proof that a man who acted as Tsafendas did was therefore out of his mind or, as she put it, “not all there.” Yet, extraordinarily, Judge Beyers would state in his verdict that her testimony was among those that convinced him Tsafendas was mad.

²⁴⁷⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁴⁷⁵ Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 6: PATRICK O'RYAN

INTRODUCTION

Patrick O’Ryan was the key defence witness from among those who knew Tsafendas because he was able to speak at length about the tapeworm - testimony that was crucial for the defence line. Tsafendas considered O’Ryan to be his best friend and the nicest person he ever met.²⁴⁷⁶ He was a Coloured teacher and a member of the Christian Church sect. He first heard of Tsafendas from a minister of their sect who described Tsafendas as a “highly cultured gentleman, a very refined gentleman who speaks seven languages.”²⁴⁷⁷ When O’Ryan met Tsafendas he invited him to stay with his family in his home.²⁴⁷⁸ Tsafendas lodged there for five months, then visited regularly until his arrest.²⁴⁷⁹

Patrick O’Ryan formed a “deep liking”²⁴⁸⁰ for Tsafendas, someone he saw as an “enlightened person.”²⁴⁸¹ Tsafendas returned the affection and respect. Upon hearing of the assassination, the O’Ryan family, including the oldest children, were devastated since they had grown to know and love Tsafendas. There was much weeping in the family household, including by Patrick and his wife. Patrick was the most deeply affected and asked his wife and children to pray for Tsafendas. He also led prayers for him at many gatherings of the Christian Church, although not all the members were happy about this.²⁴⁸²

²⁴⁷⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁴⁷⁷ Patrick O’ Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

²⁴⁷⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁴⁷⁹ Patrick O’ Ryan’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA; Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 7 April 2015.

²⁴⁸⁰ Patrick O’ Ryan’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²⁴⁸¹ Patrick O’ Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

²⁴⁸² Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

EXTRACTS FROM PATRICK O’RYAN’S TESTIMONY²⁴⁸³

P. O’RYAN’S MEETING WITH TSAFENDAS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How big is your family?

P. O’RYAN: We are nine.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How big is your house?

P. O’RYAN: We have three bedrooms, a lounge, kitchen, bathroom, outroom, and a garage.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is your profession, your occupation?

P. O’RYAN: I teach.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What subjects do you teach?

P. O’RYAN: English and Art.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: For how many years have you been a teacher?

P. O’RYAN: Thirty years.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When did you meet Demitrio Tsafendas for the first time?

P. O’RYAN: The actual acquaintance that I made first was while in prayer at a conference. I heard...

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where was this conference?

P. O’RYAN: This conference was held out at Durbanville.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What month, and in which year?

P. O’RYAN: It was towards the end of November 1965.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was this conference, this congress of? Which people?

P. O’RYAN: It was an assembly, a conference of delegates, Christian delegates I may call it.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Were you present at that assembly?

P. O’RYAN: I was present.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And the accused, was he there?

²⁴⁸³ Patrick O’ Ryan’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

P. O’RYAN: The accused was there.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Tell us - you say the first time that you saw him...?

P. O’RYAN: When I heard the accused praying, or rather repeating the Paternoster, I opened my eyes and looked to see who it was, because never had anything like that happened that an individual parroted a prayer.

JUDGE BEYERS: That he did what?

P. O’RYAN: He said the Our Father.

JUDGE BEYERS: In what language?

P. O’RYAN: In English. None of us ever makes repetitions in praying.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How do you deliver your prayer at your assemblies, and how do the other delegates?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Every member of this faith prays in spirit and in truth from the heart.

BY THE COURT: A silent prayer?

P. O’RYAN: Audibly.

ASSESSOR: You don’t repeat a well-known prayer, is that what you mean?

P. O’RYAN: No prayer - we repeat no prayer.

JUDGE BEYERS: I am not following. The unusual feature of this man, which made you open your eyes and look who this was, was that he was saying a well-known ritual Paternoster, and that was not according to your ...?

P. O’RYAN: Not according to the teachings of Jesus.

ASSESSOR: In other words you pray spontaneously?

P. O’RYAN: That is right.

ASSESSOR: You make up your prayer as you pray?

P. O’RYAN: It flows spontaneously.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he also speak at this assembly?

P. O’RYAN: Normally there is an opportunity of open testimony, in which he participated.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Does everybody have an opportunity at this assembly?

P. O’RYAN: Everyone has an opportunity to give a testimony.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: At the assembly. What do the members usually talk about, or give testimony about?

P. O’RYAN: We usually give testimony of our experiences on Christian lines and the work of God in our own personal lives.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When you heard the accused speak, what did he speak about?

P. O’RYAN: When the accused spoke he cited a passage of scripture, and thereafter, normally, one refers, or tries to interpret this passage of scripture. In his case, however, he continued, shall I say, at a tangent, or he spoke of his travels, which were not relevant to the chapter at all.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did this strike you as being odd, strange conduct?

P. O’RYAN: It struck me that the individual concerned, the accused, was not, in my opinion, born of the spirit of God.

JUDGE BEYERS: Did you sense something false in it, do you mean?

P. O’RYAN: Whosoever is born of the spirit of God can discern spiritually, and the context...

JUDGE BEYERS: It didn’t ring true?

P. O’RYAN: Not at all.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When he had finished this talking, did you know what he was trying to tell you?

P. O’RYAN: He got nowhere. Just a string of incoherent or disjointed sentences mostly.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did the other delegates to the assembly react to his speech?

P. O’RYAN: Quite a few with whom I discussed it felt the way I did, that his, could I say, discourse lacked in spiritual content.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: At that time did you speak to the accused at that assembly?

P. O’RYAN: I did speak to the accused.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was he employed then? Did he have a job?

P. O’RYAN: He was unemployed at that time.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where was he living?

P. O’RYAN: He was on the verge of terminating his residence at a particular place in the Gardens.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And did he ask you whether he could come and stay with you?

P. O’RYAN: I had been approached by a member of the faith with the object of arranging accommodation for the accused.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And did you then make arrangements and give the accused accommodation?

P. O’RYAN: I told him to call at my place, which he did the day after conference.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When did he arrive at your home?

P. O’RYAN: That was at the beginning of - I am not very sure of my dates - at the beginning of December. Immediately after the conference.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Of which year?

P. O’RYAN: 1965.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: For how long did he stay with you?

P. O’RYAN: He stayed with me for about close to five months.

COMMENTS ON P. O’RYAN’S TESTIMONY REGARDING HIS FIRST MEETING WITH TSAFENDAS

In 1997, two years before Tsafendas’s death, O’Ryan was interviewed by Liza Key as part of her television documentary about Tsafendas. He was asked by Key to explain how he met Tsafendas. He said that he heard about him from a minister of his church who said that a “highly cultured gentleman, a very refined gentleman who speaks seven languages” was looking for accommodation.²⁴⁸⁴ ²⁴⁸⁴ Patrick O’ Ryan in A Question of Madness.

Three–four years later, O’Ryan said the same thing to Fathers Minas Constandinou and Ioannis Tsaftaridis when they visited him. However, when advocate Cooper asked him in court to describe how he met Tsafendas, Cooper cut him off after the words, “I heard . . .” What was O’Ryan going to say? It is a fair assumption that he was about to repeat the description he had heard of Tsafendas as “highly cultured” and “very refined” and a speaker of seven languages. Why was he stopped? He was asked by the defence team not to praise Tsafendas since that would invalidate its portrayal of him as odd and moronic.²⁴⁸⁵

O’Ryan appeared surprised that Tsafendas recited the Lord’s Prayer at an assembly of his Church. This suggests that Tsafendas was not well acquainted with the Church’s modes, which favoured spontaneous prayer, when a person feels moved by the Spirit, rather than the recitation of established formulae, as in the established Christian churches.

THE TAPEWORM

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he try to find any employment while he was staying with you?

P. O’RYAN: Regularly. He wrote a number of applications. He went for interviews. And on one occasion he managed to land a job at the City Tramways, which lasted only a few days. He was issued with a uniform however. Thereafter he was unemployed again, and thence he was engaged at the Diamond Marine Corporation, I think, South West Africa.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: While he was with you, was he a lazy man?

P. O’RYAN: While he was with me, very often he would remain in bed, and would apparently do so for the day. But with us, we believe that every individual should have solid and permanent work. Then I would speak to him and tell him it is very unsavoury for a healthy man like him to remain in bed. Then he complained of this, of a worm that he mentioned of enormous proportions. In this case he mentioned that six foot of the worm had once come down, and the head remained behind, and the width was two inches wide. And more than one evening, after a late evening, he would ask my wife for a hunk of bread, he said, just to feed the worm, or demon, or the snake, which he most frequently termed it. Then there were other occasions when I had to speak to him, but not necessarily about his being inactive or lazy.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In what way further did he say that this worm affected his life?

