²⁵⁷⁰ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Lisbon, to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁵⁷¹ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁵⁷² Elizabeth Magdalene Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

- A 1941 report from the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs said that Tsafendas was “dismissed from employment at a kiosk in Portuguese South Africa (Mozambique) on account of his Communist leanings.”²⁵⁷³
- Also, in July 1966, just two months before the assassination, Tsafendas gave a 75-minute interview to a reporter named N.D. Hartford of the Cape Argus. They had already met at the beginning of the year when Tsafendas came to the newspaper and enquired whether there was any news of the freedom fighters of Mozambique. He described himself as an “anti-Portuguese rebel and an antagonist of the Portuguese dictatorship.”²⁵⁷⁴ Hartford’s impression was that Tsafendas was normal; he had no reason to believe that he was mentally defective. According to Hartford, Tsafendas spoke fluently without any noticeable gaps in the conversation.²⁵⁷⁵

For a more detailed account of Tsafendas’s’ political ideas, see earlier in Dr. Cooper’s testimony regarding his motive killing Dr. Verwoerd.

More importantly, Tsafendas himself had told the police that he was “disgusted” with Dr. Verwoerd’s racial policies, that he did not believe he was the real representative of all South Africans and wanted to see a government that would represent all the South African people. He even said he had hoped that by killing him a “change of policy would take place.” The police also had in their possession photographs from the demonstrations in London where Tsafendas was holding a placard depicting a man in a Ku Klux Klan uniform and underneath it the words, Dr. Verwoerd and another one where he had pinned the Yellow Star of David to his coat.²⁵⁷⁶

²⁵⁷³ Report of the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, 14 October 1941. K150, Vol. 3, File: W.D. 10/10/4102. Subject: Enquiry regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis. NASA.

²⁵⁷⁴ The Cape Argus, ‘Brainwashed in Jail Held Man Told Argus.’ 7 September 1966: 3; Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 75.

²⁵⁷⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 75.

²⁵⁷⁶ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

Nick Vergos had characterised Tsafendas as the "biggest Communist in the Republic of South Africa,"²⁵⁷⁷ while Kenneth Ross,²⁵⁷⁸ Robert Smith, Roelof Swiegers²⁵⁷⁹ and many others testified that he was a Communist. Stronger language came from such witnesses as Cleanthes Alachiotis, Elias Constantaras, Nikolaos Billis, George Kantas, Nickolas Kambouris, Vasilis Perselis, Grigoris Pouftis and Michalis Vasilakis, all of whom testified to the police that Tsafendas considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant, a dictator, and "Hitler's best student," and that he made a spitting gesture at Verwoerd's picture.²⁵⁸⁰ As recently as a year ago, Father Probst and Nick Vergos reported Tsafendas as a dangerous Communist.²⁵⁸¹

All of this evidence was in the hands of the police, but none of it was used to challenge Smorenberg. If the Attorney General had challenged Smorenberg's "impressions" that Tsafendas supported Dr. Verwoerd and his government, the Attorney-General could have presented him as an unreliable witness since his testimony was plainly incompatible with evidence gathered by the police. However, it was perfectly compatible with the defence's case, of which it was an important part.

SOME "ODD INCIDENTS"

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was there any other incident which stands out in your mind as being odd?

SMORENBERG: From what point of view?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Just odd incidents. Things that you thought were strange conduct on the part of Tsafendas?

SMORENBERG: Regarding his conduct?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Yes?

²⁵⁷⁷ Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁷⁸ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁷⁹ Roelof Erasmus Swiegers statement to the police, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van vorm Z 204. NASA.

²⁵⁸⁰ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015; Nickolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

²⁵⁸¹ Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

SMORENBERG: Yes, there were one or two strange things about him. On one particular occasion he was required to change a fairly large pipe. These pipes are held together by 8 bolts. Normally speaking these bolts rust up. There is a lot of seawater there. When a set of bolts comes out we quite often replace them with new ones. On this occasion he had come to me with the bolts in his hand, and they were fairly badly rusted, and he asked me what he should do with them, to which I replied "Make out an order and get a new set from the stores." He went away, made the order out, drew the bolts, and about half an hour later I went on the job to check and I found the old bolts lying, I should say the new bolts lying to one side and he has replaced the old bolts. Well, I thought it was a bit strange to ask for new bolts and then put the old ones back DEFENCE COUNSEL: Time sheets - can you recall an incident in relation to time sheets which you considered to be strange?

SMORENBERG: Yes. Normally time sheets for the fitters in the section are made out on Monday morning, and that covers the work for the previous week. Any overtime that has been done is also entered on these time sheets. Except in the case where there is a public holiday which falls during the week, as was the case in October. The 10th of October was Kruger Day, which fell on a Sunday. Monday was automatically taken as a holiday, so therefore we were required to make these time sheets out earlier in the week. It was done on a Thursday.

It makes it a bit difficult, because you are then entering up time which they have not yet worked, such as the Thursday and Friday, I had made out the time sheets for the week and sent them on. On the Friday we had a fairly urgent job to do, and the fitters were required to work throughout their lunch hour, and they would therefore be paid overtime for this. I then went out and explained to them that the time sheets had already been sent in, and I could only enter the overtime up on the following week. Everybody seemed to be quite happy about it. There was a number of Coloureds on the job, as well as other fitters

When the next Thursday came and they went to get their pay he had come back and complained bitterly that he had been underpaid for half an hour.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Why did you think it was strange?

SMORENBERG: Well, I then went ahead and explained to him again. I said "I told you last week that you would have to wait an extra week before you get this money." But he could not quite grasp it. Eventually I had to take out a piece of chalk and a wooden board and sort of draw a long line and divide it up into seven days and explain from one week to the next week. The Coloureds understood quite easily the first time, but he had great difficulty in understanding why he had to wait an extra week for his money.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When you say "The Coloureds" are they labourers?

SMORENBERG: They are the labourers, yes.

COMMENTS REGARDING THE "ODD INCIDENTS"

Advocate Cooper appears determined to portray Tsafendas as acting strangely with regard to two apparently workaday situations, although Smorenberg is slow to understand his prodding. When Cooper mentions "Odd," Smorenberg asks, "From what point of view?" and when Cooper says "Just odd incidents," Smorenberg asks, "Regarding his conduct?" The first example of "strange conduct" involved eight rusted pipe bolts. Tsafendas asked Smorenberg what he should do about them and was told to draw new ones. Later, Smorenberg noted that Tsafendas had put the rusted bolts back while the new bolts were lying to one side. The second incident concerned overtime payments. In a week when there was a public holiday, as happened in this case, with Kruger Day on October 10, some overtime payments were delayed by a week. Tsafendas apparently failed to understand this and complained that he had been underpaid by a half-hour. Smorenberg said, "He had great difficulty in understanding why he had to wait an extra week for his money."

Neither of these incidents suggests anything stranger than the sort of back-and-forth and misunderstandings that take place in every workplace during a busy day. That Tsafendas put back the old bolts instead of the new ones could easily be an act of absent-mindedness. If he was unfamiliar with the overtime payments system, it seems natural that he would be suspicious and need the details explained to him. Neither of these incidents was mentioned by Smorenberg in his statement to the police made twelve days earlier. What might seem genuinely odd is that although the defence team had met ahead of the trial and Smorenberg knew what he would be asked, he seemed at a loss to find something strange about Tsafendas's conduct. Whatever difficulties Tsafendas may have had with the time sheets, Smorenberg later told the court that he found Tsafendas's intelligence to be "perhaps a little bit higher than normal," contradicting his own testimony a few minutes earlier which suggested that the accused was perhaps not very bright.

TSAFENDAS'S TRAVELS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he talk about various subjects?

SMORENBERG: Well, he quite often started to talk about his travels, but in a sense it was garbled. He would start off on something and then he would sort of go off at a tangent, and you could never get to the basic point that he was trying to get to. Invariably I used to just sort of lose patience and not even worry to listen.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you believe that he was shooting a line?

SMORENBERG: Yes, very much so.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You didn't believe his story?

SMORENBERG: Not particularly. One or two of them may have been true. He said he had been an engineer at sea, which could quite possibly have happened, but on the standard of his work, I doubt it very much.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How would you describe these stories that he told you?

SMORENBERG: Which stories? The travels?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Yes?

SMORENBERG: They seemed a bit farfetched. He mentioned that he had been in Canada, and that he had been to sea as an engineer. I can't remember them all. In fact, as I said earlier, I had given up hope afterwards of even bothering trying to remember.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was his favourite saying?

SMORENBERG: Well, he gave me the impression that he thought he had done very well for himself in the world. And on a number of occasions he said "I don't think I have done too badly for a poor Portuguese boy born in Lourenço Marques."

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is he married?

SMORENBERG: He told me that he was not.

TSAFENDAS'S STANDARD OF WORK

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was the standard of his work?

SMORENBERG: It was very poor.

JUDGE BEYERS: Was he a qualified fitter? Could you see when he was doing a job? Did he do a job like a fitter that requires knowledge and dexterity? When he was on the job, did he look like a fitter on the job, or what?

SMORENBERG: No, he looked more like a labourer, to be quite honest.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Why did Tsafendas leave his employment at the Power Station?

SMORENBERG: Well, we had given him notice; we had asked him - at least we told him that he was no longer required, we were going to fire him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did he react?

SMORENBERG: I wouldn't actually say violently, but tendencies towards that. He was very upset about it.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did he say?

SMORENBERG: He said he had worked all over the world, and then, when he came to a stupid place like the Cape Town City Council, they thought he wasn't good enough.
(Laughter).

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Do you think they were justified in terminating his employment?

SMORENBERG: Definitely.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Could he hold the job down?

SMORENBERG: No, he could not.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was it a difficult job? The work that you gave him, was it really difficult?

SMORENBERG: No. Quite often, if we have a breakdown and we have to get it going again, due to the fact that you must keep a constant power supply, quite often these labourers will go ahead and change a pipe for us. There may be a fitter around, but he will be on the second job. A labourer can manage quite easily.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And did the labourer in fact perform this type of work better than the accused did?

SMORENBERG: Yes, but that could possibly be because they had had more experience.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What was the salary of the accused?

SMORENBERG: Approximately £85 a month.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: £85 a month?

SMORENBERG: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Didn't he always complain that he was not adequately compensated for his work?

SMORENBERG: Yes, quite often.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: So he didn't regard £85 a month as sufficient?

SMORENBERG: No.

COMMENTS ON SMORENBERG'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S WORK STANDARDS

Smorenberg's testimony here supports Dr. Cooper's view that Tsafendas was not a good worker and that he was not capable of holding down a job. Several employers, supervisors and co-workers gave statements to the police about Tsafendas's work standards. Redvers Wakfer, who also worked at the same company, also told the police that Tsafendas's work was not good, saying. "I never worked with him but received a report that he was not a good worker and I have instructions that he should be dismissed."²⁵⁸²

The reasons why Tsafendas was not a good worker will be examined shortly. However, more than fifty former colleagues of Tsafendas were questioned by the police and no one complained about his work standards, including five of his colleagues at the Parliament. On the contrary, several testified that he was a good worker. For example:

- Johannes Aurets, Tsafendas's supervisor at the South African Railways, told the police Tsafendas "was a well-mannered and well-spoken person. He associated with those working with him. He was soft-spoken and appeared to be of a good nature. During the time he was employed under my supervision, i.e. for approximately three weeks, I did not see him being cross at any time. He was a good worker.”²⁵⁸³

²⁵⁸² Redvers Quintin Wakfer statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub File: 1/5, Subject Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

- Charles Woods, Tsafendas's supervisor at Fraser and Chalmers, characterised him as “a very good worker, far from being a crank, fairly intelligent, but a violent type.”²⁵⁸⁴
- Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden was senior security officer of the Colpontoon, diamond boat of Marine Diamond Corporation and worked with Tsafendas for around three months in 1966. He testified to the police that “we were transferred from the Marina with a small outboard boat to the Colpontoon. It was terrible rough seas, so much so that almost all of us old hands got seasick. It struck me that Tsafendas adapted well. He was one of the few who were not sick. With landing he filled the mess-basin on the lower deck with water and started shaving. His calm way struck me that he must know the sea. Tsafendas was employed as a pump- or engineer operator and did not work under my direct supervision. I introduced myself to him and talked to him. He was friendly, outgoing, and was not aloof. I noticed that his eating was messy. Otherwise he was completely normal.”²⁵⁸⁵
- Garnet Muller, Tsafendas's supervisor at South African Railways for three weeks, testified that Tsafendas gave him to understand that he took the job on a temporary basis. He “observed Demitrio Tsafendas to possess intelligence above that of the average person who is likely to accept a position with the little responsibility which is attached to that of shed attendant.”²⁵⁸⁶
- Cornelius Rudolph, the head court interpreter on the staff of the Magistrate of Durban was approached by Tsafendas offering his services as a Portuguese or Greek interpreter. Tsafendas “was in the habit of regularly reporting two or three times a week to ask whether there is any interpretation work.” Eventually, Rudolph used him “on several occasions” in a period of six months and “got to know him pretty well.” He testified that “I spoke with him several times, he seemed to be a normal person and intelligent. He spoke English properly.”²⁵⁸⁷

²⁵⁸³ Johannes Jaconus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁸⁴ The Cape Times, ‘Tsafendas in Brawl in Canteen’, 9 September 1966: 15.

²⁵⁸⁵ Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden statement to the police, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁸⁶ Garnet Vincent Muller statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁸⁷ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

- Albert Vercueil, Tsafendas's boss at F. A. Poole in Pretoria, said that in the five months he worked with Tsafendas, he found him to be "not a very good worker, but will say that he was an intelligent worker."²⁵⁸⁸ He also testified to the Commission of Enquiry that he considered Tsafendas to be "an intelligent man, just untidy and lazy in rounding off his work." He said Tsafendas was a very friendly, social and talkative person but he was always looking to quarrel with the White workers. Mr. Vercueil would usually receive complaints from the other (White) foremen, but never from the black workers. He never got the impression that Mr. Tsafendas wasn't right in his mind. F.A. Poole moved from their warehouse and Mr. Tsafendas was tasked with organizing the move and he handled it effortlessly.²⁵⁸⁹
- Ralph Lighton, who worked with Tsafendas for 9-10 weeks at Marine Diamond Corporation testified to the police that he "never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers."²⁵⁹⁰
- Horst Hartmann, Tsafendas's employer at the heavy engineering company, Fries and Son, in Frankfurt, Germany, described Tsafendas as "extremely nice and friendly ... I thought he was more likely to apply for an executive job than as a welder. He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman. Well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous, a very pleasant man... he made a good impression and he spoke good German, so I took him on... we liked him ... always laughing, a good worker." Tsafendas "left on his own wish" although Hartmann "would have liked to keep him."²⁵⁹¹ Tsafendas received a reference from Fries and Son, which he used, with other recommendations, to get his job in the Parliament.

²⁵⁸⁸ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁵⁸⁹ Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁹⁰ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁹¹ Daily Dispatch, 'He Made A Good Impression', 8 September 1966: 1; Daily Express, 'The Assassin', 8 September 1966: 2; Natal Witness, 'Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...', 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 'Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte', 8 September 1966.

As to holding down a job, Tsafendas worked for five to six months as a teacher in Istanbul in 1961. He resigned of his own accord and received a warm reference from his employer, Mr. Limasollu Naci. Mrs. Advie Vedia Limasollu, Limasollu's widow said her husband would not have kept anyone at his college if they were no good.²⁵⁹² He also worked for almost two years (May 1940-April 1942) as a welder with the British Mining Supply Company in Johannesburg,²⁵⁹³ for two years (1936-1939) at the Imperial Airways factory in Quilemane,²⁵⁹⁴ and six years (1933-1939) at the "Vulcan Iron Works," General Engineers.²⁵⁹⁵

Tsafendas worked voluntarily as a teacher of English to children in both Istanbul and in Lourenço Marques and was hired several times in Durban for interpreting work. His record suggests that Tsafendas was keen to work and that when he enjoyed the job and found the environment congenial, he worked well; but his work was questionable when he was not happy with working conditions. Since, as Smorenberg testified, Tsafendas considered the wages at the power station to be insufficient, it is unsurprising that he was not enthusiastic about the job. For more about Tsafendas's work abilities see Dr. Cooper's testimony, "unable to function on a reasonable level-employment."

All of this evidence, that he Tsafendas was a good worker when he liked the job and a poor one when he did not, was held by the police, but again it was not used to challenge Smorenberg's testimony.

TSAFENDAS'S MENTAL STATE AND HIS RELATIONSHIP WITH HIS COLLEAGUES

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did you think of his mental state?

SMORENBERG: Well, I wouldn't say he is mad, but he seems a little bit barmy.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he fit in?

²⁵⁹² Advie Vedia Limasollu in a personal interview, 8 January 2016.

²⁵⁹³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁵⁹⁴ Marika Tsafantakis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁵⁹⁵ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkoperij. NASA; Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

SMORENBERG: No. He was not the type to fit in with the boys. He always seemed to be excluded from everything. If you saw him, you would see him sitting by himself. Although he did on a number of occasions try to strike up conversation with people.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: But the other people didn't fancy him?

SMORENBERG: Didn't take to him, no.

COMMENTS ON SMORENBERG'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S MENTAL STATE AND HIS RELATIONSHIP WITH HIS COLLEAGUES

Smorenberg here claims that Tsafendas seemed "a little bit barmy," although clearly not "mad." What is important about this comment is not Smorenberg's opinion, and it is only his opinion, but the fact that it was regarded by Judge Beyers as a convincing sign of Tsafendas's insanity. However, consider how Judge Beyers twisted Smorenberg's words in his verdict. He said: "One of the strongest pieces of evidence in this case is that of Mr. Smorenberg, a down-to-earth foreman. I shall not forget that when he was asked: 'What did you think of this man?' his answer was: 'I don't like to call any man mad, but he is definitely barmy.'" However, Smorenberg did not say that. What he said was, "Well, I wouldn't say he is mad, but he seems a little bit barmy."

As for Tsafendas not fitting in with the boys and his co-workers not fancying him, there could be many reasons for this. It did not happen at all his jobs and many former colleagues and superiors testified about him in favourable terms. These included, as mentioned above, Johannes Aurets, Cornelius Rudolph, Charles Woods and Horst Hartman. Aurets said Tsafendas was not only "well-mannered and well-spoken" but that "associated with those working with him... appeared to be of a good nature... During the time he was employed under my supervision i.e. for approximately 3 weeks, I did not see him being cross at any time. He was a good worker."²⁵⁹⁶ August Karel Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria. He found him to be "very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet. He never gave me the impression that he was suffering from any mental disease."²⁵⁹⁷

Three workers at Fries and Son in Frankfurt described Tsafendas as "a good

²⁵⁹⁶ Johannes Jaconus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁹⁷ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

comrade,” “a nice guy”, “extremely courteous, a very pleasant man.”²⁵⁹⁸ Carel van Heerden, who worked with Tsafendas at the Marine Diamond Corporation, indicated that far from being a loner, Tsafendas was “friendly, outgoing, and was not aloof.”²⁵⁹⁹ Father Nikola Banovic told this the author that Tsafendas was very popular with both students and fellow teachers at the Limasollu Naci College in Istanbul.²⁶⁰⁰

With regard to Tsafendas’s attitude to his workmates, it is important to recall the statement made to the police by Horst Albert Vercueil, the foreman at F. A. Poole in Pretoria who had Tsafendas under his supervision for five months. He testified that Tsafendas “bullied the other Portuguese workers. He had fights with several white workers,”²⁶⁰¹ but he never argued with Black workers.²⁶⁰² Nikolaas Nel, who worked with Tsafendas for five months on the same job, said he “was certainly unpopular among white workers. Accused adapted more to the non-whites.”²⁶⁰³ Martinus van Wyk, also at that job, said “he was quiet by nature and did not easily talk to us employees. He often spoke to the Bantu people.”²⁶⁰⁴

Nick Papadakis, who worked for a month with Tsafendas at the Hume Pipe Company in 1964 in Gondola, told the author that Tsafendas “often argued with Portuguese and other Whites.” The reason, he said, was that Tsafendas was “accusing the White workers of mistreating the Black workers ... he always defended the non-White workers.” Papadakis said that Tsafendas believed the Whites were exploiting and taking advantages of the Blacks and he often argued with them about it, although he tried to avoid them as much as was possible. Papadakis said that Tsafendas had told him that he couldn’t help but intervene if he saw an injustice or something wrong taking place.²⁶⁰⁵ A similar statement was made to the police by Jacobus Bornman, Tsafendas’s flatmate for three months in Pretoria in 1965. He testified that Tsafendas “stood up a lot for the Coloureds.”²⁶⁰⁶

²⁵⁹⁸ Daily Dispatch, ‘Assassination A One Man’s Job – Says Vorster’, 8 September 1966: 1.

²⁵⁹⁹ Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden statement to the police, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁶⁰⁰ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²⁶⁰¹ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁶⁰² Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁶⁰³ Nikolaas Jacobus Nel statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁶⁰⁴ Marthinus Petrus van Wyk statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁶⁰⁵ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

²⁶⁰⁶ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

The author cannot be certain why Tsafendas did not “fit in with the boys” at the power station. His work record shows that at some jobs he got along fine with his workmates. The most likely reason is that he considered these particular White workers to be racist and felt they were taking advantage of the Blacks and Coloureds, and therefore sought to avoid them, as he did at F.A. Poole Engineering and Hume Pipe Company. If this was a continuing issue, it would have happened at his other jobs too, which it did not.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What was the salary of the accused?

SMORENBERG: Approximately £85 a month.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: £85 a month?

SMORENBERG: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Didn't he always complain that he was not adequately compensated for his work?

SMORENBERG: Yes, quite often.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: So he didn't regard £85 a month as sufficient?

SMORENBERG: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Don't you think that when the accused spoke about Dr. Verwoerd and Mr. Vorster he wanted to impress you?

SMORENBERG: It could well have been, but I think, under the circumstances, he was not in any fit condition to impress anybody. He was quite frightened down at the bottom. It is not too pleasant an experience down there. I think at the earliest moment he just wanted to get out. I doubt very much whether he was in the mood for impressing anybody.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You say the accused told you that he was married?

SMORENBERG: No, he said he was not married.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Was his intelligence normal?

SMORENBERG: Yes, I would say he had normal intelligence. Perhaps a little bit higher than normal.

COMMENTS ON THE CROSS-EXAMINATION

The cross examination here offers a possible clue as to why Tsafendas did not work effectively at the power station – that he was dissatisfied with his wages, frequently the main reason for poor standards in any work situation. The rest of the cross-examination does not offer anything new. Evidence gathered by the police which contradicts Smorenberg's testimony and which could have been adduced to reveal him as an unreliable witness was not used. His most absurd comment, that Tsafendas supported Dr. Verwoerd and the government, thus remained unchallenged. As usual, we are not in position to know whether the Attorney-General was in possession of this evidence.

CONCLUSION

Smorenberg “got the impression” that Tsafendas was a supporter of Dr. Verwoerd and of apartheid and that he did not like Coloureds. Overwhelming and undisputed evidence proves that Smorenberg's “impression” was totally wrong, although the Attorney-General did not bother challenging it.

Smorenberg's testimony regarding Tsafendas was a travesty of the truth, but it was crucial, according to Judge Beyers in reaching his conclusion that Tsafendas was insane. However, the judge manipulated Smorenberg's words in his verdict, as he did with Patrick O'Ryan. In this case, he said, “One of the strongest pieces of evidence in this case is that of Mr. Smorenberg, a down-to- earth foreman. I shall not forget that when he was asked: ‘What did you think of this man?’ his answer was: ‘I don't like to call any man mad, but he is definitely barmy.’”²⁶⁰⁷ As we have seen, Smorenberg did not say this at all. He said “Well, I wouldn't say he is mad, but he seems a little bit barmy.”

What was the real purpose of the defence in having a witness like Smorenberg? Clearly to prove that Tsafendas was pro-government and therefore the assassination was not politically motivated but the deed of an unstable man. Out of the about one-hundred and fifty witnesses who were questioned by the police, David Bloomberg managed to locate the only one who had said something which might be taken as suggesting Tsafendas was “pro-government.” Smorenberg was also able to support the defence's argument that Tsafendas was mad, even though he also stated that “I wouldn't say he is mad, but he seems a little bit barmy.” Smorenberg also supported Dr. Cooper's diagnosis that Tsafendas was unable to hold down a job.

²⁶⁰⁷ Judge Beyers' verdict on Tsafendas's summary trial, 20 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

Everything in Smorenberg's testimony could have been taken apart and rendered null and void by using the evidence gathered by the South African police, but this did not happen. The saddest thing is that Smorenberg presented Tsafendas as a man who did not like Coloured people and who supported Dr. Verwoerd and Vorster. With these claims remaining unchallenged, people were left with the impression that these were Tsafendas's beliefs. Instead of being shown to the public as someone who considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a dictator who did not represent all the South African people, a tyrant oppressor, the monster who created apartheid and "Hitler's best student," Tsafendas is represented in exactly the opposite light. None of the statements made to the South African police by witnesses such as Bornman, Furness, Smith, Ross and many others, as well as information collected about Tsafendas's political activities and real ideology, became known during the summary trial.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 9: DR. ISAAC SAKINOFSKY

DR. SAKINOFSKY'S PROFESSIONAL BIOGRAPHY AS RELATED BY HIM TO THE COURT

Isaac Sakinofsky qualified as a doctor in 1955, completed his internship at Groote Schuur Hospital, Cape Town, and in 1957 joined the Department of Neurology and Psychiatry at the same hospital. His initial position was Registrar and later Senior Registrar. In June 1961, he earned his Doctorate in Medicine based on post-graduate research he had completed. At the beginning of 1962, he went to London to do post-graduate study and was appointed at the Maudsley Hospital, the teaching hospital of the Post-Graduate Institute of Psychiatry of the University of London. He served on the professional unit as a Registrar and later was promoted to Senior Registrar to a Professorial Unit. As a teaching hospital in psychiatry, the Maudsley is regarded as of ultimate rank.

In 1964, Dr. Sakinofsky took the Academic Post-graduate Diploma in Psychological Medicine of the University of London, and in July 1965 he returned to South Africa as the full-time Consultant Psychiatrist to Groote Schuur Hospital. He was also Senior Lecturer to the Department of Psychiatry at the University of Cape Town. In September 1966 he had been acting head for three months in Groote Schuur's Department of Psychiatry in the absence of his chief overseas. Dr. Sakinofsky authored two chapters on emergency psychiatry in a book titled Emergencies, published by Staples, London, in 1962.²⁶⁰⁸

BACKGROUND ON DR. SAKINOFSKY'S FIRST EXAMINATION OF TSAFENDAS

Dr. Sakinofsky examined Tsafendas on the evening of the assassination. Later, he contacted all the hospitals Tsafendas had mentioned, looking for as much information as possible in the event he was called to testify at a trial, which indeed happened.²⁶⁰⁹ Dr. Sakinofsky stated in correspondence with the author: "In psychiatry, after one has interviewed a patient, it is best practice to seek collateral information from family, friends and medical records.”²⁶¹⁰ Mr. van Zyl and Professors Burke, Tuviah Zabow, Heilbrun and Resnick all agreed with the above.²⁶¹¹ Dr. Sakinofsky secured one medical report from Tsafendas’s medical record, but got nothing about the accused from his family or friends.

²⁶⁰⁸ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²⁶⁰⁹ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

EXTRACTS FROM DR. SAKINOFSKY’S TESTIMONY²⁶¹²

DR. SAKINOFSKY’S FIRST EXAMINATION OF TSAFENDAS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Having disposed of the preliminaries, what happened at 7 p.m. on the 6th September, 1966?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, at 7 p.m. on September, 6th, I was examining the accused, Demetrios Tsafendas.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: In the Casualty Department, Groote Schuur Hospital.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: At whose request?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I was called by the Casualty Officer and by members of the Security Police.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was the nature of your examination?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Psychiatric.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How long did this examination last?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I estimate, without having timed it exactly, about an hour and a half.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And did you make certain findings?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, I did.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you reduce your findings to writing and set it out in a report?

²⁶¹⁰ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky in correspondence with the author, 30 March 2016.

²⁶¹¹ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016; Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017; Professor Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 17 December 2016; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016; Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

²⁶¹² Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Indeed, I did.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Which is dated, do you know?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: September the 7th.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When did you draw up that report?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: The report was partly drawn up the same night and completed the next morning.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: To whom did you submit that report once you had drawn it up?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, I expected that the report would be submitted to the Security Police for the use of the State and the report lay with the Medical Superintendent for some time.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And was subsequently forwarded to the Attorney-General?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I just want to skip ahead; were you informed by the Attorney-General that you were not required to testify for the State, but were to be called by the Defence?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. I made contact with the Attorney-General some weeks afterwards because I wondered what was happening and was told that I had been allocated to the Defence - my evidence was being allocated to the Defence.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Have you your report dated the 7th September, 1966, before you?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I have.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Will you read it out to the Court?

(Copy handed to the bench).

DR. SAKINOFSKY: (Witness reads report). "On September 6th, 1966, at 7 p.m. I was called to Groote Schuur Hospital Casualty Department where I examined the mental state of a man who identified himself to me as Demetrios Tsafendas, and gave his age as 48 years. The patient's demeanour was moderately excited (but not elated or exalted); he was tense, breathing rapidly at times, and he seemed perplexed. On two occasions he burst into weeping for a few seconds, but was not otherwise manifestly depressed. His speech seemed un-guarded; was under some pressure. He answered most questions readily. There was no formal syntactical schizophrenic thought.

(The Court intervenes) JUDGE BEYERS: Do you mind if I interrupt where I don't understand? "His speech was unguarded; was under some pressure." I am not sure I've got the purport of that.

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Pressure alludes to the piece of behaviour which we refer to as "excitement" and which I think has some difference from the lay use of the word "excitement", and one of the ways that one assesses...

(The Court intervenes) JUDGE BEYERS: "His speech was unguarded", what does that mean? He was not careful of what he was saying?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. One makes the assessment clinically of whether a patient is holding back, and my assessment was that he was not holding back at that time.

JUDGE BEYERS: He was speaking openly?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: He was speaking openly.

JUDGE BEYERS: Now "He was under some pressure."

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. This refers to the rate of speech. The rate of speech was rapid and profuse, and is a symptom of excitement. (Witness continues to read report). "

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Disorder but I formed the conclusion that his reason was impaired, in that there was a manifest ..."

(The Court intervenes) JUDGE BEYERS: You are going too fast for me. "There was no formal syntactical schizophrenic thought disorder ..."

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: What does that mean?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Syntactical refers to the grammar with which the patient speaks. The psychiatrist analyses the patient's utterance in terms of the form (the grammar that is) and the contents, what he says in his speech. And when one uses the term "syntactical schizophrenic thought disorder" this is a cardinal feature of schizophrenia. But its absence at a particular time does not necessarily mean that the patient is not schizophrenic.

JUDGE BEYERS: So from the point of view of syntax his expressions were in order?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, the grammar of it was fine.

JUDGE BEYERS: You mean the verb didn't go where the noun should be or ...?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, there are certain aspects of syntax which a psychiatrist concentrates upon. One of these is the phenomenon of thought blocking, which is an unexpected gap in the train of the patient's speech. Another is referred to as asyndesis which is a disjunction of a phrase with another phrase - two phrases being connected which are not logical. Another is the interpenetration of thoughts and ideas into a train of thought. And there are others where we talk of derailment.

JUDGE BEYERS: In other words, syntactically speaking, your observation there was negative?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: It does not negative schizophrenia?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No.

JUDGE BEYERS: But it did not support it at that stage?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Quite.

(Witness continues reading report) "But I formed the conclusion that his reason was impaired in that there was a manifest defect of logical processes with repeated non sequiturs. He was frankly deluded in that he said that the Portuguese Government had kept him in a prison for 14 years (between 1949 and 1963) for being a conscientious objector and that they had tried to kill him for this by the application of alternating currents to his head. He gave as one of the reasons for his assassination of the Prime Minister that the latter was in league with the Portuguese Government. He voiced several other delusional ideas, viz., that the Prime Minister had been a foreigner (and he, Tsafendas, a South African) ..."

JUDGE BEYERS: Why do you call that delusional? That was true, wasn't it?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: In the first place Tsafendas himself, I believe, is not a South African, and in the second place, the Prime Minister certainly by adoption a South African.

(Witness continues reading report) "Been against the English way of life (with which he, Tsafendas, identified himself on account of 'having had an English mother'). He said that Dr. Verwoerd had been against the ideal of a 'Cape to Cairo' union, which he, the patient, identified with 'the Commonwealth.' He claimed that his mother, from whom he had been separated, was called Von Willem and that she was a member of an overseas Royal Family and I wondered at the time whether this had to do with the existence of Queen Wilhelmina and an allusion to the Prime Minister's Dutch descent.

And this idea he apparently connected with his concern for the Commonwealth. He stated that he had brooded over the weekend about the meeting between the Prime Minister and Chief Leabua Jonathan, which meant to him a further blow to the "Commonwealth," and this had determined his actions subsequently. He appears to have misinterpreted this meeting as being related to the immorality legislation, in that he claims to have applied for a double identity card, so that he could try and find a wife among either the White or non-White groups: he stated that he had been rejected by women of both race groups and therefore was not able to get married. Tsafendas spoke also of attacks of surges of "anguish and pain" ... (I am quoting him) ... "anguish and pain" throughout his body and limbs associated with "pressure headaches" (and I noted from his hospital records that he had attended the out-patient clinic for headaches - not the psychiatric clinic - during June, 1966). He claimed also to see "hairy springs and coils" in front of his eyes which he attributed to blood pressure, but I did not think that this betokened hallucinosis. He denied passivity feelings at that time but said that his thoughts raced most of the time.

JUDGE BEYERS: Now you've got me again. What is that "passivity feelings"?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: A passivity feeling is another very important cardinal feature of schizophrenia whereby an influence on the patient is interpreted, by the patient, as being due to an external agency. For instance, if a patient believes that his body had been changed by hypnosis or by computers or something like that, or by an enemy, this would be passivity.

JUDGE BEYERS: Passivity, does that mean that he maintains that it is not his fault because his body has been taken over by some other agent or something ...?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: At this time I did not question him.

JUDGE BEYERS: Yes, but is that what it means?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: That he is just the tool of some other outside force or influence?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: If he said he was the tool of an outside ...

JUDGE BEYERS: Is that what 'passivity feelings' mean?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, that one's will is taken over, one's thoughts are tampered with, one's body functions are interfered with by an external agency.

(Witness continues reading report.) "He was fully orientated for time and person. His concentration was moderately impaired; his general knowledge reasonable (considering that he claimed only to have passed Standard V), and he denied epileptic seizures. The patient claims to have had several "nervous breakdowns." He says that he was detained in a New York immigration transit centre in 1942 and given tablets. Subsequently he spent about 18 months in the Grafton State Hospital, New York, where he had electro-convulsive therapy and he was subsequently deported to Greece. He had a further period of hospitalisation for "nervous breakdown" in 1963 at, what he told me was, the Ochosen Kranken- house outside Hamburg." May I say that it subsequently appears that his dates had been confused.

(Witness continues reading report.) Comment: I formed the conclusion that the patient is not of sound mind, that his thought processes are grossly impaired and deluded, and that he is not therefore in a position to evaluate correctly the consequences of his deed. I consider that it is probable that his mental state is the result of damage caused by previous attacks of a mental disease called Schizophrenia. In my opinion, further important information on the state of his mind should be obtained by the following:

- He should be detained in a closed mental hospital ward for a period of observation. I would like myself to assess his mental state over a period of time and at successive interviews.
- He should have the following special investigations: An electro-encephalogram, a blood and cerebro-spinal fluid Wasserman reaction because occasionally an organic disease of the brain can mimic the clinical picture of schizophrenia, and he should have psychological tests.

JUDGE BEYERS: What is the Wasserman for? To see if it is syphilitic in origin?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. Cerebral syphilis.

JUDGE BEYERS: To see if it is G.B.I. really?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

(Witness continues reading report):

- Medical reports should be obtained via the Portuguese government; Grafton State Hospital, New York, and the Krankenhaus outside Hamburg and I said it was possible that the names of these places had been garbled by the patient.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And you hand in that report as EXHIBIT C.

JUDGE BEYERS: Just before Mr. Cooper asks you further - and thanks for helping me through this - how did it come about that he told you all this that is written down here, about Chief Jonathan, the Prime Minister, Von Willem, and all that? Did you put him on a couch and make him talk, or what happened?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: He was on a couch; I didn't put him on a couch; he'd been on a couch because he had had a wound stitched on his nose, so I left him on the couch and just chatted to him as a psychiatrist does; leading him along certain lines and trying to probe other channels.

JUDGE BEYERS: Were you two alone?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No, there was one other person present. He was my Junior Registrar.

JUDGE BEYERS: And you just got him to ramble on and talk to see what came out?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: If I may quote from some notes I made at the time. I said to him: "Is it true that you killed the Prime Minister?" That is how I started, and he nodded. He agreed that he did assassinate the Prime Minister but he said: "I don't remember what happened after that." I asked him whether he had taken the job as a messenger in order to assassinate the Prime Minister. He denied this. He denied that he sought the job as a messenger with the intention of killing the Prime Minister. He claimed that he had no idea that he would be allowed access to the Prime Minister at any time, and he was rather taken by surprise that he was. I said; "What made you do a thing like that?" He said: "I didn't agree with the policy. I am in favour of the Commonwealth. My mother is a relative to Royalty overseas" and he went on rambling in this way about his mother's name being Von Willem, that she died in 1927.

JUDGE BEYERS: That is how all this came out?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, in that sort of way.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You followed, therefore, a recognised procedure?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, this is, I think, quite recognised as a means of eliciting information.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And did you follow various lines of questioning?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. This is what is called an unstructured interview, in that one didn't have a sort of questionnaire and then address it to the patient. I let him ramble in order to promote him talking about things that I might not ask him about. But in doing so I tried to cover what we regard as the mental state, in other words, his general appearance and behaviour, his thought processes, existence of misperceptions, misinterpretations, his cognitive functions, and so on.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: At that stage you had no information of his background, apart from what he told you?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Apart from what he told me and from what I heard over the radio, that he had assassinated the Prime Minister.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You did not know that three months previously Dr. Kossew had diagnosed him as a schizophrenic?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I had no idea.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You did not know that in America he had been diagnosed as a hebephrenic type schizophrenic?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No idea at all.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Nor did you know of the fact that he had been to the Isle of Wight?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No, he didn't tell me that.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Nor did you know that he had been to London Hospital?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No. He didn't tell him about the hospitals

DEFENCE COUNSEL: A mental hospital, and that he had there also been classified or diagnosed as a paranoid schizophrenic?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I had no knowledge of that.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You obviously must have realised that this was a very important diagnosis that you had to make?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Indeed.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Were you cautious? Did you give it a great deal of thought? Were you cautious in your approach?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, indeed. I was very much aware of the importance of this case.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You appear by nature to be a cautious person, if I may say so?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: That is for others to judge.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you thereafter request to see the accused again?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I did.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You requested the defence, did you not?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I initially contacted the prosecutor and then the defence.

JUDGE BEYERS: I think you initially contacted me, didn't you?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, I did.

JUDGE BEYERS: And I referred you to the Attorney-General?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: This case is obviously a matter of importance?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. It is more than of importance to - I think there are several aspects of importance in this case. I think as a case in forensic psychiatry it is of the utmost importance, but I don't think that this could have concerned me.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you in fact write overseas for a report to the German hospital?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I did. I wrote to all the hospitals that the patient had mentioned.

JUDGE BEYERS: Perhaps we had better get this on record, in case more might be read into that remark than is necessary. Doctor, when you contacted me you asked me - I am putting it; you can say whether it is right or not - whether it isn't possible that we could do what is done in America and that you be called by the judge rather than by one of the two parties?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: That is quite true, but I don't think that I emphasised that I personally alone. My feeling, if I may say so in this place, is that in a matter of criminal trial the forensic psychiatrists should be called by the court - forensic psychiatrist.

JUDGE BEYERS: That is what you said to me. All I want is that it is clear that we discussed no aspect of this, and I didn't know what this record was going to have?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No, not at all. In fact what this record was going to have you told me you didn't want to know DEFENCE COUNSEL: I accept that without qualification.

JUDGE BEYERS: I told the witness that in this country judges don't call witnesses, unless they have to at the end of a case.

DR. SAKINOFSKY: May I say that the existence of an assessor who is a psychiatrist helps about my objection to the structure of criminal trials.

COMMENTS ON DR. SAKINOFSKY'S TESTIMONY REGARDING HIS FIRST EXAMINATION OF TSAFENDAS

Dr. Sakinofsky stated that his first examination of Tsafendas lasted “without having timed it exactly, about an hour and a half.” However, according to the newspaper reports of the time, this examination must have lasted for thirty to forty minutes maximum. According to Dr. Sakinofsky, he saw Tsafendas at Groote Schuur Hospital at 7 pm. Dr. T.A. Darby, who examined Tsafendas at the same hospital just before Dr. Sakinofsky, had examined him at 6.40 pm, which suggests that Dr. Darby had spent maximum twenty minutes with Tsafendas. According to the newspaper reports of the time,²⁶¹³ if they are accurate, Tsafendas’s visit to the hospital had lasted one hour, which leaves forty minutes maximum for Dr. Sakinofsky and not an hour and a half.

PRIOR TO DR. SAKINOFSKY'S EXAMINATION

First, we must examine the condition of Tsafendas at the time he was seen by Dr. Sakinofsky. Immediately after the assassination, Tsafendas was taken to the police station in Caledon Square. He claims he was beaten by policemen all the way there. At 2.50 pm, soon after his arrival, Tsafendas was examined, because of his injuries and bleeding, by Dr. Kossew, who found that he had a gaping wound of one and a half inches from his forehead to the bridge of his nose, which was swollen, and a half-inch cut on the lower lip. Tsafendas answered questions guardedly but did not appear confused and Dr. Kossew did not find anything wrong with his mental state.²⁶¹⁴

Tsafendas remained at the police station for the next three hours, during which time, he claimed,²⁶¹⁵ and this was supported by a policeman who was present,²⁶¹⁶ he was tortured ²⁶¹³ Rand Daily Mail, ‘Tsafendas in Hospital’, 7 September 1966: 1; Natal Mercury, ‘Assassin Rushed to Hospital’, 7 September 1966: 1.

²⁶¹⁴ Dr. Kossew’s report on examination in case of alleged assault or other crime, 6 September 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File 3. NASA.

²⁶¹⁵ Tsafendas in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017.

²⁶¹⁶ Michalis Michelis in a personal interview, 12 December 2015.

and beaten.²⁶¹⁷ Because of his injuries and severe bleeding from the beating, the officer in charge asked Brigadier Aucamp²⁶¹⁸ to take Tsafendas to a hospital.²⁶¹⁹ Brigadier Aucamp and his detail must have arrived with Tsafendas at the casualty department of Groote Schuur hospital around 6.30 p.m.,²⁶²⁰ according to newspaper reports of the time. During a heavily-guarded, one-hour visit,²⁶²¹ the police imposed a total security blackout on the hospital and nobody was allowed to see Tsafendas. The newspaper reports of the time claimed that plain-clothed policemen stood by Tsafendas's side constantly during the hospital visit, including when he stripped to be examined and even inside the X-Ray room.²⁶²²

At 6.40 p.m., Tsafendas was examined by Dr. T.A. Darby, who found him to be "co-operative" and "composed." According to Dr. Darby's report, Tsafendas had a broken nose with blood obstructing the airways, a ragged laceration from the right eyebrow to the nose and a laceration of the lower lip. The cuts were stitched, the nose put in a splint and Tsafendas was given an anti-tetanus injection.²⁶²³ Dr. Darby's report did not contain anything about Tsafendas's state of mind. Dr. Darby's examination would have lasted at most twenty minutes as Tsafendas was then seen by Dr. Sakinofsky at 7 p.m.

In contradiction of newspaper reports that policemen were constantly with Tsafendas during the visit to the hospital, even in the X-ray room, Dr. Sakinofsky stated in correspondence with the author that he had examined Tsafendas without the presence of any policemen: "We found Mr. Tsafendas in a room that was milling about with uniformed and plain-clothed security men of all ranks. It would have been impossible to establish any kind of rapport with him under these conditions, so there proceeded a stand-off where we refused to examine him until the room was cleared of the security personnel, which we were eventually able to effect only after we contacted the superintendent of the hospital and got his support. After we had interviewed Mr. Tsafendas at length and after calming his agitation at the time and gaining rapport, we did complete our examination. We deliberately refused to make any public announcements until the following day. We would have liked to have detained him in the hospital for further study and treatment but the security authorities ²⁶¹⁷ For more about what happened to Tsafendas immediately after the assassination see Chapter 4.

²⁶¹⁸ Not sure if this is the correct spelling, but it sounds something like this.

²⁶¹⁹ Dimitris Tsafendas in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

²⁶²⁰ Dimitris Tsafendas was examined by Dr. Darby at 6.40, therefore he must have arrived at the hospital shortly before that.

²⁶²¹ Rand Daily Mail, 'Tsafendas in Hospital', 7 September 1966: 1; Natal Mercury, 'Assassin Rushed to Hospital', 7 September 1966: 1.

²⁶²² Natal Mercury, 'Assassin Rushed to Hospital', 7 September 1966: 1.

²⁶²³ Dr. Darby's statement regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, G.S.H. No: 65/14-081, 6 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

overrode our wishes and took him away.”²⁶²⁴ Dr. Sakinofsky is mistaken about making a public announcement the following day, as no such announcement took place.

THE EXAMINATION AND TSAFENDAS'S DELUSIONAL IDEAS

According to Dr. Sakinofsky, Tsafendas burst into tears twice, “his speech seemed un-guarded, was under some pressure.” Dr. Sakinofsky goes on to describe in detail Tsafendas’s mental condition at the time without reference to his physical condition. Of course, his task was to examine Tsafendas’s mental and not his physical state, but this was a case of huge national importance when it might be assumed that all aspects of the accused assassin’s condition would be of significance. Tsafendas was taken to hospital in the first place because of his physical injuries, which in themselves might have affected his mental state at the time. It is tempting to believe that the injuries would seem natural to Dr. Sakinofsky in a man who just four and a half hours earlier had killed the Prime Minister and then spent three hours in police custody. Dr. Sakinofsky stated that “there was no formal syntactical schizophrenic thought,” but Tsafendas’s reason was impaired and he was also deluded. Let us examine now how “deluded” Tsafendas was.

TSAFENDAS BEING IMPRISONED FOR FOURTEEN YEARS BY THE PORTUGUESE GOVERNMENT

Dr. Sakinofsky stated that Tsafendas told him that the Portuguese Government had kept him in prison for fourteen years, between 1949 and 1963, for “being a conscientious objector and that they had tried to kill him for this by the application of alternating currents to his head.” None of the about two hundred or so witnesses who were interviewed by the police, the Commission of Enquiry and by the author testified that Tsafendas ever told them anything like this. None of the psychiatrists and psychologists who examined Tsafendas before and after the assassination heard such a story from Tsafendas and he never repeated this claim subsequently to anyone, not even to Dr. Sakinofsky when he examined him for a second and a third time. If Tsafendas really believed this happened, surely he would have told someone else too. Tsafendas never told a single person about it, as far as the author can establish.

The fact is Tsafendas was imprisoned and tortured in Portugal and he told a number of people about it, but in a way that differed from the story Dr. Sakinofsky recounted. Patrick ²⁶²⁴ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky in correspondence with the author, 30 March 2016.

O’Ryan²⁶²⁵ and Gladstone Dunn²⁶²⁶ testified to the police about Tsafendas’s account, and several witnesses interviewed by the author said they were told the same story, such as Cleanthes Alachiotis, Elias Constantaras, Katerina Pnema, Fotini Gavasiadis, Nikolas Kambouris, Grigoris Pouftis, George Kantas, Mary Eintracht, Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis, Father Nikola Banovic, Andreas Babiolakis, Father Minas Constandinou, Nikolaos Billis, Michalis Vasilakis, Ira Kyriakakis, Helen Grispos and Nick Papadakis. Tsafendas told these witnesses that he was imprisoned in Portugal because of his Communist and anti-colonialist activities, which was a fact according to the PIDE reports. He also told them that he was given electric shock treatment, which very probably happened. None of the witnesses remembers how long Tsafendas told them he was imprisoned, but they are all certain that it was not fourteen years.²⁶²⁷ According to the PIDE reports, Tsafendas was imprisoned by the Portuguese for about three years altogether. Tsafendas spoke at length to these relatives and friends, but he never told them what he told Dr. Sakinofsky.

Tsafendas also told Major Rossouw during his interrogation in Caledon Square police station that while in Portugal he was imprisoned “for over a year at the Port of Casias.” However, he made no mention of the things he told Dr. Sakinofsky.²⁶²⁸ What he told Major Rossouw was what he told all the other witnesses.

Furthermore, in July 1966, in an interview with the Cape Argus, where Tsafendas had described himself as an “anti-Portuguese rebel and an antagonist of the Portuguese dictatorship.” He told the journalist that he was imprisoned without trial for three years in Portugal and “brainwashed,” a procedure from which he said he had never fully recovered. He also spoke about his imprisonment in Lisbon, in Barca d’Alva, in Aljuba and at the Machinegun Regiment, when he refused to serve in the Portuguese Army. He said that he ²⁶²⁵ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²⁶²⁶ Gladstone Dunn statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁶²⁷ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

²⁶²⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

was not allowed to return to Mozambique until 1963.²⁶²⁹ The newspaper did not explain that by brainwashing, Tsafendas meant the Portuguese's attempts to change his Communist ideology and anti-Portuguese stance. That Tsafendas was telling the truth about all these matters is confirmed by PIDE's "Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas, no: 2707/64/SR, of November 15, 1964."²⁶³⁰

Thus, why did Tsafendas tell Dr. Sakinofsky a different story to the one he told everyone else? The likeliest explanation is that he lied to Dr. Sakinofsky as he lied to the other psychiatrists who examined him after the assassination for his own ends, though it is worth pointing out some things in Tsafendas's statement to Dr. Sakinofsky were true. Tsafendas was a conscientious objector and was imprisoned for a few days by the Portuguese because of his refusal to serve in the Portuguese Army.²⁶³¹ In addition, Tsafendas told Alachiotis, Babiolakis, Billis, Kyriakakis, Constantaras, Eintracht, Patrick O'Ryan, Pouftis, Vasilakis, Kantas, Kambouris, Fathers Nikola Banovic and Minas Constandinou that he had pretended to be mad to avoid service in the Portuguese Army, which was also a fact.²⁶³² Interestingly, the dates which Dr. Sakinofsky said Tsafendas gave him for his imprisonment, 1949-1963, are the years he was not allowed to return to Mozambique and forced to live in exile in Europe.

²⁶²⁹ The Cape Argus, 'Brainwashed in Jail Held Man Told Argus.' 7 September 1966: 3.

²⁶³⁰ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT

²⁶³¹ Letter of the Director of PIDE to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, 4 November 1961. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁶³² Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

DR. VERWOERD BEING IN LEAGUE WITH THE PORTUGUESE GOVERNMENT

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you agree that millions of people think that Dr. Verwoerd and the Portuguese Government were in league together?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I think millions of people know that there is a friendly relationship between our two countries, but I would not say that they were in league in the sense that Mr. Tsafendas saw them to be in league. In other words, that the Portuguese Government was influencing the internal affairs of South Africa, the Immorality Act, etc.

Dr. Sakinofsky uses the words “Portuguese Government,” perhaps simply in imitation of the Attorney-General, who used the same words. However, Tsafendas had some “trademark” phrases, like Dr. Verwoerd being “Hitler’s best student,” and according to several witnesses, he invariably referred to “the Portuguese dictatorship,” as he did in his Cape Argus, interview,²⁶³³ and not to “the Portuguese Government.”

Tsafendas told several witnesses that he considered Portugal’s Antonio Salazar to be a dictator and he actually was. He also believed and said often, that Dr. Verwoerd was also a dictator. He never spoke to any of these witnesses about Dr. Verwoerd being in league with Salazar, although he often denounced both men and almost certainly he believed, and rightly, that they were indeed in league, just not in the way he told Dr. Sakinofsky.

Dr. Sakinofsky does not explain in detail how he came to the conclusion that Tsafendas thought the Portuguese Government was influencing the internal affairs of South Africa. If Tsafendas told him this, Tsafendas was lying, as again he told this to no-one, although he spoke to many witnesses about his political ideas. None of the approximate 250 witnesses who were interviewed by the police, the Commission of Enquiry and the author said that Tsafendas ever told them anything of this nature.

These are the testimonies of people who testified to the police about Tsafendas’s political ideas and other evidence collected by the South African police regarding his political activities and ideology. They are compatible with each other but incompatible with Dr. Sakinofsky’s version of what Tsafendas told him:

- Edward Furness testified that Tsafendas wanted to “create a resistance to the regime of South Africa and mentioned civil disobedience and anything that would get the South

²⁶³³ The Cape Argus, ‘Brainwashed in Jail Held Man Told Argus.’ 7 September 1966: 3.

African regime out of power.”²⁶³⁴

- Tsafendas himself had testified to the police that he was a member of the South African Communist Party from 1937 to 1942, that he was against apartheid and colonialism, that he had joined the British anti-apartheid movement and that he took part in anti-apartheid demonstrations in London.²⁶³⁵
- PIDE held a 130-page file on Tsafendas, the Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis.²⁶³⁶ It opened in 1938, when he was just twenty-years old, when he was “suspected of distributing communist propaganda”²⁶³⁷ and went up to his release from PIDE custody on January 26, 1965 after spending three months in a cell in Beira accused of pretending to be a Christian missionary while in reality preaching “under the guise of religion in favour of Mozambique’s independence.”²⁶³⁸

PIDE had withheld from the South African police the fact that they had such a file, along with other information “indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of Mozambique,”²⁶³⁹ thus hiding the extent of Tsafendas’s political activities. Nevertheless, they had admitted to them that in the 1930s in Mozambique, Tsafendas was “suspected of dedicating himself to communistic activities”²⁶⁴⁰ and that “one finds in him an obvious spirit of revolt in relation to the Portuguese Administration, and favouring the independence of Mocambique.”²⁶⁴¹ Furthermore, the South African embassy in Lisbon on September 7, the day after the assassination, informed the Secretary for Foreign Affairs in Cape Town that Tsafendas “has a criminal record in Mozambique, where he is said to have been arrested on several occasions after creating public disturbances, including shouting pro-Communist anti-Portuguese slogans.” The communication said he had “never been convicted as courts have

²⁶³⁴ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁶³⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁶³⁶ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁶³⁷ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁶³⁸ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁶³⁹ Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁶⁴⁰ Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁶⁴¹ Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

found him to be of unsound mind” and added, “If information correct, we suspect Portuguese may play down assassin’s previous political activities and we would suggest full details in this connection be sought.”²⁶⁴²

- The South African police had FOUR files on Tsafendas because of his Communist beliefs and political activities.²⁶⁴³
- Tsafendas was on the Stop List of the Department of Immigration because of his Communist beliefs and activities.²⁶⁴⁴ This list was also in the possession of the Security Police.²⁶⁴⁵
- The Department of Immigration had two files on Tsafendas:
 - a. “On file B.7771 there were, inter alia, references to Demitrios Tsafendakis’s alleged communist activities, as well as references to his unsuccessful applications for permanent residence. It is also evident from the file that he had been placed on the stop list.”²⁶⁴⁶
 - b. “On file G.8226 there were references to his alleged communist activities, and detailed references to his unsuccessful applications of 1936, 1938, 1941, 1946, 1947, 1948, 1950 and 1959 to enter the Union of South Africa.”²⁶⁴⁷
- It was known to the South African police that Tsafendas was deported and exiled from Mozambique due to his Communist and anti-colonialist beliefs and activities.²⁶⁴⁸
- It was known that Tsafendas was arrested in Mozambique by the Portuguese Public Security Police on November 16, 1964 and subsequently handed to PIDE accused of “making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses.” It was also known that he had spent

²⁶⁴² Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Lisbon, to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 07 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁶⁴³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter XI, Paragraphs 4 and 5.

²⁶⁴⁴ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter IV, Paragraph 19.

²⁶⁴⁵ General H. J. Den Bergh memorandum to the COE, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File VDSO 17-64, NASA.

²⁶⁴⁶ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter IV, Paragraph 19.

²⁶⁴⁷ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter IV, Paragraph 20.

²⁶⁴⁸ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Lisbon, to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 07 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA; The Chronicle (Bulawayo), ‘Tsafendas: Mystery Man of Parliament’, 8 September 1966: 1; The Daily News, ‘Tsafendas Seen As ‘Mystery Man’’, 8 September 1966: 17; The Herald (Melbourne), ‘The Killer: Five Passports and A Record of Subversion’, 8 September 1966: 1; Pretoria News, ‘Dimitrio A Red, They Alleged’, 7 September 1966: 1; The Rhodesia Herald, ‘Assassin Said To Have Been Deported From P.E.A. for Communist Connections’, 8 September 1966: 1.

three months in custody being interrogated because of the accusations.²⁶⁴⁹

- It was known to the South African police that while he was in South Africa from 1939 to 1942 Tsafendas was “engaged actively in Communistic propaganda.”²⁶⁵⁰
- It was known that in 1938 in Mozambique he was dismissed from a job “owing to his Communist leanings” and that he was suspected of being “engaged in disseminating Communistic propaganda.”²⁶⁵¹
- It was known that Tsafendas supported Mozambique’s independence from Portugal and wanted to see “a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the Mother-nation.”²⁶⁵²
- It was known to the police that Tsafendas, while in London, had associated with prominent anti-apartheid activists David Gardener, Solly Sachs and Canon John Collins.²⁶⁵³
- Although PIDE had concealed important information about Tsafendas’s political activities, it confided in a report which it gave to the South African police that Tsafendas had admitted after being arrested on one occasion that he was “a partisan of the independence of this province.” The same report also stated that although “Tsafendas is mentally deficient,” “it is true that one finds in him an obvious spirit of revolt in relation to the Portuguese Administration, and favouring the independence of Mocambique.”²⁶⁵⁴
- Kenneth Ross was Tsafendas’s landlord in Durban for two months in 1965. He told the police that Tsafendas “was very fond of discussing politics and gave me the opinion that he was well versed in politics. Tsafendas objected to the Communists being banished to Robin Island [sic] because of their political opinions and actions. In general, Tsafendas opposed to every decision taken by the South African Government and freely voiced his ²⁶⁴⁹ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁶⁵⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II A, Paragraph 26.

²⁶⁵¹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II A, Paragraph 16.

²⁶⁵² PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁶⁵³ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁶⁵⁴ Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

opinion to me. He was blatantly opposed to the National Party policy, the policy of the present Government, and was definitely pro-Russian.”²⁶⁵⁵

- Patrick O’Ryan told the police that Tsafendas “was against the state policy of both South Africa and Portugal” and that he “labelled the apartheid policies as unfair.”²⁶⁵⁶ Later O’Ryan described Tsafendas as getting “excited” when he talked about politics and saying that Dr. Verwoerd was a tyrant who was oppressing his people, that he was ‘Hitler’s best student’ and if he (Tsafendas) ever get hold of him “he would bash his skull.” He did not tell the police about Dr. Verwoerd being a tyrant as he believed it would be bad for Tsafendas.²⁶⁵⁷
- Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren, a security officer at the Mandini Paper Factory in Zululand, told the police that Nick Vergos said Tsafendas “was not Greek, but a kaffir and a Communist.”²⁶⁵⁸
- Robert Smith was a night clerk at the Durban Men’s Home where Tsafendas stayed for two months in 1965. He testified that Tsafendas was a Communist, “a fanatic on politics and seldom spoke of anything else” and had described “United Party and National Party officials and members as capitalistic roughs.” Tsafendas had told him that the “South African Government’s policy was ‘rotten’” and often compared conditions in South Africa with those of Russia, stating, “Look at all the poor people in South Africa... such conditions don’t exist in Russia because Russia is a Communistic state.”²⁶⁵⁹
- Albert Vercueil said Tsafendas told him, “You are like your bloody government, but I will get you, and I will get your Prime Minister too.”²⁶⁶⁰
- Johannes Botha, a security officer, told the police that Nick Vergos characterised Tsafendas in a remark to him as the “biggest Communist in the Republic of South

²⁶⁵⁵ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁶⁵⁶ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²⁶⁵⁷ Patrick O’Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁶⁵⁸ Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁶⁵⁹ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁶⁶⁰ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Africa.²⁶⁶¹

- Jan Johannes Albertus Fourie, a sergeant of the South African police, testified that Nick Vergos reported Tsafendas to him as “Communist bastard.”²⁶⁶²
- Father Hanno Probst reported Tsafendas to a security officer as a “communist and a dangerous person.”²⁶⁶³ He also testified that Tsafendas “started swearing at the Mozambique government, saying it did nothing for the black people.”²⁶⁶⁴
- Roelof Swiegers testified that Tsafendas “leaned towards the communist side.”²⁶⁶⁵
- Jacobus Bornman testified that Tsafendas “stood up a lot for the Coloureds” and “often criticised the South African government and seemed to have a grudge against Dr. Verwoerd.”²⁶⁶⁶
- According to Inspector Horacio Ferreira, of the Portuguese Security Police in Mozambique, Tsafendas was “intense anti-White” and told him that “the Portuguese Government has never done anything for their non-Whites.”²⁶⁶⁷
- Keith Martincich testified that Tsafendas “on quite a few occasions he had discussed politics with me. He said he did not like the Government and that he was given a hard time in South Africa. He said the Government won’t reign very long.”²⁶⁶⁸
- Elizabeth Groves was Tsafendas’s landlady for six or seven weeks and a retired psychiatric nurse. About Tsafendas she said, “I received complaints that he was argumentative and towards me he said that we Afrikaners are a backward nation. It was ²⁶⁶¹ Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁶⁶² Jan Johannes Albertus Fourie statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁶⁶³ Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁶⁶⁴ Father Hanno Probst statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁶⁶⁵ Roelof Erasmus Swiegers statement to the police, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van vorm Z 204. NASA.

²⁶⁶⁶ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁶⁶⁷ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁶⁶⁸ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

clear that he had nothing good towards Afrikaners.”²⁶⁶⁹

- Antony Maw testified that the Portuguese authorities in Mozambique did not allow Tsafendas to enter the country on grounds of suspected Communist tendencies.²⁶⁷⁰
- A report by of Col. van Wyk of the South African police characterised Tsafendas as being “intensely anti-white.”²⁶⁷¹
- A 1941 report from the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs said that Tsafendas was “dismissed from employment at a kiosk in Portuguese South Africa (Mozambique) on account of his Communist leanings.”²⁶⁷²
- Peter Pappas, whose café in Durban Tsafendas often visited, said Tsafendas “spoke angrily about the Salazar regime in Portugal and about the Mozambique police.”²⁶⁷³
- In July 1966, just two months before the assassination, Tsafendas gave a seventy-five-minute interview to a reporter named N.D. Hartford of the Cape Argus. They had already met at the beginning of the year when Tsafendas came to the newspaper and enquired whether there was any news of the freedom fighters of Mozambique. He described himself as an “anti-Portuguese rebel and an antagonist of the Portuguese dictatorship.”²⁶⁷⁴ Hartford’s impression was that Tsafendas was normal; he had no reason to believe that he was mentally defective. According to Hartford, Tsafendas spoke fluently without any noticeable gaps in the conversation.²⁶⁷⁵
- Reports from Mozambique which emerged after the assassination said that Tsafendas was “violently anti-Portuguese.”²⁶⁷⁶
- Jorge Perestrelo, who met Tsafendas in Lisbon, told Diario Popular that “one could see how anxious he was to oppose the authorities.”²⁶⁷⁷

Eight more witnesses, Cleanthes Alachiotis, Elias Constantaras, Nikolaos Billis, ²⁶⁶⁹ Elizabeth Magdalene Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁶⁷⁰ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub File: 1/8. NASA.

²⁶⁷¹ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁶⁷² Report of the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, 14 October 1941. K150, Vol. 3, File: W.D. 10/10/4102. Subject: Enquiry regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis. NASA.

²⁶⁷³ Rand Daily Mail, ‘Tsafendas: In the Eyes of A Friend’, 14 September 1966.

²⁶⁷⁴ The Cape Argus, ‘Brainwashed in Jail Held Man Told Argus.’ 7 September 1966: 3; Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 75.

²⁶⁷⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 75.

²⁶⁷⁶ The Cape Argus, ‘180-Day Prison for Tsafendas?’, 7 September 1966: 1.

²⁶⁷⁷ Cuttings from the Diario Popular of 9.9.66. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

George Kantas, Nickolas Kambouris, Vasilis Perselis, Grigoris Pouftis and Michalis Vasilakis, seven of them from the Eleni tanker, whose statements were not found at the National Archives, maintained that they were interviewed by the South African police and testified that Tsafendas was a Communist and against apartheid and considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant, a dictator and “Hitler’s best student.” More importantly, they also testified that Tsafendas had joined the military wing of the Greek Communist Party during the Greek Civil War.²⁶⁷⁸

Several other witnesses who knew Tsafendas very well like Ira Kyriakakis, Father Nikolas Banovic, Katerina Pnema, Helen Grispos, Fotini Gavasiadis, Nick Papadakis, Mary Eintracht, John and Antony Michaletos, Nick Augustides and Andreas Babiolakis stated to the author that Tsafendas was a passionate Communist who considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant, a dictator, and “Hitler’s best student.”²⁶⁷⁹ Tsafendas kept characterising Dr. Verwoerd with those words as long as thirty years after the assassination.²⁶⁸⁰ Andreas Babiolakis told the author that Tsafendas made no attempt to hide his detestation for colonialism and apartheid. Tsafendas told Babiolakis one day that “Verwoerd and [Portuguese Prime Minister] Salazar are fascist dictators and should be executed like Mussolini.”²⁶⁸¹

In addition, at least six crewmen from the Eleni, Cleanthes Alachiotis, Nikolaos Billis, George Kantas, Nickolas Kambouris, Grigoris Pouftis and Michalis Vasilakis, testified to the police that Tsafendas described a possible assassination of Dr. Verwoerd as morally justifiable, because he was a tyrant and a dictator who was oppressing his people. The fact that Tsafendas had said this just three days before the assassination gives extra value to the information. These six witnesses also told the police, as Elias Constantaras had done, that Tsafendas called Dr. Verwoerd Hitler’s best student and that he spat at his picture in a ²⁶⁷⁸ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015; Nickolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

²⁶⁷⁹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²⁶⁸⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁶⁸¹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

newspaper.²⁶⁸²

Tsafendas never told anyone that the Portuguese Government was influencing the internal affairs of South Africa, not even the police when he was arrested. He neither made such claim to the Portuguese police when he was interrogated by them. It is very possible that he believed that the two Prime Minister were in league with each other, which was accurate, but he could not possibly have believed that the Portuguese were influencing the internal affairs of South Africa.

Finally, why would Tsafendas tell everyone with whom discussed politics the same things about his ideology, but say something completely different to Dr. Sakinofsky? Tsafendas never repeated this comment to anyone, not even to the psychiatrists or the psychologists who examined him; Dr. Sakinofsky is the only person who ever said Tsafendas spoke of such things.

DR. VERWOERD BEING A “FOREIGNER”

Tsafendas never told anyone who testified to the police, to the Commission of Enquiry, but also to the author, that he considered himself to be a South African. He always described himself as African and Mozambican with a Greek and Shangaan background. He did not believe in nationalities, nations and borders, anyway; he felt people should be allowed to travel and live wherever they wished. What he said, time and again, was that he considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a “dictator”, a “tyrant”, an “oppressor of his own people” and “Hitler’s best student.” As we saw in Tsafendas’s police statement of September 19, he referred to Dr. Verwoerd as a “foreigner” and a “Hollander.” He had said then, “I always had a grudge against the South African Government on account of its racial policies and I hated Dr. Verwoerd because he was a foreigner - a Hollander.”²⁶⁸³

It is true that Dr. Verwoerd was born in Amsterdam, Holland, but Tsafendas was clearly using the word in his own wider sense. He was not speaking in terms of citizenship, rather from his personal ideology in which “foreigners” were colonialists and oppressors, such as the ruling Whites in South Africa and the Portuguese in Mozambique. His belief was ²⁶⁸² Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

²⁶⁸³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

that pre-independent African countries, as well as South Africa and Rhodesia under the oppressive minority rule of White racist dictators such as Dr. Verwoerd and Ian Smith, were “occupied lands,” another term Tsafendas routinely used, settled by a ruling minority of foreigners, whereas they should be governed on a democratic basis by the people who were born in those countries, be they Black or White. Tsafendas clearly expressed this belief to PIDE in Mozambique in 1964, after his arrest and when he was accused of “making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses.”²⁶⁸⁴ When interrogated by PIDE, Tsafendas “clearly stated he was in favour of the independence of Mozambique” and admitted that he wanted to see:

“A Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they White or Black, and therefore separated from the mother nation.”²⁶⁸⁵

This was a firmly held belief which he mentioned to numerous people, including Andreas Babiolakis, Father Nikola Banovic, Father Minas Constandinou, Mary Eintracht, Helen Grispos, Ira Kyriakakis, Antony and John Michaletos, Katerina Pnefma, Nick Papadakis, Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis etc. They all said that Tsafendas considered the Portuguese rulers of Mozambique, as well as the Whites in South Africa, who supported apartheid, to be “foreigners”, “occupiers” and “conquerors” and that he routinely used those words to describe them. Tsafendas believed that all those who supported the Portuguese and the white Rhodesian Government were foreigners who had stolen the land from the native Mozambicans and Rhodesians and set themselves up as unilateral rulers. Equally, he believed that the apartheid government and the apartheid-supporting Whites in South Africa were also foreigners and occupiers who had seized and settled native land forcibly removing and oppressing the Black South Africans.²⁶⁸⁶ Thus, in referring to Dr. Verwoerd as a foreigner, Tsafendas was expressing his conviction that all colonialists/white supremacists in Africa were foreigners, people from other parts of the world illegally occupying African land.

²⁶⁸⁴ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁶⁸⁵ PIDE Record of questions, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁶⁸⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

Furthermore, according to these several witnesses, Tsafendas considered apartheid to be a form of colonialism, not very different from the out-and-out colonialism of Mozambique and Rhodesia.²⁶⁸⁷ We should note here that in 1963, the policy of apartheid had been declared by the South African Communist Party to be “colonialism of a special type.”²⁶⁸⁸ It is possible that this pronouncement confirmed Tsafendas’s own convictions on the subject. Father Minas told the author about Tsafendas’s political ideas:

“Dimitris used to say that apartheid was like colonialism, because a few Europeans were ruling a land which belonged to Blacks because their ancestors had invaded and conquered it. I remember he used to call the Portuguese in Mozambique and I think the whites in South Africa too, ‘conquerors’ and ‘occupiers;’ he considered Mozambique and South Africa to be ‘occupied lands,’ conquered by foreigners. He used to say that Verwoerd was Hitler’s best student, because he had learned from him some of his methods and laws and he was applying them to the Blacks.”²⁶⁸⁹

As for Tsafendas seeing Dr. Verwoerd and the Whites in South Africa, Rhodesia and Mozambique as “foreigners,” he was certainly not the only one who thought that way. Even Dr. Verwoerd himself acknowledged this idea in a speech on February 8, 1961: “There are people who are far away and do not understand us. They see this southern point of Africa only as a White-dominated country in a large continent with over 200 million people who are black. And then they say we do not fit here, we are foreign to the body of Africa.”²⁶⁹⁰

DR. VERWOERD BEING AGAINST THE ENGLISH WAY OF LIFE

This is again something Tsafendas never mentioned to the two hundred-plus witnesses interviewed by the police, the Commission of Enquiry and the author. Dr. Sakinofsky in his testimony quoted Tsafendas as stating that Dr. Verwoerd was against the “English way of life,” which Tsafendas favoured. This excerpt was read by the author to fifty-eight people who knew Tsafendas, including nine who knew him very well: his half-sister Katerina Pnema, three friends who grew up with him, Ira Kyriakakis, Mary Eintracht and Andreas ²⁶⁸⁷ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁶⁸⁸ Visser, “Postcoloniality of a Special Type: Theory and Its Appropriations in South Africa”, p. 79; Volpe, Race, Class and the Apartheid State, p. 28-35.

²⁶⁸⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁶⁹⁰ Pelzer, Verwoerd Speaks: Speeches 1948-66, p. 494.

Babiolakis, and Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis, Nick Papadakis, Father Nikola Banovic, Father Minas Constandinou, Father Michalis Visvinis and Fotini Gavasiadis. Not one of them believes he could have made such a comment and to have really meant it.²⁶⁹¹ Tsafendas never repeated the “way of life” comment to anyone else, including medical experts who examined him later.

Tsafendas was also anti-British because of British assistance to the royalists during the Greek Civil War and also because of that country’s former colonial policies,²⁶⁹² therefore it seems unlikely that Tsafendas was concerned about the British Commonwealth or the “English way of life.” However, Tsafendas supported the British Labour Party because of its stance against apartheid and often attended party meetings in London.²⁶⁹³ He considered London to be his favourite city and an ideal place to live, if it was not for the weather and his failure to get a work permit. He was impressed that many different people lived side by side in London and there was no evident racism.²⁶⁹⁴

More importantly, Tsafendas despised royalty and titles. When the British king and queen visited South Africa in 1947, Eleni Vlachopoulos, Tsafendas’s half-sister, who was still at school at the time, wrote or recited a poem or just participated in a ceremony in their honour. She was given a mug bearing a picture of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth, which she treasured and which is now in the possession of her son. When Tsafendas found out about it, he protested jokingly in a letter to his father for allowing her to participate in the celebrations, since Michalis, too, was anti-royalist.²⁶⁹⁵

After the Second World War, Tsafendas’s father had become anti-British, too, because of that country’s support for the royalists in the Greek Civil War.²⁶⁹⁶ When Tsafendas returned to South Africa and spent nine months in Pretoria in 1964, he often ate or ²⁶⁹¹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017; Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

²⁶⁹² Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁶⁹³ Edward Furness statement to the police 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁶⁹⁴ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁶⁹⁵ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²⁶⁹⁶ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

visited his half-sister's house. The mug was on display in her house and he told his sister that if he saw it he would "throw it out of the window." Of course, it was a joke and he never did.²⁶⁹⁷

Further, it is clear Tsafendas was lying when he told Dr. Sakinofsky his mother was English. Dr. Sakinofsky had no way of knowing the truth, which was that Tsafendas's mother was born in Mozambique to a Mozambican mother and a German father. He never told anyone apart from Dr. Sakinofsky, that his mother was "a member of an overseas Royal Family." All of Tsafendas's relatives and two of the priests smiled at this comment.²⁶⁹⁸

DR. VERWOERD BEING AGAINST A "CAPE TO CAIRO" UNION

The Cape to Cairo reference is one of the strongest indications that Tsafendas was lying to Dr. Sakinofsky. Once again, none of the two hundred witnesses ever heard Tsafendas say Dr. Verwoerd opposed the idea of a Cape to Cairo union. They never even heard him mentioning the Cape to Cairo union. Tsafendas himself never mentioned it to the police when he was questioned; there is no reference to it in any of the reports by the South African police or PIDE, and it appears that Dr. Sakinofsky is the only person ever to hear him saying it. Furthermore, a Cape to Cairo union was one of Cecil Rhodes'²⁶⁹⁹ dreams for Africa.²⁷⁰⁰ As a fanatical anti-colonialist, Tsafendas had no sympathy for the ideals of an arch imperialist such as Cecil Rhodes.

All the witnesses who knew Tsafendas and who were interviewed by the author were asked whether Tsafendas ever commented about Rhodes and whether he would have ²⁶⁹⁷ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²⁶⁹⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 22 April 2016; Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁶⁹⁹ (1853-1902) Rhodes was part of the imperial machine, a politician and a businessman with an interest in mining. He funded the South African territory of "Rhodesia" which was named after him. He served as Prime Minister of the Cape Colony in South Africa from 1890 to 1896 (The Times (London), 'Death of Mr. Rhodes', 27 March 1902: 7). A highly polarising figure, a statue of him was removed from Cape Town University in 2015 amid emotional scenes as reported by the BBC (BBC, 'Rhodes Statue Removed in Cape Town as Crowd Celebrates', BBC, 9 April 2015. Retrieved from: <http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-africa-32236922>).

²⁷⁰⁰ One of Rhodes' dreams for a united Africa was the construction of a railway running from the Cape of Good Hope in South Africa to Cairo in Egypt, a great "red line" on the map of the continent. On world maps of that era, British dominions were always denoted in red. Rhodes had secured much of southern and central Africa for the British Empire. He felt that the best way to "unify the possessions, facilitate governance, enable the military to move quickly to hot spots or conduct war, help settlement, and foster trade" would be to build a "Cape to Cairo Railway" (Lewis R. Freeman, "Rhodes's 'All Red' Route: The Effect of the War on the Cape-To-Cairo and the Control of a Continent", (1915). In Walter Hines Page and Arthur Wilson Page, The World's Work, Volume 29; A History of Our Time, RareBooksClub.com, 2012, p. 327-355).

supported such an idea. Some respondents were not able to give a definite answer, but the majority discounted such a possibility outright. Let's examine the evidence:

- Tsafendas himself told the police on September 11, "I was anti-colonial, against slavery and in favour of all colonies which were controlled by Belgium, France and Portugal to be afforded self-government."²⁷⁰¹ His ideas as expressed in this statement were confirmed to the author by several witnesses.
- He attended anti-colonialist meetings and demonstrations in London.²⁷⁰²
- He considered it a disgrace that Zimbabwe had been named Rhodesia in honour of Rhodes.²⁷⁰³
- He told Katerina Pnema and her husband Gerry that one day Rhodes's statues in Africa would be brought down by the people.²⁷⁰⁴ The monument to Cecil Rhodes at Cape Town University was brought down in April 2015.²⁷⁰⁵
- He believed the Whites in Mozambique, South Africa and Zimbabwe had commandeered the land from its rightful owners. Thus these territories were "occupied lands" ruled by "occupiers." However, he recognised the right of Whites who accepted majority rule and opposed colonial government to live there.²⁷⁰⁶
- Tsafendas admitted to the Commission of Enquiry that he endeavoured to recruit people for an uprising against the colonialist Portuguese in Mozambique.²⁷⁰⁷
- PIDE characterised Tsafendas as a "partisan for the independence of Mozambique"²⁷⁰⁸ and admitted that "it is true that one finds in him an obvious spirit of revolt in relation to the Portuguese Administration, and favouring the independence of Mocambique."²⁷⁰⁹

²⁷⁰¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁷⁰² Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁷⁰³ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²⁷⁰⁴ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²⁷⁰⁵ BBC, 'Rhodes Statue Removed in Cape Town as Crowd Celebrates', BBC, 9 April 2015.

²⁷⁰⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁷⁰⁷ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 32.

²⁷⁰⁸ Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁷⁰⁹ Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

- Another PIDE report stated that Tsafendas wanted to see a “Mozambique governed by natives whether white or black, but separate from the mother-country (Portugal)” and that “he is all for the Independence of this Province.”²⁷¹⁰
- Tsafendas was arrested five times by the Portuguese Police in Mozambique because of his Communist and anti-colonial activities, while he was also banned from entering the country from 1951 to 1963 due to these activities.²⁷¹¹
- He was arrested in Mozambique accused of pretending to be a religious missionary while in reality, preaching “in favour of Mozambique’s independence.”²⁷¹²
- Father Hanno Probst reported Tsafendas to a security officer as a “communist and a dangerous person.”²⁷¹³ “He started swearing at the Mozambique government, saying it did nothing for the black people.”²⁷¹⁴
- According to Inspector Horacio Ferreira, of the Portuguese Security Police in Mozambique, Tsafendas was “intense anti-White” and told him that “the Portuguese Government has never done anything for their non-Whites.”²⁷¹⁵
- One day after the assassination, a secret telegram from the South African embassy in Lisbon informed the South African police that Tsafendas “has a criminal record in Mozambique, where he is said to have been arrested on several occasions after creating public disturbances, including shouting pro-Communist and anti-Portuguese slogans.”²⁷¹⁶
- A report by of Col. van Wyk of the South African police characterised Tsafendas as being “intensely anti-white.”²⁷¹⁷
- Peter Pappas stated that Tsafendas spoke angrily about the Salazar regime in

²⁷¹⁰ PIDE report regarding Demitrio Tsafendas or Dimitrios Tsafendakis, 19 January 1965. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas

²⁷¹¹ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁷¹² PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁷¹³ Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁷¹⁴ Father Hanno Probst statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁷¹⁵ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Demitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁷¹⁶ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Lisbon, to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁷¹⁷ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Demitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

Portugal and about the Mozambique police.²⁷¹⁸

- Also, in July 1966, just two months before the assassination, Tsafendas gave an interview to a reporter named N.D. Hartford of the Cape Argus. They had already met at the beginning of the year when Tsafendas came to the newspaper and enquired whether there was any news of the freedom fighters of Mozambique. He described himself as an “anti-Portuguese rebel and an antagonist of the Portuguese dictatorship.”²⁷¹⁹
- Tsafendas admired Ahmed Ben Bella, Fidel Castro, Amílcar Cabral, Frantz Fanon, Kwame Nkrumah and Patrice Lumumba, extensively quoting them throughout his whole life.²⁷²⁰
- Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis said of Tsafendas:

“He was very passionate about the independence of Mozambique, and generally about the independence of all colonies. He supported Pan-Africanism and deeply admired anti-colonialist leaders like [Fidel] Castro, [Ahmed] Ben Bella, [Kwame] Nkrumah, [Amílcar] Cabral ... His favourite was [Patrice] Lumumba; he cried when talking about him [because he was murdered]. He had read a lot about them and quoted them often; he could tell you everything about their lives. He even suggested books about them for me to read. He also often quoted [Frantz] Fanon, especially with regard to the assassination [of Dr. Verwoerd], when he was trying to justify it as a justifiable political act. He made me read two of his [Fanon’s] books.”²⁷²¹

- Costas Poriazis characterized Tsafendas as “a political animal. The most politicized person I’ve ever met” and that “there was fire in his eyes when talking politics, especially about the struggle for the independence of Mozambique and other countries in Africa. He was clearly pro-violence [for political reasons].”²⁷²²

All the above evidence is mutually compatible with what Tsafendas told the police and with what several witnesses told the author. However, they are incompatible with what he told Dr. Sakinofsky, which was something that he was the only one to ever have the ²⁷¹⁸ Rand Daily Mail, ‘Tsafendas: In the Eyes of A Friend’, 14 September 1966.

²⁷¹⁹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 75.

²⁷²⁰ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁷²¹ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁷²² Costas Poriazis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

“privilege” of hearing.

None of the seventy-five witnesses who were interviewed by the author was ever told by Tsafendas about the “Cape to Cairo” idea. According to twenty-six witnesses, Cleanthes Alachiotis, Father Nikola Banovic, Father Ioannis Tsafaridis, Father Michalis Visvinis, Father Minas Constandinou, Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis, Alexandra Vaporidou, Katerina Pnema, Michael Vlachopoulos, Eleni Vlachopoulos, Ira Kyriakakis, Helen Grispos, Elias Constantaras, Nikolaos Billis, Nick Papadakis, George Kantas, Paul Babiolakis, Nickolas Kambouris, Mary Eintracht, Vasilis Perselis, Emanuil Mastromanolis, Costas Poriiazis, Vasilis Perselis, Grigoris Pouftis and Michalis Vasilakis, Tsafendas’s anti-colonialism would never have permitted him to support such an ideal. In fact, Tsafendas declared that Rhodes’ statue and the statues of all other colonialists would one day be removed from everywhere in Africa. These witnesses’ statements about Tsafendas’s political ideas have been included in this chapter already, so they will not be included here again.

Finally, Tsafendas spoke extensively about politics and his life while he was in prison and later in the hospital, but only to people he trusted. He never told anyone any of the things he told Dr. Sakinofsky but repeated what he told all these witnesses prior to the assassination - for example, that he was anti-colonialist and wanted all countries in South Africa to gain their independence.²⁷²³ All the foregoing evidence as to Tsafendas’s political convictions concerning colonialism and Cecil Rhodes make it evident that Tsafendas never supported such an idea and that he was simply lying to Dr. Sakinofsky.

²⁷²³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

DR. VERWOERD'S MEETING WITH CHIEF LEABUA JONATHAN

According to Dr. Sakinofsky, this meeting was for Tsafendas “a further blow to the Commonwealth.” He believed Tsafendas “misinterpreted this meeting as being related to the immorality legislation.” It is highly unlikely that Tsafendas, because of his ideology, would have been concerned about the Commonwealth, something he had never mentioned to anyone before. He talked politics constantly, especially with people he knew well, freely expressing his political ideas.²⁷²⁴ If he had any interest in the Commonwealth, he would have told some of the about two hundred people who were interviewed by the South African police, the Commission and the author.