²⁴⁸⁵ Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

P. O’RYAN: He told me about this worm, and that it sapped him or that it robbed him of his energy with the result that he could not hold a job very long. He also mentioned among other things that this worm affected him in many ways, so much so that his finances were always very low, since I had told him he could stay free of charge, and at that time, then he need not pay me.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he ever go and try to get treatment for this worm? Medical attention?

P. O’RYAN: He went to the local hospital, I think Groote Schuur. Some of our friends saw him there. He went for treatment down at the Foreshore. And my wife also gave him a sort of treatment. She was very sympathetic in his case, whereas I told him the worm only existed in his mind, and then he was very disappointed and he told me I was like the doctors who wouldn’t believe him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he say what this worm did, how this worm behaved inside him?

P. O’RYAN: Well, at night he said this worm used to crawl about in him when it was hungry, and irritate him and so on.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did you think about this worm?

P. O’RYAN: Well, I candidly told him, as I do in many cases, that he should try to get his mind above matter, and that the worm was a figment of his imagination, purely.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did he react to that, when you told him?

P. O’RYAN: He was most disappointed, and told me that I was just like the medical men whom he had seen, or medical opinion that he had got, who disbelieved him, and that my wife was much more sympathetically inclined towards him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: So he used to pour out his troubles about the worm to your wife then, is that correct?

P. O’RYAN: That is right.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Tell us, what was the overall impression that Demitrio Tsafendas made upon you?

P. O’RYAN: I formed a conclusion that he was not in truth one of our faith.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I understand that, in truth. What did you think about his mental state?

P. O’RYAN: I never actually doubted his mental state, since to me he had a mind that the majority of people have.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The fact that he believed in the tapeworm, what impression did that make upon you?

P. O’RYAN: That, however, made me feel that he believed in the tapeworm very strongly.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was he a strange man?

P. O’RYAN: No, it had never occurred to me.

COMMENTS ON P. O’RYAN’S TESTIMONY REGARDING THE TAPEWORM

Although Patrick O’Ryan speaks at some length during his testimony about the tapeworm, he also states clearly that he “never actually doubted his mental state” and that Tsafendas’s mind was similar to the one “the majority of people have.” This is what he really believed and he could not have said otherwise because he had already testified to the police on September 17, 1966 that Tsafendas’s “spiritual view seemed confused, but he was not spiritually or mentally disturbed ... I never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind.” What is more, his testimony to the police did not include any mention of the tapeworm.²⁴⁸⁶

About thirty years later, O’Ryan repeated to Liza Key while she was filming him for her documentary exactly the same phrase he had used to the police, “I never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind.”²⁴⁸⁷ He also testified to the Commission of Enquiry that “Tsafendas always behaved like a normal person, except that his interpretations of the Bible differed from mine.”²⁴⁸⁸ Therefore, why did he bring up the tapeworm at the trial?

Tsafendas later told Father Spiros Randos and Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis that O’Ryan lied to the court about the tapeworm in order to save his life. He explained to the priests that O’Ryan was the only person to whom he had told the truth about the tapeworm and the origin of the story prior to the assassination. This happened because of his close friendship with O’Ryan. Tsafendas talked to many people but confided certain things only to O’Ryan. One of these was about Tom Tuff, the preacher of the Christian Church he met in an American hospital and who introduced him to the Christian Church. Tsafendas told O’Ryan about Tom’s tapeworm story, describing how he copied it and used it to convince the Portuguese he was mad so as to receive amnesty and return to Mozambique, but also to make then stop torturing him when he was imprisoned.²⁴⁸⁹

²⁴⁸⁶ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²⁴⁸⁷ Patrick O’ Ryan in A Question of Madness.

²⁴⁸⁸ Patrick O’ Ryan statement to the COE, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

A few months before his death, Tsafendas was visited by Father Spiros Randos and Ioannis Tsafaridis, who asked if there was anything they could do for him, as they always did. Tsafendas had never asked them for anything, but then he said he believed he was dying and begged them to do something for him. Tsafendas wanted to apologise to Patrick O’Ryan for putting him in a situation that required him to lie in court about him and the tapeworm to save his life. Tsafendas, clearly stricken, said he had never had the chance to apologise personally; he pleaded with the priests to find O’Ryan and apologise on his behalf and thank him for what he did. Weeping, Tsafendas said he knew O’Ryan was very religious and lying was a major sin for him. Tsafendas guessed it must have been extremely difficult for O’Ryan to go through with his performance in court and he felt bad about putting him in such a difficult position. He said the only regret he had about killing Dr. Verwoerd was putting his best friend in such a position.²⁴⁹⁰

Several months after his death, Fathers Minas Constandinou²⁴⁹¹ and Ioannis Tsafaridis visited Patrick O’Ryan in his home and told him what Tsafendas had said. O’Ryan wept and praised Tsafendas as the “kindest man I ever met.” He told them how Tsafendas confided to him about the tapeworm story and he confirmed everything that Tsafendas had already told the priests, including its origins with Tom Tuff.²⁴⁹²

O’Ryan told the priests that he did not pay much attention when Tsafendas first told him the tapeworm story in 1965 and later he joked about it with his wife and children. It was only after the assassination and he was asked about the tapeworm by the defence lawyers, that he realised its importance. He said he had never told anyone the truth – that the tapeworm was fake, – not even his wife, and he had not intended ever to do so, but he could ²⁴⁸⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁴⁹⁰ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁴⁹¹ Father Spiros Randos was unable to travel and Father Minas Constandinou went instead.

²⁴⁹² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

confirm it now that the priests had heard the story from Tsafendas himself.²⁴⁹³

O’Ryan said this was the only time in his life that he lied and that he had been praying about it ever since. He believed God would forgive him because he did it for a noble cause. O’Ryan also told the priests that he was asked by Tsafendas’s lawyers whether he was aware of the tapeworm and he had replied “yes?” unsure initially if he meant the truth about it or the jokey situation surrounding the tapeworm which he had created. However, he also remembered that Tsafendas had used the tapeworm story with the Portuguese when he was arrested and thought that he might be using it again. What he regretted was telling the police that Tsafendas was sane. It had not occurred to him then that he might pretend to be mad.²⁴⁹⁴

O’Ryan told the priests how, after Tsafendas confided in him, he turned the tapeworm into a “family joke.” He said that one day when Tsafendas was starting on a second or third plate of food, one of the O’Ryan children, who was not eating, asked him how he managed to eat so much. O’Ryan joked that it was because Uncle Dimi “has a tapeworm inside him which eats his food.” He added that if his son did not eat his own food, Uncle Dimi would take it and give it to the worm. Fascinated and a little frightened, the boy plied Tsafendas with questions, whereupon Tsafendas opened his eyes wide and breathed heavily, saying that was what happened when the tapeworm ate. After that, the children often asked about the tapeworm and Tsafendas would repeat his performance.²⁴⁹⁵

Upon hearing about the tapeworm, Louisa, Patrick’s wife, told her husband, “that figures!” She was referring to Tsafendas’s appetite. Patrick did not tell her about Tom Tuff or that the tapeworm was imaginary and he enjoyed joking with Tsafendas about it.²⁴⁹⁶ Tsafendas built a very good relationship with Louisa O’Ryan because she sympathized with his “problem,” unaware it was a joke.²⁴⁹⁷ According to O’Ryan his wife had spoken to some other members of the Church about Tsafendas’s “problem” and that made him feel bad as he considered himself responsible for starting this “story.” O’Ryan apologised to him, but Tsafendas did not seem to care and on the contrary seemed to enjoy the charade.²⁴⁹⁸

²⁴⁹³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁴⁹⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁴⁹⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁴⁹⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁴⁹⁷ Louisa O’Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

²⁴⁹⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

O’Ryan also told the priests that one time at a prayer gathering in a church member’s house, Enid O’Ryan, his four-year-old daughter and youngest child of the family, asked Tsafendas to show their friends how the tapeworm acted. Embarrassed, Patrick said this was not the right place for it, but Tsafendas, evidently untroubled, staged his act. When some parents inquired about the tapeworm, Louisa O’Ryan and Tsafendas said it was true, he had a tapeworm, but Patrick said he was just joking. Tsafendas appeared perfectly relaxed about the tapeworm business and put on his act when he was with the O’Ryan children or their friends’ children. O’Ryan told the priests that this was everything that ever happened with the tapeworm and nothing else.²⁴⁹⁹

In 1997, Patrick O’Ryan told Liza Key, as he would tell the two priests, three or four years later, that advocate Cooper asked him to speak about the tapeworm in court and to exaggerate it as the only way to prevent Tsafendas from being hanged. He told Key that he “wouldn’t have done it ordinarily,” if Cooper had not asked him. O’Ryan also said that Cooper asked him to exaggerate other stories about Tsafendas in order to support the insanity plea.²⁵⁰⁰ Cooper, by then a judge himself, watched the documentary and told Liza Key that he enjoyed it. As for Patrick O’Ryan’s statement, he made no comment to Key²⁵⁰¹ nor to his son, Gavin Cooper.²⁵⁰² If O’Ryan had lied to Liza Key about Cooper and his “advice”, would Cooper not have protested? However, far from complaining, he praised the programme.

Professor John Dugard finds Wilfrid Cooper’s actions to be perfectly logical and admits he would have done the same in that position:

“I could understand it ... I can understand very well, if I had been in Wilfrid Cooper’s position, and I heard that there was some problem with a tapeworm, I would have done exactly the same. In South Africa at that time, the law was that murder was a capital crime, and it was compulsory for a judge to impose sentence of death unless there were mitigating circumstances. That meant that lawyers – and I was a practicing lawyer at that time too – went out of their way to find mitigating circumstances ... Often, the mitigating circumstance was very far-fetched, and sometimes ridiculous.

²⁴⁹⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁵⁰⁰ Patrick O’ Ryan in A Question of Madness; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁵⁰¹ Liza Key in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

²⁵⁰² Gavin Cooper in a personal interview, 16 June 2015.

So, if I was in that situation, and I heard that there was some story about a tapeworm that troubled my client, and it was the only mitigating circumstance that I had, I would have done exactly what Wilfrid Cooper did. I would have expanded the tapeworm story because it was my only chance to save his life. I mean, I don’t think that I behaved unprofessionally, but I can remember doing similar things... Because we used to look very hard for mitigating circumstances.”²⁵⁰³

It is important to mention here that at first O’Ryan was not sure whether the defence lawyers knew the truth behind the tapeworm or if Tsafendas had used it with them as he had used it with the Portuguese. He was therefore cautious and spoke of it only when he realised Tsafendas had indeed gone the same route as with the Portuguese. O’Ryan told the priests that Tsafendas’s lawyers seemed desperate because they could not find anyone else who knew about the tapeworm, which seems clear from the fact that none of the two hundred or so people who were questioned by the South African police and the Commission of Enquiry ever mentioned it.

O’Ryan also told the priests that he and his wife were asked by advocate Cooper to exaggerate some “strange” stories about Tsafendas and to claim that he was “crazy.” O’Ryan could not – and did not – make such claim as he had testified to the police that Tsafendas was perfectly sane and that he “never got the impression that there was something wrong with his brain.”²⁵⁰⁴ Thus, why did he lie to the court about the tapeworm? Because, as he told the priests, he considered Tsafendas to be the “kindest man he ever met.” He “took a deep liking” to him and considered him “very kindly man ... he had a good heart” and wanted to save his life.²⁵⁰⁵

NOTE: O’Ryan stated that Tsafendas went to Groote Schuur hospital for treatment for his tapeworm problem, but this is inaccurate. There is no such medical report and the only time that Tsafendas went to this hospital was for an operation on his nose. O’Ryan perhaps spoke as he did to support his testimony further.

²⁵⁰³ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

²⁵⁰⁴ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²⁵⁰⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

TSAFENDAS BEING RELIGIOUS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he read his Bible often?

P. O’RYAN: He read his Bible regularly.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he attend meetings of the movement?

P. O’RYAN: He most frequently accompanied me, because he and I attended the same Sunday morning meetings.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How many meetings do you have, does your movement have, every week?

P. O’RYAN: We have meetings regularly every Sunday morning where we break bread, Sunday evenings and Wednesday evenings.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: At these meetings, how did he fit in?

P. O’RYAN: Into the form of the meetings he fitted perfectly, but when it came to the substance of the meetings, he again, as I would put it, lacked spiritual depth. He was always superficial in his little discourses.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is that what you mean by spiritual depth, that he was superficial in his discourse?

P. O’RYAN: That is right, yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he appear to understand the Bible, from what you could see?

P. O’RYAN: He seemed to have not the slightest notion of what he usually cited in scripture, or passages that he tried to interpret.

TSAFENDAS’S WAY OF SPEECH

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In conversation, how would he answer a question, a simple question?

P. O’RYAN: He was always very hesitant before he replied, and, after he had started, then he would hesitate again and very often when he continued there was no logical sequence again.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How was his concentration?

P. O’RYAN: He had a very poor power of concentration, which I would say was manifested by the way in which he spoke. One could gather that.

JUDGE BEYERS: Would I summarise what you have just said if I say that his conversation was disjointed? Would that be a way of saying it?

P. O’RYAN: That is it, it was disjointed.

JUDGE BEYERS: Can I put it down like that?

P. O’RYAN: That is right.

JUDGE BEYERS: That his conversation was disjointed and didn’t seem to flow one from another?

P. O’RYAN: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: How was he spoken? How would you describe him? How did he speak?

P. O’RYAN: He was very well spoken, soft spoken, and his disposition was very meek. He was a very kindly man. In my experience of him he had a good heart.

COMMENTS ON P. O’RYAN’S STATEMENT REGARDING TSAFENDAS’S WAY OF SPEECH

The author cannot be certain, but it seems fair to suggest that O’Ryan’s initial comment about Tsafendas’s disjointed speech was intended to support the defence’s line. No other witness testified that Tsafendas spoke in a halting fashion and O’Ryan himself did not mention it to the police when he was questioned. He told the police that he “never got the impression that there was something wrong with his brain;” he also said, “... even though I did not consider him to be particularly intelligent, he was well-spoken and had good vocabulary.”²⁵⁰⁶

²⁵⁰⁶ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

The fact that Tsafendas was well-spoken and soft-spoken has been stated by several other witnesses as we have already seen. None of the witnesses questioned by the police and the Commission of Enquiry (about two hundred of them) mentioned anything about Tsafendas’s mode of speech. In addition, not one of the forty-six witnesses the author interviewed agreed that Tsafendas spoke in the way he was presented. All said he spoke perfectly normally. The issue has been discussed extensively, especially at Dr. Cooper’s testimony, so it would not be discussed here again.

DISCUSSING POLITICS WITH TSAFENDAS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In these conversations, did you ever canvass political topics?

P. O’RYAN: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is it correct then that during the whole period of five months that he stayed with you, he did not discuss politics with you?

P. O’RYAN: He might have discussed politics in the way that I, or rather, say, any Coloured man, would discuss. We may discuss say - I have no specific case, but I would not deny that he might have discussed general politics with me.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: But any topic that he may have discussed made no impression on you?

P. O’RYAN: Never. Mostly the Bible - scripture.

COMMENTS ON P. O’RYAN’S STATEMENT REGARDING NOT DISCUSSING POLITICS WITH TSAFENDAS

After the tapeworm, the biggest lie that Patrick O’Ryan told the court was that he and Tsafendas did not discuss politics in any serious way, although he had told the police that they did. As we will see shortly, the Attorney-General’s cross-examination revealed that O’Ryan had told the police that Tsafendas “was against the state policy of both South Africa and Portugal” and that he “labelled apartheid policies as unfair.”

Years later, O’Ryan added that Tsafendas became “excited” talking about politics and had told him Dr. Verwoerd was a tyrant. He said Dr. Verwoerd oppressed his people, was “Hitler’s best student” and if he ever get hold of him “he would bash his skull.”²⁵⁰⁷ However, O’Ryan did not tell the police of these remarks as he believed they would count against Tsafendas. O’Ryan said he was advised by advocate Cooper not to reveal the political discussions he had with Tsafendas.²⁵⁰⁸ Nevertheless, as we will see, the State was in possession of O’Ryan’s statement to the police and in cross-examination would mention the fact that he told the police that they had discussed politics, though not what he revealed thirty years later.

P. O’RYAN’S RELATIONSHIP WITH TSAFENDAS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was the accused married?

P. O’RYAN: No, as far as we knew, he was unmarried.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Do you know whether he took out any women while he was staying with you?

P. O’RYAN: No, but he was interested in some of our friends.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he manage to strike up some association, friendship with a woman while he lived with you?

P. O’RYAN: He was unfortunate.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he tell you about his wanderings, his travellings all over the world?