Furthermore, Tsafendas mentioned the Dr. Verwoerd-Jonathan meeting in his statement to the police on September 11 made no reference to the Commonwealth or the immorality legislation. What he said then was: “The meeting between Dr. Verwoerd and Chief Leabua Jonathan was a contributory fact in my decision to murder Dr. Verwoerd. I say this because I thought the Prime Minister was dealing with the wrong person. Both Dr. Verwoerd and Jonathan were, to my mind, not the real representatives of their countries. I wanted the Paramount Chief of Basutoland to represent the Basuto nation. I wanted to see a government representing all the South African people. I do not think the Nationalist Government is representative of the people and I wanted to see a different government.”²⁷²⁵

Far from referencing the Immorality Act or the Commonwealth, Tsafendas characterised Dr. Verwoerd as a dictator in his usual terms, stating that the prime minister did not represent all South Africans and he (Tsafendas) wanted to see a government that would represent all of the South African people. Tsafendas characterised Dr. Verwoerd as a dictator to more than thirty witnesses. He never commented on Chief Jonathan to any of the witnesses interviewed by the police, the Commission or by the author. As for the Immorality Act, it is true that Tsafendas strongly opposed and openly criticised it, but he did the same with several other apartheid laws, comparing them to the Nuremberg Laws of Nazi Germany.

²⁷²⁴ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁷²⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

TSAFENDAS'S APPLICATION FOR A DOUBLE IDENTITY CARD

According to Dr. Sakinofsky, Tsafendas told him that he applied for such a card in order to “try and find a wife among either the White or non-White group: he stated that he had been rejected by women of both race groups and therefore was not able to get married.” Tsafendas is lying again, since several witnesses and he himself stated that he had only applied for reclassification as Coloured.²⁷²⁶

What is more, there is no evidence that Tsafendas was rejected by women of both groups. He had a Black girlfriend, Stella, in Mozambique in the late 1930s, a White Jewish girl around 1940 in South Africa,²⁷²⁷ a Portuguese girlfriend, probably White, in Portugal in the 1950s,²⁷²⁸ a White Communist German woman in Germany also in the 1950s²⁷²⁹ and a Turkish Muslim woman in Istanbul in 1961. The Turkish woman wanted to marry him, but neither was willing to convert to each other's religion and anyway, Tsafendas wanted to go back to Africa.²⁷³⁰ These were at least some of Tsafendas's serious relationships as far as the author was able to establish, but it is very possible that there were others.

Tsafendas never said much about his relationships with women to the priests who visited him in prison or the hospital or to other friends and acquaintances. Asked about girlfriends and how far he had gone with them, Tsafendas would say, “A gentleman never discusses such matters.”²⁷³¹ The author learned about the above relationships from people who were close to Tsafendas at the time and not because he talked about them.

TSAFENDAS NOT HAVING ANY “PASSIVITY FEELINGS”

Dr. Sakinofsky stated that Tsafendas did not have any “passivity feelings” and as we see, Tsafendas did not even mention the tapeworm during this examination. Dr. Sakinofsky was the third doctor to examine Tsafendas on the day of the assassination and he mentioned it to none of them. Dr. Sakinofsky clearly stated that Tsafendas did not have any “passivity feelings” which means to the psychiatrists that, at least at the time, he did not believe he had a ²⁷²⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁷²⁷ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²⁷²⁸ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

²⁷²⁹ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

²⁷³⁰ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 4 November 2015.

²⁷³¹ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

tapeworm. Tsafendas was not embarrassed to talk about having a tapeworm to everybody he met twenty days after the assassination and, as we have seen, he told doctors in hospitals where he sought admission that he had a “fixation with a tapeworm.”

Thus, if Tsafendas believed he had a tapeworm, as he told these doctors, why did he not use it with Dr. Sakinofsky? The fact that Tsafendas did not have any passivity feelings proves that he did not believe he had a tapeworm, at least at that time. This was a very important issue and contradicted the defence’s line, but it was not picked up by the Attorney-General or the Judge; Dr. Sakinofsky was allowed to continue without being asked to clarify the issue and, as we will see, was not challenged about it in the cross-examination.

Tsafendas spoke freely about the tapeworm to all those who examined him twenty days after the assassination. However, on the day of the assassination, he did not mention it to anyone, not even to a psychiatrist. The idea that Tsafendas hid it for some reason could not possibly be valid, for why would he hide it from Dr. Sakinofsky that day but use it a month later? Even if we assume that Tsafendas was delusional about the things he told Dr. Sakinofsky that day, still he named reasons for killing Dr. Verwoerd which were different from those he would use later with Dr. Cooper and even with Dr. Sakinofsky himself. Again, this suggests that at that time Tsafendas had not decided to use the tapeworm story, having had three opportunities to do so, especially with Dr. Sakinofsky who was a psychiatrist, none of which he used. This again, suggests that Tsafendas was play-acting according to the situation, as he did with the Portuguese and his Saint Peter act when he was accused of campaigning for the independence of Mozambique.

DR. KOSSEW’S DIAGNOSIS

The Defence Counsel refers to Dr. Kossew’s diagnosis of Tsafendas without mentioning that he was diagnosed as such based on yet another delusional idea he appeared to have at the time, this time of a persecutory nature. He had claimed to Dr. Kossew that more than twenty people had died from food poisoning in the house where he was staying²⁷³² and did not mention the tapeworm at all. The incident has been discussed extensively in Dr. Kossew’s testimony.

However, the important issue here is that Tsafendas appeared to have had another delusional idea, apart from the tapeworm, just two months before the assassination and this was an idea that he never repeated to anyone else. All the psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas claimed that he had the tapeworm since the mid-1930s, therefore he must still believe he had it when he was examined by Dr. Kossew, even if he did not mention it. The strange thing is not that he did not mention it, but that he appeared to hold two delusional ideas simultaneously - the tapeworm and the poison murders. This again, suggests that Tsafendas was play-acting according to the situation, as he did with the Portuguese and his Saint Peter act when he was accused of campaigning for the independence of Mozambique. The issue of having two delusional ideas simultaneously has been discussed in Dr. Cooper's testimony.

²⁷³² Dr. Ralph Kossew testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

CONCLUSION OF THE FIRST EXAMINATION

Everything that Tsafendas told Dr. Sakinofsky during their first meeting was a lie or he was extremely confused, which is not unlikely taking under consideration his situation. The fact that he never mentioned any of the things he told Dr. Sakinofsky to anyone else, not even to him again, suggests fabrication. If Tsafendas really meant the things he said, he would surely have told at least one other person, not to mention the doctors who began examining him three weeks later. What he said was completely contradictory to his beliefs as well as to all the evidence gathered by the South African police and later from over seventy interviews and 12,000 documents from archival sources which the author collected. More importantly, the evidence of the police is compatible with the evidence gathered by the author, and incompatible with what Tsafendas told Dr. Sakinofsky.

One important issue concerning this first meeting was not adequately examined and was left unchallenged by the Judge and the Attorney-General. This was that Tsafendas did not tell Dr. Sakinofsky anything about the tapeworm and he did not have any passivity feelings at the time. Twenty days later, Tsafendas would speak freely about the tapeworm to anyone, including Dr. Sakinofsky. He had no problem talking to doctors about it, as he had done happily in the past and would do again in the future.

The doctors at the summary trial would claim that Tsafendas had had a tapeworm since the mid-1930s, that it was controlling his life and was responsible for killing Dr. Verwoerd. If he really believed that, why did he not tell Dr. Sakinofsky so shortly after the assassination? Why did he give Dr. Sakinofsky different motives to those he would give later to the doctors? And of course different to the ones he gave to the police? The big difference though between the reasons he gave to the police and the reasons he gave to the doctors is that the evidence collected at the time by the police and the evidence later collected by the author are entirely compatible with what Tsafendas told the police but incompatible with what he told Dr. Sakinofsky. This alone suggests that Tsafendas did not at the time intend to use the tapeworm act and only decided to use it later when he could no longer endure the torture.

If you should ask any of those who know the author of this study, they will say that he does not like the heat and prefers cold weather. If ever that author should murder someone and then tell a psychiatrist or his lawyer, “I don’t like the cold weather, I like the heat,” what would all those who knew him for so many years say? This is exactly how the people who knew Tsafendas well felt when they heard about the tapeworm, that he was insane and about all the things he told Dr. Sakinofsky that first day.

Dr. Sakinofsky also very correctly suggested that a forensic psychiatrist should be called by the court for such a case, but his suggestion never materialised. As a matter of fact none of the psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas was a forensic psychiatrist. According to Professor Tuviah Zabow, if Tsafendas was a schizophrenic when he was examined by Dr. Sakinofsky and the other psychiatrists, he must still have been one while he was in prison and then in the hospital. His health must also have been deteriorating, given that fact that he did not receive any medical treatment and he was in solitary confinement for twenty-three hours per day for at least twenty-two years. While he was deprived of any contact with his fellow prisoners, he was also brutally assaulted and kept in a room next to the death chamber where executions took place regularly.²⁷³³ However, Tsafendas remained ever faithful to the ideas he had from his youth and never told anyone the sort of things he told Dr. Sakinofsky.

²⁷³³ Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016.

DR. SAKINOFSKY'S SECOND EXAMINATION OF TSAFENDAS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you see the accused subsequent to the 6th September, 1966?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I saw him exactly a month after the first time, on the 6th October.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: In the E.E.G. department at Groote Schuur Hospital.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is the E.E.G. department?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: It is the electroencephalography laboratory.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was an E.E.G. taken in this case?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: An E.E.G. had just been taken.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Do you know the result of that E.E.G.?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is the result?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: It was normal.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What does that indicate in itself?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: It indicates in itself, as far as the diagnosis of schizophrenia is concerned, nothing.

JUDGE BEYERS: It would have been different if you were dealing with an epileptic?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, indeed.

JUDGE BEYERS: Then you would have found a dysrhythmia or something, which might have been indicative?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Quite so.

JUDGE BEYERS: But on schizophrenia you don't expect to find any dysrhythmia or any other thing wrong with the encephalograph?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No.

JUDGE BEYERS: Is that right?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Quite right.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: On the 6th October, then, did you have an interview with the accused?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I did.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Of what duration?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: About an hour and a half to two hours, I should estimate.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you tell the Court the findings that you made at this interview?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. My findings confirmed my initial impression. The content of the interview was somewhat different, in that he then for the first time spoke to me about this tapeworm that I have heard discussed in this Court, which I regard as a hypochondriacal delusion, a delusion referring to bodily functions. He spoke more about the episode in Portugal when he claimed to have been ill-treated in a paranoid way, and the content of what he had to say was that the Portuguese doctors and nurses, the nuns in the hospital that he was in in Lisbon, were trying to ruin him by giving him shocks on the head. I asked him what the reason was for this. He said he didn't know the reason, but they had asked him if he was a Roman Catholic and he said he wasn't, and the hospital was run by nuns, so he assumed it was because he was a Protestant that they were trying to ruin him. He then went on to reveal to me ideas of passivity, by saying - I said: "Are you going so far as to say that they tried to ruin you because you weren't a Roman Catholic?" He said: "Maybe they were trying to change me." I said: "Change you? How could they change you?" He said "Do something to my brain." I don't want to go into too much detail, but the mechanism which they were using he said was a transformed radio, and then he revealed what I regard as another symptom of schizophrenia, delusional perception, which means that an innocent visual image, something which one may see, like this microphone, takes on a sinister meaning to a patient. He said he had passed an old radio on one of the tables and immediately he knew that this was the instrument that was being used to act on his brain. He called it a "graphanola." I said: "What is a graphanola? Is that a word?" He said: "It is a radio." I said: "Is it a Portuguese word?" He said: "Portuguese, yes." I have looked up this word in seven Portuguese-English dictionaries, and it doesn't exist. I can only conclude that this is what we in psychiatry call a neologism.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is a neologism?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: It is a word which is manufactured by a patient with one of the major mental disorders, chiefly schizophrenia.

JUDGE BEYERS: Is it one of the symptoms of schizophrenic people that they manufacture words?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: Is that what you are telling us?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Some schizophrenics manufacture words. This was the only neologism I elicited.

JUDGE BEYERS: The graphanola?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Graphanola.

JUDGE BEYERS: Did you look up a Greek dictionary?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No, I didn't.

JUDGE BEYERS: It starts with a Greek word?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: It may exist in Greek.

JUDGE BEYERS: And he also speaks Greek, I believe?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, he speaks a number of languages. I didn't look up the Arabic one either.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he claim that this word was a Greek word?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No, he claimed it was a Portuguese word.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What else did you find?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: He said that this graphanola had been used in previous murders which had been hushed up in Lisbon. One of them was the case of a son of a banker. I couldn't really follow him in his reasoning. He didn't seem to have much to go on to establish this, and I took this as part of his delusional system.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What else did you find?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Ideas of reference, which I can quote. This is a symptom of schizophrenia, too. He said that once when he was sitting in a cafe where Coloured people used to gather, from the colonies, "they mentioned at one of the tables I was sitting at what was taking place", namely, that he was having shock treatment and that his brain was being washed. This is an idea of reference. He also showed the symptom of depersonalisation, which means a feeling of change in the body, which is so bizarre that it is regarded as psychotic. I asked him:

“Do you feel any strange sensation in your body, apart from this tapeworm?” and he said, “No. I don’t feel myself at all sometimes. I don’t feel my body. I don’t feel myself.” I said: “Tell me about that. That is important.” He said: “I don’t feel myself. I am walking, I just don’t feel myself. There are times when I more or less feel my body, but there are periods when I don’t feel myself. I feel I am walking lightly. I feel as if I am floating in thin air.” I think these were the chief features of that particular interview. He said that he had been turned into a hermaphrodite, which I think is significant - just paging through this.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: After the second interview, what was your opinion? To what extent were you now going to review your earlier opinion?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: At that point I felt I could confirm the diagnosis, broadly speaking, of schizophrenia, but I thought one could go further and try and reconcile some of the diagnostic difficulties, by using a particular sub-category of schizophrenia, which is called paraphrenia and which accounts for the relative preservation of this man’s personality. The fact that he was able to amble around the world for 30-odd years without spending more than short periods, that he appears to have spent in mental hospitals. It also accounts for the preservation of his emotions. He was not quite as flat and cold as I expected him to be. And the diagnosis of paraphrenia, hypochondriacal paraphrenia, seemed to me to fit this. There is a textbook - may I refer to it at this stage - called Schizophrenia, by Professor Fish from Liverpool, wherein he quotes the paraphrenias as classified by Professor Leonhard of Frankfurt, and he says: “Hypochondriacal Paraphrenia: The bodily hallucinations are usually referred to internal organs and are usually described so grotesquely that it is impossible for a normal person to empathise with the patient.” Further on, he says “Affectivity (that is, emotion) is fairly well preserved. These patients have thought-disorder which Leonhard calls ‘unconcentrated thinking.’ They tend to wander from the point, talk about subjects loosely related to the task in hand, and are inclined to “verbal derailments.” And I thought that, while there may still be diagnostic difficulties about the exact sub-class, he fitted into the broad category of paraphrenia very nicely.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Are there any further comments that you have to make on your second interview, otherwise I think we can now go to your third interview?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No. I did consider, by the way, in both the first and second interviews, whether he was simulating mental illness, and my conclusion was that he wasn’t, because there were obvious schizophrenic symptoms which he did not have when I led him up to them, and he seemed to be at pains to tell me exactly how he was feeling, rather than to fit in with the pattern that I wanted to fit him into.

COMMENTS ON DR. SAKINOFSKY'S SECOND EXAMINATION OF TSAFENDAS

Tsafendas told Dr. Sakinofsky that he was a Protestant, whereas he was Greek Orthodox. He would never have said that unless he was lying for a reason or for fun. He had always asserted his membership of the Greek Orthodox Church and he knew Christianity too well to mix up Greek Orthodox and Protestant.

Tsafendas also told Dr. Sakinofsky that the Portuguese had tried to “change him.” Tsafendas spoke to several witnesses about this, but not in the way he did with the doctor. He told these witnesses, including the Cape Argus, Patrick O’Ryan, Andreas Babiolakis, Father Nikola Banovic, Father Minas Constandinou, Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis, Michalis Vasilakis, Nikolas Kambouris, Mary Eintracht and Ira Kyriakakis that the Portuguese had attempted to “brainwash him,” using the same verb every time. He did mean that they tried to “change him,” but he explained explicitly that they wanted to change his political ideas, using brainwashing and torture. Tsafendas spoke a lot about this, explaining that when they were not torturing him, his captors were pressing on him the advantages that the Mozambicans enjoyed because of the Portuguese, like hospitals, churches and a modern infrastructure.²⁷³⁴

THE GRAPHANOLA

Tsafendas also spoke to Dr. Sakinofsky about a “graphanola” and explained that it was a “radio” that was used to torture him. Dr. Sakinofsky, unaware of the word, concluded that it did not exist and that Tsafendas made it up and this was also a sign of schizophrenia since “some schizophrenics manufacture words.” However, if “graphanola” did not exist, “graphonola” certainly did, not only in Portuguese, but also in English, in which it is spelled “grafonola.” The graphonola was a 1907 improved version of the Columbia company’s graphophone, which itself was a development of the original phonograph, recognisable by its horn. The original acoustic version of the graphonola was later adapted for electricity.

²⁷³⁴ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

Prior to the assassination, Tsafendas told Father Nikola Banovic, Andreas Babiolakis, Nick Papadakis and Mary Eintracht that his torturers in Portugal had given him electric shocks using a wooden box that looked like the graphophone his father had in Lourenço Marques.²⁷³⁵ After the assassination Tsafendas told Father Minas Constandinou that when he was given electric shocks by the South African police, they also used a small wooden box with wires of different colours, though this time he did not mention the word “graphophone.” He just said it was much smaller than the device used by the Portuguese,²⁷³⁶ which he had previously said was “like a graphophone.”

The attached photographs below show an electric shock equipment and a graphophone from the 1950s and they look very much alike. Tsafendas’s description was quite accurate. Dr. Sakinofsky and the Court, probably unaware of the equipment used by the Portuguese and the South African police to administer electric shocks, could hardly envisage that the wooden box used for such a procedure looked “like a graphophone.” They were obviously unaware that the “graphonola/grafonola” and the “graphophone” were effectively the same device. Tsafendas did not make up the word and described clearly the equipment used by the Portuguese to torture him.

About twenty years after the assassination, while discussing his summary trial with Father Minas, Tsafendas said that he had often tried hard to not laugh at the things they were said about him in the court; this must have been one of those occasions.²⁷³⁷

²⁷³⁵ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

²⁷³⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁷³⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

Graphophone

Electric Shock

Box

CONCLUSION REGARDING DR. SAKINOFSKY'S SECOND EXAMINATION

Tsafendas found inspiration for his exchanges with Dr. Sakinofsky from past experiences such as the torture, then changing them a little to make himself sound schizophrenic.

Tsafendas spoke to several people about some of the things he told Dr. Sakinofsky, such as the torture in Portugal, but he never mentioned the absurd things he had volunteered. Why did he tell the absurdities to Dr. Sakinofsky and not to the people he knew? Clearly to present himself to the medical expert as schizophrenic, something he did not need to do with other people in his life.

Tsafendas said later that most of the things that were heard during his summary trial were lies and sometimes he wanted to laugh.²⁷³⁸ The incident where the word graphonola was not recognised by anyone in the court and was misunderstood by Dr. Sakinofsky must have been one of them. Finally, Dr. Sakinofsky stated that Tsafendas spoke to him for the first time about the tapeworm during this meeting, but he did not elaborate further.

²⁷³⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

DR. SAKINOFSKY'S THIRD EXAMINATION OF TSAFENDAS

THE TAPEWORM AND THE KILLING OF DR. VERWOERD

DEFENCE COUNSEL: He is very preoccupied with his health, is he? He is very preoccupied with his state of health?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: In the third interview he talked about this tapeworm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Now we come to the third interview, again at your request - is that correct?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You saw the accused where?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I saw him at Caledon Square on the 14th of October.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: For how long did you see him?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: For about an hour.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you give the Court your findings and your comments?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. My findings were - I wanted to lead him on to the tapeworm at the beginning, because I wanted to find out more about what this meant to him, and we started talking about the tapeworm, and then he spontaneously said to me: "It may even be a serpent", and went on to describe in a delusional way how this tapeworm was a viper, a demon, a dragon, I thought in a way which wasn't at all solicited. He indicated exactly what this meant to him when he said as follows: "There is a lot in the scriptures about tapeworms. I got to the point in my church not to take bread and wine, when everybody else in the morning used to take it, the communion — you know what you call it, communion?" I said: "Yes." He said: "I said to myself, well, if I have a devil how can I be a partaker? So I left off when I came to my senses. This hasn't been long, this has been a year or two that I have stopped taking wine and bread. I thought, well, if I am taking it, I am trying to make a demon within me holy, or something." To me this was a grotesque description which fitted in with this being a delusion, not simply an idea.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is its significance?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: The significance of delusion?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Yes?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, I think the significance of this means that this man has schizophrenia, and if it can be shown that he has had this delusion over 20, 30 years, then I would say he has chronic delusional insanity — that kind of schizophrenia. I also found identification with the tapeworm. He alludes very much to the scriptures in this interview. He quoted a passage. I asked him if he was possessed by the tapeworm. He said: “Yes, I am possessed by a tapeworm put there by African enemies, African witchcraft.” I said: “Is it as if you were a kind of robot that they can send round the world to do what they want to, because you have got a tapeworm inside you that makes you do things?”, and he gave me an answer which I think as again showing that he wasn’t simulating. He said: “I don’t know what the effects are of that thing, but it seems to have ended up as if this had been the effect.” He quoted a passage from the Bible - I can’t lay my hands right on it - about “Lord, I am a worm, I am a worm”, that somebody says somewhere in the Bible. He drew an analogy between the Old Testament story of Moses and the serpent swallowing other serpents, but when I said did he see Dr. Verwoerd as a kind of Pharaoh and himself as a kind of Moses, he denied that. This was the content of that interview, more or less confirming the findings of the first two interviews.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he say whether this tapeworm sleeps, what its habits were?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. We went into some detail. He said that when he fed this tapeworm, it was like a boa constrictor which coiled itself round his gut, and when he fed it then the boa constrictor left him and left his emotions free. He said that it purred like a cat. In other words, he gave this concept life in a bizarre, grotesque, schizophrenic way. He gave it an animistic life, like someone possessed.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was there any other finding that you made?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, he had more ideas of reference.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is an idea of reference?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Idea of reference is usually found - it is found more often in schizophrenia than it is in another major mental disorder, an affective psychosis, a depressive psychosis, and it concerns the belief that other people, who may not know you from a bar of soap, are talking about you. Like when he said that in the cafe the coloured people were talking about the fact that he had got shock treatment. In this case he spoke about the Bible as having some personal reference to him. He said: “These passages have personally a deep meaning. A lot of these phrases have a meaning for me. They mean something which doesn’t mean probably anything, which other people just call a lot of rubbish. They can't see it, they can't realise it." I said: "And it has meaning for you but not for other people?", and he said: "Yes, it has meaning for me but not for other people. Something that other people wouldn't understand." I asked him what kind of meaning did it have for him, "Does it mean that you have to do certain things as a result of it?" He said: "It means that it enlightens me. It puts me in the same situation." And then he er-ed. I said: "At the time that you killed Dr. Verwoerd, had you been guided by the Bible?", and he denied this, but he said it was as if he had been hypnotised by the tapeworm, because he couldn't remember what had happened. And he went on to say in a way which aroused considerable emotion: "I fell on him, people tell me, and it is probably true, but I don't remember a thing about stabbing him. I could have stabbed him a thousand times without knowing it." I said: "How? Because you were under hypnotism?" "I don't know what it was. You are a doctor, I am asking you. I was stabbing him, and I have never stabbed people before. I never handled a knife before. I was not myself. I was just stabbing him, and if the people hadn't lifted me off I would have been stabbing a corpse."

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you put the question to him: did the tapeworm have anything to do with the act of killing Dr. Verwoerd?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, I did, several times. He never said to me that the tapeworm, as one perhaps might have expected, that the tapeworm had told him to kill Dr. Verwoerd, but he said that the tapeworm, being a demon inside him, had taken him over, and he remembered another case, when he had blurted out in Lisbon that he was a Protestant, he felt here again the tapeworm was responsible. But the main way in which he attempted to explain how the tapeworm had caused him to assassinate the late Prime Minister was that the tapeworm created a state of mind in him, when he was not himself. It had influenced his life so that he had become interested in a queer sect, wandered about trying to find a means of coping with this tapeworm, and had he not had the tapeworm he would not have been in this particular state of mind, of weakness.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he say that the tapeworm had corrupted him?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: He did say that, yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he say that it had influenced him?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, in the way I have described.

JUDGE BEYERS: I don't want to interrupt, but don't you think the doctor's views are quite clear enough by now? I am not stopping you; please go on. It is very clear to me what this doctor's opinion is.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I formed the impression that he - for instance, in this passage, if I may quote: I asked him if the tapeworm was the most important influence in his life. He said: "It has caused me to see how other people live. If I didn't have a tapeworm I'd probably be living only for myself. I would not know what the rest of the world was like, what other people thought, their difficulties. I would have taken life, I would have taken life ah ... I would have only seen things ah ... well, I would have taken life for granted. I would have just gone through life enjoying myself, taking life ..." And then he went on to explain how he struggled against this tapeworm within him, it had turned him into a kind of twisted saint. That is how he saw himself.

ASSESSOR: Was all this taken down on tape?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: This interview and the second interview were on a tape recorder.

ASSESSOR: What you are reading out to us now is actually what he said in his own words?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, when I quote, this is verbatim.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he speak with the same flow and fluency that you speak? How was the flow?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No, in the second and third interviews the initial pressure and excitement which had been present in the first interview were absent. Here there were lots of gaps in his train of thoughts and one might have formed a conclusion that this was thought blocking. This was an impedance of his thinking due to this disease process.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You say thought blocking. Is there a difference between thought blocking and thought disorder?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Thought blocking is a variety of thought disorder.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you find any other varieties of thought disorder?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, as I explained just now, there are several. The chief criteria I personally applied are: thought blocking, the interpenetration of thoughts which are not connected with the material that the patient is talking about; and asyndesis, which is a disjunction of utterances which have no meaning with each other, no consecutive meaning.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Your Lordship has suggested that it is pretty clear what this witness is saying

JUDGE BEYERS: It is pretty clear to me.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The issue of course is whether that view is acceptable to the Court. If that view is accepted by the court, then I have no further questions.

JUDGE BEYERS: The point is whether asking further questions is going to make it more acceptable to the Court than it is now. But I am certainly not telling you that it is accepted by the court.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I think I will proceed to put further questions.

(Cont.): I will put certain general questions to you. Is it legitimate, say for instance when you view your first report, to take single sentences out and say, well, they appear in order, they make sense in themselves, or must you read the whole of what he says and then draw the inference?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I would certainly say the latter, as a psychiatrist. This is absolute sine qua non. One cannot make a diagnosis on an isolated piece of behaviour. One has to take all behaviour and, in fact, backwards in time, into account. I can quote my old teacher, Prof. Sir Aubrey Lewis on this in Price's Textbook of Medicine, 9th Edition, page 1664. He says: "More important than any Burgle feature is the impression of the case as a whole (talking about schizophrenia). The development away from normal interest and response to the real world and the establishment instead of autistic self-satisfaction, so that the patient's personality is twisted awry as it were, and withdrawn from easy contact."

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What does autistic self-satisfaction mean?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Autistic means something which nobody can share with a patient. This is part of his inner life.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is that important in a schizophrenic?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. For instance, I would say that his delusion about this tape-worm is autistic. I cannot share it with him. While I am talking about the first report, what is talked about and the way he talked about the "Cape to Cairo" and the "Commonwealth", was this intelligible to you at the time?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: It was not intelligible to me. I could not see any connection between these slogans, almost. It seemed to me that what he was doing is that he was taking the news of the day and because of his diseased mental processes he was just throwing them out in a disconnected way. That is how it seemed to me. I couldn't understand it.

COMMENTS ON DR. SAKINOFSKY'S TESTIMONY REGARDING THE TAPEWORM AND THE KILLING OF DR. VERWOERD

Tsafendas told Dr. Sakinofsky that it was the tapeworm which made him travel to several countries. Apart from the fact that as we have seen the true story behind the tapeworm, Tsafendas never mentioned the tapeworm as a reason for his travels, which he called "forced globetrotting."²⁷³⁹ Naturally, he said nothing about it to the police either when he spoke to them about his travels.

More importantly, Tsafendas spoke to several witnesses, like Helen Daniels, Patrick O'Ryan about his travels and never mentioned to them that it was because of a tapeworm. We will not examine again what Tsafendas said about the tapeworm since it is pretty much the same as he told Dr. Cooper and all others who examined him while he was in custody in Caledon Square police station. The author read everything that Tsafendas told Dr. Sakinofsky to forty-six people who knew Tsafendas, including nine who knew him very well and for many years. Their reaction was exactly the same as with the things he told Dr. Cooper. The author would not list their comments here, as they have already been listed in Dr. Cooper's testimony.

However, Tsafendas told Dr. Sakinofsky something that he did not tell Dr. Cooper and it is further proof that he lied to him. According to Dr. Sakinofsky, Tsafendas told him that he "couldn't remember what had happened at the time of the killing," that "I fell on him, people tell me, and it is probably true, but I don't remember a thing about stabbing him. I could have stabbed him a thousand times without knowing it" and that it was as if he "had been hypnotised." This interview took place on October 14. Twice, just a month earlier, on September 11 and September 19, Tsafendas remembered perfectly well how it had happened and described in detail how he killed Dr. Verwoerd and even explained how he had planned it. He did not claim that he was hypnotised or any of the other things he told Dr. Sakinofsky.

On September 11, Tsafendas said:

²⁷³⁹ Demetrios Tsafendakis Affidavit, November 1965. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen, NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

“Some days after I started working in the House of Assembly, all kinds of thoughts came to my mind about murdering the Prime Minister. I saw an opportunity of shooting the Prime Minister from the lobby. I thought of obtaining a firearm. I knew that I had to obtain a licence for a firearm. Obtaining a licence would take too long. This I found out at one of the shops where I enquired about purchasing a firearm in Durban. I thought of going to a ship, the Eleni, which I knew was in Cape Town for repairs. I was acquainted with the crew members of the Eleni ... I had an idea that I might be able to buy a firearm on the ship because some sailors carry firearms.

I went to this ship about three to four weeks before the assassination of the Prime Minister. I saw the man in the engine room (the donkey man), who told me that the bosun, foreman of the crew, may know where I could obtain a firearm. He said he could get me a “Beretta” revolver and a knife. I also enquired from him about a spring type knife, which he said he could get for me. He said he wanted 80 dollars for the two items. I told him I wanted the revolver and the knife for self-defence, he said he wanted the money in American dollars. He did not show me a revolver or a knife. I said I would return in a couple of days with the money. I waited until the end of August when I got my pay. It was, I think, R95.00. I went to Barclays Bank, Adderley Street, Cape Town and enquired to buy 80 American dollars. I was told that it would cost R56. The lady teller wanted my passport.

The next day I brought my passport and she gave me the 80 dollars. I took a taxi and went to the ship. There I saw the bosun and told him that I have brought the money for the gun and the knife as arranged. He said he did not have the gun, but the galley boy had a small gun which he would try and get for me. The bosun went to the galley boy and brought a small gun which he said I could have for 30 dollars.

I thought it was a small calibre pistol and I decided to buy it. I took it without examining it. They had no bullets. I thought I could buy bullets from local stores. I took the pistol home where I examined it and discovered that it was a gas revolver. On Saturday the 3rd of September, I took the gas pistol back to the ship. I found the bosun with the intention to return the firearm to him. Both the bosun and the galley boy told me that they had spent the money. I wanted another firearm or the return of my money but ended up getting nothing. I went to the captain to protest, but as I saw I could get nothing and did not want to cause a scandal, I gave up and left. I returned to my room in Rondebosch.

The next thing is that I decided to use a knife to stab the Prime Minister in the House of Assembly. I never discussed my plans with anybody. The shops were closed over the weekend and the following Monday was a public holiday. At about 9 a.m. on Tuesday, 6/9/66, I went to town to buy the knives. I bought one knife from the first shop which was open. This shop is known as City Guns. Then I went to another shop further down the road and bought another knife. Both shops were closed when I arrived. I walked up and down the pavement waiting for the shops to open. I enquired at a certain shop as to when the sports shop would open. I cannot remember whether I spoke to a man or a woman.

I started work at 7.49 a.m. on 6/9/66. I arrived at the House of Assembly at 6.45 a.m. on 6/9/66. I went to work early in order to do my work and then to go out to buy the knives. I did not ask for permission to go to the town to buy the knives. I entered City Guns first and purchased a dagger. I paid R.3.30 for this dagger. I then went to the other shop where I bought another dagger - the one with the aluminium handle. It was more like a stiletto. I bought two weapons in order to make certain of the job which I had in mind, I thought something might go wrong and that one weapon might be taken away from me. Both weapons were wrapped up in brown paper.

After I bought the weapons I returned to the House of Assembly where I removed the paper wrappings from the weapons and left the paper wrappings in my locker. I also left the two daggers in my locker. I started working that morning wearing a khaki overall. When I went to the shops to buy the weapons I changed into a grey suit. When I came back I changed into my navy blue messenger's uniform, then I changed into my uniform. I had a waist-belt underneath my uniform pants, to which two sheaths were attached. I left the two knives in the locker. I then went to the first floor to serve coffee and tea. I waited for the lights to go on indicating which offices were calling for tea and coffee. I was there until about 2 p.m. that afternoon.

A few minutes before the Assembly bells began to ring for the starting of the session, I went to my locker to fetch the knives. I put them into the sheaths inside my pants and went into the Assembly lobby to wait for the Prime Minister's arrival. I had previously planned to stab the Prime Minister in the Assembly hall whilst walking to his bench. I watched him walk past and followed him into the Assembly hail. I tried to pull the dagger from the sheath but had difficulty in pulling it out. Eventually I managed to pull it out, but by that time the Prime Minister had already sat down in his bench. I was very nervous and confused that I cannot remember where I stabbed him the first blow, but I aimed at his chest. I remember stabbing him twice and then the people caught hold of me. They beat me up, kicked me and dragged me into lobby. I was disarmed and arrested.”²⁷⁴⁰

On September 19, Tsafendas told the police:

“The idea of destroying Dr. Verwoerd entered my mind a few days after I started work as a messenger in the House of Assembly. I saw an opportunity to do so in the House of Assembly because I was inside the house. I first thought of buying a gun with which I could shoot him and then run away. I did in fact buy a gun from the crew of the Eleni but I found that the gun was useless. I bought the gun at the end of the month when I got my pay. I went there before to try and get the gun but I had no money. I then waited until I got my pay. I was going to buy a Beretta but the man didn’t keep his word and gave me the other pistol. He made all kinds of excuses. It was only after I found that the gun was useless that I decided on using a knife...

I was going to find refuge on the tanker, the Eleni, which I knew was sailing to South America. My planes were, however, upset when I could not get the right pistol. The boat sailed on the Saturday before the Tuesday on which I stabbed the Prime Minister... I never thought about hiding if I had to do the job with a knife. I didn’t have much of a chance of getting away when using a knife. I didn’t care much and didn’t give it a second thought that I would be caught. I just happened to do it that way. I always had a grudge against the South African Government on account of its racial policies and I hated Dr. Verwoerd because he was a foreigner - a Hollander.”²⁷⁴¹

On both occasions, Tsafendas remembers very clearly how he killed Dr. Verwoerd and what preceded it. He does not mention anywhere that he was confused or say anything to suggest that he is a schizophrenic. Tsafendas’s story about the purchase of the gun from the crew and later of the two knives was confirmed by the police from their own investigation and from the interviews they conducted with those involved, as we saw in Chapter 4.

About thirty years later, Tsafendas told the same story he told the police to David Beresford, Liza Key and Fathers Ioannis, Spiros and Minas. He not only described to all these people in perfect detail how he made and executed his plan, as he did with the police, but he gave additional details, such as the fact that he had poured anti-rust solution onto the blades, hoping it would poison Dr. Verwoerd’s blood should he survive the stabbing. Tsafendas could even remember some of the contents of the anti-rust solution; for example the hydrochloric acid and the phosphoric acid.²⁷⁴² This proves that Tsafendas remembered what had happened: not only shortly after the assassination but as long as thirty years afterwards. The fact that he was not able to “remember” this incident when interviewed by Dr. Sakinofsky suggests that he either suffered from a temporary amnesia, for that day and for this incident only, or he lied to him.

²⁷⁴⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁷⁴¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

Both of Tsafendas’s statements were in the possession of the police and if they were also in the possession of the Attorney-General, as they should have been, it would have been very easy to prove that Tsafendas was lying to Dr. Sakinofsky about not remembering the assassination. However, once again, the statements were not used to challenge a witness’ testimony.

Importantly, Dr. Sakinofsky clarifies that although he asked Tsafendas several times whether the tapeworm had asked him to kill Dr. Verwoerd, he denied it, as he did with Dr. Cooper. However, it became widely accepted that Tsafendas killed Dr. Verwoerd because a tapeworm told him to. Tsafendas himself told several witnesses that both the police and some psychiatrists had tried to make him say it was the tapeworm that ordered him to do it. Tsafendas insisted to these witnesses that he never said such a thing,²⁷⁴³ and according to Dr. Cooper, Dr. Sakinofsky and as we will soon see the other psychiatrists too, he was telling the truth.

²⁷⁴² Liza Key’s A Question of Madness; Beresford, ‘Inside Story: The Madness that Destroyed Apartheid’, The Guardian, 6 November 1997; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Liza Key in a personal interview, 6 April 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁷⁴³ A Question of Madness; Beresford, ‘Inside Story: The Madness that Destroyed Apartheid’, The Guardian, 6 November 1997; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Father Spiros Randos in a personal interview, 5 January 2004; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

COMMENTS ON DR. SAKINOFSKY'S DIAGNOSIS OF "THOUGHT BLOCKING"

None of the two-hundred witnesses who were interviewed by the police and the Commission of Enquiry at the time and another seventy-one who were interviewed later by the author offered anything to suggest that Tsafendas was suffering from thought-blocking. This is clearly something that it is more evident to a psychiatrist, but certainly people can tell whether a man is talking coherently, if there are gaps in his speech and whether he can answer questions and follow a conversation.

Professor van Wyk, the State psychiatrist appointed by the Attorney-General himself, had examined Tsafendas three times by October 6. He had written in his report, which was in the possession of the Attorney-General, that Tsafendas was "orientated," adding, "He gives a good account of himself. His comprehension is good and his answers are relevant. His emotional responses are adequate and apt. His discourse is coherent. At times he is discursive, but not vague and he never strays from the main point of conversation...I have found no indications that he is incapable of following the court proceedings or that he is unable to exercise his rights and privileges and instruct his legal advisers and assist them in the conduct of his defence."²⁷⁴⁴ Thus, Professor van Wyk had not observed any "thought blocking".

Furthermore, just the previous day at the court, Dr. Muller, also a defence witness, had also not observed any "thought blocking" from Tsafendas. The following dialogue took place between Dr. Muller and the Defence Counsel:

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You had no difficulty in communicating with him?

DR. MULLER: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he have difficulty in expressing himself?

DR. MULLER: None at all.²⁷⁴⁵

In addition, Tsafendas was interrogated for several hours by Major Rossouw while he was in custody. When Major Rossouw appeared in front of the Commission of Enquiry, the following dialogue ensued between him and Judge van Wyk:

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did you get the impression that what he said was the truth or did you think that sometimes he was sly?

²⁷⁴⁴ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 81.

²⁷⁴⁵ Dr. Hendrik Muller's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: I thought that he told the truth – I never got the impression that he tried to evade any question. He answered all the questions spontaneously.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Was he totally prepared to answer everything?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes.²⁷⁴⁶

Major Rossouw and Judge van Wyk of the Commission of Inquiry, both highly experienced in questioning witnesses, did not observe Tsafendas suffering from “thought blocking.” By also looking at both of Tsafendas statements, we see that he did not have the issue Dr. Sakinofsky noted and all of Tsafendas’s answers and narration are perfectly clear without any sign of “thought blocking.” If such an issue was noted by Major Rossouw or General van den Berg, presumably they would have been able to notice it.

These are the statements of people who were questioned by the police and commented on his mental state:

- Gillian Claire Lieberman was a personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation who was often visited by Tsafendas in her office. She “found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation.”²⁷⁴⁷
- Ralph Lighton, who worked with Tsafendas for nine to ten weeks at the Marine Diamond Corporation, testified to the police that he “never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers.”²⁷⁴⁸
- Helen Grispos knew Tsafendas from birth and grew up with him, while her husband was Tsafendas’s best childhood friend. She told the police that Tsafendas was “well-mannered and intelligent.”²⁷⁴⁹ She also told the author that she never thought Tsafendas was insane. “He never did or said anything to make me or George (her husband) think that he was insane.”²⁷⁵⁰

²⁷⁴⁶ Major Daniel Jacobus Rossouw testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

²⁷⁴⁷ Gillian Claire Liebermann statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁷⁴⁸ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁷⁴⁹ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁷⁵⁰ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

- Hendrik van Loggenberg knew Tsafendas and his family well in Pretoria. He told the police that Tsafendas “definitely came across as normal ... he also seemed healthy ...”²⁷⁵¹
- Captain P.A. Sanianos, the Greek Consul in Beira “was often in the company of the subject and others had several conversations with him.” He considered Tsafendas to be “a normal and very intelligent person.”²⁷⁵²
- Albert Vercueil, Tsafendas’s boss at F. A. Poole in Pretoria, said that in the five months he worked with Tsafendas, he found him to be “not a very good worker, but will say that he was an intelligent worker.”²⁷⁵³ He also testified to the Commission of Enquiry that he considered Tsafendas to be “an intelligent man” and never got the impression that he “wasn’t right in his mind.”²⁷⁵⁴
- James Summers, owner of the “Barlings Tea Lounge,” which Tsafendas frequented from July 1966 until the assassination, testified that Tsafendas “was no nuisance, and appeared to be a quite normal, innocent type. I never had reason to even suspect that he could be mentally unbalanced. He acted quite normal.”²⁷⁵⁵
- John Gianouris, the Greek Vice Consul at Lourenço Marques, described Tsafendas as “a normal and intelligent person.”²⁷⁵⁶
- August Karel Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria. He found him to be “very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet. I never noticed anything abnormal about him, except that he had a strange look when I looked him straight in the eyes. He never gave me the impression that he was suffering from any mental disease.”²⁷⁵⁷
- Kyriakos Skordis who Tsafendas used to visit at his coffee shop in Durban for several months in 1965, testified that he “appeared to be quite normal and was apparently in a poor financial position.”²⁷⁵⁸

²⁷⁵¹ Hendrik Johannes van Loggenberg statement to the police, 8 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁷⁵² South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁷⁵³ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁷⁵⁴ Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁷⁵⁵ Herbert James Summers statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁷⁵⁶ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁷⁵⁷ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁷⁵⁸ Kyriakos Skordis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

- Inspector Horacio Ferreira of the Portuguese Security Police was in charge of the cells where Tsafendas was held in custody in Beira in 1964. His statement to the police said he considered Tsafendas to be “normal and regarded him as a very intelligent person.”²⁷⁵⁹
- Costas Michaeletos,²⁷⁶⁰ who knew Tsafendas from birth, stated, “Ever since I knew Dimetrios Tsafantakis, I never, any time observed that he showed any deviations. He also never was an aggressive type person.”²⁷⁶¹
- Richard Poggenpoel lived with him for two weeks in his house and kept on associating up to his arrest, “there was no mention or impression that he was mentally abnormal. He lived a completely normal life.”²⁷⁶²
- John Galanakis, who met Tsafendas in Umtali in 1964, told police that he found Tsafendas to be “an intelligent man.”²⁷⁶³
- Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys, employment officer at the Department of Labour in Cape Town, interviewed Tsafendas twice. He testified to the police that Tsafendas was “neatly dressed” and he “never got the impression that there was mentally anything wrong with him or that he acted abnormally.”²⁷⁶⁴
- Gideon Cloete, an employee in the Department of Labour, met Tsafendas twice and said he “seemed eager to get employment, was neatly dressed and had a clean appearance.” Cloete said he saw no signs of abnormality, that “he seemed perfectly normal.”²⁷⁶⁵
- George Liberopoulos met Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques in 1963 and described him to the police as a “normal person with a very high intelligence.”²⁷⁶⁶ Liberopoulos also stated to the author that he “never believed that Tsafendas was insane. He was perfectly normal; very clever man.”²⁷⁶⁷

²⁷⁵⁹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁷⁶⁰ The correct spelling is Michaeletos, not Michaeletos. Costas Michaeletos statement to the police, 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁷⁶¹ Costas Michaeletos statement to the police, 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁷⁶² Richard Poggenpoel statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁷⁶³ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁷⁶⁴ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

²⁷⁶⁵ Gideon Jacobus Cloete testimony at Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, NASA.

²⁷⁶⁶ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁷⁶⁷ George Liberopoulos in a personal interview, 6 July 2015.

- Harry Hall, a member of the Christian Church, knew Tsafendas from March 1966 until his arrest. He testified to the police that he regarded Tsafendas "as a sub-standard intellect, but otherwise found him to be reasonably normal."²⁷⁶⁸
- Reginald Robert Maile was the guard on the Eleni while it was docked in Cape Town from July 26, 1966 to September 3, 1966. He saw Tsafendas every day and told the police that he "never got the impression that he could be mentally defective. He was sober, polite and perfectly normal."²⁷⁶⁹
- George Ananiades met Tsafendas in 1963 and described him to the police as a "normal person with a very high-intelligence."²⁷⁷⁰ He later told the author that Tsafendas "is impossible to have been insane. He was a very intelligent and educated man."²⁷⁷¹
- Ian Boswell, administrative assistant at the Department of Labour in Cape Town. He interviewed Tsafendas three times in 1966 and testified that "he was at all times neatly dressed and never gave the impression of being destitute. Aside from being over-talkative, he showed no symptoms of abnormality, during his interviews with me."²⁷⁷²
- John Verghis, owner of a coffee shop in Beira which Tsafendas visited often for several months, said he considered him to be a "normal person."²⁷⁷³
- Lt. Col. P.J.B. van Wyk of the South African police interviewed several people in Rhodesia and in Mozambique, including in Beira and Lourenço Marques, who knew Tsafendas. He stated in his report that Tsafendas, "for all purposes, can be seen as a normal, intelligent person."²⁷⁷⁴
- None of Tsafendas's five colleagues at the Parliament mentioned anything being wrong with him.²⁷⁷⁵

²⁷⁶⁸ Harry Hall statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁷⁶⁹ Reginald Robert Maile statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

²⁷⁷⁰ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁷⁷¹ George Ananiades in a personal interview, 21 June 2016.

²⁷⁷² Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

²⁷⁷³ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁷⁷⁴ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁷⁷⁵ Piet Bester Burger testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA; Fred Feinauer statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Feliz George Miles statement to the police, 7 October 1966. K150, Vol. 2, File: 1. NASA; Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA; Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

- Petrus Schuin, the head messenger, was one of the three messengers who interviewed and appointed him. He told the Commission of Enquiry that “there was nothing out of the ordinary about him. Tsafendas was the same as any other person that had worked there.”²⁷⁷⁶
- Sydney Wiehand, a messenger who was also on the interview panel in the House of Assembly, said Tsafendas “was a quiet man. He wasn’t the rough type or anything like that. He was quiet, quietly spoken, well-mannered.”²⁷⁷⁷

Several people lived under the same roof or in close proximity to Tsafendas for substantial periods. None of them noticed anything wrong with him:

- Tsafendas lived in Fotini Gavasiadis’s house for a few weeks, then for the next eight months in an apartment next to hers. Throughout this period in Pretoria in 1963-1964, they were very close; she saw and talked to him every day and they worked together in her brother’s café. Gavasiadis never noticed anything wrong with Tsafendas and has no doubt that he was perfectly able to function, not just at a “reasonable level” but beyond that, since he was extremely intelligent and lucid. She told the author:

“Dimitris could buy you and sell you any time he wanted and as many times as he wanted to. He was so clever. He was very convincing and persuasive - he could turn black into white. If you disagreed with something with him, he would find a way to convince you that he is right and that you are wrong - even if you know that you are right and that he is wrong! If he made a mistake about something, he would turn things upside-down and at the end, he would even make you apologise to him.”

Gavasiadis laughed at the suggestion that Tsafendas was dysfunctional. She told the author:

“In those nine months, I saw him and spoke to him every day and not even once did he appear to have an issue with his speech or his thoughts. He was always the same. We spent hours and hours talking and his speech was never incoherent, disjointed, blocked or whatever else, it was always perfect. He never gave me even the slightest indication that he might be having the issues you mentioned. It must have been the doctor who said it, who was himself not able to function on a reasonable level if this was his diagnosis about

²⁷⁷⁶ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

²⁷⁷⁷ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

Dimitri. Dimitri was not just able, but much more than able to function on a reasonable level. It's absolutely ludicrous for someone to say this about Dimitri and it shows how little he knew him."²⁷⁷⁸ According to Professor Burke, "if you lived with somebody for nine months, you would know if this person was strange."²⁷⁷⁹

- Father Nikola Banovic lived in the same house as Tsafendas for four-five months in 1961, and then for another two-three months, he lived in a house next door. In all this time, he saw him every day. He declares that Tsafendas "was perfectly sane" and he does "not have the slightest doubt about it. It is impossible; Dimitri was not schizophrenic. With God as my witness, he was not crazy. He was more than capable of functioning on a reasonable level; he was a very intelligent and capable man. His brain was a level above most of ours."²⁷⁸⁰
- Mary Eintracht, Tsafendas's first cousin, knew him since he was five years old and grew up alongside him in Mozambique and in Egypt. In Pretoria in 1964, she spent a lot of time with him, including two or three weeks when they lived in the same house. She told the author: "Dimitris unable to function on a reasonable level? Are you sure a doctor said that? I don't know what kind of doctor he was, but he either examined a different person or he had completely lost the plot with Dimitris. Dimitris was one of the most capable and intelligent persons I ever met. Nobody who knew him is going to agree with what this doctor said."²⁷⁸¹
- Patrick O'Ryan hosted Tsafendas in his home for five months in 1965-1966 and was close to him up to his arrest. Tsafendas was described to him by a preacher of the Christian Church as a "highly cultured gentleman, a very refined gentleman who speaks seven languages."²⁷⁸² He formed a "deep liking"²⁷⁸³ for Tsafendas and considered him to be an "enlightened person."²⁷⁸⁴ He also testified that "I had confidence in him and used to like him. He was a very kindly man. In my experience of him he had a good heart ... I never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind," or that he "was mentally ²⁷⁷⁸ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

²⁷⁷⁹ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

²⁷⁸⁰ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²⁷⁸¹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

²⁷⁸² Patrick O' Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

²⁷⁸³ Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²⁷⁸⁴ Patrick O' Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

disturbed.”²⁷⁸⁵ He also found Tsafendas to be “well-spoken and had good vocabulary.”²⁷⁸⁶

- John Bornman lived with Tsafendas for six-seven weeks in April and May of 1966. He found Tsafendas to be “normal, intelligent and friendly. He was neat in his person, but his eating habits were messy.”²⁷⁸⁷
- Reuben O’Ryan lived in the same house as Tsafendas for five months. He considered him “perfectly normal,” saying, “no-one in my family ever thought that he was mad. He couldn’t have been insane.”²⁷⁸⁸
- Stanley O’Ryan also lived in the same house as Tsafendas for five months and described him as a “very down to earth man, a very quiet man and very friendly. I never suspected, even in the slightest, that he might be unstable. No, never, nothing at all. Perfectly normal.”²⁷⁸⁹
- Allan O’Ryan also lived with Tsafendas for five months at the same house and kept being in touch for another year. He told the author that no one in the house ever questioned Tsafendas’s sanity, “Never. There was no such thing as, ‘This person is mad,’ you know, or something like that. That never came through. [He was] always very sensible in his answers to anybody.”²⁷⁹⁰
- Violet Irene Manning was Tsafendas’s landlady for almost two months in 1965. She told the Commission of Enquiry: “it was a serviced room but I found him making his own bed. When he came to me he was well-dressed, well-spoken, and gave a good impression. From his general appearance he appeared to be a businessman. When he paid me, he had a bundle of notes and I took him to be a man of means.”²⁷⁹¹
- Elizabeth Groves was Tsafendas’s landlady for six or seven weeks and a retired psychiatric nurse. About Tsafendas she said, “I was a nurse and worked in lunatic

²⁷⁸⁵ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²⁷⁸⁶ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²⁷⁸⁷ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁷⁸⁸ Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

²⁷⁸⁹ Stanley O’Ryan in a personal interview, 9 April 2015.

²⁷⁹⁰ Allan O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019.

²⁷⁹¹ Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

institutions. He was a normal person to the best of my knowledge."²⁷⁹²

- Alice Mary Theyser was Tsafendas's landlady from July 1, 1966 to August 30, 1966, just six days before the assassination. She testified to the police that she "never got the impression in any way that he might be mentally unbalanced. To me he appeared a quite normal person."²⁷⁹³
- Helen Daniels lived with Tsafendas in her parents' house for six weeks in 1965 and "did not notice anything abnormal about him. There was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal."²⁷⁹⁴
- Kenneth Ross was Tsafendas's landlord in Durban for two months in 1965. He did not mention anything to suggest that Tsafendas was unable to function on a reasonable level and even stated that he "was very fond of discussing politics and gave me the opinion that he was well-versed in politics."²⁷⁹⁵
- For two months in 1966 Tsafendas had his meals in Mary Scott's boarding house. She told police that she "never got the impression that he could be mentally unbalanced. To me he appeared perfectly normal."²⁷⁹⁶
- J. Willemse was Tsafendas's landlord for one month in 1965. He characterised him as a "sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man."²⁷⁹⁷
- Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott's boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest. He, too, disagrees with Dr. Cooper's diagnosis. "Dimitri was not mad, not even a little. He was an exceptional man, very clever too."²⁷⁹⁸
- Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos was Tsafendas's landlady for three weeks in 1966. She ²⁷⁹² Elizabeth Magdalene Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁷⁹³ Alice Mary Theyser statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁷⁹⁴ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

²⁷⁹⁵ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁷⁹⁶ Mary Kathleen Scott statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁷⁹⁷ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), 'Assassin - Man With A Chip On His Shoulder', 11 September 1966: 1, 8.

²⁷⁹⁸ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

testified to the police that she "considered him to be a completely normal person."²⁷⁹⁹

- Andreas Babiolakis lived with Tsafendas in the same house in Beira for two or three months and knew him since they were children. As for Tsafendas being mad, he said: "If he was mad, then the whole world must be mad. He was not even the slightest disturbed. Every single Greek in Mozambique discussed Dimitri after we heard about the tapeworm; not even one from those who had met him believed that he was mad. He was not; we all said the same thing. He made it up, as he did with the Saint Peter act. If someone believes that he was mad, he did not meet him Dimitri, but someone else."²⁸⁰⁰
- Nick Papadakis also lived with Tsafendas for two months in Beira and Gondola in 1964. He told the author: "I never believed, not even after I read what happened in the trial, that he was insane. He played the fool and they believed him. It's impossible that he was insane, he was absolutely fine and very clever."²⁸⁰¹
- Irene Michaletos and her mother associated with Tsafendas for several months between 1964 and 1965. He even stayed several times at their house. She never noticed anything wrong with him and was sure that he was perfectly sane.²⁸⁰²
- In 1951 and between 1963 and 1965, Tsafendas slept for several nights in the house of his aunt Artemis Michaletos in Lourenço Marques. Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousins and Artemis's sons, who lived in the same house, spent several hours chatting with Tsafendas. Both were adamant in conversation with the author that Tsafendas did not suffer from thought blockage and that he had no problems in following a conversation.²⁸⁰³

John Michaletos told the author:

"We all [his family] had many long conversations with him. I really mean hours and hours, in a row, the same day. He was from the kind of people who have something to tell you, that you could sit and listen to them for hours. And I did that, I very much enjoyed talking and listening to him. He was not boring, he could talk to you about religion, politics and history, his travels and adventures around the world. But he did not show off when ²⁷⁹⁹ Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁸⁰⁰ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

²⁸⁰¹ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

²⁸⁰² Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

²⁸⁰³ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

talking; he was a humble man, he never tried to show off, like that he had travelled in so many countries or that he was very knowledgeable. He was very modest and very down to earth, a serious man."²⁸⁰⁴

In addition, Artemis Michaletos, who had brought Tsafendas up in Egypt and lived in Lourenço Marques while he was growing up there, always maintained that he was perfectly sane and very intelligent.²⁸⁰⁵

- Stelios Marangos was Tsafendas's landlord in Beira for six weeks. He did not mention anything to the police about Tsafendas being "unstable" or strange.²⁸⁰⁶

In addition, Tsafendas attended several interviews in his working life and appeared to be perfectly able to answer, or he would not have got the jobs. More importantly, he was examined and interviewed twice by two state doctors for a permanent residency permit for South Africa and neither of them noticed any "thought-blocking," though they were not psychiatrists. However, one would expect anyone, particularly a doctor, to spot whether a patient is able to answer a simple question or if he presents the symptoms mentioned by Dr. Sakinofsky:

- On November 11, 1963, Tsafendas was medically examined by Dr. C. Been for his permanent residence application and was found "not to be mentally or physically defective in any way," and "generally in a good state of health."²⁸⁰⁷ Dr. Been would later examine Tsafendas again "for burns on his body whilst employed at Pooles." Again nothing about his mental state would be noted.²⁸⁰⁸
- On November 14, 1963, Tsafendas was examined again for the same reason by Dr. A.C. McDonald, who also wrote "a favourable report," and subsequently a certificate for permanent residence was issued for him.²⁸⁰⁹

²⁸⁰⁴ John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

²⁸⁰⁵ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

²⁸⁰⁶ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁸⁰⁷ Dimitrio Tsafendas medical certificate issued by Dr. Been for the Aliens Act, 1937. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

²⁸⁰⁸ Dr. Been statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁸⁰⁹ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

In addition to the above two doctors, Tsafendas was seen by a further ten doctors, none of them psychiatrists, over the previous three years and none noted any “thought-blocking”:

- On March 15, 1965, Tsafendas was examined by a South African Railways’ medical officer whose name is indecipherable in his report. He was found to be perfectly healthy, without any issues and therefore capable of working at the company.²⁸¹⁰
- On September 25, 1965, he was examined by Dr. G.C. Baker and nothing was reported about his mental state.²⁸¹¹
- On November 19, 1965, Tsafendas was medically examined to insure that he was able to work for City Tramways in Cape Town. He was found fit to work and duly hired.²⁸¹²
- On January 13, 1966, Tsafendas applied for work at the Marine Diamond Corporation and underwent a medical check-up that same day. The doctor who examined him found Tsafendas to be perfectly healthy and capable of working for the company.²⁸¹³
- On February 25, 1966, Tsafendas was examined at Groote Schuur Hospital by I. Eisenberg, a registrar on the Ear, Nose & Throat Department, who did not observe anything mentally wrong with him.²⁸¹⁴
- On April 18, 19, 26 and May 3, 1966 Tsafendas was examined at Groote Schuur Hospital by Dr. Leon Goldman, a consultant ear, nose and throat surgeon. He did not observe anything mentally wrong with him and discharged him as “fit” on May 17, 1966.²⁸¹⁵
- From April 19, 1966 to May 15, 1966, Tsafendas was under the medical supervision of Dr. Leon Solomon at Groote Schuur Hospital, suffering from “a deviated nasal septum and epistaxis,” and underwent surgery on his nose. Dr. Solomon during this period did not report any mental disability and found Tsafendas to be fit to return to his work at Marine

²⁸¹⁰ South African Railways Confidential Medical Examination Certificate of Demitrio Tsafendas. K150, Vol. 7, File: S 83708, Tsafendas: D. NASA.

²⁸¹¹ Dr. G.C. Baker Statement re: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. No date. K150, Vol. 6, File: 4, NASA.

²⁸¹² Donald Neville Mackay statement to the COE, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁸¹³ Demitrio Tsafendas’s Marine Diamond Corporation Application for Employment, 13 January 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 3. NASA.

²⁸¹⁴ I. Eisenberg Statement. RE: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. N.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁸¹⁵ I. Eisenberg Statement. RE: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. N.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Diamond Corporation. Dr. Solomon examined him again on June 7, 1966, and again did not notice anything mentally wrong with him.²⁸¹⁶

- Dr. Ralph Kossew examined Tsafendas only half an hour after the assassination. His testimony is highly important due to its timing. Dr. Kossew found Tsafendas “not confused ... he answers questions guardedly but does not appear to be confused ... he didn't appear anxious ... He may have been a little bit nervous but not in any marked degree ... He was calm ...”²⁸¹⁷
- Dr. S. Michelson, a specialist physician, examined Tsafendas in the Neurology Department of Groote Schuur Hospital on 3rd June, 1966 and nothing was reported to be wrong with his mental state.²⁸¹⁸
- Finally, Dr. T.A. Darby examined Tsafendas on the evening of the assassination but did not report anything to be wrong about his mental state.²⁸¹⁹

Furthermore, Tsafendas worked and was interviewed on several occasions for jobs or in response to various other applications he had made, and again no one noticed anything. For example:

- Cornelius Rudolph, the head court interpreter on the staff of the Magistrate of Durban, accepted Tsafendas as a Portuguese and Greek interpreter. Rudolph used him “on several occasions” over six months and “got to know him pretty well.” He said, “I spoke with him several times, he seemed to be a normal person and intelligent. He spoke English properly.”²⁸²⁰
- Petrus Schuin, the head messenger at the Parliament, was also one of the three men who had interviewed him and appointed him. He told the Commission of Enquiry that “there was nothing out of the ordinary about him. Tsafendas was the same as any other person that had worked there.”²⁸²¹

²⁸¹⁶ Dr. Leon Solomon's medical report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA; Medical certificate issued by Dr. Solomon for the Employment Insurance Act, 1946. 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA.

²⁸¹⁷ Dr. Ralph Kossew's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²⁸¹⁸ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 64.

²⁸¹⁹ Dr. T.A. Darby. Statement re: Demitrio Tsafendas. G.S.H. NO. 65/014-181, 6 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁸²⁰ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁸²¹ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

- Sydney Wiehand, who was also one of the three messengers who had interviewed him at the Parliament, said about Tsafendas, "he was a quiet man. He wasn't the rough type, or anything like that. He was quiet - quietly spoken, well-mannered."²⁸²²
- Horst Hartmann, Tsafendas's employer in Frankfurt, Germany, at the heavy engineering company Fries and Son, characterised Tsafendas "as extremely nice and friendly ... I thought he was more likely to apply for an executive job than as a welder. Well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous, a very pleasant man... He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman ... he made a good impression and he spoke good German, so I took him on... we liked him ... always laughing, a good worker."
Tsafendas "left on his own wish" although Hartmann "would have liked to keep him."²⁸²³
Tsafendas was given a reference by Hartmann, so his work there must have been satisfactory.
- Gillian Claire Lieberman, personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation, whose office Tsafendas often visited, "I had various discussions with him. I got quite interested in him as an individual. ... I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation."²⁸²⁴
- Ralph Lighton, who worked with Tsafendas for nine to ten weeks at the Marine Diamond Corporation, testified to the police that he "never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers."²⁸²⁵
- Neville Judson worked with Tsafendas for Mike's Outfitters for forty-two days in July and August 1966, frequently driving him to the tanker Eleni while it was docked in Cape Town. Of Tsafendas, he told the police that he "never in no way got the impression that he could be mentally deranged. He appeared to be a normal man with normal reasoning powers."²⁸²⁶
- Michaelis Augustides, Tsafendas's employer for two months, found him to be "competent ²⁸²² Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

²⁸²³ Daily Dispatch, 'He Made A Good Impression', 8 September 1966: 1; Daily Express, 'The Assassin', 8 September 1966: 2; Natal Witness, 'Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...', 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 'Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte', 8 September 1966.

²⁸²⁴ Gillian Claire Lieberman statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁸²⁵ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁸²⁶ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

at his job” and never got the impression that he might be insane.²⁸²⁷

- Ian Boswell, administrative assistant at the Department of Labour, Cape Town. He interviewed Tsafendas three times in 1966 and testified to the police that “he was at all times neatly dressed and never gave the impression of being destitute. Aside from being over-talkative, he showed no symptoms of abnormality during his interviews with me.”²⁸²⁸
- Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys, employment officer at the Department of Labour, Cape Town, interviewed Tsafendas twice. He told the police that he “never got the impression that there was mentally anything wrong with him or that he acted abnormally.”²⁸²⁹
- Gideon Cloete, also at the Department of Labour, interviewed Tsafendas twice. According to Cloete, Tsafendas “had a neat appearance and made a good impression.” He did not notice any “signs of abnormality” and “appeared totally normal” to him.²⁸³⁰
- Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen, was Tsafendas’s tram instructor in December 1965 and January 1966. He testified that “I did not at all get the impression that mentally anything was wrong with him. He is mentally normal.”²⁸³¹

Tsafendas was also interviewed by Mr Limasollu Naci, owner of a private language college bearing his name in Istanbul, given a week’s trial, and then hired full-time. He worked there for five to six months, teaching English. Mr. Limasollu died before the author’s inquiries began, but his wife, who also worked at the college, believes that it would have been impossible for her husband to hire a man who talked in the manner described by the psychiatrists or suffered from thought blocking. Tsafendas left the college of his own accord and was given an excellent reference, which he used to secure employment in Parliament.

Furthermore, none of the seventy-one witnesses interviewed by the author and knew Tsafendas ever got the impression that his speech was disjointed or that he suffered from thought blocking. For example, Fotini Gavasiadis, who was very close to him and practically lived with him for nine months in 1963-4, told the author:

²⁸²⁷ Lambley, The Psychology of Apartheid, p. 241.

²⁸²⁸ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

²⁸²⁹ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

²⁸³⁰ Gideon Jacobus Cloete testimony at Tsafendas’s summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, NASA.

²⁸³¹ Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

“[Tsafendas] could buy and sell you and he could do that at any time during a conversation, in the first ten minutes, then again after thirty minutes or an hour and then again after two hours. He wouldn't let you get up from the chair until he had made you agree with what he was saying, especially when talking politics ... He was very convincing and persuasive - he could turn black into white! If you disagreed with something with him, he would find a way to convince you that he is right and that you are wrong - even if you know that you are right and that he is wrong! If he made a mistake about something, he would turn things upside-down and at the end, he would even make you apologise to him...

In the nine months I knew him, I saw him and spoke to him every day. Not even once did he appear to have an issue with his speech or his thoughts. He was always the same. We spent hours and hours talking and his speech was never incoherent, disjointed, blocked or whatever else, it was always perfect. He never gave me even the slightest indication that he might have the issues you mentioned.”²⁸³²

The priests who met him in prison and in the hospital in the 1980s and the 1990s and spent hundreds of hours with him are positive that Tsafendas did not suffer from thought blocking, that he was able to participate perfectly in a conversation and that he did not talk in a disjointed manner. Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis told the author:

“[Tsafendas] could speak for hours, telling you things about his life, his thoughts and his ideology, but he could also participate in a dialogue. We spoke for hours about politics, religion and history and he was one of the most knowledgeable people I ever met in all these subjects. He was very argumentative and insistent, especially about politics. He never got lost in the conversation and he would never drop a subject until I had agreed with him. He would never give up a conversation if you disagreed. He was very argumentative and insistent, especially about politics. He never, not even once, seemed to have difficulty expressing himself or talked incoherently. Every single time, everything he said made sense and was perfectly stated. I don't believe for a moment that he could have talked in the way described by the psychiatrists unless he did it deliberately. He spoke and argued even better than most people. His speech and thought were perfectly fine.”²⁸³³

Father Michalis Visvinis told the author:

“He [Tsafendas] was always very alert. I was actually surprised that his mind was so ²⁸³² Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

²⁸³³ Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

alert after so many years in prison. Most of our conversations lasted about an hour and a half and he never lost track, nor did I feel that he was struggling to cope with our discussion...I felt that he [Tsafendas] needed to speak, so several times I would just let him speak. He enjoyed speaking and he could speak for hours. I also often asked him questions about his life, and his answers were always logical and what one would expect. He never evaded any question and I never had to repeat myself to him for a second time, nor was his answer ever off the subject. He always spoke absolutely fine, like a normal man. [His speech] was perfectly articulate and logical, always very coherent. He never said anything to suggest he had a mental problem or that he had any difficulty speaking or thinking and expressing himself properly. This comment is also entirely false.”²⁸³⁴

Mary Eintracht, his first cousin, who grew up with him in Egypt and Mozambique and was constantly with him for nine months in 1963-1964, “Dimitri always spoke very well. He sounded like a very educated man. There was nothing wrong with speech or his thoughts; they were both excellent. He could argue with you for hours and hours for politics. He was very good with words and his brain was bigger than most people’s.”²⁸³⁵

Irene Michaletos knew Tsafendas for more than a year in 1964 and 1965 and he often visited and stayed at her house in Beira. They had several long conversations and she never experienced any problems conversing with him; on the contrary, she found Tsafendas to be an excellent and interesting conversationalist. She told the author:

“It is certainly false that he was unable to follow a conversation or that anyone had any difficulty talking to him. As a matter of fact, it was the exact opposite. I found the conversations with him very easy and interesting, too. He was a great storyteller. I had many long conversations with him. He was from the kind of people who have something to tell you, that you could sit and listen to them for hours. And I did that, I very much enjoyed talking and listening to him. He was not boring, he could talk to you about religion, politics and history, his travels and adventures around the world. But he did not show off when talking; he was a humble man, he never tried to show off, like that he had travelled in so many countries or that he was very knowledgeable. He was very modest and very down to earth, a serious man.”²⁸³⁶

²⁸³⁴ Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

²⁸³⁵ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

²⁸³⁶ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

Alexander Moumbaris, who spoke to Tsafendas for at least one hour every day for about three months in 1972 in Pretoria Prison, flatly denied that Tsafendas suffered from thought blockage and that he had problems in following a conversation. He told the author:

“He never had any difficulty expressing himself or participating in a conversation. Most times he led the conversations. There were never gaps or pauses in his speech, or anything that would make me think that he was struggling to speak or participate in our conversations.”²⁸³⁷

The Eleni men were so impressed by Tsafendas's knowledge and way of speech that they began calling him “Professor.”²⁸³⁸ “We were all wondering how come he knew all these things. How could he be talking like this? He was talking like a university professor”, said Nikolaos Billis, one of the crew.²⁸³⁹ Another, Michalis Vasilakis, said, “I can't explain it, but I remember he had a very specific way of talking, using not very common, but absolutely correct, words. He knew how to speak and how to choose his words. He talked like a professor – that is what we used to say between us and what we called him ... He was a very knowledgeable man. No, his speech was definitely not disjointed, it was excellent.”²⁸⁴⁰

For reasons of space, the study will list only a few of the witnesses who were interviewed by the author, those who knew him best and longest. None of the above witnesses ever got the impression that Tsafendas's speech was disjointed or that he was unable to answer a question properly or blocked in the way Dr. Sakinofsky described.

- His half-sister Katerina Pnefma;²⁸⁴¹
- Father Nikola Banovic who lived with him at the same house for four months in 1961 and then lived right next to his house for another three;²⁸⁴²
- His first cousin Mary Eintracht, who grew up with him and was constantly with him for nine months in 1964;²⁸⁴³
- Ira Kyriakakis, who also grew up with him and spent a lot of time together in 1964 and 1965;²⁸⁴⁴

²⁸³⁷ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017.

²⁸³⁸ Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015.

²⁸³⁹ Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011.

²⁸⁴⁰ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

²⁸⁴¹ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²⁸⁴² Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²⁸⁴³ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

²⁸⁴⁴ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

- Mario Ferreira, who worked with him for six weeks at the Table Power Station.²⁸⁴⁵
- Andreas Babiolakis, who knew him since they were children, who lived with him for two months in 1964 and associated with him for about a year then;²⁸⁴⁶
- Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott's boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest;²⁸⁴⁷
- Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousins, first met him in 1951 in Lourenço Marques and got to know him between 1963 and 1965 in Mozambique.²⁸⁴⁸
- Costas Poriазis who met him in 1965 in Beira;²⁸⁴⁹
- Alexandra Vaporidis who knew him for about six months in Istanbul in 1961;²⁸⁵⁰
- Nick Papadakis, who knew Tsafendas for two-three months and lived with him for two months in Mozambique in 1964;²⁸⁵¹
- Panagiotis Peroglou and Costas Chagios who were Tsafendas's friends in Cape Town for more than a year.²⁸⁵²

²⁸⁴⁵ Mario Ferreira in a personal interview, 21 May 2019.

²⁸⁴⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

²⁸⁴⁷ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

²⁸⁴⁸ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

²⁸⁴⁹ Costas Poriазis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

²⁸⁵⁰ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

²⁸⁵¹ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

²⁸⁵² Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015; Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

TSAFENDAS'S MEDICAL RECORDS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is the past medical history of this man relevant to you, important to you?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, it is, because one of the criteria for making a diagnosis of schizophrenia is prognosis. In other words, the state of the patient - mental state - in the course of time. And in fact, if one had an almost continuous history of 30 years of this kind of delusional insanity, then I would think that is absolutely pathognomonic of schizophrenia. No other condition that I know of can last-

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And what would his prognosis be?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Hopeless for recovery.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: So if evidence is obtained that he was diagnosed at St. Pancras Hospital on the 26th May, 1959 as being a paranoid schizophrenic?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I had not seen that report but if this were so, I would see this as being consistent with the diagnosis I have made.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And if the authorities there, the doctors who interviewed him, say that he there too talked about the tapeworm, which he called a 'dragon'?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, this would again be absolutely consistent with the diagnosis. I would think that this would mean that he could never have dreamt this up on the spur of the moment as a defence. We had the evidence this morning of a lady called Mrs. O'Ryan, who says that the accused talked to her, some months before the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, about this tapeworm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you comment on that evidence which is now before the Court?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, the only comment I would make is that this makes it all the more likely that there was this delusion, was held continuously in time. It was not something which left him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: If evidence were led, and the Court were to accept the opinion of a person called Dr. Brown, Medical Superintendent of the Hospital on the Isle of Wight - the White Cross Hospital, "that although his conduct in hospital was quiet and amenable, I did note on my report to the authorities that he was suffering from a delusional psychosis which could affect his conduct very considerably," what would the importance of that be?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, again I haven't seen this report. If this is so, then I have no doubt that this is consistent with the diagnosis of chronic schizophrenia - a variety of chronic schizophrenia.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would it be consistent with a diseased, insane man who assassinated the Prime Minister?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. Yes, because every psychiatrist knows that chronic schizophrenia of the paranoid kind into which this man fits, while apparently amenable and moving about society, could be subject to sudden eruption.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And in that state of eruption would he act in this way, kill somebody?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Under the influence of his diseased brain, he could, yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: If you had evidence - that goes back a little further - that is, evidence from the German hospital near Hamburg to whom you wrote, and you have seen that report ...?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Ochsenzoll?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Again if that evidence is placed before the Court - and let us assume for a moment it is before the Court- what would it establish in your opinion?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: It establishes that at the time he was in the Ochsenzoll he was suffering from a major mental disorder, due to this tape-worm, his belief about the tapeworm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is mention also made in that report of his preoccupation with this tapeworm?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. He had just been investigated in the Tropical Hospital in Hamburg for a tapeworm and the doctors there had told him he had no tapeworm. He refused to believe this, became wretched and took an overdose of sleeping pills - he took 20 sleeping pills in an attempt at suicide. He was admitted to the Ochsenzoll Hospital. They found the presence of hypochondriacal delusion and they gave him a variety of treatments, insulin, opium therapy and finally electric-convulsive therapy - shock treatment.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: If you are told that prior to 1955, and in America (the year 1946, round there) he was certified insane and suffering from hebephrenic schizophrenia, what is your comment about that? The relevance and importance of that evidence?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, my first comment would be that I would not be at all surprised about it being schizophrenia. I would be a little surprised at the diagnosis of hebephrenia, because this betokens a much worse prognosis as far as deterioration, and the man we have in the dock here shows. The patients are characteristically reduced to silly, gibbering idiots.

JUDGE BEYERS: Like a child or something? The word, doesn't it mean 'behaving like a child'?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, Like a child or like a woman. I am not quite sure.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Doctor, sitting as an assessor in this case, would you consider it important to have all this medical history of the past placed before you?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, if I were in that position I certainly would think it was relevant.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Let us come now to your final assessment of this man before the Court. Your opinion is that he is suffering from...?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I regard him as suffering from schizophrenia, the particular sub-category in my opinion being paraphrenia.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is schizophrenia, this mental disease that he has, a psychosis?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: It is a major psychosis.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is he mentally disordered in terms of the Act?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you certify him?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Should he go to an asylum?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: He should, at the State President's pleasure, if I may say so.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Have you any reservations?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I have no reservations at all.

COMMENTS ON DR. SAKINOFSKY'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S MEDICAL RECORDS

The Defence Counsel refers again, as he did with Dr. Cooper, to some of Tsafendas's medical records from overseas hospitals. In this particular case, advocate Cooper reads from the report from the hospital in the Isle of Wight. First, Dr. Sakinofsky states that he has not seen this report, as Dr. Cooper also did. The question is, since both psychiatrists were part of the defence team, why were they not given these reports, especially since their diagnoses were compatible? Dr. Sakinofsky had said in correspondence with the author, but also stated to the Court, that a patient's medical records are very important. Dr. Sakinofsky himself had written to some of the hospitals where Tsafendas was treated to get his records. The defence team had some of these records in its possession, but did not give them to him.

Reyner van Zyl, the clinical psychologist who examined Tsafendas for the defence stated to the author that he was verbally told that Tsafendas was diagnosed as schizophrenic by many overseas hospitals, but he did not see any of the actual reports, and this was the case with at least some, if not all, of those who examined Tsafendas.²⁸⁵³ However, Dr. Sakinofsky was in possession of the medical report from Hamburg as he had personally requested it from this hospital. He had received them sometime after the 4th of October and while he had already examined Tsafendas at least once and maybe even twice.²⁸⁵⁴

The Defence Counsel then refers again, as he did with Dr. Cooper, to the medical report from "America." As he did with Dr. Cooper, he reads only the diagnosis and does not say anything about the tapeworm or anything else that it is in the report. Then, something unbelievable happens when he asks Dr. Sakinofsky: "Doctor, sitting as an assessor in this case, would you consider it important to have all this medical history of the past placed before you?" The first major question is why all of Tsafendas's medical history was not placed before Dr. Sakinofsky in the first place; before the summary trial where he would have had the time to evaluate it properly? Since the diagnosis was similar to Dr. Sakinofsky's, it would have strengthened his own diagnosis about Tsafendas. However, the report from America, more specifically from Grafton State Hospital, contained two very important phrases that would certainly have been picked up by Dr. Sakinofsky, and the Defence Counsel must have known they could have been damaging for the defence's line.

²⁸⁵³ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

²⁸⁵⁴ Letter of the Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, to Dr. Sakinofsky, 4 October 1966. K150. Vol. 7, No: 09/4, Subject: Suspect Persons: Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

The report says about Tsafendas that “he faked mental illness because he was afraid to ship out because of the numerous leakings (sinkings) of ships.”²⁸⁵⁵ It also says that Tsafendas “is in the habit of smearing the walls in his room with faeces and is hallucinated and suspicious. He hears voices coming through the radiators.”²⁸⁵⁶ Both of the above statements are very important information for a psychiatrist and their significance has been discussed in Dr. Cooper’s testimony.

We should remember here that the US Immigration authorities had a file on Tsafendas containing “full particulars” of his time in the United States, including the Grafton State Hospital report. The South African embassy in Washington had informed the South African Ministry of Foreign Affairs that according to US Immigration officials, Tsafendas was “understood to have shown under psychiatric treatment that he was unstable though not (not)²⁸⁵⁷ insane, but type of man who would easily be used as instrument of Communist or hostile organizations. Impression of U.S. Immigration people at the time was that he had been manipulated and was under influence of someone or some organization. He was subsequently deported to Europe.”²⁸⁵⁸

As to the alleged suicide attempt, Tsafendas must certainly have lied when he said in Hamburg that he had taken twenty sleeping pills. He never spoke about this specific incident, but later stated that he never contemplated suicide while he was in custody, despite the severe torture, because he knew he was not brave enough to do it. Contrary to the general belief, Tsafendas held the view that suicide was not an act of cowardice but one of bravery. He believed that only a brave person would have the courage to take his own life and that people who killed themselves were mistaken in thinking they were weak when they were actually strong.²⁸⁵⁹ In addition, the Grafton State Hospital report stated that Tsafendas threatened the US Immigration authorities with suicide if they deported him. He was later deported, but did not proceed with his threat.²⁸⁶⁰

The Defence Counsel also referred to the reports from the English hospitals, as he did with Dr. Cooper and Dr. Muller. None of them was submitted as evidence and we do not ²⁸⁵⁵ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

²⁸⁵⁶ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

²⁸⁵⁷ This is exactly how it appears in the telegram. There is a second ‘not’ within brackets.

²⁸⁵⁸ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Washington to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

²⁸⁵⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁸⁶⁰ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

know the detailed contents, apart from the diagnosis. The picture that emerged from Tsafendas's time in London, according to the evidence collected by the South African police but also by the author, is that he does not appear to act as a "paranoid schizophrenic" as the diagnosis suggests. Tsafendas arrived in England on May 16, 1959.²⁸⁶¹ He asked the authorities if he could take a language test and work as a hotel porter, but this was refused, as was his application to remain in the country as a student. He was ordered to leave the United Kingdom by September 2, 1959.²⁸⁶² However, he ignored the order and remained in the UK "working clandestinely because legally he was not authorised."²⁸⁶³ On August 4, 1959, Tsafendas applied for permission to enter South Africa, sending a letter and an application form to the Union's immigration attaché in London.²⁸⁶⁴

According to the report of the Commission of Enquiry, while in London, Tsafendas "was noticed in the company of leftists," confirming Tsafendas's own statement to the police.²⁸⁶⁵ Tsafendas told the police he had attended political meetings organised by the Committee of African Organisations in Hyde Park, plus Labour Party meetings in London's Caxton Hall as well as demonstrations held by anti-apartheid and anti-fascist groups.²⁸⁶⁶ According to the report of the Commission of Enquiry, evidence was submitted to the Commission that while in London Tsafendas tried to "recruit people to take part in an uprising in South Africa." Tsafendas admitted to the Commission "that he did in fact try to recruit people for an uprising," but said "that his aim was confined to the Territory of Mozambique."²⁸⁶⁷ It appears unlikely that a paranoid schizophrenic will be involved in such activities and would associate with all these people and that his condition would go unnoticed.

Tsafendas told Fathers Minas, Ioannis and Spiros many years later that whenever he was penniless and homeless, he always found shelter at a hospital. As he said, hospitals where like hotels with free food and free accommodation.²⁸⁶⁸ As we have seen, according to ²⁸⁶¹ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, London to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

²⁸⁶² Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, London to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

²⁸⁶³ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁸⁶⁴ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraphs 28-30.

²⁸⁶⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 31.

²⁸⁶⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁸⁶⁷ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 32.

²⁸⁶⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

Gordon Winter, Tsafendas had said exactly the same thing to General van den Bergh when he was interrogated by him.²⁸⁶⁹

This seems to be the case in the UK. Tsafendas was not allowed to work so when he ran out of money, he admitted himself to the hospital in St. Pancras. A report from the South African Embassy in London also stated that Tsafendas admitted himself to the hospital, claiming he had a fixation with a tapeworm.²⁸⁷⁰ He also talked his way into a hospital on the Isle of Wight. It is the only one of which he spoke extensively to others. He said that while he was in the St. Pancras hospital, he learned about the Isle of Wight, a “beautiful small island” off the south coast of England, with an “impressive psychiatric hospital which was like an ancient castle.” He had never heard of this island and decided to visit it. Tsafendas accordingly cut short his stay at St. Pancras, having “recovered” from his “illness,”²⁸⁷¹ after a few days and on October 4, made his way to the Isle of Wight. After a look around the island, he had himself admitted to the Whitecroft Mental Hospital, near Newport, claiming mental problems.²⁸⁷²

According to Tsafendas, the hospital staff were initially suspicious, considering it strange that a foreigner should just turn up at the psychiatric hospital of this small island. Most patients had been transferred there upon a doctor’s recommendation and nobody had ever turned up on the doorstep. Tsafendas said this was his trickiest problem. He could not claim that he was just passing and suddenly fell ill. Instead, he said he had lost his way trying to get to France and gradually he managed to convince the doctors that his case was genuine.²⁸⁷³

²⁸⁶⁹ Gordon Winter in a personal interview with Dr. James Sanders on behalf of the author, 19 August 2016.