P. O’RYAN: Ad nauseam.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he tell you whether he had been subjected to any treatment in any part of the world?

P. O’RYAN: He told me that in some Portuguese territory - it might have been Portugal, it might have been somewhere down Lourenço Marques way - this brainwashing that I read about in the paper. But before it appeared in the paper he told me all about it. He described it to me.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What had they done to him? What did they do to him?

²⁵⁰⁷ Patrick O’ Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁵⁰⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017

P. O’RYAN: He mentioned that they slapped him on the temples of the head, regularly, until he fell down, and then they would pour water on him and so on, and on one occasion he mentioned that they carried away a corpse, someone to whom this third degree had been applied. He mentioned that to me.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Could you form a close attachment, friendship with this man, Demitrio Tsafendas?

P. O’RYAN: I took a deep liking to the man.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you form an attachment? Did you discuss your personal problems with him?

P. O’RYAN: As a rule we don’t discuss much of our personal problems.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did he behave towards your children?

P. O’RYAN: He was very attached to the children, and very often my wife used to say “This man has never had the opportunity to know a little about home life. This most probably is the first home where he is at home.” And we tried to make him at home as much as we could.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he discuss with you and tell you any of his background, of his home life as a child?

P. O’RYAN: Most of that he told my wife. He did not speak sentimentally to me at all, much.

P. O’RYAN: ... He was a very kindly man. In my experience of him he had a good heart.

COMMENTS ON P. O’RYAN’S STATEMENT REGARDING HIS RELATIONSHIP WITH TSAFENDAS

O’Ryan clearly states that he liked Tsafendas. He also trusted him to babysit his children.²⁵⁰⁹ Although sometimes unemployed, Tsafendas often bought sweets for the young ones and when he was in work, he came every day with sweets, toys and food. Reuben O’Ryan, the closest to Tsafendas of all the children, said, “We all loved him ... he was an adorable man ...

²⁵⁰⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

he was the answer to our prayers. We were poor and he brought food to our house.”²⁵¹⁰

Another child, Stanley, remembers Tsafendas as a “very down-to-earth man, very friendly. I never suspected, even in the slightest, that he might be unstable. Nothing at all. Perfectly normal.”²⁵¹¹

²⁵¹⁰ Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

²⁵¹¹ Stanley O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 9 April 2015.

Patrick O’Ryan testified in court that Tsafendas told him he was tortured and brainwashed in Portugal. No exploration was made of this, therefore it is important to state here what Tsafendas meant by brainwashing. He perceived it as an attempt by the Portuguese forcefully to change his pro-Communist and anti-colonial ideology, which included support for the independence of Mozambique. Tsafendas used the same word, “brainwashing,” when he described his torture by the Portuguese to several witnesses the author interviewed. He was not tortured to reveal something, but to change his political ideas.

O’Ryan stated openly that he liked Tsafendas and had confidence in him, even letting him to babysit his children. It seems unthinkable that he would have allowed a man who was unstable to do that. Perhaps conclusive proof of O’Ryan’s affection for Tsafendas is the fact that he and his wife were the only friends who attended his funeral. With just one day’s notice, they flew from Cape Town to Johannesburg to see Tsafendas interred in the cemetery next to Sterkfontein Hospital. O’Ryan was not a rich man and two last-minute plane tickets must have been costly. This demonstration of grief and loyalty says a lot about their relationship. “We do feel his death. He was dear to us,” Patrick O’Ryan said the day of the funeral and characterised him as “pleasant and highly intelligent.”²⁵¹²

CROSS-EXAMINED BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused show any feelings for your children?

P. O’RYAN: He was very fond of them.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And you took a deep liking to the accused?

P. O’RYAN: I had confidence in him and used to like him.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you think that he felt the same about you?

P. O’RYAN: Yes. Only that I didn’t sympathise with him about the worm.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What made you conclude that he was not one of your faith?

P. O’RYAN: Among other things, number one he mentioned to me that a friend of ours in Greece had baptised him by means of a triple immersion; in the name of the Father he was immersed; in the name of the Son he said he was immersed; and in the name of the Holy Spirit he was immersed. That was most unusual to me, and unscriptural. To us a baptism is symbolic of a burial, a natural burial. And when a man is buried naturally he is just buried once and not exhumed again and so on. Then, secondly, he was surprised when I told him about Jesus having existed before the earth...

²⁵¹² South African Press Association, ‘Small Group Gather for Tsafendas’s Funeral’, 9 October 1999.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: I don’t think we need go into that any further. Didn’t you gain the impression that the accused was sponging on you?

P. O’RYAN: Quite a few friends of mine told me that, but I believe in hospitality so I overlooked it.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: When did the accused tell you about this so-called worm?

P. O’RYAN: When I told him to get out of bed and not to be too inactive, and not to surrender to a thought like that. But to him it was real.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Can you remember the date?

P. O’RYAN: It would have been very shortly after - I would say it was in December.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: December?

P. O’RYAN: 1965 already.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: On how many occasions did the accused tell you about this so-called worm?

P. O’RYAN: Very very frequently.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Very very frequently?

P. O’RYAN: It became common in the home, so much so that the remedy they used for him, well, there was quite a quantity of it in the home already.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You made a statement to the Police on the 17th September 1966, is that correct?

P. O’RYAN: Most probably. Yes, the date must be.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You can have a look at the statement?

P. O’RYAN: I did make a statement. Correct.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Why didn’t you mention anything about this worm to the Police in your statement?

P. O’RYAN: The Police mentioned, number one, that that was not necessary, I must just leave it.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: So you say that you mentioned this worm to the Police?

P. O’RYAN: Yes. Not necessary, they mentioned. And I also made a statement about this treatment, and the Police said it is common in the papers.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: This gentleman here, Mr. Troost, (pointed out) took the statement, not so?

P. O’RYAN: That is right.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: So you tell me that you told Mr. Troost about this worm?

P. O’RYAN: Yes, I said he mentioned the worm.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And Mr. Troost said it was not necessary to make any mention of it?

P. O’RYAN: No, he just brushed it away.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What exactly did you say to Mr. Troost?

P. O’RYAN: I just said he mentioned the worm and also the third degree.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Just give us your exact words that you used to Mr. Troost?

P. O’RYAN: Mr. Troost spoke to me in the form of questions, which I answered, but in between I mentioned these two things that I noted were not noted.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You told Mr. Troost that this man has on many occasions mentioned to you...

P. O’RYAN: No, no, I did not say on many occasions.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What exactly did you say to Mr. Troost?

P. O’RYAN: I said he mentioned a worm, and the brainwashing.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What did Mr. Troost say to that?

P. O’RYAN: Well, in writing - he just continued to write and...

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: So in spite of the fact that you mentioned something about the worm, he did not take that down in writing?

P. O’RYAN: No.

JUDGE BEYERS: Am I going to be allowed to see that statement?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Certainly my lord.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: With respect, I don’t think your lordship can read it. It must be put to this witness first of all, and say that he made this statement and he admits the contents.

JUDGE BEYERS: I thought that he had admitted.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: He admits that he has made a statement, but he has not identified this statement yet.

JUDGE BEYERS: It is not all that important. (Statement not read by the Court).

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you say in this statement - I quote what is written down in this statement: “He (that is the accused) stayed with me for approximately 3 months, 2 weeks of which he stayed at Poggenpoel, but afterwards returned to me?”

P. O’RYAN: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: “He read the newspaper and it was apparent that he was against the state policy of both South Africa and Portugal.” Did you say that?

P. O’RYAN: Yes

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: “He made the impression with me that he was favourable towards the Coloureds and he repeatedly applied to be classified as a Coloured.” Did you say that?

P. O’RYAN: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: “He said that he had a blank identity card, in other words his race was not recorded on it.”?

P. O’RYAN: That is correct.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: “He labelled the apartheid policies as unfair”?

P. O’RYAN: Yes

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: “His reasoning was not very intelligent”?

P. O’RYAN: Correct.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Is that right?

P. O’RYAN: That is right, yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: “I did not encourage him, because we advocate the Biblical idea of subservience to a Government.” Is that right?

P. O’RYAN: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: I will not be much longer you honour.

JUDGE BEYERS: You are not boring me. I am quiet interested.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: “His spiritual view seemed confused, but he was not spiritually or mentally disturbed.” You said that?

P. O’RYAN: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: “On the contrary, even though I did not consider him to be particularly intelligent, he was well spoken and had good vocabulary”?

P. O’RYAN: That is right.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you say that?

P. O’RYAN: Yes

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: “I never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind”?

P. O’RYAN: That is correct, yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you say that?

P. O’RYAN: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Why then did you not say anything about the worm in the statement?

P. O’RYAN: It was so commonplace, most likely, that I did not want to draw any more attention to it. I only mention it casually.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You said you told Mr. Troost?

P. O’RYAN: Casually, yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You told him about the worm?

P. O’RYAN: Yes.

COMMENTS ON THE CROSS-EXAMINATION

The most important aspect of the cross-examination is that van den Berg, for the first time, challenged a witness on the basis of evidence given in a statement to the police. This suggests that the Attorney-General was given at least some witness statements and probably would have challenged the other witnesses, too, if he had the relevant statements. Still, though he challenged O’Ryan with questions which anyone could have asked, he did not do enough to break down his testimony.

An obvious question would have been, how was it that O’Ryan “never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind” when he heard Tsafendas talking about the tapeworm? Could anybody hear a man say he had a greedy tapeworm in his stomach and believe such a man to be sane?

The tapeworm creates a paradoxical situation: although Tsafendas does not talk about the worm to the Daniels family, they think he is insane; however, he does speak to O’Ryan about it and he believes that he is perfectly sane. O’Ryan lived for five months with Tsafendas in the same house and they then kept in regular touch for another year. The Daniels family spent some time with Tsafendas, though not in the same house, over forty-two days, then never saw him again. How is this dichotomy resolved? Both were asked by the defence to “exaggerate” some stories suggesting Tsafendas was strange, in particular to mention the tapeworm. O’Ryan had not spoken of it to the police, indeed had said Tsafendas was perfectly sane, therefore he could not now change. However, since he and his wife were the only witness who was aware of the worm, the defence used them to strengthen this angle.

The most important of the questions asked by the Attorney-General was why O’Ryan did not tell the police about the tapeworm, since Tsafendas spoke so frequently about it? O’Ryan seems a little unsure about what to say. He replied that he mentioned it “causally” and Sgt. Troost, the policeman who took the statement, did not write it down. O’Ryan did not comment about this particular incident to the two priests or to Liza Key, but he did state that he had not told the police about the tapeworm. The obvious conclusion is that he lied in court when he said he mentioned it “casually.” Very likely he thought that the policeman would probably not remember whether he had said it or not.

However, since Sgt. Troost was present in the trial and was pointed out by the Attorney-General, he could have been asked whether he remembered O’Ryan mentioning it.

In addition, it seems that O’Ryan is aware that there is nothing about the tapeworm in his statement as he stated that Troost “just continued to write.” O’Ryan could not have been in position to know what Troost was writing, unless he was asked specifically about something he had just said and Troost wanted a clarification. Therefore, he was not in condition to know whether it was written or not, unless he was given to read the statement in the end, as Troost had had done with all the statements he took. It is possible that O’Ryan did not bother at the time reading his statement as some of the witnesses did not. In this case, he would not have been able to know whether it was written or not. On the other hand, if he had read the statement, he would have seen that the tapeworm is not there, so he could have told Sgt. Troost that he forgot to include it.

O’Ryan was asked whether Tsafendas was sponging on him and he answered in an ambivalent fashion, that “quite a few friends of mine told me that, but I believe in hospitality so I overlooked it.” The author is not in position to know how O’Ryan really felt, however his two sons are positive that their father did not believe Tsafendas was sponging on him. On the contrary, they said their dad was often embarrassed because Tsafendas brought food to the house and toys and sweets for the children. When O’Ryan asked Tsafendas not to do this because he thought it made him look bad, Tsafendas continued to bring food and sweets but told the children they were bought by their dad and himself. Young Reuben O’Ryan said about Tsafendas, “We all loved him ... he was an adorable man ... he was the answer to our prayers. We were poor and he brought food to our house.”²⁵¹³

The Attorney-General’s above question also supported the defence’s line and not the State’s, so it is a strange kind of question. This was the sort of question you would have expected from the Defence Counsel and not from the Attorney-General. The Defence was trying to prove that Tsafendas was the kind of helpless man who was taking advantages of others and the State was supposedly trying to prove otherwise. This question only helped the defence.

O’Ryan’s statement to the police that Tsafendas was “favourable towards the Coloureds and he repeatedly applied to be classified as a Coloured” contradicts Dr. Cooper’s testimony from the previous day when he said that Tsafendas was unsympathetic towards Coloureds. In addition, through the cross-examination we also hear for the first and last time in the court, Tsafendas’s real political ideas: that he was “against the state policy of both ²⁵¹³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

South Africa and Portugal” and “labelled the apartheid policies as unfair” - again in contradiction to Dr. Cooper’s testimony. Importantly, these statements are not from a witness’s courtroom testimony, but from a witness’s statement to the police.

CONCLUSION

Patrick O’Ryan was the defence’s main witness with regard to the tapeworm and spoke extensively about it, although he also stated clearly that he “never actually doubted his (Tsafendas’s) mental state.” How is it possible to believe that a person who claims to host a massive and voracious tapeworm is sane? The fact is O’Ryan had already told the police in his statement that he believed Tsafendas “was not spiritually or mentally disturbed ... I never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind”,²⁵¹⁴ therefore he could not go back on this position in court. He spoke about the tapeworm because he was asked to do so by advocate Cooper since he was the only defence witness who was aware of it.

The fact that O’Ryan did not tell the police about the tapeworm, although it was so important to Tsafendas, was raised by the Attorney-General. O’Ryan replied that he had mentioned the tapeworm but the policeman taking his statement brushed it aside. O’Ryan later claimed that he had not told the police about it and then spoke openly about it in court because he had been told by advocate Copper that this was the only way to “get him free.” In reality, as O’Ryan himself admitted to the priests and as Tsafendas had already told them, he was aware that the tapeworm was a fiction which Tsafendas had used in the past to stop the Portuguese torturing him. O’Ryan knew the origin of the tapeworm story and he could have become aware of it only from Tsafendas himself.

It is not surprising that O’Ryan lied to the court since, as he admitted in his testimony, he had taken a “deep liking” to Tsafendas, whom he considered to be a kind person with a good heart, his best friend and the kindest person he ever met. Upon hearing of Tsafendas’s death, O’Ryan and his wife bought airline tickets at short notice and flew to the funeral at Sterkfontein, his only friends to do so. This must have involved financial sacrifice for a poor man and testified to the genuine affection that existed between them.

It is important to note that the Attorney-General’s intervention was the first time he used a statement taken by the police to challenge a defence witness’s testimony. This suggests that the police gave him at least some of the witness statements, raising the likelihood that if he was in possession of all the statements, he might have challenged other witnesses, too. That he reads extracts aloud confirms that the police did indeed take a statement from O’Ryan, something that might have raised doubts because no statement by Patrick O’Ryan was found in the National Archives. Accordingly, we are not in position to know its contents, apart from the excerpts read out in court. By reading out parts of the statement, the court heard, for the first and last time, Tsafendas’s real political ideas: he was “against the state policy of both South Africa and Portugal” and “labelled the apartheid policies as unfair.”

²⁵¹⁴ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

Patrick O’Ryan’s testimony would play an important role in Judge Beyers’s verdict, though the judge seemed to have poor recall of part of it. Judge Beyers stated, “I should also mention, briefly, that the ordinary people, the ordinary everyday people with whom he (Tsafendas) came into contact did not take long before they could see that this man was mentally affected... It was obvious to O’Ryan and his wife.” While O’Ryan might have testified to the lunacy of the tapeworm, he did not state that Tsafendas was mentally affected. On the contrary, he said clearly “I never actually doubted his mental state, since to me he had a mind that the majority of people have.” The court also heard O’Ryan’s statement to the police where he said that Tsafendas “was not spiritually or mentally disturbed ... I never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind.”²⁵¹⁵ This the judge also seems to have overlooked.

²⁵¹⁵ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 7: LOUISA O’RYAN

INTRODUCTION

Louisa O’Ryan, Patrick O’Ryan’s wife, was urged by defence advocate Cooper to highlight the tapeworm in her evidence. However, unlike her husband, she was under the impression that the worm was real. Patrick had joked that Tsafendas’s voracious appetite was caused by a tapeworm.²⁵¹⁶ She replied, “That figures!” However, Patrick did not tell her about Tom Tuff and that the tapeworm was imaginary and he joked with Tsafendas about it.²⁵¹⁷ Tsafendas himself built a good relationship with Louisa because she sympathized with his “problem,” unaware it was all a fiction.²⁵¹⁸

LOUISA O’RYAN’S TESTIMONY²⁵¹⁹

L. O’RYAN’S FIRST ENCOUNTER WITH TSAFENDAS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Do you know the accused?

L. O’RYAN: I know Demitrio.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where did you meet him for the first time?