²⁸⁷⁰ Secret Telegram from the South African Embassy in London to the Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

²⁸⁷¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁸⁷² Secret Telegram from the South African Embassy in London to the Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

²⁸⁷³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

Tsafendas stayed at the hospital until December 3, 1959, when he was discovered by the British immigration authorities and deported to Germany.²⁸⁷⁴ Again, there is also no mention of the 1964/1965 report from the hospital in Beira where Tsafendas was hospitalised believing he was Saint Peter. For a more detailed analysis of the issue of Tsafendas's medical records see the relevant section in Dr. Cooper's testimony.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you consider your finding on the 6th September, 1966, at 7 p.m. as conclusive?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Did I consider it conclusive?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Yes?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Up to that point it was conclusive. I was able to make a diagnosis.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And did you think that further tests and observations were necessary?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. Sometimes one is misled by the clinical picture and it is only reasonable to do certain tests to find out whether other conditions are not mimicking this picture.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Is it true that when you examined the accused on the 6th September, 1966, he answered all questions readily?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes he answered them unguardedly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And you did not find any blocking?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Any blocking? No, not at that time.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: He was not vague?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, he was vague, certainly, because I could not follow the processes of his reasoning. When he talked about his royal kinship with somebody called Von Willem and he talked about his quasi political ideas, I could not follow him there at all. When he talked about the meeting between Chief Jonathan and Dr. Verwoerd, it having something to do with the Immorality Act, I couldn't follow him there.

²⁸⁷⁴ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, London to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA; Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 33.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You found no syntactical schizophrenia?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I found no syntactical formal schizophrenic thought disorder at that time, which meant that his grammar was reasonable, taking into account the fact that he was in an excited state.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you agree that you also found the accused to be fully orientated as to time and person?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, I did.

JUDGE BEYERS: All that you are putting to him now he has already said. It is on record. It is from his report.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: How did you come to the conclusion at 7 p.m. that the accused was not in a position to evaluate correctly the consequences of the crime?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I did not come to that conclusion at 7 p.m. I came to that conclusion when I weighed up all that evidence the next morning, when I had thought about it and slept on it, and put it all together. I came to that conclusion, in fact, at the end of that interview when I came out and I said to a member of the Security Police - the Major who was there - I said that this chap ought to go into Valkenburg for observation, and he said - well, that is not relevant. Or if you like, he said: "I feel sorry for the poor bugger."

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: But did you know, when you examined the accused at 7 p.m. on the 6th September, that he had been concussed in Parliament?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, I could see that he had been restrained, yes. Concussed, well, I could not see DEFENCE COUNSEL: I must object. There is no evidence that the man was concussed in Parliament.

JUDGE BEYERS: It might still come.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Very well, but then put it but JUDGE BEYERS: Why?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Dr. Kossew was the one who examined him and he did not find him to be concussed.

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Concussion to me ...

JUDGE BEYERS: What is wrong with putting the question? The State hasn't led evidence yet?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Does the State now contend that he was concussed in Parliament and will lead evidence to substantiate that?

JUDGE BEYERS: From that question and the way it is put, I would normally deduce that the advocate putting it has got evidence that he was concussed.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: From a medical man?

JUDGE BEYERS: I don't care from whom he's got it. He might have it from Tsafendas. He is entitled at this stage to cross-examine on that basis. The question is perfectly in order.

DR. SAKINOFSKY: If I may answer that question then from the Attorney-General. I did not conclude it on medical grounds because the man was not confused; he was not disorientated in time and place. Had he been concussed, had he been a man who was unconscious for a time, I would have expected this. And if I found that he was disorientated in time and place then I would have thought that there was concussion present which was influencing my clinical picture at the time.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you know that the accused's nose had been broken?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, I saw stitches. I didn't go into exactly what anatomical feature had been broken,

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you know whether the accused had had any injections before you saw him?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I assumed that he would have had an anti-tetanus injection and possibly an antibiotic, but he had not had a sedative and he did not in any way have his consciousness clouded or impaired by concussion when I saw him, and the way I establish this is by orientation in time and place,

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Could an injection for pain have impaired his reasoning?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No, I don't think so. Not without sedating him to the point where he was drowsy. He was anything but drowsy.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Couldn't the accused have been suffering from delayed shock?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: When you examined him?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I don't think that he was suffering from delayed shock in any way that would impair the mental state that I found at that time.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you consider it at the time?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. He was not pale. His pulse was good; I felt it several times actually.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you agree that millions of people think that Dr. Verwoerd and the Portuguese Government were in league together?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I think millions of people know that there is a friendly relationship between our two countries, but I would not say that they were in league in the sense that Mr. Tsafendas saw them to be in league. In other words, that the Portuguese Government was influencing the internal affairs of South Africa, the Immorality Act, etc.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: How can you say that this is a delusion?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: How can I say that that is a delusion?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Yes?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Because taking the whole of his quasi political ideas, in their context, I would think that these are false beliefs which cannot be held by a majority of our society, by anybody other than someone who is mentally deranged. Taking into account the context, not taking things out of context.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Is it true that the subject of the meeting between Dr. Verwoerd and Chief Jonathan was a matter of general political speculation?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, I think that is certainly so.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he know what they were meeting about?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Did who know? Did I know?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: No, the accused?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I don't think he did. Not from what he told me. He told me they were meeting to consider the Immorality Act.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you regard the accused's explanation of the cause of his headaches as ridiculous?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: His explanation that they were due to pressure?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Yes. Did you regard it as ridiculous?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No, I didn't regard that in itself as being particularly ridiculous. Lots of lay people talk about their headaches being due to pressure.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: The accused never mentioned to you that it was a tapeworm that was responsible for his illness, did he?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: When? At the first interview?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: On the first occasion?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: On the first interview we didn't get round to the tapeworm, no.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Would you have expected him to have mentioned it on this first occasion?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I don't think so, because there were so many recent events. After all, he had just assassinated the Prime Minister, and one was talking about that and what led him to do that, and his mind, I think, was filled with the quasi-political delusions which he held at that time, in this state of excitement- excitement in the pathological sense.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: If the tapeworm was the reason why he assassinated the Prime Minister, wouldn't you have expected him to have mentioned it on this very first occasion?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I think in retrospect, had I specifically asked him, he would have gone into great detail about the tapeworm, but I didn't ask him.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Would you have expected him to have mentioned it himself?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Why not?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Because a lot depended on how the conversation was led, and I was interested in the political side, to find out whether he had a political motive, whether this man was a criminal or an insane person.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you ask him why he assassinated the Prime Minister?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, I did.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And what did he say?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: He said because the Prime Minister was against (witness refers to his notes) the Commonwealth, against the English way of life, because he was a foreigner, because he was in league with the Portuguese Government, because he was against the ideal of a Cape-to- Cairo union, and, somehow, also because he had a mother who was of the royal family, of royal birth. Somehow this was also intruded as a reason for his killing the Prime Minister, and I couldn't see the relevance of that.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: So do you agree that the accused only gave political reasons for killing the Prime Minister?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: He gave political reasons at that time. And also, I don't know whether you would include this being a member of an overseas royal family as being a reason - if that is political, then he included that also. And also if you include the delusion of his being subjected to torture, mental torture, in a Lisbon hospital for 14 years, if that is regarded as political, then he gave that as a reason too.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you agree that schizophrenia of hebephrenic type is one of the diseases which leads to rapid disintegration? Which is that - hebephrenia? Yes?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, it is said to lead to rapid deterioration of personality, and, if you recall, just now I said how surprised I was that they had made that diagnosis. But not all that surprised, because we know that originally these categories which Kraepelin and others put forward for schizophrenia merge with one another in the course of a man's life. A man can start off as a paranoid schizophrenia and end up as a hebephrenic schizophrenia - that kind of thing. Or he may schizophrenia start off as a catatonic and end up as a hebephrenic schizophrenia.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: If the accused had been suffering from schizophrenia for 20 years, wouldn't you have expected him to have been permanently detained in a mental hospital by now?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, that was one of the reasons why I make the diagnosis of paraphrenia, in fact, and I would not necessarily have expected him to have been detained in a mental hospital. There are plenty of authorities I can't lay my finger on now which point out that a man can amble around the world for 20 or 30 years and spend a short space of time, every couple of years, in a mental hospital, and yet have this chronic incapacitating mental disease, schizophrenia, and yet be liable to erupt, as this man unexpectedly did.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: He could be a periodic type, not so?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: This is one kind of schizophrenia which many people don't believe in.

JUDGE BEYERS: What is that?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I think the Attorney-General is suggesting a variety of schizophrenia which with lucida intervalla and then a bit of schizophrenia and then a lucidum intervallum again?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: You say not many people believe in that?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I think many people would prefer to call those a variety of atypic or affective psychosis, but for someone, as one understands this man, to have been for 30 years possessed with this idea that he has got a giant tapeworm inside him, chronic delusional insanity, I would have thought this was entirely out of keeping with that kind of diagnosis.

JUDGE BEYERS: With this sort of come-and-go business?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. With relatively completely lucid intervals in between. I would think that in between, if one probes, one would find disease, ASSESSOR: Do you base that only on the tapeworm delusion?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, I regard that as a very important delusion, hypochondriacal delusion, particularly if it is established that it has been in existence throughout this man's mental hospital life.

ASSESSOR: Assuming that it has, that alone, you feel, would destroy the idea that it was a periodic form?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. Because I would have thought that somebody who has an episodic illness would bring out fresh delusions, not the same continuous delusion.

JUDGE BEYERS: Even at times when he is in the valleys, when it is not active, the sick, delusional material is still lying at the bottom of the valley, because when he gets up to the rise in the graph again the same thing comes out again - that is what you are trying to say?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: If it was periodic, it would be a tapeworm now, and in a few months' time it would be a lion?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, quite.

JUDGE BEYERS: And then again?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: A tiger.

JUDGE BEYERS: Or a tiger. That is what you are trying to say?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. With complete normality in between.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: If there is evidence that the accused was diagnosed as a schizophrenic years ago, and there is evidence that over the last few years he has travelled widely and that he could take care of himself, isn't that strongly suggestive of recovery?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Of recovery?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Yes?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Not in itself, no.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Why not?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: It is the level of life at which this man maintains himself that would have to be taken into account. If he was living as a bum, moving around the world as a locksmith here, as a woodcutter in Sweden and Canada, as a stevedore in another country - a man of his intelligence - I would have thought this is consistent with many schizophrenics that one comes across, and who spend a great deal of their time in mental hospitals too.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Would you have expected the accused to have mentioned to you on the 6th September that he killed the Prime Minister because of this tapeworm?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Not necessarily. He might not have thought I would believe it at that stage.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Dr. Kossew found that the accused was not confused at 2.50 p.m. What would you say about that?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Not confused?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Not confused at 2.50 p.m. on 6th September?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Sorry - what relation has this to the assassination? When was the assassination supposed to have been done?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: The 6th of September?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: At what time?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Between 2.14 and 2.15?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: So just after the assassination he wasn't confused?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Yes. Twenty-five minutes after the assassination Dr. Kossew found that he was not confused. I would infer from that that he could not be suffering from concussion at that time. But how do you relate it to your finding that his reasoning was not impaired?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I think here we are in semantic jungles. The term "confused" to the lay person means somebody who is muddled. But to a doctor it means someone whose consciousness is clouded, who is disorientated in time and place or person and whose attention wanders due to a clouding of consciousness of organic kind. I assume that Dr. Kossew used the medical usage of the word confused.

COMMENTS ON THE CROSS-EXAMINATION

The Attorney-General and the Court made a good attempt to challenge Dr. Sakinofsky's testimony with obvious questions such as why Tsafendas did not mention the tapeworm in their first meeting. Although Dr. Sakinofsky's response seems adequate, it does not explain why Tsafendas mentioned all these other things like the Cape to Cairo union, the Commonwealth etc. as reasons for killing Dr. Verwoerd, but never repeated these reasons to anyone else, not the police nor the medics nor lawyers who examined him. With Dr. Cooper, Tsafendas gave "frustration" as his motive, without mentioning the reasons he gave to Dr. Sakinofsky. However, he gave the police clear and straightforward reasons. What he told them is compatible with the evidence gathered by the police and the author; what he told Dr. Sakinofsky is incompatible with both.

Again, the South African police were in possession of several documents, including statements by people which contradicted Dr. Sakinofsky's diagnosis. The report from Grafton State Hospital was also in the possession of the police and could have also been used to challenge Dr. Sakinofsky's diagnosis. It is highly likely that the police were also in possession of the report from the hospital in Beira where Tsafendas was diagnosed as a schizophrenic who believed he was Saint Peter. None of all this evidence was used to challenge given testimony, thus the author is not in a position to know if the evidence was given to the Attorney-General.

What is striking is the effort made by the Attorney-General to challenge Dr. Sakinofsky's diagnosis, when his own two State-appointed experts, Professor of Psychiatry van Wyk and clinical psychologist Erasmus had come to the same conclusion as Dr. Sakinofsky. To challenge Dr. Sakinofsky was tantamount to challenging his own two experts. If the Attorney-General had doubts or lacked confidence in his two experts or if he believed that Tsafendas may not have been schizophrenic, why did he not appoint more psychiatrists and psychologists to examine him?

CONCLUSION

Dr. Sakinofsky's diagnosis of Tsafendas as schizophrenic was inevitable based on the evidence available to him. Although he admitted in correspondence with the author that "in psychiatry, after one has interviewed a patient, it is best practice to seek collateral information from family, friends, and medical records," he was not in possession of any information concerning Tsafendas from any of his friends or family. Rightly and professionally, he had contacted some of the hospitals where Tsafendas was admitted in order to seek additional information about him.

Although the defence was in possession of additional medical records for Tsafendas, these were not given to the doctor, probably because they contained information incompatible with that available to the doctor. Withheld or unavailable evidence included the fact that Tsafendas had another delusion in the 1940s, hearing voices from the radiators, while there is also no mention about Tsafendas's delusional idea two months before the assassination that people were murdered in his house. Very importantly, the fact that he had faked mental illness while in an American hospital and had been caught at it is also not mentioned.

The Attorney-General should have been in possession of documentation, from witnesses' statements to medical reports and statements from various organizations around the world to effectively challenge this testimony, but as with other testimonies, this did not happen, although the Attorney-General and the Court tried harder than before to launch a challenge.

The ever-present tapeworm makes its appearance here too and again Tsafendas repeats what he told Dr. Cooper. Everything that Tsafendas told Dr. Sakinofsky was a lie, most of them inspired by real events that had taken place in his life, like the wooden box similar to a grafonola which the Portuguese used to deliver electric shocks while he was imprisoned in Portugal. Dr. Sakinofsky was not in position to know that these were lies, but the State should have been. The police and the Commission had collected at least two hundred statements from people who knew Tsafendas.

Several extracts from Dr. Sakinofsky's testimony were read word by word, individually, to about sixty people who knew Tsafendas, including nine who knew him very well. None of them believes that Tsafendas meant what he said. Nor did he mention to them any of the topics he gave to Dr. Sakinofsky. Their position is supported by about two hundred witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission at the time and none of them mentioned anything like this. Nine of those witnesses who were interviewed by the author were extremely close to Tsafendas and although he confided to them about many things, he never once mentioned the Cape to Cairo union or expressed an interest in the Commonwealth or mentioned any of the things he told Dr. Sakinofsky.

In addition, Tsafendas told several people before the assassination and police and others after the assassination, that he considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant and a dictator, but he never said this to Dr. Sakinofsky. At the same time, he never mentioned to other people what he said to Dr. Sakinofsky. If Tsafendas really believed what he told Dr. Sakinofsky, especially his political ideas, he would surely have mentioned them to someone else. Why would Tsafendas talk about the same political ideas to more than a hundred people, to the South African police and to the Portuguese police, but say something completely different to Dr. Sakinofsky? Obviously, because he was lying to him in an attempt to present himself as "deluded" and mad.

According to Professor Tuviah Zabow, "if Tsafendas was really schizophrenic, his condition should have deteriorated after what he went through in prison, especially without receiving medical treatment."²⁸⁷⁵ However, to the end Tsafendas maintained to everyone he met that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he was a tyrant and a dictator who was oppressing his people and he hoped that his death would bring a change a policy or would be a stepping stone towards the fall of apartheid. He also maintained until his death the political ideas he held before the assassination and had expressed to tens of people, namely being a Communist, anti-fascist, anti-colonialist and supporter of the independence of Mozambique. Tsafendas never changed his political ideas. He never told anyone what he told Dr. Sakinofsky.

²⁸⁷⁵ Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016.

A lot of Tsafendas's claims could very easily been proven to be lies by looking at the evidence gathered by the police. The most obvious example is that Tsafendas told Dr. Sakinofsky he did not remember anything about Dr. Verwoerd's killing and felt that he was hypnotised although he had described it in perfect detail twice to the police while he was in custody. Even thirty years later, Tsafendas was able to describe the assassination in detail.

Dr. Sakinofsky's diagnosis is entirely wrong, but this is hardly his fault. Like Dr. Cooper and the other psychiatrists he was required to evaluate Tsafendas's condition based on what Tsafendas said and on some of his medical records which told half the truth. Dr. Sakinofsky was the only one of those who examined Tsafendas who tried to get additional information about him. Advocate Cooper did an exceptionally good job for his side, as he had done with Dr. Cooper, by handling the Grafton State Hospital report in a carefully selective way. Tsafendas remembered very fondly Dr. Sakinofsky until he died, always speaking highly of him and described him as a "very kind, good and intelligent boy."²⁸⁷⁶ ²⁸⁷⁶ Tsafendas in A Question of Madness; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 10: GILLIAN CLAIRE LIEBERMAN

INTRODUCTION

Gillian Lieberman was also questioned by the police on October 6.²⁸⁷⁷ She was the last witness to testify this day as the court then adjourned until the next day.

GILLIAN LIEBERMAN'S TESTIMONY²⁸⁷⁸

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Miss Lieberman, what is your occupation?

LIEBERMAN: I am Personnel Secretary.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Which Company?

LIEBERMAN: The Marine Diamond Corporation.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Have you seen the accused before?

LIEBERMAN: Yes, I have.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where did you see him?

LIEBERMAN: I saw him approximately the first time in February, 1966 employed as...

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And was he employment then?

LIEBERMAN: He was a pump operator on a diamond barge.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Owned by your Company?

LIEBERMAN: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: During which period was he employed as a pump operator?

LIEBERMAN: From the 3rd of February, 1966, and he resigned of his own accord on the 7th of April, 1966.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did he earn per month during this period?

²⁸⁷⁷ Gillian Claire Liebermann statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁸⁷⁸ Gillian Claire Liebermann's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

LIEBERMAN: He earned R180 nett.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: During the period of employment with The Marine Diamond Corporation, did you talk to him at any stage?

LIEBERMAN: Yes, I did.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was the nature of your conversation?

LIEBERMAN: I spoke to him on a number of occasions. The first time he came to me, he came to my office, he had a query, and he wished to go and see a doctor.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: For what reason?

LIEBERMAN: He complained that he had something wrong with his ears and nose, with his head, and I referred him to our Company doctor.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he on the occasions that you spoke to him, did he have any grievance, any complaints?

LIEBERMAN: Yes, he did have a number of complaints.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Will you tell us some of them?

LIEBERMAN: He complained about the conditions of employment on our diamond barges. He complained about the type of person we employed on our diamond barge.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was his complaint about then?

LIEBERMAN: Well, I am not quite sure. He complained about the type of person. I never quite understood what he referred to when he meant "type of person", he did not have a tolerance towards the type of superintendent we employed, his superiors, he did not seem to like our superiors.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And as regard white people what was his attitude?

LIEBERMAN: He was rather intolerant towards them. When I refer to white people, the type of white people we employed, that was his intolerance, not to white people as a whole.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How was he dressed?

LIEBERMAN: Rather sloppily dressed.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was the impression you formed of him, overall?

LIEBERMAN: My overall impression was that he was rather untidy, sloppy. He seemed rather odd to me.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Wasn't he a very dissatisfied person?

LIEBERMAN: Yes, he seemed rather a dissatisfied person.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you tell him that you could not arrange separate facilities for them?

LIEBERMAN: Yes, I did.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And what was his reaction to that?

LIEBERMAN: He accepted that.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Why did he resign? Who advised him to resign? Did you advise him?

LIEBERMAN: I did advise him, he had a number of complaints and his general dissatisfaction of the Company. I suggested that the best thing would be for him to resign and he agreed with me.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused speak to you about the political situation in South Africa?

LIEBERMAN: He wished to know my political affiliation and I told him that in my position as personnel secretary I was not in a position to discuss them.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you find the accused to be intelligent?

LIEBERMAN: Well, I did not find him over-intelligent or under-intelligent. He was of normal intelligence to me. I mean I did not see him that long to be able to assess his intelligence as such.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: How long were you associated with him?

LIEBERMAN: He was employed with us, as I said, for roughly two months, and I met him on a number of occasions, probably this interview I had with him lasted from anything from ten minutes to half- an-hour.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Didn't you say this to the Police: "I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation, but a strange type of person, a unique character?

LIEBERMAN: Yes, I did.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And is that still your opinion?

LIEBERMAN: Yes, that is my opinion.

COMMENTS ON LIEBERMAN'S TESTIMONY AND TO HER CROSS-EXAMINATION

Lieberman does not tell us much about Tsafendas apart from the fact that he was not happy with working conditions, that he was “rather untidy, sloppy” and he seemed “odd” to her. She had only spoken to him on “a number of occasions” and was not in contact with him every day like the company’s field workers. Lieberman had earlier testified to the police about Tsafendas’s dirty clothes. However, since his was a labouring job, dirty clothes would seem normal. He could hardly have work a business suit for work. All those who knew Tsafendas socially, as we have seen earlier, testified that he was always dressed and that wore dirty clothes only at work. For more about the way Tsafendas was dressed look earlier at Merle Daniels’s testimony.

Lieberman also testified that Tsafendas seemed “odd” to her, but did not elaborate further and neither the Attorney-General nor the Court asked what she meant by that. Leaving the word hanging could give the impression that Tsafendas was a mentally peculiar. However, what Lieberman said in her statement to the police was: “I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation, but a strange type of person, a unique character. Apart from him being well-travelled etc., I got the impression that he was physically different in dress and appearance. He was a big man, with a particularly striking big hat, stainless steel teeth, sloppy dirty clothing.”²⁸⁷⁹

According to her statement to the police, Lieberman had found Tsafendas strange because of how he dressed and his physical appearance, not for what he did or said. On the contrary, she had stated, and this was heard in the court only because of the cross-examination, that she had found Tsafendas to be “intelligent” and “able to reason in conversation.” Lieberman was not the first one to comment on Tsafendas “reasoning power.” Ralph Lighton, who worked with Tsafendas for nine or ten weeks at Marine Diamond Corporation, the same company as Lieberman, testified to the police that he “never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers.”²⁸⁸⁰ Neville Judson worked with Tsafendas for Mike’s Outfitters for forty-two days in July and August 1966 and told the police that he “never in no way got the impression that he could be mentally deranged. He appeared to be a normal man with normal reasoning powers.”²⁸⁸¹

²⁸⁷⁹ Gillian Claire Lieberman statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Lieberman had also told the police that she got the impression that Tsafendas did “not agree with authority (Governmental or other)” but she did not repeat this statement in court and the Attorney-General did not mention it.

Lieberman was obviously chosen to testify that Tsafendas was an “odd” and “dissatisfied” person who often complained. The defence seemed to turn a blind eye to the fact that she had testified to the police about Tsafendas’s intelligence and reasoning powers, probably because it was proving difficult to find suitable witnesses to support the defence line. If the defence wanted to bring forward witnesses who worked with Tsafendas and knew him reasonably well and were ready to talk about him, they would have called field workers and not an office worker who had limited contact with him. Tsafendas had worked in Marine Diamond Corporation for three months and had co-workers who saw him every day. Three of these workers had already testified to the police.

One of them was Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden, senior security officer of the company’s Colponton diamond boat. He testified to the police that:

“We were transferred from the Marina with a small outboard boat to the Colponton. It was terrible rough seas, so much so that almost all of us old hands got seasick. It struck me that Tsafendas adapted well. He was one of the few who were not sick. With landing, he filled the mess-basin on the lower deck with water and started shaving. His calm way struck me that he must know the sea. Tsafendas was employed as a pump, or engineer, operator and did not work under my direct supervision. I introduced myself to him and talked to him. He was friendly, outgoing, and was not aloof. I noticed that his eating was messy. Otherwise he was completely normal.”²⁸⁸²

Another one was Ralph Lighton who had testified on September 17 that having worked with Tsafendas for nine-ten weeks, he understood that he was “lazy and inefficient,” “used to mix with the Coloureds rather than with the Europeans,” “said that the climbing of the ladders were too much for him. I never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers, but despite his former career in the Merchant Marine, was unsuitable for our work.”²⁸⁸³ Hulse, who also worked for the company at this time, testified to the police on September 28 that Tsafendas “informed him that he left Marine Diamond as the work was too hard for an old man like him.” He also said that Tsafendas “did not appear to be disturbed at any stage.”²⁸⁸⁴

²⁸⁸⁰ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁸⁸¹ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

²⁸⁸² Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden statement to the police, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

These three witnesses knew Tsafendas better than Lieberman and would have been able to testify to his work skills and ethics. Naturally the defence did not choose them since what they had told the police did not suit the defence line. Instead, Lieberman was brought forward (despite her remark that Tsafendas was able to reason in a conversation and was intelligent), simply because she also testified that he wore dirty clothes, was dissatisfied and a “strange person.” This demonstrates the desperation of the defence to find suitable witnesses to support their line. On the other hand, these three statements could have been useful to the State to challenge the defence, but none of them was used.

²⁸⁸³ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁸⁸⁴ Hulse statement to the police, 28 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

DAY 3: 19 OCTOBER 1966

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 11: REYNER JOHANNES VAN ZYL

REYNER VAN ZYL'S PROFESSIONAL BIOGRAPHY

Reyner Johannes van Zyl, a clinical psychologist practising at Grand Parade Centre, Castle Street, Cape Town, was registered with the South African Medical and Dental Council as a psychologist. He holds a B.A. degree and a Master's in Psychology. He secured the Master's Degree at the University of Pretoria in 1959 and then worked at the Tara Neuro-psychiatric Hospital in Johannesburg as an intern in clinical psychology for eighteen months. For approximately nine months he worked at the Constantia Reformatory as a psychologist and then was employed at Groote Schuur Hospital in the same capacity. He worked at Groote Schuur full-time for two years and for the last three years part-time.²⁸⁸⁵ He was recommended to David Bloomberg by his good friend Dr. Harold Cooper; he was then appointed to examine Tsafendas.²⁸⁸⁶

REYNER VAN ZYL'S TESTIMONY²⁸⁸⁷

VAN ZYL'S EXAMINATION, HIS TESTS AND TSAFENDAS'S IQ

DEFENCE COUNSEL: On what day did you examine the accused?

VAN ZYL: I examined the accused on the 13th October, 1966.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: For how many hours?

VAN ZYL: For three and a half hours.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was it one stretch or did you have a break?

VAN ZYL: There was a break in between.

²⁸⁸⁵ Reyner van Zyl's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²⁸⁸⁶ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

²⁸⁸⁷ Reyner van Zyl's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: So the first session of the interview lasted how long?

VAN ZYL: For two hours.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And the second for one and a half hours?

VAN ZYL: That is correct.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Have you drawn up a report?

VAN ZYL: I have done so.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Of your tests and your findings and the conclusion you have come to?

VAN ZYL: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Have you that report before you?

VAN ZYL: I have.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And there are photostatic copies available which you can hand in to the Court for the Court's convenience. This document which you will read out, adhere to and hand in will be R.S.C.D. would you start at the first paragraph?

VAN ZYL: I interviewed and tested Mr. Demitrio Tsafendas on the 13th October, 1966, for two hours in the morning and 1 1/2 hours in the afternoon.

(Witness reads R.S.C.D). The following psychological tests were used:

- The new South African standardization of the Wechsler Bellevue Adult Intelligence Test.
- The Thematic Apperception Personality Test.
- The Rorschach Personality Test.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Before we go any further, would you explain to his Lordship and the gentlemen assessors with him what is the new South African standardization of the Wechsler Bellevue Adult Intelligence Test?

VAN ZYL: It is an intelligence test consisting of ten sub-tests, and testing different aspects of intelligence. It is generally used for White South Africans and can test in the range from an I.Q. of 20 - which would be an idiot - to an I.Q. of plus-minus 190 - which is out and out a genius.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You say the average White adult?

VAN ZYL: That is correct,

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would the standard test by this test be higher than for, say, an average Coloured adult?

VAN ZYL: If you are going to test a Coloured adult on this test, it is very likely that he will score lower than a White man.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Why?

VAN ZYL: Because it is standardized for White people and there are separate tests for Coloureds.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you deal with the sub-test - the sub-sections of the test. There were ten in number?

VAN ZYL: That is correct.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Just give us the ten?

VAN ZYL: The sub-tests were: Information; Comprehension; Arithmetic; Digit Span; Similarities; Picture Completion; Object Assembly; Block design; Digit symbol substitution; and Picture arrangement.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: May I just pause for a moment. How did the accused react to these tests?

VAN ZYL: He was very co-operative and calm and at ease in the testing situation.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was he interested in what you were asking him, or did he appear to be interested in what you were asking him?

VAN ZYL: He did not particularly appear to be interested but he responded quite well.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: First of all, as to the Information sub-section, what was his score?

VAN ZYL: 11.5.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is the significance of that?

VAN ZYL: The average score is 10, and he scored 11.5.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was it a wide range of information that you tested him on?

VAN ZYL: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Comprehension, what was his score?

VAN ZYL: 14.5.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is the significance of that?

VAN ZYL: Again the average is 10, which means that it is a very high score.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Arithmetic, what was the result of that?

VAN ZYL: Nine.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is your comment there?

VAN ZYL: That it is somewhat below average

MR. BAKER: Is the average ten throughout?

VAN ZYL: Throughout.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Digit Span?

VAN ZYL: 12.5.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you explain to the Court what is meant by Digit Span?

VAN ZYL: You give the subject some digits to repeat. The easier ones he would have to repeat two or three digits immediately after you had said it, and then more difficult, it goes up to nine digits.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: So again, what is your comment on the figure 12.5?

VAN ZYL: It is again better than average and good.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Similarities, the result was?

VAN ZYL: 8.5.

JUDGE BEYERS: Mr. Cooper, I again don't wish to cut you short, but there does not appear to be any attack upon the fact that this man is of high intelligence. So couldn't we go through this, perhaps, a little less in detail?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Certainly, M'Lord.

JUDGE BEYERS: I did not understand there to be any question of his having more than an adequate I.Q.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: There is just one aspect, that this test also ties up with his present mental

JUDGE BEYERS: I don't want to put you off.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: That is why I think it is necessary to have a scatter of it. The important feature is schizophrenia; and to have a scatter of it.

(Cont.): Just go on now. What did you find in Similarities?

VAN ZYL: 8.5.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Picture Completion?

VAN ZYL: 13.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Object Assembly?

VAN ZYL: 10.5.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Block design?

VAN ZYL: 10.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Digit Symbol substitution?

VAN ZYL: 8.5.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Picture arrangement?

VAN ZYL: 15.5.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you then go on from that point to read your report further?

VAN ZYL: (Witness continues reading R.S.C.D). "His full I.Q. tests at 113.5. His verbal I.Q. tests at 125.00."

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you test him for his standard of English?

VAN ZYL: As part of the verbal I.Q. test?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Yes?

VAN ZYL: I did.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was your finding?

VAN ZYL: That it was very good.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Compared to, say, Matric, or Standard VIII or university; could you give is some idea?

VAN ZYL: I'd say Matric level.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you proceed then with your report?

VAN ZYL: (Witness continues reading R.S.C.D). "The latter is a separate test of the Weschsler Bellevue Test and is commonly used to give a rough indication of the individual's intelligence. The discrepancy between the full-scale I.Q. and the verbal I.Q. is therefore not important. As can be noted from the above sub-sections, there is a marked scatter in scores which can not only be contributed to higher aptitude on these sub-sections.

As a matter of fact, his verbal I.Q. as compared to his nonverbal I.Q. is 111 against 114, which is not a significant difference. These are the only two broad categories of aptitudes in this test. The scatter is therefore of great significance. This very wide scatter is indicative of gross personality disturbance and some kind of interference of the smooth functioning of the intellect of the individual. His particular pattern of scatter is not 100 per cent typical of any particular type of psychological illness. It is known that an atypical pattern does not necessarily exclude any diagnosis.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In administering the test, what did you find, what impression did you form?

VAN ZYL: (Witness reads R.S.C.D). "I very strongly got the impression that this man has great difficulty in abstract thinking and in expressing himself. The latter I did not think was due to language difficulty because of his high verbal intelligence. My impression was that his original I.Q. was + 125 but that this had deteriorated because of some interfering illness. I gathered from Mr. Tsafendas that this test was also done by the Clinical Psychologist representing the State but I do not think that the learning which took place by repeating the test can invalidate or change the basic pattern significantly."

DR. PETER LAMBLEY REGARDING VAN ZYL'S IQ TESTS

Dr. Peter Lambley, a British psychologist and author of the acclaimed The Psychology of Apartheid,²⁸⁸⁸ had worked in the 1970s in South Africa and for some time was colleague of both Dr. Cooper and Mr. van Zyl. The following is an extract from his book about van Zyl's test:

²⁸⁸⁸ Dr. Lambley's The Psychology of Apartheid (1980) was very well received on the time of its publication and was published by The University of Georgia Press. In addition, the foreword of the book is written by Antony Storr, one of the leading psychiatrists of the previous century and Britain's most literate psychiatrist (Anthony Stevens, 'Antony Storr Obituary', The Guardian, 20 March 2001).

“The evidence from the IQ testing indicated a temporal impairment - shown by only two low scores out of ten (of z=85) - rather than a major impairment of functioning. Truly hebephrenic schizophrenics show the reverse: impairment on all but one or two tests. Tsafendas’s scores showed him to be withdrawn and cut off - interpreted in court as schizophrenia - but not demented in anything like the degree claimed. Anyone, in fact any normal-neurotic person in the same frightful and shocking situation, would show the same kind of fall-off in performance. If you took Tsafendas’s IQ test results (ten sub-tests) and asked a clinician to evaluate them blind - that is, without knowing who he was - they would say, and I quote: ‘Highly intelligent, creative adult male with some personality problems.’ I did, in fact, take Tsafendas’s results and gave them to other clinicians to rate blind. No one said he was schizophrenic or even severely disturbed. They noted that in some instances, his sub-test results showed an extremely high level of intellectual functioning.”²⁸⁸⁹

TSAFENDAS, A “WITHDRAWN AND ISOLATED INDIVIDUAL” WITH “LACK OF HUMAN REACTION”

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Now you came to the Thematic Apperception Test?

VAN ZYL: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you shortly explain to the Court what the Thematic Apperception Test is, or as you call it, the T.A.T.?

VAN ZYL: It is a test consisting of a series of 20 pictures in which you ask the patient to tell you a story about each one. It represents everyday life, human situations. You ask him what is happening in the test, how he feels, what thoughts are concerned and the possible outcome of the story. And then you analyse that according to a specific training or pattern.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: From this test, what became clear?

VAN ZYL: (Witness reads R.S.C.D) “From this test it is clear to me that the usual type of psychodynamic pattern which is present in neurotic individuals is absent in Mr. Tsafendas’s record. According to the test, it is evident that there is virtually nothing in the way of meaningful interpersonal contact.”

²⁸⁸⁹ Lambley, The Psychology of Apartheid, p. 272-273.

JUDGE BEYERS: "Meaningful interpersonal contact." Could you tell me what that is?

VAN ZYL: The ability to relate warmly with feeling towards a fellow human being.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Give us an example?

VAN ZYL: For example, let's assume you tell somebody that your mother has just died, and he says to you: "So, she has just died" - there is no warmth in the reply.

JUDGE BEYERS: A lack of human reaction?

VAN ZYL: Lack.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What else did he show?

VAN ZYL: (Witness continues reading from R.S.C.D). "Also he shows a marked flatness and absence of feeling except for a strong statement about depression which could not be followed through at the emotional level. He also found it very difficult to project himself and identify with the test stimuli which is indicative of his being a withdrawn and isolated individual. All his test responses were dull and without drive to complete or follow them through. This is indicative of a lack of volition and an element of depression. His whole approach to the test was vague and unsure and he found it very difficult to think constructively and in accordance with his measured I.Q. about the test stimuli. It was quite an effort for me to get him to complete his responses according to my instructions. Without fail, I had to ask him about emotions concerned. On this inquiry, he never gave me a satisfactory answer."

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In view of his difficulty to make reasonable and meaningful contact, what diagnosis did you make?

VAN ZYL: That I would say is a schizophrenic symptom, but of course, the diagnosis does not rest only on this one symptom.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you give us your conclusion then at the top of page 4?

VAN ZYL: (Witness reads R.S.C.'D'). "In view of this individual's difficulty to make reasonable and meaningful contact with the outside world and his disorder of intelligence, emotions and volition, I am making the diagnosis of schizophrenia on this test."

COMMENTS ON VAN ZYL’S ABOVE TESTIMONY

TSAFENDAS BEING A “WITHDRAWN AND ISOLATED INDIVIDUAL”

Van Zyl also characterised Tsafendas as a “withdrawn and isolated individual,” which he described as a symptom of schizophrenia. Many witnesses testified to the contrary, Tsafendas was sociable, friendly and open, since he was a child. The most telling evidence that Tsafendas was neither withdrawn nor isolated comes from the following two incidents:

Guenther Haafe, doorman at the Frankfurt factory where Tsafendas worked for six weeks in 1958. Eight years later, after the assassination, he still remembered the jovial greeting which Tsafendas gave him every morning and said about him: “He was a jolly man, always smiling and friendly. He would almost always come into my locker (room) to say Hi. He was really one of the friendliest workers I have met and trust me, in my twelve years as a doorman I have seen thousands and thousands of faces coming in and out; this man was courteous, they do not make them like that anymore.” Horst Hartmann, Tsafendas’s boss at that job, said Tsafendas was “well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous ... a very pleasant man. He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman ... we liked him ... always laughing, a good worker.”²⁸⁹⁰

While in Beira in 1964, Tsafendas attended the wedding of Vittorio, an Italian friend and fellow Communist, probably from Naples, who was working with him at the time. As the celebrations proceeded, Tsafendas rose from his chair and raised his glass. Everyone thought he was about to deliver a speech. He did indeed deliver a very short speech wishing the newly-weds well, but then, in a ringing baritone, he launched passionately into an Italian Communist song. Most of the Greeks among the guests were speechless, but Vittorio and his Italian friends joined in eagerly, clapping and rhythmically pounding the table with their fists or spoons. When he finished he received huge applause and Vittorio and some of his friends called for another song. Tsafendas obliged with a second Italian Communist anthem and again many guests joined him.²⁸⁹¹

Furthermore:

- Albert Vercueil, Tsafendas’s boss at F.A. Poole Engineering for five months found him to ²⁸⁹⁰ Daily Dispatch, ‘He Made A Good Impression’, 8 September 1966: 1; Daily Express, ‘The Assassin’, 8 September 1966: 2; Natal Witness, ‘Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...’, 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, ‘Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte’, 8 September 1966; The Daily News, ‘Tsafendas Seen As ‘Mystery Man’’, 8 September 1966: 17.

²⁸⁹¹ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

be a “very friendly, social and talkative person.”²⁸⁹²

- Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden, who worked alongside Tsafendas for about three months at the Marine Diamond Corporation, testified that “he was friendly, outgoing, and was not aloof.”²⁸⁹³
- Owen Smorenberg, who worked with him for five-six weeks, testified that “Tsafendas was very talkative and gave the impression that he was very friendly. He wanted to talk to everybody and it became known to me that he was able to speak different languages.”²⁸⁹⁴
- An unnamed “respected member of the Press gallery” in the House of Assembly “who knew Tsafendas well” spoke to René MacColl, Daily Express’s chief foreign correspondent, about Tsafendas. He told him that “far from being a withdrawn sort of man, he seemed to be intent on impressing his personality on one. There was always the big smile, the ready chat and an almost obsessive intention to make you remember him. There couldn’t have been a less grey or faceless figure.”²⁸⁹⁵
- J. Willemse was Tsafendas’s landlord for one month in 1965. He characterised him as a “sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man.”²⁸⁹⁶
- Keith Martincich who worked with him at the Marine Diamond Corporation testified that Tsafendas “spoke to me every day and I got the impression that he was sociable type.”²⁸⁹⁷
- Hulse, who worked with him at the Marine Diamond Corporation for nine or ten weeks said “Tsafendas was very talkative.”²⁸⁹⁸
- William Mare Volbrecht, Tsafendas’s school mate at the English Medium Primary School in Middleburg, testified to the police that he was “never a loner and freely mingled with us.”²⁸⁹⁹ His half-sister, Katerina Pnema,²⁹⁰⁰ Mary Eintracht his first cousin who grew up ²⁸⁹² Albert Vercual statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁸⁹³ Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden statement to the police, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁸⁹⁴ Owen Smorenberg statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Leer W.D. 10/10/ 4102 oor Stafendas. NASA.

²⁸⁹⁵ Daily Express, ‘Was It Murder Incorporated?’, 9 September 1966: 2.

²⁸⁹⁶ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), ‘Assassin - Man With A Chip On His Shoulder’, 11 September 1966: 1, 8.

²⁸⁹⁷ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁸⁹⁸ Hulse statement to the police, 28 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; The edge of the document was not copied, so the word is missing.

²⁸⁹⁹ William Mare Volbrecht statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Verklaring deur Majdor Venter. NASA.

²⁹⁰⁰ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

with him in Egypt and Lourenço Marques,²⁹⁰¹ and Ira Kyriakakis, Helen Grispos and Andreas Babiolakis, who also grew up with him, confirmed Volbrecht’s statement and said Tsafendas was also very talkative since he was a child.²⁹⁰²

- Johannes Aurets, Tsafendas’s supervisor at the South African Railways, told the police Tsafendas “was a well-mannered and well-spoken person. He associated with those working with him. He was soft-spoken and appeared to be of a good nature.”²⁹⁰³
- Colleagues at Durban Magistrate’s Court described him as the “chatty Greek.”²⁹⁰⁴
- Ian Boswell, a clerk at the Department of Labour, testified that Tsafendas was “over-talkative.”²⁹⁰⁵
- Pieter Geldenhuys, also of the Department of Labour, testified that “he was very talkative.”²⁹⁰⁶
- Jacobus Bornman, Tsafendas’s flatmate for two months, characterise him as “a friendly and plausible person.”²⁹⁰⁷
- August Karel Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria. He found him to be “very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet. I never noticed anything abnormal about him, except that he had a strange look when I looked him straight in the eyes. He never gave me the impression that he was suffering from any mental disease.”²⁹⁰⁸
- Reginald Maile, guard on the Eleni, testified that Tsafendas was “on very friendly relations with the crew.”²⁹⁰⁹

²⁹⁰¹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

²⁹⁰² Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

²⁹⁰³ Johannes Jaonus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁹⁰⁴ O Primeiro de Janeiro, ‘Algumas Versoes Sobre A Vida de Tsafendas’, 8 September 1966.

²⁹⁰⁵ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

²⁹⁰⁶ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

²⁹⁰⁷ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁹⁰⁸ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁹⁰⁹ Reginald Robert Maile statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

- Neville Judson, who worked with him for two months, testified to the police that Tsafendas had “a very friendly way of talking.”²⁹¹⁰ He later said that Tsafendas was “overly talkative and sociable.”²⁹¹¹
- Michaelis Augustides, Tsafendas’s employer for two months, also found him to be “overly talkative and sociable.”²⁹¹²
- Tsafendas made a “good impression” on his colleagues in Frankfurt; they said he was “always smiling” and characterized him as being “very kind”, “a nice guy” and a “good comrade.”²⁹¹³
- Jose Lopez Baltazar, a fireman in Beira, testified that “when Tsafendas was in the presence of whites, he said little or nothing, but was friendly and talkative with the Bantu.”²⁹¹⁴
- Peter Pappas, whose café in Durban Tsafendas often visited, characterised him as “pleasant.” He also stated that Tsafendas “was friendly with white down-and-outs and when he had some money he would give them a few cents.”²⁹¹⁵

Having seen the above evidence, van Zyl admitted that it was “very contradictory” to his diagnosis, and that the picture of Tsafendas that emerges from it is completely different to his diagnosis and to the person he examined. “This is clearly a completely different person, no question about it,” he said. Asked whether it was possible that this aspect of his diagnosis was wrong, van Zyl conceded that it was “very possible, it looks this way, I do not know what to say. These statements were not given to us [back then].” He concluded that his diagnosis would have “definitely” been different if he had been in possession of this evidence at the time.²⁹¹⁶

It should also be noted that in addition to the witnesses named above, van Zyl’s diagnosis of Tsafendas as withdrawn and isolated is rebutted by the seventy-one witnesses

²⁹¹⁰ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

²⁹¹¹ Lambley, The Psychology of Apartheid, p. 241.

²⁹¹² Lambley, The Psychology of Apartheid, p. 241.

²⁹¹³ PIDE’s News Digest; Le Courrier d’Afrique, ‘Em Torno Do Assassinado do Primeiro Ministro Sulaficano; Versoes Contraditorias Circulam Sobre A Personalidade Do Assassino’, 9 September 1966: 1. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Daily Dispatch, ‘He Made A Good Impression’, 8 September 1966: 1; Natal Witness, ‘Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...’, 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, ‘Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte’, 8 September 1966.

²⁹¹⁴ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²⁹¹⁵ Rand Daily Mail, ‘Tsafendas: In the Eyes of A Friend’, 14 September 1966.

²⁹¹⁶ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 9 January 2017.

interviewed by the author, who saw him as friendly, sociable and talkative. Their individual testimonies will not be listed for reasons of space, but the author will note two of them as representative of the general opinion. Father Nikola Banovic described Tsafendas as “one of the most sociable persons I ever met. He would always go and introduce himself to people he did not know in the church. He was not shy at all to speak to someone.”²⁹¹⁷ Katerina Pnema also disagreed with van Zyl’s comment, repeating to the author that her half-brother “could not keep his mouth shut for anything.”²⁹¹⁸ Allan O’Ryan said of Tsafendas:

“He greeted ... if he didn’t greet you, it would have been because he was in a hurry or something like that. But he was not someone to get involved just with anybody. And even the people in the street got to know him and greeted him as a man of... you know, as a distinguished gentleman, because of the way he dressed. He greeted everybody. And even the people around... we lived in an area where there were gangsters and people like that – they all showed him respect.”²⁹¹⁹

Fotini Gavasiadis told the author:

“Dimitris a withdrawn and isolated individual? You are making me laugh! He was the most outspoken and sociable person I ever met. He will speak to everyone, he was not shy at all. Some people when they see someone in the street they know and they can’t be bothered talking to him, they will pretend they have not seen him. Dimitris was the opposite; even if he saw someone who was far, he will shout to him to stop and talk to him.”²⁹²⁰

TSAFENDAS’S “LACK OF HUMAN REACTION”

According to van Zyl, Tsafendas showed a “lack of human reaction” to the tests he carried on him and there was “no warmth” in his reply. Examples of compassionate actions in Tsafendas’s past would give the mistake to this diagnosis. Tsafendas cried like a baby in front of his relatives upon reading in a letter that Elena, Father Nikola Banovic’s twelve-year old daughter, had drowned in Turkey. He lost his appetite and ate almost nothing for several days.²⁹²¹ While he was in custody for the assassination, he begged the police to let him keep ²⁹¹⁷ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²⁹¹⁸ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²⁹¹⁹ Allan O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019.

²⁹²⁰ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

²⁹²¹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

her photograph, but the police took it and he never saw it again. Even thirty years later, Tsafendas would weep when talking about the drowned girl.²⁹²²

As to an absence of feeling, Tsafendas is on record as deeply mourning his father and birth mother, constantly writing to family and friends, lending money and giving handouts to poor people. He was devastated when he learned that his step-mother was not his real mother and that his real mother had died.²⁹²³ Upon returning to Mozambique after twelve years in exile, Tsafendas desperately sought for information about his mother and for the location of her grave.²⁹²⁴ Later, when he was back in Pretoria, the first thing he did was to visit his father’s grave. For nine months until he left, he would visit it at least once a week, tidying it, leaving flowers and lighting a candle. He often complained to his step-mother that she was not looking after the grave site properly.²⁹²⁵

²⁹²² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁹²³ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

²⁹²⁴ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

²⁹²⁵ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

Furthermore, Tsafendas always carried photographs of his family in his wallet and he sent them letters with pictures and postcards from wherever he travelled.²⁹²⁶ He also sent postcards to his close friends and thank you cards to those who had helped him, like Aris Tsafantakis' parents in Crete²⁹²⁷ and Father Nikola Banovic in Istanbul.²⁹²⁸ He lent money to his flatmate John Bornman and refused to take the repayment,²⁹²⁹ he gave money to poor Whites in Durban,²⁹³⁰ he defended two Black South African workers who were cheated by his colleague Nick Vergos,²⁹³¹ he helped a poor Indian man to build a room in his house,²⁹³² he brought food to the O'Ryan house and gave money to Allan O'Ryan for his bus fare to school.²⁹³³

The fact that Tsafendas did not show much interest in van Zyl's tests had nothing to do with his intellect or emotions. Tsafendas twice clearly told the police that he did not care about what would happen to him and he expected to be executed. Therefore, why would he care about IQ or Digital Symbol Substitution tests? What is more, Tsafendas had already done exactly the same tests when he was examined by Erasmus two weeks previously, which could have been another reason for him to not have bothered going through exactly the same things again.

Finally, by the time Tsafendas took these tests, he must have known that he was going to be found insane, since he had already been examined by five psychiatrists. Being experienced with psychiatrists and aware that the authorities wanted him declared insane, why would he bother with yet more tests, which, some thirty years later, he characterised as "childish stuff"?²⁹³⁴

THE RORSCHACH PERSONALITY TEST

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Then you did the Rorschach Personality Test?

²⁹²⁶ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

²⁹²⁷ Aris Tsafantakis in a personal interview, 13 April 2016.

²⁹²⁸ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²⁹²⁹ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁹³⁰ Rand Daily Mail, 'Tsafendas: In the Eyes of A Friend', 14 September 1966.

²⁹³¹ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 5 August 2011; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²⁹³² Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal intergiew with the author, 30 January 2015.

²⁹³³ Allan O' Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019.

²⁹³⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

VAN ZYL: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The Court knows, but I think for the record would you just shortly explain to the Court what the Rorschach Personality Test is?

JUDGE BEYERS: This part of the Court does not know.

VAN ZYL: It is a series of ten standardized ink blots which is shown the patient.

JUDGE BEYERS: Modern paintings?

VAN ZYL: Almost, which you show the patient and then he responds to it. You know, when you ask him what it looks like or what it reminds him of, or what it could possibly represent.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: On the Rorschach Test, Tsafendas showed?

VAN ZYL: On the Rorschach Test Mr. Tsafendas showed some typical signs of schizophrenia. They were the following: Arbitrary variation in form accuracy with decrease in F +.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is F + ?

VAN ZYL: It is an inability to see something in the ink blot which could be equated reasonably accurately with something commonly known to all of us.

JUDGE BEYERS: You mean if most of us sitting here saw that ink blot we'd see some resemblance to some ordinary object which we know, and he failed to do so?

VAN ZYL: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Proceed further?

VAN ZYL: (Witness reads R.S.C.D), W responses of poor quality.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What are W responses?

VAN ZYL: That is, if the patient only uses the whole of the ink blot and not part of the ink blot, but the response that he gives is of poor quality again in resembling something reasonably well-known.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is the next observation?

VAN ZYL: (Witness reads R.S.C.D). Bizarre and unusual detail.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What do you mean by "Bizarre and unusual detail"?

VAN ZYL: May I give you an example?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Certainly, give the Court an example?

VAN ZYL: One of the ink blots that I showed him, he said: “I see a leg, but there has been a considerable amount of atrophy. It may be a rat’s leg or a rabbit’s leg, but I am not quite sure what species it belongs to, but there has been a considerable amount of atrophy,” so really, a jumbled lot of nonsense.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The next observation?

VAN ZYL: (Witness reads R.S.C.D). F C virtually absent. Which means that he cannot give form to colour, and in psychodynamic terms it means he is not able to control his feelings adequately.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: As regards Colour naming?

VAN ZYL: Colour naming is of the same order as F C. It is related to that. For instance, you show him a red ink blot, and then he’d say this is just red. Whereas usually a person says: “It is a red butterfly or a red dragon” or whatever the case may be.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Blocking?

VAN ZYL: Blocking is the inability

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did you find?

VAN ZYL: That he did not answer to one of the cards. He could find nothing in it.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: So that is described as “blocking”?

VAN ZYL: That is blocking, yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What else did you find?

VAN ZYL: Original responses of poor form level. For example, he said that he saw the face of a man in a position that I have never come across before on the ink blot. It was part of the small detail of the blot and he showed me eyes where I couldn’t possibly see eyes, and a nose and a mouth which were just not there.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Now we come to Undifferentiated shading.

VAN ZYL: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You found that?

VAN ZYL: Yes, I found that.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What do you mean by Undifferentiated shading?

VAN ZYL: That is if the patient sees shading in a very vague and non-specific way.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did you find further?

VAN ZYL: Queer specifications (which is considered to be extremely important in the diagnosis of schizophrenia).

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What do you mean by Queer specifications?

VAN ZYL: For example, the patients would say that: "I see a peculiar shape which may be a bat, which may be a bird, but of course I cannot say which species of bird or which species of bat." And then deriding his own responses as he goes along, saying that it is a very poor performance.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You say he derides his own response?

VAN ZYL: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What else did you find?

VAN ZYL: Then Description, which is when the patient describes the ink blot in terms of its outline only, not saying that it is an island, or something like that, but "Here the line goes up, and there it goes down, and it goes in a circle", so describing the outline of the ink blot without giving its real meaning,

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What else did you find?

VAN ZYL: The Perseveration, which is that he carried on in his mind with the same thought or the same response all the time on one ink blot, and he also carries it over to the second one, perhaps.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You have given us these various findings. Would you continue with your report now?

VAN ZYL: (Witness reads R.S.C.D) "This in itself is probably meaningless to even a psychiatrist, but the interpretation of all this means very poor human contact, lack of self-control, emotional flatness, disturbance of intellect, and a general disintegration of the ego. From this I feel that the diagnosis of schizophrenia can safely be made."

COMMENTS ON VAN ZYL'S RORSCHACH PERSONALITY TEST ON TSAFENDAS

According to van Zyl's interpretation of the tests, Tsafendas had "very poor human contact," a diagnosis which, as we have already seen, was diametrically opposed to the opinions of people who knew him. That Tsafendas derided his own efforts suggests he was simply not interested, but van Zyl concludes that a diagnosis of schizophrenia can safely be made. However, van Zyl later admitted in a personal interview with the author that all the statements given to the police by people who knew Tsafendas, along with Tsafendas's own two statements found in the archives, portrayed a completely different man from the one he examined.²⁹³⁵

Furthermore, Dr. Peter Lambley, who had worked with van Zyl stated that he was inexperienced and not formally trained in the Rorschach test procedure. He wrote that:

"[Van Zyl] could not formally score an ink blot protocol, his grasp of psychotic signs was superficial, and he was unfamiliar with the research literature pertaining to Rorschach scores and schizophrenia, then, as now, still in its infancy. Examination of Tsafendas's responses and the interpretations given in court clearly showed that the testers were inexperienced. One clear example: Tsafendas saw a leg on one of the ink blot cards but was not sure if it was a rat's leg or a rabbit's. This very example was used in court to substantiate his schizophrenic diagnosis: ... such jumbled and nonsensical reactions are typical of schizophrenia which typically includes bizarre or unusual detail . . .

This statement comes out of a text book and the statement is true, but the example is not. It is not unusual to get this kind of response in intelligent adults; what the examiner was confusing in this instance was the confabulatory response category into which he thought Tsafendas's 'Leg' response fell, which it did not. This kind of loose and often inaccurate reflection marked the psychological analysis presented in court."²⁹³⁶

Van Zyl told the author that although they worked together, Dr. Lambley never spoke to him. He stated that Lambley was "talking nonsense ... just absolute bloody nonsense," but admitted that he was inexperienced and not fully acquainted with the Rorschach literature, and that he was better with the Thematic Apperception Test:

"I don't think, then and now in particular... I'm no great Rorschach expert, where the guys do a Ph.D. in Rorschach, and that's the only thing they pursue all throughout their careers. I'm nowhere in that league. But certainly the symptoms were there. I'm kind of ²⁹³⁵ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

²⁹³⁶ Lambley, The Psychology of Apartheid, p. 239.

averagely capable as far as the Rorschach is concerned. I'm more capable in other things."²⁹³⁷

As For the Rorschach literature, van Zyl said:

“Well, you know, I'm fairly familiar. I've read books about it, and research articles and so on and I have a fair knowledge. But to say that I am totally familiar or unfamiliar, or that I was ever asked in court about research and records, it simply didn't happen.”²⁹³⁸

²⁹³⁷ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

²⁹³⁸ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

Nevertheless, although van Zyl was inexperienced and not an expert on the Rorschach test, he was never challenged and his findings were simply accepted. Finally, according to Professor Alban Burke:

“Whether the interpretation was right or wrong, the Rorschach ink blot test was never a scientific tool, it was mainly a projective test, and, as in psychology, there are many approaches to things. So by saying it was incorrect, you could also say, ‘it was not the way I would have done it,’ so whether it was correct or incorrect doesn’t really matter. The fact is that those tests and the interpretation of those tests, were always open to interpretation. You could have done it, come to me with the results, and I would have looked at the same results and I would have come up with a different conclusion, so whether it was done correctly or incorrectly, is neither here nor there. The test could, at most, say that there is a possibility of schizophrenia, at the very most, but you could never make an accurate diagnosis. There are people who would argue that you could, but you could never make an accurate diagnosis of schizophrenia based on that test, or on any test for that matter...

I still think that your best instrument for making a diagnosis like this is what the people around you say, and your assessment of the functioning of the person; that gives you the best idea. The psychological tests would confirm what you have picked up, so what you would always have with any kind of diagnostic assessment is, you would have your observations of the patient, the information you get from the people around, and your psychological tests, and then you pick up themes. If you pick up the same themes in those three areas, then you say, ‘this is the diagnosis.’ If it’s only in one of those areas, you can’t confirm the diagnosis until you’ve got some kind of confirmation from other areas, as well, so it’s a weak way of making a diagnosis.”²⁹³⁹

VAN ZYL’S GENERAL OBSERVATIONS ON TSAFENDAS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What were your observations?

VAN ZYL: (Witness reads R.S.C.D). “In talking to Mr. Tsafendas, I got the impression that he was vague in thinking and difficult to communicate with at a personal level. I felt that he was in a world of his own. In his talk, he was circumstantial and often went off the point. His thoughts were constantly blocking and he was very poor in abstract thinking such as when asking him to explain the meaning of the idiom – ‘A stitch in time saves nine.’ He said, by the way, that it is a labour-saving device. His emotions were flat and sometimes incongruous. He also grimaced and made rocking (stereotyped) movements with his head and had great difficulty in expressing himself. On both occasions when I visited him, he was lying on his bed presumably asleep or just doing nothing and was slow in his movements.

²⁹³⁹ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016.

JUDGE BEYERS: Explain to me the use of the word “stereotyped” there, with the rocking movements. What does it mean? Was it a movement like any other movement or was it stereotyped to a certain condition? It can mean two things there. Do you mean every movement was like every other one?

VAN ZYL: Yes.

DC (Cont.): Now, your comment on the interview?

VAN ZYL: (Witness reads R.S.C.D). “My function and my reason for seeing Mr. Tsafendas was mainly to test him and not so much to interview him. I did, however, ask him about the tapeworm which he had told Dr. Cooper about. I communicated with Dr. Cooper very briefly with the consent of Mr. D. Bloomberg. Mr. Tsafendas jumped at the opportunity to tell me about this and came back to this topic every now and then throughout both interviews. He told me that he began suffering from this during 1936 and since then his whole existence had centred round the tapeworm. He has constantly got to eat to keep the tapeworm happy, otherwise it pricks him on certain nerve centres in his stomach or makes a noise which he can feel inside himself. The result of all this is that he had become withdrawn and lived only to eat and to sleep.

Apparently he had X-rays taken and consulted many people about his tapeworm. He had taken an interest in this to the extent that he knows about a machine which the Japanese invented to show up foreign bodies in the abdomen, stating that there is such a machine at the Queen Mother Maternity Hospital in Glasgow. According to him, the Americans have a similar invention. He also stated that the doctors only sent him to psychiatrists about this and that they had then given him shock treatment and not investigated his tapeworm condition any further. It appears as if this has been a long-standing delusion. He told me that he thought the tapeworm had a lot to do with his alleged attack on the late Dr. Verwoerd. This apparently has brought him into conflict with other people before. He was, however, very vague about it and could not explain the direct relationship in any other way than saying that it makes him impulsive. He also appeared to have no strong feelings about being in gaol or about his alleged attack on the late Dr. Verwoerd.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Now the discussion?

VAN ZYL: (Witness reads R.S.C.D). “From the above tests, observations and interview, it is quite clear to me that this man is suffering from schizophrenia. His schizophrenia to me is not as absolutely florid as one sometimes sees it in Mental Hospitals, but taken into account his high intelligence, this is not very surprising because often a schizophrenic can contain his illness to a certain extent by virtue of his intelligence, and they achieve much less than can be expected of them by virtue of their intellect. This, I think, is the case with Mr. Tsafendas.

COMMENTS ON VAN ZYL’S GENERAL OBSERVATIONS ON TSAFENDAS

The issue of the tapeworm has already been examined, so it will not be discussed again. According to van Zyl’s testimony in the court, Tsafendas “has constantly got to eat to keep the tapeworm happy.” It is true that he ate a lot, but he never attributed it to the tapeworm. In addition, van Zyl claimed that Tsafendas “had become withdrawn and lived only to eat and to sleep.” This is perhaps the least accurate statement in van Zyl’s diagnosis. Tsafendas:

- while in Mozambique, he “was on two occasions suspected of dedicating himself to communistic activities.”
- voluntarily joined the military wing of the Greek Communist Party during the Greek Civil War;
- had voluntarily taught English to Greek and Turkish children in Istanbul and in Mozambique;
- had joined the British anti-apartheid movement and took part in several anti-apartheid and anti-fascist demonstrations in London;
- was arrested and imprisoned twice in Mozambique because he was “advertising in favour of Mozambique’s independence”;
- was arrested and imprisoned twice in Portugal due to his political ideas and activities in Mozambique;
- was willing to do “anything that would get the South African regime out of power”;
- was exiled for twelve years from Mozambique due to his political ideas and activities;
- took visitors in South Africa to a township in Cape Town to show them the hardships of apartheid and convince them to not spend any money in the country because, he said, they would be contributing to apartheid’s economy;
- was saving money to go and live in Cuba, which he had named as his preferred destination because of the political situation there.

When presented with this list, van Zyl agreed that a person involved in such activities as these is not someone who “just eats and sleeps.”²⁹⁴⁰

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL’S ASSISTANT

BRUNETTE: I would like to just clarify a few points on your findings.

VAN ZYL: Yes.

BRUNETTE: With regard to the Wechsler Bellevue Test, I note that the highest score that you noted was the one for “Picture Arrangement.”

VAN ZYL: Yes.

BRUNETTE: That is a test into his social insight, is that so?

VAN ZYL: I feel it can be viewed as that. I have not come across it in the literature, that it is definitely termed to be social insight, certainly not in the new standardization of the Wechsler Bellevue Test.

BRUNETTE: Isn’t that score of 15.5 for “Picture Arrangement” inconsistent with a person who has been a schizophrenic for about 20 years, or a long period?

VAN ZYL: No.

BRUNETTE: Why do you say so?

VAN ZYL: It is not only social insight that counts. It is also intelligence that counts, and I do not think that that particular sub-section of the test really tests social insight.

BRUNETTE: But is it consistent or inconsistent with schizophrenia of long-standing?

VAN ZYL: I’d say that it is somewhat inconsistent.

BRUNETTE: To what extent do you say it is inconsistent?

VAN ZYL: That it is surprising to find this.

JUDGE BEYERS: Does it mean that by this time you would have expected that activity to deteriorate further than it has?

²⁹⁴⁰ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 9 January 2017.

VAN ZYL: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: Is that the correct way of putting it?

VAN ZYL: Yes.

BRUNETTE: Does that also fit in with your finding that he was not a florid schizophrenic?

VAN ZYL: May I explain what I mean by the word florid?

BRUNETTE: Yes?

VAN ZYL: The type of schizophrenic that you find in the mental hospital, listening to voices and seeing things and being completely withdrawn and isolated and completely incapable of caring for himself, even to a small extent.

BRUNETTE: He was not that type?

VAN ZYL: No.

BRUNETTE: He was a type that was capable of looking after himself to a certain extent?

VAN ZYL: To a certain extent, yes. That is correct.

BRUNETTE: I see also that his arithmetic score was not very high. Would you say he was capable of looking after his money and running a banking account?

VAN ZYL: Yes, I would say so.

BRUNETTE: On the Rorschach Test, you said that you found blocking of his thought processes in that he did not react to one card.

VAN ZYL: That is correct.

BRUNETTE: Why do you say that that was blocking?

VAN ZYL: This is commonly accepted in the literature on the Rorschach technique that this is blocking.

BRUNETTE: Could it also be caused by anxiety?

VAN ZYL: It could be but I didn't think Mr. Tsafendas was anxious at all.

BRUNETTE: You said that a repetition of these tests would not make any difference, but surely, by repeating them he must learn to perform and to react to the test?

VAN ZYL: I didn't say on the Wechsler Bellevue that it made no difference. I said that it would make no difference to the particular pattern, and if he had learned to perform he would only have done better on the tests instead of giving an even poorer performance.

BRUNETTE: Did you make any allowance for the fact that he may have learned some of these tests before?

VAN ZYL: No, I did not.

NO FURTHER QUESTIONS BY THE ASSISTANT OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

JUDGE BEYERS: I assume you know something about the contents of the 1916 Act on Mental Disabilities?

VAN ZYL: Unfortunately, not very much. I shall explain my situation: As a clinical psychologist one is not legally permitted to certify a patient.

JUDGE BEYERS: I understand. I now need to ask for your confirmation that schizophrenia is definitely a mental disability in terms of the law?

VAN ZYL: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: Should you now interview this man as you had previously done – and I expect a responsible answer – would you have certified him if it were part of your duties? Does he need to be certified according to the Act?

VAN ZYL: If I had just performed the tests on him and had known nothing about his previous impulsive acts and so on, then I should not have certified him. He seems to be such a harmless person.

JUDGE BEYERS: If you had only the clinical tests?

VAN ZYL: Yes, then I would not have done so.

JUDGE BEYERS: At this moment, if I had to transfer my responsibility to you, would you certify him?

VAN ZYL: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: What has happened since your tests that you are now satisfied to certify him?

VAN ZYL: I have heard of the history of his impulsive actions and behaviour.

JUDGE BEYERS: Can you state that your tests, taken against the background and history about which you have learned, that you would consider certifying such a person?

VAN ZYL: Yes, definitely.

JUDGE BEYERS: Does the history to which you refer include the murder of the Prime Minister?

VAN ZYL: No.

JUDGE BEYERS: Would his background without that knowledge, in your opinion, lead you to certify him?

VAN ZYL: Yes.

COMMENTS ON THE CROSS-EXAMINATION

Van Zyl stated that he would not have certified Tsafendas based on the tests if he was not aware of his previous “impulsive actions and behaviour.” However, in a personal interview with the author, van Zyl stated that he would not have certified him if he had seen the statements made by the people who were questioned by the police. He also admitted to the author that if he had seen these statements before he examined Tsafendas, his final diagnosis would have been different, “Yes. Look, obviously that is important information, and information that influences one’s findings in the end. There is no doubt about it.”²⁹⁴¹

Furthermore, van Zyl stated in the cross-examination that he “heard of the history of his impulsive actions and behaviour,” but this behaviour was not evident during his examination where Tsafendas seemed like “such a harmless person.” van Zyl told the author that he was told about Tsafendas’s “impulsive” behaviour by David Bloomberg and the other psychiatrists, mainly by Dr. Cooper who was a good friend. However, none of these psychiatrists had personally witnessed any impulsive behaviour by Tsafendas; they were simply told about it verbally by his defence team.²⁹⁴²

²⁹⁴¹ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

²⁹⁴² Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

Van Zyl also admitted to the author that he was told by the police and the defence lawyers that Tsafendas was “a straightforward case of a schizophrenic”. Furthermore, he given Tsafendas’s medical record in an oral summary by Tsafendas’s lawyers and never actually saw any such reports; he accepted that the procedure followed during the examination was not appropriate and would not have carried much weight in a South African court today as it was not supported by any Third-Party Information. He said:

“We were told, or I was told – the group of guys that examined him – that he had been in various mental hospitals all over the world... Yes. Well, you know, we were given this information – that he was a disturbed, schizophrenic man. And that was the background that we had available, and nothing else. The third part [the medical reports] was given to us almost in summary. He has been to this hospital, that hospital, that hospital... I think three or four were mentioned – various hospitals overseas.”²⁹⁴³

Again, statements gathered by the South African police from people who knew Tsafendas and could challenge and contradict van Zyl’s diagnosis were not used. The only brief challenge came when van Zyl was forced to admit that Tsafendas 15.5 score for “Picture Arrangement” is somewhat inconsistent with a person who has been a schizophrenic for about twenty years or a long period.

VAN ZYL’S ADMISSIONS

Van Zyl concluded during his testimony in the court that his tests definitely showed that Tsafendas was “suffering from schizophrenia,” adding that he was very intelligent, above average. Van Zyl told the author that at the time he “firmly believed he [Tsafendas] was schizophrenic.” However, van Zyl also conceded in a personal interview that he reached this decision based on what he was told about Tsafendas’s past by the defence lawyers and on what Tsafendas told him, without looking at any of his medical reports or talking to people who knew him. He also admitted that he was inexperienced with some of the tests he conducted, though no one questioned this at the time.²⁹⁴⁴

Van Zyl conceded to the author that the witnesses’ statements about Tsafendas and Tsafendas’s own two statements to the police showed a completely different man from the one he and the other psychiatrists examined. He also accepted that in these statements, there was no indication of Tsafendas suffering from schizophrenia. He felt that for Tsafendas to have been evaluated properly, all this evidence should have been given to those who examined him. Van Zyl admitted that “yes, sure ... it should have been given, yes ... Of course they were important. Look, obviously that is important information, and information that influences one’s findings in the end. There is no doubt about it.”²⁹⁴⁵

²⁹⁴³ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

²⁹⁴⁴ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

Van Zyl admitted to the author that aspects of his diagnosis, as well as at least some aspects of the diagnoses by the other psychiatrists, “appear to have been wrong” as they are “very contradictory” to the picture of Tsafendas which emerges from the evidence that the police had gathered at the time.²⁹⁴⁶ He also told the author:

“Well, you know, these statements are very contradictory to the information that I worked on ... You know, I agree with you. The information that you have given me is very different from what my findings were at the time, and the findings of the other experts. Why these documents weren’t made available to us, as experts [I do not know] ...”²⁹⁴⁷

Asked by the author if he thought that the police deliberately did not give this evidence to them in order to conceal Tsafendas’s political motivation, van Zyl replied, “Well, obviously, obviously”, and admitted that this seems to be “the only logical reason as to why the police withheld the information”.²⁹⁴⁸ Nevertheless, although van Zyl admitted that at least some aspects of his diagnosis “appear to have been wrong”, that the evidence the police had in its possession was “very contradictory” to his diagnosis and that it showed with “no question” a “completely different” Tsafendas from the one he examined, he refused to admit that his overall diagnosis was inaccurate. He told the author that in order to correctly determine whether his initial diagnosis was accurate or not, he would have needed to examine Tsafendas again, this time taking into account the evidence he did not have in his possession in 1966. He also added that he believes that Tsafendas must have had some “fairly gross personal instability” because of the way he killed Dr. Verwoerd, “in an amateurish way” without an escape plan.²⁹⁴⁹ He said:

“With this new information, I’m beginning to think that he was a guy with, at least, fairly gross personal instability. And I wouldn’t have been surprised that, within that context, he would develop schizophrenic symptomatology, as a consequence of this. But what I didn’t ²⁹⁴⁵ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

²⁹⁴⁶ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

²⁹⁴⁷ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

²⁹⁴⁸ Reyner van Zyl in personal interviews on 10 April 2016 and on 9 January 2017.

²⁹⁴⁹ Reyner van Zyl in personal interviews on 10 April 2016 and on 9 January 2017.

know about was his political involvement, as reported. [Tsafendas appears to have been] an unstable individual, with a particular political view, clearly, as stated there; who acted, in my opinion, beyond the scope of reality; and who may have been suffering psychotic episodes of schizophrenia from time to time.”²⁹⁵⁰

Van Zyl believes that a schizophrenic could be politically involved and could kill someone for political reasons: “Oh, he can kill him for political reasons, but to do something that is so outrageous, and so amateurishly planned, with a knife, in the middle of Parliament is ridiculous. A real assassin doesn’t work like that.” Van Zyl considers that a man of Tsafendas’s intelligence “should have planned better.” He admits, however, that Dr. Verwoerd’s assassination was “obviously” politically motivated and that a man with deep political convictions, like Tsafendas, is capable of committing such an “amateurish” act without being a schizophrenic.²⁹⁵¹

²⁹⁵⁰ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

²⁹⁵¹ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 12: JAMES JOHNSTONINTRODUCTION

Before we examine Johnston's testimony, it should be stated that he had testified to the police on October 6 that "I do not know Tsafendas very well and the longest discussion I had with him was for about 10 minutes at each occasion."²⁹⁵² These occasions were just two, so a man who had spoken to Tsafendas for twenty minutes in his life was asked to testify in the court about him, while Tsafendas's family and people who knew him for years or months or lived under the same roof or were neighbours were ignored. This demonstrates how stretched the defence was for witnesses to support their line. Johnston was presumably chosen because he told the police Tsafendas seemed to be "slightly unbalanced," although he did not say anything else to support the defence argument.

Johnston, Martincich and Barbeau were the three of more than two hundred witnesses questioned by the police and the Commission who commented negatively on Tsafendas's mental state. Barbeau testified that after talking to him a few times, she got the impression he "was not all there" and Martincich thought after knowing Tsafendas for two-three weeks that there "was something mentally wrong with him" because Tsafendas sometimes mumbled to himself. Johnston testified that as a result of his two ten-minute meetings, he concluded that Tsafendas was "slightly unbalanced and that he seemed to have a mysterious background but otherwise he appeared to be all-right."²⁹⁵³

²⁹⁵² James Johnston statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁹⁵³ James Johnston statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Both Johnston and Barbeau were members of the Christian Church. Merle Daniels, also a member of the church, had admitted the previous day under cross-examination at the summary trial she “would like to protect the name of the Christian Church.” Many of the Church’s law-abiding members were interviewed by the police²⁹⁵⁴ and felt deeply embarrassed to be so questioned, as well as endure the publicity shone on the Church by Tsafendas’s criminal act. They felt it cast the whole of their church in a bad light and like the Greek Community in South Africa, tried to distance themselves and the Church from Tsafendas.²⁹⁵⁵ As with the majority of the Greek community, some from the Christian Church tried to portray Tsafendas as not one of them and perhaps a mad man, in order to protect their reputation. It must be more than a coincidence that the only two witnesses who testified negatively to the police about Tsafendas’s mental state were members of the Christian Church.

Tsafendas often clashed with leaders and members of the Christian Church because they advocated “the Biblical idea of subservience to a Government,” including to the governing National Party and its policy of apartheid.²⁹⁵⁶ None of the members of the Christian Church revealed this to the police, apart from Patrick O’Ryan.²⁹⁵⁷

JAMES JOHNSTON’S TESTIMONY²⁹⁵⁸

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is your occupation?

JOHNSTON: I am a minister of the Christian Church and have been in this ministry for almost 39 years. The first time I met Mr. Tsafendas was shortly after his arrival here at the Cape.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When was that?

JOHNSTON: It was in September, I would think.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Of which year?

²⁹⁵⁴ The Observer, ‘Police Question S. African Sect’, 18 September 1966: 2; Sunday Times (Johannesburg), ‘Tsafendas’s Brothers are Quizzed’, 18 September 1966: 18: 5.

²⁹⁵⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁹⁵⁶ Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013; Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²⁹⁵⁷ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²⁹⁵⁸ James Johnston’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

JOHNSTON: Of last year. (Witness says he is a little hard of hearing.)

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did you come to meet Mr. Tsafendas?

JOHNSTON: I went along to see him at his home, where he was staying at Mr. Daniels's place.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Why were you called to see him?

JOHNSTON: I went to see him because I heard that he had been staying there and that he was a Greek or a Portuguese, and I went to see him chiefly in connection with his racial status.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Why did you go to see him in connection with his racial status?

JOHNSTON: I wanted to find out whether he was a white man or a Coloured man.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You were interested because he was a member of your persuasion?

JOHNSTON: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you discuss this racial position with him? Did you discuss his racial status with him?

JOHNSTON: I did, yes. I asked him whether he was a European or whether he was a Coloured man. The reason why I asked him that was because I was concerned about him being a foreigner, and if he was a Coloured man it was quite right for him to stay in a Coloured home as well as going to services in a Coloured home. But if he was a European or a white man, I would ask him to go along to services that were held in a white home.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you tell him that it was contrary to law for a Coloured man to mix in white circles, and conversely for a white man to mix in Coloured circles?

JOHNSTON: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: That was your view?

JOHNSTON: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did he react when you had this little conversation with him?

JOHNSTON: I must say that I found him rather strange or odd. He told me that he would like to classify himself as a Coloured man, but he gave no reason for it. And then he began to talk about his travels. He began to talk about his travels and the countries that he visited. And that just gave me the impression of being a strange man.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he continue to attend meetings held by Coloured members of your persuasion, or did he attend meetings of the white members of your persuasion?

JOHNSTON: Excuse me, I couldn't just catch that.

JUDGE BEYERS: Did he continue with the white people or did he continue with the Coloured people?

JOHNSTON: He continued with the Coloured people until I had further discussions with him in February of this year. Then he came along to see me at the place where I was staying, at Mr. Slater's home in Plumstead. Then he told me that he had obtained employment at the Marine Diamond Corporation. And then the discussion came up again about whether he is a white man or a Coloured man, and he produced a small bit of typewritten paper with his name and number and a "W", which showed me that he was a white man. I then asked him if he would go along to services that were held in a white home, and he said he would.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And he did?

JOHNSTON: He did, yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What kind of impression did Tsafendas make upon you?

JOHNSTON: Well, the discussions that I had with him was chiefly from a business point of view, because he wanted to find out different things. But the impression that I got of him was that he was an odd man, a strange man, because any discussion that we entered into he could never follow it fully.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did you think about his mental state?

JOHNSTON: His mental state - he didn't give me the impression that he was - he was a bit strange, and I would say just a little mentally unbalanced.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Do you remember that during the time that you knew him he received treatment for his nose?

JOHNSTON: He told me that after he had left the Marine Diamond Corporation. He came to see me on another occasion, and he told me that he was then receiving treatment for his nose and that he was staying at a convalescent home, either in Mowbray or Observatory. And then he told me that he'd be staying there for some time. I asked him whether he was going to stay there. He said he was going to make his home there, and that struck me as being odd or strange, and I didn't pursue that any further.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You have told us that he told you he was working for Marine Diamonds?

JOHNSTON: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Before he left for South West Africa, did he speak to you about it, did he ask you for names of persons?

JOHNSTON: He did. He told me that he was working for some weeks at a stretch and then he was off at weeks at a stretch also, and in the weeks that he was off he would like to visit our friends in South West Africa. But, while I had the addresses of them, I was not too keen to give it to him at all.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Why didn't you want to give him the names?

JOHNSTON: I didn't want to give him the names because he was a strange man and he was making himself more of a nuisance among the friends that he was with down here.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was he a violent man, to your knowledge?

JOHNSTON: I never saw him violent in any way.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How would you describe him?

JOHNSTON: He was always mild when he spoke to me, and whenever I advised him in any matter he took it very meekly.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You made a statement to the police, not so?

JOHNSTON: I did, yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you say this to the police: "The Sunday night before the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd I saw Tsafendas at a service in Mr. Hall's home in Pinelands, but he did not discuss anything or take part in the service that night. He appeared to be perfectly normal."?

JOHNSTON: That is correct.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You said that?

JOHNSTON: That is correct.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Then you added to this: “I must say I did not speak to him apart from saying good-night. “Did you say this: “I did think Tsafendas to be slightly unbalanced and that he seemed to have a mysterious background, but otherwise he appeared to be all right.”?”

JOHNSTON: I did say that, yes.

COMMENTS ON JOHNSTON'S TESTIMONY

Johnston stated that he got the impression that Tsafendas was a strange, odd man after hearing about his travels and the countries he visited, but did not state what was strange about it. He also does not explain what was strange about Tsafendas telling him that he was going to live in Mowbray or Observatory. Surprisingly, the Attorney-General did not find it necessary to ask. More than two hundred witnesses who testified to the police, to the Commission and to the author stated that Tsafendas often spoke about his travels; none of them found this strange.

When asked about Tsafendas's mental state, Johnston testified that he got the impression that he was an “odd man, a strange man because any discussion that we entered into he could never follow it fully ...” Johnston had not mentioned in his statement to the police anything about Tsafendas's perceived inability fully to follow a discussion. Obviously two ten-minute conversations were sufficient to give Johnston such an impression. The issue of Tsafendas's alleged inability to follow a conversation has been examined in detail in the relevant section of Dr. Cooper's testimony, so it would not be discussed again here.

The Attorney-General referred Johnston in cross-examination to his statement to the police that Tsafendas seemed to be “perfectly normal” on the evening before the assassination. Then he asked him again about his comment that “I did think Tsafendas to be slightly unbalanced and that he seemed to have a mysterious background, but otherwise he appeared to be all right.” However, he did not pursue this line of questioning and did not ask Johnston to explain his statement to the police. Nor did he ask him to explain what was so strange and odd about Tsafendas's stories about his travels. There seems little supporting evidence, therefore, that Tsafendas was “slightly unbalanced.”

Johnston testified to the police in the same statement that he had only seen Tsafendas “periodically and had no discussions with him ... I do not know Tsafendas very well and the longest discussion I had with him was for about 10 minutes at each occasion.” The third and last time they had spoken, all they said each other was “good night.” Astonishingly, the Attorney-General, with the statement in front of him, did not ask the obvious question: How reliable could an opinion be about another person when it was formed from two ten-minute meetings with the person concerned?

CONCLUSION

This must be one of the weakest testimonies ever made to a court, clear proof of David Bloomberg's uphill struggle to find suitable witnesses to support the defence's line. A man who spoke to the accused for twenty minutes was asked for his assessment of the accused's character while people who knew him intimately, including his family, were ignored because their evidence would not support the defence line. However, the Attorney-General ignored the question of a twenty-minute character assessment and the creditability of the witness.

Johnston testified that he found Tsafendas to be odd and strange because of his stories about his travels and because he couldn't fully follow a discussion, although he did not specify what was so odd and strange about either. None of the two hundred witnesses questioned by the police, the Commission of Enquiry and the author detected this supposed oddness in Tsafendas, indeed most of them were impressed by Tsafendas's description of his travels. As to his inability to follow a conversation, this was a something only Johnston ever perceived. Notably, when he was first questioned, Johnston mentioned neither of these two character traits of Tsafendas to the police.

Despite the evident frailty of Johnston's testimony, Judge Beyers, though presumably unaware of the twenty-minute acquaintance of Tsafendas with the witness, said in his verdict: "Daniels said that this man is mad. It was obvious to O'Ryan and his wife. It was obvious to Mr. Johnston that this was a queer, strange man."²⁹⁵⁹

²⁹⁵⁹ Judge Beyers' verdict on Tsafendas's summary trial, 20 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 13: GIDEON JACOBUS CLOETE

GIDEON CLOETE'S TESTIMONY²⁹⁶⁰

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where do you work?

CLOETE: I am a clerk in the Department of Labour in the general enquiries office.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where?

CLOETE: In the Department of Labour.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In Cape Town or Pretoria or where?

CLOETE: Cape Town.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How long have you worked there?

CLOETE: Since 3 September 1957.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is the exact nature of your work?

CLOETE: The general enquiry work in the office.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Does it concern people who come to make enquiries?

CLOETE: Yes, people who come to make enquiries concerning labour.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And also people who are looking for work?

CLOETE: Yes, people looking for work and any information which they want, which they need, those are the people who come to make enquiries with me.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The man who is in the Court today, Demitrio Tsafendas, have you ever seen him before?

CLOETE: Yes

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where?

CLOETE: The first time that I encountered him and met him was on 26 April of this year.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where was this?

²⁹⁶⁰ Gideon Jacobus Cloete's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

CLOETE: In my office in the Department of Labour in Cape Town.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did he want?

CLOETE: On that occasion he was off work on sick leave and he came about sick leave pay.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you grant him sick leave pay on that occasion?

CLOETE: Yes. I personally completed the application form for him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And did he receive the sick leave pay?

CLOETE: Yes, he did receive it.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How much did he receive?

CLOETE: I am unable to tell you how much it was.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: But approximately how much?

CLOETE: I definitely cannot tell you how much it was.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Apart from this occasion, did you see him on any other occasion?

CLOETE: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: Would that be a Government grant?

CLOETE: Yes. He had undergone an operation on his nose, according to the medical certificate which had been completed by the Medical Doctor.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Apart from the occasion when he applied for a grant, did you see him again?

CLOETE: I saw him again during July of this year, also in the office.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was he looking for at your office?

CLOETE: He came to me with three cuttings from an English newspaper which had been placed by employers in connection with positions which were vacant. And the reason why he came to me, was that he wanted my help, and wanted to use my telephone. I then explained to him that I could not allow him to actually use the telephone personally, but that I would help him by telephoning the firms myself to find out whether the positions were still vacant.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you do that?

CLOETE: Yes, I did as he wanted, he handed me the advertisements and I telephoned the firms. The first two of the advertisements did not supply the names of the firms in the newspaper, only the telephone numbers were given. I then called the firms and the receptionists who answered the telephone told me that the situations had already been filled. I then called the third telephone number and was put through to the works foreman, as it was an engineering firm in Maitland. The job which was vacant there was in connection with welding work. I spoke to the foreman personally.

JUDGE BEYERS: Mr. Cooper, is all this necessary?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: No, your Honour ... Did he then go to the employer for an interview?

CLOETE: I just want to complete my testimony.

JUDGE BEYERS: I know you want to finish, but I have a great deal still to deal with and I have no interest with what you are presently busy completing. Will you please deal with the only relevant information and complete the rest at your office.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he go to the place?

CLOETE: I told him that the foreman had told me to tell him that he must JUDGE BEYERS: Did he go to the place?

CLOETE: I do not know that.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he come back again?

CLOETE: He did not come back to me again. I have never seen him again after that.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was your impression that he was serious? That he was anxious to find work?

CLOETE: It did seem to me that was a person who really want to work. It was for that reason that he had come to me for help.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Was the accused well-dressed and did he have a neat appearance?

CLOETE: Yes, he had a neat appearance and made a good impression.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Were any signs of abnormality about him which you observed?

CLOETE: Absolutely nothing. He appeared totally normal to me.

COMMENTS ON CLOETE'S TESTIMONY

Cloete's testimony is a further indication of the defence's problems in finding suitable witnesses to support its line. Cloete was obviously chosen to support Dr. Cooper's claim that Tsafendas was actively seeking work but was unable to hold down a job. The witness's testimony is very short and the only thing it really offers is validation of Dr. Cooper's claim and diagnosis. However, in cross examination, Cloete also says something that contradicts what has been stated in the summary trial and agrees with the vast majority of witnesses, that Tsafendas was well-dressed and showed no signs of "abnormality."

CONCLUSION

Although Cloete agrees with Dr. Cooper that Tsafendas was actively seeking work, he disagrees with other defence claims, describing Tsafendas as a "totally normal" man, "well-dressed" and of "neat appearance."

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 14: GERALD EDWARD SHAW

GERALD SHAW'S TESTIMONY²⁹⁶¹

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is your profession?

SHAW: I am a journalist.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And during the present Parliamentary session where were you engaged?

SHAW: In the Press Gallery.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The Press Gallery of...?

SHAW: Of the House of Assembly.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you spend a great deal of time there during the present session?

SHAW: Yes, I did.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Shortly, what is your function in being there?

SHAW: I am a political correspondent of The Cape Times.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: During this session did you come to know the accused?

SHAW: Yes, I did. That is so.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did you come to know him?

SHAW: He was employed as a messenger; he was serving tea and coffee and things like that in the Press Gallery.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How efficient did you find him?

SHAW: He was not an efficient messenger.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did you regard him?

SHAW: Well, he mixed things up. He mixed orders up, and I thought he must be a bit mentally retarded.

²⁹⁶¹ Gerald Shaw's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Can you give us an example?

SHAW: Yes. On one occasion, the morning of the assassination of the Prime Minister, he brought me some tea when I ordered it and I paid him, and he re-appeared about 10 minutes later with a whole handful of notes, change. But I had already been given change by him when he brought the tea. So I drew this fact to his attention and he left. He seemed somewhat confused.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Any other experiences before the day?

SHAW: Well, yes. On that same occasion I reminded him that he hadn't collected money from me for a hamburger and coffee I'd ordered on the previous Friday. On that Friday I ordered this hamburger and coffee and it did not come. And I went back and listened to a debate and when I came back, it still wasn't there. I happened to glance into the office of a colleague next-door to my office, and I saw standing on the table a hamburger and coffee, which was cold. So I assumed he had delivered it to the wrong office.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he know whose office he had to deliver it to?

SHAW: Yes the order was placed in my office. We press a bell and the chap comes to the office and you place the order.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How were his manners? How did he behave?

SHAW: I found him off-hand. He didn't have the usual demeanour of a messenger, he didn't seem to be terribly obliging. He used to walk into the office without knocking and things like that.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was he capable of holding down this job of a messenger, in your opinion?

SHAW: Well, I wouldn't have employed him as a messenger; certainly not.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: If he had been employed by a commercial concern, would he have lasted?

SHAW: I think if they had been very tolerant employers he might have.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you lodge any complaints against the accused?

SHAW: About his efficiency as a messenger?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Yes?

SHAW: I did not.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Why not?

SHAW: Well, I suppose I am fairly tolerant about this sort of thing.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: How many reporters were there?

SHAW: In the Press Gallery? Off-hand I suppose there must be about twenty.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And the accused was the only messenger there?

SHAW: No, he was not. There were other messengers.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: How many were there?

SHAW: Three in all.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Was the accused very busy?

SHAW: I suppose fairly busy, yes

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: I suppose fairly busy?

SHAW: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Wasn't he fairly busy?

SHAW: Well, in the Press Gallery I would be rather more preoccupied with my own job, I suppose. But he was fairly busy.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: He was very busy?

SHAW: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Was he friendly?

SHAW: I did not find him friendly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you ever see where the accused stood when the bells rang?

SHAW: Once I noticed him standing at the door of the Press Gallery upstairs. At the time the bell was ringing.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Is it a fact that from there he could have seen where the late Prime Minister sat?

SHAW: Yes, I think he probably could.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Was he supposed to have been there?

SHAW: Well, I don't know really.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: I suppose I had better ask that question of some other witness. The psychologist says that the accused can work with money and that he can also run a banking account. How do you explain the episode that you told the Court about?

SHAW: I don't think I could explain it. He wasn't efficient in working with money in his dealings with me,

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Isn't it perhaps because the accused was very anxious on that occasion?

SHAW: Yes, that may be so. It depends. There were other occasions.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What time was this?

SHAW: This particular incident with the change?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Yes?

SHAW: It could have been between 10 and 11 a.m.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What change did you have to get?

SHAW: I can't be completely sure about this.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Yes, I appreciate that.

COMMENTS ON SHAW'S TESTIMONY

Let us examine the two incidents described by Shaw: how Tsafendas gave him the wrong change and how he delivered a hamburger to the wrong room. The first reaction is that these errors were the sort of mistakes that anyone could make, wrong change, wrong recipient. They do not signal schizophrenia or serious incompetence. More importantly, we have to examine when the incidents took place. The wrong change was given to Shaw only a few hours before the assassination. Tsafendas had already bought the knives by then and was waiting for the right moment to strike, as he explained in his statement in the police. With something like that on his mind, it is hardly surprising that he mixed up the reporter's change.

The hamburger incident took place on Friday, September 2, 1966. This was the day Tsafendas was scheduled to work as a waiter at a function organized by Parliamentary correspondents, which Dr. Verwoerd was expected to attend.²⁹⁶² Tsafendas had planned to shoot Dr. Verwoerd, flee to the Eleni and hide until departure the next day.²⁹⁶³ Although this plan was eventually aborted, Tsafendas's mind that morning at Parliament would certainly have been focussed on his preparations for the killing, which could certainly excuse his absent-mindedness.

Tsafendas had spoken to the police about both of his plans and therefore the Attorney-General should have been aware that the incidents described took place on days when Tsafendas was planning the assassination attempt and was presumably seriously distracted from his normal duties. If the Attorney-General was not aware of Tsafendas's initial plan of September 2 because he was not given his statements, he certainly knew that the incident with the correspondent's money occurred on the very day of the assassination. Surprisingly, he failed to make the connection. It must be more than coincidence that both incidents took place on the days when Tsafendas was planning to assassinate Dr. Verwoerd and nothing untoward about him was noted on other days. If Tsafendas was customarily inefficient this would have been remarked upon, and Shaw did not mention any incident concerning Tsafendas on any other day. In addition, none of Tsafendas's five co-messenger who were interviewed by the police and the Commission of Enquiry had anything negative to say about Tsafendas's work and the Chief Messenger stated clearly that there were no complaints against him.

Shaw wrote later that he had only a "brief acquaintanceship"²⁹⁶⁴ with Tsafendas, another pointer to the desperation of the defence team to find suitable witnesses for its case. Had it wanted reliable and sincere opinions about Tsafendas's capabilities, there were several witnesses who had worked with him for several months. These included for example Albert Vercueil, who worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole engineering, and Ralph ²⁹⁶² Fred Feinauer statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁹⁶³ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁹⁶⁴ Shaw, Believe in Miracles: South Africa from Malan to Mandela – and the Mbeki Era, p. 64.

Lighton, Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden and Hulse, his co-workers for three months at Marine Diamond Corporation. Obviously, these witnesses could not support the defence's line and therefore were not called, while Shaw, and Smorenberg, were.

It is surprising that none of Tsafendas's colleagues at the Parliament was asked to testify in the summary trial, especially as the Attorney-General could have used them to challenge Dr. Cooper's testimony. Even more surprising is what the Attorney-General did on the first day of the summary trial when he suggested there was evidence that Tsafendas was an efficient messenger, essentially contradicting Dr. Cooper's diagnosis that since Tsafendas was a schizophrenic, he was not able to perform his duties efficiently. This is the dialogue that took place:

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: If I put it to you that he performed his work in the House of Assembly normally and efficiently, would you agree with that?

SHAW: I would like to know details of that. I would say that a highly intelligent man performing as a messenger in court may well be able to perform fairly reasonably, but I would suspect in this man that he didn't in fact perform all that reasonably. I would be surprised, in fact, that he performed altogether satisfactorily.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: But he was a messenger in the Press Gallery, and if he didn't perform his duties efficiently wouldn't he have been dismissed?

SHAW: I understand that he was only there for a short time.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: He was there from the 1st August to the 6th September?

SHAW: Yes. I must draw a conclusion from this that he wasn't completely and obviously hopeless and inefficient in his duties.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: But if there is evidence that he performed his duties normally and efficiently, you won't deny that?

SHAW: If the evidence is such, I must accept it.²⁹⁶⁵

Van den Berg suggested that Tsafendas's work in the House of Assembly was efficient and normal. He seemed to know that for a fact, but he did not adduce any evidence to support his claim or challenge Dr. Cooper's testimony and left the issue there. It seems odd that evidence appeared to exist which would challenge Dr. Cooper's diagnosis but it remained unheard, leaving Shaw's statements on record in apparent validation of Dr. Cooper's opinion.

²⁹⁶⁵ Dr. Harold Cooper's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

The police and the Commission of Enquiry interviewed five Parliamentary messengers who had worked with Tsafendas. They were Piet Burger,²⁹⁶⁶ the Chief Messenger and Sydney Wiehand²⁹⁶⁷ and Petrus Schuin,²⁹⁶⁸ both senior messengers, all three of whom had interviewed and appointed Tsafendas. Another two messengers, Fred Feinauer²⁹⁶⁹ and Felix Miles,²⁹⁷⁰ also testified to the police. None of these five messengers stated that Tsafendas was inefficient or that they saw anything wrong with him. On the contrary, Schuin described Tsafendas as an ordinary man and "same as any other person that had worked there."²⁹⁷¹

It is curious that none of Tsafendas's Parliamentary colleagues testified at the summary trial while five of them did so to the police and the Commission of Enquiry. Equally strange is that the psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas did not seek any information about him from the messengers who worked with him daily for five weeks up to the assassination.

According to Sydney Wiehand, for someone to be appointed "he must be of sober habits, he must be always neat, and then also we ask him if he's got any sickness, or anything like that, then he must tell us. If so, then he must get a report from the doctor that he is fit for duty."²⁹⁷² Petrus Schuin also described Tsafendas as an ordinary man and "same as any other person that had worked there."²⁹⁷³ Wiehand testified that he never received any complaints from anyone about Tsafendas's work. However, he was told by another messenger, Mr. Pienaar, that Tsafendas was eating a lot, then sitting and sleeping. However, Wiehand did not receive this as a complaint and testified that most messengers, including himself, ate and slept until they were required to work again. Pienaar's comment had more to do with his surprise

²⁹⁶⁶ Piet Bester Burger testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

²⁹⁶⁷ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

²⁹⁶⁸ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

²⁹⁶⁹ Fred Feinauer statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁹⁷⁰ Felix George Miles statement to the police, 7 October 1966. K150, Vol. 2, File: 1. NASA.

²⁹⁷¹ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

²⁹⁷² Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

²⁹⁷³ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

about how much Tsafendas was eating because he thought he was overeating.²⁹⁷⁴ These statements were in the possession of the police and the Commission and should have been known to the Attorney-General.

In addition, an unnamed “respected member of the Press gallery” in the House of Assembly “who knew Tsafendas well,” talked to René MacColl, Daily Express’s chief foreign correspondent, about Tsafendas. He said that “far from being a withdrawn sort of man, he seemed to be intent on impressing his personality on one. There was always the big smile, the ready chat and an almost obsessive intention to make you remember him. There couldn’t have been a less grey or faceless figure.”²⁹⁷⁵

Forty-one years later, Shaw wrote about Tsafendas, “In my brief acquaintanceship with him in the Press Gallery I had never found Tsafendas to show signs of insanity ... I told the judge of the incident with the hamburger, the change and the pot of tea, and of my belief that Tsafendas was rather slow mentally.”²⁹⁷⁶ Shaw’s belief notwithstanding, several witnesses testified to the police, and the psychiatrists and the psychologists agreed, Tsafendas was not slow mentally, indeed that he was more intelligent than the average person. What is likely is that the incidents mentioned were the result of his anxiety on days when he planned to kill the prime minister. Alternatively, Tsafendas’s attitude on those days may have been one of laziness or indifference since the only reason he was working in Parliament anyway was to find the opportunity of killing Dr. Verwoerd.

CONCLUSION

How reliable was Gerald Shaw as a witnesses and to what extent was he qualified to testify, since he had only a “brief acquaintanceship” with Tsafendas? It mattered very little to the defence, as long as his evidence supported its argument and it did that perfectly. Shaw turned out to be an excellent witness for the defence. His testimony validated Dr. Cooper’s diagnosis and appeared to stop in its tracks the Attorney-General’s argument that Tsafendas was efficient, since he failed to bring any of that evidence forward.

What makes it stranger is the van den Berg must have had the evidence in his possession since at least five messengers had testified to the police and none of them reported that Tsafendas was inefficient. By not using any of the messengers' evidence, the Attorney-General handed an easy victory to Dr. Cooper and to the defence team. In doing so, the portrayal of Tsafendas as a man who could not even perform the lowly job of messenger prevailed. Finally, Shaw himself stated clearly that, although a defence witness, he "never found Tsafendas to show signs of insanity."²⁹⁷⁷

²⁹⁷⁴ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

²⁹⁷⁵ Daily Express, ‘Was It Murder Incorporated?’, 9 September 1966: 2.

²⁹⁷⁶ Shaw, Believe in Miracles: South Africa from Malan to Mandela – and the Mbeki Era, p. 64.

²⁹⁷⁷ Shaw, Believe in Miracles: South Africa from Malan to Mandela – and the Mbeki Era, p. 64.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 15: FELIX BERNHEIM

FELIX BERNHEIM'S TESTIMONY²⁹⁷⁸

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You are a handwriting expert, are you?

BERNHEIM: Yes, I am.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Have you been shown a sample of the accused's handwriting?

BERNHEIM: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And have you been shown this document (R.S.C.E)?

BERNHEIM: Yes, I have seen the document.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In whose handwriting is it?

BERNHEIM: The handwriting of the accused.

JUDGE BEYERS: What document is that, Mr. Cooper?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: A letter which the accused wrote.

JUDGE BEYERS: I haven't seen it yet.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Your lordship will see it now. It is a letter written by the accused to the Prime Minister of England in 1959.

JUDGE BEYERS: The only purpose of this witness is to identify the handwriting?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Yes. I therefore don't think it is necessary to read through it.

COMMENTS ON BERNHEIM'S TESTIMONY

Bernheim refers to a letter which Tsafendas is said to have written to the British Prime Minister in 1959, Harold Macmillan. Bernheim identified Tsafendas's handwriting as that of the person who wrote the letter in question, which is signed "Staa-Sin-Hah." As we will see from Dr. Zabow's examination which follows, the letter was submitted in evidence to the court as Exhibit E. However, nothing has been recorded in the trial's records about what followed the submission and the letter was not found in the National Archives.

²⁹⁷⁸ Felix Bernheim's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

According to Press reports at the time, the letter was handed to Judge Beyers. He glanced at it and said, "I cannot make head nor tail of it. Which of course is the purpose of giving it to me."²⁹⁷⁹ The letter was apparently written from St. Pancras hospital in London and was found in Tsafendas's medical file. It was headed: "St. Pancras Hospital, c/o North Wing, London. NW1." It was undated but refers to a letter written from 10 Downing Street on September 14, 1959, on behalf of the British Prime Minister, acknowledging receipt of a previous letter.

The letter began:

"Dear Sir, with reference to your letter dated September 14, 1959. Which I am enclosing as I have written on the back of it, just to make sure... Well, I have just had a second nervous breakdown because the situation is so serious. You can have us all killed if you don't do the following."

The letter then mentions a statue brought to London during Queen Victoria's reign which he described as a "hieroglyphs," adding if it is the original one, then "it is sacrilege."

It goes on:

"Dave this is getting too hot to handle, and in order to appease them before we all get fried, I suggest brother that you make a concession and give it back to them. I could arrange for the correct type of representations in the negotiations ... I don't think Labour can make Britain more prosperous. Don't let them convince you now you have the cards in your hand. And Mexican Litvinoff could act as mediator... Do not send anything back unless you consult me, as to the method and how it will have to be effected, including transportation etc. I have no more to write at present and am yours sincerely."

On the last page there are Greek characters and then the sentence: "Please don't ask me why fish and chips is cheaper at the restaurant or vice versa?" The last sentence is: "This was a lucid 60 seconds and five more or more."²⁹⁸⁰

Tsafendas never spoke to any of the witnesses the author interviewed about writing such a letter, but this does not mean that he did not write it. The author read its contents to forty-six witnesses who knew Tsafendas well. None of them believed that Tsafendas wrote the letter or, if he did, that he meant it seriously. They included people who knew him extremely well, such as Father Minas Constandinou, Father Nikola Banovic, Father Michalis Visvinis, Katerina Pnefma, Mary Eintracht, Andreas Babiolakis, Costas Chagios, Irene Michaletos, Antony and John Michaletos, Michalis Vasilakis, Nikolas Kambouris, Reuben and Allan O’Ryan, Elias Constantaras, Emanuil Mastromanolis, Ira Kyriakakis, Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis, Costas Poriазis, Fotini Gavasiadis and Alexandra Vaporidis.

²⁹⁷⁹ The Cape Argus, 'He Wrote to the British Premier ...', 19 October 1966: 1-2.

²⁹⁸⁰ The Cape Argus, 'He Wrote to the British Premier ...', 19 October 1966: 1-2.

Between leaving Istanbul in December 1961 and being arrested in September 1966, Tsafendas wrote regularly to Father Nikola Banovic. Father Nikola stated that “all his letters were very normal; they were nothing like this ... he never wrote anything strange. These are like the letters of someone else. It couldn’t have been Dimitri’s unless he had gone mad by then which I very much doubt, as in seven months he never said or did anything to suggest that he was mad.”²⁹⁸¹

Tsafendas also corresponded regularly, from 1942 until 1963 and then again from 1964 until his arrest, with his family, his first cousin, Mary Eintracht, and his good friend, Ira Kyriakakis. Often, the letters to his family included a post-card and sometimes a small souvenir, or even, though rarely, a picture of Tsafendas himself from wherever he was at the time. According to Mary Eintracht, Ira Kyriakakis and his half-sister Katerina Pnefma, all of Tsafendas’s letters were perfectly normal and nothing like the gibberish letter to the prime minister. His friends and relatives are adamant that Tsafendas could not have written what appeared in the London letter; or if he did, that he couldn’t have meant it – he must have done it to gain something.²⁹⁸²

Katerina Pnefma remembers that Tsafendas sent at least two letters to his father from London. One was in 1962, shortly after his father had died, which Tsafendas had not heard about. His step-mother then wrote to tell him of his father’s demise. Pnefma is not certain when the other letter was sent to his father but it had to be before his death in 1962. Since the only other time Tsafendas was in London was 1959, that would most likely be when the letter was sent. Pnefma remembers the letter clearly because Tsafendas included a small painting of the Tower of London, which is still in the possession of her family. She does not remember what he had written in any of these letters, but she is certain that there was nothing unusual or anything to suggest that her half-brother had a mental problem. “All his letters were the same as usual,” she said.²⁹⁸³ Eintracht and Kyriakakis are not sure whether they received any letters from Tsafendas from London, but they both got letters from many different countries and none of them contained anything abnormal. They cannot believe that Tsafendas wrote the letter in question but say that if he did, he must have had a reason.²⁹⁸⁴

²⁹⁸¹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²⁹⁸² Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

A strong indication that Tsafendas wrote the letter in question to support his act is evident from the following where one could clearly see his thinking and his manoeuvres. Tsafendas confided the truth about the tapeworm to Father Minas Constandinou and explained about the trial and his abuse in custody. However, he asked him to tell the prison staff that he talked about the tapeworm all the time and that he was “very mad,” so they would “leave him alone.”²⁹⁸⁵ Tsafendas also asked Rika Nikolatos and Father Minas to bring a double portion of food and to lie to the guards that he had asked for two portions because he wanted to feed the worm too.²⁹⁸⁶

In addition, while Tsafendas was in prison in the 1960s and 1970s, he wrote several letters to the prison authorities, all of which contained references to the tapeworm and bore some vague similarities to the London letter. Tsafendas signed most of these letters as Mimikos Demitrios Tsafantakis von Willem de Kanhume.²⁹⁸⁷ Mimikos is the same as Dimitris, which is how he was known as a child, before the family name Tsafantakis. The rest is presumably his maternal grandfather’s surname.

Later, during the 1980s, when Father Minas visited Tsafendas in Pretoria Central Prison he always asked him if he wanted anything and he always got the same reply, “No.” One day, however, Tsafendas asked if the priest would write letters to some of his friends to see if they were all right. He said he preferred not to write himself because they might feel uncomfortable to get a letter from prison and he did not want the police to note his association with them. The letters were to go to Father Nikola Banovic in Istanbul, Manuel in Lourenço Marques, John Michaletos in Athens and Patrick O’Ryan in Cape Town. Tsafendas gave the priest their addresses and apologised for being unable to pay the postage. Father Minas wrote to the four men, who replied eagerly that they would like to correspond with ²⁹⁸³ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²⁹⁸⁴ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

²⁹⁸⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁹⁸⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁹⁸⁷ Tsafendas’s Correctional Serice File in NASA.

Tsafendas direct. However, Tsafendas declined. He gave no reason to Father Minas, simply saying that “it would be better if you write them and post them.”²⁹⁸⁸

Sometime in 1994, but after the elections of April 27 that year, when Tsafendas was in the Pretoria Prison hospital, Father Minas visited him again. Tsafendas asked if he would post some letters he wished to write and mentioned that he would use the hospital address for correspondence if they wanted to write back. Surprised, the priest asked why he was now ready to write the letters himself. Tsafendas explained that in the 1980s any letters he wrote would have been read by prison censors. Since the authorities regarded him as a lunatic who believed he harboured a tapeworm, they would expect the letters to contain evidence of his insanity, including perhaps references to the worm. Tsafendas said that if he had written letters of that nature to his friends, they might conclude he really had gone mad.²⁹⁸⁹

Subsequently, Tsafendas started writing normal letters again, signing them with his name and not mentioning the tapeworm or anything else that would suggest he was insane. These letters were perfectly logical and similar to those he wrote before he was imprisoned, without, of course, any mention of the tapeworm or any other absurd claim. Father Nikola Banovic received a few letters from Tsafendas in the 1990s and they were exactly like the ones he would write to him in the 1960s.²⁹⁹⁰ Father Minas Constandinou, Mary Eintracht, Helen Grispos, and Ira Kyriakakis also received letters from Tsafendas in the 1990s and they were also perfectly normal, just as before.²⁹⁹¹

Furthermore, when in jail, Tsafendas talked perfectly normal to fellow prisoners and to people who visited him, including Professor Renfrew Christie, James Mange, Alexander and Marie-Jose Moumbaris, Father Spiros Randos, Father Minas Constandinou, Father Ioannis Tsafaridis, Father Michalis Visvinis and Dimitris Skoularikis.²⁹⁹²

The fact that Tsafendas wrote bizarre letters to the prison authorities, many times referring to the tapeworm and sometimes offering a softer line on Dr. Verwoerd, while in private conversations he talked in sober political terms, denouncing Dr. Verwoerd as a tyrant ²⁹⁸⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁹⁸⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

²⁹⁹⁰ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²⁹⁹¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

²⁹⁹² Professor Renfrew Christie in a personal interview, 12 April 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Alexander and Marie-Jose Moumbaris in a personal interview, 7 March 2010; Dimitris Skoularikis in a personal interview, 26 April 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017; Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

and a dictator, suggests that his letters to the prison officials were to convince them he was still mad and so the guards should “leave him alone,” as he told the priests. If Tsafendas believed the content of his letters, he would have said the same to those who talked to him. The fact that what he told these witnesses was the same as he told tens of witnesses before the assassination proves these were his true ideas and not anything he said in his letters.

Significantly, when apartheid collapsed and he was transferred from prison to a hospital, he wrote freely to his friends, never mentioning anything he had written to the prison authorities. All this suggests that the letters Tsafendas wrote while in prison, knowing very well that they were going to be read by the prison authorities were deliberate attempts to convince them that he was still insane. Naturally, he had to keep his guard up. He had already been tortured though officially considered to be insane, and he would have been well aware of the prospect of renewed torture should the authorities discover that he was sane and expressing anti-Verwoerd sentiments to his friends.

As for the London letter in question, for Tsafendas to spend time writing such a missive seemed an incongruous use of his energies and hardly reflective of his mental state at a time when he was deeply involved in politics, in the British anti-apartheid movement and other anti-fascist organizations, participating in many anti-apartheid, anti-fascist and anti-colonialist demonstrations. According to the report of the Commission of Enquiry, Tsafendas, while in London, “was noticed in the company of leftists,”²⁹⁹³ he attended political meetings in Hyde Park, Labour Party meetings at London’s Caxton Hall and many others organised by the Committee of African Organisations as well as anti-apartheid and anti-fascist demonstrations.²⁹⁹⁴ According to the Commission’s report, Tsafendas tried to “recruit people to take part in an uprising in South Africa.” Tsafendas admitted to the Commission that he tried to recruit people for an uprising, but his aim was “confined to the Territory of Mozambique.”²⁹⁹⁵ These activities are hardly the things a schizophrenic man would get up to in his spare time.

The reasons why Tsafendas was hospitalised in this hospital have been extensively discussed in Dr. Cooper’s testimony. The question is: Why would Tsafendas write an incomprehensible letter to the British Prime Minister in 1959 from a hospital in north London? He later wrote letters to the authorities seeking to convince them he was insane. It seems that this was done with the same intention; to strengthen his claim to mental instability with the doctors. That the letter was never posted but ended up in the doctors' hands was very convenient for Tsafendas. It meant that it was read by the doctors. If he seriously wanted to post the letter, he could have done so, as he did with his first letter to the PM. That it ended up with his own doctors instead strongly suggests he wrote it to support his claim to be insane. The fact that the Prime Minister's acknowledgement of his first letter was addressed to Tsafendas by name indicates that he used his proper name in the first letter. It is also highly unlikely that the Prime Minister's office would have replied to the first letter if it was of the same type as the one in question.

²⁹⁹³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 31.

²⁹⁹⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁹⁹⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 32.

Furthermore, Tsafendas, while at this hospital, was looking for work and often wrote off for jobs. It seems highly likely that to write such letters, which would certainly end up in the hospital's possession, was the perfect camouflage. Seeing Tsafendas writing so many letters could have made the doctors curious about their contents. A schizophrenic man sitting in hospital writing out job applications was not a regular sight. However, this is a hypothesis on the author's part, as we do not know exactly what did happen at that time. It must be said that Tsafendas's behaviour and attitude in similar situations in the future makes this scenario a very possible one.

It is also worth mentioning here that the defence could simply have asked Tsafendas if this letter was his and since it was found in his medical file, according to the defence, it would have been accepted by the court without the need of a handwriting expert. Since Tsafendas had not contested the fact that he had written the letter, what was the point of having someone examine it? The defence could have just submitted it as evidence. A graphologist is used only in cases when something written is contested. Since Tsafendas did not contest that he had written the letter, what was the point of appointing someone to examine his letter? This suggests that Bernheim was simply used as a "show witness" for the defence, purely with the aim of creating an impression.

Another issue that should be raised about this letter is whether Bernheim's opinion was wrong. Although there is no evidence to suggest this, the possibility cannot be ruled out. Like certain members of the judiciary and doctors in South Africa who "conspired with the security police to keep torture and murder under wraps,"²⁹⁹⁶ there is little doubt that some handwriting experts did the same. An infamous case was to occur ten years later involving a student activist and a suicide note. Mapetla Mohapi, aged twenty-five, a former official of the South African Students' Organisation and of the Black People's Convention, was arrested on July 15, 1976 near East London. Twenty-one days later, the police announced that Mohapi had committed suicide in his cell, leaving a note in his handwriting. K. Landman, a South African handwriting expert, said he had no doubt that Mohapi's suicide note was in the same handwriting as another document written by Mohapi. However, two world renowned graphologists disagreed and declared the note a forgery.²⁹⁹⁷ By big coincidence, Wilfrid Cooper, Tsafendas's advocate, was also the advocate for Mohapi.²⁹⁹⁸

²⁹⁹⁶ Quoted in Bizos, No One to Blame? A Personal Account of Inquests into Some Deaths in Detention under Apartheid, p. vii.

It is worth mentioning here that on September 9, 1966, the Daily Dispatch carried a reproduction of Tsafendas's signature and an analysis by Dr R.M. Schweitzer of East London, who it described as a graphologist of thirty years' standing. Dr. Schweitzer managed to portray Tsafendas quite accurately based on his handwriting, indeed more accurately than any psychiatrist would do at his summary trial. He suggested the writer "experienced difficulty in accepting discipline, had unsteady working habits, showed evidence of vindictiveness, but was idealistic, a person of great enthusiasm and a quick thinker." By studying loops, whirls and letter shapes, Schweitzer concluded that the signatory was "intelligent" and "capable of learning and thinking logically and can at times co-operate," but he also nurtured emotional inhibitions and needed more sympathy in his emotional life. By underlining his signature three times, the writer signalled that he could be extremely vain.²⁹⁹⁹

CONCLUSION

There is no doubt that the letter in question makes no sense. However, none of the people who corresponded with Tsafendas over the years ever received anything in the same vein from him. The fact that Tsafendas wrote letters to the prison authorities in a similar confused style aimed at confirming his insanity to them suggests that he did the same while at the St. Pancras hospital. When Tsafendas was in prison, he never mentioned to his fellow inmates or to the priests who visited him any of the things he wrote about in his letters. He later asked two priest visitors to assure the prison warders that he was mad and talked about the tapeworm all the time, so that they would leave him alone. In addition, when Tsafendas was in London, he wrote perfectly sensible letters to his family, while the evidence of his many political activities further suggests that he was perfectly fine while he was there.

²⁹⁹⁷ Shireen Motala, Behind Closed Doors, (Braamfontein: South African Institute of Race Relations, 1987), p. 34-35.

²⁹⁹⁸ For more about the case see: Motala, S. (1987) Behind Closed Doors

²⁹⁹⁹ Daily Dispatch, 'The Hand the Killer Wrote', 9 September 1966: 1.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 16: ABRAHAM AUBREY ZABOWDR. ZABOW'S PROFESSIONAL BIOGRAPHY AS RELATED BY HIM TO THE COURT

Dr. Zabow, a psychiatrist practising at the time at the Medical Centre, Cape Town, having qualified as a doctor in December, 1949 with M.B. and Ch.B. from the University of Cape Town. After completing his internship year, he practised as a general practitioner for eleven years. Because of his interest in psychiatry since his student days, he took a full-time post at Valkenberg Mental Hospital as a clinical assistant for a year, from 1962 to 1963, and then a further year as a registrar in the Department of Psychiatry at Groote Schuur Hospital. During this time, he took certain examinations: the Diploma in Psychological Medicine at the University of Cape Town, and the Fellowship of the Faculty of Psychiatrists of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of South Africa, and eventually registered as a specialist psychiatrist.

For administrative reasons, Dr. Zabow joined the staff of Groote Schuur Hospital as a consultant in June, 1964, but did not register with the Medical Council until November or December of that year. Then, in January, 1965, he started in private practice and remained a part-time consultant in psychiatry at Groote Schuur Hospital; he also took on the post of part-time consultant in psychiatry to the Somerset Hospital. Dr Zabow declared that he had seen, certified and treated schizophrenics in the course of his practice and felt competent to express his opinion in the Court.³⁰⁰⁰

DR. ZABOW'S TESTIMONY³⁰⁰¹DR. ZABOW'S FIRST EXAMINATION ON TSAFENDAS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You have interviewed the accused at the request of Mr. David Bloomberg, the attorney for the defence?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, I was asked by Mr. David Bloomberg to see the accused, and I saw him on three separate occasions. The first time was on 30th September, when I saw him on my own, except that Mr. Bloomberg was there. There were no other psychiatrists present.

³⁰⁰⁰ Dr. Abraham Aubrey Zabow's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³⁰⁰¹ Dr. Abraham Aubrey Zabow's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you do that deliberately?

DR. ZABOW: Yes. I wanted to be able to see this man on my own and form an independent clinical opinion of him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: After you had had that interview did you, again independently of other medical witnesses, communicate your opinion to the defence?

DR. ZABOW: Yes. I formed an opinion at the first interview and communicated that verbally to Mr. Bloomberg at the time, and then in writing as well, and I have had no reason to change my opinion since then.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The subsequent interviews were on which days?

DR. ZABOW: They were on the 4th October and the 11th October, and at these interviews Drs. MacGregor and Cooper were also present.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How long did the first interview last?

DR. ZABOW: Each of the interviews lasted approximately an hour and a half, I didn't time them exactly. All in all I was with the accused for at least four and a half hours.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: At this stage, on the basis of these interviews alone, what opinion did you form?

DR. ZABOW: On the basis of these interviews alone, I formed the opinion that the accused was suffering from schizophrenia. At my first interview I was satisfied that he was psychotic and schizophrenic, but I was not yet able to be sure into which category of schizophrenia he fell. Subsequent interviews have enabled me to form the opinion that although he is not a textbook case of any particular variety, he falls mainly into the category of a paranoid schizophrenic.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Your first interview with the accused, how did it go? Will you tell us, so that the Court can for itself see how a psychiatrist sets about his job of determining the mental state of the patient?

DR. ZABOW: May I stress to the Court, with respect, that in interviewing a patient for psychiatric examination one tries to be as systematic and review certain systems in the same way as a physician undertakes a medical and physical examination. One does not just look at the man, listen to him talk, and then form a sort of general opinion. In the same way as a physician would look at the general condition of the patient and then examine his various systems - the respiratory system, the cardio-vascular system, and so on - the psychiatrist tries to examine the various systems which make up the behavioural pattern and the overall mental picture of the person whom he is seeing. So that the first impression, naturally, is the first sight of the patient.

JUDGE BEYERS: You mean he has got a sort of set procedure like Dr. Muller has when he looks me over?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, that is what I mean.

JUDGE BEYERS: How is my pulse, and does my liver hurt?

DR. ZABOW: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: And you do the same thing with the mind?

DR. ZABOW: That is right.

JUDGE BEYERS: Then I know what you are talking about.

DR. ZABOW: My first impression was of a man who - remember that I knew that he had been alleged to have assassinated the Prime Minister, and I was expecting certain things, and what I was struck by was the incongruity of my first meeting with him. Mr. Bloomberg introduced us to each other. He was not very tidy, he hadn't shaved - one could say that this was because of the circumstances that he was in. But then I asked him: "How are you?" I can look up my exact words, but I asked him "How are you?", and I have in the course of my experience seen other people who had been held for murder, and conducted psychiatric examinations on them, and this was quite an unexpected reply. I said: "Tell me, how are you feeling?" He said: "I always feel tired and exhausted. I just feel as usual, tired and exhausted, and my appetite is always good and my bowel movement is regular." Now he had been introduced to me as a psychiatrist, and one would have expected him to take the issue, well, this is the man who is supposed to be coming to help him, and yet this was the pattern of incongruity, and many times in that interview and subsequent interviews there was equal incongruity.

COMMENTS ON DR. ZABOW'S FIRST EXAMINATION ON TSAFENDAS

Dr. A. Zabow acknowledges that Tsafendas was untidy and unshaven because of the circumstances. What he did not know was that Tsafendas was being tortured regularly and left in dirty, wet clothes for days. Tsafendas said that he was allowed to have a shower and change clothes only when he was visited by his lawyers or the psychiatrists.³⁰⁰² Obviously Dr. A. Zabow was not in position to know that.

Dr. A. Zabow stated that he interviewed Tsafendas three times, with each session lasting about an hour and a half, making it "at least four and a half hours." The most important thing that Dr. A. Zabow said was that he diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic "on the basis of these interviews alone," that is, without any additional information about him. Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky, Reyner van Zyl and Professors Tuviah Zabow, cousin of Dr. Aubrey Zabow, Alban Burke, Kirk Heilbrun, Robert L. Sadoff, and Phillip Resnick highlighted to the author the importance of collecting as much information as possible about the patient by talking to people who knew him, such as his family and friends, and by consulting his medical and criminal record.³⁰⁰³

However, that was not the case here. Dr. A. Zabow relied only on what he heard from Tsafendas and what Tsafendas told him was entirely different to what he told some two hundred relatives, friends and acquaintances who were interviewed by the police, by the Commission and by the author. Dr. A. Zabow found incongruity in Tsafendas, but none of the aforementioned witnesses noticed incongruity. Indeed, the witnesses who were interviewed by the author denied any incongruity in Tsafendas's everyday life.

TSAFENDAS'S "THOUGHT DISORDER"

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What were your major findings? We have had Dr. Cooper give evidence at great length, and we have had lots of other evidence given here. What were your major findings?

DR. ZABOW: My major findings were that this man suffered from a clearly recognised and ³⁰⁰² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

³⁰⁰³ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016; Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017; Professor Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 17 December 2016; Professor Robert L. Sadoff in a personal interview with the author, 12 August 2015; Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky in correspondence with the author, 30 March 2016; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016; Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

recognisable mental illness known as schizophrenia. Now in schizophrenia there are certain clearly defined disorders of mentation, of thought processes, of emotional life, of contact with reality and of perception, which one can look for in the course of one's systematic examination, and I found many of them there, and particularly I found many important ones, so important that certain authors, particularly Kurt Schneider, would say that even the presence of one of them is sufficient, in the absence of organic disease of the brain, to diagnose schizophrenia.

For instance, I found thought disorder. This thought disorder consisted of an inability to pursue the point of a question and answer sequence. Several times, in the course of my first interview and in the course of other interviews as well, he could not - he appeared not to be able to deal with - what was being asked, and we arrived, not merely at the point in a roundabout way - some people are circumstantial - but in his case we just never got there at all. Sometimes he went off at a complete tangent; sometimes he just petered out; and on one occasion I remember specifically asking him "Now what did I ask you?", and he looked a bit dazed, perplexed, and was not really able to say. If the Court wishes it, I could quote this passage. It runs into about three or four pages of typed foolscap, and I think it took a good few minutes for the accused to ramble through it.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Well, unless the Court wants the exact passage, give the Court the substance of the passage?

DR. ZABOW: This was in the course of our third interview. Drs. MacGregor, Cooper and myself were present, and Drs. Cooper and MacGregor had been asking the accused questions, and then I went on and asked him, "You don't know what this is about? The sequence of events is, of course, that you planned to assassinate Dr. Verwoerd and that you did murder him. What we are trying to understand is just how that came about."

JUDGE BEYERS: That is what you said?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, that is what I said to him. He said to me: "Yes. I er ... (I am going to try and put in the pauses, my Lord, with the hesitations, because I feel this is important to understand how he spoke to us).

ASSESSOR: Is this a transcript of a recording?

DR. ZABOW: This is a transcript of a recording. I also have my own written verbatim notes which are fairly substantially the same, but my handwriting in taking it down was not so good: "Yes. I don't know how that came about exactly, but I can tell you how I got quite a few people have asked me questions of how I got to Cape Town and I gave them er ... quite a few versions of how I got to Cape Town but er. My mind ... my memory went bad a bit as to how I came to Cape Town and one of the influencing factors was ... that made me come to Cape Town as I was working there as a casual interpreter, was the fact that I received a letter through someone in my Church, through a person in my Church, through one of the people, a pastor in my church, and this pastor was in Cape Town. He is known as Willy Clarke. And I received the letter while I was in Cape Town or he received it, I mean, through somebody. It was not posted to him. It was brought to him by someone personally from Cape Town.

It was brought. It had no stamp on it. It was I think that I can remember. It was brought and handed to him and he called me over to his house and I went to get the letter. And the letter had been opened. It had been tampered with. And he gave me the letter. Oh, there's a mistake here.

Excuse me, I'm sorry. The pastor's name was Willy Clarke. He did not call me to his house to give me the letter. I had never been to his house and I went one day to visit him and when I got there he gave me this letter. He said he had received it from somebody that came from Cape Town. The envelope was opened and (long pause) I took the letter and we spoke for a few minutes and then I left. Later on, as I was going down the road, I passed through the race course" (this was in Durban, my Lord) "and there must have been the ... what you call it? The July handicap. I had never been to horse racing in all my life because we don't go to racing but I ... as I was passing by ... I like animals ... so I stopped and I went to look at the horses running round the course and they were getting near the bend"

JUDGE BEYERS: I wish that was all I did. (Laughter.)

DR. ZABOW: "And two jockeys I remember fell off and when I saw that accident."

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Just repeat that to his Lordship.

DR. ZABOW: He may not have been able to hear it.

JUDGE BEYERS: Two jockeys fell off? "Two jockeys I remember fell off."

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What year was that?

DR. ZABOW: It must have been 1965, I presume. "I saw that accident and the animals went right round the racecourse and I had a look at them - so it must have been the July ... Must have been in the month of July that I received the letter. I then ... I left and I went home and I must have read the letter later on. Must have read the letter later on. The letter stated, this girl stated, her name was Helen Daniels, that she had heard about me when she was on holiday in Brakpan in the Home. There were some Christians living in the Transvaal on the Rand," My Lord, it goes on. If I could just point out ...

JUDGE BEYERS: Does he ever get back to what you asked?

DR. ZABOW: No, In fact, this goes on now to something about an identity card, then working for Marine Diamond, and then I said to him ...

JUDGE BEYERS: Before you interfere again, before you interpose a question again, does he ever get back to it?

DR. ZABOW: No, never at all.

JUDGE BEYERS: Does he ever get back to killing the Prime Minister and why?

DR. ZABOW: No, not at all.

JUDGE BEYERS: He has now rambled through the Durban July and I don't know what all, but does he ever get back to the Prime Minister?

DR. ZABOW: I will just make quite sure. I will read the last few words: "They did not care very much about papers out on the barges isolated." (This was because he had no identity- card. You will remember, he had given that in and had a receipt instead.) "They took on anybody, outlaws, criminals, they a receipt like that I was considered before this happened I was considered (pause) something like that. So they did not mind. They did not mind (pause) accepting me out there and they accepted me. They ..." - and then I interrupted him. I said: "May I ask you something else, Mr. Tsafendas. What were you trying to tell me now?" Then he said "Er" and there was a long, long pause. And then he said "Concerning what?" Then I asked him, "You know, we asked you about the Prime Minister." He said: "I was trying to tell you how I got to Cape Town. What made me ... er ... what was the influencing factor that made me come to Cape Town. Then after that I lost ... after I got here ... after what happened after I got here about getting married ... I had lost the intention that made me come to Cape Town," (Because originally he was trying to say he had come to Cape Town to meet this Helen Daniels.) "I kept on wandering around. You know, I got this job" - and once again we still cannot get back to the point. If I could put this into technical terms, this is a variety of schizophrenic thought disorder in which the patient is unable to follow the main trend of thought, and various side issues obtrude themselves on to his thinking, and he is not able logically to discriminate between the primary object of his discourse and the secondary intruding factors. I could go on to the other aspects now.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Just a little comment. The fact that he tells you about the pastor as Willy Clarke, and then he comes back and he has forgotten about it again and he talks about Willy Clarke, what is that indicative of?

DR. ZABOW: I am not altogether sure of the point.

JUDGE BEYERS: It is indicative of thought disorder?

DR. ZABOW: Of thought disorder, yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: Which is the first symptom you look for?

DR. ZABOW: Yes.

COMMENTS ON DR. ZABOW'S ABOVE TESTIMONY

DR. ZABOW'S DIAGNOSIS OF "THOUGHT DISORDER"

Dr. Zabow stated that he diagnosed "thought disorder" and that Tsafendas was unable to deal with what he was asked and properly answer a question. This is something that Dr. Cooper also diagnosed, but it is something that none of the about two hundred witnesses who were questioned by the police, by the Commission of Enquiry and by the author ever noticed in Tsafendas. More importantly, Tsafendas was questioned twice by Major Rossouw while he was in custody. When Major Rossouw appeared in front of the Commission of Enquiry, the following dialogue followed between him and Judge van Wyk:

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did you get the impression that what he said was the truth or did you think that sometimes he was sly?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: I thought that he told the truth. I never got the impression that he tried to evade any question. He answered all the questions spontaneously.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Was he totally prepared to answer everything?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes

By also looking at Tsafendas's two statements to the police, we see that he did not have the problem Dr. Zabow noted and all of his answers and his narration are perfectly clear without any sign of "thought disorder." If such a problem was noted by Major Rossouw or General van den Berg, presumably they would have raised it.

In addition, Tsafendas attended many interviews in his working life and appeared perfectly capable of answering questions or he would not have got the jobs. More importantly, he was examined and interviewed twice by two state doctors for his South African permanent residency permit and neither of them noticed any "thought-disorder," though they were not psychiatrists:

- On November 11, 1963, Tsafendas was medically examined by Dr. C. Been for his permanent residence application and was found "not to be mentally or physically defective in any way," and "generally in a good state of health."³⁰⁰⁴ Dr. Been would later examine Tsafendas again "for burns on his body whilst employed at Pooles." Again nothing about his mental state would be noted.³⁰⁰⁵
- On November 14, 1963, Tsafendas was examined again for the permit by Dr. A.C. McDonald, who also wrote "a favourable report" and subsequently a certificate for permanent residence was issued for him.³⁰⁰⁶

In addition to these two doctors, Tsafendas was examined by another ten physicians, none of them psychiatrists, over the course of three years, and no one noticed any signs of thought disorder or an inability of answering questions:

- On March 15, 1965, Tsafendas was examined by a South African Railways' medical officer whose name is indecipherable in his report. He was found to be perfectly healthy, without any issues and therefore capable of working at the company.³⁰⁰⁷
- On September 25, 1965, he was examined by Dr. G.C. Baker and nothing was reported about his mental state.³⁰⁰⁸
- On November 19, 1965, Tsafendas was medically examined to insure that he was able to work for City Tramways in Cape Town. He was found fit to work and duly hired.³⁰⁰⁹

³⁰⁰⁴ Demitrio Tsafendas medical certificate issued by Dr. Been for the Aliens Act, 1937. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

³⁰⁰⁵ Dr. Been statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁰⁰⁶ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demitrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

³⁰⁰⁷ South African Railways Confidential Medical Examination Certificate of Demitrio Tsafendas. K150, Vol. 7, File: S 83708, Tsafendas: D. NASA.

³⁰⁰⁸ Dr. G.C. Baker Statement re: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. No date. K150, Vol. 6, File: 4, NASA.

³⁰⁰⁹ Donald Neville Mackay statement to the COE, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

- On January 13, 1966, Tsafendas applied for work at the Marine Diamond Corporation and underwent a medical check-up that same day. The doctor who examined him found Tsafendas to be perfectly healthy and capable of working for the company.³⁰¹⁰
- On February 25, 1966, Tsafendas was examined at Groote Schuur Hospital by I. Eisenberg, a registrar on the Ear, Nose & Throat Department, who did not observe anything mentally wrong with him.³⁰¹¹
- On April 18, 19, 26 and May 3, 1966 Tsafendas was examined at Groote Schuur Hospital by Dr. Leon Goldman, a consultant ear, nose and throat surgeon. He did not observe anything mentally wrong with him and discharged him as “fit” on May 17, 1966.³⁰¹²
- From April 19, 1966 to May 15, 1966, Tsafendas was under the medical supervision of Dr. Leon Solomon at Groote Schuur Hospital, suffering from “a deviated nasal septum and epistaxis,” and underwent surgery on his nose. Dr. Solomon during this period did not report any mental disability and found Tsafendas to be fit to return to his work at Marine Diamond Corporation. Dr. Solomon examined him again on June 7, 1966, and again did not notice anything mentally wrong with him.³⁰¹³
- Dr. Ralph Kossew examined Tsafendas only half an hour after the assassination. His testimony is highly important due to its timing. Dr. Kossew found Tsafendas “not confused ... he answers questions guardedly but does not appear to be confused ... he didn't appear anxious ... He may have been a little bit nervous but not in any marked degree ... He was calm ...”³⁰¹⁴
- Dr. S. Michelson, a specialist physician, examined Tsafendas in the Neurology Department of Groote Schuur Hospital on 3rd June, 1966 and nothing was reported to be wrong with his mental state.³⁰¹⁵

³⁰¹⁰ Dimitrio Tsafendas's Marine Diamond Corporation Application for Employment, 13 January 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 3. NASA.

³⁰¹¹ I. Eisenberg Statement. RE: Dimitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. N.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁰¹² I. Eisenberg Statement. RE: Dimitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. N.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁰¹³ Dr. Leon Solomon's medical report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA; Medical certificate issued by Dr. Solomon for the Employment Insurance Act, 1946. 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA.

³⁰¹⁴ Dr. Ralph Kossew's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³⁰¹⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 64.

- Finally, Dr. T.A. Darby examined Tsafendas on the evening of the assassination but did not report anything to be wrong about his mental state.³⁰¹⁶

Like a normal worker, Tsafendas was interviewed for jobs and other applications and again no one noticed anything amiss, for example:

- Petrus Schuin, the head messenger at the Parliament, was also one of the three men who interviewed and appointed Tsafendas. He told the Commission of Enquiry that "there was nothing out of the ordinary about him. Tsafendas was the same as any other person that had worked there."³⁰¹⁷
- Sydney Wiehand, who was also one of the three messengers who had interviewed him at the Parliament, said about Tsafendas, "he was a quiet man. He wasn't the rough type, or anything like that. He was quiet - quietly spoken, well-mannered."³⁰¹⁸
- Cornelius Rudolph, the head court interpreter on the staff of the Magistrate of Durban appointed Tsafendas as a Portuguese and Greek interpreter. Rudolph used him "on several occasions" in a period of six months and "got to know him pretty well." He testified that "I spoke with him several times, he seemed to be a normal person and intelligent. He spoke English properly."³⁰¹⁹
- Horst Hartmann, Tsafendas's employer in Frankfurt, Germany, at the heavy engineering company Fries and Son, characterised Tsafendas "as extremely nice and friendly ... He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman. I thought he was more likely to apply for an executive job than as a welder. Well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous, a very pleasant man...he made a good impression and he spoke good German, so I took him on... we liked him ... always laughing, a good worker." Tsafendas "left on his own wish" although Hartmann "would have liked to keep him."³⁰²⁰ Tsafendas was given a reference by Hartmann, so his work there must have been satisfactory. Tsafendas got a reference from this job, so his work there must have been quite satisfactory.

³⁰¹⁶ Dr. T.A. Darby. Statement re: Demitrio Tsafendas. G.S.H. NO. 65/014-181, 6 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁰¹⁷ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

³⁰¹⁸ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

³⁰¹⁹ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁰²⁰ Daily Dispatch, 'He Made A Good Impression', 8 September 1966: 1; Daily Express, 'The Assassin', 8 September 1966: 2; Natal Witness, 'Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...', 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 'Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte', 8 September 1966.

- Ian Boswell, administrative assistant at the Department of Labour in Cape Town. He interviewed Tsafendas three times in 1966 and testified to the police that “he was at all times neatly dressed and never gave the impression of being destitute. Aside from being over-talkative, he showed no symptoms of abnormality, during his interviews with me.”³⁰²¹
- Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys, employment officer at the Department of Labour in Cape Town, interviewed Tsafendas twice. He testified to the police that Tsafendas was “neatly dressed” and he “never got the impression that there was mentally anything wrong with him or that he acted abnormally.”³⁰²²
- Gideon Cloete, also employed at the Department of Labour, interviewed Tsafendas twice. According to Cloete, Tsafendas “had a neat appearance and made a good impression.” He did not notice any “signs of abnormality” and “appeared totally normal” to him.³⁰²³
- Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen was Tsafendas’s tram instructor in December 1965 and January 1966. He testified to the police that “I did not at all get the impression that mentally anything was wrong with him. He is mentally normal.”³⁰²⁴
- August Karel Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria. He found him to be “very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet. I never noticed anything abnormal about him, except that he had a strange look when I looked him straight in the eyes. He never gave me the impression that he was suffering from any mental disease.”³⁰²⁵

Tsafendas was also interviewed, and hired after a week’s trial, by Limasollu Naci, the owner of the private language college that bore his name in Istanbul. He worked there for five-six months. Newly interviewed, Mrs. Adviyé Vedia Limasollu, Mr. Limasollu’s widow, who also worked at the college at the time, believes that it would have been impossible for her late husband to hire a man who talked in the way described by Dr. Zabow; equally ³⁰²¹ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

³⁰²² Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

³⁰²³ Gideon Jacobus Cloete testimony at Tsafendas’s summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, NASA.

³⁰²⁴ Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁰²⁵ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

impossible that no-one should notice for six months.³⁰²⁶ Tsafendas left the college of his own will and got a very good reference, which he used to get the job in the House of Assembly in Cape Town.

Furthermore, just a few weeks after Dr. Kossew diagnosed him as schizophrenic and just two months before the assassination, in July 1966, Tsafendas gave a seventy-five-minute interview to a journalist named N.D. Hartford of the Cape Argus. They had met at the beginning of the year when Tsafendas came to enquire whether there was any news of the freedom fighters of Mozambique. He described himself as an "anti-Portuguese rebel and an antagonist of the Portuguese dictatorship."³⁰²⁷ Hartford's impression was that Tsafendas was normal. He had no reason to believe that he was mentally defective. According to Hartford, Tsafendas spoke fluently without any noticeable gaps in his conversation.³⁰²⁸

None of the two hundred or so witnesses who were questioned by the police and by the Commission mentioned anything about Tsafendas's way of speech. They all said he spoke perfectly well, like a normal person. Indeed, several were impressed by him:

- Gillian Claire Lieberman, personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation, whose office Tsafendas often visited, "I had various discussions with him. I got quite interested in him as an individual. ... I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation."³⁰²⁹
- Ralph Lighton, who worked with Tsafendas for nine to ten weeks at the Marine Diamond Corporation, testified to the police that he "never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers."³⁰³⁰
- Patrick O'Ryan said "he was well-spoken and had good vocabulary."³⁰³¹
- Cornelius Rudolph, the head court interpreter on the staff of the Magistrate of Durban appointed Tsafendas as a Portuguese and Greek interpreter. Rudolph used him "on several occasions" in a period of six months and "got to know him pretty well." He testified that "I spoke with him several times, he seemed to be a normal person and ³⁰²⁶ Advye Vedia Limasollu in a personal interview, 8 January 2016.

³⁰²⁷ The Cape Argus, 'Brainwashed in Jail Held Man Told Argus.' 7 September 1966: 3; Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 75.

³⁰²⁸ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 75.

³⁰²⁹ Gillian Claire Lieberman statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁰³⁰ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁰³¹ Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

intelligent. He spoke English properly."³⁰³²

- J. Willemse was Tsafendas's landlord for one month in 1965. He characterised him as a "sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man."³⁰³³
- Neville Judson worked with Tsafendas for Mike's Outfitters for forty-two days in July and August 1966, frequently driving him to the tanker Eleni while it was docked in Cape Town. Of Tsafendas. He told the police that he "never in no way got the impression that he could be mentally deranged. He appeared to be a normal man with normal reasoning powers."³⁰³⁴ He later said that Tsafendas was "overly talkative."³⁰³⁵
- Violet Irene Manning was Tsafendas's landlady for almost two months in 1965. She told the Commission of Enquiry that Tsafendas "was well-dressed, well-spoken, and gave a good impression. From his general appearance he appeared to be a businessman."³⁰³⁶
- Captain P.A. Sanianos, the Greek Consul in Beira "was often in the company of the subject and others had several conversations with him." He considered Tsafendas to be "a normal and very intelligent person."³⁰³⁷
- August Karel Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria. He found him to be "very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet. I never noticed anything abnormal about him, except that he had a strange look when I looked him straight in the eyes. He never gave me the impression that he was suffering from any mental disease."³⁰³⁸

Furthermore, none of the witnesses the author interviewed (apart from the members of his defence team) noticed any signs of thought disorder or of an inability of answering questions and no-one ever got the impression that Tsafendas suffered from thought disorder. Every friend or acquaintance contacted was surprised that anyone could believe Tsafendas was unable to answer a question properly and spoke as Dr. Zabow described. Fotini

³⁰³² Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁰³³ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), 'Assassin - Man With A Chip On His Shoulder', 11 September 1966: 1, 8.

³⁰³⁴ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

³⁰³⁵ Lambley, The Psychology of Apartheid, p. 241.

³⁰³⁶ Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

³⁰³⁷ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

³⁰³⁸ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

Gavasiadis and Mary Eintracht used the same word, "ridiculous."³⁰³⁹ Of course this was not Dr Zabow's fault, as he simply repeated what Tsafendas had told him.

Mary Eintracht, his first cousin, who grew up with him in Egypt and Mozambique and was constantly with him for nine months in 1963-1964, "Dimitri always spoke very well. He sounded like a very educated man. There was nothing wrong with speech or his thoughts; they were both excellent. He could argue with you for hours and hours for politics. He was very good with words and his brain was bigger than most people's."³⁰⁴⁰

Fotini Gavasiadis, who was very close to him and practically lived with him for nine months in 1963-4. She told the author:

"[Tsafendas] could buy and sell you and he could do that at any time during a conversation, in the first ten minutes, then again after thirty minutes or an hour and then again after two hours. He wouldn't let you get up from the chair until he had made you agree with what he was saying, especially when talking politics ... He was very convincing and persuasive - he could turn black into white! If you disagreed with something with him, he would find a way to convince you that he is right and that you are wrong - even if you know that you are right and that he is wrong! If he made a mistake about something, he would turn things upside-down and at the end, he would even make you apologise to him...

In those nine months, I saw him and spoke to him every day and not even once did he appear to have an issue with his speech or his thoughts. He was always the same. We spent hours and hours talking and his speech was never incoherent, disjointed, blocked or whatever else, it was always perfect. He never gave me even the slightest indication that he might be having the issues you mentioned."³⁰⁴¹

Fathers Ioannis, Michalis and Minas who met him in prison and in the hospital in the 1970s, the 1980s and the 1990s and spent hundreds of hours with him are positive that Tsafendas did not suffer from thought disorder, that he was able to participate perfectly in a conversation and that he never talked in a disjointed manner.³⁰⁴² Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis said:

"[Tsafendas] could speak for hours, telling you things about his life, his thoughts and ³⁰³⁹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

³⁰⁴⁰ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

³⁰⁴¹ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

³⁰⁴² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017; Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

his ideology, but he could also participate in a dialogue. We spoke for hours about politics, religion and history and he was one of the most knowledgeable people I ever met in all these subjects. He was very argumentative and insistent, especially about politics. He never got lost in the conversation and he would never drop a subject until I had agreed with him. He would never give up a conversation if you disagreed. He never, not even once, seemed to have difficulty expressing himself or talked incoherently. Every single time, everything he said made sense and was perfectly stated. I don't believe for a moment that he could have talked in the way described by the psychiatrists unless he did it deliberately. He spoke and argued even better than most people. His speech and thought were perfectly fine."³⁰⁴³

Father Michalis Visvinis told the author regarding Dr. Zabow's comment,

"No, no, this is not true; he did not talk like this [with gaps in his speech]. He never spoke like this with me, his speech was always absolutely fine. I felt that he [Tsafendas] needed to speak, so several times I would just let him speak. He enjoyed speaking and he could speak for hours. I also often asked him questions about his life, and his answers were always logical and what one would expect. He never evaded any question and I never had to repeat myself to him for a second time, nor was his answer ever off the subject. He always spoke absolutely fine, like a normal man. [His speech] was perfectly articulate and logical, always very coherent. He never said anything to suggest he had a mental problem or that he had any difficulty speaking or thinking and expressing himself properly. This comment is also entirely false."³⁰⁴⁴

For reasons of space, the study will list only a few of the witnesses who were interviewed by the author, those who knew him best and longest. They all insist that Tsafendas never appeared to be suffering from thought disorder in front of them:

- Alexander Moumbaris;³⁰⁴⁵
- Katerina Pnema, Tsafendas's half-sister;³⁰⁴⁶
- Father Nikola Banovic who lived with him at the same house for four months in 1961 and then lived right next to his house for another three;³⁰⁴⁷
- His first cousin Mary Eintracht, who grew up with him and was constantly with him for ³⁰⁴³ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

³⁰⁴⁴ Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

³⁰⁴⁵ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017.

³⁰⁴⁶ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁰⁴⁷ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

nine months in 1964;³⁰⁴⁸

- Ira Kyriakakis, who also grew up with him and spent a lot of time together in 1964 and 1965;³⁰⁴⁹
- Andreas Babiolakis, who knew him since they were children, who lived with him for two months in 1964 and associated with him for about a year then;³⁰⁵⁰
- Thirteen crewmen from the Eleni who saw him every day for forty-two days;³⁰⁵¹
- Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott's boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest;³⁰⁵²
- Irene Michaletos, who knew him for more than a year (1964-1965) and whose house he often visited;³⁰⁵³
- Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousins and sons of Artemis Michaletos, Tsafendas's aunt and his father's sister who brought him up in Egypt. They first met Tsafendas in 1951 in Lourenço Marques and got to know him between 1963 and 1965 in Mozambique.³⁰⁵⁴
- Costas Poriassis who met him in 1965 in Beira;³⁰⁵⁵
- Alexandra Vaporidis, who knew him for about six months in Istanbul in 1961;³⁰⁵⁶
- Nick Papadakis, who knew Tsafendas for two-three months and lived with him for two months in Mozambique in 1964;³⁰⁵⁷
- Panagiotis Peroglou and Costas Chagios who were Tsafendas's friends in Cape Town for ³⁰⁴⁸ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

³⁰⁴⁹ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

³⁰⁵⁰ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

³⁰⁵¹ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Panteleimon Aspiotis in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 19 January 2016; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

³⁰⁵² Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

³⁰⁵³ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

³⁰⁵⁴ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

³⁰⁵⁵ Costas Poriassis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

³⁰⁵⁶ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

³⁰⁵⁷ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

more than a year.³⁰⁵⁸

As for the story Tsafendas told Dr. Zabow about the horses, the author interviewed all the witnesses who knew Tsafendas at the time, but no one remembers him ever mentioning such a story, though it could not be ruled out. The author read the above story and how Tsafendas spoke to several of the witnesses who knew Tsafendas for a very long time and spent a lot of time with him, and not one of them recognises Tsafendas talking this way. People like Father Minas Constandinou, Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis, Katerina Pnema, Andreas Babioulakis, Mary Eintracht, Father Nikola Banovic, Nikolas Kambouris, Michalis Vasilakis, Emanuil Mastromanolis, Elias Constantaras, Costas Chagios, Ira Kyriakakis, Irene Michaletos, John Michaletos, Antony Michaletos, Nick Papadakis, Father Michalis Visvinis and Alexandra Vaporidis were all adamant that Tsafendas could never have talked like that unless he did it deliberately.³⁰⁵⁹

³⁰⁵⁸ Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015; Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

³⁰⁵⁹ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; Irene and John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017; Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

COMMENTS CONCERNING HOW TSAFENDAS GOT TO CAPE TOWN

Tsafendas himself stated clearly to the police when he was interrogated how he came to Cape Town from Durban and said nothing like the things he told Dr. Zabow:

“... While I was still living at the Durban Men’s Home I was trying to obtain a lift to Cape Town. I managed to get a lift with a director of a cardboard factory in Cape Town in a Ford Sedan car. I got a lift with this man as far as Port Elizabeth. From Port Elizabeth I bought a train ticket Cape Town. I arrived in Cape Town during September or October, 1965. When I arrived in Cape Town I went to stay at 1 San Sauci Street, Belville with the family of a girl who was staying there and who had written to me previously to say that she wanted to marry me. Her name was Helen Daniels, a Coloured woman. She belonged to the same church as me, i.e. ‘The Christian Church.’ I did not, want to get married. This war her idea. I stayed there for almost two months while I was searching for a job. I found work at the Table Bay Power Station. When I found work, I paid the Daniels family for my hoard and lodging.”³⁰⁶⁰

Almost thirty years later, Tsafendas would repeat to Father Minas Constandinou the exactly same reasons and how he got to Cape Town from Durban, without mentioning any of the things he told Dr. Zabow.³⁰⁶¹

THE TAPEWORM

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you proceed?

DR. ZABOW: The other symptoms which I looked for were evidence of delusional thinking, and associated with this evidence of feelings of passivity or feelings of influence from an agency. Here is a play on words, because in Schneider’s writing he talks about influence from an external agency, and one could argue that the tapeworm is internal, but I think we could agree that in fact it is an external agent which has an animus of its own.

JUDGE BEYERS: It is obviously external to the motivation of the man himself?

DR. ZABOW: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: Other than the man himself would be external means?

³⁰⁶⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁰⁶¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

DR. ZABOW: Yes. Other than the man himself. So that here is another primary symptom of schizophrenia, one which Schneider would say, in the absence, once again, of organic brain disease, would make the condition of schizophrenia the diagnosis. It is not a question now of deciding what other conditions could do this. Once one has excluded organic brain disease - and he has had an E.E.G., he has had a Wasserman done and he has had a full neurological examination by a physician - then we are left with schizophrenia. I don't want to labour the point, because you have heard this so often, but I just want to stress that these were the things that I looked for and found. So that I now had thought-disorder, delusions, feelings of influence. One of the other important features of schizophrenia, although not diagnostic, is the presence of hallucinations in a setting of clear consciousness. There are many conditions in which there are hallucinations when the patient's level of consciousness is lowered, but once again there are very few conditions, in the absence of organic brain disease, in which there can be hallucinations, other than schizophrenia, in a setting of clear consciousness. The typical hallucination which one would expect a schizophrenic to complain of is an auditory one, and at no time has the accused complained to me of that. But there are other hallucinations, and in his case there has been the disordered perception of some activity going on inside him. To me he has described it as a feeling, at various times, of pain or discomfort, or, in more clear terms, as the tapeworm unwinding when it smells food and then coming up to smell the food, and then after it has fed the tapeworm settles down again. The tapeworm rests, and then Tsafendas may rest as well.

Now, it is not very important whether one were to call this a visceral hallucination or a tactile hallucination, or even, for that matter, an illusion. In other words, there may be some - now and then everybody has experienced the sensation of peristalsis, of a wind travelling in the abdomen, or a hunger-pain, or something, but these are normal physiological sensations, and when a man describes it in the terms in which Tsafendas has described it, then it becomes either a hallucination, or perhaps one could call it an illusion, but I would prefer perhaps even to call it a delusional percept: he is perceiving something in terms of his delusional system.

The other, I think, important aspect of his disorder which I found was his autism, that is his lack of contact with reality. The accused basically, although he does understand words when one speaks to him and, as has been shown repeatedly in this Court, he is an intelligent person, his grasp of reality is such that he is not basically in the same world as we are. His world is a world dominated by an agency which at times causes him discomfort, at times causes him to behave in embarrassing ways, and he has described to me how at times the tapeworm has caused him to utter embarrassing statements. It is a world in which his sensitivity and perception of other people is altered. He has described to me how he is more sensitive to the feelings of other people and understands how they feel. When he says that, he says it in a - not in the sense that one may talk of empathy, but rather that he has an altered perception. But more prominent that this was the fact that when at one stage we tried — or rather, I asked him in one interview - I can't remember exactly how it led up to it, but I can give you the - it was towards the end of our last interview with him. It seemed that he wasn't altogether really with us as to why we were there. Now we were three psychiatrists. He had already seen each one of us individually, and then he had seen myself and my two colleagues on two previous occasions together. Then he was seeing us again for the third time together, and from the way he spoke it seemed that he wasn't altogether aware of why we were there or what was going on. And if I, with your permission, my Lord, could tell you what this sequence was (witness refers to page 11 of the transcript of the recording he made): I asked him: "You said a while ago, I gathered, that you appreciate the fact that we are assisting you. In what way do you feel that we are assisting you?"

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is that the question you put to him?

DR. ZABOW: Yes. "Well, I gathered the fact that you were, I mean, giving me this attention, I mean, that's what I meant, concerning this matter." "Which matter?" "I beg your pardon?" "Which matter in particular?" "Well, er ... concerning this matter about the tapeworm ... about ... and all this ... er. "We have had a few talks with you together, what do you feel has been the object of our talks? What do you feel we are trying to do?" "I ... er ... I don't know what exactly. But I feel I feel the pain and I want to convince you people to get me the tapeworm out. That's what worried me. Even if it meant a surgical operation or something in the bowels. I'd be willing to undergo a surgical operation and the bowels to be opened in two or three places ... large and small intestines ... but these can be sewed up again and that would prove whether I ... that will be definite proof that I had a tapeworm, furthermore (pause) trying to find something to see what is there because the X-ray department are obsolete as far as tapeworms and other things are concerned", and then he went on to describe this machine which I think is similar to what Dr. van Zyl described in his evidence this morning.

Then I asked him: "What is Mr. Bloomberg's function in this whole situation?" (He was with us at the time.) "I don't know ... what ... er ... whether Mr. Bloomberg is an assistant attorney but ... er and he has (pause, and then he started to laugh) I am very indebted to him for what he has been trying to do for me ... I don't exactly know what ... er ... I want to thank him for especially getting those ... er ... documents from overseas and other things." And then he was asked - I say "he was asked", because I am not sure if it was I or one of my colleagues who asked him: "Where do we fit in with Mr, Bloomberg?" "Er" "Or do we fit in with him at all?" "Well, I think Mr. Bloomberg has been nominated by the ... by the Court ... and so has Mr. Cooper and another man, Mr. Burger. But I ..." "But where do we come in?" (that is, us doctors) "Well, I think you are private physicians. I don't think you are Government physicians. I think you are private physicians." "For what reason do you think we are here?" "Well, I ... er ... to assist me I think." "In what way?" "Well, to find out what has been the cause of what ... how this matter took place or something, I really don't know ... I ... I really don't know why you people ... I know you are investigating ... er ... I don't know whether it's just research work or whether it's just ... er ... I ... that I can't say ... I ... (then a very long pause)" "What sort of doctors do you think we are? You said physicians, what sort of a doctor?" "I know you are a psychiatrist" - he addressed that specifically to me - "I know you are a psychiatrist. And ... er ... I think Dr. MacGregor is ... I think you said you were a medical practitioner and er ... Dr. Cooper, I thought you were a lawyer. I ... well I just thought so because of your questions ..." "Why should you feel that Dr. Cooper is a lawyer asking these questions?" I said: "Yes, but we all, you included, address him as 'Doctor'." Then there was a very long pause: "Well, I call lawyers also doctors. I also call lawyers of advocates lawyers." "Isn't one of your lawyer's names actually Cooper?" I asked him. "Well, er ... yes."

Then I said: "Is he Mr. Cooper of Advocate Cooper?" "No, he is Advocate Cooper. He's er ... he was er ... something to do with." Then I put in "Dr. Cooper?", and then there was a long pause. And then he was asked: "What I am trying to find out is, is there anything because they have the same name that made you feel that Dr. Cooper is a lawyer." This was not merely punning, my Lord; this is a recognised variety of schizophrenic thought-disorder as well - I will come back to the autism, but may I just add this - in that schizophrenics often relate similarities to the predicate of a sentence instead of to the subject. For instance, they may say that a table and a dog are the same because they both have legs. Their logical classification breaks down, and they do not think logically, as ordinary people do. I am not labouring the point, because this only happened once in all the times that I saw him, but it may have been significant here, because both the advocate and one of the psychiatrist's names were Cooper, that he seemed to be confused as to the function of the psychiatrist, Dr.

Cooper. To come back to the autism which this had to do with: Here is a man who is on trial for murder, a man who has been seen by his defence attorneys, his advocates, by several doctors. We all asked him how he came to murder the late Prime Minister, what he felt about it. We have all taken pains to, I think, exclude malingering or simulation. And yet, after three joint interviews and several individual interviews, we arrive at the fact that we are interested doctors who are interested in helping him about his tapeworm and are listening to him talk about his tapeworm. He didn't seem able to connect our presence there with our functions at all.

JUDGE BEYERS: You say you have dealt with other people under similar circumstances, people referred to you, who are up for trial for murder?

DR. ZABOW: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: Do you feel that even the intellectually much more ordinary man we usually get on murder would by that time have known exactly what you were there for?

DR. ZABOW: In my experience, which includes both at Valkenberg and in private practice, I have at no time, in any racial group, or even having to use an interpreter, had any difficulty in directly engaging the accused in discussion about the crime, the circumstances of the crime, and I have never found any one of these people to be unaware of what my function was. In fact, if anything at all, they were only too pleased that I was there and could try and put something across to them.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was Tsafendas grateful? Did he express his gratitude for the attention that you and the other two doctors had given him?

DR. ZABOW: Yes. This was another aspect of it. He expressed his gratitude to the three of us for taking so much notice of his tapeworm, because, as has been said in Court before, no-one really paid attention to him. He complained about it, he was sent off to psychiatrists, they gave him shock treatment. No-one had ever patiently sat and listened to his tale of woe about the tapeworm, which, I must add, I haven't burdened you with the details of everything he said about it, but he gave me chapter and verse about visiting the chemist in Lourenço Marques anything on a pail of water. It was all there, as it has come up repeatedly.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did he call it, the tapeworm?

DR. ZABOW: At various times he called it - in my presence, apart from what has been said in other people's presence - a tapeworm, a demon and a devil. In fact, I asked him whether by demon he actually meant anything supernatural, and he explained to me that what he meant was that as in the Middle Ages, when someone was possessed by something which influenced his life, so he felt himself to be possessed by this demon.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you consider whether this was merely hypochondriacal, this talk about the demon and about the tapeworm?

DR. ZABOW: I considered it, but not for very long, because it was so patently not a neurotic hypochondriasis. It was a delusion of much greater proportion. It was part of a psychotic illness, and it just did not have the characteristics of what we normally understand by hypochondriasis.

COMMENTS ON DR. ZABOW'S TESTIMONY REGARDING THE TAPEWORM

The issue of the tapeworm has been examined in Dr. Cooper's and Patrick O'Ryan's testimonies, so it will not be examined again here. However, we will examine Tsafendas's statement to Dr. Zabow that the tapeworm often made him "behave in embarrassing ways."

The author read those parts of the above testimony where Dr. Zabow recited Tsafendas's words to him to twenty people who knew Tsafendas very well and to another ten who were with him for forty-two consecutive days up to three days before the assassination. Most of them laughed in derision and all said they could not believe that Tsafendas had spoken that way. They said they were sure that Tsafendas talked in such a fashion deliberately in hopes of being found insane. Every one said he never spoke like that and would never have done so in normal circumstances. The question of Tsafendas's talking in such a way has been discussed earlier and witnesses' detailed comments have been included in Chapter 4 as well as earlier in this Chapter, in Dr. Cooper's testimony. Therefore, the author will list here only the names of those who were read these extracts and made the comments set out above:

- Katerina Pnema, his half-sister.³⁰⁶²
- Father Minas Constandinou who knew him since 1963 and visited him in Pretoria Central Prison and later in the prison's hospital and in Sterkfontein Hospital.³⁰⁶³
- Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis who visited him in Pretoria Prison hospital and in ³⁰⁶² Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁰⁶³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

Sterkfontein Hospital.³⁰⁶⁴

- Father Michalis Visvinis who visited him very regularly for five years (1989-1994) in Pretoria Central Prison and in Zonderwater prison.³⁰⁶⁵
- Mary Eintracht, Tsafendas's first cousin, knew him since he was five years old and grew up with him in Mozambique. She spent a lot of time with him in Pretoria in 1964, when they occupied the same house for two or three months.³⁰⁶⁶
- Father Nikola Banovic, in 1961, lived in the same house as Tsafendas for four months and in a house next door for another two or three months.³⁰⁶⁷
- Fotini Gavasiadis who spent every day for nine months with him.³⁰⁶⁸
- Ira Kyriakakis, who grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques and remained a lifelong friend.³⁰⁶⁹
- Reuben O'Ryan lived with Tsafendas in the same house for five months and kept in touch with him for another year.³⁰⁷⁰
- Costas Poriazis who met him in 1965 in Beira.³⁰⁷¹
- Irene Michaletos was very close to Tsafendas between 1964 and 1965.³⁰⁷²
- Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousins and sons of Artemis Michaletos, Tsafendas's aunt and his father's sister who brought him up in Egypt. They first met Tsafendas in 1951 in Lourenço Marques and got to know him between 1963 and 1965 in Mozambique.³⁰⁷³
- Alexander Moumbaris who spent three months in a cell next to Tsafendas's in Pretoria Prison. They spoke every day for an hour when they exercised together in the prison yard.³⁰⁷⁴
- Andreas Babiolakis knew Tsafendas since they were children and had lived in the ³⁰⁶⁴ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

³⁰⁶⁵ Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

³⁰⁶⁶ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

³⁰⁶⁷ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

³⁰⁶⁸ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

³⁰⁶⁹ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

³⁰⁷⁰ Reuben O'Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

³⁰⁷¹ Costas Poriazis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

³⁰⁷² Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

³⁰⁷³ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

³⁰⁷⁴ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017.

same house as him in Beira for about two-three months.³⁰⁷⁵

- Nick Papadakis, who knew Tsafendas for two-three months and lived with him for two months in Mozambique in 1964;³⁰⁷⁶
- Costas Chagios, a Cape Town café owner, who knew Tsafendas for about two years.³⁰⁷⁷
- Alexandra Vaporidis knew Tsafendas for about six-seven months in Istanbul in 1961.³⁰⁷⁸
- Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott's boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest.³⁰⁷⁹
- Helen Grispos was another who grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques, and her mother was the best friend of Tsafendas's step-mother.³⁰⁸⁰
- Ten of the sailors of the Eleni saw Tsafendas every day for forty-two days and up to three days before the assassination.³⁰⁸¹

Dr. Zabow stated that Tsafendas appeared unable to understand why all the psychiatrists were there and that he thought that they were just trying to help him with the tapeworm. How did he come to this conclusion? Because Tsafendas told him so and Dr. Zabow, just like the other psychiatrists, took it at face value. However, Tsafendas was perfectly able to understand what was happening when he was questioned by the police, where twice he stated clearly why and how he killed Dr. Verwoerd. He was also perfectly able to understand and described what happened even thirty years later. Then suddenly, he is lost and unable to understand what is happening. It is obvious that Tsafendas is lying to Dr. Zabow.

Tsafendas told the police that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he was “disgusted with his racial policies,” because he was not the real representative of ALL the South African ³⁰⁷⁵ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

³⁰⁷⁶ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

³⁰⁷⁷ Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015.

³⁰⁷⁸ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

³⁰⁷⁹ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

³⁰⁸⁰ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

³⁰⁸¹ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Panteleimon Aspiotis in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 19 January 2016; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

people and because he hoped that a change of policy would take place after his death. He said exactly the same things to at least five witnesses after the assassination (Fathers Ioannis, Minas, Spiros, Alexander Moumbaris, Liza Key), while he was in the prison and later in the hospital.³⁰⁸² The only people that Tsafendas spoke to in an insane way about the assassination were the psychiatrists, his lawyers and the prison authorities.

If Tsafendas was insane at the time of the assassination and when he was examined by the psychiatrists, his situation should have deteriorated while he was in prison. He was denied medication and for at least thirteen years was brutally and systematically tortured. However, in prison and later in the hospital, Tsafendas did not speak the way he did to Dr. Zabow and the other psychiatrists to those he knew and trusted. On the contrary, he gave these people, the same reasons he gave to the police about the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd and even went further, discussing details which he had not revealed to the police. According to Professor of Forensic Psychiatry Tuviah Zabow, if Tsafendas was really a schizophrenic, it would not have been possible for him to recover without receiving medical treatment, especially because of torture and harsh treatment he revived in prison.³⁰⁸³

None of the about two hundred witnesses who were interviewed by the police and the Commission and those who were interviewed by the author said that Tsafendas behaved in “embarrassing ways.” All of them, apart from the members of his defence team, stated that he was perfectly fine and behaved normally. We will not list all the witnesses who testified to that, plus the cases of Barbeau, Martincich and Johnston, as they have been covered in detail in Dr. Cooper’s testimony. Many that the author spoke to had spent a lot of time with Tsafendas and knew him since he was a child, such as his half-sister Katerina Pnefma, his cousin Mary Eintracht, Andreas Babiolakis, Ira Kyriakakis and Helen Grispos. All grew up with Tsafendas and none remembers Tsafendas doing anything embarrassing or abnormal. They insist that he always behaved like a normal man.³⁰⁸⁴

His half-sister Pnefma, considered some of his behaviour to be an embarrassment, but this was not necessarily how it would be perceived by people who were perhaps less conventional or conservative. For example, her half-brother tried to organize a strike by ³⁰⁸² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Liza Key in a personal interview, 6 April 2015; Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

³⁰⁸³ Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016.

³⁰⁸⁴ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

workers at the dock where he was employed. What was embarrassing was that Katerina and her husband had asked the owner to give Tsafendas a job there. She considered embarrassing the fact that when he was refused entry to Lourenço Marques, Tsafendas pretended to be suffering from appendicitis, was taken ashore to a hospital and then fled. She was embarrassed that Tsafendas denounced as fascists some guests at her sister's wedding in 1941 although they were indeed Nazi supporters. That Tsafendas often argued loudly about politics and was a self-proclaimed Communist and radical who opposed apartheid and the Portuguese colonialists was embarrassing for her. As were his frequent denunciations of Greeks and whites who supported apartheid, and whites in Rhodesia and the Portuguese in Mozambique he called "foreigners who had stolen the land." Those were the embarrassing incidents that Pnema could recall. "Apart from this, his behaviour was perfectly normal," she said. "He was a normal and intelligent man. You could tell he was intelligent after a five-minute conversation with him. He was the cleverest of us all. He got the brain from my dad."³⁰⁸⁵

People like Fotini Gavasiadis, Father Nikola Banovic, Alexandra Vaporidis, Andreas Babiolakis, Nick Papadakis, Costas Chagios, Reuben O'Ryan, Joyce Dick, Stanley O'Ryan, Pamela Abrahams, Elias Constantaras, Irene, Costas and Antony Michaletos, and Panagiotis Peroglou, all of whom knew Tsafendas for more than a year, do not recall any embarrassing behaviour by Tsafendas; on the contrary, all say his behaviour was always perfectly normal. The other witnesses interviewed by the author, although they did not spend as much time with Tsafendas, also cannot recall any embarrassing incident caused by him and they all maintained that Tsafendas was well-behaved and never did anything in the slightest embarrassing.

³⁰⁸⁵ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

Finally, Dr. Zabow testified that at one point, while Tsafendas was talking about David Bloomberg's role, Tsafendas started laughing. Tsafendas later said that he often wanted to laugh, over what he heard about himself in court and over the things he told the doctors.³⁰⁸⁶ He said he had to try very hard to be calm while he was talking "like this," i.e. insanely, and not to laugh. Presumably on this occasion, he failed to control his amusement.