L. O’RYAN: At our convention in Durbanville.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did he behave on that occasion?

L. O’RYAN: Well, quite normal.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you hear him speak?

L. O’RYAN: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he preach?

L. O’RYAN: Well, not actually preach. We just each give our testimony.

²⁵¹⁶ For more about the incident see Chapter 2.

²⁵¹⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁵¹⁸ Louisa O’Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

²⁵¹⁹ Louisa O’Ryan’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did he give his testimony?

L. O’RYAN: Well, he started off with the way he got away from Cape Town half a century ago, or a quarter century he mentioned, and then how he got on to the boat, peeling potatoes. Then he spoke a little of his travels, and then he cited a verse in the Bible, but I could not sort of get a grasp of what he was trying to explain at the time.

ASSESSOR: You mean the verse had no relation to what he was talking about?

L. O’RYAN: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: But after this convention he came to live at your house, did he?

L. O’RYAN: Yes.

THE TAPEWORM

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he ever discuss any of his complaints with you?

L. O’RYAN: Well, he spoke to me about his stomach, and he explained to me that it was because of a tapeworm which was an inch and a half wide, and he told me that a while back, when he was a little boy, about six feet of it came down. The doctor gave him something and six feet of it came down. He was sitting on a bucket. And then he fainted on the bucket, and his mother removed it and she destroyed it, and since then nothing has ever come down.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he speak often about this worm?

L. O’RYAN: Quite often he spoke to me.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did he call this worm?

L. O’RYAN: He called it a snake, or a demon.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he tell you whether it moved, or what it did inside him?

L. O’RYAN: He told me that this snake, or this worn, sort of cones up at night and then it sort of hunts for food. He seemed that it put it down that way, that it hunts for food late at night while he was asleep; it sort of woke him up; and this thing was hunting for food.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he ever ask for food for this worm?

L. O’RYAN: Yes, he asked me quite a few times if he could just have a piece of bread to feed the worn.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he take medicine for this worm?

L. O’RYAN: He took medicine. He once went to the Groote Schuur Hospital, and then he went again to the Foreshore to the Medical Centre there and they gave him a bottle of white stuff, I think it was some sort of a line mixture.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was he very energetic?

L. O’RYAN: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did he do?

L. O’RYAN: Well, he told me that in spite of his big body he always felt tired, and he reckoned that it was the worm, because of the worm sort of devouring the food that his body should have.

JUDGE BEYERS: A most wonderful worm. You don’t have to work, and you eat at night in order to feed him. One of the best pets I have heard of. Anyway, he can’t work because of the worm, but the worm has got to be fed.

NO CROSS-EXAMINATION TOOK PLACE

COMMENTS ON L. O’RYAN’S TESTIMONY

Louisa refers to Tsafendas’s mother, but she means his step-mother. She was aware that Tsafendas had lived with his birth mother for about only eighteen months. Tsafendas referred to Marika as “mother,” and not as step-mother. As far as the author can establish, he only referred to Marika as step-mother in his statements to the police. As stated before, several witnesses interviewed by the author stated that he referred to Marika as his mother, not his stepmother.

What is important here is the story Louisa O’Ryan tells about the origin of the tapeworm. It is this story that would be remembered afterwards. According to Louisa, Tsafendas told her that his (step) mother removed six feet of tapeworm which Tsafendas excreted as a boy and destroyed it. Tsafendas does not mention anything about witchcraft, as he did with Dr. Cooper and with Dr. Sakinofsky. According to Louisa, Tsafendas was a “little boy” when it happened, not a teenager as claimed by Dr. Cooper and Dr. Muller. Dr. Cooper has stated that it was in 1935 or 1936, while Dr. Muller had stated that it was after 1936.²⁵²⁰ In 1935 and 1936, Tsafendas was seventeen and eighteen, not a little boy. No-one noticed this and it was left unchallenged.

However, it is highly significant that Tsafendas’s (step) mother, Marika, in her testimony to the Commission, flatly denied that such an event ever took place and swore that she never heard about the tapeworm until now. Exactly the same thing was stated to the Commission by the rest of the family.²⁵²¹ Katerina Pnema, Tsafendas’s half-sister, had never heard Tsafendas say anything about a tapeworm and did not remember such an incident taking place, but upon reading about it, she asked her mother to double-check it.²⁵²² Marika denied all knowledge of the incident and of the worm and told her daughter that Tsafendas was making it up. Fotini Gavasiadis’s brother, Nick Vlachopoulos was married to Helen Tsafantakis, another of Tsafendas’s half-sisters. She and other long-time family members and friends all questioned Tsafendas’s step-mother and she gave them the same answer as she gave to the Commission: “It never happened.”²⁵²³

Ira Kyriakakis, who had grown up with Tsafendas and Mary Eintracht who was his cousin and had also grown up with him were certain that he had made it up as they were extremely close to him at the time the alleged incident took place as he never told them anything about it and they were both certain that he would have told them if such thing had happened. Still though, they both asked Marika who once again denied that this story ever took place. Throughout her life, Marika vigorously denied that such a thing ever happened and insisted that Tsafendas had made it up.²⁵²⁴ As for Louisa O’Ryan, despite her belief in the reality of the tapeworm, she strongly believed that Tsafendas was perfectly sane.²⁵²⁵

²⁵²⁰ Dr. Harold Cooper’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA; Dr. Hendrik Muller’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²⁵²¹ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

²⁵²² Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²⁵²³ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

²⁵²⁴ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

²⁵²⁵ Louisa O’ Ryan in A question of Madness; Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Stanley O’Ryan in a personal interview with the author, 9 April 2015.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 8: OWEN SMORENBERG

INTRODUCTION

Owen Smorenberg was an important witness for the defence. Although he knew Tsafendas for only five or six weeks, he was chosen to testify rather than others who had known him or lived with him for many months. Smorenberg was questioned by the police on October 6, 1966 and his statement is available in the previous chapter.

EXTRACTS FROM OWEN SMORENBERG’S TESTIMONY²⁵²⁶

MEETING TSAFENDAS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is your occupation?

SMORENBERG: I am employed as maintenance foreman at the Cape Town City Council Power Station.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And for how long have you been working there?

SMORENBERG: Eight years.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Do you know the accused?

SMORENBERG: Yes I know him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When did you meet him for the first time?

SMORENBERG: He came to work for us as a fitter on the 13th September, 1965.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: But how long did he stay with you?

SMORENBERG: Approximately six weeks.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: During this period did you work with him?

SMORENBERG: Yes, I did work with him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What kind of work did he have to do?

SMORENBERG: Mainly rough engineering. Fitting.

²⁵²⁶ Owen Smorenberg’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you have to check his work?

SMORENBERG: Yes, every day.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The work that he had to do, was it difficult work? Was it involved work?

SMORENBERG: Not really. I would say it is the easiest type of fitting that there is.

JUDGE BEYERS: Was he taken on as a fitter or as a labourer?

SMORENBERG: As a fitter.

JUDGE BEYERS: Did he claim to "be a fitter?

SMORENBERG: He claims to be a fitter, yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: Did he have papers?

SMORENBERG: That I couldn't say. I never employed him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was the type of work that he was doing? Rough engineering work?

SMORENBERG: Rough engineering fitting.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was your first impression about Tsafendas?

SMORENBERG: The first impression was that he was a friendly type of man.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he talk freely with you?

SMORENBERG: Fairly freely.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Had he travelled extensively?

SMORENBERG: He claimed to have travelled extensively, yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he form any close friendship with any person on the job?

SMORENBERG: Not really. Perhaps myself, and maybe one other fellow. We were about the friendliest with him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was that a close friendship?

SMORENBERG: Not really.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he claim that he could speak more than one language?

SMORENBERG: He did claim so, and I actually heard him speak in more than one language.

COMMENTS ON SMORENBERG'S ABOVE TESTIMONY

Smorenberg was called as a defence witness rather than many who knew Tsafendas longer and better. He worked with Tsafendas for six weeks one year before the assassination (although he said five weeks in his statement to the police twelve days earlier) and he described their relationship as “not really” close. However, not one of Tsafendas’s Parliamentary messenger colleagues was asked to testify when they worked with him a year later, just before the assassination, and for the same length of time. The choice of Smorenberg is understandable since he was the only one of the one hundred and fifty or so witnesses questioned by the police who could support specific aspects of the defence’s line. Precisely why Smorenberg was chosen we will see shortly.

TSAFENDAS AND THE COLOURED PEOPLE

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did he like Coloured people?

SMORENBERG: The impression I got is that he didn’t like them.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Why did you get that impression? Was there an incident that you can relate?