COMMENTS CONCERNING THE WAY TSAFENDAS SPOKE TO DR. ZABOW

The author read the transcript of Tsafendas's interview by Dr. Zabow, as read in the court, to forty-six people who knew Tsafendas. None of them recognised Tsafendas as talking in such a fashion; they said if he did, or pretended to do so, then he did it for a purpose. All declared that Tsafendas talked perfectly clearly and everything he said always made sense. The comments of the witnesses this time were less detailed since they had already listened to what Tsafendas told Dr. Cooper and Dr. Sakinofsky. Therefore, to avoid repetition, the author will only state the names of thirteen witnesses who knew Tsafendas extremely well. All strongly denied that Tsafendas could have said all this. They were: Fotini Gavasiadis, Katerina Pnema, Mary Eintracht, Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis, Costas Chagios, Andreas Babioulakis, Alexandra Vaporidis, Father Michalis Visvinis, Antony, Irene and John Michaletos, Nick Papadakis, Reuben O'Ryan and Elias Constantaras.

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE TAPEWORM DELUSION

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is the significance of a delusion?

DR. ZABOW: The significance of a delusion is that it is a symptom. It is not an illness in itself. It is a symptom of a disordered state of mind, a breakdown in functionings of the mind, which in all of us correlates our input of information, our memory, our processes of logical thinking; co-ordinate this with our emotional life,. When a man has a delusion of this nature, when he experiences feelings of passivity to do with this delusion, one cannot say that he is functioning in the ordinary way. He is not able to use logical thought processes, because his whole associational processes in his mind have broken down. I think this is particularly important, that the delusion is a symptom of mental illness. It is not in itself a disease. It is a symptom of a severe mental illness. If I may draw once again a physical analogy, it may help.

³⁰⁸⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

One can be breathless for a number of reasons. One can be breathless because of unaccustomed exertion, or one can be breathless because of severe heart disease. Breathlessness in itself is a symptom. The severe heart disease is a serious condition. A delusion of this variety - chronic, over 20 years - sorry: the delusion itself I know of for not 20 years. I am sorry. Mental disorder for 20 years. I think the delusion was first mentioned out 1959, that I can remember for the moment, but that is already six years. Feeling of passivity. These are more than just isolated things. This is a general mental disease, in which all the functions of the mind become affected, so that one cannot expect a man with this sort of illness to exercise judgment, to be able to weigh up issues, to attach the correct amount of importance to particular things which are happening to him and around him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: If the evidence is that he had this delusion in 1955, then it is a long-standing delusion?

DR. ZABOW: Yes. It is a long-standing delusion. It is in many ways just more evidence of what I have just said.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In relation to the charge against the accused, what role did this delusion play?

DR. ZABOW: From my interviews I tried to ascertain just how the delusion fitted in to the murder. It was extremely difficult to get a clear-cut account, in the sense that I don't think that there is a clear-cut account; I don't think that this man is able for himself to know what precisely happened. One went so far as to say: "Look, did the tapeworm tell you to commit the crime?" He says no. And he says that if he was not infested with a tapeworm he would not have committed the crime. Then, in another sequence, he talked about the tapeworm being right in the middle of it.

JUDGE BEYERS: That is a phrase Dr. Cooper used, I remember?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, this was at a joint interview. "Right in the middle of it." So that rather than say that the delusion caused the crime, the way that I understand schizophrenia I would say that the delusion is part of the mental illness. The crime is a result, in my opinion, of the mental illness. Rather than to say that the delusion caused the crime.

JUDGE BEYERS: I follow. You could get delusions which are far more closely associated with murder than this delusion?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, in the classical paranoid ...

JUDGE BEYERS: It could be linked to the object that you are killing?

DR. ZABOW: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: You didn't get this sort of direct, that the late Prime Minister and this animal or creature he describes were at one stage delusionally the same?

DR. ZABOW: No. In fact, we actually put it the other way and asked him if he felt that the late Prime Minister was responsible for his infestation, JUDGE BEYERS: But you could get a delusion which is strong enough to that a man is killing another human being and thinks it is a dog?

DR. ZABOW: Yes. Even there, there is usually other evidence of mental disorder, but certainly the paranoid delusion may appear to be more directly related to the crime than in this instance.

JUDGE BEYERS: I follow you entirely.

COMMENTS ON THE TAPEWORM'S SIGNIFICANCE ACCORDING TO DR. ZABOW

According to Dr. Zabow, Tsafendas was unable to exercise judgment and assess what was happening to him and around him. However, Tsafendas's life proves the exact opposite:

- Tsafendas seemed to be perfectly aware in 1947/1948 of the creation of Israel and donated money and even sold his clothes to a fundraiser to support the event.³⁰⁸⁷
- In Istanbul during the second half of 1961, he volunteered to teach English to poor Greek and Turkish children. At the same time, he managed to get a full-time job as a teacher of English at the best private language college in Istanbul. He stayed for nearly six months before resigning to move on.³⁰⁸⁸
- Tsafendas was penniless when he arrived in Istanbul in June 1961. He went to a hospital and donated his blood to earn some money in order to survive.³⁰⁸⁹
- In 1964 in Mozambique, he became aware of that a colleague was in difficulty and ³⁰⁸⁷ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 April 2015.

³⁰⁸⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; worked voluntarily with him to build an extra room on his house so the man's daughter could get married.³⁰⁹⁰

³⁰⁸⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

- In the 1930s and in 1964, also in Mozambique, Tsafendas taught English and History to poor children believing that education was the most important tool in someone's life.³⁰⁹¹
- In 1964 in Durban, he was very well aware of the difficulties faced by some poor White people and frequently gave them money.³⁰⁹²
- In 1965, for the five months he lived with Patrick O'Ryan, he frequently bought food for everyone, knowing the family was poor. When O'Ryan complained that this embarrassed him because he was the head of the house, Tsafendas told the children that it was their father who was buying the food.³⁰⁹³
- He also seemed to be perfectly aware of what he needed to say when applying for employment or for the permanent residency permit where he simply lied about his past, saying he had never been hospitalised, arrested or imprisoned. In November 1963, he managed to hide his past from three officials of the Ministry of the Interior who interviewed him for his permanent residency application.³⁰⁹⁴
- Tsafendas seemed to be perfectly aware of the politics in Mozambique and the situation with the Portuguese. From Britain he smuggled anti-colonialist and anti-apartheid books in order to conduct propaganda for the independence of Mozambique. Although he was arrested twice accused of conducting subversive propaganda, he avoided a lengthy prison term by putting on one of his mad acts, in this case pretending to be Saint Peter. Before that, he had the courage to tell his Portuguese interrogators that he wanted to see "a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the mother nation."³⁰⁹⁵

³⁰⁹⁰ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

³⁰⁹¹ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 April 2015; Costas Poriazis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

³⁰⁹² Rand Daily Mail, 'Tsafendas: In the Eyes of A Friend', 14 September 1966.

³⁰⁹³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Reuben O' Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

³⁰⁹⁴ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie.NASA.

³⁰⁹⁵ PIDE Record of questions, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

- Tsafendas also appeared perfectly aware of the situation in South Africa and the importance of Dr. Verwoerd, whom he believed was the “brains behind apartheid,” which is why he decided to kill him, believing that “a change of policy would take place” or at least it would be a stepping stone towards the fall of apartheid.³⁰⁹⁶

The author could include other incidents that disprove Dr. Zabow’s testimony, but they are clearly set out in Tsafendas’s biography. Finally, Tsafendas again denied that the tapeworm told him to kill Dr. Verwoerd, although he says that the tapeworm was in the middle of it. This matter has been examined in detail in Dr. Cooper’s testimony. However, we will state again that what Tsafendas told the police concerning his motive and his beliefs about Dr. Verwoerd are entirely compatible with what he told several witnesses before and after the assassination. On the other hand, what he told Dr. Zabow is the opposite of what he told the witnesses and compatible only with what he told his psychiatrists and lawyers.

TSAFENDAS: “NOT WRONG FOR ME TO KILL DR. VERWOERD”

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Does he feel that it would have been wrong for anybody else, for instance, to have killed the Prime Minister, or would it have been right for somebody else to have killed the Prime Minister?

DR. ZABOW: Yes. In my first interview, bearing in mind the purpose of the interview, I asked him questions which might apply to McNachten rules, and I asked him whether he knew that killing another person was wrong, and he qualified it and said yes, in peace time it is wrong. Then I said “it wasn’t it wrong of you to kill the late Prime Minister?”, and then he said: “No, for me it wasn’t wrong. For anyone else it would have been wrong. For me it wasn’t wrong.” I must put this in its context. This was all part of the conversation, trying to sort out whether there was a political motive, whether this man was able to form - whether he was in fact psychotic - and it was in the process of asking him these questions. This transcript came out very badly, and I am going to refer to my own written notes.

JUDGE BEYERS: You are looking for something to show why it would have been wrong for somebody else to do it but not him?

DR. ZABOW: Yes. I just want to put that in the actual context. (Witness looks at his notes.)

³⁰⁹⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: We might come back to it at a later stage.

JUDGE BEYERS: It is rather an important one, Mr. Cooper. You don't remember his answers?

DR. ZABOW: I am just trying to put it in the context. As I said, he said “For me it wasn't wrong”, but I just want to put it into the context. It was the natural outcome of all these things put together”, his tapeworm, his mental illnesses in the hospital where one of the nurses had told him that he had schizophrenia. We had been talking about his previous psychiatric history. “It was the natural outcome of all these things put together. This was not something that was done in a day. It took many years for all the build-up to get to the stage where I got to murder Dr. Verwoerd. It was not wrong in my eyes, what I was doing. When I did it I wasn't one of the public. I was my individual self.” And then he went still, paused, and then I asked him: “Now, do you know that you can hang for murdering someone?”, and he said: “I can't pronounce myself on how I feel” - but, my Lord, not as clearly as I have said it to you. This was a series of “ers” and disjointed thoughts, but one had the feeling all the time that he could not give - and repeatedly one tried at subsequent interviews and during that interview to get him to give a clear account of what happened, why it happened and how it happened, and t no time could he follow this logical pattern. It always tied up with not being well, being physically ill, mentally ill, the influence of the tapeworm, always tired, not being able to work, and so on. This was the context of the interview.

COMMENTS CONCERNING TSAFENDAS'S CLAIM THAT IT WAS “NOT WRONG” FOR HIM TO KILL DR. VERWOERD

With regard to the assassination, Tsafendas was unable to give Dr. Zabow a clear account of what happened, why it happened or how it happened. However, he gave a perfectly clear account of his motivation and how he planned and killed Dr. Verwoerd in both of his statements to the police. In nether statement did he say anything that bore the slightest resemblance to what he told Dr. Zabow. In addition, what Tsafendas told the police is exactly what he told several witnesses after the assassination.³⁰⁹⁷ Nothing that he told Dr. Zabow bore even the slightest similarity to what he told the police or the other witnesses later.

³⁰⁹⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

As we have seen, Tsafendas also gave the police and later witnesses clear political reasons for killing Dr. Verwoerd. He even characterised Dr. Verwoerd's possible assassination as justifiable even before it happened, on the basis that it was morally acceptable to slay a tyrant and a dictator, an action that is known as "tyrannicide." He repeated the same argument to several witnesses after the assassination. The issue of Tsafendas's motive and how he killed Dr. Verwoerd have been extensively discussed with the testimonies of Dr. Cooper and Dr. Sakinofsky. The fact that Tsafendas gave a completely different account of the assassination is not questioned in court by the Attorney-General.

DISCUSSING TSAFENDAS'S MEDICAL HISTORY WITH HIM

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Are there any other factors which you feel - before we come to our assessment - are important and which weighed with you - that is, just from your interviews with the accused?

DR. ZABOW: From my interviews?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: From the interviews, yes.

DR. ZABOW: I think I have covered behaviour, thought disorder, delusions, feelings of passivity, autism. His own account of his life and his own account of his psychiatric and medical history obviously helped me to come to an assessment. Here was a man who told me how he had been in various hospitals in various parts of the world. He described having had shock treatment. He described having escaped from, I think, at least one hospital. He described having been told at one stage that he had schizophrenia. And, once again to draw an analogy between physical and psychiatric medicine, one is most concerned with the history of the patient and his illness in order to assess the degree of illness and the prognosis of the illness.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: One factor which you can help the Court on is the accused's emotional level?

DR. ZABOW: The accused's emotional level I found to be rather blunt at most points. He displayed very little - in fact, I must say to me he displayed no anxiety when I spoke to him. He did not seem overly concerned with his predicament, but only with himself and his difficult sensations and his discomfort, but not with his situation.

JUDGE BEYERS: Mr. Cooper, I have had quite a lot of this now, and I will take some more if you wish to feed it to me. I am interested in the work that has been done, but don't you think that you are overburdening the Court with details?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: My Lord, my difficulty is JUDGE BEYERS: I know your difficulty, and you must appreciate mine and I cannot at this stage tell you that you are doing so. I just want you to consider whether you aren't perhaps giving us a bit of indigestion.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: My difficulty is that it has not been put crisply to any of my experts what the State says.

JUDGE BEYERS: I agree with you. I have been looking for that myself. I agree with you. It hasn't been put.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Therefore I can't take anything for granted.

JUDGE BEYERS: No, of course not. I can't tell you to take anything for granted, but I want you to be intelligent too.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: They say a nod is as good as a wink.

JUDGE BEYERS: I want a conclusion to this, and I think the details we have had quite long.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: May I just put the position? I will try to curtail my examination now, but naturally, should something arise in the State's.

JUDGE BEYERS: If you ask me to call Dr. Zabow back, I undertake to say "Yes." Just shortly, did you find thought blocking?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, there were times when I found thought blocking, when he would, in fact, be talking about one thing, there would be a pause and he could not continue talking about it at all. I actually asked him at the first interview whether he had any of the other disturbances of thought in the past. I asked him had he ever felt himself flooded with thoughts, or his thoughts suddenly cutting out, and he told me that at times this had happened. Once again, an important aspect of schizophrenic thought disorder.

COMMENTS ON DR. ZABOW DISCUSSING TSAFENDAS'S MEDICAL HISTORY WITH HIM

Dr. Zabow states here that he came to the conclusion that Tsafendas was schizophrenic also by taking into account Tsafendas's medical history as it was described to him by the accused himself; he accepted without question an alleged schizophrenic's own account of his medical history. It seems though that Tsafendas told Dr. Zabow only parts of his medical history, omitting his hospitalization in Beira, where he was also diagnosed as schizophrenic after he claimed to be Saint Peter, and that he was caught out faking mental illness in the USA.

The author is not in position to know for certain if Tsafendas mentioned these incidents, but given that Dr. Zabow did not refer to it, we could assume that Tsafendas omitted them. Why would Tsafendas do that? Presumably because as an experienced "schizophrenic," he was aware that it would raise suspicion if it was found out that just about two years before the assassination, Tsafendas also believed himself to be Saint Peter. Presumably, Tsafendas also failed to mention that he was medically examined at least ten times the past two and half years and none of the doctors who checked him spotted any of the alleged symptoms as described in the court.

It is surprising that Dr. Zabow took for granted Tsafendas's own account of his medical history and did not seek to double-check it. Professor Kirk Heilbrun disagrees with the method used by Dr. Zabow to diagnose Tsafendas and the fact that he relied on what his patient told him. He told the author that if he was in his position he "would have sought information from the second and third domains [collateral interviews with people who knew Tsafendas and his medical and criminal record] rather than additional information from the first domain." He added he did not believe it possible to make an accurate diagnosis about a patient, especially in a forensic case, after observing him for only three one-and-a-half-hour sessions.³⁰⁹⁸

Dr. Zabow mentions again that Tsafendas suffered from thought disorder and had admitted to him that this was something that had happened in the past, too. However, none of the witnesses who were interviewed by the author and who knew Tsafendas (apart from his defence team) noticed anything like that about him and that it never happened while they were present. Since we have discussed the issue before, for more about it see Dr. Cooper's and Dr. Sakinofsky's testimonies. Tsafendas himself never mentioned anything resembling thought disorder to people who knew him nor to any of the nine doctors who examined him while he was in South Africa for jobs or permanent residency applications. As for the issue of Tsafendas not being concerned about his fate, this is something that we have discussed extensively in the testimonies of Dr. Cooper and Mr. van Zyl.

³⁰⁹⁸ Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017.

DR. ZABOW'S CONCLUSIONS REGARDING TSAFENDAS

JUDGE BEYERS: As a result of these investigations you carried out, are you quite satisfied that the accused is a schizophrenic?

DR. ZABOW: I am absolutely satisfied that the accused is a schizophrenic.

JUDGE BEYERS: The degree? Would you say he was a certifiable schizophrenic?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, I would. Would you like me to say why?

JUDGE BEYERS: Yes, I would?

DR. ZABOW: First of all, I diagnosed.....

JUDGE BEYERS: I will put my question differently. Are you satisfied, as a result of your investigations, that he is mentally disordered for the purposes of Section 2 of the Mental Disorders Act?

DR. ZABOW: Yes. I am satisfied that he suffers from a mental disorder, that he is unable to care for himself, that he needs control and treatment. That he is a danger to himself, I am not sure of, but to others. But I would put him mentally disordered in terms of the Act, that he falls into the first sub-group of mental disorder.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And where should he be kept?

DR. ZABOW: He should be kept in a suitable institution where he could be adequately controlled and even at this late stage of his illness I feel that he should get treatment for whatever worth that may be.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is the prognosis?

DR. ZABOW: Unfortunately, for recovery, the prognosis is poor. For a reasonable degree of control under supervision, there may be, but for recovery after a 20-year history of schizophrenia, I would be most surprised - having taken into account his mental state as I have seen it and having heard facts presented in this Court - to hear that he would ever recover completely. I would always regard him as being a chronic psychotic, a chronic schizophrenic.

JUDGE BEYERS: You use the word 'chronic' - it has been used several times. What exactly does chronic mean in that context?

DR. ZABOW: In that context I only mean a schizophrenic who has had the illness for a long time and that the illness has been present during the time that he has had it. There has been no total remission.

JUDGE BEYERS: There must be many people walking around who have in some degree certain elements of schizophrenic conditions - I am not sure we haven't all got bits and pieces of it - but there must be lots of people that have them?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, not all schizophrenics are in mental hospitals, if that is what you mean.

JUDGE BEYERS: Yes. Would you suggest that all schizophrenics should be in mental hospitals?

DR. ZABOW: No, I would not suggest that all schizophrenics should be in mental hospitals.

JUDGE BEYERS: This becomes a matter of degree?

DR. ZABOW: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: In this man's case is the degree such that you think he should be?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, I think - and I would like to stress this - that presuming he presented at an out-patients' or clinic which I were doing, and he had not been accused of murder (because I don't want the Court to feel that I am basing this on the murder) I would take the history with the mental examination - I don't say that I would straightaway certify him and put him into a mental hospital, but I would certainly institute treatment. I would want to know his social background, I would want to know whether he is able to live adequately on his own, earn a living and hold down a job adequately; in other words, whether he can look after himself, or not. I might, if I felt it indicated, ask a social worker or the Community Nurse to call at the places where he lived and find out what sort of person he is, how he relates to the people around him. This is where I would, if possible - and I don't guarantee that I would be right - try and assess whether he is, in fact, a danger to himself or to the community. Then, eventually, I would have to come to a decision after a period of investigation and possibly out-patient treatment, as to whether to hospitalize him, or not. So that it would be an overall investigation. On the evidence presented to this Court - and I sat in the Court since the proceedings started - I think that I have found out very much what the social worker and the Community Nurse would have found out, and that was that he can't hold down a job, that he is a drifter and that he certainly needs, at least, treatment and possibly control.

ASSESSOR: The evidence led from Mr. Daniels and his wife and the witnesses that followed, the people with whom he lived, rather confirms your diagnosis?

DR. ZABOW: Yes. I was particularly struck by the description of this man; the way he walked in with this parcel of meat, with the blood dripping down him, and was only pre-occupied in feeding the worm. Everything else went by the board. Now, one may say that a navy-type, a labourer, an uncouth person might behave in such a way. But then we must take the overall picture into account; remember, this is a man of intelligence; this is not an unintelligent, feeble-minded person; so that it would add weight to the fact that he is not able to live, what we would call I suppose, a normal sort of life.

JUDGE BEYERS: I think we are approaching this wrongly. In answering the question whether you would certify him, I was concerned with this man's mental condition today. I am not concerned with his mental condition at the time when he committed the murder. I am concerned with his mental condition today. So in telling me whether today this man is a person who falls within the definition of the Mental Disorders Act, you must not disregard the murder, you must take it into account. The murder is probably one of the most important factors that you should take into account in expressing an opinion?

DR. ZABOW: With respect, I misunderstood the emphasis of your question. Certainly, up till the last time that I interviewed the accused - that was on the 14th of the month - I felt him at that time to be mentally disordered in terms of the Mental Disorders Act, and certifiable. I am sorry, I used the word 'murder.' It is the killing. To be precise, on the 11th October, when I last examined this man psychiatrically I regarded him as being mentally disordered in terms of the Mental Disorders Act, and I would have no hesitation in signing a Mental S.2 to support that opinion.

JUDGE BEYERS: You'd sign it today?

DR. ZABOW: Up to yesterday. In terms of the Act I must have examined him within seven days.

JUDGE BEYERS: If I asked you yesterday or the day before?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, I would

JUDGE BEYERS: You would have no hesitation?

DR. ZABOW: In completing a Mental S.2 as a specialist psychiatrist.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You have seen this letter, Exhibit E?

DR. ZABOW: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I don't want to deal with it at all but what is your comment on that letter?

DR. ZABOW: My comment on this letter is that it shows schizophrenic thought disorder and is the sort of letter which could well be used in a text book of psychiatry to illustrate schizophrenic thinking.

COMMENTS ON DR. ZABOW'S CONCLUSIONS REGARDING TSAFENDAS

Dr. Zabow's conclusions about Tsafendas show more clearly than anywhere else how wrong he was in his diagnosis of Tsafendas.

TSAFENDAS BEING UNABLE TO CARE FOR HIMSELF AND NEEDING CONTROL AND TREATMENT

Several of the diagnoses of Tsafendas have been off the mark in this summary trial, such as Dr. Cooper's that Tsafendas is unable to function on a reasonable level, and this is equal to it. If Tsafendas was unable to care for himself, how did he manage to survive the forty-eight previous years of his life? A man who, although penniless most of the time, managed to travel to sixteen countries where he knew no-one yet never spent an evening without a bed. A stranger in all these countries, he always managed to find a job and sometimes he even thrived, as he did in Istanbul, where he worked for almost half a year at the Limasollu Naci College.

Tsafendas always seemed to find a way of achieving his goals. During the Greek Civil War, he managed to join the Democratic Army of Greece, the military wing of the Greek Communist Party, and he survived. Arrested five times by the Portuguese police because of his political ideas and political activities, he managed to secure his release each time. Banned from entering Mozambique due to his anti-colonialist beliefs and activities, he convinced the Portuguese that he was harmlessly mad so they allowed him to return. Tsafendas attended several job interviews and no one noticed anything wrong with him, and that included three officials at the Ministry of the Interior who interviewed him three times over his application for permanent residency in South Africa. PIDE would not have held a detailed 130-pages file on Tsafendas and withheld from South Africa information on his political activities if he was a man who was not able to look after himself.

The following are some incidents and statements which are indicative of Tsafendas's character and ability to care for himself:

- Peter Pappas, owner of a Greek café in Durban, said when Tsafendas had some money he would give “a few cents to the white down-and-outs of the city.” Pappas said, “When his luck was out, I sometimes gave him a free meal, but when he started work he paid me.”³⁰⁹⁹ These are hardly the things that someone who is unable to look after himself would do.
- Jacobus Borman was Tsafendas's flatmate. He told the police “on one occasion I had no money and then Tsafendas gave me five cents. I later wanted to return the money to him, but he would not take it.”³¹⁰⁰
- On January 25, 1965, Tsafendas was released after three months' imprisonment in Beira for subversive propaganda. Penniless as without a roof over his head, Tsafendas asked if he could sleep at the Beira fire department premises and the fire-fighters agreed. He slept there for ten nights, making sure that “he arrived at mealtimes, when he was invited to share in the food.”³¹⁰¹
- Tsafendas was penniless when he arrived in Istanbul in June 1961. He went to a hospital and donated his blood to earn money for food and bed.³¹⁰²
- When he was arrested in Beira by the Portuguese police with a suitcase full of anti-fascist and anti-colonialist books, but also some Bibles, he was accused of pretending to be a Christian missionary spreading the word about religion, while in reality preaching “under the guise of religion in favour of Mozambique's independence.”³¹⁰³ Questioned in custody, Tsafendas came up with the idea of pretending to be Saint Peter, which fitted perfectly with his story of Christian missionary preaching. The Portuguese thought he was mad and released him.³¹⁰⁴

³⁰⁹⁹ Rand Daily Mail, ‘Tsafendas: In the Eyes of A Friend’, 14 September 1966.

³¹⁰⁰ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³¹⁰¹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

³¹⁰² Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³¹⁰³ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³¹⁰⁴ Alberto Henriques de Matos Rodrigues conclusion to the Subdirector, 23 January 1965. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Conclusion, signed by António Fernandes Vaz, 22 January 1965. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

- When he was ordered to fulfil his duty of compulsory military service in the Portuguese army, he pretended to be mad and got away with it.³¹⁰⁵
- In 1964 in Beira, John Emmanuel Marvis lent him twenty escudos, which Tsafendas paid back a few days later.³¹⁰⁶
- In 1963, he managed to convince the Portuguese that he was a “reformed man,” no longer a Communist or a supporter of the independence of Mozambique, but just a little bit mad and harmless, so they granted him amnesty and allowed him to return to Mozambique after twelve years of exile.³¹⁰⁷

The author asked forty-six relatives and friends who knew Tsafendas well if they ever got the impression he was not able to care for himself. Not a single one agreed. Again, we list opinions by those who knew him very well:

- Fotini Gavasiadis, who was with Tsafendas every day for nine months in 1963-1964, was shocked and asked, “Are you serious? Are you sure the doctor said this about Dimitri? He must have examined a different man.”³¹⁰⁸
- Mary Eintracht, his cousin who grew up with him in Egypt and Mozambique, characterised the comment as “ludicrous” and “for laughs.”³¹⁰⁹
- Tsafendas lived with the O’Ryans for five months. No one in the family saw him as someone unable to care for himself or in need for treatment. On the contrary, they thought of him as a “resourceful and capable” man. Because Patrick O’Ryan refused to take any rent from him, Tsafendas would bring food to the house almost every day; he often bought sweets and toys for the children,³¹¹⁰ and he also gave money to Allan O’Ryan for his bus fare to school when his mother was unable to do so.³¹¹¹ Reuben O’Ryan said of Tsafendas: “We all loved him ... he was an adorable man ... he was the answer to our ³¹⁰⁵ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

³¹⁰⁶ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

³¹⁰⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

³¹⁰⁸ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 18 March 2016.

³¹⁰⁹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 18 March 2016.

³¹¹⁰ Allan O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019; Stanley O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 9 April 2015; Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

³¹¹¹ Allan O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019.

prayers. We were poor and he brought food to our house.”³¹¹²

I could go on listing evidence to prove how wrong Dr. Zabow’s testimony was, but I feel that this particular statement is best disproven by reading Tsafendas’s biography in Chapter 2, everything else that has been discussed in this chapter and more importantly all the statements of the people who knew Tsafendas. For more about Tsafendas’s ability to care for himself see his biography (Chapter 2).

TSAFENDAS BEING UNABLE TO LIVE ADEQUATELY ON HIS OWN

Interestingly, Dr. Zabow stated that he would like to have known Tsafendas’s social background, whether he was able to live adequately on his own and how he related to the people around him. This could easily have been discovered if Dr. Zabow had spoken to people who knew Tsafendas, or easier, if he had read any of the one hundred and fifty statements that the police took from people who knew him. He would have seen that Tsafendas was more than able to live on his own, as he did for two years in Mozambique (1937-1939), two years in Greece (1947-1949), three years in Portugal (1955-1958), nine months in Pretoria in 1963-1964, three-four months in Beira in 1964, three-four months in Istanbul in 1961.

According to Mary Eintracht and Fotini Gavasiadis, Tsafendas was perfectly fine living on his own in Pretoria in 1963-1964 for eight months. Both were surprised by Dr. Zabow’s comments and believed they were completely off the mark.³¹¹³ According to Alexandra Vaporidis and Father Nikola Banovic, who met him in Istanbul, Tsafendas managed perfectly well living for three-four months on his own.³¹¹⁴ Andreas Babiolakis, Costas Poriазis, Nick Papadakis, Antony, Irene and John Michaletos, Marina Tsihlakis and Ira Kyriakakis, who knew Tsafendas while he lived on his own in Mozambique, both in Lourenço Marques and in Beira, stated to the author that he was perfectly competent to live alone and nobody ever thought otherwise.³¹¹⁵

³¹¹² Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

³¹¹³ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

³¹¹⁴ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

³¹¹⁵ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Irene and John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Costas Poriазis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016; Marina Tsihlakis in a personal interview, 03 April 2015.

Ira Kyriakakis and Andreas Babiolakis also remembered Tsafendas living in his father's house in Lourenço Marques from 1937 to 1939 on his own. They both remember him being excited at having the whole house to himself, although he often told them that he missed his family. Both said Tsafendas managed perfectly well, living his own at age nineteen. Babiolakis said Tsafendas was happy to be on his own because he was able to bring his girlfriend Stella to the house any time he wanted to. He even allowed some of his friends to take their girls to his house because they were still living with their parents.³¹¹⁶ Katerina Pnema, his half-sister, stated to the author that "if he was not capable of living on his own, my dad would have never left him on his own. Its absolute nonsense the doctor's comment."³¹¹⁷

Further proof of Tsafendas's ability to live adequately on his own comes by reading his biography. He travelled all around the world on his own, he visited countries where he was a complete stranger and still managed not only to survive, but on many occasions to live the "normal life" the doctors claimed he did not have - in Hamburg, for example, where he lived for a couple of years with his German girlfriend. Presumably Tsafendas lived on his own for two years in Greece (1947-1949) and Portugal (1951-1953, 1960-1963).

TSAFENDAS BEING A "DRIFTER"

Calling Tsafendas a "drifter" is like calling Odysseus a drifter. Tsafendas never travelled aimlessly or just for the sake of it. Wherever he went was for a purpose. Remember he was banned from South Africa and Mozambique and was prosecuted in Portugal. As result of this, he travelled either to find employment (Sweden, Germany, England), or because these countries were on the way to his destination (Syria, Lebanon, France, Spain, Denmark, Italy), or simply for a holiday (Bulgaria, Rhodesia, Greece again).

Dr. Zabow seems to be unaware that Tsafendas was forced to spend the years from 1951 to 1963 in exile, having been banned from Mozambique, the country of his birth, because of his pro-Communist and anti-colonialist activities. At the same time, he was barred from South Africa because he was a Communist "half-caste" who was suspected of being engaged in Communist propaganda when he lived in Mozambique. In the years up to 1963, Tsafendas made nine applications for permanent residence in South Africa and all were rejected; he made at least six to be allowed to return to Mozambique, all of which were turned down.

³¹¹⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

³¹¹⁷ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

Mozambique was then a Province of Portugal and Tsafendas was officially a Portuguese citizen. However, not only was Tsafendas banned from Mozambique, he was prosecuted and imprisoned in Portugal. The authorities objected to his past political activism in Mozambique and the fact that he was a Communist who opposed the dictatorship of Premier Antonio Salazar. As for drifting around the world, Mozambique and South Africa were the only countries Tsafendas lived in prior to being banned from them, although as a child, he had also lived for a year in Egypt. While serving the Allied cause as a merchant seaman in World War Two, he was stationed in Canada and in the United States. In 1947, he was deported from America to Greece and it was then that his odyssey began. With Mozambique, Portugal and South Africa inaccessible, he tried to find a place to live.³¹¹⁸

The fact is Tsafendas was travelling because he was not allowed to live where he wished to live, in Mozambique and South Africa. “Forced globe-trotting,” he called it.³¹¹⁹ If one of his visa applications had been successful, he would have gone there immediately. It is true that Tsafendas travelled much more widely than most people, but an analysis of his journeys and intentions comprehensively disproves Dr. Zabow’s characterization of Tsafendas as a “drifter.” He spent the first twenty-three years of his life in Mozambique, Egypt and South Africa. He lived in those countries because that was where his family was. From 1941 to 1947, he lived in the United States or, during the Second World War, at sea serving in American Liberty Ships. In 1947, and against his will, he was deported to Greece because of his Greek origins, although he wanted to return to Mozambique.

While in Greece, he joined the Democratic Army, the military wing of the Greek Communist Party, and fought with them in the civil war. When it was obvious that the Communists had lost and the war was coming to an end, Tsafendas applied for a visa to return to South Africa. In his application he wrote, “I am here a man without a country, living in strange lands with people who have different ways of living, customs and languages.”³¹²⁰ The application was turned down. He decided to try Mozambique, via Portugal. He managed ³¹¹⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³¹¹⁹ Demetrios Tsafendakis Affidavit, November 1965. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen, NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³¹²⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 17.

to do this by taking ship from Greece to France, then travelling on foot to Portugal through Spain.³¹²¹

In Portugal, in November 1949, Tsafendas was arrested because the authorities had questions about his identity. It was discovered that he was indeed a Portuguese citizen, but had not served his compulsory term in the military and that he had been dismissed twice from jobs in Mozambique for Communist activities.³¹²² Tsafendas spent the next year in prison but was then released and boarded a ship to Mozambique. He arrived there in October 1951 but was refused entry because he was listed in official files as a Communist and suspected of involvement in subversive activities.³¹²³ This refusal led to his next twelve years being spent in exile. In January 1952, he was back in Portugal and was arrested in Lisbon. The police discovered that he was a Communist and an avowed anti-colonialist who was under suspicion of “unclear activities” during his time in Mozambique and put him in jail again.³¹²⁴

Upon his eventual release a few months later, with his chosen destinations South Africa and Mozambique unattainable, he decided to go to Sweden, where he had heard he could get a job as a welder. He travelled there through Denmark, and eventually got a job as a carpenter.³¹²⁵ He did not stay in Sweden long as the weather was too cold and the money too little, so he moved to Hamburg, Germany. Tsafendas remained in Germany from early 1954 to June 1955. During his time there, he sent off applications to be allowed to return to Mozambique and to South Africa. All were rejected and in mid-1955 he returned once more to Portugal and spent the next three years working as a hawker in Lisbon.³¹²⁶

Weary of constant PIDE supervision and police harassment, Tsafendas decided in 1958 to leave Portugal, and he travelled to Brussels to sell embroidery at the international exhibition, Expo 58. From there, he went back to Germany and spent the next year and a half in Frankfurt, working for one and half months at Fries and Son, six months for Anglo-American Fashions and Designers, and then another six months at a US Army printing

³¹²¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³¹²² PIDE Confidential Report about Demitrio Tsafendas, 7 June 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³¹²³ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

³¹²⁴ Diario Popular, ‘E Conhesido em Lisboa o Assassino do Dr. Verwoerd’, 9 September 1966.

³¹²⁵ Ochsenzoll Hospital report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1, Sub-file: 1/8. NASA.

³¹²⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

works.³¹²⁷ During his time in Germany, he lived on his own but had a relationship with a German girl who was a Communist.³¹²⁸

In May 1959, Tsafendas travelled to Britain, hoping to find a job. He was refused a work permit and took “clandestine” jobs to survive.³¹²⁹ While in London, once again, he applied for permission to enter South Africa, sending a letter and an application form dated August 4, 1959 to the Union’s immigration attaché in London. A note attached to his file at the embassy stated that Tsafendas had sought permanent residence status in South Africa several times without success, that in 1941 he entered illegally and was fined; it said he had Communist leanings and had threatened to enter without permission if he was denied again. The diplomat dealing with the application wrote, “Refusal is suggested!” On September 11, 1959, “Demetrio Tsafandakis, alias Demetrio Tsafendas,” was blacklisted by the South African Department of the Interior, meaning that he could receive no passport or admission facilities without the consent of the Department’s head office.³¹³⁰

In London, Tsafendas also became politically active with anti-apartheid and anti-fascist organisations. He was discovered to be in the country illegally and in December 1959, the British sent him back to Germany, where he spent the next six months working in a tractor factory in Munich.³¹³¹ In March 1960, he read about the Sharpeville massacre and decided to return to South Africa and “do something” against Dr. Verwoerd and apartheid.³¹³² Convinced by now that he would not be allowed to enter the country legitimately, he decided on an illegal route, “through the African states south to South Africa.” The first stage took him through the Balkan States to Piraeus, Greece, then he took a ferry to Alexandria, Egypt. There his passport expired and he was unable to renew it or replace it, but with the help of the Red Cross, he managed to get to Beirut and Jerusalem.³¹³³

With his Africa North-to-South plan blocked, Tsafendas decided to return to Portugal. Travelling through Lebanon and Syria by bus, he crossed the Taurus mountain

³¹²⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³¹²⁸ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

³¹²⁹ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³¹³⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II B, Paragraphs 28-30.

³¹³¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³¹³² Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

³¹³³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

range and reached Ankara, Turkey in May 1961. A month later, he arrived in Istanbul, where he worked as a teacher of English at the best private language college in Turkey at the time, the Limasollu Naci College.³¹³⁴ In December 1961, he left to visit a former comrade from the Greek Civil War who lived in Sofia, Bulgaria. His visit lasted two weeks and then he went to Greece to spend Christmas with his good friend John Michaletos and his family.³¹³⁵ In January 1962, he travelled to the island of Crete to meet his relatives and see where his beloved father and his hero great-grandfather were born. From Greece, he travelled to Italy, then took the train to Lisbon, where he arrived in February 1962.³¹³⁶

Tsafendas worked as a welder in Lisbon until July 1962, when he went back to England and again participated in anti-apartheid and anti-fascist demonstrations. In late 1962, he learned that his father had died and he determined to visit his grave in South Africa. After several more unsuccessful applications for a visa for Mozambique and South Africa, in August or September of 1963, after twelve years of exile, the Portuguese government relented. Convinced by an “act” he put that he was mad but harmless, and “reformed” in terms of his political ideology, the authorities gave him amnesty and permission to return to Mozambique.³¹³⁷

In October 1963, Tsafendas arrived in Mozambique and a month later, with the help of his family, he was back in South Africa in Pretoria. He remained in Pretoria until July 1964, working for five months for F.A. Poole Engineering and the rest of the time at his half-sister’s café. He crossed into Rhodesia to visit another half-sister he had not seen since 1941, and from there went again to Mozambique. He remained in Beira from October 1964 until November 1964, working for the Hume Pipe Company,³¹³⁸ before being arrested by the Portuguese police for “making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses.”³¹³⁹ After three months in ³¹³⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³¹³⁵ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

³¹³⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³¹³⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Minas Constantinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

³¹³⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

³¹³⁹ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

jail in Beira, he left Mozambique for Durban in March 1965. He remained there until October 1965, working off and on as an interpreter at the Durban Court, as a welder at Fraser and Chalmers for two months and for a month for South African Railways. After receiving a letter from Helen Daniels who said she wanted to meet and marry him, he travelled from Durban to Cape Town, where he met her. He remained in Cape Town from October 1965 until September 1966.

None of the above travels can be described as aimless. Tsafendas himself, as already mentioned, characterised them in his affidavit as “forced globetrotting”³¹⁴⁰ and he was right. Several countries happened to be on the way to his destination, like France, Italy, Spain, Syria, Lebanon, Denmark and Turkey. Naturally, he spent little time there because he was just passing through. This does not apply to Turkey, where he got a teaching job and stayed for seven months. He visited Greece for the second time, Rhodesia and Bulgaria for holidays. For business and work, he travelled England, Belgium and Sweden, while one of the Liberty ships during the Second World War also took him to Canada. Apart from places where he stayed only weeks or a few months, this is his life story:

- Six years in Egypt, all in Alexandria (1919-1925)
- Seventeen years in Mozambique: 16 years in Lourenço Marques and one in Beira (1918-1919, 1925-1939, 1963-1964)
- Five years in South Africa: approximately two years in Pretoria, one in Johannesburg, one in Cape Town and a eight months in Durban (1939-1941, 1963-1966, plus school in Middleburg)
- Six years in the USA in Boston and New York, a lot of this time at sea (1941-1947)
- Two years in Greece, all in Athens (1947-1949)
- Six years in Portugal, all in Lisbon (1951-1953, 1955-1958, 1962-1963)
- Three years in Germany, all in three cities, Munich, Frankfurt and Hamburg (1953-1955, 1958-1959)
- Seven months in Turkey in Istanbul (1961)³¹⁴¹

This is not drifting, it is the odyssey of a man who was forced to live in exile from the country where he was born (Mozambique) for twelve years, who for sixteen years was not allowed to enter the country where his family lived (South Africa) and who was prosecuted and imprisoned because of his political beliefs in the country of his official nationality and where, after Mozambique, he spent most of his time (Portugal). Wherever he was, he always applied for permission to return to Mozambique and South Africa. Had he been allowed to return to either country or left in peace in Portugal, this vast Baedeker of travel would never have been opened.

³¹⁴⁰ Demetrios Tsafendakis Affidavit, November 1965. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen, NASA.

³¹⁴¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

Tsafendas travelled through so many countries mainly for two reasons:

- In search of a better place to stay and work
- He needed to cross through many countries to reach his destination.

Tsafendas's desperate efforts to return to Mozambique or South Africa and find a place to live and work without being followed by the police do not constitute "drifting." His peregrinations recall those of Odysseus, who travelled for ten years through many different places to reach his destination.

Finally, it might also be noted that a person who travels from place to place, finds work where he stops and then moves on, is not necessarily a schizophrenic. On the contrary, several highly successful people, especially exponents of the arts, have lived such a life. During his thirties, the renowned and influential French poet, Arthur Rimbaud travelled the world, moving from country to country and sustaining himself with jobs along the way. He did so because he wanted to explore lands and cultures outside of his French experience. History has not labelled Rimbaud as a schizophrenic or an aimless drifter. Unlike Rimbaud, however, Tsafendas did not keep moving for pleasure, but usually because he was barred or deported from a country and was forced to travel elsewhere. He made the most of his enforced sojourns, learning new languages and investigating cultures, but his life's aim was always to settle down, at first in Mozambique and later South Africa.

TSAFENDAS'S INABILITY TO HOLD DOWN A JOB AND HOW HE RELATED TO PEOPLE AROUND HIM

Tsafendas's ability to find and hold down a job has been discussed extensively in Dr. Cooper's testimony. As to how Tsafendas related to people around him, this could be seen by the people's own statements that have been used in this study. Furthermore, it could also be seen in Dr. Cooper's testimony.

DR. ZABOW'S PROGNOSIS REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S CHANCE OF RECOVERING

As for Tsafendas ever being able to recover from his schizophrenia, all those who knew him while he was in prison and in the hospital strongly believe that he was not schizophrenic and that he was perfectly all right when he was talking to them. None of these witnesses ever thought that Tsafendas might be a schizophrenic and he never told them any of the things he told his defence team and those who examined him during the summary trial. These witnesses include Alexander and Marie-Jose Moumbaris, Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis, Father Spiros Randos, Liza Key, Father Minas Constandinou, Father Michalis Visvinis, Rika Nikolatos and Dimitris Skoularikis.³¹⁴²

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you agree that the finer feelings in regard to family and friends are the first to be affected in a schizophrenic?

DR. ZABOW: I would agree that they may be one of the earlier signs, but if you are asking me to say that it is a sine qua non then I can't say that.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Doesn't such a person lose sympathy and regard for their people?

DR. ZABOW: It depends on the phase and the activity of his illness, it depends what sort of contact you are referring to. I am not altogether sure that I understand. If you could explain to me, with respect, what particular relationship you wish me to deal with.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: He enquired about his friends while he was in gaol. Has that got ³¹⁴² Professor Renfrew Christie in a personal interview, 12 April 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Alexander and Marie-Jose Moumbaris in a personal interview, 7 March 2010; Dimitris Skoularikis in a personal interview, 26 April 2015; Father Spiros Randos in a personal interview, 5 January 2004; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017; Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

any significance?

DR. ZABOW: Well, we have heard in Court from people who knew him that he had friendships with them: the Daniels' the O'Ryan's. The Daniels' commented - I think it was the Daniels or the O'Ryan's - one of the families commented on his fondness of the children. I have taken that into account in coming to my formulation.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you think that there is emotional blunting?

DR. ZABOW: I have observed some emotional blunting, but I would like to stress that emotional blunting is not the symptom of schizophrenia, it is rather a disorder of emotion which may at times be blunted, at times incongruous, and at times there may be rages or depression, very often in keeping with the inner phantasy life, the autistic life of the patient, and not necessarily with outer reality.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: In what sub-class of schizophrenia do you put the accused?

DR. ZABOW: In this morning's evidence I mentioned I felt he fell most closely into the paranoid group, but that he was not a typical paranoid schizophrenic.

JUDGE BEYERS: The sub-classes are very fluid, aren't they?

DR. ZABOW: That is the point I wish to make.

JUDGE BEYERS: They are not species of the same genus. They are emanations and they intertwine and they show signs of one and signs of another. Isn't that so?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, that is so.

JUDGE BEYERS: That is how I understand the subject. I don't know much about it.

DR. ZABOW: That is correct. One doesn't always get a textbook picture of a particular typo.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you agree that one gets periodic schizophrenics?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, there is a condition described more correctly than periodic schizophrenia, as periodic catatonia, which is a specific variety of schizophrenia described by a Scandinavian psychiatrist Jessing, which he has attempted to relate to the activity of the thyroid gland. It is not the sort of illness that this man presents with, which has to do with catatonic disorder, which is more particularly a motor manifestation of schizophrenia, either acute excitement or catatonic stupor. I would not class the accused in that group at all and I may add that, although Jessing has described this group and it is mentioned in most text books it is not necessarily accepted by all authorities.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you get remissions in regard to this condition?

DR. ZABOW: Which condition? Remission in regard to which condition?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: In regard to the condition you have just described?

DR. ZABOW: Periodic catatonia?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Yes?

DR. ZABOW: I believe that the text books describe remissions. I have not personally seen this.

JUDGE BEYERS: What on earth is remission? Is that a time when you do not show the thing?

DR. ZABOW: Well, that would be either a time - it depends there on the definition of the remission. It may either mean, in some people's view, that the disease was no longer present, or perhaps in other people's view, that the disease is no longer manifested,

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: To what extent do you think the accused could plan, if there is a serious thought disorder?

DR. ZABOW: Once again I must stress and think of the intelligence itself of the patient, I must stress that although he has once been diagnosed as hebephrenia, we must now accept that it was not a pure hebephrenia anyway, and that there is a certain amount of ego function intact. It is not uncommon for paranoid schizophrenics to be able to plan very ably, but in keeping with their autistic view of the world. Let us say, as they see the world they plan, and the plan itself may be a reasonably complex one, although I am not sure that buying two knives in the morning and stabbing someone the same day is necessarily a complex plan. One could even credit a paranoid with planning something more complex. So that I don't see any contradiction between what has been described to the Court in this man's actions and his mental condition.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused give you a detailed account of how he planned to kill the deceased?

DR. ZABOW: I attempted to get an account from him on several occasions. At times he described to me, as has been described to the Court, how he stabbed the, and how, had he not been held back, he would have continued to stab the deceased. At other times he got so far off the point, as I outlined in my this morning's evidence, that it was impossible to get a coherent account of what had led up to the killing.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused tell you that he first decided to kill the Prime Minister early in August, 1966?

DR. ZABOW: I hesitate. I am not sure that he told me directly, or if I heard it in evidence in Court, but I am aware of it. He did tell me about a gas pistol. I think this was the occasion when he had considered it.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Before we get to that, did he tell you that he originally planned to shoot the deceased?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, that is why I say the 2.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And did he say that he arranged to buy a Beretta pistol from a seaman on the tanker 'Eleni'?

DR. ZABOW: Once again I must say I am not sure if the accused told me this, or if I heard it in the Court here.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he tell you that he waited for his salary at the end of August, 1966, before buying the pistol?

DR. ZABOW: He didn't tell me that, no

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And did he also tell you that he intended escaping on the ship 'Eleni' after shooting the deceased?

DR. ZABOW: When I questioned the accused about escape it was mainly in relation to the escape at the time of the alleged offence, and at that time it seemed to me that I could not - in fact, not seem to me, it was so - that I could not get a clear answer from him. He said that he was not aware of the situation and had not a plan to escape. At a subsequent interview I tried to ascertain whether there was any question of him trying to make a sacrifice of himself, and once again there was no logical answer; it got tied up with the tape worm and his whole mental condition.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he tell you how he came into possession of this gas pistol?

DR. ZABOW: I say once again I do not recall asking him specifically. My emphasis, in interviewing him, was on assessing the mental state, the motivation and rather the circumstances of the actual event than the plan which came to no good. I didn't enquire into all that detail.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he say that he changed his plans after he had purchased the pistol which was not suited to his purpose?

DR. ZABOW: The same answer applies. I don't know that I can say.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused tell you that he decided to kill the Prime Minister by stabbing him?

DR. ZABOW: Well, I am not sure that he used the words 'by stabbing him' but he certainly did tell it to me because he told me about buying the knives, so that I was aware of it.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused also tell you that on the morning of the 6th September, 1966, he changed his uniform in Parliament and put on a suit to go down town?

DR. ZABOW: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he say that he left Parliament and went to buy two daggers at different shops round about 9.00 a.m.?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, I have an idea that I may even have the name of the one shop in my notes. It was a gun shop, or something, I think he said. But in any case, I was aware of that too.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he tell you that he stabbed the Prime Minister in a minute or two when his body-guard was going around to the public gallery?

DR. ZABOW: No, he did not tell me that. As he described that to me, he told me that he was in a sort of a, almost dazed condition; that he came to when he found the people were restraining him, and he said to me that had they not restrained him he would have continued stabbing the deceased repeatedly. At that time he also (for the record) displayed a certain amount of incongruity in telling me this, when he couldn't understand why he was restrained so violently, nor could he understand the reaction of the people around him, and the injuries that he received. He didn't seem to be able to appreciate, you know, he would be restrained.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused tell you that he hid the daggers in his locker?

JUDGE BEYERS: What is the relevance of all this? The only relevance I can see: Is it possible for a person suffering from schizophrenia to plan, and to plan quite elaborately, to do something?

DR. ZABOW: The answer to that question is 'Yes.' It is possible. All this goes to show that he planned it,

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You say that he could plan, he could plan carefully, even if he was in that condition?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, he could plan. I have said that I feel he could even have planned more complexly than has been described to us, and I would still say that this is in keeping with his schizophrenic illness.

JUDGE BEYERS: Of course, assuming he is a chronic schizophrenic, then his planning would also be related to the unreal and shadow world in which he lives, rather than to the world of reality? I am putting a plain question, I am not being clever.

DR. ZABOW: No, I think one must divide it into the mechanics of the planning and the motivation of the planning. The mechanics obviously - the fact that a knife will kill a human being - he has accepted that part of the real world. But the overall motivation, the whole situation in his mind which led to this plan and to the carrying out of this act, was planned in terms of his autistic life, rather than in terms of reality of the world in which he lives.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Does the accused give a good account of his actions?

DR. ZABOW: If counsel would tell me what he means by a 'good account'?

JUDGE BEYERS: The witness has told us at length about the garbled, nonsensical, stupid, disjointed account which the accused did give him when he asked him the question. He has read out at length the account he gave him when he asked him: "Did you kill the Prime Minister, and why?" He read pages of the account.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Would you have expected that the accused could have performed his job in Parliament efficiently?

DR. ZABOW: That would depend on the nature of the work the accused was expected to perform.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: He was a messenger?

DR. ZABOW: A messenger could have unskilled or skilled duties. It would still depend on the nature of the actual work, not- the designation of the post.

COMMENTS ON THE CROSS-EXAMINATION

Dr. Zabow, just like Dr. Cooper, was unable to get a coherent account from Tsafendas about his killing of Dr. Verwoerd. However, as we have seen in Dr. Sakinofsky's testimony, Tsafendas was well able to give a perfect and detailed account of what led up to the killing and the killing itself twice to the police, but also thirty years later to several witnesses.

Dr. Zabow also stated that Tsafendas told him that he "was not aware of the situation and had not a plan to escape." He said, "At a subsequent interview I tried to ascertain whether there was any question of him trying to make a sacrifice of himself, and once again there was no logical answer; it got tied up with the tapeworm and his whole mental condition." However, Tsafendas gave a perfectly clear and logical answer to the police regarding his escape and about 'sacrificing' himself. More importantly, he discussed the subject in detail thirty years later with three different witnesses on different occasions. Both the issue of escape and "sacrifice" have been discussed in detail in Dr. Cooper's testimony.

Van den Berg's incompetent and irrelevant questions continued with Dr. Zabow. He first asked him whether Tsafendas gave "a good account of his actions." Judge Beyers had to intervene again to remind him that "the witness has told us at length about the garbled, nonsensical, stupid, disjointed account which the accused did give him when he asked him the question. He has read out at length the account he gave him when he asked him: "Did you kill the Prime Minister, and why?" He read pages of the account." Naturally van den Berg then dropped the subject.

What was extraordinary about the Attorney-General's handling of the issue was not so much his incompetent and irrelevant questioning as the fact that once again he did not use the plethora of evidence he had in his possession, including the report of Professor van Wyk, his own expert-witness, which flatly contradicted Dr. Zabow's assessment. Prof. van Wyk said that after he had examined Tsafendas three times, he had found that "he is orientated. He gives a good account of himself. His comprehension is good and his answers are relevant. His emotional responses are adequate and apt. His discourse is coherent. At times he is discursive, but not vague and he never strays from the main point of conversation."³¹⁴³ Though van den Berg had this critical report in his possession, he chose not to use it but to waste time with footling questions.

³¹⁴³ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 81.

Van den Berg's next question was whether he expected Tsafendas to work in the Parliament efficiently. Again, this is a completely incompetent question, though it would have been relevant before Gerald Shaw's testimony. Shaw had testified to the court just a few hours before that he found Tsafendas's work in Parliament to be inefficient, so what is the purpose of asking his opinion about it? Van den Berg's question would have been perfectly relevant and competent if he had followed up the issue and brought evidence to support his initial argument that Tsafendas's work was efficient. Since he did not do that, what was the purpose of the question? No matter what Dr. Zabow's answer was, it would have made no difference. This question offered nothing at all to the State's case, while it strengthened further the defence's.

The Attorney General's cross-examination of Dr. Zabow was arguably the weakest in the entire summary trial. It was pointless, aiming nowhere and going nowhere, adding nothing of substance to the State's case and posing no challenge to the witness, despite the volumes of evidence the South African police had in its possession.

CONCLUSION

Dr. Zabow diagnosis is almost identical to those of Dr. Sakinofsky and Dr. Cooper. Naturally, therefore, it contains the same mistakes. You do not have to be a psychiatrist to see that Dr. Zabow's diagnosis is miles from the real Tsafendas; the Tsafendas described to the police and to the author by over 200 witnesses. Tsafendas is presented by Dr. Zabow, after four hours and a half of examination, as a man who was not able to look after himself and live adequately on his own, although at the time he was forty-eight years old and had travelled to sixteen countries, most of the time with very little money, countries where he knew no one, but still managed to work and survive. He is also called a "drifter," which is like calling Odysseus a drifter because of his travels. Tsafendas's odyssey is misunderstood and characterised as drifting by Dr. Zabow, who is clearly not aware of the circumstances of his travels

Dr. Zabow admitted that he based his diagnosis entirely on what he heard from Tsafendas, without receiving any other information from friends, family or even his medical records. The fact remains that his diagnosis on Tsafendas is very wide off the mark, as two hundred witnesses can verify. Tsafendas remembered Dr. Zabow until he died. Dr. Zabow and Dr. Sakinofsky were names Tsafendas remembered in later life, always with fondness.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 17: DR. JAMES WILLIAM MACGREGOR

DR. MACGREGOR'S PROFESSIONAL BIOGRAPHY AS RELATED BY HIM TO THE COURT

A specialist psychiatrist and neurologist since 1937 practising in Cape Town. Qualified in Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1937 and worked in a general hospital, then in a mental hospital. Took his Diploma of Psychological Medicine in London in 1938, then went to Oxford. In 1939, Dr. MacGregor joined the British army and in 1940 was appointed an acting specialist psychiatrist and neurologist. Two years later, he was made a full psychiatrist and neurologist and worked in a head injury unit throughout the war. In 1945, he was made consultant neurologist and psychiatrist to the South East of England for the Army. In 1947, he took membership of the Royal College of Physicians of Edinburgh and in 1949, membership of the Royal College of Physicians of London. He came to South African in 1949 and since then had been a specialist neurologist and psychiatrist on the register of the South African Medical Association, working at the Groote Schuur Hospital and in private practice. For the last three years, head of the Neurology Department at Groote Schuur Hospital and a lecturer at the University of Cape Town in neurology. In the course of his professional life, saw many schizophrenics.³¹⁴⁴

EXTRACTS FROM DR. MACGREGOR'S TESTIMONY³¹⁴⁵

EXAMINING TSAFENDAS AND TAKING "SHORTCUTS"

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You were asked by Mr. Bloomberg, attorney for the defence in this case, to examine the accused who is now before Court?

DR. MACGREGOR: I was.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: With a view to determining his mental state?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes.

³¹⁴⁴ Dr. James William MacGregor's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³¹⁴⁵ Dr. James William MacGregor's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Shortly, how many examinations did you make?

DR. MACGREGOR: I had three examinations. On the 29th of September this year, and on the 4th and 11th of October of this year. All in Caledon Square. Each one lasting approximately an hour and a half or so.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Your first interview was conducted in the presence of Mr. Bloomberg?

DR. MACGREGOR: It was.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: There were no other medical practitioners present?

DR. MACGREGOR: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: It was your purpose to establish independently of the opinions of other medical practitioners what you felt the accused's mental condition was?

DR. MACGREGOR: It was.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Correct?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Were you, on the basis of that interview alone, able to form a firm opinion as to the accused's mental state - present mental state?

DR. MACGREGOR: I was. I formed a firm opinion, and I put it in writing, and I gave it to Mr. David Bloomberg, saying that I considered this man was suffering from schizophrenia of the paranoid type, and that he was probably certifiable. I was not absolutely certain of this, and I wanted to have other interviews in order to be quite certain about that.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Tell the Court, shortly, and just give the salient features of your first interview?

DR. MACGREGOR: I thought I had to - time was a little bit precious; I had to take shortcuts. I accepted what was given to me about this man's life history, various dates and to which countries he had been. I told him that I was a psychiatrist and I wished to see what his mental state was. I then divided my psychiatric interview up in the usual way. I asked him questions about his childhood; asked him questions about his adult life, his interests, his views on life, his aims, his religion, his political views, and then, finally, coming down to the murder, the motives for the murder and his feelings about the murder.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Approaching the matter and analysing the position – you have analysed it. Will you deal with those heads? First of all his thinking or disturbance of thinking?

DR. MACGREGOR: He showed considerable disturbance of thinking. His thinking was woolly and disjointed. He gave birth to delusions concerning a tapeworm. I can go into more detail about this, but the Court has had a great deal about this, but I await your instructions, my lord, as to whether I should enlarge on this. But it was very much the same matter about the tapeworm which he has told other psychiatrists, and which has been related here.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you have to prompt him on it?

DR. MACGREGOR: No, I knew nothing about this tapeworm before I saw him. And within, I should think three minutes of asking him about his childhood, this story of the tapeworm started to come out.

JUDGE BEYERS: Was this a new one to you? Have you ever heard this one before?

DR. MACGREGOR: I have never heard this one before.

JUDGE BEYERS: A man being almost under the machinations and control of a tapeworm?

DR. MACGREGOR: No. At first I didn't even know whether it was relevant.

JUDGE BEYERS: Have you ever seen it anywhere?

DR. MACGREGOR: I have known schizophrenics who believed that they had spirits and demons within them, yes, but not a tapeworm.

JUDGE BEYERS: That is a completely new one?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In your initial interview did you try and lead him away from the tapeworm? Did you get him to talk about something else?

DR. MACGREGOR: Well, at first I tried to lead him away from it, but then I wasn't aware that it was of much importance. But it didn't take very long to realise that this was the central theme of his thought. Very early on he told me that this tapeworm had changed his whole life. Again at first I approached it as a purely medical matter, and asked him what tests had been done, what sort of tapeworm it was, and how he thought it was there, and we got the same kind of replies that had been given to other people, that this was a special tapeworm. He called it in that particular interview a demon, a snake and a devil. He described it in grossly exaggerated terms as a very large tapeworm, probably 20 or 30 feet long, probably related to an East African species. Such was the command of his language that he used the term “serrated,” “with serrated edges.”

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where did he feel that he could obtain treatment for this bizarre tapeworm?

DR. MACGREGOR: He told me at that interview that he thought the only place where he could be treated satisfactorily was in South America.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Has he since expressed any other opinion as to how he could be treated for the tapeworm?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes. He thought that he might go to Glasgow and be treated with this machine which was described earlier on this morning. But he still thinks perhaps in South America he would get the best treatment.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he also consider whether he may not go to a surgeon to have it cut out?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes. He has told me that it is incurable, except by surgery, and that this machine that he mentioned was probably only a diagnostic method of discovering the whereabouts of this worm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Again, this is repetition, but it is important; this is a serious enquiry, it is a serious charge. What is the importance of this delusion, if I may call it that?

DR. MACGREGOR: It seems to me that it has disorganised his whole personality, his whole relationship with the real world.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What has it done to his personality?

DR. MACGREGOR: I don't know what the delusion has done to it, because this is, I think part of a schizophrenic process. But it has altered his actions in certain ways in that he is forever thinking of food for this tapeworm, and forever being careful, he told me this, not to pass too close to shops with delicacies in the windows in case the tapeworm smelt this and would crawl up underneath his chest and start causing him pain. He further me that the pains caused by this tapeworm are so terrible that, if it had not been for his religion, he would be dead.

COMMENTS ON DR. MACGREGOR'S ABOVE TESTIMONY

ON TAKING "SHORTCUTS" DUE TO THE LACK OF TIME

Like Dr. Zabow, Dr. MacGregor also spent a total of four and a half hours with Tsafendas. Dr. MacGregor admitted something that went unmentioned by the other psychiatrists although it affected them too, and appeared quite understandable in the circumstances. This was that under pressure of time, he was forced "to take shortcuts" in his examination and accept what was given to him by Tsafendas about Tsafendas's own life history without the opportunity to check it further. This admission by Dr. MacGregor says a great deal, not only about his diagnosis and how he came to it and how reliable it could be, but also about the way things were done by all those involved with Tsafendas's defence due to the pressure of time.

THE TAPEWORM

The issue of the tapeworm, as Dr. MacGregor observed, was extensively discussed earlier in this chapter and in this report, so it is not going to be discussed here again. However, we should mention that Tsafendas spoke about the tapeworm in relation to his childhood and only three minutes after Dr. MacGregor had brought up his childhood. As we have seen before, Tsafendas never mentioned the tapeworm to anyone when he was a child, not even to his family.³¹⁴⁶ ³¹⁴⁶ For more about the issue look at Dr. Cooper's testimony.

Dr. MacGregor conceded he had never heard of anyone hallucinating about a tapeworm and that it was something “completely new” to him. This is exactly what Tsafendas said about why he used the tapeworm ploy - because it was unique and everyone took an interest in it and believed him. He later said, “Everyone hears voices or pretends to be Napoleon, but who would ever suspect anyone who believes he has a tapeworm?” Tsafendas had been impressed by the way the psychiatrists treated Tom Tuff, who supposedly had a tapeworm, and the amount of attention he was receiving from them. This was the reason Tsafendas adopted the tapeworm idea – its uniqueness.³¹⁴⁷ The author is not in position to know whether Tom Tuff really believed he had a tapeworm or not, but it was he who inspired Tsafendas to use it.

TSAFENDAS'S “ONLY WISH”

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Have you put to him what he would like, what one wish he had in life?

DR. MACGREGOR: At the end of that first interview I put it to him that if he were to be granted one single wish in life what would it be, and I expected him to say that he would like to be out of the Police cells, a free man, but to my surprise he said he wanted to get rid of the tapeworm. I then thought I would give him an alternative, and I said slowly and carefully to him that if he had an alternative between two wishes, either to get rid of the tapeworm or to avoid this terrible tragedy, to avoid all the fuss and horribleness of being a prisoner awaiting trial, with his life in danger, and avoid the murder, avoid all the consequences of the murder, if he had a choice between that and getting rid of the tapeworm, which would he choose, and, without any hesitation, he said there would be no point in being free unless he got rid of the tapeworm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did you find his emotional balance?

³¹⁴⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

DR. MACGREGOR: I thought his emotional balance was extremely poor. He showed great ferocity of emotion. I put to him that he was accused of murdering a man - not only that he was a politician, but that he was a man who was a father and a husband - and what did he think of this, and he said yes he had thought about it. And this was the one time when he used a word which he mispronounced he said it has caused me "misery", and I believe he meant "misery." And I said "Tell me further, what do you think about this? - What do you think about the Prime Minister's wife?" And he said "Yes, I thought about her." Then there was a long pause. I asked him again what has he thought about her, and he said "I would not like to meet her face to face." I said "Have you thought anything else about her?" and he said "Yes, I wouldn't like to live in Cape Town." I said why would he not like to live in Cape Town, "I am asking you what have you thought about the consequences of this murder?", and he said yes, he would not like to live in Cape Town because he didn't think he could face up to people, and he would prefer to go to South America and to start cultivating the ground there, he would like to be in the jungle. And then there was a whole ramble about having a pool, he would like there to be fish in the pool, and he could work there, and work hard.

COMMENTS REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S "ONLY WISH"

When Dr. MacGregor asked Tsafendas about a wish, he replied that his only wish was to "get rid of the tapeworm." We won't discuss the tapeworm again, but just to show how this answer was a "performance" for the psychiatrists, we list the following incidents. In 1996, Tsafendas was visited in prison by Alexander and Marie-Jose Moumbaris. When they asked him if there was anything he wanted, he replied, "my freedom."³¹⁴⁸

When Tsafendas was frequently asked by Father Minas Constandinou, Rika Nikolatos, Father Spiros Randos and Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis who visited him in prison and later in hospital if there was anything he wanted, he always gave the same answer, "my freedom." He never asked them for help to "get rid of the tapeworm."³¹⁴⁹ In 1993, Tsafendas wrote a letter to his good friend John Michaletos "kindly requesting" him to endeavour to have him released from prison.³¹⁵⁰

³¹⁴⁸ Alexander and Marie-Jose Moumbaris in a personal interview, 27 June 2014.

³¹⁴⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

³¹⁵⁰ Letter of Dimitri Tsafendas to John Michaletos, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

TSAFENDAS'S RACIAL PREFERENCES AND DR. VERWOERD BEING "THE RIGHT MAN"

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In this context, you remember that a Mr. Smorenberg said that Tsafendas worked under him at the power station. You heard Mr. Smorenberg say that?

DR. MACGREGOR: I did.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Mr. Smorenberg said they were one day below the surface, 40 feet down I think, or something like that, in an eerie chamber which he likened unto a dungeon, and then this little conversation took place. Tsafendas suggested there that it would be a good thing if all the Coloured people were brought into the chamber, the chamber closed, and a door opened and the seawater then drown then. That remark. On the other hand we have it that Tsafendas was very fond of the O'Ryans and the Daniels, and that from time to time he thought about becoming a member of the Coloured community. What is your comment on this?

DR. MACGREGOR: I think this shows an ambivalence, a variation, a plus and minus sign so to speak about his attitude towards the Coloured. And this kind of ambivalence is very typical of the attitudes of schizophrenics. They are inconsistent in their attitudes and outlooks.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You have it there that on that occasion he thought Dr. Verwoerd was a good man - I think he put it that he was the right man?

DR. MACGREGOR: I heard the witness say that, yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Now you have it subsequently that he goes and stabs Dr. Verwoerd, the person whom he two months previously called the right man. What is your comment on that?

DR. MACGREGOR: I think that probably is an example of this very kind of ambivalence again, when schizophrenic swings from one extreme to the other.

COMMENTS ON DR. MACGREGOR'S TESTIMONY ON TSAFENDAS'S RACIAL PREFERENCES AND DR. VERWOERD BEING "THE RIGHT MAN"

Dr. MacGregor attributed Tsafendas's dislike of Coloureds, according to an incident reported by Owen Smorenberg, to schizophrenia. He said: "I think this shows an ambivalence, a variation, a plus and minus sign so to speak, about his attitude towards the Coloured. And this kind of ambivalence is very typical of the attitudes of schizophrenics. They are inconsistent in their attitudes and outlooks.” However, as we have seen, it was not Tsafendas who was inconsistent in his views, but Smorenberg’s statement. Smorenberg’s statement has been analysed and dismissed by the author as inaccurate for various reasons, which were obviously unknown to Dr. MacGregor.

The issue of whether Tsafendas liked or disliked Coloureds has also been examined at length in the testimonies of Dr. Cooper and Smorenberg himself, so these issues will not be discussed again here. However, the surprising thing here is that Smorenberg’s contradictory statement is taken as “ambivalent” behaviour by Tsafendas by Dr. MacGregor, who is obviously unaware of Tsafendas’s political ideas and character. The fact that the statement is contradictory is attributed to schizophrenia and not that Smorenberg might have misunderstood.

Advocate Cooper then carefully and intelligently manipulates Tsafendas’s alleged words and from Dr. Verwoerd being the “right man,” he becomes a “good man.” Thus, Advocate Cooper asks how Tsafendas could have killed someone he thought he was a “good man.” The issue of the “right man” has also been extensively discussed in Smorenberg’s testimony. Dr. MacGregor, obviously unaware of Tsafendas’s beliefs about Dr. Verwoerd, attributes it to “ambivalence” again, “when a schizophrenic swings from one extreme to the other.” However, as we have seen repeatedly, Tsafendas did not swing from one extreme to the other. More than a hundred witnesses testified to this study, to the police and to the Commission that Tsafendas opposed apartheid, while more than twenty testified that he considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant, a dictator, Hitler’s best student, not the real representative of all South African people etc. Not a single one of the three hundred witnesses who were questioned by the author and by the police at the time said anything about Tsafendas considering Dr. Verwoerd to be the “right man.” Of course, Dr. MacGregor was not in position to know that and could only comment on what was given to him, as he himself admitted.

The fact that Smorenberg’s statement is a contradiction to Tsafendas’s actions and to what was testified by the O’Ryans and the Daniels about him, is taken as “ambivalent” behaviour by Tsafendas without anyone considering the possibility that Smorenberg’s statement was inaccurate. Dr. Macgregor was not aware of the inaccuracy of Smorenberg’s statement, but the Attorney-General must have known since he would have been in possession of the one hundred and fifty statements the police gathered from people who knew Tsafendas, the two statements that Tsafendas gave to the police and several other evidence gathered by the South African police that could have easily broken down Smorenberg's testimony. The fact that van den Berg failed to use them when Smorenberg testified gave the defence the opportunity to use this false testimony to further support their line. The Attorney-General remained in his seat, offering no challenge.

TSAFENDAS HAVING "NO AIM IN LIFE," "ACHIEVED NOTHING WORTHWILE IN HIS LIFE" AND "NO FRIENDSHIPS OF LASTING DEPTH"

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Similarly, you have here the incident when at seven o'clock in the morning, at the Daniels's, he knocks them up, he has a bag of meat which could feed about two people, tomatoes and eggs etc., and he wants a pan and he wants a little stove to make a meal, but he eats this meal in a gargantuan way, if I can say it.

JUDGE BEYERS: Don't look like that about a rare done T-bone steak, Mr. Cooper. You are pulling a face about something which I wouldn't mind having tonight.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: He eats it with the blood, and then he says he is feeding the worm. What is your comment on that?

DR. MACGREGOR: Well, I think this illustrates how this delusion about the worm disorganised his life and his realistic approach to life.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you find any disturbance of volition?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes. I think this great stubborn persistence after years of investigations in the belief that he still had the tapeworm - no one could shake him about this - this is a very good example of this stubbornness, the negativistic attitude of the schizophrenic. His whole drifting life in which, as far as I can make out, he never achieved anything worthwhile, any concrete act, concrete position that is worthwhile - he never seemed to achieve any friendship of lasting depth, and he had no particular desires to achieve anything. He had no aim in life except to get rid of this tapeworm. This too is typical of the lack of volition, the lack of pattern, the lack of drive of the schizophrenic.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is this "borne out" by the history that we have of him in Cape Town between the 28th of August and the time of his arrest? Going from one job to another, being unemployed and visiting hospitals?

DR. MACGREGOR: That is consistent with his state, but I would not have diagnosed schizophrenia just on that alone. It is perfectly consistent with a schizophrenic state.

COMMENTS ON TSAFENDAS HAVING "NO AIM IN LIFE," "ACHIEVED NOTHING WORTHWILE IN HIS LIFE" AND "NO FRIENDSHIPS OF LASTING DEPTH"

The above is an identical diagnosis to that of Dr. Cooper and as we have seen in his testimony, is entirely inaccurate. Tsafendas's friendships and relationships with people have been covered at length in comments on Dr. Cooper's testimony, as have the other two claims, but due to their importance and in order to show how wrong Dr. MacGregor was, they will be discussed here again, although not in such detail. The issue of the steak at Daniels's house and the "feeding the worms" comment have been discussed extensively in Peter Daniels's testimony.

According to Dr. MacGregor, Tsafendas had achieved nothing and had no aims in his life. The fact that PIDE had a 130-page file on him since he was twenty and that he was forced into exile from Mozambique and prosecuted in Portugal for his Communist and anti-colonialist beliefs and activities give the lie to Dr. MacGregor's assessment of a life lacking in aims and achievements. As for doing something "worthwhile," Tsafendas taught English without charge for six or seven months to Greek and Turkish children in Istanbul, and also on two occasions to poor children in Mozambique. This was because he believed education was "worthwhile." That he was an active member of the British anti-apartheid and anti-fascist movements, participating in demonstrations and that he smuggled anti-apartheid literature into South Africa would certainly be considered "worthwhile" by many, though undoubtedly not by everyone, especially in South Africa in 1966.

This supposedly aimless man toured villages in Beira, seeking to raise awareness of the independence cause and for this suffered imprisonment and torture.³¹⁵¹ Working for Mozambican independence at the cost of arrest, imprisonment and torture by the Portuguese Police is an achievement rooted in conviction. The fact that the Director-General of PIDE in Portugal instructed the Sub-Director of PIDE in Mozambique that "information indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of your country should not be transmitted to the ³¹⁵¹ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

South African authorities,"³¹⁵² can also be seen as an achievement for Tsafendas. That he joined the Greek Communist Party and its military wing, the DSE, during the Greek Civil War and fought for a cause was the achievement of an aim.

Finally, he taught at Turkey's best private language college for about half a year. That was an achievement not everyone could have managed. Whether one agrees or disagrees with Tsafendas's political ideas, it cannot be denied that the activities listed above are many more than most ordinary people achieve. Yet that does not make these people non-achievers or schizophrenics.

³¹⁵² Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

Tsafendas did enough during his lifetime to render significant service to society, the question of Dr. Verwoerd's assassination being debatable. Far from having no aim in life, he had well-defined goals. He wanted "to create a resistance to the regime of South Africa" and was willing to "anything that would get the South African regime out of power."³¹⁵³ He fearlessly told the PIDE agents who were questioning him that he wanted to see "a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the mother nation," and that he was strongly in favour of the independence of Mozambique.³¹⁵⁴ Furthermore, Tsafendas did not simply cherish these as hopes for Mozambique's future, but worked actively to secure them by campaigning for independence and by "making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses."³¹⁵⁵ For his political beliefs and his efforts to raise awareness of the independence issue, he was five times arrested, imprisoned and tortured and forced to live on exile for twelve years.

However, the most glaringly obvious aim of Tsafendas's life was right there in front of Dr. MacGregor and he failed to see it. Tsafendas wanted apartheid to end, he wanted to see a government in South Africa that would represent all the South African people and he wanted Dr. Verwoerd removed so that national policy would change, as he told the police in his statement³¹⁵⁶ and later repeated several times.³¹⁵⁷ However, Dr. MacGregor was not in possession of Tsafendas's statement, or the statements given to the police by people who knew him or of any other information to apprise him of who Tsafendas really was. Thus, as he openly admitted, he simply took what was given to him at face value.

THE IMPORTANCE OF VAN ZYL'S TESTS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: We also had the evidence of the psychologist, Mr. van Zyl, this morning. What is the significance of his findings and his observations?

³¹⁵³ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demetrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³¹⁵⁴ PIDE Record of questions, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³¹⁵⁵ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³¹⁵⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³¹⁵⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

DR. MACGREGOR: I believe this finding of scatter, as it is called, is very significant and indicates strongly, tends to indicate a schizophreniform process. And furthermore his inability to deal adequately with abstract situations. He finds it easier to deal with concrete situations. It is quite typical of a schizophrenic.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: So you find that important evidence?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes, I do. Confirmatory but not diagnostic.

JUDGE BEYERS: More or less a cross check?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes. I don't think anyone would diagnose schizophrenia on that alone.

COMMENTS ON THE IMPORTANCE OF VAN ZYL'S TESTS

Dr. MacGregor found van Zyl's tests as "confirmatory, but not diagnostic." However, as this study has already shown, van Zyl's tests were inaccurate and his conclusions wrong. Since this issue has been discussed extensively in van Zyl's testimony, it would not be discussed here again.

TSAFENDAS SIMULATING

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Isn't the work of the clinical psychologist helpful in trying to remove the possibility of all this being simulated?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes, I think so. Very much so. And, taking that point, all of us of course wondered whether this man might be simulating, and I went there prepared to deal with a man that might be simulating, because I knew very little about him, except what I had read in the papers. But you know, when one put things to him which, if he was simulating, he could have clutched at, he didn't take them. When one asked whether he heard voices, which is a common thing, for mad people to hear, he denied this. But I am not sure whether he doesn't actually hear some kind of voice. But we know schizophrenic people often deny that they have hallucinations. When I asked him whether he had any sense of unreality, no.

COMMENTS REGARDING TSAFENDAS SIMULATING

The issue of simulation has been discussed in detail in Dr. Cooper's testimony. However let us briefly examine what was said here. Dr. MacGregor stated that he considered whether or not Tsafendas was simulating. He tried the same “trick” that Dr. Cooper tried. He asked him if he heard “any voices, which is a common thing, for mad people to hear.” As with Dr. Cooper, Tsafendas did not fall into the trap, denying any such thing. Why did Tsafendas react in this way? Because twenty years earlier, he had pretended to hear voices and he was then discovered to be simulating. The Grafton State Hospital report also stated that in 1946 Tsafendas heard voices from the radiators.³¹⁵⁸

The Commission of Enquiry, which had no psychiatrist, noted that Tsafendas is “quite knowledgeable about mental disorders—he also admitted to the Commission that he had read fairly extensively on the subject in order to determine what was wrong with him... and [the Commission] therefore adopted a somewhat sceptical attitude towards him. It is clear that his word cannot be relied upon, and that he is sufficiently intelligent to put on a fairly good act.”³¹⁵⁹ Of course the Commission of Enquiry was in possession of most of the documents gathered by the police, plus others. Dr. MacGregor was unaware of anything about Tsafendas except what he heard from him.

Given that Tsafendas was experienced with psychiatrists, it was to be expected that he did not take Dr. MacGregor's bait. It is also evident that Dr. MacGregor was not aware of the contents of the Grafton State Hospital report, where it said that Tsafendas had “faked mental illness” and had claimed to hear voices from the radiators.³¹⁶⁰ Naturally, Tsafendas's experience with psychiatrists had increased since 1946 and he did not make the same mistake of claiming to hear voices. Dr. MacGregor was not aware of this, unlike the Commission of Enquiry, the South African police and presumably the State.

TSAFENDAS'S HOSPITALIZATIONS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was he influenced by people? Did he feel himself under pressures from outside agencies of any kind?

³¹⁵⁸ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

³¹⁵⁹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18.

³¹⁶⁰ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

DR. MACGREGOR: No. All these questions were not put at once. One had to slip them in unobtrusively. When I asked whether he thought he was mentally unbalanced, he denied this firmly - not in any way. If one said to him "Why have you been in so many mental hospitals?" then we got all kinds of reasons, including the reason that at least on one occasion he was put into a mental hospital in Lisbon because the doctors were so poorly paid that the only way they could supplement their earnings was to take patients from the tropical hospital, where he was being investigated for a tapeworm, keep their clothes and belongings, and put them in a mental hospital. This he told me was well known, and it was told to him by the cook, nurses and by many people outside. When I said this was a ridiculous statement because, if it was true, it would become public, he said no, the corruption was so great that no one could ever make this public.

COMMENTS ON TSAFENDAS'S HOSPITALIZATIONS

The issue has been examined extensively in Dr. Cooper's testimony and therefore it would not be discussed here again.

TSAFENDAS'S MANNERISMS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: His face - what were his facial mannerisms?

DR. MACGREGOR: Most of the time throughout these interviews he looked in a bland, rather disinterested, way. From time to time he would make a grimace, which I think Dr. Cooper referred to, which is half a smile, half a snarl. He pulled down the corners of his mouth and showed his teeth. This seemed to be irrelevant to the subject that was under discussion at the time. From time to time he rocked backwards and forwards, and, particularly at the last interview, he seemed to scratch himself continuously. When I asked whether there was any reason for this, he paid no attention and just went on scratching.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is the significance of this?

DR. MACGREGOR: I think these are mannerisms such as are common in schizophrenic patients. I saw no other reason. Stereotyped repetition of these movements, which were not very noticeable, particularly the rocking wasn't particularly noticeable, but, particularly at the last interview, it went on the whole time.

COMMENTS ON TSAFENDAS'S MANNERISMS

The report from Grafton State hospital also stated that Tsafendas demonstrated peculiar mannerisms.³¹⁶¹ However, none of about two hundred people who were interviewed by the author, by the Commission or by the police at the time mentioned anything about peculiar mannerisms. The author specifically asked forty-six witnesses who knew Tsafendas well about this, and no one ever saw him do anything like Dr. MacGregor described. It would be unnecessary and not practical to name every person who was asked about this, particularly since names are given in the introduction of the study. Here is a short selection from the many knew Tsafendas very well and spent a lot of time with him and denied ever noticing grimaces or rocking or scratching or suchlike by Tsafendas:

- Katerina Pnema, his half-sister.³¹⁶²
- Father Nikola Banovic, in 1961, lived in the same house as Tsafendas for four months and in a house next door for another two or three months.³¹⁶³
- Father Michalis Visvinis who very regularly visited him for five years in prison (1989-1994).³¹⁶⁴
- Fotini Gavasiadis spent every day for nine months with him.³¹⁶⁵
- Allan O'Ryan lived with Tsafendas for five months at the same house and kept being in touch for another year.³¹⁶⁶
- Reuben O'Ryan lived with Tsafendas in the same house for five months and kept in touch with him for another year.³¹⁶⁷
- Stanley O'Ryan lived with Tsafendas for five months at the same house and kept in touch for another year.³¹⁶⁸
- Mary Eintracht, Tsafendas's first cousin.³¹⁶⁹
- Ira Kyriakakis who grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques and remained a ³¹⁶¹ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

³¹⁶² Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³¹⁶³ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

³¹⁶⁴ Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

³¹⁶⁵ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

³¹⁶⁶ Allan O' Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019.

³¹⁶⁷ Reuben O' Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

³¹⁶⁸ Stanley O' Ryan in a personal interview, 9 April 2015.

³¹⁶⁹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

lifelong friend.³¹⁷⁰

- Irene Michaletos was very close to Tsafendas between 1964 and 1965.³¹⁷¹
- John Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousin, met him in Lourenço Marques in 1951, and saw a lot of him in Mozambique between 1963 and 1965.³¹⁷²
- Antony Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousin, met him in Lourenço Marques in 1951 and saw a lot of him in Mozambique between 1963 and 1965.³¹⁷³
- Andreas Babiolakis knew Tsafendas since they were children.³¹⁷⁴
- Costas Chagios knew Tsafendas from 1965 until his arrest.³¹⁷⁵
- Alexandra Vaporidis knew Tsafendas for about six-seven months in Istanbul in 1961.³¹⁷⁶
- Joyce Dick, one of Helen Daniels's best friends and member of the Christian Church.³¹⁷⁷
- Peter Protoulis was a supplier of foodstuffs to the tanker Eleni. He met Tsafendas on board.³¹⁷⁸
- Miltiades Kaldis knew Tsafendas for about a year, having met him in 1965 in Cape Town.³¹⁷⁹
- Elias Constantaras met him in 1965 in Cape Town and saw him almost daily until his arrest.³¹⁸⁰
- Helen Grispos, another who grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques.³¹⁸¹
- Peter Peroglou ate at the same place as Tsafendas for several months in 1966.³¹⁸²
- Pamela Abrahams knew Tsafendas for several months in 1966.³¹⁸³

³¹⁷⁰ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

³¹⁷¹ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

³¹⁷² John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

³¹⁷³ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016.

³¹⁷⁴ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

³¹⁷⁵ Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015.

³¹⁷⁶ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

³¹⁷⁷ Joyce Dick in a personal interview, 6 August 2016.

³¹⁷⁸ Peter Protoulis in a personal interview, 3 August 2016.

³¹⁷⁹ Miltiades Kaldis in a personal interview, 12 March 2016.

³¹⁸⁰ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

³¹⁸¹ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

³¹⁸² Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

³¹⁸³ Pamela Abrahams in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

- Nick Augustides, the son of the owner of Mike's Outfitters in Cape Town for whom Tsafendas worked on commission for about two months in 1966.³¹⁸⁴
- Ten of the sailors of the Eleni saw Tsafendas every day for forty-two days and up to three days before the assassination.³¹⁸⁵

TSAFENDAS'S E.E.G.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: An E.E.G. was taken?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes. That was perfectly normal. That was done in my department at Groote Schuur.

JUDGE BEYERS: What is that?

DR. MACGREGOR: An electro encephalogram. That was perfectly normal.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is that finding inconsistent with your diagnosis of the accused's condition?

DR. MACGREGOR: It is perfectly consistent with schizophrenic process. It is not likely to be - one is not likely to have a normal E.E.G. In fact I think it is practically impossible to have a normal E.E.G. in a mental picture due to some years of organic process in the brain. In other words if this picture was due to brain damage back in 1959 we would have an abnormal E.E.G.

JUDGE BEYERS: Or if it was due to epilepsy?

DR. MACGREGOR: Or if it was due to epilepsy.

JUDGE BEYERS: You would see it there?

DR. MACGREGOR: We would almost certainly see it. I specifically got the technician to get him to overbreathe, flash lights at him which are ways of simulating the abnormal waves, and bringing them out if epilepsy is present.

JUDGE BEYERS: If I understand anything of what I have heard, and understand anything ³¹⁸⁴ Nick Augustides in a personal interview, 19 February 2016.

³¹⁸⁵ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Panteleimon Aspiotis in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 19 January 2016; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

about the subject of schizophrenia, you would find nothing?

DR. MACGREGOR: That is the usual finding, yes, in my experience. There are other people who say that they are rather abnormal waves, but this depends on the degree of dementia. If the schizophrenic patient is very demented, then you may get abnormal, rather irregular waves - not epileptiform waves. But when the personality, when the intellect is not too far deteriorated, the picture is nearly always a normal one, unless there is some other factor present, isn't the dysrhythmia of the waves caused "by the electric impulse passing through the tissues? Mustn't you by that time have a physiological change taking place?

DR. MACGREGOR: There must be a physiological change, yes. And this is one of the arguments which many psychiatrists put forward to the fact that they believe that schizophrenia is primarily

JUDGE BEYERS: It may have an organic background?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes.

TSAFENDAS'S THOUGHT-BLOCKING, PAST MEDICAL RECORDS AND DR. MACGREGOR'S PROGNOSIS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you find thought blocking?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes. In my first interview, not very much thought blocking. He paused. I was not very happy about putting this down as thought blocking. But in the second, and particularly in the third interview, he showed very marked thought blocking. On one occasion there was absolute silence for a timed period of just on two minutes. There were very many occasions when he stopped speaking for ten seconds, and would then go off at a complete tangent.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In short then, what is the accused's present mental state?

DR. MACGREGOR: I believe that he is suffering from schizophrenia. I would put I think it into the paranoid type. Dr. Sakinofsky put it in the paraphrenic type. I would not quarrel with this. A paraphrenic type is a subdivision of the paranoid type. I don't think one needs to be too exact as to which category one puts it in. That he is suffering from schizophrenia I have absolutely no doubt at all. That he is certifiable within the meaning of the Act I have also no doubt at all.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is it a long standing disease?

DR. MACGREGOR: I believe in his case it has gone on from at least 1946 or 1947, yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is the prognosis?

DR. MACGREGOR: I agree with the others in thinking the prognosis is hopeless. But it would be worthwhile giving him treatment, but I would not give it with any sanguinity.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where should this Court, in your opinion, send the accused?

DR. MACGREGOR: My opinion isn't worth very much, but, if I were asked, I would say he must be sent somewhere where he can be very closely watched and guarded, because he told us that on at least two occasions he has escaped from mental hospitals, once in Germany and once in Lisbon.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Should he be sent to an asylum?

DR. MACGREGOR: I don't think any ordinary asylum would hold this man for any length of time.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Finally, do you see any purpose whatsoever in having any further medical examination of this man?

DR. MACGREGOR: Not unless the Court were to ask me - I myself would not see any further purpose at all.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Just finally, you have seen the information from overseas concerning this man's past medical history and mental history?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is your comment on that? How important is that information?

DR. MACGREGOR: If that information is correct, I think it is absolutely consistent and confirmatory of the fact that this man has had chronic paranoid schizophrenia for many years.

COMMENTS ON DR. MACGREGOR'S ABOVE TESTIMONY

TSAFENDAS'S MEDICAL RECORDS

Dr. MacGregor states here that he has seen some "information from overseas" concerning Tsafendas's "past medical history and mental history." He then, surprisingly maybe, states that "if this information is correct ..." which suggests that he is unsure whether or not the information is correct. The author is not in a position to elaborate further on the subject as it does not know which information Dr. MacGregor is talking about. However, the likelihood must be that the information regarding Tsafendas's medical history was given to him verbally by the police and the defence, as in the case of van Zyl.

It seems unlikely that if he had seen a medical report from a British or an American hospital with his own eyes he would have asked if this information was correct. What seems likelier is that he was merely told of some of the contents. That he learned about Tsafendas's past history from Tsafendas himself can be adduced from his statement that Tsafendas "told us that on at least two occasions he has escaped from mental hospitals, once in Germany and once in Lisbon." This argues strongly that his source was Tsafendas, not any medical report. Most likely, as with van Zyl, he was given the summary of a medical report stating just that Tsafendas was diagnosed in such and such hospital as being a schizophrenic.

Furthermore, Dr. MacGregor was not aware of very important information regarding Tsafendas's medical history, such as the fact that he had faked mental illness before, that he claimed to hear voices in the early 1940s and that on at least four occasions he had shown signs of mental illness while being interrogated in detention. This again suggests that he had not seen the report with his own eyes and was probably told about the diagnosis only. Furthermore, the fact that he did not personally see any medical reports is also suggested by his statement at the beginning of his testimony that "time was precious" and he had "to take shortcuts. I accepted what was given to me about this man's life history, various dates and to which countries he had been." Dr. MacGregor also stated that he made his diagnosis on the basis of his interviews with Tsafendas alone without mentioning consulting any medical reports.

We should also mention here again that at least the report from the Grafton State Hospital did not become available to the defence before, at best, the 5th of October, when Dr. MacGregor and all the defence's expert witnesses, apart from Dr. Sakinofsky and van Zyl, had already examined Tsafendas twice and concluded that he was a schizophrenic.

DR. MACGREGOR'S PROGNOSIS

Dr. MacGregor's prognosis was that Tsafendas's condition was "hopeless," with doubts that treatment could help him. However, thirty-three years later witnesses declared that Tsafendas was perfectly fine. In all that time, he had received no treatment (at least not for the first twenty-eight years); for at least twenty-three years he was kept in solitary confinement for twenty-four hours per day, in a cell right next to the death chamber, often forced to watch the executions; he was frequently and severely beaten, deprived of books and newspapers and even contact with his fellow prisoners.

That Tsafendas was perfectly normal after that was testified by Alexander and Marie-Jose Moubarris, Dimitris Skoularikis, Liza Key, Rika Nikolatos and Fathers Minas Constandinou, Spiros Randos, Ioannis Tsafaridis and Michalis Visvinis. All these people visited or saw Tsafendas in prison or in the mental hospital to which he was eventually moved, and spent considerable time with him. None ever got the impression that Tsafendas was insane or “hopeless” in the way described by Dr. MacGregor and by the other psychiatrists at this summary trial. More importantly, after his long incarceration, Tsafendas explained in detail everything regarding Dr. Verwoerd’s assassination and his life. What he told these witnesses is entirely compatible with what two hundred people told the police and the author and completely incompatible with Dr. MacGregor’s and the other psychiatrists’ testimonies.

COMMENTS ON TSAFENDAS’S THOUGHT-BLOCKING

The issue has been discussed extensively in the testimonies of Dr. Sakinofsky and Dr. Zabow.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ASSISTANT OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

BRUNETTE: Can you perhaps remember when it was that you saw the accused for the first time?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes, on the 29th September. At about 6.30.

BRUNETTE: You say he was not certifiable on that day?

DR. MACGREGOR: I say I wasn’t very happy about considering him certifiable.

JUDGE BEYERS: The doctor never said anything of the kind. He said on the strength of the first interview he had with him he would have been doubtful whether he would at that stage certify him, which is quite different from your telling him that he says that at that stage he was not certifiable.

BRUNETTE: You would not have been prepared to certify him on that day?

DR. MACGREGOR: If I had been pressed to certify him on that day I would have asked for a longer interview. But I had about an hour and a half with him, and I knew there was no need to certify him on that day, and I knew I was going to have further opportunity of seeing him, so I thought to myself that I would just bide my time, but I did say in my report that I thought that he was probably certifiable.

BRUNETTE: You also mentioned that schizophrenics do move from one extreme to the other. So do you concede that you get remissionary periods?

DR. MACGREGOR: No, that is not what I meant, moving from one extreme - one extreme of emotional attitude - one extreme of an attitude towards a person, a negative attitude, perhaps disliking them, distrusting them, to a more positive attitude of liking them and trusting them. This has nothing to do with remissions. It is all part of the schizophrenic process.

BRUNETTE: Do you concede that there are periodic types?

DR. MACGREGOR: I concede that there are periodic types, but I would also agree with the last witness that - in my opinion these are virtually always the catatonic type. And I don't believe this patient is a catatonic type of schizophrenic. He had no evidence of catatonia when we saw him.

BRUNETTE: Did you get any information in probing the history of the accused that he had simulated suicide before?

DR. MACGREGOR: No, I knew nothing about any simulation of suicide.

JUDGE BEYERS: Simulated suicide - what on earth does that mean? He pretended to commit suicide?

BRUNETTE: He pretended. Feigned suicide.

JUDGE BEYERS: What does that mean, that he committed suicide but was not successful?

BRUNETTE: Unsuccessful, yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: Simulated suicide would mean that he pretended to commit suicide but didn't try it.

BRUNETTE: Perhaps I can put it in a better way: any of simulated abnormality?

DR. MACGREGOR: I know nothing in the reports that say that he simulated abnormality.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The only matter that remains at present is the subject that I raised at the commencement when I outlined my case, if I might call it that, and that is the taking of evidence on commission, I have prepared an application which I now want to formally place before your Lordship.

JUDGE BEYERS: This is not the stage to do it, nor will I deprive you of the right to do it. Should it, after evidence is led by the State, be necessary, I will allow you to make the application, and I will consider it on its merits. But obviously in granting or not granting leave to take evidence overseas, the first consideration is whether the evidence can assist the Court, if it is not necessary it obviously cannot assist the Court, I think you should wait, but I will allow you to make the application again, if necessary.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Subject to that, I have no further evidence to lead.

COMMENTS ON THE CROSS-EXAMINATION

The most astonishing part of Brunette's cross-examination is his reference to Tsafendas having simulated abnormality before. Even more extraordinary, although it is not spelled out, is that Brunette suggests that such information is in Tsafendas's medical records. It is unclear what Tsafendas is supposed to have done on this occasion and where this information came from, but the important thing here is that the State had in its possession such vital information and it had not been used, especially with the defence's psychiatrists. It seems that the State did not consider it important enough or for some reason deliberately did not bring this issue up when challenging the defence psychiatrists who had examined Tsafendas, even when the issue of simulation came up. As for Brunette's cross-examination, neither he nor the Attorney-General nor the judge saw fit to pursue the simulation angle and the matter was allowed to drop.

The Attorney-General's assistant refers initially to Tsafendas having simulated suicide. Although the author cannot be certain to which incident Brunette refers, this is probably in Hamburg when Tsafendas turned up at the Ochsenszoll Krankenhaus Hospital claiming falsely that he had attempted suicide by taking twenty sleeping pills. The fact that Tsafendas was lying does not appear anywhere in the reports from this hospital, so if this was the incident Brunette is referring to, how did he know about it? Tsafendas never discussed this particular incident with anyone who was interviewed by the author. However, he discussed the issue of suicide in philosophical and religious terms several times with the priests who visited him.

Tsafendas firmly believed that only a very brave man could commit suicide and considered himself not brave enough to do so. That was why, he said, he never contemplated suicide, not even when he was tortured in custody or in prison. Also, he considered suicide to be seriously sinful and since he was very religious, this was another reason why he never contemplated such an act.³¹⁸⁶ If he did not contemplate suicide at some of the worst times of his life, why would he do so in Hamburg? It is not impossible but very unlikely that the suicide attempt mentioned in Dr. Bieser's report was genuine. The more likely scenario, which would fit with Tsafendas's life style and ideas, is that being penniless and homeless in Hamburg, he admitted himself to the Tropen Krankenhaus Hospital claiming he had a tapeworm; when he was discharged, since no tapeworm was found, he was still penniless and homeless and so admitted himself to another hospital, lying that he had taken the twenty sleeping pills. It is possible that Brunette was referring to this incident, although the author did not find any evidence to support or contradict the possibility. It is merely the author's opinion based on Tsafendas's beliefs and modus operandi with the hospitals. If Brunette was referring to this incident, he got the information from a source that was not found in the archives or anywhere else by the author.

The only other reference to suicide in Tsafendas's medical records is from the United States in 1943, when he told the US Immigration he would commit suicide if he was deported. However, that was just a threat and obviously never carried it out. As for "simulating abnormality," the South African police were very well aware that Tsafendas had done such thing at least twice. The first was the report from the Grafton State Hospital which said that in 1943 Tsafendas had faked mental illness to avoid being shipped out; the second was when Tsafendas pretended to be mad so as to avoid compulsory service in the Portuguese Army in 1952, which was known to the police from witnesses' statements.

³¹⁸⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

CONCLUSION

Dr. MacGregor's testimony and diagnosis are very similar to those of the three other psychiatrists. He comes to the same conclusions and therefore the same misdiagnosis. There is a major difference to the other psychiatrists' testimonies, however, and this is that Dr. MacGregor admits freely that he was pressed for time and took "shortcuts" in order to complete his diagnosis, which was based exclusively on four and a half hours he spent with Tsafendas, without consulting any additional information.

The most important thing we learn from Dr. MacGregor's testimony is that the State was aware that Tsafendas had "simulated abnormality" before, but had not found it important enough to bring up with all the other defence witnesses. Another important element in his testimony is that he refers to "information from overseas," as if this information is inevitably correct. He is unlikely to be referring to actual medical reports, as he would have known they would be right. More likely, he is referring to information about Tsafendas's medical history that was given to him verbally, as was the case with van Zyl and very probably with the other psychiatrists, too. Dr. MacGregor's diagnosis and conclusions are entirely wrong, but he is hardly to blame since he made them only by talking to Tsafendas and without any supplementary information. Once again, the Attorney-General did nothing to challenge testimony despite the plethora of evidence which the South African police had in its possession.

Tsafendas remembered Dr. MacGregor warmly in later years, referring to him as "the Scottish psychiatrist." Father Minas does not remember exactly what Tsafendas said, except that he referred to him in positive terms, as he did with Dr. Zabow and Dr. Sakinofsky.³¹⁸⁷ ³¹⁸⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

DAY 4: 20 OCTOBER 1966

PROSECUTION WITNESS No. 1: JACOBUS ANDREAS JOHANNES ERASMUS

INTRODUCTION

Jacobus Erasmus, a clinical psychologist with an M.A. in Psychology, was working at the time at Weskoppies Hospital in Pretoria; he was the State's first expert witness.³¹⁸⁸

EXTRACTS FROM JACOBUS ERASMUS'S TESTIMONY³¹⁸⁹

BRUNETTE: On the 28th and 29th of September 1966 did you interview the defendant?

ERASMUS: Yes.

BRUNETTE: Did you perform certain tests?

ERASMUS: Yes.

BRUNETTE: Explain to the Court what these tests were - The Wechsler-Bellevue IQ Test; the Wechsler Memory Scales; the MMPI; the T.A.T. and the Rorschach Tests. Are these tests the same as those described to the Court by Dr. van Zyl?

ERASMUS: Yes, except that I did two additional tests.

BRUNETTE: What were your findings from the tests?

ERASMUS: I first did the Wechsler- Bellevue test. My findings were that his intellectual capacity was classified within the upper limits of the average. His IQ was 109. Whereas he has a higher potential intellectual capacity, this is diminished by restricting factors revealed by the patterns of the sub-tests of the Wechsler-Bellevue tests and the large difference between the verbal IQ of 117 and the practical IQ of 100.

³¹⁸⁸ Jacobus Andreas Johannes Erasmus' testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 20 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³¹⁸⁹ Jacobus Andreas Johannes Erasmus' testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 20 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

In order to determine these factors it is necessary to analyse the different sub-tests. Here there is a lowering of both the concentration capacity and the visual-motor coordination. This diminished concentration and attention capacity are attributable to the fact that the subject has difficulty in keeping his thoughts to one subject, his anxiety state, general anxiety and debilitation and depression. This would explain why the subject, Tsafendas, frequently repeats the questions put to him and is inclined to be long-winded. He would therefore find difficulty to direct his thoughts to one subject only because of these other possible problems. This could also derive from the acutely psychotic patient's being unable to concentrate. A prior psychotic episode could also lead to diminished capacity and poor concentration. Although this cannot be eliminated in this instance, it is unlikely given the good achievements in some of the other sub-tests and the absence of spread within the sub-tests.

The poor visual-motor coordination is due to the generalised apathy, slowness of the patient in performing motor tasks. He was unable to consistently perform the practical tasks in the given time. This phenomenon frequently occurs with patients who are in a debilitating state of anxiety and psychological disintegration. There is a formulary for psychological disintegration which is used in this test and it is 21%. At the patient's age, the expected level is 11%, which should then be corrected and then the rate of disintegration level of 10% for intellectual capacity, which places him on the borderline- which raises the doubt of whether he has disintegrated or not.

If it was higher than 10% one could have confirmed this. Although possible indications of disintegration were found, this was uncertain, and could have been explained with reference to his age or the presence of psychic tension.

Then I also used the Wechsler Memory Test in which he achieved an IQ of 106, which places him above the average of 100. The Wechsler Memory Test purpose is to test the memory and is equivalent to the IQ test, but has a memory quotient. Here Tsafendas had a good result, he had no defect in his memory.

Then I also performed the Rorschach Test where the results did not reveal any bizarre response distortions or perseveration or any other tendencies to disintegration. The responses were reasonably appropriate for the stimuli, but only minimal responses were given, which indicates a blockage or inability to react freely. The responses were also stereotypical. This test shows a weak ego development and an insufficient control of the tendency to act impulsively.

The subject therefore cannot strive towards adult objectives and often resorts to fantasy. He shows a strong tendency towards withdrawal from his surroundings. As a result of this, his evaluation of his surroundings is primarily subjective and he is incapable of objectivity. This is connected to and combined with his unfulfilled need for acceptance.

According to the Rorschach Test, the subject's personality development is on an infantile level, with a tendency to withdrawal; a stereotypical tendency towards a general withdrawal from reality. As a result of the small amount of responses given in this test because of the existing blockages in the subject, it is difficult to do an accurate analysis of this test.

There were 10 cards and he only responded to 7 or 8.

The above conclusions about the Rorschach Test were confirmed by the T.A.T. Test in which he gave logical responses showing a good insight into the motivations of the figures. He displayed a good grasp of the connection between self and the outside world and no distortions were found. Although the subject, (D.S.) connected well with the outside world, he was always reworking reality in terms of his own dream and fantasy world, without being involved in a realistic way.

Tsafendas sets extremely high ideals for himself, but is unable to take positive steps to achieve them, and rather believes in his own fantasy world and that his ideals would be achieved through supernatural and magical means.

JUDGE BEYERS: Is this not a textbook definition of a schizophrenic?

ERASMUS: Yes, it does fit in with that definition. Interpersonal interactions in the T.A.T. Test were acknowledged while these took place. However, because of the undertone of depression, these interactions were not experienced as satisfactory by D.S.

The M.M.P.I. Test is the Minnesota Multiphasic Personality Inventory Test which is a personality questionnaire containing many different items, including hypochondria, psychopathy, paranoia, schizophrenia. The subject is questioned and graded on each of the above scales. This test also has an invalid scale. When the subject does not answer the questions consistently, the test is invalidated and the result cannot be used. This is the case here with Tsafendas, who was careless and inconsistent in his answers and the result was thus invalid.

The high levels in the various scales were those of schizophrenia, depression, hypochondria and psychopathy. He achieved low scales for paranoia and manic tendencies. But I reiterate that the test results can be accepted because he was inconsistent in his answers.

JUDGE BEYERS: What is your conclusion after all your tests?

ERASMUS: What these tests especially show is that there are clear signs of schizophrenia from the signs of the blockages encountered, the poor capacity for concentration is often found, and the strong fantasy world. There are also aspects of the sub-tests which do not entirely fit in with the Wechsler-Bellevue Tests, particularly the various sub-tests with picture arrangement, where he did well and where his insights were also good. On the other hand, it is to be expected that the schizophrenic's intellectual capacity would not be affected and that the intelligence would remain on which level. Also, the history of the accused should also be considered, in which case it will be accepted that schizophrenia is present.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE DEFENCE COUNSEL

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Do you not contest the opinions of Drs. Zabow, Cooper and Sakinofsky that the accused before the Court is schizophrenic?

ERASMUS: No, I do not contest this.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: That he is untreatable?

ERASMUS: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: That he should be sent to an institution?

ERASMUS: In the light of the history...

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In the light of the evidence which has been presented to the Court?

ERASMUS: Correct, I do not contest it.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The Court can only come to one conclusion, do you agree?

ERASMUS: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: That he is mentally disturbed? Correct?

ERASMUS: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: That he ought to be certified? Correct?

ERASMUS: No answer...

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You just said so - yes - correct?

ERASMUS: Is it necessary that I give an opinion?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Yes, it is very necessary. I want an unanimous conclusion.

ERASMUS: Yes.

COMMENTS ON ERASMUS'S TESTIMONY

TSAFENDAS BEING "UNABLE TO DIRECT HIS THOUGHTS TO ONE SUBJECT ONLY"

According to Erasmus, Tsafendas "frequently repeats the questions put to him and is inclined to be long-winded. He would therefore find difficulty to direct his thoughts to one subject only. This is very similar to Dr. Cooper's diagnosis which said that Tsafendas was unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes.

Major Rossouw, head of the Security Police in Cape Town and a highly experienced interrogator, was the officer in charge of Tsafendas's interrogation. Rossouw questioned Tsafendas on several occasions over at least twenty days and the transcripts of two of these interrogations were found in the NASA and have been examined here. The first of these sessions lasted two days and the second seems to have taken a few hours. The second transcript contains Rossouw's questions and Tsafendas's answers. Rossouw told the Commission of Enquiry that Tsafendas "told the truth – I never got the impression that he tried to evade any question. He answered all the questions spontaneously" and he was "totally prepared to answer everything."³¹⁹⁰

Rossouw made no mention to Erasmus's comment that Tsafendas "frequently repeats the questions put to him ..." Indeed, reading both of the transcripts makes clear that there was no repetition. If something of the sort was observed by Rossouw, an experienced interrogator, he would have almost certainly mentioned it to the Commission and most probably called in a psychiatrist to examine Tsafendas. However, none of that happened.

Major Rossouw was not the only one who failed to observe the symptom mentioned by Erasmus. None of the two hundred or so witnesses questioned by the police and the Commission of Enquiry observed it either. Some expressed exactly contrary views. For example:

³¹⁹⁰ Major Rossouw testimony to the Commission of Enquiry, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

- Ralph Lighton, who worked with Tsafendas for nine-ten weeks at the Marine Diamond Corporation, “never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers.”³¹⁹¹
- Gillian Claire Lieberman, personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation, whose office Tsafendas often visited, “I had various discussions with him. I got quite interested in him as an individual. ... I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation.”³¹⁹²
- Neville Judson worked with Tsafendas for Mike’s Outfitters for forty-two days in July and August 1966, frequently driving him to the tanker Eleni while it was docked in Cape Town. Of Tsafendas, he told the police that he “never in no way got the impression that he could be mentally deranged. He appeared to be a normal man with normal reasoning powers.”³¹⁹³
- Cornelius Rudolph, the head court interpreter on the staff of the Magistrate of Durban appointed Tsafendas as a Portuguese and Greek interpreter. Rudolph used him “on several occasions” in a period of six months and “got to know him pretty well.” He testified that “I spoke with him several times, he seemed to be a normal person and intelligent. He spoke English properly.”³¹⁹⁴

The author asked forty-six witnesses who knew Tsafendas well if they thought that Erasmus’s diagnosis was correct and whether they had noticed anything of the sort with him. They all strongly disputed Erasmus’s conclusions. For example, Father Michalis Visvinis who visited Tsafendas for five years in prison (1989-1994) and got to know him very well, told the author:

“He [Tsafendas] was always very alert. I was actually surprised that his mind was so alert after so many years in prison. Most of our conversations lasted about an hour and a half and he never lost track, nor did I feel that he was struggling to cope with our discussion... I felt that he [Tsafendas] needed to speak, so several times I would just let him speak. He ³¹⁹¹ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³¹⁹² Gillian Claire Lieberman statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³¹⁹³ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

³¹⁹⁴ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

enjoyed speaking and he could speak for hours. I also often asked him questions about his life, and his answers were always logical and what one would expect. He never evaded any question and I never had to repeat myself to him for a second time, nor was his answer ever off the subject. I never noticed that, it never happened [Tsafendas being “unable to direct his thoughts to one subject only”]. I don’t think that this is true. His speech was always absolutely fine. He always spoke like a normal man. [His speech] was not disjointed or anything else. It was perfectly articulate and logical, always very coherent. He never said anything to suggest he had a mental problem or that he had any difficulty speaking or thinking and expressing himself properly.”³¹⁹⁵

Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis told the author:

“[Tsafendas] could speak for hours, telling you things about his life, his thoughts and his ideology, but he could also participate in a dialogue. We spoke for hours about politics, religion and history and he was one of the most knowledgeable people I ever met in all these subjects. He was very argumentative and insistent, especially about politics. He never got lost in the conversation and he would never drop a subject until I had agreed with him. He would never give up a conversation if you disagreed. He never, not even once, seemed to have difficulty expressing himself or talked incoherently. Every single time, everything he said made sense and was perfectly stated. I don’t believe for a moment that he could have talked in the way described by the psychiatrists unless he did it deliberately. He spoke and argued even better than most people. His speech and thought were perfectly fine.”³¹⁹⁶

For reasons of space, the study will list only a few of the other witnesses who were interviewed by the author, those who knew him best or longest:

- His half-sister Katerina Pnefma;³¹⁹⁷
- Ira Kyriakakis who grew up with him and spent a lot of time together in 1964 and 1965;³¹⁹⁸
- Andreas Babiolakis who knew him since they were children, lived with him for two months in 1964 and associated with him for about a year then;³¹⁹⁹
- Alexander Moumbaris who spent three months in a cell next to Tsafendas’s in Pretoria

³¹⁹⁵ Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

³¹⁹⁶ Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

³¹⁹⁷ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³¹⁹⁸ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

³¹⁹⁹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

Prison in 1972. They spoke every day for an hour when they exercised together in the prison yard. They met again in March 1996 at Sterkfontein Hospital,³²⁰⁰

- Thirteen crewmen from the Eleni who saw him every day for forty-two days in 1966;³²⁰¹
- Elias Constantaras who lived under the same roof for two months in Cape Town in 1966 and knew him for more than a year;³²⁰²
- Irene Michaletos who was very close to him for more than a year (1964-1965), when he often visited her house in Beira;³²⁰³
- John Michaletos, Irene's husband, Tsafendas's cousin and the son of Artemis's (Tsafendas's aunt who brought him up in Egypt), met Tsafendas in 1951 and associated with him in 1963-1965, getting to know him very well.³²⁰⁴
- Antony Michaletos, John's brother, met Tsafendas in 1951 and associated with him in 1963-1965, getting to know him very well.³²⁰⁵
- Alexandra Vaporidis who knew him for about six months in Istanbul in 1961;³²⁰⁶
- Nick Papadakis, who knew Tsafendas for two-three months and lived with him for two months in Mozambique in 1964;³²⁰⁷
- Panagiotis Peroglou, Stratis Vamvarapis, Antonis Nichas and Costas Chagios, who were Tsafendas's friends in Cape Town for more than a year.³²⁰⁸

³²⁰⁰ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017.

³²⁰¹ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Panteleimon Aspiotis in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 19 January 2016; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

³²⁰² Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

³²⁰³ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

³²⁰⁴ John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

³²⁰⁵ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016.

³²⁰⁶ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

³²⁰⁷ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

³²⁰⁸ Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015; Miltiades Kaldis in a personal interview, 12 March 2016; Antonis Nichas in a personal interview, 31 March 2016; Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016; Stratis Vamvarapis in a personal interview, 31 May 2016.

TSAFENDAS “CANNOT STRIVE TOWARDS ADULT OBJECTIVES AND OFTEN RESORTS TO FANTASY,” SHOWS A “STEREOTYPICAL TENDENCY TOWARDS A GENERAL WITHDRAWL FROM REALITY,” AND HE “SETS EXTREMELY HIGH IDEALS FOR HIMSELF, BUT IS UNABLE TO TAKE POSITIVE STEPS TO ACHIEVE THEM, AND RATHER BELIEVES IN HIS OWN FANTASY WORLD AND THAT HIS IDEALS WOULD BE ACHIEVED THROUGH SUPERNATURAL OR MAGICAL MEANS”

Erasmus’s above testimony is completely inaccurate. Tsafendas cherished many adult objectives which were more serious and highly principled than most peoples. For example, he was strongly in favour of the independence of Mozambique and wanted to see “a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the mother nation.”³²⁰⁹

Tsafendas campaigned constantly for independence, distributed books and leaflets and tried to raise awareness of this goal, while in 1938 he had attempted to raise awareness against Portugal’s forced cotton policy. For these very public efforts and other political activities in Mozambique, he was arrested five times and imprisoned three times by the Portuguese. More importantly, PIDE considered him to be a “partisan for the independence of Mozambique.”³²¹⁰

Another major objective was an end to apartheid; Tsafendas wanted to see “a government that would represent all South Africans,”³²¹¹ he wanted to bring about “a change of policy” in South Africa,³²¹² to “create a resistance to the regime of South Africa” and was even willing to do “anything that would get the South African regime out of power.”³²¹³ He strove to achieve this goal by smuggling anti-apartheid literature into the country, asking foreign visitors not to spend any money so as not to contribute to the apartheid economy.

Finally, he took the most drastic of measures to achieve his objective (or “fantasy” according to Dr. Erasmus) by killing the man he believed had created and was “the brains behind apartheid,”³²¹⁴ in the hope that “a change of policy would take place.”³²¹⁵ Certainly, independence for Mozambique and an end to apartheid in South Africa were “adult themes”

³²⁰⁹ PIDE Record of questions, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³²¹⁰ Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³²¹¹ Demitrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³²¹² Demitrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³²¹³ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³²¹⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

³²¹⁵ Demitrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

as Tsafendas strove tirelessly to achieve both goals. Of course, Erasmus was unaware of all this and diagnosed him according to what he was told by Tsafendas himself and the results of the tests he gave him.

None of the two hundred witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission of Enquiry at the time reported anything with the slightest resemblance to what Erasmus said. Furthermore, none of witnesses interviewed by the author (apart from the members of Tsafendas's defence team) agreed with Erasmus's diagnosis. People who knew Tsafendas well said that far from being withdrawn from reality, he was a firmly grounded yet highly principled idealist. We feel it is not necessary to include all the statements as we have seen the comments in previous testimonies. Was Tsafendas a dreamer living in a fantasy world because he wanted to see an independent Mozambique and to bring an end to apartheid? To paraphrase John Lennon, "you may say he was a dreamer, but he was not the only one..."

TSAFFENDAS "SHOWS A STRONG TENDENCY TOWARDS WITHDRAWAL FROM HIS SURROUNDINGS"

According to Erasmus, Tsafendas showed "a strong tendency towards withdrawal from his surroundings. As a result of this, his evaluation of his surroundings is primarily subjective and he is incapable of objectivity." Again, this is completely inaccurate. Two witnesses out of around two hundred who testified to the police said Tsafendas "did not mix freely and kept to himself most of the time,"³²¹⁶ and that he was "not very talkative."³²¹⁷ The vast majority declared the opposite:

- William Mare Volbrecht, a friend and schoolmate at the English Medium Primary School in Middleburg, testified to the police that Tsafendas was "never a loner and freely mingled with us."³²¹⁸ Tsafendas's half-sister, Katerina Pnefma, his first cousin who grew up with him in Egypt and Lourenço Marques, Mary Eintracht, and Ira Kyriakakis, Helen Grispos and Andreas Babiolakis, who also grew up with him, agreed with Volbrecht's comment and said that from childhood Tsafendas was sociable, friendly and very

³²¹⁶ Charles Edwin Woods statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³²¹⁷ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³²¹⁸ William Mare Volbrecht statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Verklaring deur Majdor Venter. NASA.

talkative.³²¹⁹

- An unnamed “respected member of the Press gallery” in the House of Assembly “who knew Tsafendas well” spoke to René MacColl, Daily Express’s chief foreign correspondent, about Tsafendas. He said that “far from being a withdrawn sort of man, he seemed to be intent on impressing his personality on one. There was always the big smile, the ready chat and an almost obsessive intention to make you remember him. There couldn’t have been a less grey or faceless figure.”³²²⁰
- Keith Martincich who worked with him at the Marine Diamond Corporation testified that Tsafendas “spoke to me every day and I got the impression that he was sociable type.”³²²¹
- J. Willemse was Tsafendas’s landlord for one month in 1965. He characterised him as a “sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man.”³²²²
- Hulse who worked with him at the Marine Diamond Corporation for nine or ten weeks said “Tsafendas was very talkative and always expressed his...”³²²³
- Ian Boswell of the Department of Labour, in his description of Tsafendas, included the phrase, “aside from being over talkative ...”³²²⁴
- Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys, employment officer at the Department of Labour, testified that “he was very talkative.”³²²⁵
- Owen Smorenberg who worked with him for five-six weeks, testified that “Tsafendas was very talkative and gave the impression that he was very friendly. He wanted to talk to everybody and it became known to me that he was able to speak different languages.”³²²⁶
- Albert Vercueil, his boss at F.A. Poole Engineering for five months found him to be a ³²¹⁹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³²²⁰ Daily Express, ‘Was It Murder Incorporated?’, 9 September 1966: 2.

³²²¹ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³²²² Sunday Times (Johannesburg), ‘Assassin - Man With A Chip On His Shoulder’, 11 September 1966: 1, 8.

³²²³ Hulse statement to the police, 28 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; The edge of the document was not copied, so the word is missing.

³²²⁴ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

³²²⁵ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

³²²⁶ Owen Smorenburg statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Leer W.D. 10/10/ 4102 oor Stafendas. NASA.

“very friendly, social and talkative person.”³²²⁷

- August Karel Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria. He found him to be “very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet.”³²²⁸
- Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden worked with Tsafendas for some three months at the Marine Diamond Corporation and testified that “he was friendly, outgoing, and was not aloof.”³²²⁹
- Tsafendas made a “good impression” on his colleagues in Frankfurt; they said he was “always smiling” and characterized him as being “very kind”, “a nice guy” and a “good comrade.”³²³⁰
- Jacobus Bornman, his flatmate for two months, summed Tsafendas up as “a friendly and plausible person.”³²³¹
- Jose Lopez Baltazar a fireman in Beira, testified that “when Tsafendas was in the presence of Whites he said little or nothing, but was friendly and talkative with the Bantu.”³²³²
- Reginald Maile, shipguard on the Eleni, testified that Tsafendas was “on very friendly relations with the crew.”³²³³
- Neville Judson worked with Tsafendas for two months and testified to the police that he had “a very friendly way of talking.”³²³⁴ He later said that Tsafendas was “overly talkative and sociable.”³²³⁵

³²²⁷ Albert Vercual statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³²²⁸ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³²²⁹ Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden statement to the police, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³²³⁰ PIDE’s News Digest; Le Courrier d’Afrique, ‘Em Torno Do Assassinado do Primeiro Ministro Sulafricano; Versoes Contraditorias Circulam Sobre A Personalidade Do Assassino’, 9 September 1966: 1. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Daily Dispatch, ‘He Made A Good Impression’, 8 September 1966: 1; Natal Witness, ‘Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...’, 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, ‘Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte’, 8 September 1966.

³²³¹ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³²³² Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

³²³³ Reginald Robert Maile statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

³²³⁴ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

³²³⁵ Lambley, The Psychology of Apartheid, p. 241.

- Michaelis Augustides, Tsafendas's employer for two months, also found him to be "overly talkative and sociable."³²³⁶
- Panagiotis Peroglou who knew Tsafendas for about a year, testified to the police but his statements have gone missing. However, in a personal interview, he and his wife Pamela Abrahams, who had also met Tsafendas, characterised him as "very talkative, courteous and friendly."³²³⁷

Perhaps the most convincing proof that Tsafendas did not tend to "withdraw from his surroundings" as Erasmus suggested, comes from the following two incidents:

Guenter Haafe was the doorman at the Frankfurt factory where Tsafendas worked for six weeks in 1958. Haafe was interviewed eight years later, shortly after the assassination, and vividly remembered the jovial greeting Tsafendas gave him every morning:

"He was a jolly man, always smiling and friendly. He would almost always come into my locker (room) to say Hi. He was really one of the friendliest workers I have met and trust me, in my twelve years as a doorman I have seen thousands and thousands of faces coming in and out. This man was courteous, they do not make them like that anymore."³²³⁸

In addition, Horst Hartmann, Tsafendas's chief on the Frankfurt job, said Tsafendas was "well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous ... a very pleasant man. He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman,"³²³⁹ "we liked him ... always laughing, a good worker."³²⁴⁰

³²³⁶ Lambley, The Psychology of Apartheid, p. 241.

³²³⁷ Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

³²³⁸ Natal Witness, 'Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...', 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 'Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte', 8 September 1966; The Daily News, 'Tsafendas Seen As 'Mystery Man'', 8 September 1966: 17.

³²³⁹ Natal Witness, 'Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...', 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 'Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte', 8 September 1966; The Daily News, 'Tsafendas Seen As 'Mystery Man'', 8 September 1966: 17.

³²⁴⁰ Daily Express, 'The Assassin', 8 September 1966: 2.

Furthermore, Fotini Gavasiadis said that while Tsafendas worked at her brother's café, he "was always with a smile in his mouth, chatting and joking with the customers ... he was very popular, especially with the older customers. Some of them were coming to the café just to talk to him. They were quite old and had no else to talk to. Dimitris patiently listened to their stories or whatever they had to say. He always had a comforting word for them and for those who needed it."³²⁴¹

While in Beira in 1964, Tsafendas attended the wedding of Vittorio, an Italian friend and fellow Communist, probably from Naples, who was working with him at the time. As the celebrations proceeded, Tsafendas rose from his chair and raised his glass. Everyone thought he was about to deliver a speech. He did indeed deliver a very short speech wishing the newly-weds well, but then, in a ringing baritone, he launched passionately into an Italian Communist song. Most of the Greeks among the guests were speechless, but Vittorio and his Italian friends joined in eagerly, clapping and rhythmically pounding the table with their fists or spoons. When he finished he received huge applause and Vittorio and some of his friends called for another song. Tsafendas obliged with a second Italian Communist anthem and again many guests joined him.³²⁴²

As well as the witnesses questioned by the police, all the witnesses interviewed by the author characterised Tsafendas as very friendly, very sociable and very talkative. None agreed with Erasmus's diagnosis. Their testimonies cannot be listed here for reasons of space, but the words of those reproduced above clearly prove Erasmus was wrong.

CONCLUSION

Erasmus's diagnosis is mostly based on the tests he conducted on Tsafendas. These showed Tsafendas as a completely different person to the one described by two hundred and fifty people to the police, to the Commission and to the author. Again, Erasmus did not have any other information about Tsafendas apart from what he heard from him. Some thirty years later, Tsafendas characterised the psychological tests he took while he was in custody as "childish stuff."³²⁴³

Asked by the author to comment on the psychological tests, Professor Burke said:

³²⁴¹ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

³²⁴² Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

³²⁴³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

“Back in those days, the psychological tests were very unsophisticated, so you could have had results, and it could have been argued one of two ways to say it proves or disproves. It was never an exact science. Whether the interpretation was right or wrong, the Rorschach ink blot test was never a scientific tool, it was mainly a projective test, and, as in psychology, there are many approaches to things. So by saying it was incorrect, you could also say, ‘It was not the way I would have done it,’ so whether it was correct or incorrect doesn’t really matter.

The fact is that those tests and the interpretation of those tests, were always open to interpretation. You could have done it, come to me with the results, and I would have looked at the same results and I would have come up with a different conclusion, so whether it was done correctly or incorrectly, is neither here nor there. The test could, at most, say that there is a possibility of schizophrenia, at the very most, but you could never make an accurate diagnosis. There are people who would argue that you could, but you could never make an accurate diagnosis of schizophrenia based on that test, or on any test for that matter.

I still think that your best instrument for making a diagnosis like this is what the people around you say, and your assessment of the functioning of the person; that gives you the best idea. The psychological tests would confirm what you have picked up, so what you would always have with any kind of diagnostic assessment is, you would have your observations of the patient, the information you get from the people around, and your psychological tests, and then you pick up themes. If you pick up the same themes in those three areas, then you say, ‘This is the diagnosis.’ If it’s only in one of those areas, you can’t confirm the diagnosis until you’ve got some kind of confirmation from other areas, as well, so it’s a weak way of making a diagnosis.”³²⁴⁴

However, the most important thing here is not Erasmus’s testimony as it was given to the court, but the fact that he had diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic from the 29th of September. This is highly significant because it means that since he was one of the State’s two expert witnesses, he must have been given his diagnosis to the Attorney-General, the man who appointed him in the first place, before he testified in the court. What makes this even more important is the fact that the State’s other expert witness, Adolph van Wyk, a Professor of Psychiatry, had also found Tsafendas to be a schizophrenic. Therefore despite the fact that both of the State’s experts found Tsafendas to be insane, thus agreeing with the defence, the Attorney-General appeared to be “sceptical” about the defence’s witnesses, questioning them extensively, when his own experts had already come to the exactly same conclusion. The issue will be discussed in detail in Professor van Wyk's testimony which follows.

³²⁴⁴ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016.

PROSECUTION WITNESS No. 2: PROFESSOR ADOLF JOHANNES VAN WYK

PROFESSOR VAN WYK'S PROFESSIONAL BIOGRAPHY AS RELATED BY HIM TO THE COURT

Adolf Johannes van Wyk qualified as a physician in 1938, with the degrees M.B., Ch.B., and worked in general practice until 1949. He then began specialising in psychiatry, gained the DPM diploma and was placed on the register as a specialist-psychiatrist. From that time, he worked solely in the field of mental disorders and psychiatry. Professor van Wyk was appointed consulting psychiatrist in the prisons, carried out many observations for the State and testified often in court. His prison work included occasionally interviewing prisoners who had been sentenced to death on behalf of the State President. His appointments included Professor of Psychiatry at the University of Pretoria, head of the Department of Psychiatry, Senior Psychiatrist of the General Hospital, and also Adjunct Commissioner of Mental Health of the Republic of South Africa.³²⁴⁵ Professor van Wyk, as State's expert witness, had also examined John Harris.³²⁴⁶

PROFESSOR VAN WYK'S TESTIMONY³²⁴⁷

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Have you observed the accused?

PROF. VAN WYK: Yes, I saw the accused on five occasions: on 23 September, on 24 September, on 4 October, on 13 October and on 14 October.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You were in the Court all the time that the psychiatrists for the defence testified, is that so?

³²⁴⁵ Professor Adolf Johannes van Wyk's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³²⁴⁶ Cooper, Under Devil's Peak: The Life and Times of Wilfrid Cooper, An Advocate in the Age of Apartheid, p. 107.

³²⁴⁷ Professor Adolf Johannes van Wyk's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

PROF. VAN WYK: Yes, I was present the whole time and I also possess certain reports of his illnesses overseas, which I also studied. The last one which I received from the Ochsenzoll Hospital in Hamburg is also in my possession.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: I would like you to give your conclusions to the Judge and his learned assessors.

PROF. VAN WYK: If one undertakes to observe and study a particular case, particularly if it is current, the first thing to consider is simulation. It is something which one should definitely distinguish, and then, even if one finds a psychological problem, in the second instance one must determine – even if there is a psychological problem, that does not imply irresponsibility – is the accused so affected by the mental state that he is not responsible for his deed?

And these were the two things which were uppermost in my mind the whole time that I had the accused under observation. During the first two observations, on the 23rd and the 24th, I was a little uncertain, because the man was very evasive, and one could not really place him, to determine to what extent there was simulation, and I felt at that time that I definitely would not certify him with the information and with the interviews which I had had with him until then. I wanted to know more about his background; I wanted to know more about the motivation for the act, would he be able to give this? Although he was evasive in that respect, it could also be a schizophrenic symptom. They often say “I don’t know. It may be.” That is a disturbance in thought processes. Because they cannot adequately express their thoughts, they answer in a seemingly evasive way. To what extent had he tried to evade giving the real reason? And I wanted to know more about the background.

On the 4th of October I found a symptom in the accused which definitely appeared spontaneously and which made me definitely decide that he was schizophrenic and that it was a disturbance of the self, of a passivity phenomenon, in the sense that the person blames influences outside himself for his thoughts, emotions and actions.

JUDGE BEYERS: Does one call this, the impassiveness, passive/passivity phenomenon?

PROF. VAN WYK: Passivity phenomenon?

JUDGE BEYERS: Yes, or a disturbance of the self? He regards himself as a sort of instrument?

PROF. VAN WYK: Yes, as a robot operated by someone else. I can give a good example. I dealt with a non-white young woman who kicked over fire buckets and had fights and then said that it was not she, but her late brother who had done it. In other words, she was totally passive and was taken over by an outside influence. Something happened which persuaded me that it was not simulation. This came out after Mr. Bloomberg was present at the interview and I asked him about the tapeworm – and I definitely put leading questions to him and he had the chance, should he have wanted to simulate, that he could have done so. Then I asked him: can you tell me why you travelled around so much in the world? He pondered this for a while and then he said to me: “You know, doctor, in the beginning I thought I did it myself. It was voluntary, it was by myself, but you know now I realise that it was the tapeworm that made me travel over the whole world.” Then I followed this up in the afternoon, without Mr. Bloomberg – it was perhaps unauthorised, but I felt concerned. So that afternoon I again interviewed him from 3 to 4 and then I focussed more on this and gave him more chance to talk and that afternoon he said to me,: “Doctor, sometimes I say things (this came out spontaneously) sometimes I say things to people and they get annoyed with me and actually it is not I who says these things, but the tapeworm which forces me to say those things.”

That is definitely a cardinal symptom of schizophrenia. But until that time I had not realised the extent of the schizophrenic condition and to what extent and whether it rendered him certifiable. And whether the tapeworm was just a secondary delusional- imaginary interpretation of the passivity phenomenon.

It happens that a person can display the passivity phenomenon, and then he begins to explain the passivity phenomenon by saying that he has been hypnotised, or another influence is at work on him. Is it in the passivity that the tape worm manifests? Or is it just a delusional- imaginary interpretation of a passivity phenomenon?

But after later on, after one had heard the person’s history here in the Court, I had to come to the conclusion that it – the tapeworm - is actually a primary delusional imaginary thing, and that it was not just an imaginary interpretation of his passivity manifestations.

JUDGE BEYERS: I think I follow you.

PROF. VAN WYK: And with taking this into consideration, the mental disturbance which in the beginning was vague, later with more interviews – and we all know that thought disturbances in schizophrenia are often difficult to find. When one has an interview with a patient on his own you may not find any thought disturbance. When he is on his own and is at ease and feeling good, he does not have to show you a thought disturbance. But if you encounter him where he has to talk in front of an audience or in a situation where there is a certain amount of emotion, the thought disturbance phenomenon is displayed. Often it manifests typically and very nicely. And with the first interviews he only displayed roundabout statements and long-windedness and evasiveness and I was not sure what this was all about – was it just a thought disturbance or was it just evasiveness?

But during my interviews with him on the 13th and 14th – and I should have wanted to see him again on the 15th, but it was not possible for me, the defence needed to see him and I was unable to do so – it became clear to me that there was definitely a measure of thought disturbance present with him. And with all the information available to me, beside the fact of the murder, as consulting psychiatrist, if I had encountered this person with all the information now available, I would have had to certify him. There was no question but that it fell within the ambit of the Mental Health Act of 1916.

JUDGE BEYERS: You say that other than the murder, but the murder itself meets one of the requirements, namely that he is a danger to others?

PROF. VAN WYK: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: So, at the moment, if today this problem was put forward to you and this man was sent to you today and you were asked: “Must he be certified, yes or no?” - would you have any doubt today?

PROF. VAN WYK: No, there will be no doubt at all. He can commit a crime but it does not have to be as a result of his mental illness, and I felt – after all that one has heard – that, he said to me for example “There was a pressure building up” and I had the feeling that it was because of the tapeworm, and he said: “ It had to break out some time”, and then he became a little evasive about this situation, and it kept on building up, this mental illness of his, and he said to me that he never knew that it would manifest in such a manner, and to a certain extent he blamed the doctors. At one stage he said to me that he had consulted the doctors and that they never put him in a hospital or put him into an institution. He said that if they had done so, this would never have happened.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE DEFENCE COUNSEL

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Do you agree, on the fourth day of this enquiry, with the opinion that Dr. Cooper so stoutly defended on the first day of this enquiry?

PROF. VAN WYK: That the man is certifiable under the Mental Disease Act?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Yes, that he suffers from schizophrenia?

PROF. VAN WYK: Yes, but it is not a conclusion which I have only reached today. I came to that conclusion before.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: So you also agree with Dr Zabow, Dr MacGregor, and Dr Sakinofsky?

JUDGE BEYERS: But this witness has already said what you want. Can you possibly get more? It says much for you that you took a time in coming to your conclusion. One does not make up one's mind hastily about these things. It is a responsible task and it redounds to your honour that you did not come to a hasty conclusion but that you took your time and gradually reached your conclusion. I appreciate it.

COMMENTS ON PROFESSOR VAN WYK'S DIAGNOSIS

Before we examine this development, we should examine Professor van Wyk's testimony. Professor van Wyk stated that he wanted to know more about Tsafendas's background and "motivation for the act." However, instead of seeking additional information from Tsafendas's friends and family, as Dr. Sakinofsky and Professors Tuviah Zabow, Burke, Heilbrun and Resnick all recommended, Professor van Wyk attempted to get the information from Tsafendas himself, just like Dr. Cooper, Dr. Aubrey Zabow and Dr. MacGregor. He, too, accepted what he was told without question. He could very easily have found what he was looking for in the two statements Tsafendas gave to the police. He could also have got much information from the about two hundred statements the police and the Commission of Enquiry took from people who knew him.

Professor van Wyk also states that he was in possession of "certain reports" from overseas hospitals and that the last one he received was from Ochsenzoll Hospital in Hamburg. There is no mention of the Grafton State Hospital report, which was certainly in the possession of the South African police since September 16,³²⁴⁸ or of the report by the ³²⁴⁸ Letter of the USA Embassy in Cape Town to the South African Security Branch, 3 October 1966. Correctional Service. Subject: Demitrio Tsafendas. File: 80/0043 A123 Vol. 1. NASA.

Government Hospital in Beira. The author is not in position to know whether these reports were in Professor van Wyk's possession. If they were, as they should have been, he never referred to Tsafendas faking mental illness while in the USA and that he believed he was Saint Peter just two years ago in Mozambique.

In his diagnosis, Professor van Wyk stated that he gave Tsafendas the opportunity to simulate by offering him leading questions which Tsafendas did not fall for. Professor van Wyk seems unaware or ignored the fact that Tsafendas had been caught pretending to be mad and that he was experienced with psychiatrists. The Commission of Enquiry, which had no psychiatrist, noted that Tsafendas is "quite knowledgeable about mental disorders—he also admitted to the Commission that he had read fairly extensively on the subject in order to determine what was wrong with him... and [the Commission] therefore adopted a somewhat sceptical attitude towards him. It is clear that his word cannot be relied upon, and that he is sufficiently intelligent to put on a fairly good act."³²⁴⁹ Although this was evident to the Commission, it was not evident to Professor van Wyk, who was a psychiatrist and accepted everything Tsafendas said.

We will not examine the tapeworm again, but we should look at two of the things Tsafendas told Professor van Wyk about it: "Sometimes I say things to people and they get annoyed with me and actually it is not I who says these things, but the tapeworm which forces me to say those things" and "You know, doctor, in the beginning I thought I did it myself. It was voluntary, it was by myself, but you know now I realise that it was the tapeworm that made me travel over the whole world."

Firstly, Tsafendas repeatedly called his travels "forced globetrotting." He used this description with several people and even on his affidavit. He said he had to live "like a gypsy" because he was exiled from Mozambique, barred from South Africa and continually persecuted in Portugal. He never mentioned the tapeworm as a reason for his travels to anyone, not even to the police. Both of the alleged tapeworm statements were read by the author to forty-six witnesses who knew Tsafendas very well. Not even could accept that Tsafendas believed what he was saying. Since the issue with the alleged statements has also been discussed before, I would not again list the people's reaction to them.

Professor van Wyk also said in his testimony: "when one has an interview with a patient on his own you may not find any thought disturbance. When he is on his own and is at ease and feeling good, he does not have to show you a thought disturbance. But if you encounter him where he has to talk in front of an audience or in a situation where there is a certain amount of emotion, the thought disturbance phenomenon is displayed.” This is an inaccurate diagnosis. Again, all of the forty-six witnesses who were asked about the above statement strongly deny that this was the case with Tsafendas. Since it would be impractical to include everyone’s statement, the study will present only the following five examples contradicting Professor van Wyk’s diagnosis.

³²⁴⁹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18.

From the mid-1930s to 1939 and then again in 1964 Tsafendas voluntarily taught English and History to Greek and Mozambican children in Mozambique.³²⁵⁰ Ira Kyriakakis one of his students, strongly dismisses Professor van Wyk’s diagnosis. Kyriakakis said, “Dimitris really loved teaching. You could tell. He was a natural talent. Of course he did not have any issue talking in front of us. How would he have taught if he had a problem?”³²⁵¹

In 1961, Tsafendas worked for about six months as a teacher at the best private language college in Turkey. Naturally, he had to talk in front of an audience five days per week and clearly this was no problem since the owner of the college, Mr. Limasollu Naci, tried to keep him on his staff and when he left gave him a positive reference. Furthermore, for six or seven months also in 1961, Tsafendas taught English to Greek and Turkish children in Istanbul. Father Nikola Banovic and Alexandra Vaporidis were often present at the lessons, which were held in a room near the Greek Orthodox church of Panagia in the city’s Pera Taxi district.

Asked about Professor van Wyk’s diagnosis, Father Nikola said:

“No, we never understood anything like this. (Tsafendas) loved teaching and he was clearly enjoying it. He was really good, really, really good. He was funny and witty and at the end of each lesson, he would tell the students a story about his travels. All the students waited for that. I was not present at the classes he had at Mr. Limasollu’s college, but I was told by Mr. Limasollu that he was exactly the same with the students there. They all adored him. He made a very positive contribution to the Greek community here and after he left, we all missed him, especially the children... For many years, they asked, ‘When is Mr Dimitris

³²⁵⁰ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Irene and John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Katerina Pnelfma in a personal interview, 29 April 2015; Costas Poriadis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

³²⁵¹ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

coming back?’ He never showed any thought disturbance while he was teaching or any time he was with us. He was always perfectly fine.”³²⁵²

Alexandra Vaporidis also lived in Istanbul at the time. She did not know Tsafendas well, but her husband, Father Agathagos Vaporidis, was very close to him. Tsafendas had dinner once in her house and she often spoke to him at church and was present at some of his classes. “I saw him teaching many times although we only spoke briefly each time at the end of the lesson. I never noticed anything to be wrong with him while he was teaching or any other time. He seemed to enjoy teaching and the children enjoyed it too. They were all very sad when he left.”³²⁵³

Andreas Babiolakis and Nick Papadakis went often with Tsafendas at the Scala Café in 1964 in Beira, where many Greeks gathered. Both strongly deny that Tsafendas had any kind of thought problems and insist that he enjoyed talking in front of an audience about politics. Both remember an incident in Gondola when Tsafendas attended the wedding of Vittorio, an Italian friend and fellow Communist, who was working with him at the time. As the celebrations proceeded, Tsafendas rose from his chair and raised his glass. He delivered a very short speech wishing the newly-weds well and then in a ringing baritone, launched passionately into an Italian Communist song. Most of the Greeks were speechless, but Vittorio and his Italian friends joined in eagerly, clapping and pounding the table. When he finished, Tsafendas received huge applause and Vittorio called on him to sing another one. Tsafendas duly sang another Italian Communist anthem and again many guests joined him.³²⁵⁴

³²⁵² Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

³²⁵³ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 10 October 2015.

³²⁵⁴ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

Fotini Gavasiadis also strongly denies that Tsafendas had any such issue. She said that when Tsafendas worked at her brother's coffee shop for nearly nine months, "he talked constantly with the customers. A lot of them, especially very old men, would come to the shop just for him, to talk about history, religion and his travels. He avoided talking to them about politics because he believed they were all or most of them supporters of apartheid. No, he had no problems talking in front of an audience. He was perfectly fine, as he was at all other times."³²⁵⁵

Professor van Wyk also stated that Tsafendas's "thought disturbance" becomes evident with "a certain amount of emotion." However, while Tsafendas was in custody in Caledon Square, which certainly could be classified as a time of high emotion, he displayed no signs of disturbance, certainly not in his two statements. Speech and thought processes are entirely logical. It had been the same in November 1964 when Tsafendas was interrogated by PIDE agents in Mozambique accused of conducting propaganda for the independence of Mozambique. He was questioned by PIDE's Sub-Inspector, Joaquim Piçara Sabino, Brigade Chief Augusto de Sousa Maia, and agent Virgílio Francisco.³²⁵⁶ He told them clearly and logically that he wanted to see "a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the mother nation."³²⁵⁷ Inspector Horacio Ferreira, who was in charge of the police cells where Tsafendas was kept characterised him as being "intense anti-white" and convinced that "the Portuguese Government has never done anything for its non-whites." He added that Tsafendas was "normal" and he regarded him "as a very intelligent person."³²⁵⁸

PROFESSOR VAN WYK'S DIAGNOSIS AND THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Professor van Wyk was the last witness to testify in the summary trial, bringing it to an "abrupt end," as David Bloomberg and Wilfrid Cooper rightly said.³²⁵⁹ It was abrupt, because no one expected the State's main witness to give such evidence. The defence team was under the impression that Professor van Wyk had diagnosed Tsafendas as being able to follow the ³²⁵⁵ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 11 June 2016.

³²⁵⁶ PIDE Record of questions. 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³²⁵⁷ PIDE Record of questions, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³²⁵⁸ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, File 1/5. FILE Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

³²⁵⁹ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 98.

trial proceedings and would not mention anything about schizophrenia. Professor van Wyk's report, written before October 6 although the exact date is not known to the author, had said:

“He is orientated. He gives a good account of himself. His comprehension is good and his answers are relevant. His emotional responses are adequate and apt. His discourse is coherent. At times he is discursive, but not vague and he never strays from the main point of conversation. The tests indicate that his intellectual abilities are above average. He maintains that he is infested with a tapeworm, and that this influences his life. He denies that he suffers from hallucinations. I have found no indications that he is incapable of following the court proceedings or that he is unable to exercise his rights and privileges and instruct his legal advisers and assist them in the conduct of his defence.”³²⁶⁰

This report was given to the defence team on October 6. By that time Professor van Wyk had seen Tsafendas three times (September 23, 24 and October 4). The other State witness, Erasmus, the psychologist, had testified just a few minutes before Professor van Wyk that he had examined Tsafendas on September 28 and 29 and his tests had revealed “clear signs of schizophrenia.” However, Professor van Wyk's report says nothing about signs of schizophrenia and states the tests showed that Tsafendas was “very intelligent.”

The question is: why did Professor van Wyk not include in his initial report that the other State witness, Erasmus, had found signs of schizophrenia? He must have discussed the case with him as they were both State's expert witnesses and the psychologist's job was to perform the tests and support the psychiatrist's diagnosis. It seems highly unlikely that van Wyk was unaware of Erasmus's tests, as he specifically refers to tests that showed Tsafendas's intelligence. These were the tests carried out by Erasmus, as he testified a few minutes earlier. There seem to be five possibilities:

- The tests were differently interpreted at the time and Erasmus did not find “clear signs of schizophrenia” then; that would explain why this is not in Professor van Wyk's report. Perhaps Erasmus later changed his mind regarding the interpretation of the tests, maybe also influenced by Professor van Wyk's diagnosis, and discovered the “clear signs of schizophrenia.” That would explain what he told the court and why such information was absent from Professor van Wyk's report. It would also agree with Professor Burke's statement that the “those tests and the interpretation of those tests, were always open to interpretation.”³²⁶¹

³²⁶⁰ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 81.

- Erasmus told Professor van Wyk that the tests showed that Tsafendas as very intelligent but forgot to mention that there were also “clear signs of schizophrenia.”
- Erasmus told Professor van Wyk that there were “clear signs of schizophrenia” in the tests and the Professor forgot to include it in his report.
- Professor van Wyk did not consider the tests as accurate and dismissed them, accepting only results of the intelligence tests.
- For some reason Professor van Wyk deliberately omitted it from his report.

The author cannot think of any other reason why Prof. van Wyk’s initial report did not contain the findings of Erasmus’ tests as they were presented in the court and it does not mention anything about Tsafendas’s alleged schizophrenia. Very importantly he found Tsafendas to be “orientated,” giving “a good account of himself. His comprehension is good and his answers are relevant. His emotional responses are adequate and apt. His discourse is coherent. At times he is discursive, but not vague and he never strays from the main point of conversation.” The above diagnosis completely contradicts the diagnosis of Dr. Cooper, Dr. Sakinofsky and Dr. Zabow.

However, Professor van Wyk also stated that he later, on October 4, he changed his mind and diagnosed Tsafendas as a schizophrenic. This was confirmed when he examined Tsafendas twice more on October 13 and 14, four and three days before the beginning of the trial. Since both of the State’s witnesses had diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic, therefore agreeing with the defence’s line and experts, which was known at the time to the State, the question is: Why did the Attorney-General appear so sceptical of the defence’s witnesses? The State was aware of the defence’s line since the 6th of October, so if van den Berg disagreed or doubted the diagnosis of his two expert witnesses, which was identical with the defence’s line, and really believed that Tsafendas was fit to stand trial, he could have very easily appointed additional psychiatrists and psychologists to examine him. However, he did not do such thing and the reason must have been because he must have accepted his witnesses’ opinion.

Both David Bloomberg and Wilfrid Cooper were surprised by this as they believed that since the State’s experts had already agreed with the defence’s experts, there was no need for this line of questioning. Bloomberg said about the incident: “One presumed that the Attorney-General knew what evidence his psychologist and psychiatrist would be giving. If that was the case, why did he challenge, in cross-examination, the evidence of the defence witnesses, when he knew that his own witnesses agreed with them, and allow Dr Harold Cooper, in particular, to be tested so vigorously and sceptically by the judge?”³²⁶² Gavin Cooper, son of Wilfrid Cooper, also wrote about his father’s surprise: “... they were left puzzled as to why, if the State had known what their experts were going to say when they took the stand, the Attorney-General had cross-examined Dr. Cooper so aggressively on the first day of the inquiry to try to prove that Tsafendas was able to stand trial. Was the State as surprised as the defence with the testimony of their key witnesses?”³²⁶³

³²⁶¹ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016.

The question here is whether there was any possibility that the State did not know what evidence its two main witnesses were going to give? If the State was aware, which is almost certain, why did the Attorney-General behave as he did during the summary trial? If the State did not know, then it would explain such behaviour, but is it really possible that the State’s two main and only expert witnesses had not informed the Attorney-General about the evidence they were going to give? That is impossible, according to Advocate George Bizos and Professor John Dugard.³²⁶⁴ Then, we are back to the previous question; why all this then? The issue will be discussed further along with the role of the Attorney-General.

³²⁶² Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 98.

³²⁶³ Cooper, Under Devil’s Peak: The Life and Times of Wilfrid Cooper, An Advocate in the Age of Apartheid, p. 123.

³²⁶⁴ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017; Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

The Attorney-General

His Concluding Statement to the Court

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S CONCLUDING STATEMENT TO THE COURT

After Professor van Wyk's testimony, to general surprise, the Attorney-General announced that he had no further questions and that the case for the prosecution was concluded.

FOR THE STATE

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: A request was made on behalf of the defence that the Court in terms of Article 28 (2) of Act 38 of 1916 that the accused is mentally ill and that in addition the Court must insist that he, depending on the availability of the State President, be placed in an institution. The Court has heard the evidence about this, and the Court noted the overwhelming nature of the expert witnesses. Even the witnesses for the State recommended without any doubt that the mental state of the accused was such that he falls with the ambit of Article 28 of the Act. It is necessary for the Court, in the light of all this evidence, that they give the required order and judgement if it agrees that the evidence justifies it.

But I wish to make a submission: Should the Court make such a judgement in terms of Article 28 (2), then I ask that you rule that the accused should not be kept in an institution, but that he should be kept in a prison.

JUDGE BEYERS: You don't have to address this to me. Apparently it should be a prison. I think that as I have noticed that in the Pratt case, prison is indicated. Should I rule that he should be detained at Caledon Square until the State President has made his ruling, or what do you want?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: I do not think it is necessary.

JUDGE BEYERS: The Afrikaans text is still in the Netherlands (Dutch) language and I find the English is easier: "A gaol or institution." I am not now sure whether it is necessary for the Court to determine the first "gaol." Afterwards, obviously, it will be the State President who is to rule on what is to happen with the man and where he will go.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Under Article 30 the Minister has certain powers.

JUDGE BEYERS: I think it will be sufficient if I say "a gaol."

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: That is my submission.³²⁶⁵

THE SEQUEL

Judge Beyers then adjourned the hearing until 10.45 a.m., pending a decision on whether he would give judgment then or announce it later.³²⁶⁶

³²⁶⁵ Professor Adolf Johannes van Wyk's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³²⁶⁶ Bloomberg, My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg, p. 81-82; Cooper, Under Devil's Peak: The Life and Times of Wilfrid Cooper, An Advocate in the Age of Apartheid, p. 123.

THE VERDICT

THE STATE VERSUS DEMITRIO TSAFENDAS³²⁶⁷

Judge Beyers: The Court is clear in its mind as to what its order should be in this case, and under the circumstance I can see no justification for prolonging the proceedings. If I had taken time to consider this judgment it would probably have gained something in elegance of language, but in substance the case is clear, and I think it is incumbent upon me to give judgment now, which I propose doing.

The case before the Court is one in which a man called Demitrio Tsafendas is charged with the crime of murder. He stands arraigned before this Court upon an indictment which charges that upon the 6th September, 1966, and at Cape Town, in the district of The Cape, he did wrongfully, unlawfully and maliciously kill and murder Dr. The Honourable Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd, Prime Minister of the Republic of South Africa.

This Court is no less conscious of the momentous background to this case than is anyone less in this country. Once, however, a case is brought in a court of law these considerations of the immensity of the crime and the effects it has upon the people of this country really disappear. Once, as I have said, a case of this nature comes into a court of law, the law takes command, and considerations other than legal ones are not and should not be allowed to come into the picture at all. The elements of the crime of murder and the legal processes employed in trying such a crime remain the same and in no wise differ whether the victim of the alleged crime is the Prime Minister of the country or the lowest of the low. Murder is murder, and its elements remain unchanged. To allow anything else to cloud this approach would be to supplant law and order by anarchy and chaos. It would mean that one dethrones responsibility and replaces it with primitive emotion. That I do not understand to be my function and that is something to which, happily, I do not believe that this country would wish me to lend myself.

Because of the deep issues underlying this case, which, as I have already said, are for the purposes of the law really irrelevant but which obviously obtrude themselves and cannot be ignored, I in approaching this case thought fit to appoint senior counsel, with junior counsel to assist him, with attorneys to assist him, to represent the accused. This is a civilized, and, if I may proudly say, a highly civilized country, and when a man is charged on a capital charge this country sees to it that, at the expense of the State, he is represented. Having regard to the emotional stresses that underlay this particular case, I thought fit to see that in this case he be represented as well as I was able to provide for. My first duty, I think, is to express to senior and junior counsel and their attorneys the deep appreciation of this Court for the work they have done. To them it has meant - and I think it should be understood — that without any meaningful remuneration they took upon themselves the unenviable and unpopular task of defending this man. Not for a moment did they demur to make the sacrifice of time, and the considerable financial sacrifice that goes with it. I think I need say no more than that by their conduct they have graced the profession to which they belong and that they have acted in accordance with the highest traditions of the legal profession of this country.

³²⁶⁷ Judge Beyers' verdict on Tsafendas's summary trial, 20 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

I - and again because of the nature of this case - introduced what is probably, as far as I know, an innovation in this country, in that I appointed as one of my assessors, to assist me as psychiatrist. I do not know if that has been done before. It was certainly of great assistance to the Court, and I wish to express my gratitude to Dr. Henning and my gratitude to my other assessor, Mr. Baker.

I can now go on with the case.

Before the Court is an enquiry. It is a different kind of procedure from the ordinary. It is a procedure in which, as I see it, there is neither plaintiff nor defendant, there is neither prosecutor nor defending counsel. It is an enquiry which if necessary has to be conducted mero motu by the Court itself. It is an enquiry which rests upon the simple civilized human principle that a court of law does not try a madman. That is the simple proposition which underlies the enquiry upon which I am presently embarked. I shall refer in a moment to the 1916 Act, the Mental Disorders Act. But, of course, the enquiry upon which I am embarked, does not flow from the Mental Disorders Act. The principle is centuries old, that madmen are not tried, and the enquiry at the moment is: is the man before me a man who can be tried by a court of law? Irrespective entirely of what his mental condition was, what animus he was capable of at the time when he committed the crime. One can have cases in which a person could be wholly sane and commits a crime, but after the commission of the crime - let me assume for a moment that after the commission of a crime a man has a serious motor accident, and if, because of that motor accident, he sustains brain damage which means that his mind becomes disordered, then that man cannot be tried in a court of law, whether he was completely sane at the time he committed the crime or was not sane at the time he committed the crime. As I understand the law, the crime with which this man is charged is also entirely irrelevant. The enquiry, while definitely it would have been loaded less with emotional stresses, would have been exactly the same if it was a person tried for any other crime, if it was a person tried for theft, or for a parking offence. It is a preliminary enquiry which precedes all further proceedings in a court of law, and that is: is the person before the court a man sane enough to be tried by a court of law? That is how I understand it. And that is why I have said that at the moment there is before me no prosecutor and no defending counsel, but merely persons who are trying to help the Court to arrive at a conclusion on this enquiry.

The enquiry has been codified for this country. As I have stated, it is ancient law, but it has been codified in Section 28 of the Mental Disorders Act of 1916 I referred to that section, but I will refer only to the portiere of that section which are relevant to the present enquiry. The relevant portions of this section read as follows: "If, on the arraignment of any person charged with a criminal offence, it appears to the judge presiding at the trial that such person is mentally disordered, the question of such a person's mental condition shall be enquired into by such Court."

Then sub-section 2 proceeds: "If such Court finds, after hearing evidence, which shall include medical evidence, that such person is mentally disordered, the presiding judge shall record that finding and issue an order committing such person to a gaol pending the signification of the Governor-General's decision." (This has subsequently been amended to read: "the decision of the State-President.")

It will be seen from the wording of this section that the Court has no discretion in these matters, that it is to embark upon this enquiry, and that it is forced to come to a conclusion. I also am of the opinion that in law this enquiry rests upon no onus on either side, because the section goes on to say that if the Court is in any doubt - it does not say that the doubt will be to the benefit of the accused or it will be against the accused - the Court must resolve those doubts by committing the person to a proper institution for proper investigation, and when that is over the Court has just got to answer the question one way or another.

In this case I don't believe any good purpose will be served by the further remittal to an institution of any kind, and the Court is by law, of which it is but a servant, conjoined to give a finding.

The enquiry presently before this Court is exactly the same as the enquiry which came before the Court in the Transvaal, presided over by my very distinguished learned brother Rumpff J.P., as he then was, in the case of Rex vs. Pratt (1960(4) S.A.L.R., 743). There the exact same enquiry had to be conducted upon a man who had shot this same victim - fortunately for us, fortunately for this country, unsuccessfully, and we had the benefit of the leadership of the late Prime Minister for what might prove to be vital years thereafter. In this case - I am referring to the bottom of page 746 - the learned Judge says: "It is clear that whatever anomalies may flow from the law as it stands the legislature has decided that epilepsy in certain circumstances is a disease of the mind and that if an epileptic is a danger to himself or others or is incapable of managing himself or his affairs, he should not be tried. He must be regarded as mentally disordered or defective in terms of the Act. It is not for me to disagree with the legislature. That being the case, it is necessary to consider whether on the evidence the accused is an epileptic and a danger to himself or others."

His Lordship then, having considered all the evidence, comes to the conclusion that the accused in that case, Pratt, was an epileptic, and he gave the order which Section 28 conjoins. I am embarking upon exactly the same enquiry, with this exception only: that the man presently before me, presently arraigned before me, is said to be a schizophrenic and not an epileptic. That is the only difference.

It is not disputed by anyone that schizophrenia is a mental disorder, that it is a mental disorder such as envisaged in the Mental Disorders Act, and that, if of a sufficient degree to make the person suffering from that disorder a danger to himself or to others, or to make it impossible for him to properly look after himself or his affairs, then he is a mentally disordered person in terms of the Act.

As I have stressed, the enquiry is not into what was Tsafendas mental state on the 6th September, 1966, but what it is today. Today we know that he is certainly a danger to other people, and probably also to himself. The only enquiry before the Court therefore is - and it is the only enquiry that is left - is the Court satisfied that he is a schizophrenic.

In the course of this case reference was made to this man's prior history. Really the events therein referred to are not evidence in this Court. Application was made by Mr. Cooper for evidence to be taken overseas so that these matters covered in his history could in fact and indeed become evidence in a court of law, and had the evidence not been as clear as it is I would have had to deal with that application.

I want to make very brief reference to that history. Everybody seems to have accepted it, and although I think the truth of every statement need not be in it, I think one cannot approach this case without realising that this man has a long history of mental disorder. I merely touch on one or two of the experiences which are recorded here.

It is now 1966. As early as 1935 there is on record that this man was already preoccupied with this extraordinary, bizarre tapeworm delusion of his. That is thirty years ago. He has been in mental hospitals. I find here, glancing through it, that in 1943 he was detained in the Psychopathic Hospital of Boston. He was then transferred to the Metropolitan State Hospital. In 1944 I find him in the United States General Army Hospital in England. Again in 1944 I find he is diagnosed as suffering from psychosis and he is detained in the Roper Hospital. There is then a special board of enquiry instituted in the Roper Hospital, and as a result of that enquiry this man is declared, in 1944, as insane. In the same year he tries to get back into the United States and he is detained in the medical hospital - the other side of it. In 1946 he is detained in the Boston Psychopathic. That year again he is certified insane in the Grafton State Hospital in the United States. In that same year, in 1946, after a United States Department of Justice hearing at North Grafton State Hospital, the man before me is diagnosed as a schizophrenic, hebephrenic type, with deterioration and prognosis poor. He eventually, in 1949, gets to Portugal. There he is detained in a state hospital. He is given shock treatment. He then gets to Germany in 1954, and there he is detained in the Ochsenzoll Hospital and is again given shock treatment. He gets back to London and there he is at St. Pancras Hospital, London, definitely once more, in 1959, diagnosed as paranoid schizophrenic. He is then detained in the Whitecroft Hospital in the Isle of Wight with a diagnosis of delusional psychosis. That is the history of this individual before he comes here.

In 1963, to our extreme misfortune, this man returns to South Africa. He is in and out of jobs, leading an unsatisfactory life. I will only refer to one other very important matter: in June, 1966, he comes before the District Surgeon of Cape Town, Dr. Kossew, applying for a disability pension. District surgeons are busy people, as was stated in evidence. They are not psychiatric experts, and have never pretended to be, and I don't suppose that district surgeons are chosen for the ease with which they give away State pensions. Although the District Surgeon saw this man only for a short time, only as one of many that passed through his hands, it is to his great credit that in the short time he had at his disposal he could see through this man and diagnosed him as schizophrenic. Perhaps I should also mention, briefly, that the ordinary people, the ordinary everyday people with whom he came into contact did not take long before they could see that this man was mentally affected. One of the strongest pieces of evidence in this case is that of Mr. Smorenberg, a down-to-earth foreman. I shall not forget that when he was asked: 'What did you think of this man?' his answer was: 'I don't like to call any man mad, but he is definitely barmy.' It was obvious to Daniels and his wife. Daniels said that this man is mad. It was obvious to O'Ryan and his wife. It was obvious to Mr. Johnston that this was a queer, strange man.

Of course thoughts must arise, have arisen and must continue to arise, as how it could have been possible that a man like this, a man with this history, a man so obviously deranged, could find his way into an assembly where the leaders of our people are busy in Parliament. Those are questions that do not concern this Court. We have no concern with it, but it is almost unavoidable that the question arises in one's mind.

I have had before me a number of eminent psychiatrists. May I be allowed, in parenthesis, to say that I have been informed that each of the medical men in this case has given his services, to assist this Court, free, they have given their time free, and I can only say that it once again shows that this country, and its people, is something of which one can be proud. I am grateful to you gentlemen, I am grateful for the sacrifice. I am not surprised: I expected no less. The Court thanks you.

Now before me came a whole host, if I may call it that, of psychiatrists. The first one was Dr. Cooper. A court of law does not lightly sit back and allow a man who has committed a grievous crime to get away on a plea or an enquiry of this nature. Dr. Cooper led the van, and at that stage it was obvious that this Court was prepared to resist, as far as it could, that this man was not responsible for his actions, and, if Dr. Cooper got it, that is what the first tank over must expect. It became clear, however, as psychiatrist followed psychiatrist, that there can be no doubt whatever in this case that the man before me is a schizophrenic; that he is a lunatic - in more direct terms - or, as Roman Law would have had it, that I had before me a furiosus. A furiosus is something which I cannot try. I can as little try a man who has not got at least the makings of a rational mind as I could try a dog or an inert implement. A man who is mentally disordered can perform no legal act. He couldn't possibly plead. Pleading in a Court of law is an act in law which has results. The acts of a mentally disordered person have no consequences in law.

I have before me, on the evidence, clearly a man with a diseased mind, a mind subject to delusion, a mind which is so trammelled, if not guided, by irrational forces, that obviously I cannot even begin to find whether he is guilty or not guilty of a crime at law. The process cannot even start, you cannot get to the provisions of the Criminal Law. You cannot get to Section 164, or any other provision of the Criminal Law until you have decided that the man presently before you has a sufficiently rational mind that he is capable of being tried. So that I don't believe it is necessary for me to go into any other of the provisions of the Criminal Law. I am satisfied, and indeed, I could not other than be satisfied, on the pre-history of this man, on the evidence of the psychiatrists, one after the other (I don't think that any purpose will be served in mentioning them by name) who have agreed that here we have, not a criminal, but a sick person; mentally sick, mentally disturbed, mentally irresponsible.

In this enquiry on which I was embarked it was the duty of the State, no less than of the Defence, to assist the Court, and I am grateful also for the evidence of Mr. Erasmus and the evidence of Professor van Wyk. They have made my task an easy one because, appearing at the behest of the State, they have also said that the man before me is certifiable and that he should be sent to an institution. So that really, I have no option in the matter. There is really nothing for me more left to decide, and I and my two learned assessors find ourselves in the position where we cannot otherwise than, in terms of Section 28 (to which I have already made reference) say that the person presently before us is found by us to be mentally disordered.

That is really the end of it all, but I think it would not be amiss if I said a few words more about this whole matter, and for reasons of my own I choose to say them in Afrikaans. The application that was submitted to me has now been resolved and the order of the court should be made accordingly.

The case of the State versus Demitri Tsafendas, for the time being at any rate – and in all probability for all times – has come to an end. As I've said previously, as far as this court is concerned, this is a murder case and nothing more. We deal with murder cases on a daily basis and it is, with regard to the legal aspects of this case, just another murder case. And because it is a murder case and a case in a Supreme Court, this Court would not fulfil its duty, and would not be worthy of the trust put in it, if it would act differently from the provisions in the law that this Court, like any other citizen of this country are obliged to obey.

In fact, if this Court were to act differently than in accordance with the strict provisions of the judicial process it would, in my opinion, not be worthy of the name of Supreme Court. If it, in contradiction to the admonishments and the provisions of the law, sentence a person to death who was on trial, then this court would be guilty of the crime of murder. This is what this Court would do if it deviates from the law and sentence someone to death.

We and our forefathers in this country are orderly and law-abiding citizens. We are an orderly people. I understand fully that people in this country have deep feelings regarding this case. I fully understand when people say: "Why? Can it be true that an insignificant human being could have done what he did?" I know that the first reaction of every community throughout the centuries have always been a sense of revenge and retribution. I share that feeling with the rest of the country.

It is recognized, and it's an opinion that I strongly share, that one element of a judgement in a criminal case is to give organized expression to the sense of retribution and revenge by the community and I know that if the Law does not do it, the community tends to eventually do it themselves. I am fully aware that when people trust that retribution will take place in an organized way, you won't get violence and it's one of the reasons why we, in this country of ours, never experienced "lynch law."

I am fully aware of all the undercurrents but one should also consider understanding these matters to a greater extent. By paying with his life, that person can do nothing for us. Even if he is executed or not, it would make no difference to our loss. But what would have had a huge impact was if he, through his actions, was able to get a Supreme Court to disregard the law of this country, then he would indeed have caused a greater harm to our survival as a nation than he has already succeeded in so far. Then he would, by sacrificing his useless life, shake the foundations of our nation's institutions, and then we would give an importance to this creature that he does not deserve. He would, if we had tolerated such a thing, caused us much more harm than what he has already succeeded in doing. In fact, people come and people go, but if this people, this nation, loose its trust in the judicial institutions and in its judicial bench then you would indeed have a humiliation and a shame that is irreparable and would rest like a blot on this country.

One of the assessors made the observation that a leader of the people such as the deceased listed in this indictment, if he understood the situation, without a doubt would not have wanted it otherwise. Of that I have absolutely no doubt. We must continue in the deep realization that, by granting this man a defence, that by providing him with the best legal and medical assistance, through the instruction I'm obliged to make, the honour and glory and the good name of our country, to act correctly remains unblemished and stay the foundation on which we build an orderly community, unshaken and unharmed.

I am also of the opinion after considering the matter – although I can understand that it may immediately generate a certain degree of dissatisfaction and shock in certain people – I'm certain that after due consideration by all right-minded people in the country they will realize that the matter could not be dealt with differently, that it is not humane, that it is not Christian, to condemn the mentally ill; that the man who sits there is a sick person, deeply sick in spirit; that when the law says he is not responsible for his actions, then it's not only legally true but also humanly true. You cannot continue to have feelings of revenge in respect of a sick person and on the basis of the evidence presented to this court, the only conclusion that I can come to is that the accused is deeply and immensely disturbed, and is deeply and extremely ill, and that his actions does not arise from a rational state of mind, which is the first requirement before anyone can be punished, or is guilty of any crime. It is therefore my duty to recommend that the person, Dimitri Tsafendas, be taken from here to a prison and that he is detained there, pending the determination of the State President of this country.

COMMENTS ON JUDGE BEYERS' VERDICT

When Judge Beyers appointed Wilfrid Cooper as Tsafendas's advocate, he warned him that his client would "swing" unless he was found to be insane.³²⁶⁸ Tsafendas was duly found insane and escaped the gallows. It is necessary to stress, however, that Judge Beyers based his verdict on the evidence presented to him and was almost certainly unaware of evidence gathered by the South African police.

At the same time, it is important to mention that in David Pratt's case, Judge Frans Rumpff, who presided, heard the case for the defence, including testimonies by the psychiatrists, then sent the accused for fourteen days of psychiatric evaluation at the Weskoppies hospital for mentally disturbed persons.³²⁶⁹ There, Pratt was observed daily during this period by Dr. Lamont, who was in charge of evaluating Pratt's mental state.³²⁷⁰ Judge Beyers did not find it necessary to send Tsafendas for similar observation, even though Dr. Cooper and Prof. van Wyk spent only about six hours each with him while each of the other psychiatrists spent about four and a half hours. Nor did Judge Beyers appear concerned about the environment in which the examination took place. Pratt was observed in the clinical surroundings of a hospital, while Tsafendas was seen in custody in the Caledon Square police station. Professor Tuviah Zabow considers that this is an important issue and that Tsafendas should have been taken to a hospital for observation and proper examination.³²⁷¹

³²⁶⁸ Wilfrid Cooper in A Question of Madness.