SMORENBERG: Yes. There are one or two incidents. The first time, they normally have a labourer working with them, and on this particular occasion the labourer had come to complain that he did not wish to work with the fitter any longer. I asked why, so he said that when he offered him a little bit of advice the fitter had turned round and told him that he is the boss on the job and he is not taking any advice or any backchat whatsoever from any Coloured.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Any other incident that you can recall?

SMORENBERG: Yes, the second time that I formed an opinion that he didn’t like them was the statement he had made to me while we were working down at the Docks.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was the occasion? What were you working on?

SMORENBERG: We have down at the Docks a cooling water intake for the Power station. We have gone down there to do some overhaul work, and we were about 40 feet down in the ground.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is it like down there?

SMORENBERG: It is quite a big tunnel. It reminds one of, shall we say, a 15th century castle, the torture chambers or the dungeons. It is dripping with water, and quite dirty and dark. It is generally an eerie place. We had gone down there to do some work, and while we were working I said to him jokingly that this is a good place for Mr. Vorster to keep his political prisoners, to which he replied, and I was quite shocked at the time - I suppose I generally didn't expect any political conversation from him - he replied "Yes, they should put them all down here; in fact they should put all the Coloureds here, open the doors and drown the lot."

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In what tone of voice did he make this remark?

SMORENBERG: Well, it wasn't sort of overbearing; it was just as a sort of general discussion.

COMMENTS ON SMORENBERG'S IMPRESSION THAT TSAFENDAS DID NOT LIKE THE COLOURED PEOPLE

Of the many absurd statements about Tsafendas that were heard during the summary trial, Smorenberg's remarks regarding Tsafendas's attitude to Coloured people are the hardest to comprehend. They stretch belief to breaking point, but even if they are true, and the author has no way to be certain, mountains of evidence is available to demonstrate that they do not represent Tsafendas's true feelings. Out of the about two hundred people who were questioned by the police and the Commission and the seventy-one the author has interviewed, not one said anything that would support Smorenberg's claims. Indeed witnesses stated the exact opposite:

- Perhaps the most decisive refutation is the fact that Tsafendas applied to be classified as Coloured himself, hardly the act of a man who did not like such people. Furthermore, Tsafendas had given as one of the reasons for his application the fact that he regarded himself as a Coloured.²⁵²⁷
- For five months, Tsafendas lived with the Coloured family of Patrick O'Ryan, who testified before Smorenberg that Tsafendas was "favourable towards the Coloureds and ²⁵²⁷ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 39.

he repeatedly applied to be classified as a Coloured.”²⁵²⁸

- Jacobus Bornman, Tsafendas’s flatmate for three months in Pretoria in 1965, testified to the police that Tsafendas “stood up a lot for the Coloureds.”²⁵²⁹
- Col. McIntyre of the South African police wrote in a report dated October 3 that Tsafendas told “several people that he was upset because he was not classified as a Coloured.”²⁵³⁰
- Albert Vercoueil, who was Tsafendas’s supervisor for five months at F. A. Poole in Pretoria, told the police that Tsafendas “bullied the other Portuguese workers (and) had fights with several White workers,”²⁵³¹ but he never argued with Black workers.²⁵³²
- According to Inspector Horacio Ferreira of the Portuguese Security Police in Mozambique, Tsafendas was “intense anti-white” and told him that “the Portuguese Government has never done anything for their non-Whites.”²⁵³³
- Keith Martincich said Tsafendas told him that “Coloureds were better than the Europeans”²⁵³⁴
- Jose Baltazar testified that when Tsafendas “was in the presence of whites, he said little or nothing, but was friendly and talkative with the Bantu. On one or two occasions Tsafendas, while talking with Bantu, stopped talking when he approached.”²⁵³⁵
- Gladstone Dunn said Tsafendas told him that the South African Government “was not playing fair with the non-whites. He said that the wages paid to non-whites were very unsatisfactory, as well as the political situation.”²⁵³⁶ Tsafendas himself was classified White, so why would he care about mistreatment of Blacks, especially if he was said not ²⁵²⁸ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²⁵²⁹ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵³⁰ ‘The history of the person who inflicted the fatal wounds to the late Dr. Verwoerd’ drafted by Col. McIntyre, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Subject: Leer W.D. 10/10/4102 der Stafendas. NASA.

²⁵³¹ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁵³² Albert Vercual statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵³³ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁵³⁴ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵³⁵ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁵³⁶ Gladstone Dunn statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

to like them?

- Meldon Tillek testified that Tsafendas told him that “the white people always looked down on him and that consequently he felt more at home amongst Coloured people.”²⁵³⁷
- Ralph Lighton who had worked with Tsafendas for 9-10 weeks testified that Tsafendas “used to mix with the Coloureds rather than with the Europeans.”²⁵³⁸
- Nikolaas Nel: Tsafendas “was certainly unpopular among white workers” and “adapted more to the non-whites.”²⁵³⁹
- Elizabeth Groves was Tsafendas’s landlady for six or seven weeks and a retired psychiatric nurse. About Tsafendas she said, “I received complaints that he was argumentative and towards me he said that we Afrikaners are a backward nation. It was clear that he had nothing good towards Afrikaners.”²⁵⁴⁰
- Peter Daniels testified to the court only minutes before Smorenberg that Tsafendas “preferred to be amongst the Coloured community” and that “he would like to be among the Coloured community, make himself a Coloured man.”²⁵⁴¹
- Keith Martincich testified to the police that Tsafendas “said the coloureds were better than the Europeans. He said they were more friendly, and had more sense than the Europeans, and showed more understanding. When I said he was talking nonsense, he got cross and lifted himself as though he wanted to tackle me ... I noticed that he was very familiar with the coloured crew on the boat, about which I reprimanded him.”²⁵⁴²

The author read Smorenberg’s court statement to forty-six people who knew Tsafendas very well, such as Tsafendas’s half-sister Katerina Pnema, Fotini Gavasiadis, the three priests who visited him in hospital and in prison, Costas Poriadis, Mary Eintracht, Allan O’Ryan, Reuben O’Ryan, Andreas Babiolakis, Nick Papadakis, Helen Grispos, Ira Kyriakakis, Father Nikola Banovic and to thirteen of the Eleni crew who were with him for forty-two days prior to the assassination. Every one of the above witnesses believes that ²⁵³⁷ Meldon Tillek statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵³⁸ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵³⁹ Nikolaas Jacobus Nel statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁴⁰ Elizabeth Magdalene Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁵⁴¹ Peter Daniels testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²⁵⁴² Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Smorenberg's statement is either a lie or a false impression. Several of them simply laughed when they heard what Smorenberg said.

These are some of the responses from people who knew Tsafendas best:

- Katerina Pnema said Smorenberg “does not know what he is talking about. Dimitri always defended the Coloureds and the Blacks from the Whites. He was fired from jobs because he supported them.”²⁵⁴³
- Fotini Gavasiadis called the statement “ridiculous,” stating that Tsafendas was “the exact opposite.”²⁵⁴⁴
- Mary Eintracht said she was completely surprised to hear such a statement. “Are you serious? I never heard that. It can't be true. No one would have said that about Dimitri.”²⁵⁴⁵
- Andreas Babiolakis said, “These people [Dr. Cooper and Smorenberg] must have been hallucinating, not Dimitri, if this is what they said about him.”²⁵⁴⁶
- Ira Kyriakakis told the author that Tsafendas was “an idealist. He was very passionate about politics; he despised racism and colonialism and wanted Mozambique to get rid of the Portuguese; he was very strong in favour of Mozambique's independence.”²⁵⁴⁷
- Michalis Vasilakis said Dr. Cooper's statement was “one of the biggest nonsense I have heard in my life.”²⁵⁴⁸

We should also remember that Tsafendas lived not only with the O'Ryan family but in the same house as other Coloured people such as Richard Poggenpoel and the Daniels family. He was willing to meet and consider marriage to the Coloured woman, Helen Daniels, while he also wanted to marry Sybie Barrendila a young lady of Coloured-Indian ancestry. His first serious relationship, which lasted for more than a year in the late 1930s, was with a Black Mozambican girl named Stella. Tsafendas described himself to the police as being against apartheid and in “sympathy with the people fighting racialism.”²⁵⁴⁹

David Bloomberg told the author that Tsafendas “felt Coloured, and he was more ²⁵⁴³ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²⁵⁴⁴ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

²⁵⁴⁵ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

²⁵⁴⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

²⁵⁴⁷ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

²⁵⁴⁸ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²⁵⁴⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

comfortable with the Coloured people, and he had been living with Coloured people in Cape Town.²⁵⁵⁰ Tsafendas also took some of the Eleni seamen to a township in Cape Town where Blacks lived in an effort to show them at first-hand how some people lived under apartheid. He had also urged the seamen to spend as little money as possible while in Cape Town in order not to contribute to South Africa's economy.²⁵⁵¹ Finally, Tsafendas got into a fight with Nick Vergos after he supported two Black workers who were exploited by Vergos.²⁵⁵² All these are hardly the attitudes of someone who was unsympathetic towards Coloureds.