³²⁶⁹ Maisels, A Life at Law: The Memoirs of I.A. Maisels, QC, p. 105.

³²⁷⁰ Prof. Lamont's psychiatric report on David Beresford Pratt in Regina vs. David Beresford Pratt, 26 September 1960. The State versus David Beresford Pratt. 712-60. NASA; The Cape Argus, 'Judge Rules Pratt is Mentally Disordered', 26 September 1960: 2.

Another important difference was that Dr. Lamont interviewed six people who knew Pratt well, including relatives, friends and one of his employees.³²⁷² None of those who examined Tsafendas spoke to a single person who knew him. Judge Beyers nevertheless accepted their diagnoses, clearly believing that no further examinations were necessary. He also praised Dr. Kossew, who, although not a psychiatrist, had diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic after an examination that lasted “a little bit longer” than ten minutes. His conclusion apparently was that the evidence to hand was sufficient to make a judgment on Tsafendas.

Let us examine his verdict.

SOUTH AFRICA, “A HIGHLY CIVILIZED” COUNTRY

Judge Beyers characterised South Africa as a “highly civilized country.” While acknowledging that such a characterisation is entirely subjective, the author considers it to be a most debatable, if not wholly inaccurate, description of South Africa in 1966. Apartheid was in full force, 79% of the country’s citizens were governed by the 21%, deprived of basic rights and subjected to inferior education system, designed by Hendrik Verwoerd himself, to ensure that Blacks “knew their place” in a racist society and would never dare to dream of a better life, as the architect of apartheid himself had infamously declared:

“The Bantu must be guided to serve his community in all respects. There is no place for him in the European community above the level of certain forms of labour. Within his community, however, all doors are open. For that reason, it is of no avail for him to receive a training which has as its main aim absorption in the European community, where he cannot be absorbed. Until now he has been subjected to a school system which drew him away from his own community and misled him by showing him the green pastures of European society in which he was not allowed to graze.”³²⁷³

³²⁷¹ Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 2 September 2016.

³²⁷² Prof. Lamont’s report about David Pratt: Accused reaction to information gleaned from documents, friends, relatives and employees in Regina vs. David Beresford Pratt, 26 September 1960. The State versus David Beresford Pratt. 712-60. NASA; The Cape Argus, ‘Judge Rules Pratt is Mentally Disordered’, 26 September 1960: 2.

This was a country where 79% of the population had no land rights, were forced to live in designated areas and were forbidden to enter “whites only” territory; a country where the White people, 21% of the population, owned 87% of the land, forcing the 79% who were not White onto the remaining 13%; a country which was effectively a police state, where the law allowed police to hold a person in custody for 180 days without access to a lawyer, where political opponents of the government were impassioned, exiled, tortured, persecuted and banned. Professor John Dugard has expressed “outrage and shame” about the South African legal system during apartheid,³²⁷⁴ characterising it as “abnormal.” He wrote:

“A legal system that excludes 70% of its population from the franchise, that excludes 70% of its population from owning land in 87% of the country, that arbitrarily deprives 8 million people of their nationality, that has forcibly relocated many millions of people on account of their race, that formally executes some 160 persons per year, that authorizes repression in the name of national security and that permits international aggression, [is] . . . a grossly abnormal one.”³²⁷⁵

Furthermore, a society that allowed the flogging of humans as a form of punishment could hardly be described as “civilized.” In 1965, just a year before Judge Beyers’s verdict, reliable figures showed that 64,905 strokes were inflicted on 15,756 persons.³²⁷⁶ In an era when more and more nations were turning away from capital punishment, 194 men were hanged in South Africa between 1963 and 1965, representing 47% of all the world’s executions. South Africa was the world’s “busiest hangman,” said Albie Sachs, anti-apartheid activist and former judge at the Constitutional Court of South Africa.³²⁷⁷ These and other anti-democratic aspects of South African society at the time are widely known. If such a society was Judge Beyers’ idea of a civilized country, it tells us a lot about his definition of civilization and arguably what kind of a person he was himself.

³²⁷³ Bunting, The Rise of the South African Reich, p. 260; Dubow, Apartheid 1948–1994, p. 55-56; Lipton, Capitalism and Apartheid: South Africa, 1910-1984, p. 24; O’Meara, Forty Lost Years: The Apartheid State and the Politics of the National Party 1948-1994, p. 72; Schadeberg, Nelson Mandela and the Rise of the ANC, p. 81.

³²⁷⁴ Klug, “Review: Law Before and After Apartheid: Abel’s Sociolegal Analysis”, p. 660.

³²⁷⁵ Klug, “Review: Law Before and After Apartheid: Abel’s Sociolegal Analysis”, p. 659-660.

³²⁷⁶ Sachs, The Violence of Apartheid, p. 3-5.

³²⁷⁷ Sachs, The Violence of Apartheid, p. 1-3.

Judge Beyers' next sentence appeared intended to demonstrate the civilized nature of South African society: "(If) a man is charged on a capital charge, this country sees to it that, at the expense of the State, he is represented." This is true in that Tsafendas was indeed represented at the expense of the State. However, he had asked to be represented by Advocate George Bizos, well-known at the time for his involvement in two major political trials, the Rivonia and the Bram Fischer proceedings. He was also the son of Tsafendas's good friend, Antonis Bizos. Instead, the State appointed lawyers of its own choice in David Bloomberg, Wilfrid Cooper and Willie Burger. A truly civilized country would have complied with the accused's request and given him the lawyer of his choice. It is very possible though that Judge Beyers was not aware of Tsafendas's request for Bizos when he named these three lawyers. It cannot go unmentioned though that David Bloomberg was the son of Abe Bloomberg, who was a good friend of Judge Beyers³²⁷⁸ and who had publicly praised and defended Dr. Verwoerd's policies just a year earlier.³²⁷⁹

The "civilized" nature of South African society might be questioned in view of the treatment Tsafendas received after his summary trial. Officially recognised by the state as a schizophrenic in need of medical treatment, Tsafendas was entitled to accommodation in a psychiatric hospital and to treatment, as the law required, for those who are mentally ill. Instead, he was kept for twenty-three years in a cell on Death Row in a maximum security prison and he never received any medical treatment for his stated problem.

THE TAPEWORM

Judge Beyers goes on to state that Tsafendas had the tapeworm since 1935. However, he was simply repeating what he heard about the tapeworm during the summary trial and was not in position to know anything beyond that. It was indeed claimed that Tsafendas had the tapeworm since 1935, when according to Louisa O'Ryan, his step mother removed and destroyed six feet of the creature which Tsafendas had excreted. However, Tsafendas's step-mother denied to the Commission of Enquiry that such an incident ever took place and stated that she never heard her stepson say anything about a tapeworm. Tsafendas's whole family ³²⁷⁸ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

³²⁷⁹ The New York Times, 'David Bloomberg: Yes to South Africa', 23 May 1965: xi.

denied to the Commission that Tsafendas ever mentioned a tapeworm and maintained that he was “definitely not insane.”³²⁸⁰

However, Judge Beyers was not aware of this. He was also unaware that not one of the approximately two hundred witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission ever said they heard Tsafendas talking about a tapeworm and that included people who knew him in 1935 and after. Furthermore, Judge Beyers did not know that Tsafendas had told Patrick O’Ryan that he had made up the tapeworm story, nor that Wilfrid Cooper had asked O’Ryan and his wife Louisa to “talk up” the tapeworm and exaggerate some stories about Tsafendas in order to save his life.³²⁸¹

THE HOSPITALS

Judge Beyers then mentions the hospitals where Tsafendas was treated. He sets out all of his hospitalizations in the United States but does not mention the reasons for them, probably because he is unaware of them. As we have seen, Tsafendas, while in the USA, was hospitalized for two reasons: he was taken there by authorities while he was in custody or he admitted himself when he had no money and nowhere to stay. No reference is made to the fact that Tsafendas was hospitalised after showing signs of mental illness while in custody, something that would happen again and again. For example in 1943, he was arrested on charges of contravening US immigration laws.³²⁸² While in detention, he “showed symptoms of mental disorder” and was admitted to the Boston Psychopathic Hospital, Massachusetts, from where he was transferred on April 23, 1943 to the Metropolitan State Hospital.³²⁸³ While there he was found to be faking mental illness,³²⁸⁴ something Judge Beyers was unaware of since it was not mentioned during the summary trial.

Of equal importance is that Beyers was ignorant of the opinion of the US Immigration Department about Tsafendas. The US Immigration authorities had dealt with him for five years and had his medical history and recorded that Tsafendas “is understood to have shown ³²⁸⁰ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

³²⁸¹ Patrick and Louisa O’ Ryan in A Question of Madness; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

³²⁸² Demitrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw, 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 2.

³²⁸³ ‘The history of the person who inflicted the fatal wounds to the late Dr. Verwoerd’ drafted by Col. McIntyre, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Subject: Leer W.D. 10/10/4102 der Stafendas. NASA; Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

³²⁸⁴ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

under psychiatric treatment that he was unstable though not (not)³²⁸⁵ insane, but type of man who would easily be used as instrument of Communist or hostile organizations.”³²⁸⁶

The Judge then refers to Tsafendas's hospitalization in Portugal in 1949 and the fact that he was given shock treatment. What he does not mention, because he is unaware of it, is that Tsafendas was hospitalized after he showed signs of mental illness while in police detention,³²⁸⁷ and that on another occasion he was hospitalized after pretending to be mad so as not to serve in the Portuguese Army.³²⁸⁸ Finally, he refers to the hospitals in England and Germany, unaware that Tsafendas admitted himself to these hospitals.

DR. KOSSEW

Judge Beyers says that “district surgeons are busy people, as was stated in evidence. They are not psychiatric experts, and have never pretended to be, and I don't suppose that district surgeons are chosen for the ease with which they give away State pensions. Although the District Surgeon saw this man only for a short time, only as one of many that passed through his hands, it is to his great credit that in the short time he had at his disposal he could see through this man and diagnosed him as schizophrenic.” The Judge here praises Dr. Kossew, who diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic, although he was not a psychiatrist, examined him only for “a little bit longer” than ten minutes and stated that his aim was to determine Tsafendas's “physical condition” and not his mental state.

However, as we have seen, Dr. Kossew's testimony was extremely weak and was left unchallenged by the Attorney-General when it could so easily have been broken down. Judge Beyers is unaware of the fact that Tsafendas was examined ten times by nine different doctors, none of them a psychiatrist, over the last three years, none of whom noticed anything wrong with him or perceived any of the symptoms mentioned in court. On all of these occasions, Tsafendas wanted to be found sane and healthy and this is how he was found; with Dr. Kossew he wanted to be found insane in order to qualify for the disability grant he had applied for, and that is how he was found. Judge Beyers was not aware of any of this because ³²⁸⁵ This is exactly how it appears in the telegram. There is a second ‘not’ within brackets.

³²⁸⁶ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Washington to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

³²⁸⁷ PIDE Report regarding Tsafendas, 5 May 1956. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³²⁸⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

the Attorney-General had failed to present any such evidence and Dr. Kossew's testimony, instead of being now exposed as weak, unreliable and false, was accepted and praised by the Judge.

"EVERYDAY PEOPLE" AND TSAFENDAS

Judge Beyers made the most inaccurate of his statements when he said that "ordinary everyday people with whom he came into contact did not take long before they could see that this man was mentally affected." Again, he is unaware that of the about two hundred people questioned by the police and the Commission only three commented negatively on Tsafendas's mental state: Caroline Barbeau who got the impression that Tsafendas "was not all there,"³²⁸⁹ Keith Martincich who thought that there "was something mentally wrong with him" because Tsafendas sometimes mumbled to himself,³²⁹⁰ and James Johnston, who also testified in the summary trial, who considered Tsafendas to be "slightly mentally unbalanced."³²⁹¹

We have examined these statements and the reasons for their opinions so it will not be discussed here again. The rest of the witnesses had stated clearly that Tsafendas appeared perfectly sane and they never noticed anything wrong with him including the symptoms mentioned in court. Once again, the Judge was not aware of these two hundred statements the police and the Commission had taken and took under consideration only what it was presented to him.

OWEN SMORENBERG

Judge Beyers was noted in the legal community for having a photographic memory and not keeping notes during trial proceedings. However, in at least one case, he mis-remembered the evidence given at the summary trial. He characterised Smorenberg as a down-to-earth foreman and said, "I shall not forget that when he was asked: 'What did you think of this man?'" his answer was: 'I don't like to call any man mad, but he is definitely barmy.'

³²⁸⁹ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³²⁹⁰ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³²⁹¹ James Johnston statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

However, Smorenberg did not say that. What he said was, "Well, I wouldn't say he is mad, but he seems a little bit barmy."³²⁹²

The Judge also characterised Smorenberg's testimony as "the strongest piece of evidence." As we have seen, Smorenberg's testimony was well off the mark; none of the aforementioned two hundred witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission had said anything that bore the slightest resemblance to Smorenberg's testimony, while the vast majority of them contradicted his claims. The Attorney-General could easily have broken down Smorenberg's testimony using the evidence gathered by the police, but he did not do so, leaving Judge Beyers to take the remarks seriously.

THE O'RYANS, JOHNSTON AND THE DANIELS

Judge Beyers' mistaken recollection of Smorenberg's words was not his only inaccuracy. He also said that "it was obvious to Daniels and his wife. Daniels said that this man is mad. It was obvious to O'Ryan and his wife. It was obvious to Mr. Johnston that this was a queer, strange man." In fact, while Patrick O'Ryan might have testified to the lunacy of the tapeworm, he did not state that Tsafendas was mentally affected. On the contrary, he said, "I never actually doubted his mental state, since to me he had a mind that the majority of people have."³²⁹³ The court also heard O'Ryan's statement to the police where he said that Tsafendas "was not spiritually or mentally disturbed ... I never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind."³²⁹⁴ This the Judge seems to have overlooked.

Judge Beyers said it was obvious to Johnston that Tsafendas appeared to be a strange man. The Judge is unaware that Johnston had spoken to Tsafendas for only twenty minutes in his life and that he also said, "I did think Tsafendas to be slightly unbalanced and that he seemed to have a mysterious background, but otherwise he appeared to be all right."³²⁹⁵

Peter Daniels did indeed characterise Tsafendas as "mad," but this was due to things Tsafendas did which he perceived as mad. However, as we have seen, none of the things mentioned by Daniels and his wife would be considered the actions of a mad man by most ³²⁹² Owen Smorenberg's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³²⁹³ Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³²⁹⁴ Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA

³²⁹⁵ James Johnston's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

people. After all, it was Peter Daniels who thought that Tsafendas was “mentally deranged” because he “tried to cool the fowls down” with a hosepipe. Judge Beyers himself retorted that this was the right thing to do in hot weather and Tsafendas’s act was certainly not that of someone who was mentally deranged.

Although all the other incidents described by the Daniels couple were of a similar type, the Judge nevertheless took their testimony seriously. This was mostly down to the Attorney-General’s failure successfully to challenge their testimonies and expose the lies, although substantial police evidence was available. Mr. and Mrs. Daniels portrayed Tsafendas as a tramp for whom they felt sorry and who foisted himself upon them, while hiding the fact that Helen Daniels asked to meet him so he could marry her, even claiming that it was Tsafendas who had taken the initiative with regard to Helen.

THE VERDICT

Judge Beyers’ conclusion that Tsafendas was unfit to stand trial and mentally disordered as defined in the Mental Disorders Act was based strictly on the evidence presented before him. However, to commit him to a prison, pending the decision of the State President, instead of to a psychiatric hospital where he was entitled to receive treatment as a certifiable schizophrenic, was a direct contradiction of his claim that South Africa was a “highly civilized county.” David Pratt, in a similar situation was detained in a hospital.

Dr. Sakinofsky had suggested Tsafendas be detained in an asylum,³²⁹⁶ but Judge Beyers did not refer to this statement in his verdict. It is possible the Judge was influenced by Dr. MacGregor’s comment, “I don’t think any ordinary asylum would hold this man for any length of time,”³²⁹⁷ although that remark itself does not bear scrutiny. Certainly, Tsafendas had left or “escaped” from a psychiatric hospital, but then he was a patient not a prisoner who had murdered someone. The apartheid authorities certainly had the means to keep Tsafendas locked in a psychiatric hospital. The Fort, at Bloemfontein, was a maximum security mental institution, and if it was thought special facilities were needed for an especially dangerous man, these could easily have been created in a secure hospital environment.

³²⁹⁶ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³²⁹⁷ Dr. James William MacGregor’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

Furthermore, although not related to the verdict but relevant to the “highly civilized country” comment, it is worth noting that although he was declared to be a schizophrenic, Tsafendas received no treatment whatsoever while he was in prison, at least for the first twenty-plus years. Hardly the behaviour of a highly civilized country.

THE CRIMINAL PROCEDURE ACT OF 1944

When the summary trial ended, Tsafendas's defence team spelled out to him the 1944 Amendments to the Criminal Procedure Act, which ruled that since mental illnesses might prove temporary, the charge in cases such as his could never be abandoned or withdrawn. This meant that Tsafendas could be tried again if his mental state was deemed restored.³²⁹⁸ Tsafendas got the point; he had to remain insane at least for as long as apartheid existed.³²⁹⁹

³²⁹⁸ Daily Dispatch, ‘No Trial for David Pratt’, 27 September 1960: 1; The Cape Argus, ‘Pratt Will Not Stand Trial: Mentally Disordered’, 26 September 1960: 1; The New York Times, ‘Assailant of Dr. Verwoerd Found Mentally Unfit’, 27 September 1960; The Star, ‘Pratt is Unfit to Plead’, 1 October 1960: 1.

³²⁹⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Father Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

THE ROLE OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL IN THE SUMMARY TRIAL

Officially, the Attorney-General believed that Tsafendas was not a schizophrenic and thus was fit to stand trial, and proving that contention appeared to be his main objective during the summary trial. It was also what he told David Bloomberg and Wilfrid Cooper on October 6, when Tsafendas was remanded for the trial proceedings. To support his stance he gave the defence team Professor van Wyk's medical report on Tsafendas which made no mention of schizophrenia and contended that Tsafendas was fit to be tried. However, the Attorney-General's conduct during the summary trial was puzzling, especially the fact that both of his own expert witnesses testified that in examinations conducted before October 6 they found Tsafendas to be schizophrenic and unfit to stand trial.

Professor van Wyk, the State's principal expert witness who was appointed by the Attorney-General himself, said that initially, after two examinations, he believed Tsafendas was fit to stand trial. However, after examining him again on October 4, he changed his mind and concluded he was schizophrenic. He confirmed this opinion during his next two examinations on October 13 and 14. In the meantime, Mr. Erasmus, a clinical psychologist, the other State witness appointed by the Attorney-General, had diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic from September 29, according to his testimony to the court.

Therefore, the diagnoses of both of the States' witnesses agreed with the defence's line. In that case, the question is why the Attorney-General appeared to question the defence's medical witnesses so strongly while trying to prove Tsafendas was fit to stand trial. As David Bloomberg and Wilfrid Cooper rightly wondered, why did he allow Judge Beyers to question all their witnesses, especially Dr. Cooper, so vigorously?

Let us first examine the diagnoses of the State's two expert witnesses and their relations with the Attorney-General. The first question is whether van den Berg was aware of their diagnoses. According to Advocate George Bizos and Professor John Dugard it is impossible to believe that his witnesses did not inform him of their findings. Thus the Attorney-General had two options:

- a. He did not agree with their diagnoses.
- b. He agreed with their diagnoses.

Let's examine both scenarios:

A. HE DID NOT AGREE WITH THEIR DIAGNOSES

If the Attorney-General did not agree with his expert witnesses' diagnoses that would explain his what appeared to be hostile questioning and the fact that he remained mute while Judge Beyers adopted a similar approach. However, it does not explain why he did not produce evidence to support his assertion that Tsafendas was fit to stand trial, as well as his line of questioning at times.

First and perhaps mostly importantly, if the Attorney-General had doubts about his two experts or lacked confidence in them, he could have appointed more psychiatrists and psychologists to examine Tsafendas. Arguments as to limited time are not valid. Erasmus carried out his tests on September 28 and 29, thus the Attorney-General had three weeks to appoint another expert to examine Tsafendas. Professor van Wyk initially diagnosed Tsafendas as fit to stand trial, but on October 4 formed the opinion he was schizophrenic, giving the Attorney-General two weeks to appoint a second psychiatrist.

Furthermore, the Attorney-General could easily have found medical and non-medical witnesses to support his case. About one hundred and fifty people were questioned by the police and not a single one of them backed the defence's line. On the contrary, several could have challenged the defence, having described Tsafendas variously as a dangerous Communist, an opponent of apartheid and colonialism, and someone who considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant and a dictator. Witnesses had also testified that Tsafendas characterised a possible assassination of Dr. Verwoerd as "justifiable." None of those who made these statements was called, although this might simply have been because the police did not make these testimonies available to van den Berg. Another possibility is that he was given witness statements which included nothing of importance. However, the Attorney-General must have known that the police would have questioned Tsafendas. Did he not ask to see these statements? Did he not think of asking what Tsafendas told the police during the forty-days he was in their custody? He could not have believed the accused man did not talk to the police at all during this period.

The Attorney-General seems to have knowledge of Tsafendas's movements prior to the assassination and of its planning. Such information could have come only from Tsafendas himself. Since Tsafendas had told the police about his movements and his planning in both of his statements, the fact that the Attorney-General was aware of these matters suggests that he was given Tsafendas's statements. However, if this was the case, he did not use the more important information in the statements which concern Tsafendas's motives. Tsafendas had given clear and logical reasons for killing Dr. Verwoerd: that he was "disgusted with his policies," considered Dr. Verwoerd not to be the real representative of ALL South African people and he hoped that by killing him a "change of policy would take place."³³⁰⁰ It cannot also be excluded that the Attorney-General was not in possession of the full statements given by Tsafendas, but had been given only chosen extracts.

The Attorney-General appeared to try his best to prove that Tsafendas was politically motivated but he did not use any of the statements Tsafendas gave to the police, nor any of the evidence the police gathered regarding his political activities especially those which led to his arrests by the Portuguese, nor did he use any of the many statements by people who characterised Tsafendas as a Communist and anti-apartheid. Instead, he used the report by Dr. Sakinofsky which referred to "delusional" ideas, such as the Cape-Cairo Union, and pronounced Tsafendas to be a schizophrenic. The use of Dr. Sakinofsky's report was an extremely clumsy way of trying to prove that Tsafendas's motive was political. The report referred to "confused and delusional" ideas held by Tsafendas and, more importantly, diagnosed Tsafendas as a schizophrenic. Who would ever try to prove a man is sane by using a report which argues that he is a schizophrenic? This was like trying to put out a fire with gasoline.

The Grafton State Hospital report, which was in the possession of the police since September 16,³³⁰¹ stated that Tsafendas had faked mental illness in the 1940s.³³⁰² And six witnesses testified to the police on October 12 that Tsafendas had pretended to be mad to avoid service in the Portuguese Army.³³⁰³ The author is not in position to know whether the Attorney-General was in possession of this evidence, but certainly it was not used to advance his case. The Attorney-General was also aware that Tsafendas had "simulated abnormality" before but did not think of raising the issue with any of those who examined Tsafendas. It ³³⁰⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³³⁰¹ Letter of the USA Embassy in Cape Town to the South African Security Branch, 3 October 1966. Correctional Service. Subject: Demitrio Tsafendas. File: 80/0043 A123 Vol. 1. NASA.

³³⁰² Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

³³⁰³ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

was only brought up by the Attorney-General's assistant with Dr. MacGregor, the last of the defence witnesses, and even then, it was quickly brushed away.

Even if the Attorney-General was not given all the evidence by the police, he must have considered Tsafendas's colleagues at Parliament as witnesses who could testify to his work and his mental state up to the assassination. This would have supported the assertion he made to Dr. Cooper and Dr. MacGregor that Tsafendas's work was satisfactory. However, he produced no evidence to support his claim and was left looking embarrassed when the defence appeared to prove that Tsafendas's work was not satisfactory. Not even at that point did he produce anything to support his argument, leaving the defence's witness unchallenged.

If the Attorney-General did not agree with his expert witnesses' diagnoses, that would explain his line of questioning, but it does not explain his failure to produce any substantial evidence to support his opinion and it also does not explain why he did not appoint additional psychiatrists to examine Tsafendas. It would also not explain his bizarre attempt to use Dr. Sakinofsky's report to prove that Tsafendas was politically motivated. The fact is the Attorney-General did not use any evidence to support the argument that Tsafendas was fit to stand trial, so why did he even attempt to prove such a thing, especially since his two own experts appeared to agree with the defence that the accused is schizophrenic and unfit to stand trial? He couldn't really have expected a successful challenge to the defence without any evidence.

B. HE DID NOT AGREE WITH THEIR DIAGNOSES

This would mean that he accepted Tsafendas was a schizophrenic and unfit to stand trial, which would certainly explain his failure to produce any evidence to challenge the defence. However, it does not explain his line of questioning and his apparent attempt to prove that Tsafendas was not a schizophrenic and that this was a political act. Furthermore, if he had accepted his witnesses' diagnosis, he should have prevented Judge Beyers from being so aggressive towards the defence witnesses, as David Bloomberg and Wilfrid Cooper correctly pointed out. Despite the fact that the State and the defence were in agreement, the Attorney-General allowed the trial to be turned into a showcase.

C. OTHER SCENARIOS

The question is: which of the above options was correct? Did the State accept the diagnoses of its own witnesses or did it not? Either way, there are questions left unanswered. However, there are three other scenarios involving the Attorney-General that would explain everything, including his attitude and actions during this inquiry:

- The Attorney-General is incompetent. He fails to evaluate correctly the importance of the evidence gathered by the police. His questioning is irrelevant, pointless or self-defeating. He fails to call evidence to support his case and challenge the defence. Incompetence would explain his behaviour during the summary trial. That, however, would probably make him the most incompetent Attorney-General ever.
- The Attorney-General is not aware of the evidence gathered by the police. The police gave him selective evidence and therefore he did not have the right information to challenge the defence. This option, along with the incompetence theory, would explain his line of questioning and the lack of evidence to challenge the defence and support his claim that Tsafendas was fit to stand trial.
- The Attorney-General appears to challenge the defence's line, seeking to prove that Tsafendas is fit to stand trial and that the assassination was a political act, but he is actually just pretending. That would explain everything that happened during the summary trial; it would explain his line of questioning, his failure to produce any evidence to challenge the defence and why he appeared to be questioning the defence witnesses while the State's two expert witnesses had already agreed with the defence.

OTHER ISSUES WITH THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S CONDUCT

Let us examine some aspects of the Attorney-General's strange behaviour:

TSAFENDAS'S MOTIVE

This is the area which most clearly suggests that the Attorney-General is merely pretending to challenge the defence case or possibly that he has not been given all the evidence. He heard each of the defence's psychiatrists state that Tsafendas was not politically motivated and that he killed Dr. Verwoerd out of “frustration” and because of the tapeworm. However, Tsafendas had not said anything like that in his statements to the police; instead, he gave clear and logical political reasons for his act. These motives were never mentioned during the summary trial and certainly, for whatever reason, they were not used to challenge the defence. It is true that the Attorney-General had knowledge of things that were in Tsafendas's statements to the police, but this does not prove that he had access to the whole statements. People who knew Tsafendas for lengthy or for shorter periods told the police that they heard him say he considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant and a dictator, that he was a communist and anti-apartheid. None of their statements was led in evidence by the Attorney-General.

What points to scenario C as the likeliest reason for the Attorney-General's apparently bizarre conduct is his attempt to challenge Dr. Cooper's claim that the killing was not politically motivated by using Dr. Sakinofsky's report. Even if van den Berg was not in possession of Tsafendas's statements or any other evidence where his political ideology was mentioned, he could never have expected to challenge Dr. Cooper's testimony with a medical report whose diagnosis was schizophrenia. Furthermore, Tsafendas's alleged ideas set out in this report were plainly idiotic, and the Attorney-General could not have expected anyone to take them serious as political motives. Still, not one of the 150 people who were questioned by the police at the time said anything about Tsafendas that bore the slightest resemblance to the things mentioned in this report, and this should have been known the Attorney-General. He should have known that Tsafendas was a Communist and an opponent of apartheid, as several witnesses had testified. He was also well aware that Tsafendas was a former member of the SACP.

Even if the Attorney-General believed that these outlandish ideas at Dr. Sakinofsky's report constituted Tsafendas's motivation, did he actually consider them to be the beliefs of a sane man? Dr. Sakinofsky had diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic precisely because of these ideas. The Attorney-General may not have been given all the statements taken from people who knew Tsafendas, but he must have seen that not one witness mentioned such ideas. Fortunately for the Attorney-General, he was stopped by Judge Beyers before he continued further with Dr. Sakinofsky's report, and the damage he was doing to his own case was limited. However, just the next day Dr. Sakinofsky spoke at length about Tsafendas's alleged motive as given to him by Tsafendas himself, and presented them, clearly and convincingly, as “deluded” and “confused.”

The Attorney-General might have the excuse that he was not in possession of Tsafendas's statements to the police or any other evidence he could use to challenge the question of motive. However, as leading counsel for the State, he had no excuse for attempting to challenge Dr. Cooper with Dr. Sakinofsky's report. This was a move which, if not stopped by Judge Beyers, would have reinforced from the very first day of the summary trial the idea that Tsafendas was a schizophrenic without any political motive, thus supporting the defence and ruining the State's own case.

TSAFENDAS'S ABILITY TO WORK

The Attorney-General sought to challenge Dr. Cooper's opinion that Tsafendas could not hold down a job or work efficiently by stating that there was evidence that Tsafendas's work at Parliament was satisfactory. However, he not only failed to produce evidence to support his claim, he did open the issue of Tsafendas's efficiency at Parliament for discussion. The next day, defence witness Gerald Shaw, a Parliamentary correspondent, testified that Tsafendas's work was unsatisfactory, confirming Dr. Cooper's testimony and damaging the Attorney-General's claim. The Attorney-General did nothing to challenge Shaw and again produced no evidence to support his initial claim. Then, just a few hours after Shaw's testimony, he again raised the issue of Tsafendas's working ability when he cross-examined Dr. Zabow and once again, he failed to produce any supportive evidence.

By returning time after time to the question of Tsafendas's work, the Attorney-General managed to reinforce the defence's line that the accused was incapable of handling even menial jobs. What is extraordinary is that abundant evidence existed that would not just challenge such a claim, but would destroy it completely. Two simple examples: in 1961, Tsafendas worked for six months as a teacher of English at the best private language college in Istanbul. Even if the Attorney-General was not in possession of Tsafendas's statement about his time teaching in Istanbul or the fact that he used a reference from the college to get his job at Parliament, the South African media had reported this.³³⁰⁴

If the Attorney-General had moved to discover these facts, he could have posed a virtually unanswerable question to Dr. Cooper: "How is it that the man you say cannot hold down a simple job, actually worked for six months as an English teacher at a prestigious private college?" However, even if the Attorney-General was unaware of the teaching job, he certainly knew that Tsafendas had worked for six years at the Vulcan Iron Works and for two years at the Imperial Airways factory in Quilemane. More importantly, he was in possession of testimonies from the Vulcan Iron Works that Tsafendas had “performed his duties in a satisfactory manner.” Van den Berg made no mention of such important evidence, although he had included this information in his memorandum about Tsafendas on October 3.³³⁰⁵

³³⁰⁴ The Cape Times, 'Tsafendas Taught Turks English', 8 September 1966; Daily Dispatch, 'Tsafendas Taught English in Turkey', 8 September 1966: 1.

Finally, no apparent effort was made by the Attorney-General to contact Tsafendas's colleagues in the House of Assembly as to his working abilities. Five of them had already testified to the police and to the Commission of Enquiry and none of them had said anything negative about Tsafendas, his work or his mental state, on the contrary he was characterised as a normal man who did his work just like any other messenger.

STATEMENTS OF DEFENCE WITNESSES WERE LEFT UNCHALLENGED WERE THEY COULD HAVE EASILY BEEN BROKEN DOWN

As we have seen, there was a plethora of evidence gathered by the police which could have been used to challenge statements by defence witnesses. These included absurd claims that Tsafendas was unsympathetic towards Coloureds, that he was a supporter of Dr. Verwoerd and apartheid, that he was unable to function on a reasonable level, that he forced his way into the Daniels's house and several others. Not one of these claims was challenged and though it is certainly possible that the police withheld evidence that would have been useful to the Attorney-General, they could not know before the trial what evidence a witness would give and therefore could not have removed statements that could have been used in the trial. They could have withheld evidence about Tsafendas's political activities and ideology, but not other statements that did not contain references to his political ideas.

A clear example of the above is the one concerning the marriage issue between Helen Daniels and Tsafendas. Tsafendas and Helen Daniels both testified that she had proposed to him that they should meet and get married.³³⁰⁶ Caroline Barbeau testified that Tsafendas wanted to be reclassified in order to marry Helen Daniels.³³⁰⁷ However, this was not mentioned during Peter Daniels's testimony. In that, he claimed that they allowed Tsafendas to stay in their home simply because he was a member of their Church and that Tsafendas appeared like someone who practically forced himself onto the family.

³³⁰⁵ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkoperij. NASA.

³³⁰⁶ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File VDSO 17/64, NASA; Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³³⁰⁷ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Tsafendas is portrayed in a negative way by both Peter and Merle Daniels and the Attorney-General does not ask them about Helen's marriage proposal to Tsafendas. Helen Daniels had testified that Tsafendas was recommended to her by fellow members of their sect. Helen was a highly respected preacher and naturally the other members of the sect would not have recommended Tsafendas if he was the type of person described by the Daniels. Helen Daniels herself, who knew Tsafendas better than her brother and sister-in-law, as she had lived under the same roof with him, had testified to the police that Tsafendas was not insane. Neither this nor anything else from her statement was used during the cross-examination when it could have shattered the Daniels's weak testimony.

Several witnesses testified that Tsafendas preferred Coloured people to Whites. For example, his flatmate Jacobus Bornman testified that Tsafendas "stood up a lot for the Coloureds" and Inspector Horacio Ferreira, of the Portuguese Security Police in Mozambique, testified that Tsafendas was "intensely anti-White."³³⁰⁸ However, Smorenberg's opinion and claim was left unchallenged and was attributed to Tsafendas's ambivalence. These and other claims could easily have been challenged but no move was made to examine them.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S LINE OF QUESTIONING

Apart from his cross-examinations of Dr. Cooper, Patrick O'Ryan and Dr. Sakinofsky, the Attorney-General did little to challenge defence witnesses and often when he did, his questions were pointless and seemed to go nowhere. Often they were just repeats of statements by the witnesses, as in "Did you say it was the 26th" or they were irrelevant or pointless, adding nothing to the State's aim. For instance, when the Attorney-General cross-examined Dr. Zabow, he asked if Tsafendas had given "a good account of himself." This was after Dr. Zabow had spoken at length about that very subject and had even read lengthy extracts from Tsafendas's statement to him to demonstrate that Tsafendas was not able to give a good account for himself. Judge Beyers had to intervene again, saying: "the witness has told us at length about the garbled, nonsensical, stupid, disjointed account which the accused did give him when he asked him the question. He has read out at length the account he gave him when he asked him: 'did you kill the Prime Minister, and why?' he read pages of the account."³³⁰⁹ Only then did van den Berg drop the question.

³³⁰⁸ Col. van Wyk's report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

On occasions, his questioning was more harmful than beneficial to the State. One example was using Dr. Sakinofsky's medical report on Tsafendas to challenge Dr. Cooper. Another was the question of Tsafendas's efficiency as a Parliamentary messenger. A third was asking Patrick O'Ryan, a witness who had spoken positively about the accused, if he felt that Tsafendas was sponging on him. That was the sort of question that should have been asked by the defence counsel, not by the State which is supposedly challenging the emerging picture of Tsafendas as a hopeless case.

What is more, the Attorney General did nothing to challenge Peter Daniels's important testimony which sought to portray Tsafendas as someone who virtually forced his way into the Daniels's home and was chasing Peter Daniels's sister. Although both claims were untrue and could have been easily challenged by Helen Daniels's testimony to the police, this did not happen. Instead, the Attorney-General asked about statements Peter Daniels had already made, a point which the Court highlighted, or asked him irrelevant or unimportant questions such as how many suitcases Tsafendas had, whether he used his welding kit and if he received and wrote letters. Daniels twice said that Tsafendas arrived on August 28, 1965, but the Attorney-General still asked if it was July 10. Helen Daniels had testified to the police that Tsafendas arrived on August 28, 1965. Van den Berg did not suggest that August 28 might have been the wrong date, so why press it?

Finally, although at times the Attorney-General's cross-examination appeared to be fierce and insistent, as with Dr. Cooper and Dr. Sakinofsky, and to some extent, Patrick O'Ryan, in reality it failed to challenge any of the testimonies. It did not come close to exposing or destroying the evidence offered. What is surprising is that there was a massive amount of evidence gathered by the South African police that could have been used to challenge every single testimony, but this simply did not happen. Once again, however, this could be because the State was not in possession of all the evidence.

THE VERGOS ISSUE

³³⁰⁹ Dr. Abraham Aubrey Zabow's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

On October 12, the story of the day in South Africa was that Nikolas Vergos, the man who had fought with Tsafendas at Mandini and was a sought-after witness, was finally located. “KEY WITNESS FOUND” announced the front page of the Daily Dispatch,³³¹⁰ while The Cape Times bannered “IMPORTANT WITNESS TRACED.”³³¹¹ Justice J.T. van Wyk, chairman of the Commission of Enquiry into Dr. Verwoerd’s death, had appealed to the media earlier for help in locating Vergos, who was thought to have “vital information” regarding Tsafendas. Six hours later, Vergos walked into the office of the Rand Daily Mail in Johannesburg and was later questioned by the police and the Commission.³³¹²

Vergos, although characterised as a “key” and “important” witness who had “vital information” about Tsafendas, was not asked to testify at the summary trial. He gave a statement to the police and testified before the Commission, but he was not asked by either the defence or the State to appear at the summary trial. Why was such an important witness not required to appear?

Let us examine Vergos and his relationship with Tsafendas for a possible explanation. They both worked at Frasers and Chalmers in Mandini. There was an argument after Vergos refused to pay two African workers he had employed illegally. Tsafendas defended them and asked him to pay them and a fight began.³³¹³ Vergos then asked his superiors to fire Tsafendas because he was “a kaffir and a Communist.”³³¹⁴ He even described him as “the biggest Communist in the Republic of South Africa”³³¹⁵ and a “Communist bastard.”³³¹⁶ All these statements were in the possession of the South African police.

Clearly, Vergos would not have been a suitable witness for the defence, who were trying to portray Tsafendas as a man without any political ideas and who was even “unsympathetic towards the Coloureds,” but he would have been the perfect witness for the State if it really wanted to challenge the defence line. Vergos twice described him to his boss and to a security officer as a Communist and had even fought with him after Tsafendas

³³¹⁰ Daily Dispatch, ‘Dr. Verwoerd: Key Witness Found’, 12 October 1966: 1.

³³¹¹ The Cape Times, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Inquiry: Important Witness Traced’, 12 October 1966: 1.

³³¹² The Cape Times, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Inquiry: Important Witness Traced’, 12 October 1966: 1.

³³¹³ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

³³¹⁴ Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³³¹⁵ Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³³¹⁶ Jan Johannes Albertus Fourie statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

defended the two Black South Africans. However, as we have already noted, the word “Communist” was never heard at the summary trial.

THE STATE-WITNESSES

As we know, the Attorney-General before the trial refused permission to the defence to speak to people on the State's witness list. The defence lawyers appealed to Judge Beyers who gave them permission to do so.³³¹⁷ Why did he do that, especially when he did not call even one of them to support his stated belief that Tsafendas was capable of standing trial? There were more than a hundred witnesses able to challenge the defence's line and its witnesses and support the Attorney-General's alleged claim, but not one was called.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S LIE

Let us now examine an incident that tells us much about the Attorney-General's integrity and reliability, but also about his role in the case. As already stated, the word “Communist” was never heard during the summary trial, although the police had a plethora of evidence that Tsafendas was a devoted and passionate Communist, had been a dues-paying member of the South African Communist Party at a time when it was legal, had fought with the Communists during the Greek Civil War and was suspected of distributing Communist propaganda while in Mozambique. What makes the actions of the Attorney-General in the summary trial strange and suspicious is the following incident.

On October 30, ten days after the end of the summary trial, The Post revealed on its front page that Tsafendas used to be a member of the South African Communist Party. A Post journalist had interviewed the Attorney-General and asked him if he was aware that Tsafendas was a former member of the South African Communist Party. At this point in time, it had not become known to the Press or to anyone else that Tsafendas was a former member of the Communist Party. Van den Berg's bare-faced reply to the journalist was: “This is news to me – I certainly had no knowledge of it until this very moment when you brought it to my notice.”³³¹⁸

³³¹⁷ Cooper, Under Devil's Peak: The Life and Times of Wilfrid Cooper, An Advocate in the Age of Apartheid, p. 106-7.

³³¹⁸ Gordon Winter, ‘Tsafendas: I Was A Communist’, The Post, 30 October 1966: 1.

It was an outright lie. On 3rd October, two weeks before the start of the summary trial and twenty-seven days before this interview, the Attorney-General had written a detailed memorandum regarding Tsafendas. In paragraph 3 of the memorandum he wrote: "In a statement to the South African Police on 19 September 1966, Demitrio Tsafendas admitted that he had joined the Communist Party shortly before World War II. He also attended their meetings and paid the fees but denied the he had any further association with the Communists after he left South Africa in 1942."³³¹⁹

Thus, even if the Attorney-General was not in possession of any other evidence gathered by the police as to Tsafendas's Communist beliefs or activities, he was certainly aware that he was a former member of the South African Communist Party; after all, that was why he included the information in his memorandum. However, then, when questioned by The Post journalist, he pretended that it was the first time he heard about it. Why would he lie? We cannot know for certain, but the likeliest explanation seems to be that if he had admitted knowledge of Tsafendas's membership, then the question everyone would have asked was, "How come this was not brought up in the summary trial?" Tsafendas was portrayed as man with very little interest in politics and confused political ideas. The next question then would have been, "was other important information suppressed?" No matter what the Attorney-General's reasons were, the fact is that he lied. This raises large questions about his integrity and creates further suspicion about his role during the proceedings.

It should be mentioned here that during apartheid it was not unusual for the State to lie or to fabricate evidence. By coincidence, while Tsafendas's summary trial was taking place, another major trial was also taking place in Johannesburg, the Theron Trial. Johannes Andrias Theron, a head warder at the Cinderella Prison, Boksburg, was accused of twelve charges under the Commissioner of Oaths Act and the prisons Act-including two of publishing information about prisons in a newspaper and two of inciting people to do so.³³²⁰ Theron had revealed to newspapers some of the atrocities and brutal torture that was used in his prison against prisoners in order to extract information; one of them being the use of electric shocks.³³²¹ The prosecutor of the case was the infamous Percy Yutar, who was characterised by Israel Maisels as "plus royaliste que le roi – more royalist than the king,"

³³¹⁹ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkopery. NASA.

³³²⁰ Rand Daily Mail, 'Amazing Liar Says Utar', 18 October 1966.

³³²¹ Pogrund, War of Words: Memoir of a South African Journalist, p. 168.

because of his blind support for apartheid.³³²² Yutar was also at the time Deputy Attorney-General of the Transvaal. According to Benjamin Pogrund, the Rand Daily Mail journalist who covered the trial, Yutar's "unscrupulous alliance" with the police turned "day into night,"³³²³ so the defence team, which included Arthur Chaskalson and Joan Coaker, described the State case as being "riddled with perjury from top to bottom."³³²⁴

Finally, on 15 February 1970, Attorney-General van den Berg publicly stated that "State psychiatrists keep constant observation on Tsafendas. If they find he is fit to stand trial I will definitely arrest him immediately and charge him with murder."³³²⁵ However, according to Tsafendas's medical record, by that time he had only been seen twice or at most three times by a doctor. In his medical file in the SA archives, one can only find two reports regarding Tsafendas; one from 17 October 1967³³²⁶ and one from 14 January 1970.³³²⁷ The first, signed by Dr. Bothma, is entitled "Periodieke Rapport [Periodical Report] No. 1"; the second, signed by Dr. J. Harms, "Periodieke Rapport No. 3"; this suggests that there was probably another report in between these two that has now gone missing. Although it is not absolutely clear, these reports seem to refer to examinations that took place that specific day; they nowhere refer to Tsafendas receiving any treatment or being under "constant observation." Being examined twice or three times in three and half years of imprisonment could hardly be described as "constant observation", unless van den Berg's definition of "constant" is different to that of the average person.

³³²² Maisels, A Life at Law: The Memoirs of I.A. Maisels, QC, p. 319.

³³²³ Pogrund, War of Words: Memoir of a South African Journalist, p. 173-4.

³³²⁴ Rand Daily Mail, 21 October 1966: 4-5, 'Perjury in State case alleged'; For more details about the case see Pogrund, B. (2000) War on Words: Memoirs of a South African Journalist.

³³²⁵ The Sunday Times (London), 'Verwoerd Man May Be Tried', 15 February 1970: 6.

³³²⁶ Dimitrio Tsafendas Periodieke Rapport No. 1 Oor 'N Geestelik Gekrente of Gebrekkige Pasient, 17 October 1967. Dimitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

³³²⁷ Dimitrio Tsafendas Periodieke Rapport No. 3 Oor 'N Geestelik Gekrente of Gebrekkige Pasient, 14 January 1970. Dimitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

CONCLUSION ABOUT THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S ROLE

All of the above issues make the position of the Attorney-General look awkward, to say the least, especially because the police had in their possession ample evidence to break down the defence's line which was not used during the proceedings. However, his illogical behaviour can be explained perfectly if we accept that he was only pretending to challenge the defence, or that he was incompetent or that he was not in possession of all the evidence. It would explain:

- a. Why he appeared to question some witnesses rigorously, while his two own experts had come to the same conclusion as the defence.
- b. Why he used only certain extracts from Tsafendas's statements to the police, ignoring the most important ones, especially about motive.
- c. Why he attempted to challenge Dr. Cooper by using Dr. Sakinofsky's report, thus raising yet more "delusional and confused" ideas of Tsafendas.
- d. Why he attempted to challenge Dr. Cooper by claiming that Tsafendas's work at the Parliament was efficient. He did not produce any evidence and the next day a defence witnesses easily rebuffed his claim, stating the exact opposite. Nevertheless, he attempted to challenge Dr. Zabow by making the same claim.
- e. The fact that none of the evidence gathered by the police which could have challenged the defence was used.
- f. The Attorney-General's pointless, repetitive and irrelevant questioning of some of the witnesses. On occasions, not only did it offer nothing to the State's cause, it seriously harmed it, as with Dr. Sakinofsky's report, the claim about Tsafendas's work inefficiency and the "sponging" comment with O'Ryan. Add to these, asking Dr. Zabow if Tsafendas was able to give a good account of himself and the exchanges with Peter and Merle Daniels.

Of course, these scenarios are only suppositions, and a combination of incompetence and lack of evidence could also explain everything. That, however, would make van den Berg just about the most incompetent lawyer ever to hold down the post of Attorney-General. Professor John Dugard believes that the police may have withheld the evidence from the Attorney-General, but that it is also possible that van den Berg was pretending to challenge the defence. He notes that during apartheid the "prosecutors were never independent." He is “quite sure” that van den Berg knew what he had to do in this case and it is possible that he “could have suppressed” the evidence.³³²⁸

Advocate George Bizos also believes that both scenarios are feasible; although he did not know van den Berg, he is not “the least surprised” at his conduct during the summary trial and believes that “it was to be expected” in a case like this. He stated that during apartheid, in “serious political cases”, often the “public prosecutor was the last wheel of the car [a Greek expression meaning the person of least importance]. But he also certainly knew that it was more preferable for the government for Tsafendas to be insane than a communist with political motives.”³³²⁹ Denis Goldberg also believes that both scenarios are very possible. He has no doubt that the Attorney General could very well have withheld the evidence and lied to the court. He mentioned as an example Percy Yutar, the public prosecutor in the Rivonia Trial: “He would actually make false statements; the prosecutor would make false statements deliberately.”³³³⁰ No matter what the reasons were, or the political climate at the time, the fact is that the police had abundant evidence to break down the defence case and none of it was used by the Attorney-General.

³³²⁸ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

³³²⁹ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017.

³³³⁰ Denis Goldberg in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

AFTERMATH

Tsafendas's summary trial did not dispense with all the concerns relating to Dr. Verwoerd's assassination. Minister of Justice Mr. P.C. Pelser said that the Government accepted the trial findings and urged the public to do likewise,³³³¹ while he also announced that a Commission of Enquiry would be appointed to "thoroughly investigate the effectiveness of the existing legal rules applicable to cases of this type."³³³²

On November 6, Judge van Wyk, who was still at work as the sole member of the Commission of Enquiry into Dr. Verwoerd's death, called for the establishment of registers listing people with dangerous mental disorders, as well as those known to be drug addicts or alcoholics. Van Wyk urged that a record be maintained of people who had been treated at mental hospitals and were potentially harmful. Their details should be contained in a confidential central register to which the Security Police would have access. A second register would be of "known alcoholics or people suffering from drug addiction or similar mental disorders." Van Wyk said such people could be banned from driving "and this could have an effect in cutting the rate of road accidents." The psychiatric profession was shocked by these proposals.³³³³

As for Tsafendas: shortly after the trial, he was taken to Robben Island. He was the only prisoner ever held there to be classified as "White." He remained there for four months before being moved to Pretoria Central Maximum Security Prison in February 1967.³³³⁴ An insight into the Government's true beliefs concerning the assassination and Tsafendas emerged on March 1967, just five months after the summary trial, when Dr. J. D. Vorster, brother Prime Minister Vorster, spoke to an anti-Communist symposium in the United States sponsored by the Church League of America. Vorster said, "Your President Kennedy and our Dr. Verwoerd were both killed by Communists."³³³⁵ The Sunday Times front-paged Vorster's statement with the headline "Premier's Brother Drops A Bombshell."³³³⁶ There was no mention of schizophrenia or of the hopeless, wandering, and friendless man without political interests who so dominated the trial. Vorster was clearly aware of Tsafendas's Communist

³³³¹ Pretoria News, 'Pelsers Asks Public to Accept Verdict,' 20 October 1966, ³³³² The Cape Times, 'Mad Killer Can Still Stand Trial If Cured', 21 October 1966: 1.

³³³³ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), 'Judge Says: Register Dangerous Mental Cases', 6 November 1966: 17.

³³³⁴ Tsafendas's transfer order from Robben Island to Central Prison, Pretoria. 3 February 1967. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

³³³⁵ Bunting, The Rise of the South African Reich, p. 76; Sunday Times (Johannesburg), 'Premier's Brother Drops A Bombshell', 19 March 1967: 1.

³³³⁶ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), 'Premier's Brother Drops A Bombshell', 19 March 1967: 1.

beliefs, and probably his activities, too, no doubt courtesy of his brother or his brother's close friend, General van den Bergh.

Tsafendas's file at the Prison Service, File: A5078, described him as "A person of Colour, an extremely resourceful and cunning individual who is physically and mentally able to plan and execute escape."³³³⁷ These words hardly fit the Tsafendas described by the psychiatrists – someone unable to function on a reasonable level and unfit to stand trial. However, the description fits perfectly with the way Tsafendas was described by people who knew him well. Vorster's remark and Tsafendas's prison file suggest that the high authorities were well aware of the real Tsafendas as opposed to the caricature that was put on trial.

³³³⁷ Marais, Die Era van Verwoerd, p. 208.

SUMMARY TRIAL CONCLUSION

The most striking thing about the summary trial was not the distorted way in which Tsafendas was portrayed, but the fact that the Attorney-General did so little to challenge the profile when he could have broken it down very easily by using evidence gathered by the South African police. The vision of Tsafendas presented to the court was a travesty of the truth: a schizophrenic, incapable of looking after himself, unable to function on a reasonable level, a loner, withdrawn and without political interests. Not mentioned were the facts that he was a committed Communist, a former dues-paying member of the South African Communist Party and a street-level activist, that he was exiled from Mozambique for twelve years due to his Communist and anti-colonialist activities, and that he boldly displayed an intense life-long interest in political ideology. Instead, he was shown as a deluded and confused outsider who killed Dr. Verwoerd because of a tapeworm that supposedly lived inside him. The court accepted the defence's insanity plea and found Tsafendas unfit to stand trial. On the surface, the defence case appeared strong, but it could have been exposed by dutiful examination of witnesses and their statements and by other evidence gathered by the police.

THE DEFENCE WITNESSES

Naturally, the defence chose witnesses to support its line. This must have been a difficult task since no one of the two hundred people who were questioned by the police and the Commission of Enquiry could convincingly fulfil such a role. The defence's desperation to offer suitable testimony was obvious with the selection of witnesses like Johnston, Lieberman, Shaw and Cloete, who had minimal contact with Tsafendas. Individuals who had a passing acquaintance with Tsafendas, such as Shaw, or who had spoken to him for just twenty minutes in an entire lifetime, like Johnston, were chosen in preference to family and friends. However, those witnesses who did take the stand were chosen because each one could support something from the defence's line or the psychiatrists' diagnoses, which they did very well.

The O'Ryans spoke about the tapeworm, Smorenberg about Tsafendas being unable to hold down a job and being unsympathetic towards Coloureds, Johnston said he found him to be a strange man, the Daniels spoke about his supposed oddities. These were weak testimonies, especially by those who scarcely knew him, but they were taken seriously and went largely unchallenged by the Attorney-General despite a plethora of contrary evidence gathered by the police.

WITNESSES NOT USED

Apart from Patrick and Louisa O’Ryan, none of the defence witnesses knew Tsafendas well; clearly and correctly the defence wanted only witnesses who would support the insanity plea. While it is understandable that the defence did not call witnesses who knew Tsafendas well, it is surprising that the State did not produce even one witness to support its claim that Tsafendas was fit to stand trial. Especially since there were many who could have done so. Indeed, the police and the Commission of Enquiry had interviewed about two hundred people who would have been useful witnesses for the prosecution.

Tsafendas’s efficiency as a Parliamentary messenger was discussed extensively, but none of his work colleagues was asked to testify, although five of them had already spoken formally to the police and testified to the Commission of Enquiry. All would have been excellent witnesses for the State as they flatly contradicted the defence’s claim that Tsafendas’s work in the Parliament was not good enough.

Nikolas Vergos, who was much sought after by the Commission of Enquiry and the South African police and who was characterised by the South African media as a “key witness,”³³³⁸ did not testify. Again, although he would not have been useful for the defence, he would have been extremely helpful to the State because he could have challenged the defence claim that Tsafendas was unsympathetic towards Coloured people and was bereft of political thought.

The Eleni crew could not appear in court since they were outside the country, but their statements were taken by the South African police in Venice on the 12th of October and should have been very useful to the State. Some of the seamen told police that Tsafendas was a Communist who had fought with the Communists in the Greek Civil War, and, more importantly, that he had characterised a possible assassination of Dr. Verwoerd as “justifiable” because he was a tyrant and a dictator. That Dr. Verwoerd’s death was being discussed on the Eleni three days before the assassination was a major issue for the Commission of Enquiry, but it was never mentioned during the summary trial.

³³³⁸ Daily Dispatch, ‘Dr. Verwoerd: Key Witness Found’, 12 October 1966: 1; The Cape Times, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Inquiry: Important Witness Traced’, 12 October 1966: 1.

However, the most important of the missing potential witnesses were Tsafendas's family. All of them had stated that he was "definitely not insane" and none was aware of the tapeworm.³³³⁹

THE TAPEWORM

The main focus of the summary trial was the tapeworm. The court was told two different stories about its origins though this was not picked up by anyone. According to Dr. Cooper, Dr. Muller and Mr. van Zyl, Tsafendas had it since 1935 or 1936, while according to Louisa O'Ryan it was since he was a little boy. Tsafendas was seventeen and eighteen years old in 1935 and in 1936, no "little boy."

Furthermore and more importantly, according to Louisa O'Ryan, Tsafendas's step-mother removed six feet of a tapeworm, which he had excreted as a boy, and destroyed it, and since then, Tsafendas believed the rest of the worm was living inside him. However, when examined by the Commission of Enquiry, the step-mother flatly denied that any such incident ever took place and insisted that she had never heard anything about a tapeworm. She further maintained that Tsafendas was "definitely not insane." The other members of Tsafendas's family also denied that he told them anything about a tapeworm and all declared that he was "definitely not insane." For the rest of their lives, Marika and the family insisted that Tsafendas invented the tapeworm story and that none of the things he claimed in relation to it ever happened. The police and the Commission questioned two hundred witnesses at the time, including people who knew Tsafendas very well, some since childhood. Not one of them mentioned anything about the tapeworm.

The O'Ryans did testify in court about the tapeworm, but they admitted later that this was at the suggestion of Wilfrid Cooper to prevent Tsafendas being sentenced to death. Patrick O'Ryan was one of the 150 witnesses questioned by the police before the summary trial and he did not mention a tapeworm then. He had also told the police that Tsafendas was perfectly sane.

³³³⁹ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

All the psychiatrists who testified said Tsafendas told them that the tapeworm did not direct him to kill Dr. Verwoerd, although he told Dr. Cooper that the “tapeworm was right in the middle of it.” However, the psychiatrists concluded that since the tapeworm had virtually taken over Tsafendas’s life, it was responsible for the killing. Finally, very soon after the assassination, Tsafendas was examined by three doctors, one of them Dr. Kossew and another Dr. Sakinofsky, and both testified for the defence. Tsafendas did not mention the tapeworm to any of these three doctors.

THE PSYCHIATRISTS AND THE PSYCHOLOGISTS

Five psychiatrists and two psychologists examined Tsafendas on behalf of the defence and the State and found him to be schizophrenic. However, although this was a forensic case, none of the psychiatrists was a forensic psychiatrist. Dr. Sakinofsky even suggested during the proceedings that a forensic psychiatrist “should be called by the court,” but this did not happen. It is scarcely credible that in such an important criminal case, none of those who examined the accused was a forensic psychiatrist.

Furthermore, all the examinations of Tsafendas took place while he was in custody in Caledon Square police station. In David Pratt’s case, after the defence had led its evidence, including the medical evidence by the psychiatrists, the accused was sent to Weskoppies, an institution for mentally disturbed persons, for psychiatric evaluation for fourteen days.³³⁴⁰ Fourteen days of observation in a clinical institution for Pratt contrasted with four and a half hours which each of the psychiatrists spent with Tsafendas, in a police cell (except for Dr. Cooper and Prof. van Wyk, who spent around six hours with him). Apparently this was enough for Judge Beyers to decide it was not necessary to send Tsafendas for further evaluation at a mental hospital or being examined by a forensic psychiatrist too.

In addition, Prof. Lamont, apart from observing Pratt, interviewed five people who knew Pratt very well.³³⁴¹ By contrast, none of the psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas spoke to anybody who knew him. What Tsafendas told the psychiatrists was the antithesis of what two hundred people had told the police and the Commission about his character and his political ideas, but the psychiatrists were not in position to know that. More importantly, what ³³⁴⁰ Maisels, A Life at Law: The Memoirs of I.A. Maisels, QC, p. 105; The Cape Argus, ‘Judge Rules Pratt is Mentally Disordered’, 26 September 1960: 2.

³³⁴¹ Prof. Lamont’s psychiatric report on David Beresford Pratt in Regina vs. David Beresford Pratt, 26 September 1960. The State versus David Beresford Pratt. 712-60. NASA; The Cape Argus, ‘Judge Rules Pratt is Mentally Disordered’, 26 September 1960: 2.

he told them flatly contradicted what he told the police when he was in custody, but these statements were not given to the psychiatrists and were never mentioned at the court. Several of the psychiatrists' claims were easy to challenge, but the Attorney-General failed to act.

It is also worth pointing out that after their initial inspection, for reasons unknown to the author, all the defence psychiatrists, except Dr. Sakinofsky, examined Tsafendas for a second time on October 4. Dr. Cooper, Dr. MacGregor and Dr. Zabow examined Tsafendas that day, each separately and for ninety minutes. In addition, Tsafendas was also examined that day by the State psychiatrist, Professor van Wyk. Thus, Tsafendas was seen in one day by four different psychiatrists on four different occasions, meaning that he spent six hours that day talking about the same things, and answering the same questions. It would seem more logical for each psychiatrist to have examined him on different days so they could observe his functioning at different times, but surprisingly this did not happen. The third and final examination by the defence psychiatrists took place on October 11; this time the psychiatrists were all together.

Were the psychiatrists to blame for misdiagnosing Tsafendas? Clearly not. Dr. MacGregor said he had to "accept what was given to him" and that he "had to take shortcuts" due to the limited time before the court sitting. It was the same for the other psychiatrists. They took for granted what Tsafendas told them and had no way of double-checking it. Some, like Dr. MacGregor, even accepted Tsafendas's medical history as it was told by the accused himself. The psychologist Reyner van Zyl told the author that he and some of the psychiatrists were given Tsafendas's medical history verbally and saw none of his medical records.

The psychiatrists were not given the statements Tsafendas made to the police while in custody nor any statement taken from people who knew him. Dr. Cooper was discouraged from probing into Tsafendas's background and his activities prior to the assassination. He was told that this was the job of the police and was given the impression by the police and the defence that this was a straightforward case of a schizophrenic. Van Zyl and some of the psychiatrists were given the same impression. The fact that none of the experts who examined Tsafendas sought collateral information about him from family and friends seems to confirm this.

None of them was aware that Tsafendas had faked mental illness at least twice in the past and that he was experienced with regard to hospitals. None of them was given some of the records of Tsafendas's hospitalizations, such as the report from the Government Hospital in Beira where he was admitted after claiming to be Saint Peter. Had they accessed this document, they would have seen behavioural inconsistencies that were not normal for a true schizophrenic. None of them read the Grafton State Hospital report which stated that Tsafendas had faked mental illness in 1943. Furthermore, this report also contained several behavioural inconsistencies in contrast to the symptoms noted during the doctor's observations of Tsafendas while in custody.

Tsafendas's mental state apart, none of those who examined Tsafendas seemed concerned with his physical condition at the time. He was in police custody for twenty days before he was examined by the defence and all the examinations took place inside the police station where he was in custody. Although David Bloomberg found him twice with bruises and Tsafendas himself later described in detail how he was tortured while in custody, none of those who examined him makes any mention of his physical state, which could have affected his state of mind. It seems highly unlikely that the psychiatrists did not wonder about how Tsafendas was treated while in custody. Given the reputation of the South African police for brutality, they could hardly have expected him to be handled with kid gloves. It is curious that the doctors met with Tsafendas on several occasions yet appeared to remain ignorant of his physical conditions. They may not have known about the torture, unlikely as that seems, but they must have been aware of the conditions of his cell by his lawyers who had seen it. Without a bed, he was forced to sleep on the concrete floor. Yet none of the doctors seemed curious about Tsafendas's physical state or that he was in custody for twenty days before anyone examined him.

Furthermore, Tsafendas's treatment differed markedly from that of David Pratt after his defence lawyers claimed he was unfit to stand trial. Pratt was given an extended period of observation and investigation at Weskoppies Mental Hospital. After two weeks, a report was prepared by the head physician and Pratt was returned to court. He was then found insane and not fit to stand trial and he was committed to Bloemfontein Mental Hospital.³³⁴² Tsafendas, by contrast, was examined for periods of no more than four and half hours inside the police station where he had been detained since the assassination.

³³⁴² Prof. Lamont's psychiatric report on David Beresford Pratt in Regina vs. David Beresford Pratt, 26 September 1960. The State versus David Beresford Pratt. 712-60. NASA; Maisels, A Life at Law: The Memoirs of I.A. Maisels, QC, p. 102-107; The Cape Argus, 'Judge Rules Pratt is Mentally Disordered', 26 September 1960: 2.

Finally, Tsafendas had the impression that all the psychiatrists, especially those of the defence, were eager to find him to be schizophrenic. That is why he thought that it was very easy to convince them as they also did not push him as much as they probably could have. He thought that on some occasions, he could have been put in a difficult position because of clear inconsistencies in his stories, but the psychiatrists did not do that and just let it go.³³⁴³ Naturally, it was also not that difficult to convince them as all the information they got about him was from himself, and they had no means of confirming it.

THE DIAGNOSES

The psychiatrists and the psychologists presented Tsafendas as a hopeless loner, unsociable and withdrawn, a man without any serious political consciousness. However, the vast majority of the witnesses had described Tsafendas to the police and to the media as exactly the opposite. For example, Tsafendas was characterised by the medical experts as a “withdrawn and isolated individual.” Compare this with the testimony of Guenter Haafe, a doorman at the Frankfurt factory where Tsafendas worked in 1958:

“He was a jolly man, always smiling and friendly. He would almost always come into my locker (room) to say Hi. He was really one of the friendliest workers I have met, and trust me, in my twelve years as a doorman I have seen thousands and thousands of faces coming in and out. This man was courteous, they do not make them like that anymore.”³³⁴⁴

Horst Hartmann, Tsafendas's boss on the Frankfurt job, said Tsafendas was “well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous ... a very pleasant man. He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman.”³³⁴⁵ All of the psychiatrists' statements could have been challenged by using testimonies such as those of Haafe and Hartmann, but this did not happen.

Those who examined Tsafendas claimed that he was unable to function on a reasonable level, unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes, unable to give a coherent account of himself, talked in a disjointed manner and suffered from thought ³³⁴³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

³³⁴⁴ Daily Dispatch, ‘He Made A Good Impression’, 8 September 1966: 1; Natal Witness, ‘Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...’, 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, ‘Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte’, 8 September 1966.

³³⁴⁵ Daily Dispatch, ‘He Made A Good Impression’, 8 September 1966: 1; Natal Witness, ‘Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...’, 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, ‘Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte’, 8 September 1966.

blocking. However, none of the two hundred witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission, or the seventy-one witnesses who were interviewed by the author, ever noticed any of these symptoms. On the contrary they described him as an intelligent man, perfectly able to carry on a conversation and with excellent reasoning powers. Is it possible a man to have all these symptoms as set out in the court and no-one ever notice? According to Professors Alban Burke, Phillip Resnick, Robert L. Sadoff and Tuviah Zabow, it is extremely unlikely, and very close to impossible.³³⁴⁶ Reyner van Zyl, who examined Tsafendas for the defence, told the author that it was “highly improbable,”³³⁴⁷ while Professor Phillip Resnick found it “extremely unlikely.”³³⁴⁸

Father Nikola Banovic told the author:

“Everything this doctor [Dr. Cooper] has been saying is inaccurate; it’s not true about Dimitri. He was nothing like this, it’s like he had either examined a different person or he was a bad doctor.”³³⁴⁹

Fotini Gavasiadis told the author:

“Everything you have been telling me [as to what Dr. Cooper and the other doctors said] is gibberish. Everything that they were saying is gibberish. Everything. I don’t know how they came to these conclusions and how they managed to get away with it. It’s absolutely gibberish. Dimitris must have had a lot of fun sitting [in the court] and listening to all this gibberish about him. I can imagine him [in the court] laughing inside him ... I am sure he must have had enjoyed it ... especially since he succeeded in fooling them and getting away with it.”³³⁵⁰

The psychiatrists based their diagnoses wholly on what Tsafendas told them without any third-party information, and apart from Dr. Sakinofsky, no-one attempted to get more information about him. Even Dr. Sakinofsky was able to get only very limited details about Tsafendas from some of his medical records and did not speak to anyone who had met him. All of the examinations took place in the police station at Caledon Square after Tsafendas had been held there incommunicado for twenty days. This was not considered worthy of comment, perhaps understandable since South Africa at the time was a virtual police state.

³³⁴⁶ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016; Professor Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 17 December 2016; Professor Robert L. Sadoff in a personal interview with the author, 12 August 2015; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 10 October 2016.

³³⁴⁷ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 17 April 2016.

³³⁴⁸ Professor Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 7 May 2017.

³³⁴⁹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

³³⁵⁰ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 22 April 2016.

Leading forensic psychiatrist Professor John Macdonald said that “simulation is more frequent when a suspect faces the death sentence.” Tsafendas’s “symptoms” were seen in several cases where the accused faked mental illness. Professor Macdonald mentions the case of an accused man who asked his friends to testify in court in order to save his life, saying that he “gave the impression of being unstable, irrational and unsettled, that he would always lose interest in things he was doing, that he would begin a conversation and suddenly stop in the middle of it and start roaming, that he would sit and stare into space for long periods of time and pay no attention to those about him.”³³⁵¹

What is surprising is that the police and even the Commission were aware that Tsafendas was well read about psychiatry and mental illnesses. The police had found two medical books in his possession, one about insanity and psychiatry, the other concerning intestinal disorders.³³⁵² The Commission of Enquiry noted that Tsafendas was “quite knowledgeable about mental disorders — he also admitted to the Commission that he had read fairly extensively on the subject in order to determine what was wrong with him... and [the Commission] therefore adopted a somewhat sceptical attitude towards him. It is clear that his word cannot be relied upon, and that he is sufficiently intelligent to put on a fairly good act.”³³⁵³

In addition, the police found evidence that in at least two cases Tsafendas faked mental illness in order to from his predicaments. None of these facts was made available to those who examined Tsafendas, although they should have been. The doctors did not use any third-party information about Tsafendas in order to confirm or question what he was telling them, simply taking him at his word. As Tsafendas would later admit, he knew very well what to tell his examiners and how to behave with them.³³⁵⁴

It is inconceivable that a court in any democratic society today would accept psychiatrists’ diagnoses of an accused in a criminal case based on only three interviews, lasting a total of four and a half-hours, and lacking any third-party information. The medical experts concerned seem to have accepted what they were told, that it was a straightforward case and Tsafendas was a schizophrenic with a long mental history. More surprisingly, only ³³⁵¹ Macdonald, Psychiatry and the Criminal: A Guide to Psychiatric Examinations for the Criminal Courts, p. 61.

³³⁵² COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

³³⁵³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18.

³³⁵⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

two of those who examined Tsafendas had seen some of his medical records, while the others were told verbally of their content. Professor Alban Burke told the author that the diagnosis of schizophrenia “was based on very little evidence.”³³⁵⁵ Professors Alban Burke, Kirk Heilbrun, Robert L. Sadoff and Tuviah Zabow believe that the diagnoses of those who examined Tsafendas would not have been seen as credible in any modern, democratic court today.³³⁵⁶

TSAEFNDAS'S MEDICAL HISTORY

Although Tsafendas's medical history was fundamental to the defence case, references to his medical past were spotty and incomplete. A more careful examination would have shown that Tsafendas was not an authentic schizophrenic but a person who pretended to be one. In addition, a great many medical documents which could challenge or contradict the psychiatrists' judgments were not used.

Importantly, at least some of those who examined Tsafendas were told verbally that he had a long medical history of schizophrenia, but they never saw any records. They accepted the verbal assurance as a fact, without seeing inconsistencies in these reports which signalled clearly that Tsafendas could not have been a schizophrenic. The fact that he had faked mental illness at least twice was known to the South African police, but it was not conveyed to those who examined him and it was not mentioned during the summary trial. Tsafendas's medical report from Grafton State Hospital stated clearly that while in the United States in 1943 “he faked mental illness because he was afraid to ship out because of the numerous leakings (sinkings) of ships.”³³⁵⁷ The US State Department's report which accompanied Tsafendas's medical record from Grafton State Hospital stated clearly that the US Immigration authorities had found Tsafendas, after dealing with him for about five years, to be “unstable, but not insane.”³³⁵⁸ Again, this crucial statement was not referenced. Nor were the inconsistencies in his medical history, for example that he appeared not only to believe he had a tapeworm, but that he had other delusions, too: that he believed himself to be ³³⁵⁵ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016.

³³⁵⁶ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016; Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017; Professor Robert L. Sadoff in a personal interview with the author, 12 August 2015; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016.

³³⁵⁷ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

³³⁵⁸ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Washington to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

Saint Peter in 1964, that he could hear voices from the radiators, and that he believed people were being poisoned by food in the lodgings where he was staying, just two months before the assassination.

The fact that every time he was arrested he showed signs of mental illness, while otherwise he functioned perfectly well in life, was not picked up. Nor was the curious fact that the only times he entered hospital he had either been arrested or admitted himself. A fact that was overlooked by everyone is that none of the doctors who examined Tsafendas in previous years had found him to be as described by the doctors at the summary trial, and none of them had found him to be certifiable. If his condition had deteriorate since 1959 when he was last hospitalized about the tapeworm, someone must surely have noticed this, including the ten doctors who examined him between 1963 and 1966 or some of the two hundred or so witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission.

That he was examined ten times by nine doctors in South Africa over the last three years and found in every case to be mentally sane and physically healthy did not see the light of day at the summary trial. On the other hand, the diagnosis of schizophrenia by Dr. Kossew, a district surgeon who was not a psychiatrist was taken seriously. This despite the fact that the examination had taken only "a little bit longer" than ten minutes and focussed primarily on his physical condition. No-one pointed out that the reason Dr. Kossew examined Tsafendas was to adjudicate on Tsafendas's application for a disability grant, for which he needed to be found incapable of working.

Equally, no-one raised the issue the previous times when Tsafendas was examined by doctors and had to be found sane and healthy in order to get a permanent residency permit or a job he had applied for. It was evident that when Tsafendas needed to be found sane he was found sane and when he needed to be found insane, he was found as such. The medical records confirm Tsafendas's claim that he was capable of doing this, and that he was hospitalised only for two reasons – when he appeared to be mad (a pretence to get out of custody or to be free of torture) or because he had no money and/or place to stay.

It is also surprising that Tsafendas's medical records were not placed before the Court. Although Defence Counsel offered to submit them, Judge Beyers decided that was not necessary, and now these records cannot be found. It seems strange by any standards that medical records which played a crucial role in a case pivoting on the issue of insanity were not submitted as evidence and the Court only heard extracts read from their contents.

However, as we have seen, two of the records used by the defence team were manipulated by it to support the defence case. The other startling thing is that the State did not bother examining them.

OMISSIONS FROM THE SUMMARY TRIAL

In an effort to save his life, Tsafendas was presented as an anti-social person without friends or political convictions, a sponger and someone who was unable to function on a reasonable level. The defence did an excellent job in presenting its case with carefully selected witnesses, helped of course by what Tsafendas told the psychiatrists, as none of this would have been possible without his "participation."

However, there were several important facts about Tsafendas which were known to the South African police and would have been extremely useful for evidence but were not used. For example, that Tsafendas worked for some six months as a teacher of English at the most prestigious private language college in Istanbul, the Limasollu Naci. This fact was known to the police as Tsafendas had told them about it when he was interrogated, and the South African Press had also written of it. However, it was not mentioned during the inquiry and Tsafendas was presented as a man unable to do even the simplest of menial jobs.

TSAFENDAS'S MOTIVE

The greatest omission from the summary trial was Tsafendas's real motive for killing Dr. Verwoerd. Although the court heard much discussion of Tsafendas's possible motives for killing Dr. Verwoerd, what was never brought up was his avowal to the police that he murdered the Prime Minister because he was "disgusted with his racial policies," considered him a dictator and hoped "a change of policy would take place" by removing him. Several people said they heard Tsafendas characterise Dr. Verwoerd as "Hitler's best student," a tyrant and a dictator, but their statements were not produced. Tsafendas's declared willingness to do "anything that would get the South African regime out of power"³³⁵⁹ was also never mentioned.

Instead, Tsafendas appeared to have no idea why he killed Dr. Verwoerd and was unable to explain his reasons. What took centre stage was the tapeworm. Tsafendas insisted that the tapeworm did not ask him to kill Dr. Verwoerd and the psychiatrists admitted as much, but it was their conclusion that the tapeworm was ultimately responsible because it strongly influenced his life and thoughts. The Attorney-General could have overturned the psychiatrists' claims as to Tsafendas's motive simply by reading the statements he made to the police which were entirely compatible with what several witnesses had told the police and the Commission and quite incompatible with what was heard in the court. Needless to say, these statements were never heard. What the court did hear was a claim that Tsafendas actually liked Dr. Verwoerd.

³³⁵⁹ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

TSAFENDAS'S POLITICAL IDEAS

The second greatest omission from the summary trial were Tsafendas's political beliefs and his past political activities. Although the evidence gathered by the police, including several witnesses who testified that he was well-versed in politics and was a political animal,³³⁶⁰ he was presented, astonishingly, as a man without any interest in politics. His political activities in England, Mozambique and South Africa are never mentioned and he is instead presented as a deluded simpleton who killed Dr. Verwoerd because of a tapeworm that lived inside him.

Several witnesses had told the police that Tsafendas was anti-apartheid, anti-colonialist and a Communist. Tsafendas himself had admitted this when he was interrogated. Two men, Vergos and Father Probst, had reported him to a security officer and to the South African police respectively, one year before the assassination, specifically as a dangerous Communist. It was also known to the police that he had become a member of the anti-apartheid movement in Britain and had been associated with the leading anti-apartheid activists David Gardener, Solly Sachs and the Canon John Collins. He participated in anti-apartheid and anti-fascist demonstrations and meetings in London and was willing to do "anything that would get the South African regime out of power." It was also known to the police that Tsafendas established a friendly relationship with Commander Thomas Fox-Pitt, the secretary of the Anti-Slavery Society in London and one of the leading figures in the modern anti-slavery movement.

More importantly, it was known to them that he was a former member of the South African Communist Party and that he had fought with the Communists during the Greek Civil ³³⁶⁰ For example Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

War. It was also known to the South African authorities that he was banned from Mozambique and lived in exile until 1963, when he received an amnesty from the Portuguese government. It was known that he was arrested at least twice in Mozambique, and was suspected another two times, for conducting Communist and anti-colonialist propaganda. None of this was mentioned.

THE KILLING

All the psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas stated that he was unable to describe the killing and its planning. In fact, Tsafendas had described the planning and the act in detail to the police twice - on September 11 and then again on the 19th.³³⁶¹ The Attorney-General failed to challenge this, although he must have had Tsafendas's statements. Even thirty years later, Tsafendas was able to give a good account of the planning and the killing.³³⁶²

GENERAL APPEARANCE OF TSAFENDAS

Tsafendas was presented as a drifter who lived an aimless life, taking advantage of people, dirty, rude at times, unable to look after himself, a low-life. Abundant evidence existed from statements by people who knew Tsafendas, which flatly contradicted this characterisation and could easily have been used to destroy the distortion. Unmentioned were Tsafendas's political activities, his stints as a volunteer teacher of children in Istanbul and Mozambique,³³⁶³ the fact that he was extremely well read³³⁶⁴ and soft-spoken,³³⁶⁵ that he stood up for the Coloureds,³³⁶⁶ that, though himself poor, he gave money to down-and-³³⁶¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³³⁶² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

³³⁶³ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2014.

³³⁶⁴ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³³⁶⁵ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2014.

³³⁶⁶ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

outs,³³⁶⁷ that he had “excellent reasoning powers”³³⁶⁸ and that he was “able to reason in conversation.”³³⁶⁹

The Daniels's testimonies played an important role in the false portrayal of Tsafendas and though easy meat for the Attorney-General, he failed to engage with them. Both Daniels presented Tsafendas in a very negative way, perhaps on instructions from Wilfrid Cooper, as he had done with the O'Ryans. Their evidence painted the picture of a sponger who practically forced his way into their home and batted off the family. They indicated that they allowed him to stay out of charity and because he belonged to the same Christian sect.

What they did not say was that Helen Daniels, Peter Daniels's sister, had written first to Tsafendas asking to meet him and even proposing that he should marry her. She sent him five letters plus a photograph of herself. Tsafendas, like most normal men, agreed to meet her, but reserved any decision about marriage until they met face to face. The two family members were asked to testify since Helen, who knew Tsafendas much better, had already told the police that Tsafendas was perfectly sane. Obviously this ruled her out as a witness for the defence, but she could have been a very useful witness for the prosecution as her statement to the police contradicted what her brother and her sister-in-law testified. Omitted was also the fact that Tsafendas was recommended to Helen as a prospective spouse by fellow members of the sect. This is important since Helen Daniels was a preacher and a highly respected sect member. Her fellow Christians would hardly have urged her to see a person such as the one described by her brother and her sister-in-law.

EVIDENCE NOT USED

The South African police collected a massive amount of information about Tsafendas from a wide variety of sources, including people who knew him and documented reports from all over the world. These latter included reports from the Portuguese security police which were incomplete because “any information indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of Mozambique” was omitted.³³⁷⁰ Nevertheless, the totality of evidence showed Tsafendas as ³³⁶⁷ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Rand Daily Mail, ‘Tsafendas: In the Eyes of A Friend’, 14 September 1966.

³³⁶⁸ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³³⁶⁹ Gillian Claire Liebermann statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³³⁷⁰ Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

a completely different person from the one portrayed in court by the psychiatrists, both in personality and in political ideas.

The police knew perfectly well that Tsafendas considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant, a dictator, an evil man, the brains behind apartheid, and Hitler's best student; they knew that he hoped that by killing him a change of policy would take place and that he wanted to do anything to get the apartheid regime out of power; they knew that he was against slavery and colonialism, that he was a committed Communist, a former paid-up member of the South African Communist Party who had fought with the Communists in the Greek Civil war, and that he was imprisoned by the Portuguese because of his political activities.

Despite all these things being known to the South African police, they were not used to challenge the defence. Instead, the State remained mute, tolerating the picture put forward by the defence of a schizophrenic who believed he harboured a life-controlling tapeworm, who was unsympathetic towards the Coloureds, and who assassinated the prime minister because he was "frustrated" by his life.

As stated before, the author is not in a position to know whether the Attorney-General turned a blind eye to the evidence, whether he was never given it or whether he was simply incompetent. According to Professor John Dugard and Advocate George Bizos, both scenarios are very feasible. It is possible that van den Berg suppressed the evidence since prosecutors during apartheid were never independent. It is also possible, however, that van den Berg was not given the evidence by the police as it would not have been the first or last time that this happened during apartheid. The police always did whatever was necessary to protect apartheid's interests.³³⁷¹ For example, Gordon Winter stated that General van den Bergh asked him to not reveal to the Commission of Enquiry that Tsafendas was a Communist and to downplay his political activities.³³⁷² After the Sharpeville massacre, the police went to the hospitals and removed the bodies of victims to hide the fact that the police had used the banned dum-dum bullets. Then the police conveniently "lost" evidence about the use of dum-dums and "misplaced" evidence as to the ammunition rounds issued. All in all, an effective cover-up of the use of dum-dums.³³⁷³ Since the police were able to “misplace” evidence in 1960, they were surely capable of doing so again six years later.

³³⁷¹ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017; Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

³³⁷² Gordon Winter in A Question of Madness.

Finally, the withholding and concealment by the authorities of evidence which contradicted apartheid's interests became legal three years after the assassination. Prime Minister John Vorster and General van den Bergh engineered legislation which allowed them legally to withhold and conceal any documents and evidence in the pursuit of apartheid's interests. In 1969, the General Law Amendment Bill (the so-called ‘BOSS’ law) was passed, whose notorious Clause 29 authorised the Prime Minister or his nominee (i.e. van den Bergh) to prohibit oral testimony or the production of any document before any court or statutory body should they believe the evidence or document would be “prejudicial to the interests of the state or public security.” In reality, this permitted the police and the security forces to conceal or ensure the unavailability of any document or evidence which might jeopardise their cause and made it possible for them to continue use the courts for the punishment of offenders but to disregard the courts for all other purposes.³³⁷⁴ Tsafendas's case exemplified such a situation, when statements and documents contradicting the evidence presented in the court were concealed.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

The Attorney-General's attitude was somewhat bizarre and he damaged rather than helped his case with incompetent questioning. Examples of this were his attempt to use Dr. Sakinofsky's report to challenge Dr. Cooper that Tsafendas was politically motivated or his claim about the existence of evidence that showed that Tsafendas's work in the Parliament was satisfactory. Every single testimony could have been challenged and broken down quite easily by the State, although the Attorney-General failed to do so possibly for the reasons we examined previously.

It is also surprising that he failed to produce any evidence to support his claim that Tsafendas was fit to stand trial. What makes it even more surprising is that the South African police had gathered enough evidence not only to seriously challenge the insanity plea but to break it down. The evidence regarding Tsafendas's political activities and beliefs was overwhelming, although none of it was used.

³³⁷³ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 147-8; 154-6.

³³⁷⁴ International Defence and Aid Fund, BOSS: The First Five Years, p. 11; Sachs, Justice in South Africa, p. 256.