It is not impossible that Tsafendas made the comments attributed to him by Smorenberg, but we do not know the background to the incident, whether Smorenberg may have misunderstood what happened or misheard what was said, or whether Tsafendas was being sarcastic or ironic, as he often was according to several witnesses the author interviewed. Alternatively, he might have said what he did because he simply did not want to argue with the Whites around him. What is a fact is that he was not antagonistic towards the Coloured community, indeed he was strongly opposed to apartheid as several witnesses testified. The Attorney-General could have used all the witness statements which were in the possession of the police, to challenge Smorenberg's comments, but he chose not to do so. For a more detailed account of Tsafendas's racial "preferences," see Dr. Cooper's testimony (the part: Being unsympathetic towards Coloureds and Natives) and his biography in Chapter 2.

REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S OPINION ABOUT VORSTER AND VERWOERD

²⁵⁵⁰ David Bloomberg in a personal interview, 6 April 2014.

²⁵⁵¹ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 5 August 2011; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²⁵⁵² Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 5 August 2011; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he make any comment on Mr. Vorster?

SMORENBERG: Yes. He said he thought that Mr. Vorster was the right type of man for the Minister of Justice's job. And he went on to say that he thought the Prime Minister was a clever man and he held the right position. In other words, he was the right man for the job as well.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And who was the Prime Minister then?

SMORENBERG: Dr. Verwoerd.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What impression did you get, was he a supporter of the Government or an opponent or a critic of the Government?

SMORENBERG: Well, I got the impression that he was a supporter.

COMMENTS ON SMORENBERG'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S OPINION ABOUT VORSTER AND VERWOERD

If Smorenberg's claim that Tsafendas disliked Coloured people was the most absurd statement made at the trial, then the second most absurd must be that he "got the impression" Tsafendas was a supporter of Dr. Verwoerd and his government. Both came from the same man, a man who stated that Tsafendas "never discussed politics with me."²⁵⁵³

It is possible that Tsafendas was being sarcastic, especially with his comment about Vorster. That he characterised him as "the right type of man" for the job does not mean that he agreed with or supported him. Indeed, it could have implied that Vorster's character was such that he was right for some sort of dirty work involving his responsibility for police and prison. Judging a person as the "right type of man" does not imply he is a "good type of man," merely that he has the appropriate skills for a designated task. It is like saying that Heinrich Himmler was the right type of man to orchestrate the Holocaust, meaning that he was able to do it because he was monstrously evil. Arguably, Himmler was indeed the right man for a job which could only be performed by a monster but which required administrative abilities, too. Jack the Ripper was also a monster but might not have been the "right type of man" to organise the Holocaust, but was obviously the "right type of man" to murder women.

As for the comment about Dr. Verwoerd, again the fact that Tsafendas described him as “clever” does not imply approval or even that he agreed with him. It is an objective statement. Someone may comment that Hitler was a vegetarian, but this would not be taken as a statement of support for Hitler.

²⁵⁵³ Owen Smorenburg statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Leer W.D. 10/10/ 4102 oor Stafendas. NASA.

Let us first look at what people told the police concerning Tsafendas’s opinion about Dr. Verwoerd and the government:

- Edward Furness testified that Tsafendas wanted to “create a resistance to the regime of South Africa and mentioned civil disobedience and anything that would get the South African regime out of power.”²⁵⁵⁴
- Kenneth Ross told the police that Tsafendas “was very fond of discussing politics and gave me the opinion that he was well versed in politics. Tsafendas objected to the Communists being banished to Robin Island [sic] because of their political opinions and actions. In general, Tsafendas opposed to every decision taken by the South African Government and freely voiced his opinion to me. He was blatantly opposed to the National Party policy, the policy of the present Government, and was definitely pro-Russian.”²⁵⁵⁵
- Patrick O’Ryan told the police that Tsafendas “was against the state policy of both South Africa and Portugal” and that he “labelled the apartheid policies as unfair.”²⁵⁵⁶ Later O’Ryan described Tsafendas as getting “excited” when he talked about politics and saying that Dr. Verwoerd was a tyrant who was oppressing his people, that he was ‘Hitler’s best student’ and if he (Tsafendas) ever get hold of him “he would bash his skull.” He did not tell the police about Dr. Verwoerd being a tyrant as he believed it would be bad for Tsafendas.²⁵⁵⁷
- Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren, a security officer at the Mandini Paper Factory in Zululand, told the police that Nick Vergos said Tsafendas “was not Greek, but a kaffir and a Communist.”²⁵⁵⁸

²⁵⁵⁴ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁵⁵ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁵⁶ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²⁵⁵⁷ Patrick O’Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁵⁵⁸ Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

- Robert Smith was a night clerk at the Durban Men's Home where Tsafendas stayed for two months in 1965. He testified that Tsafendas was a Communist, "a fanatic on politics and seldom spoke of anything else" and had described "United Party and National Party officials and members as capitalistic roughs." Tsafendas had told him that the "South African government's policy was 'rotten'" and often compared conditions in South Africa with those of Russia, stating, "Look at all the poor people in South Africa... such conditions don't exist in Russia because Russia is a Communistic state."²⁵⁵⁹
- Jacobus Bornman testified that Tsafendas "stood up a lot for the Coloureds" and "often criticised the South African government and seemed to have a grudge against Dr. Verwoerd."²⁵⁶⁰
- Albert Vercueil said Tsafendas told him, "You are like your bloody government, but I will get you, and I will get your Prime Minister too."²⁵⁶¹
- Johannes Botha, a security officer, told the police that Nick Vergos characterised Tsafendas in a remark to him as the "biggest Communist in the Republic of South Africa."²⁵⁶²
- Jan Johannes Albertus Fourie, a sergeant of the South African police, testified that Nick Vergos reported Tsafendas to him as "Communist bastard."²⁵⁶³
- Father Hanno Probst reported Tsafendas to a security officer as a "communist and a dangerous person."²⁵⁶⁴ He also suspected Tsafendas of being a political agitator, stirring up disaffection among young Blacks in the Mangete Reserve. "I say this because during the period Demetrios Tsafendas stayed at Mandini, the youngsters in the Mangete Reserve became unruly and aggressive. This, however, is only suspicion, because since the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd everything became quiet again and the youngsters

²⁵⁵⁹ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁶⁰ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁵⁶¹ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁶² Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁶³ Jan Johannes Albertus Fourie statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁶⁴ Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

controllable... He started swearing at the Mozambique government, saying it did nothing for the black people.”²⁵⁶⁵

- Roelof Swiegers testified that Tsafendas “leaned towards the communist side.”²⁵⁶⁶
- According to Inspector Horacio Ferreira, of the Portuguese Security Police in Mozambique, Tsafendas was “intense anti-White” and told him that “the Portuguese Government has never done anything for their non-Whites.”²⁵⁶⁷
- Keith Martincich testified that Tsafendas “on quite a few occasions he had discussed politics with me. He said he did not like the Government and that he was given a hard time in South Africa. He said the Government won’t reign very long.”²⁵⁶⁸
- Antony Maw testified that the Portuguese authorities in Mozambique did not allow Tsafendas to enter the country on grounds of suspected Communist tendencies.²⁵⁶⁹
- One day after the assassination, a secret telegram from the South African embassy in Lisbon informed the South African police that Tsafendas “has a criminal record in Mozambique, where he is said to have been arrested on several occasions after creating public disturbances, including shouting pro-Communist and anti-Portuguese slogans.”²⁵⁷⁰
- A report by of Col. van Wyk of the South African police characterised Tsafendas as being “intensely anti-white.”²⁵⁷¹
- Elizabeth Groves was Tsafendas’s landlady for six or seven weeks and a retired psychiatric nurse. About Tsafendas she said, “I received complaints that he was argumentative and towards me he said that we Afrikaners are a backward nation. It was clear that he had nothing good towards Afrikaners.”²⁵⁷²

²⁵⁶⁵ Father Hanno Probst statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁶⁶ Roelof Erasmus Swiegers statement to the police, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van vorm Z 204. NASA.

²⁵⁶⁷ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁵⁶⁸ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁶⁹ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub File: 1/8. NASA.