However, the most astonishing aspect of the Attorney-General's conduct of the case was that his two main witnesses had concluded two weeks before the summary trial started that Tsafendas was a schizophrenic and unfit to stand trial. In doing so, they agreed with the case for the defence. Despite his witnesses' conclusions, the Attorney-General gave the impression throughout the proceedings that he did not accept the defence's plea and that he was seeking to challenge it. Everyone, including the defence team, was stunned to hear the evidence given by the State's two expert witnesses. It was the Attorney-General who allowed what should have been a simple and straightforward case, since both sides were in agreement about the accused, to be turned into a show trial. Further evidence of the Attorney-General's duplicitous role in the proceedings came just ten days after the summary trial when he lied to The Post about his knowledge of Tsafendas once being a member of the South African Communist Party. He claimed that he had just found that out from the Post journalist when in fact he knew about it at least from the 3rd of October because he had mentioned in a memorandum about Tsafendas which he wrote that day.

THE DEFENCE TEAM

Judge Beyers rightly praised the lawyers who defended Tsafendas, as they had indeed "graced the profession." Their handling of the case was the opposite of the Attorney-General's. Evidence from psychiatrists and from people who had met Tsafendas, along with some medical records, made for a convincing case, even though things were not as they appeared to be. The picture could have been very different if the State had used the evidence gathered by the police to challenge Tsafendas's defence, but the fact is the State did not do so and the defence team deserved credit for the solid-looking case it presented. David Bloomberg told the author that at the end of the trial Tsafendas was "very grateful for everything that was being done for him. He kept on thanking us."³³⁷⁵

David Bloomberg in particular devoted a huge amount of energy to the case, succeeding, in a very limited time period, in finding suitable witnesses and evidence to support the defence's insanity plea. A gargantuan effort involved an international search for information from hospitals, government institutions and individuals long before the era of computerised communications technology and the invention of aids such as the internet. Wilfrid Cooper, too, with his highly intelligent and competent questioning of the witnesses, presented the defence's line with confidence and conviction. Cooper chose his words carefully and intelligently when presenting the case, especially with regard to Tsafendas's medical records and the scientific witnesses. Bloomberg and Cooper, along with their colleague Willy Burger, put together what seemed to be an extremely strong and convincing line, which they presented to the court with professional aplomb and conviction.

³³⁷⁵ David Bloomberg in a personal interview, 6 April 2014.

TSAFENDAS

Tsafendas was not the first or last person to pretend to be mad in order to escape punishment. It happened down the centuries. In the Bible, there is a description in the First Book of Samuel of David's successful pretence of madness to avoid punishment by the King of Gath. In 1960, in South Africa, after the Sharpeville massacre, witnesses were advised to "play the fool" to avoid police abuse.³³⁷⁶ In Greece, it is common practice for men to fake mental illness in order to not serve their compulsory military service. In fiction, pretending to be crazy is a regular novelist's device. For example in The Count of Monte Christo, imprisoned Abbe Faria pretended to be mad so that his guards would not take him seriously while he worked on his escape. In Homer's Trojan War, Ulysses feigned insanity in order to escape going to the war. In One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest, the main character, McMurphy, fakes mental illness in order to serve his sentence in a hospital rather than a prison.

There is little doubt that the defence would have failed to prove their case without Tsafendas's "cooperation." Although Tsafendas had given the police a perfectly logical political explanation for the killing, he changed his tune entirely with his defence team. The fact that he was not allowed to see his defence lawyers until twenty days after the assassination should be taken under consideration. As should the fact that he had specifically asked to be represented by Advocate George Bizos and his request was not accepted, although it is possible that it was never transmitted to the State by the police.

Why did Tsafendas talk to his defence team in exactly the opposite way he spoke to the police? What he told the police in his two statements was wholly compatible with the evidence gathered by the police and the Commission, including the two hundred statements taken from people who knew him, as well as statements made to the author by seventy-one people. What he told his defence team was completely incompatible with the above evidence. Tsafendas changed his tune because he could no longer take the pain and feared that an "undignified death" was waiting for him in the police station where he was held. He was not afraid to die, he had told the police, but he was terrified of being hanged in his cell by a plastic wire around his neck, and appalled at the lack of dignity associated with such a death. The torture he had endured over three weeks, especially the electric shocks and the mock hangings, also convinced him to simulate madness as he had done with the Portuguese police. The possibility of spending the rest of his life in a hospital must have seemed infinitely preferable to being hanged in his cell.

³³⁷⁶ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 194.

THE JUDGE AND HIS VERDICT

Judge Beyers' comportment throughout the summary trial was perfectly in accordance with the circumstances. Naturally, he questioned all of the defence witnesses and tried to find out more about Tsafendas. His judgment, too, was based on the evidence presented before him and he probably had no way of knowing about the abundance of evidence collected by the police and the Commission which contradicted the defence's insanity plea. Although he seemed to manipulate, or not remember correctly, some of the evidence presented in court, as with the O'Ryans and Smorenberg, his verdict could not have been anything else based on the evidence before the court.

The judge's verdict was that Tsafendas was mentally disordered, as defined in the Mental Disorders Act, and therefore he should be detained in a prison pending a decision by the State President as to his future disposition. Sending him to a prison, instead of to a hospital, where officially he belonged since he had been diagnosed as mentally disordered, is not an act that would be expected of a "highly civilized" country, which was Judge Beyers' own description of South Africa. Even less "civilized" was the subsequent decision by the State President that Tsafendas, officially a schizophrenic, should be detained without medical treatment on Death Row in a maximum security institution, Pretoria Central Prison.

REACTION OF THOSE WHO KNEW TSAFENDAS

Anyone who knew Tsafendas well was stunned to read in the newspapers that he was schizophrenic and believed he had a tapeworm since he was a child. Not even one of the seventy-one people questioned by the author believed at the time, or now, that Tsafendas was schizophrenic and thought he had a tapeworm. All were convinced that he made the whole thing up so as not to be executed. Below are the reactions of some of these witnesses; those of others were noted earlier:

Father Nikola Banovic:

“The first thing I thought [when he heard about Tsafendas being diagnosed as schizophrenic] was, ‘Thank God. My prayers were heard!’ It was such, such a relief ... of course I immediately knew that he was faking it. All those here [in Istanbul] who knew him well thought the same. I was asked, though, by a few people who did not really know him but had a casual acquaintance with him, whether he was mad; I told them, ‘no, he is pretending so as not to be executed.’”³³⁷⁷

No one from Patrick O’Ryan’s family believed what was heard in the court: they were all certain that Tsafendas was pretending in order to escape the death penalty.³³⁷⁸ Allan O’Ryan told the author:

“There was no doubt. There was no doubt that the story about the earthworm and all the other things that went with it – the incoherent speeches that... well, everything that the psychiatrists brought up, I interpreted that as a way of protecting him from the death sentence. In retrospect, I would say that it was a man of intelligence who had a mission. I think Tsafendas had... in his mind, he was trying to confuse these people and the give impression that he was crazy. In order to protect himself. And then they felt for it.”³³⁷⁹

³³⁷⁷ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

³³⁷⁸ Allan O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019; Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Stanley O’Ryan in a personal interview with the author, 9 April 2015.

³³⁷⁹ Allan O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019.

Father Michalis Constandinou:

“I was definitely surprised, but it was a pleasant surprise. I thought it was a miracle! No, no, of course I never believed he was really a schizophrenic; not even for a moment; I knew he had pretended to be crazy to save himself. All of us who knew him discussed this; we all knew he was faking it.”³³⁸⁰

Fotini Gavasiadis:

“I was shocked. We were all shocked. We all knew that he had made it up [pretending to be mad]. There was never any discussion about it [whether he was really a schizophrenic]; we never talked about the issue because we knew him; we knew he was perfectly sane. For me the more surprising thing was not that he pretended to be mad, but that nothing was said about his political ideas and his activism; we all expected to hear a manifesto from him. We all [those who knew him] knew he was pretending.”³³⁸¹

Irene Michaletos:

“Bless him; of course I did not believe he had suddenly gone mad. I knew, we all knew, he was pretending. I am certain that everyone who knew Dimitri back then knew that he was pretending. Even people who did not know him, and had only heard of him or had just spoken to him once, would come and say to me: ‘he is pretending, right?’ I never met anyone who knew Dimitri and believed that he was crazy.”³³⁸²

The Eleni sailors all had the same reaction. Emanuil Mastromanolis said, “We all looked at each other [when they heard the news]. We all said the same thing ... yes, that he was making it up so as not to be hanged.”³³⁸³

END NOTE

The doctors described in the trial a Tsafendas that had not the slightest resemblance to the person that some two hundred and fifty witnesses described to the police, the Commission and the author. It seems extremely unlikely that none of the people who knew Tsafendas, some extremely well, ever noticed that he was unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes or that he spoke in a disjointed manner. They must have been naive or very unobservant, unless the symptoms were simply not there; because Tsafendas made them up ³³⁸⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

³³⁸¹ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

³³⁸² Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

³³⁸³ Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016.

when talking to the doctors.

It is impossible to believe that a judge in a serious criminal case today would accept the diagnoses of five psychiatrists based wholly on what they were told by the person they were examining without any additional information to verify what they were told. However, that is what happened fifty years ago in apartheid South Africa. Was Tsafendas capable of convincing the psychiatrists that he was a schizophrenic? That he had done so in the past with the tapeworm story and the Saint Peter act suggests that he was. He also told three priests later that it was not difficult because both State and defence wanted to find him insane. He was pushing at an open door. Judge Jacques Theodore van Wyk of the Commission of Enquiry said in his final report that Tsafendas was “quite knowledgeable about mental disorders—he also admitted to the Commission that he had read fairly extensively on the subject in order to determine what was wrong with him—and therefore [the Commission] adopted a somewhat sceptical attitude towards him. It is clear that his word cannot be relied upon, and that he is sufficiently intelligent to put on a fairly good act.”³³⁸⁴

Although Judge van Wyk was able to acknowledge this, no-one seemed to take it into consideration during the summary trial. Furthermore, the State must have been aware, as were the police and the Commission, that Tsafendas had faked mental illness before, but this, too, was never mentioned. Finally, Advocate George Bizos believes that with the evidence at their disposal, “the police and the authorities of the time could have very easily built up a case [against Tsafendas], but they withheld it in order to find him insane.” He also found the evidence showing Tsafendas to be politically motivated and not insane to be “overwhelming and unquestionable.”³³⁸⁵ Advocate Bizos also told the author that:

“The police at the time would have never allowed it to become known that Tsafendas was a politically minded person who had killed Verwoerd for political reasons [the hope that apartheid would collapse without him]; if this had happened, Tsafendas would have instantly become a hero of the anti-apartheid movement. Then a trial of politically minded person like Tsafendas, just like the Rivonia, would have put apartheid in the dock... it would have also been hugely embarrassing for the police to admit that a dedicated Communist with such a long history of political activism had managed to penetrate what was alleged to be a top security system... Communism was at the time the monster in South Africa, the number-one enemy, and the killing of Verwoerd by a Communist would have been a major blow to the ³³⁸⁴ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18.

³³⁸⁵ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017.

prestige of the regime, but also a big victory for Communism. Verwoerd at the time was adored and accepted by most Whites in this country and the thought that someone had killed him because he disagreed with his policies would have shattered such an image.”³³⁸⁶

Professor John Dugard said about the Tsafendas case:

“Many South Africans suspected that there was a political cover-up in the Tsafendas case. The apartheid regime had two reasons for portraying Tsafendas to be insane. First, the regime wished to suggest that no-one in his right mind could kill such a wonderful leader as Hendrik Verwoerd. Secondly, there was the security aspect. The security apparatus, led by the Minister of Justice and Police, John Vorster, wished to avoid accountability for allowing a political revolutionary to be employed in a position close to the Prime Minister. So it was that the media and the legal proceedings were manipulated to present Tsafendas as a mentally deranged person dictated to by a tapeworm. This research confirms that there was a cover-up. It shows convincingly that Tsafendas was a political revolutionary, whose assassination of Dr. Verwoerd was motivated by a hatred of Dr. Verwoerd and all he stood for. He was not an insane killer but a political assassin determined to rid South Africa of the architect of apartheid.”³³⁸⁷

Renowned historian and anti-apartheid activist Luli Callinicos believes that the apartheid regime would never have revealed that Tsafendas was a committed Communist with a long history of political activism. She also gave the author another reason as to why the State would have wanted to portray Tsafendas as a madman:

“At the time things were hotting-up. The ANC and the PAC were banned, they had gone into exile, and they had also of course announced the armed struggle. They were actually scores of, in fact hundreds, going into exile to train for armed struggle. I think it was a serious threat if it was announced that a member of the Communist Party and of course a man of Colour [had assassinated Dr. Verwoerd]. [The apartheid authorities feared that] this might actually stimulate and mobilise more Blacks to raise up. That was something that was a very real possibility. So it had well suited them to define him as a crazed individual. It was a far better strategy than to find that he had tried to promote a revolution. That's why he was permanently silenced.”³³⁸⁸

³³⁸⁶ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017.

³³⁸⁷ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 8 September 2016.

³³⁸⁸ Luli Calinicos in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

Denis Goldberg told the author that he was not in the least surprised when he heard that Tsafendas had been declared to be insane, and “always had doubts” about the verdict. He thought that it was natural for the Apartheid State to do such a thing so they could claim that “only an insane person would kill this brilliant prime minister.” “They would have never admitted that a Communist did it,” Goldberg told the author. Goldberg also believes that it would have been “very embarrassing” for the authorities and the police if it had become known that Tsafendas was a former member of the South African Communist Party and a committed Communist with a long history of political activism. “They had made a decision, they’re not going to have a proper trial, they want Tsafendas declared insane and unfit to stand and that was their decision. So, we lock him away until the Government says it’s okay to release him or never and the answer was never, until he died.”³³⁸⁹

³³⁸⁹ Denis Goldberg in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

CHAPTER 6

THE REPORT OF THE COMMISSION OF ENQUIRY INTO THE CIRCUMSTANCES OF THE DEATH OF THE LATE DR. THE HONOURABLE HENDRIK FRENSCH VERWOERD³³⁹⁰

INTRODUCTION

This chapter deals with the Commission of Enquiry (COE) which was appointed to investigate the circumstances of the death of Dr. Verwoerd and its “findings,” but more importantly with what it concealed. The Commission is examined here on the basis of the information it had at its disposal and not on further evidence collected by the author. Nevertheless, the Commission’s Report is materially very different from the evidence that was available to it and this is mostly due to the frequent omission of important information. Before we proceed further with this chapter, we should first examine the entity known as a Commission of Inquiry and its role during apartheid.

³³⁹⁰ Hereafter cited as Commission or COE or van Wyk Commission.

COMMISSIONS OF INQUIRY

A Commission of Inquiry (COI) can play an important role in determining who is accountable in a crisis, and in creating new policies to avoid a similar situation in the future. In theory, a COI can be a challenge to serving politicians. In practice, they appear to propose change, while really upholding the status quo. By exploring how and why COI are appointed, we can learn about where and how politics, accountability and policy learning collide. Multiple studies demonstrate that when governments decide to appoint a COI, they are motivated less by a genuine desire to make people accountable and learn from past mistakes, and more by the need to avert blame, give a good impression to the media, and bolster their popularity.³³⁹¹

WHAT IS A COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

A COI can be defined as:

- An ad hoc institution put together for a specific task that ceases to exist when it has been carried out;
- Which is, at least officially, not part of the government or other executive body;
- Brought into existence by the government or a government minister;
- At their discretion;
- With the principal purpose of carrying out an investigation;
- Of events that have taken place in the past.³³⁹²

THE PURPOSE OF A COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

A COI is assembled following a crisis to figure out what went wrong, who is responsible for decisions and actions taken, and how policy can be changed in response.³³⁹³ By definition, they explore the unusual – crises and events that do not usually occur and that cannot be managed via ordinary regulation and governance. In this way, institutions of sovereign power

³³⁹¹ Renan Sulitzeanu-Kenan, "Reflection in the Shadow of Blame: When Do Politicians Appoint Commissions of Inquiry?" British Journal of Political Science, Vol. 40, Issue 3, (July 2010), p. 613.

³³⁹² Sulitzeanu-Kenan, "Reflection in the Shadow of Blame: When Do Politicians Appoint Commissions of Inquiry?", p. 615.

³³⁹³ Gregory J. Inwood and Carolyn M. Johns, "Why Study Commissions of Inquiry?" In Gregory J. Inwood and Carolyn M. Johns (eds.), Commissions of Inquiry and Policy Change: A Comparative Analysis, (Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 2014), p. 3-7 can “pose questions to themselves about the scope, limits and aims of governance.”³³⁹⁴ Commissions of Inquiry are portrayed as providing an “impartial assessment” and as independent of biased, partial governments.³³⁹⁵ When they explore situations with the potential for civil or criminal liability, procedures need to resemble ordinary legal procedures to give the impression of fairness, and so that the public will ultimately accept its findings as legitimate. Inevitably, Commissions of Inquiry are political tools, used for political ends,³³⁹⁶ as their determinations are relevant to governance and policy-making, and reduce public outrage and media interest by instigating a slow-moving process of the gradual emergence of data intended to avoid apportioning blame to the authorities,³³⁹⁷ that can delay meaningful change.³³⁹⁸

CHARACTERISTICS OF A COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

A COI is composed of a Commissioner, its staff and its researchers. These bodies interact with the public and the media. In theory the Commissioner is impartial. Appointees are presented as non-partisan,³³⁹⁹ and are often charismatic, influential individuals who often lend their names to the COI.³⁴⁰⁰ Staff are sourced from elite groups in government, academia, and the private sector, unlikely to operate outside the existing order.³⁴⁰¹

DISCOURSE OF COMMISSIONS OF INQUIRY

Commissions of Inquiry have historically been used in a wide range of settings to nullify the rights of indigenous and ethnic minority peoples by giving the superficial impression of fairness and open-mindedness, and whitewashing often horrific state actions. Rather than ³³⁹⁴ Adam Sitze, The Impossible Machine: A Genealogy of South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission, (Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press, 2013), p. 132-138.

³³⁹⁵ Inwood and Johns, “Why Study Commissions of Inquiry?”, p. 10-17.

³³⁹⁶ Michael Bishop, “An Accidental Good: The Role of Commissions of Inquiry in South African Democracy.” (New York Law School. Law Review. Twenty Years of South African Constitutionalism. Friday, November 14, 2014), p. 19-23.

³³⁹⁷ Sulitzeanu-Kenan, “Reflection in the Shadow of Blame: When Do Politicians Appoint Commissions of Inquiry?”, p. 613-618.

³³⁹⁸ Inwood and Johns, “Why Study Commissions of Inquiry?”, p. 17; Carolyn M. Johns and Gregory J. Inwood, “Theories of Policy Change and a Four-Part Theoretical Framework for Comparative Analysis.” In Gregory J. Inwood and Carolyn M. Johns, (eds.), Commissions of Inquiry and Policy Change: A Comparative Analysis, (Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 2014), p. 46-48.

³³⁹⁹ Inwood and Johns, “Why Study Commissions of Inquiry?”, p. 10-11; Johns and Inwood, “Theories of Policy Change and a Four-Part Theoretical Framework for Comparative Analysis”, p. 35-36.

³⁴⁰⁰ Sitze, The Impossible Machine: A Genealogy of South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission, p. 138.

³⁴⁰¹ Bishop, “An Accidental Good: The Role of Commissions of Inquiry in South African Democracy”, p. 22.

challenging colonial structures, they tend to be governed by them. Thus, Commissions of Inquiry rarely pose any meaningful challenge to the status quo. While they often record large quantities of data regarding people who were mistreated or killed, they rarely lead to prosecutions. Thus, colonial governments were granted a mechanism whereby they could declare sorrow and regret for state actions, while doing nothing to prevent recurrence. Many Commissions of Inquiry were carried out in colonial settings, especially as independence movements got underway, including Trinidad, Ireland, Barbados, Rhodesia, Sierra Leone, and India. Invariably, they concluded that the government should tweak policies to avoid future “tragedies”, rather than identifying a problem with colonialism per se. They deferred the self-representation of “native” people with the idea that “native” peoples were simply unable to represent themselves at all.³⁴⁰²

HISTORICAL OVERVIEW

Commissions of Inquiry are rooted in pre-revolutionary England, when they emerged as a way in which rulers could figure out why their policies were not working as they wanted them to.³⁴⁰³ They have even been traced to 1085, and William I's mandate to create the huge survey of England known as the Domesday Book.³⁴⁰⁴ By the early nineteenth century, Commissions of Inquiry were ways in which authorities could explore how they governed, why they governed as they did, what the outcomes were, and how to achieve a more favourable outcome,³⁴⁰⁵ and had become one of the tools of Britain's colonial empire.³⁴⁰⁶

During the modern colonial period, colonised populations (as in the colonies of Britain, France, etc.) were considered essentially as resources or units of labour. Thus, when colonised peoples rebelled, their actions were not seen as a demand for autonomy, but as a hindrance to productivity.³⁴⁰⁷ This was typically the case even when Commissions of Inquiry genuinely attempted to understand natives' viewpoints.³⁴⁰⁸ The often brutal efforts of colonial ³⁴⁰² Sitze, The Impossible Machine: A Genealogy of South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission, p. 148-150.

³⁴⁰³ Sitze, The Impossible Machine: A Genealogy of South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission, p. 11-12.

³⁴⁰⁴ Inwood and Johns, “Why Study Commissions of Inquiry?”, p. 5.

³⁴⁰⁵ Hugh McDowall Clokie and J. William Robinson, Royal Commissions of Inquiry: The Significance of Investigations in British Politics, (New York: Octagon Books, 1969), p. 54-79.

³⁴⁰⁶ Inwood and Johns, “Why Study Commissions of Inquiry?”, p. 5-10.

³⁴⁰⁷ Alain Badiou, The Rebirth of History: Times of Riots and Uprisings, (New York: Verso Books, 2012), p. 38-41.

³⁴⁰⁸ Rande Kostal, A Jurisprudence of Power: Victorian Empire and the Rule of Law, (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2005), p. 91.

administrations to suppress unrest were seen as necessary, if regrettable. "Experts" typically came from the same elite whose transgression (often heavy-handed governance or policing) was being investigated, while their work was presented as benefiting all of society.³⁴⁰⁹

³⁴⁰⁹ Sitze, The Impossible Machine: A Genealogy of South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission, p. 138; Ann Laura Stoler, Along the Archival Grain Epistemic Anxieties and Colonial Common Sense, (Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 2009), p. 141.

Of course, Commissions of Inquiry have not been developed purely in the colonial context. Other examples include the Warren Commission following the assassination of John F. Kennedy in 1963, the Widgery and Saville Inquiries into the Bloody Sunday massacre in Northern Ireland in 1972, the Scott Inquiry into British arms sales to Iraq, and the 9/11 COI following the terrorist attacks on New York in 2001.³⁴¹⁰

COMMISSIONS OF INQUIRY IN SOUTH AFRICA

From the colonial period, throughout the apartheid era, and into the democratic era, Commissions of Inquiry have played a role in South Africa in being “used to fight political battles between parties, hide government embarrassment, and take the pressure off beleaguered state institutions.”³⁴¹¹ Commissions of Inquiry can be delayed by third parties, including those being investigated, who wish to delay conclusions and adverse findings. Frequently, the terms of reference can be framed so that the desired findings are essentially a foregone conclusion. The primary audience is the government, and how the government will react is always brought to bear on how a COI is carried out, and how extensive its findings will be.³⁴¹² The outcome is heavily influenced by who can take part. Participation often calls for legal representation, which is difficult for the average citizen to access. When participants cannot take part on an equal footing, it is likely that the COI will fail to uncover the truth, while also being anti-democratic, and consistently using language that posits atrocities as “tragedies.”

Throughout the apartheid era, South Africa engaged in COI, typically on the topic of race relations,³⁴¹³ often with a focus on state violence. While Commissions of Inquiry took evidence from a wide range of witnesses, this was invariably viewed from the authorities’ perspective, as White “experts” spoke on behalf of the “natives.”³⁴¹⁴ While they often investigated matters of huge importance to Blacks, their voices were often replaced by those ³⁴¹⁰ Sulitzeanu-Kenan, “Reflection in the Shadow of Blame: When Do Politicians Appoint Commissions of Inquiry?”, p. 613.

³⁴¹¹ Bishop, “An Accidental Good: The Role of Commissions of Inquiry in South African Democracy”, p. 2, 19.

³⁴¹² Bishop, “An Accidental Good: The Role of Commissions of Inquiry in South African Democracy”, p. 21-22.

³⁴¹³ Stoler, Along the Archival Grain Epistemic Anxieties and Colonial Common Sense, p. 142.

³⁴¹⁴ Adam Ashforth, “Reckoning Schemes of Legitimation: On Commissions of Inquiry as Power/Knowledge Forms.” Journal of Historical Sociology, Volume 3, Issue 1, (March 1990), p. 1-4.

of the “experts.” “Native” people were listened to only in the context of the desire to “restore law, coherence, and order to colonial rule,”³⁴¹⁵ never truly threatening the status quo.³⁴¹⁶

The Sauer COI in 1949 recommended complete apartheid and the 1960 COI into the European Occupancy of the Rural Areas recommended that Blacks be placed in “native reserves,” leading to forced removals.³⁴¹⁷ Commissions of Inquiry thus helped to determine how governments formed and enacted policies. Issues were typically represented as “problems” to be remedied with firm state action. Various laws were passed indemnifying the police and security forces from legal action. Thus, indemnity and Commissions of Inquiry need to be considered as two parts of the same whole. If it was found that the authorities, or bodies acting on their behalf, had erred, there were rarely any repercussions. Often, Commissions of Inquiry functioned to justify what was essentially martial law after the fact; many were exempted from prosecution for their involvement in atrocities such as the Sharpeville massacre,³⁴¹⁸ and by 1960 South Africa’s Statute Book was filled with laws indemnifying a wide range of public officials from prosecution.³⁴¹⁹

Commissions of Inquiry under apartheid quickly became closely associated with scandals arising from state violence, and efforts to restore the public’s confidence,³⁴²⁰ which retained the constitutional right to appoint Commissions of Inquiry to look into the president as well as provincial premiers.³⁴²¹ Often, atrocities were reconfigured, emerging as unpreventable “tragedies.” For example, the government slaughter of the Bondelzwart people in 1921 was presented as a tragic, but inevitable, outcome of their “simplicity.”³⁴²² Furthermore, as we have already seen, the Commission of Inquiry into the Disturbances in Eastern Pondoland absolved the police of any blame for the killing of eleven unarmed protestors. Instead, its report accused the ANC of being the moral instigator of the massacre.

³⁴¹⁵ Sitze, The Impossible Machine: A Genealogy of South Africa’s Truth and Reconciliation Commission, p. 142-143.

³⁴¹⁶ Johns and Inwood, “Theories of Policy Change and a Four-Part Theoretical Framework for Comparative Analysis”, p. 25; Gregory J. Inwood and Carolyn M. Johns, “Commissions of Inquiry and Policy Change: A Comparative Analysis.” In Gregory J. Inwood and Carolyn M. Johns (eds.), Commissions of Inquiry and Policy Change: A Comparative Analysis, (Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 2014), p. 285.

³⁴¹⁷ Mahmood Mamdani, Citizen and Subject Contemporary Africa and the Legacy of Late Colonialism, (Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 1996), p. 31-32, 48-49.

³⁴¹⁸ Sitze, The Impossible Machine: A Genealogy of South Africa’s Truth and Reconciliation Commission, p. 25.

³⁴¹⁹ H.R. Hahlo and Ellison Kahn, The Union of South Africa: The Development of its Laws and Constitution, (London: Stevens & Sons, Ltd., 1960), p. 147n61.

³⁴²⁰ Bishop, “An Accidental Good: The Role of Commissions of Inquiry in South African Democracy”, p. 7.

³⁴²¹ Constitution s 127(2)(e).

³⁴²² Sitze, The Impossible Machine: A Genealogy of South Africa’s Truth and Reconciliation Commission, p. 133.

The eleven dead, it said, “were the victims of the insidious propaganda of the African National Congress and associated organizations.”³⁴²³

According to Adam Sitze, Associate Professor of Law at Amherst College, commissions under apartheid generally failed in their stated aim to open contentious events to scrutiny and public debate, serving rather to disguise or conceal state crime and its methods. They were an integral part of apartheid’s repressive and propaganda machine and very often hid more than they revealed. A typical example, he wrote, was the Sharpeville Enquiry which transformed itself from a fact-finding device into a “whitewashing machine.”³⁴²⁴ He added:

“As would become painfully evident in apartheid South Africa, the more that Commissions of Inquiry would be created to investigate state massacres, the less they would produce public debate and discussion (...), and the more they would reduce public debate, by obfuscating or even concealing altogether the ways and means of state crime. Here [referring to the Sharpeville COI], the COI was not a fact-finding device; it was a ‘white washing’ machine.”³⁴²⁵

Professor John Dugard told the author about the Commissions of Inquiry during apartheid:

“One of the most disgraceful things about South Africa during this period was the way in which judicial commissions were manipulated, and also the way in which inquest inquiries were conducted and the magistrates just ignored the evidence. And it was quite clear that the Sharpeville Enquiry and the Langa Inquiry, that the... I can’t remember who the Langa Inquiry judge was... but they were both conducted by judges who were political appointments. And they knew how to make a finding that would help the government. That was very clear.”³⁴²⁶

The COI into the Sharpeville massacre in 1960 speculated that the shootings might have contributed to a minimising the loss of life and whitewashed the role played in the massacre by the police and state,³⁴²⁷ determining that it was a “tragedy” to which both the

³⁴²³ Badat, The Forgotten People: Banishment Under Apartheid, p. 117; Wylie, “The Shock of the New: Ngquza Hill 1960”, p. 197-201, 206.

³⁴²⁴ Sitze, The Impossible Machine: A Genealogy of South Africa’s Truth and Reconciliation Commission, p. 157, 311.

³⁴²⁵ Sitze, The Impossible Machine: A Genealogy of South Africa’s Truth and Reconciliation Commission, p. 157.

³⁴²⁶ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

³⁴²⁷ Lodge, Sharpeville: An Apartheid Massacre and its Consequences, p. 328.

victims and their killers had contributed.³⁴²⁸ The Sharpeville COI created a template for further Commissions of Inquiry. The 1976, so-called Cillie COI which investigated the Soweto uprising, was carried out primarily from the police's perspective. According to Professor Sitze, it was a "sham and a charade,"³⁴²⁹ that failed to account for missing bodies and attempted to shift blame from the police to their victims and their parents.³⁴³⁰ According to Benjamin Pogrud, it was "... an effort to blame anyone except from the government."³⁴³¹ In 1986, following violence in Langa after a local funeral,³⁴³² the investigating judge, Kannemeyer, omitted evidence that he considered "background information," but which included vital data about living conditions and police conduct in the townships in a clear attempt to whitewash the police.³⁴³³

Commissions of Inquiry did not disappear when apartheid ended. Although often the objects of controversy and conducted at great expense, they became a regular aspect of the political scene³⁴³⁴ (in 2014 no fewer than six were running at the same time³⁴³⁵). Most notable was the Truth and Reconciliation Commission established in 1996 which investigated abuses carried out during apartheid by both the state and its opponents.³⁴³⁶ The aim was to ensure that South Africa moved from a racist regime to democratic governance without recourse to revenge and violence.

EXAMPLES OF COMMISSIONS OF INQUIRY DURING APARTHEID

³⁴²⁸ Bishop, "An Accidental Good: The Role of Commissions of Inquiry in South African Democracy", p. 24-25.

³⁴²⁹ Sitze, The Impossible Machine: A Genealogy of South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission, p. 182.

³⁴³⁰ Helena Pohlandt-McCormick, "I Saw a Nightmare ...: Violence and the Construction of Memory (Soweto, June 16, 1976)." History and Theory, Vol. 39, No. 4, Theme Issue 39: "Not Telling": Secrecy, Lies, and History (Dec., 2000), p. 30-34.

³⁴³¹ Pogrud, War of Words: Memoir of a South African Journalist, p. 276.

³⁴³² Forty-seven Black South Africans were shot dead by the police, of whom thirty-five had been shot from behind (Laurel Baldwin-Ragaven, Jeanelle de Gruchy & Leslie London, An Ambulance of the Wrong Colour: Health Professionals, Human Rights and Ethics in South Africa, (Rondebosch: University of Cape Town Press, 1999), p. 57).

³⁴³³ Nicholas Haysom, "The Langa Shootings and the Kannemeyer Commission of Enquiry." Human Rights Quarterly, Vol. 8, No. 3, (Aug., 1986), p. 494.

³⁴³⁴ Bishop, "An Accidental Good: The Role of Commissions of Inquiry in South African Democracy", p. 3. For more about the role of the Inquiries in the democratic South Africa see Michael Bishop. (2014) An Accidental Good: The Role of the Commissions of Inquiry in South African Democracy.

³⁴³⁵ Bishop, "An Accidental Good: The Role of Commissions of Inquiry in South African Democracy", p. 1-3

³⁴³⁶ John Dugard, "Reconciliation and Justice: The South African Experience." Transnational Law & Contemporary Problems, Vol. 8, Issue 2 (1998), p. 293; John Dugard, "Is the Truth and Reconciliation Process Compatible with International Law? An Unanswered Question." South African Journal on Human Rights, Vol. 13, Issue 2 (1997), p. 260.

To understand better how Commissions of Inquiry operated during apartheid, we will briefly examine some typical examples. All of them, especially the inquiry into the Sharpeville massacre, have parallels and similarities with the Dr. Verwoerd Commission of Enquiry in terms of police methods, attitude towards witnesses, evidence, findings and concealment of evidence and facts.

THE COMMISSION OF ENQUIRY INTO THE OCCURRENCES AT SHARPEVILLE (AND OTHER PLACES) ON THE 21ST OF MARCH 1960

On 24 March, 1960, just three days after the Sharpeville Massacre,³⁴³⁷ Dr. Verwoerd moved quickly to announce that a one-man Commission of Enquiry would be appointed to investigate the incident.³⁴³⁸ The person chosen to investigate was Judge P.J. Wessels.³⁴³⁹ The then police-captain H.J. van den Bergh was appointed as Police Chief Investigator,³⁴⁴⁰ tasked with determining who fired the first shots and who shouted “shoot.”³⁴⁴¹ In the aftermath of the shooting, van den Bergh was detailed to Baragwanath hospital. There he directed a team of Black and White policemen to drag from their beds patients who had been shot at Sharpeville, handcuff them and transport them to Boksburg Prison. There they were stripped naked, sprayed with water and ordered to dress again in their blood-stained clothes which they were ordered to wear unchanged for months. They were told it was punishment for their “agitation.”³⁴⁴²

There was a great need to convince the world that it was business as usual, and that South Africa was still a good place in which to invest. Of course, Dr. Verwoerd's government would have to hope that external observers would not notice, or would not care about, the extent to which the government controlled the judicial system.³⁴⁴³ Dr. Verwoerd met with his Minister of Justice, then Frans C. Erasmus,³⁴⁴⁴ and other senior officials, in an emergency meeting to decide what to do in both the short- and the long-term. Within an hour it had been ³⁴³⁷ For more about the incident see Chapter 1.

³⁴³⁸ Daily Dispatch, ‘Official Inquiry into the Riots’, 24 March 1960: 1.

³⁴³⁹ Reeves, Shooting at Sharpeville: The Agony of South Africa, p. 81.

³⁴⁴⁰ Rand Daily Mail, ‘Sharpeville Magistrate’, 22 July 1960.

³⁴⁴¹ Report of the Sharpeville Commission, p. 154; Roux, Time Longer than Rope: A History of the Black Man's Struggle for Freedom in South Africa, p. 408.

³⁴⁴² Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 194-195.

³⁴⁴³ Robert Coniglio, “Methods of Judicial Decision-Making and the Rule of Law: The Case of Apartheid South Africa”, Boston University International Law Journal. Vol. 30, (2012), pp. 499-500.

³⁴⁴⁴ (1896-1967) Minister of Justice from 1959 to August 1961; he also served as Minister of Defence from 1948 to 1959 and as South Africa's Ambassador to Italy after his term as Minister of Justice (C.J. Beyers and J.L. Basson (eds.), Dictionary of South African Biography, Vol 5, (Pretoria: Human Resources Research Council, 1987, p. 246-248.

decided that a Commission of Enquiry would be held. It was clearly vital that the state be seen to be in full control of the situation and its aftermath – both in order to inhibit the wave of panic now sweeping the country and to head off any sympathy demonstrations and protests that could reasonably be expected in the wake of public reaction.³⁴⁴⁵

The government had to tread carefully. If the Commission was chosen to produce a report that completely absolved the authorities, it would be an obvious whitewash and attract foreign criticism while reducing Dr. Verwoerd's government's credibility in the eyes of potential trading partners. On the other hand, if it led to a harsh criticism of the authorities, the government would look bad when Dr. Verwoerd was trying to present apartheid as a humane, fair and just way to administer a racially diverse nation.³⁴⁴⁶

Dr. Verwoerd and his government tried desperately, as usual, to turn black into white, and to convince the world that the apartheid policies did not cause the massacre. He maintained that the demonstration had nothing to do with opposition to apartheid but was the result of a Communist conspiracy. It was the Communists and not the police — and most certainly not the government — who bore responsibility for the deaths, he declared. He even claimed that the demonstrators had shot first, although no weapons were found among them.³⁴⁴⁷ The Minister for Foreign Affairs, Eric Louw, known as “South Africa's Goebbels” because of his pro-Nazi propaganda and resemblance to the German Nazi,³⁴⁴⁸ claimed that “40,000” Africans had protested, and asserted that if the police had not shot they would have been murdered.³⁴⁴⁹ He was echoing remarks made by a sergeant involved in the massacre immediately afterwards: “We were only a handful against very many. If the men had reached us, I am sure they would have wiped us out.”³⁴⁵⁰

In London, the High Commissioner, van Rhyen, stated that a hostile crowd of about 20,000 had attacked the police with firearms, forcing the police to shoot them in self-defence.³⁴⁵¹ At the UN, South Africa's delegate, B.G. Fourie, gave his government's official version of what happened, which blamed “Bantu extremists,” as follows:

³⁴⁴⁵ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 186-187

³⁴⁴⁶ Martin, Justice Ignited: The Dynamics of Backfire, p. 13.

³⁴⁴⁷ Mandela, Long Walk to Freedom, p. 281; Loveland, By Due Process of Law? Racial Discrimination and the Right to Vote in South Africa 1855-1960, p. 383; TIME, ‘South Africa: The Sharpeville massacre’, 4 April 1960: 19; The Illustrated London News, ‘South Africa: The Issues Appraised’, 9 April 1960: 590.

³⁴⁴⁸ Pogrund, How Can Man Die Better ... Sobukwe and Apartheid, p. 157

³⁴⁴⁹ The Cape Times, ‘No More Sharpeville Says Louw’, 12 April 1960: 1.

³⁴⁵⁰ The Cape Times, ‘Sharpeville Sergeant On Surging Mob’, 13 April 1960.

³⁴⁵¹ Reeves, Shooting at Sharpeville: The Agony of South Africa, p. 81.

“A splinter organisation of extremists had started some time ago to organise a mass demonstration to protest against the carrying of reference books ... At Sharpeville some agitators immediately adopted a threatening attitude towards the police. Attempts were made to arrest some of the violators — but the crowd became more belligerent and the police were attacked with a variety of weapons: pangas, axes, iron bars, sticks, knives and firearms. Indeed shots were fired at the police before the police returned fire in order to defend their own lives and also to forestall what might have led to even greater and more tragic bloodshed... No government can allow hundreds of thousands of its citizens to be intimidated by extremists, as the Bantu in South Africa often are: to be threatened with the most dire consequences, if they proceed with their daily occupations and disobey the instructions of this militant group referred to.”³⁴⁵²

Thus, at this point, most of the outside world seemed to have accepted the official South African version of events as accurate.³⁴⁵³ Not everyone, though: the London Times, for example, called Dr. Verwoerd “a liar” and his policy “manifestly bankrupt.”³⁴⁵⁴

The official version was also flatly contradicted by observers such as Rand Daily Mail reporter Benjamin Pogrund, who saw everything first hand,³⁴⁵⁵ and by Bishop Ambrose Reeves, whose detailed rebuttal resulted in his eventual deportation. A statement by Bishop Reeves said there was no evidence that shots were fired by the protestors, nor that they attempted to charge the police, nor that weapons had been left behind as they fled. The bishop said the police shot into the backs of the fleeing crowd long after there were any signs of impending violence. The action was “punitive” and the force used excessive, he said.³⁴⁵⁶ The bishop’s challenge to the official version of Sharpeville resulted in his being declared a threat to national security. Fearing that he would be arrested and “silenced,” he fled to the British Protectorate of Swaziland in South Africa,³⁴⁵⁷ from where he sent sworn statements by eighteen Africans injured in Sharpeville to New York lawyer Allard Lowenstein. The statements affirmed that victims were shot in the back while running away from the police station. Their depositions were distributed to delegates at the UN.³⁴⁵⁸

³⁴⁵² The Guardian, ‘Sharpeville- The Official Version: Mr. Fourie Blames Bantu Trouble-makers’, 9 April 1960: 7.

³⁴⁵³ Pogrund, War of Words: Memoir of a South African Journalist, p. 10.

³⁴⁵⁴ de Villiers, South Africa: A Skunk Among Nations, p. 67.

³⁴⁵⁵ Knight, ‘The Daily Courage’, TIME, 12 June 2000.

³⁴⁵⁶ The Canberra Times, ‘Sharpeville Shooting “Punitive,” Bishop Tells Inquiry’, 15 June 1960: 7.

³⁴⁵⁷ The Canberra Times ‘Bishop Will Speak Elsewhere’, , 6 April 1960: 1.

³⁴⁵⁸ The Star, ‘Sharpeville Reports Going to UNO’, 11 April 1960; The Times (London), ‘Bishop Sends Documents on Sharpeville’, 11 April 1960: 10.

After receiving government assurances as to his safety, Bishop Reeves returned to South Africa and submitted to the Wessels Commission a memorandum that was severely critical of the police actions at Sharpeville. Weeks later, he was picked up, bundled onto an airplane and deported to Britain.³⁴⁵⁹ His expulsion was denounced by the British media as “a clumsy attempt to silence him.”³⁴⁶⁰ The result, however, was a book, Shooting at Sharpeville: The Agony of South Africa, in which Bishop Reeves set out in detail the events of the massacre. In South Africa, his account was condemned as “conspicuously prejudiced,” “irrelevant” and full of “blatant lies and fabrications.”³⁴⁶¹ It was not until the Truth and Reconciliation Commission met three decades later that Shooting at Sharpeville received the recognition it deserved as an historic document detailing one of apartheid’s most vicious crimes.

Far from evincing discomfort over the massacre, the government promised similar armed responses in the future. On the day that the Sharpeville Enquiry began, Foreign Minister Eric Law stated: “If 20.000 Africans were again threatening 130 policemen, as at Sharpeville, the police in maintenance of law and order, and in their own defence would be obliged to fire. We are now alerted, and this sort of thing will not happen again. In Cato Manor this year, nine policemen were hacked to pieces by Africans. There was not much fuss in overseas newspapers about that. You can’t handle gangsters with kid gloves. If it is necessary to use strong arm methods to deal with gangsterism, we are not different from any Government in the world.”³⁴⁶²

The Wessels Commission of Enquiry began on Monday, 11 April, twenty-one days after Sharpeville and two days after David Pratt’s assault on Dr. Verwoerd. In the courtroom at Vereeniging, there were more policemen and journalists than witnesses, and of the 20,000 Africans at Sharpeville when the police opened fire, only fifteen were willing to give evidence. Harold Hanson, the lawyer representing many of the victims, made a bold attempt to have the hearing postponed, citing restrictions on his actions under the then current state of emergency, the unavailability of some witnesses and the fear of others to testify to the truth. Hanson said, “I am not certain how far I will be able to go with what I consider the proper ³⁴⁵⁹ Daily Dispatch, ‘Reeves Expulsion Clearly Illegal’, 14 September 1960: 1; Daily Representative, ‘Reeves Deported in Secrecy’, 12 September 1960: 1; TIME, ‘South Africa: Out Goes The Bishopp’, 26 September 1960; The Star, ‘Bishop Reeves Deported in Great Secrecy’, 12 September 1960: 1.

³⁴⁶⁰ The Cape Argus, ‘Deportation A Clumsy Way To Silence Reeves Says British Press’, 13 September 1960: 2.

³⁴⁶¹ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 192-193.

³⁴⁶² Daily Mirror, ‘News Girl is Seized’, 12 April 1960: 5

cross-examination of witnesses, having regard to the present state of emergency.”³⁴⁶³

Further, he said, some witnesses with material evidence were incommunicado, some of the injured were detained after being discharged from hospital and others were frightened to come forward. “And if they come forward, will they speak without fear or favour?” Hanson asked.³⁴⁶⁴ Urging a postponement at least until the state of emergency had ended, Hanson also cited the absence of scores of his witnesses. He told the Commission, “You are without the evidence of 180 persons. The 180 are the wounded. They are in hospital, all accused or suspected in a case of public violence...”³⁴⁶⁵

What you have to bear in mind at this state, Mr. Commissioner, is whether you will have the evidence on both sides of the scale before you. The body of evidence might be given until the present conditions had subsided. The people who had been injured or bereaved should be able to give evidence freely and unafraid.”³⁴⁶⁶ Finally, Hanson said the evidence of some witnesses would be that the Sharpeville shooting was unprovoked, that the crowd was not hostile, and that if the shooting was necessary, the police acted beyond what was necessary. Such evidence, Hanson said, could well be regarded as inciting members of the public against the authorities. Hanson’s application was opposed by Mr. P. S. Claassen, Q.C., Attorney-General of the Orange Free State, who argued that Hanson was imagining “possible difficulties” and suggested that witnesses could be protected by prohibiting publication of certain evidence or by holding some parts of the inquiry in camera. Claassen also told the Commission that he would call evidence that the police opened fire “after shots had been fired at them and they had been threatened.” It was in the public interest that the inquiry should proceed as a matter of urgency, he said.³⁴⁶⁷

Not unexpectedly, Judge Wessels refused Hanson’s application and the inquiry went ahead without the evidence of Hanson’s many missing witnesses.³⁴⁶⁸ The judge said he ³⁴⁶³ Daily Mirror, ‘The Missing Witnesses’, 12 April 1960: 5; The Cape Argus, ‘Sharpeville Inquiry: Request for Delay’, 11 April 1960: 1; The Cape Argus, ‘Inquiry into Sharpeville Disturbance’, 11 April 1960: 2; The Guardian, ‘Sharpeville Inquiry Opens’, 12 April 1960: 9; The Star, ‘Judge Asked to Postpone Inquiry’, 11 April 1960; The Star, ‘Official Inquiry Starts: Policemen Describe Sharpeville Events’, 12 April 1960: 1.

³⁴⁶⁴ The Cape Argus, ‘Inquiry into Sharpeville Disturbance’, 11 April 1960: 2; The Guardian, ‘Sharpeville Inquiry Opens’, 12 April 1960: 9; The Star, ‘Judge Asked to Postpone Inquiry’, 11 April 1960.

³⁴⁶⁵ Daily Mirror, ‘The Missing Witnesses’, 12 April 1960: 5; Daily Express, ‘Satisfactory’, 12 April 1960: 1; The Cape Argus, ‘Sharpeville Inquiry: Request for Delay’, 11 April 1960: 1; The Star, ‘Judge Asked to Postpone Inquiry’, 11 April 1960.

³⁴⁶⁶ The Cape Argus, ‘Inquiry into Sharpeville Disturbance’, 11 April 1960: 2.

³⁴⁶⁷ The Cape Argus, ‘Inquiry into Sharpeville Disturbance’, 11 April 1960: 2; The Guardian, ‘Sharpeville Inquiry Opens’, 12 April 1960: 9; The Star, ‘Judge Asked to Postpone Inquiry’, 11 April 1960.

³⁴⁶⁸ Pretoria News, ‘Sharpeville Inquiry to Go On’, 12 April 1960: 1; The Star, ‘Inquiry Must Proceed Judge Rules ‘After Anxious Thought’’, 12 April 1960: 1.

decided “after anxious thought” to let the inquiry proceed because he believed, as Claassen had also suggested, that this was in the best interests of the public. He said that because the Inquiry concerned events that led to the state of emergency, “the Commission’s report may consequently have a direct bearing upon the circumstances in which the state of emergency was proclaimed.” Regarding Hanson’s witnesses, he said, “Every power at my disposal will be used to ensure that intended witnesses will be able to come forward freely.” However, he added that he would not be “able to provide absolute security” for them. It was up to the witnesses whether they wanted to come forward, he said, acknowledging that it would take “people of some courage” to do so.³⁴⁶⁹ That the Commission chairman himself raised the point of the witnesses’ safety and warned that he could not guarantee it, must surely have made many potential witnesses even more reluctant to come forward.

An early police witness, Sergeant J.L. Grobler, set out the evidence template which the police witnesses followed. Grobler, who was the officer in charge of Sharpeville police station, said, “Stones were being thrown by the crowd; there were about 15,000 natives, armed with kerries and irons, and 100 to 150 policemen. No tear-gas was used, the wind was in the wrong direction; there was nothing else they (the (police) could do but fire. We were a handful against so many. If the mob had reached us, I am certain they would have wiped us out.”³⁴⁷⁰ The remaining police witnesses said much the same.

Despite the preponderance of evidence along these lines, the case put before the Commission did not support the government’s version of events as described orally by the police and in van Rhyn’s and Fourie’s statements. The police had fired seven hundred rounds into the crowd, while showing no greater proof of weapons than a small assortment of sticks and umbrellas. Many official documents had been destroyed by the police after the massacre, and the official documents often did not identify the Black policemen who had been there properly, referring to them only by their first names. This “removal” of the Black policemen from the record gave the impression that there had been far fewer police than there actually were, suggesting that just 130 officers were surrounded by a vast mob. In fact, there were at least 160 White officers with firearms, and 130 Black officers with “knobkerries” (a sort of truncheon) and other weapons, and armoured vehicles and a large body of armed police in the general area.³⁴⁷¹

³⁴⁶⁹ The Star, ‘Inquiry Must Proceed Judge Rules ‘After Anxious Thought’’, 12 April 1960: 1.

³⁴⁷⁰ Daily Dispatch, ‘Nothing Else To Do But Fire’, 13 April 1960: 1; The Star, ‘Official Inquiry Starts: Policemen Describe Sharpeville Events’, 12 April 1960: 1.

³⁴⁷¹ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 97-98.

Much of the evidence that came before the Commission was weak, and there were many gaps in the record. The Commission never fully investigated the shooting and tended to avoid exploring many of the “important technical and brutal aspects of the killings,” such as the type of ammunition used and how the Black policemen acted. The pressure on the investigators to produce a report within a short period was unhelpful in this regard.³⁴⁷²

Black protestors were very reluctant to testify. Some were still in police custody and feared police violence, and all were subject to intimidation. They were also under pressure from the PAC to follow its “party line” that the police had committed premeditated murder rather than slaughtering the protestors in a chaotic scene that owed much to poor leadership and heightened fears.³⁴⁷³ Moreover, Judge Wessels tended to favour police testimony over that of victims or witnesses. He described a police officer, Captain Cawood, as making a “favourable impression” and possessing qualities including “reflection, initiative and humanity,”³⁴⁷⁴ and took at face value Cawood’s testimony about having shot dead the African leader of a group of protestors who had been throwing stones at him and then “stormed” him.³⁴⁷⁵ At the same time, he was dismissive and suspicious of the African witnesses, such as Sidwell Kasa,³⁴⁷⁶ asserting that the crowd had had “ample opportunity to disperse” before the police resorted to violence.³⁴⁷⁷

In general, Wessels had a poor view of the PAC. He quoted the chairman of the local branch as saying, “there is no freedom without bloodshed” and stated that while it did not appear that the PAC had had the explicit plan to engage in violence, they had at least been prepared for the possibility. In this way, he emphasised any association between the PAC and violence. The report deals at length with violence and the intimidation supposedly used by the PAC in order to force people to participate in the demonstration, criticising the organization’s supposed violence more than the police’s actual violence.³⁴⁷⁸

A chaotic picture emerged, in which it was shown that not all the police had fired, and that those who had were mostly in subordinate positions. Police who fired claimed that they had heard shots from the crowd, that the crowd was “rushing the fence” that separated them from the police station, that they were throwing stones, and that a mob was rushing through ³⁴⁷² Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 192.

³⁴⁷³ Martin, Justice Ignited: The Dynamics of Backfire, p. 17.

³⁴⁷⁴ Report of the Sharpeville Commission, p. 28.

³⁴⁷⁵ Report of the Sharpeville Commission, p. 33.

³⁴⁷⁶ Kasa was later imprisoned for three years and subsequently banished (Lodge, “Sharpeville and Memory”, p. 21-22).

³⁴⁷⁷ Report of the Sharpeville Commission, p. 31.

³⁴⁷⁸ Report of the Sharpeville Commission, p. 20.

the gate of the precinct. None of this was supported by Africans' evidence, or by photographic or forensic evidence,³⁴⁷⁹ although it is likely that many of the police sincerely believed that the crowd had been heavily armed.³⁴⁸⁰ The testimony of Africans and police was often contradictory; African witnesses described a festive scene greeting the arrival of the armoured Saracen vehicles, while police described a crowd that was "grim, savage and ruthless."³⁴⁸¹

A White constable who lived in a nearby suburb said that if the officers had not acted "the Blacks would have killed us – and then gone on to slaughter our women and children."³⁴⁸² It seems that not all the police questioned realised the gravity of the situation. Asked by the Commission if he had "learned any useful lessons," the officer in charge, Lieutenant Colonel Pienaar, replied "well, we may get better equipment," and that "the Native mentality does not allow them to gather for a peaceful demonstration. For them, to gather means violence."³⁴⁸³

The Commission was told that 496 rounds were fired in total, and that an "inflammable" crowd had threatened to kill the policemen.³⁴⁸⁴ Police authorities insisted that there was no evidence of the use of anything other than "normal" bullets. To conceal their use, the police had told the medical staff, who had seen the injuries, that it would not be in the national interest for them to make "exaggerated" disclosures.³⁴⁸⁵ When the injured victims started to arrive at hospitals for treatment police officers were already in place to inspect those who were dead and remove bodies that had been very badly damaged by explosive 'dum-dum' bullets. An estimated twenty-four dead bodies were spirited away and buried in secret so that no post-mortems could be carried out on them. The Commission sided with the police, anyway, agreeing that no "dum-dums" were used and declaring that the dead were all killed by ordinary bullets.³⁴⁸⁶

As far as the Commission was concerned, the evidence that the crowd showed "no real hostility... could not be accepted." This was despite testimony from Colonel Spengler that he did not think the crowd likely to attack the police station. Wessels maintained that though the crowd "could not be regarded as an armed one" the situation was indeed

³⁴⁷⁹ Reeves, Shooting at Sharpeville: The Agony of South Africa, p. 81-88.

³⁴⁸⁰ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 99.

³⁴⁸¹ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 90.

³⁴⁸² Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 122.

³⁴⁸³ Reeves, Shooting at Sharpeville: The Agony of South Africa, p. 93-95.

³⁴⁸⁴ The Cape Times, '476 Shots by Policemen at Sharpeville', 21 April 1960: 1.

³⁴⁸⁵ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 149.

³⁴⁸⁶ Report of the Sharpeville Commission, p. 128, par. 209.

“inflammable” because of the “size and the mood of the gathering.” He said that the police’s shooting was at least partly prompted by the shots they heard from the crowd “and a sudden flooding of the Bantu” across the boundary of the station compound and that it might have prevented even greater bloodshed.³⁴⁸⁷

According to Bishop Reeves “much of the police evidence about the crowd can only be described as untruthful” and completely inconsistent with the press photographs. Moreover, the police’s evidence was completely contradicted:

- By the absence of defensive preparations by the police against the attack.
- By the fact that there was no attack on the police before the arrival of the Saracens.
- Because a considerable part of the crowd was only at the Police Station by reason of intimidation.
- By the experience of at least three White men who passed among or through the crowd at one o’clock or shortly after one o’clock, namely Berry – the Drum photographer, Hoek – the Rand Daily Mail photographer, and Labuschange, the superintendent of the Sharpeville Township.³⁴⁸⁸

Ultimately, the Commission’s 218-page Report failed to lay down a definitive judgment and simply related events as unfolded by “evidence” before it.³⁴⁸⁹ Judge Wessels “concluded” that he could not find anyone culpable nor whether or not the shooting was justified,³⁴⁹⁰ but merely presented the evidence that had been given to it.³⁴⁹¹ It reported that although there had been no organised attempt to attack the police, the police had sincerely believed that their lives were in danger, and had shot in good faith:³⁴⁹² “... the Commission, to its very end, avoided, circumvented, or lightly touched upon many of the important technical and brutal aspects of the killings – such as the type of ammunition used by the SAPS and the actions of the black police whom the SAP, in their official history of the events of the sixties, admit “occasionally acted without self-restraint and in an undisciplined manner.”³⁴⁹³

Wessels tended to agree with the police’s contention that they had been facing a hostile crowd, insisting that there was “no doubt” that the night before had featured “violence

³⁴⁸⁷ Lodge, Sharpeville: An Apartheid Massacre and its Consequences, p. 329.

³⁴⁸⁸ Reeves, Shooting at Sharpeville: The Agony of South Africa, p. 82-84.

³⁴⁸⁹ Daily Dispatch, ‘No Findings on Sharpeville,’ 24 January 1961: 1.

³⁴⁹⁰ Lodge, Sharpeville: An Apartheid Massacre and its Consequences, p. 328.

³⁴⁹¹ The Cape Argus, ‘Sharpeville: No Findings on Responsibility’, 23 January 1961: 1.

³⁴⁹² Rand Daily Mail, ‘Sharpeville, Langa Report Findings’, 24 January 1961: 1.

³⁴⁹³ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 192.

and threats of violence” from the PAC, aimed at the residents of Sharpeville. Most of the residents who provided evidence had been coached by the state’s lawyers, and stated that they had had no knowledge of the PAC’s involvement and had gone to the protest out of curiosity or because they had been intimidated. Wessels agreed that the shooting had been prompted at least partly by shots from the crowd and by a sudden charge of Black protestors towards them.³⁴⁹⁴

Although Judge Wessels included some very mild criticism of the police and how they were deployed by Lieutenant Corporal Pienaar, he agreed with their claim that they had no option but to respond with violence;³⁴⁹⁵ he had no problem with the police characterisation of the protestors as a “frenzied mob.”³⁴⁹⁶ He included lengthy testimony from the police, but only perfunctory evidence from witnesses, many of whom were in police custody and had been coached under intimidation to provide monosyllabic answers to questions that bolstered the state’s position. Wessels repeated the dehumanising terms the police used to refer to the Black protestors, referring to them as a “throng,” and as “prancing about,” “massed together,” and “frenzied.”

The judge also overlooked and concealed clear lies. For example, the police had denied carrying skamboks (a type of whip) although the few photographs of the massacre, by Ian Berry,³⁴⁹⁷ the photographer for Drum magazine, clearly show that they were. Berry’s photographs also showed that the higher estimates for the crowd, as favoured by the police, were unlikely to be accurate, but Wessels accepted these estimates despite the photographic evidence.³⁴⁹⁸ The police also denied that any shots had been made from their Saracen tanks. This position was taken to support the notion that the police had been unable to assess the real level of danger from a vantage point at ground level and had made the best possible decision in light of what they knew. This evidence was demonstrated as false by photographs that showed that the police had shot at the crowd from their armoured carriers.³⁴⁹⁹ The police claimed that they had helped wounded victims after the massacre. By this point, British cameramen were actually filming the events before them, and the footage shows that the ³⁴⁹⁴ Lodge, “Sharpeville and Memory”, p. 329.

³⁴⁹⁵ Lodge, Sharpeville: An Apartheid Massacre and its Consequences, p. 328.

³⁴⁹⁶ Sitze, The Impossible Machine: A Genealogy of South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission, p. 179-180.

³⁴⁹⁷ (1934-) A British photojournalist and the only photographer to document the massacre at Sharpeville. According to Professor Tom Lodge (Sharpeville: An Apartheid Massacre and its Consequences, p. 229), his contribution was critical in amplifying Sharpeville’s impact, as his pictures were crucial in turning opposition to apartheid into an international public cause.

³⁴⁹⁸ Lodge, Sharpeville: An Apartheid Massacre and its Consequences, p. 328-329.

³⁴⁹⁹ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 197.

police did essentially nothing to assist the wounded, while photographs show a police officer using a spade to shovel up brain tissue.³⁵⁰⁰

Professor Phillip Frankel describes the report that ensued from the Commission as being “so densely unintelligible, so riddled with double-talk, qualifications, and refutable logic as to defy both legal reasoning and ordinary comprehension,” and points out the vast amount of forensic evidence that was available to him during his archival research in 1999, but which was apparently “either unknown or unavailable to the Commission.”³⁵⁰¹ Quite simply, the whole point of the Commission was to create the impression that the state was investigating the massacre, while actually whitewashing the record. The police operated within a system in which they “had” to be found in the right or to have acted only under severe provocation. The general state of fear among the wider white population meant that the police could “confidently walk into the white legal system virtually assured of little more than a sharp slap on the wrist,”³⁵⁰² because there was no will in government or among most Whites to curtail their brutal activities.

The evidence included that more than 700 shots had been made into the crowd and that more than half of those shots were made by eleven policemen.³⁵⁰³ Although Judge Wessels found that the massacre was essentially an avoidable tragedy, the medical evidence showed that 70% of the 69 killed and 186 injured were shot from the back, and just 15% (at most) of the injuries had been inflicted on the front, while only three policemen had been injured by stone-throwing, and that very slightly.³⁵⁰⁴ If the crowd had been rushing towards the police, most injuries would have been to the front of victims' bodies. Even the Commission had to confirm that no more than 30% of the victims had been shot while facing towards the direction from which the bullets had been travelling.³⁵⁰⁵

Intimidation by the police was very effective in limiting testimony to the Wessels Commission. Black witnesses reported intimidating behaviour, having to share the “non-white” bathrooms with Black policemen who had been involved in the massacre, and being questioned very aggressively in Afrikaans, which many did not speak fluently. One witness, Petrus Mokoena, reported being advised by his friends to “play the fool” and give his evidence in a way that suggested that he was unintelligent. By playing into widespread ³⁵⁰⁰ Lodge, Sharpeville: An Apartheid Massacre and its Consequences, p. 107.

³⁵⁰¹ Lodge, Sharpeville: An Apartheid Massacre and its Consequences, p. 329.

³⁵⁰² Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 13-14.

³⁵⁰³ The New York Times, ‘Sharpeville Inquiry Inconclusive’, 24 January 1961: 6.

³⁵⁰⁴ Pogrand, War of Words: Memoir of a South African Journalist, p. 83.

³⁵⁰⁵ Report of the Sharpeville Commission, p. 272.

assumptions about Blacks' inferior intelligence, it was easier for witnesses to survive the gruelling experience without police abuse.³⁵⁰⁶

This message was not lost on Black and Coloureds in South Africa, who knew that often the easiest way to escape a brutal punishment was to play into the prevailing prejudice of Blacks as stupid. Years later, members of the police force who had been involved at the time recalled that they had not even had to use torture to make their point; all they had to do was circulate rumours among bereaved families and friends that anyone who testified was likely to be placed in custody as a "precautionary measure" and that anyone found to have "lied" to the inquiry would be locked up.³⁵⁰⁷

Likewise, cover-ups and intimidation reduced the Commission's access to information,³⁵⁰⁸ while the police felt completely free to lie, knowing they would never be punished. While practically every police witness stated that there had been no order to shoot, nobody admitted to being among the first, and while many of the victims near the fence had heard the order to shoot, all of the police insisted that they had heard no such thing. Moreover, even though the victims' lawyers called on the testimony of many experts, the police had had ample opportunity to tamper with the evidence in the field immediately after the killings, allowing them "hegemony over what was concealed and what was discovered."³⁵⁰⁹

A Detective-Sergeant Fourie, whose job it was to collect forensic information, remembered years later that he had been told to leave the site by the security police and that it was much more important to find subversives and get them to confess than to focus on "scientific krap."³⁵¹⁰ Captain Coetzee testified that he was sure that none of his men fired any shots. It was later proved that two constables under his command did shoot, but the Judge did not believe that Captain Coetzee "wilfully misled the Commission" and thought that he was simply unaware of this fact.³⁵¹¹

The Commission's Report, tabled in Parliament on January 23, 1961, came to no conclusions, declared no winners or losers, no guilty or innocent, no liars or witnesses to the truth, and certainly did not find the police responsible for what it termed the "tragedy" at ³⁵⁰⁶ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 194.

³⁵⁰⁷ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 194.

³⁵⁰⁸ Martin, Justice Ignited: The Dynamics of Backfire, p. 15.

³⁵⁰⁹ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 197.

³⁵¹⁰ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 197.

³⁵¹¹ Report of the Sharpeville Commission, p. 169-170.

Sharpeville. It simply related events as unfolded in evidence before the Commission, in line with Wessels' opinion that "it is not the duty of the Commission to report on the responsibility of people for their actions and omissions... the task of the Commission is simply to inform your Excellency of the incidents referred to in your terms of reference."³⁵¹² One who won praise from Judge Wessels for his hard work on the inquiry was the then Captain van den Bergh, the investigator who failed to discover who fired the first shots, who had shouted "shoot" and who covered up the illegal use of dum-dum bullets.³⁵¹³

That the judge was not able to issue a report completely whitewashing the police can in large part be attributed to the swift response to the shooting by Bishop Ambrose Reeves who immediately afterwards arranged for lawyers to rush to the hospitals where the wounded were being kept under guard and to take their statements.³⁵¹⁴ Wessels' report recapitulated the police evidence in detail. Black witnesses, whose testimony was relatively scarce, were referred to only occasionally and without detail. White evidence tended to corroborate the police, especially in the case of those who were in detention when they appeared before the Commission, often as witnesses coached and prepared by the police's lawyers.³⁵¹⁵

Judge Wessels suggested that the long duration of the shooting had been the result of different officers beginning to shoot at different times.³⁵¹⁶ The use of "dum-dum" bullets, which caused horrifying exit wounds, was not addressed and, as stated above, the Commission lacked the testimony of many Black witnesses, while police lied, hid and fabricated evidence.³⁵¹⁷ Major van Zyl and Colonel Pienaar lied when they told the Commission that no dum-dums had been used, but their word was accepted.³⁵¹⁸ In addition, the police had removed bodies with evidence of dum-dum attacks, had lifted dum-dums from the field, and had removed surviving dum-dum victims from hospitals.³⁵¹⁹ Local tradition maintained (although it remains unproven) that many corpses displaying evidence of dum-dums were dumped in the local dam.³⁵²⁰ The police conveniently had "lost" evidence about use of dum-dums, "misplaced" evidence on the ammunition rounds issued, used and not used.

³⁵¹² Daily Dispatch, 'No Findings on Sharpeville,' 24 January 1961: 1; The Cape Argus, 'Sharpeville: No Findings on Responsibility', 23 January 1961: 1; The New York Times, 'Sharpeville Inquiry Inconclusive', 24 January 1961: 6.

³⁵¹³ Report of the Sharpeville Commission, p. 10, 154.

³⁵¹⁴ Pogrand, How Can Man Die Better ... Sobukwe and Apartheid, p. 136.

³⁵¹⁵ Lodge, Sharpeville: An Apartheid Massacre and its Consequences, p. 328.

³⁵¹⁶ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 192.

³⁵¹⁷ Martin, Justice Ignited: The Dynamics of Backfire, p. 13.

³⁵¹⁸ The Star, 'Sharpeville Inquiry: Get Evidence of Some Detainees, Says Judge', 13 April 1960: 1.

³⁵¹⁹ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 147-148, 154-156; Martin, Justice Ignited: The Dynamics of Backfire, p. 14.

³⁵²⁰ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 148.

No experts on dum-dums were called. All in all, cover-up of the use of dum-dums was quite effective.³⁵²¹

Ultimately, the Commission's report served to bolster the idea that while the events at Sharpeville were tragic, they did not result from government policy but from an unfortunate lapse in discipline.³⁵²² Wessels used the term "tragic occurrences," with the clear implication that nobody was really to blame; he even suggested that perhaps the police's actions had resulted in fewer deaths than might otherwise have been the case.³⁵²³ There was no recognition of the fact that the police were the product of a society steeped in racial injustice and hatred.³⁵²⁴ The whitewash created by the Commission resulted in a concerted effort to silence anyone trying to tell the truth.

As for Judge Wessels, in 1961, after the retirement of Mr. Justice Broome as Judge President of Natal, he was seriously considered by Dr. Verwoerd's Cabinet for the vacant post, although he was only sixth in terms of seniority and had joined the Natal bench just a year earlier.³⁵²⁵ Eventually, the Cabinet appointed Judge Alexander Milne to the position instead.³⁵²⁶

How seriously can we take the findings of the Commission? According to Professor of Law Adam Sitze, "the Commission of Inquiry was not a fact-finding device; it was a "whitewashing" machine" that it had been set up to present the government in the kindest light possible while attempting to give the impression of even-handedness."³⁵²⁷ The Commission remained vague on most points and reached a "balanced" conclusion that found fault both with individual policemen and with the protestors. Afterwards, in the Senate, GJ Suttor stated that the report left him "no better off than he was" and that "The judge does not say that the police were right or that the police were wrong. He does not say the natives asked for it or they did not ask for it."³⁵²⁸

³⁵²¹ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 147-148, 154-156.

³⁵²² Sitze, The Impossible Machine: A Genealogy of South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission, p.: 180-181.

³⁵²³ Sitze, The Impossible Machine: A Genealogy of South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission, p. 180.

³⁵²⁴ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 169-172.

³⁵²⁵ Rand Daily Mail, 'Sharpeville Judge is Tipped for Natal Post', 19 January 1961: 9.

³⁵²⁶ South African Law Journal, "In Memoriam: Mr Justice Alexander John Milne." South African Law Journal, Vol. 111, No. 2, (May 1994), p. 378.

³⁵²⁷ Sitze, The Impossible Machine: A Genealogy of South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission, p. 157.

³⁵²⁸ Republic of South Africa, Debates of the Senate, (15 June 1961), col. 5342.

In general, the report had a “paralyzing” effect on readers and the Commission’s findings, characterised a “mixed blessing”,³⁵²⁹ and even contributed to a conspiracy theory that the PAC had actually intended to provoke the police to commit a massacre for propaganda purposes.³⁵³⁰ Sitze pointed out that the Wessels Commission was specifically designed to quell investor concern in apartheid police tactics.³⁵³¹

The “balanced” findings of the Wessels Commission could not be considered a faithful or loyal account of the events of Sharpeville as the Truth and Reconciliation Commission proved. The Commission’s failure to properly address the massacre contributed to both the whitewashing of the appalling attitudes and lack of preparedness that led to it, while creating the narrative that the government had deliberately conspired to kill a large number of people so as to teach the Blacks a lesson.³⁵³² It was broadly successful in terms of silencing discussion, and a more complete picture of events would emerge only a full generation later as part of the work that was carried out by the Truth and Reconciliation Commission. Until that time, the “official” version created by the Wessels Commission was generally accepted, at least by Whites.

In 1985, Henry R. Pike, in History of Communism in South Africa, described the massacre as the result of mass hysteria among the inhabitants of Sharpeville, the result of the efforts of “professional agitators” and the victims as armed with “sticks, clubs, bottles, knives, iron pipes, assegais, pangas, needle swords and other weapons.” A similar account was published in The Police Station, a memoir by JPJ Coetzer, a senior official in the Department of Justice.³⁵³³ Without the Wessels Commission, such appalling untruths would not have been allowed to hold such weight.

According to Professor Frankel:

“A pliant (or partially pliant) commission which confirmed the vicious intent of the Sharpeville mob and presented police responses as a natural, if over-reactive, case of self-defence could connect very positively with the prevailing persecution mentality among white South Africans in the aftermath of the massacre — including many who would not, other than in these exceptional circumstances, lend their support to the Nationalist government ...

³⁵²⁹ Sitze, The Impossible Machine: A Genealogy of South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission, p. 180.

³⁵³⁰ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 179.

³⁵³¹ Sitze, The Impossible Machine: A Genealogy of South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission, p. 187.

³⁵³² Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 119.

³⁵³³ Lodge, Sharpeville: An Apartheid Massacre and its Consequences, p. 330.

Ultimately, a sympathetic commission — indeed any commission— was essential to smoothing the panic and fears of a vast array of international interests with stakes in a post-Sharpeville South Africa... The bland outcome of the Commission of Inquiry contributed to the culture of impunity that gained strength, exemplified by the ongoing desecration of the cemetery in Sharpeville by white supremacists and their collaborators among the police.”³⁵³⁴

It now seems more than clear that the primary function of the Commission of Inquiry was to give the world the impression that justice was served in South Africa. For a whole generation many commentators discussed the horrifying events as if they were indeed the no-fault tragedy the Commission claimed. Sadly, this is par for the course for investigations carried out while a conflict is still ongoing. Globally, it is typical for such investigations to come up with findings that are partisan, at best, and often outright propaganda.³⁵³⁵

The TRC held hearings in the area in 1996, beginning with a series of testimonies about the Sharpeville Massacre. This was when the full truth (or as full a truth as can be obtained so many years after the event) began to emerge.³⁵³⁶ The evidence presented to the TRC clearly showed that the police had actually deliberately fired on an unarmed crowd after failing to give them adequate warning to leave, and that excessive force was used, resulting in the large number of deaths among protestors mostly unaligned with any political pressure group, but simply opposed to the pass laws.

The TRC also found that many of the wounded were subsequently treated like criminals, placed under police guard in hospital and “released” into prison where many were detained for a long time before appearing in court and having the charges withdrawn – facts that did not make it into the commission’s report. Ultimately:

“The commission finds the former state and the minister of police directly responsible for the commission of gross human rights violations in that excessive force was unnecessarily used to stop a gathering of unarmed people. Police failed to give an order to disperse and/or adequate time to disperse, relied on live ammunition rather than alternative methods of crowd dispersal and fired in a sustained manner into the back of the crowd, resulting in the death of 69 people and the injury of more than 300.”³⁵³⁷

³⁵³⁴ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 13, 152.

³⁵³⁵ Colm Campbell, “Beyond Radicalisation: Toward An Integrated Strategy.” In Ana María Salinas de Frias, Katja LH Samuel and Nigel D. White (eds.), Counter-Terrorism: International Law and Practice, (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2012), p. 262.

³⁵³⁶ Lodge, Sharpeville: An Apartheid Massacre and its Consequences, p. 338.

³⁵³⁷ TRC, TRC Report: Volume Three, p. 537.

The findings of the TRC were utterly contradictory of the Wessels Commission, essentially overruling everything the earlier document had stated. Jeremy Pogrund, the Rand Daily Mail journalist who had seen the massacre at first hand, stated that while there were many accusations of police torture and brutality, they were invariably protected by the National Party from all charges. The Sharpeville Massacre was in a way the inevitable result of this degree of impunity, brutality having become standard practice.³⁵³⁸

The experience of the Commission of Enquiry after Sharpeville makes it abundantly clear that any results emanating from such state bodies were not to be taken seriously. Its work makes no sense until we examine it in the context of apartheid South Africa, and consider the many constraints it was under.³⁵³⁹ As in the case of the Commission that investigated the Broederbond, the Soweto uprising, the shootings at Langa (see below) and many other incidents, the real agenda was never to find out the truth, but to produce a series of outcomes showing the government in the best light possible while besmirching its detractors, and allowing its reign of terror to continue, while not dissuading actual or would-be investors in the South African economy. According to Benjamin Pogrund, the Rand Daily Mail journalist who witnessed the massacre, every time there were accusations of brutality and torture, the Nationalists protected their police from all charges of wrongdoing, steadily, brutality came to be accepted as the standard modus operandi.³⁵⁴⁰

³⁵³⁸ Pogrund, War of Words: Memoir of a South African Journalist, p. 87.

³⁵³⁹ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 193.

³⁵⁴⁰ Pogrund, War of Words: Memoir of a South African Journalist, p. 87.

The Sharpeville experience is a prime example of how the various elements of the apartheid machine could come together and present a lie as truth and make people believe it. Government officials such as van Rhyen and Fourie, along with the police and the Commission, played significant roles in misrepresenting the horror of Sharpeville. The same three institutions performed precisely the same functions with Soweto in 1976 and the Langa shootings in 1984.

The Sharpeville Commission of Enquiry was not a fact-finding device but a “whitewashing” machine and it would have certainly been even more favourable towards the police if it was not for Bishop Reeves’s brave stance.³⁵⁴¹ Some of the police methods used during the Sharpeville Enquiry, for example the misplacing and concealing of evidence, will also be used by the police in the van Wyk Commission. Judge van Wyk himself would also adopt a similar attitude with that of Judge Wessels with the witnesses, the evidence and his portrayal of events and Tsafendas’s character.

The findings of the two Commissions are identical in absolving the police of blame, misrepresenting the cases and the truth and producing results the government wanted, but they also shared another important common factor: H.J. van den Bergh. As a police captain in 1960, he was the Police Chief Investigator for the Sharpeville Commission, and in 1966, by then a General, he was in charge of the Tsafendas investigation which came before the van Wyk Commission. Finally, the Sharpeville Commission not only whitewashed the police, but created a template for further investigations. For instance, following the uprisings in Soweto in 1976, the so-called Cillié Commission was appointed to investigate the incidents, while the Kannemayer Commission took place following similar events in Langa in 1984.

THE COMMISSION OF INQUIRY INTO THE RIOTS AT SOWETO AND ELSHEWHERE³⁵⁴²

The Soweto (South Western Townships) uprising was in reality a series of protests by students which began on the morning of 16 June 1976 but continued sporadically until early 1978, involving thousands of young people and resulting in hundreds of deaths. The spark was the imposition of Afrikaans, widely resented as the language of apartheid, to be the medium of instruction in schools, although it was known to few teachers and fewer students. On that mid-June morning, classes from numerous high schools in Soweto Township took to ³⁵⁴¹ Sitze, The Impossible Machine: A Genealogy of South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission, p. 157.

³⁵⁴² For a very detailed account of the accuracy and charade of this Commission, see Pohlandt McCormick, H. (2000) “I Saw a Nightmare ...”: Violence and the Construction of Memory.

the streets, growing to an estimated 20,000 individuals. Police met them with fierce armed brutality, but the protests spread beyond Soweto to other townships and neighbourhoods, resulting in hundreds of school closures.³⁵⁴³

Throughout the many months of demonstrations, students chanted slogans against Vorster's government, two of which were dedicated to Tsafendas, already a prisoner for ten years. One chorus asked, Where are you now that we need you, Dimitri Tsafendas? It was an adaptation of the anti-Nixon chant during Watergate, *Where are you now that we need you, Harvey Oswald?*³⁵⁴⁴ The other slogan was Tsafendas Inyanga Yezizwe (Tsafendas healer of the nation).³⁵⁴⁵

The heavy-handed police response led to ever larger and more violent riots and numerous student deaths. The initial government claim was that "only twenty-three students" were killed by police, but the true figure was between 600 and 700.³⁵⁴⁶ John Kane-Berman, Chief Executive of South African Institute of Race Relations, arrived at a death toll of 661, based on figures compiled by the South African Institute of Race Relations (SAIRR). Twenty-three people were said to have died in Port Elizabeth, 153 in the Western Cape, and 442 in the Transvaal, of which Soweto accounted for between 350 and 400. There were also 43 other deaths due to unknown circumstances.³⁵⁴⁷ Eighty-nine of the dead in the West Rand Area were under twenty years old, twelve below age eleven.³⁵⁴⁸ Many of the victims were children and adolescents, while at least 1,000 were injured. Only a handful of victims were White.³⁵⁴⁹

Shooting and killing schoolchildren caused international outrage and the Vorster government scrambled to cover its tracks. First, it sought to disparage the victims, hiding their ages and identities, disposing of bodies, belittling their actions and claiming deaths were ³⁵⁴³ John Kane-Berman, Soweto: Black Revolt, White Reaction, (Johannesburg: Ravan Press, 1978).

³⁵⁴⁴ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

³⁵⁴⁵ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017; Alexander Moumbaris, 'Dimitri Tsafendas. Remembering A Revolutionary', The Talking Drum. Retrieved from: <https://archive.is/pYjSu#selection-205.0-205.110>.

³⁵⁴⁶ Brink et al., Soweto, 16 June 1976: It All Started With A Dog, p. 9; Harrison, The White Tribe of Africa: South Africa in Perspective, p. 143; Kane-Berman, Soweto: Black Revolt, White Reaction, p. 27-28; Pohlandt-McCormick, "I Saw a Nightmare ...: Violence and the Construction of Memory (Soweto, June 16, 1976)", p. 25-28.

³⁵⁴⁷ Kane-Berman, Soweto: Black Revolt, White Reaction.

³⁵⁴⁸ Pohlandt-McCormick, "I Saw a Nightmare ...: Violence and the Construction of Memory (Soweto, June 16, 1976)", p. 26.

³⁵⁴⁹ TIME, 'The Soweto Uprising: A Soul-Cry of Rage', 28 June 1976: 12.

fewer than they were. Officials spread misinformation as to the intentions of the protestors and gagged witnesses and any voices raised in their support.³⁵⁵⁰

Second, Vorster did exactly what Dr. Verwoerd did after Sharpeville, he appointed an investigating commission. Justice Petrus Cillie³⁵⁵¹ was named chairman of the Commission of Inquiry into the Riots at Soweto and Elsewhere from the 16th of June 1976 to the 28th of February 1977. Leading evidence at the Inquiry to “investigate the incident,”³⁵⁵² was Percy Yutar, supporter of apartheid and the government, and the prosecuting lawyer in the Rivonia Trial. This permitted the government to invent a version of the uprising which suited its purposes and have it published as an official Report. The way it dealt with allegations of police misconduct such as removing bodies, became the template for apartheid's methods of rewriting the truth and thus the historical memory at Commissions of Inquiry.³⁵⁵³

The challenge facing the Cillie Commission was considerable: effectively it had to demonstrate that the authorities were justified in killing schoolchildren.³⁵⁵⁴ Benjamin Pogrand attended all of the Commission's hearings and openly criticised the Commission in the Rand Daily Mail: “while commissions can serve an invaluable purpose, there is need to guard against assassination of character and a great responsibility rests on those conducting the inquiry to protect uninvolved innocent people. This kind of erosion, we believe, has been manifesting itself this week in the Cillie Commission. A number of people have been named by witnesses, sometimes in relation to specific events of last year, and at other times seemingly in a more passing way.

The witnesses concerned are current Terrorism Act detainees, freed only temporarily and in a formal sense from their incommunicado detention where they are wholly at the mercy of their captors. As their names are concealed by order of the commission, it is difficult to evaluate their testimony and anyone who considers himself injured certainly faces obstacles in seeking redress. The problem is aggravated because of the absence of normal ³⁵⁵⁰ Pohlandt-McCormick, “I Saw a Nightmare ...: Violence and the Construction of Memory (Soweto, June 16, 1976)”, p. 25-29.

³⁵⁵¹ Justice Piet Cillie, a supporter of the apartheid government, was at the time Judge President of the Transvaal and had also served as Judge in the Prisons Trial. According to Lord Joel Joffe, Cillie “was elevated to the bench at a time when he had very limited legal experience, having by-passed the normal routine of long experience as an advocate and senior counsel” (Joel Joffe, The State vs. Nelson Mandela: The Trial that Changed South Africa, (London: Oneworld, 2009), p. 142). Of course such a “by-passing” was standard practice under apartheid for loyal supporters of the regime.

³⁵⁵² Pogrand, War of Words: Memoir of a South African Journalist, p. 276; TIME, ‘The Soweto Uprising: A Soul-Cry of Rage’, 28 June 1976: 12.

³⁵⁵³ Pohlandt-McCormick, “I Saw a Nightmare ...: Violence and the Construction of Memory (Soweto, June 16, 1976)”, p. 29.

³⁵⁵⁴ Pohlandt-McCormick, “I Saw a Nightmare ...: Violence and the Construction of Memory (Soweto, June 16, 1976)”, p. 25-29.

court safeguards where evidence can be challenged by defence counsel. Thus the way could be opened to character assassination. That, of course, cannot be the commission's intention. But the situation must cause disquiet."³⁵⁵⁵ Pogrund later wrote that "at best, it was an inquiry into the obvious, and at worst an effort to find someone to blame – anyone except the government."³⁵⁵⁶

Throughout the Soweto uprising and in the years after 1976, the government portrayed the students as a bunch of out-of-control extremists whose opposition to the Afrikaans language policy was short-sighted and irrational. This was the formula to which the Cillie Commission loyally adhered, reiterating the State's case that the police were blameless because it was the students who, for no good reason, attacked white people, government property and the forces of law and order.³⁵⁵⁷

The Commission did acknowledge that the country's Blacks may have had a reason for their anger. "Virtually all legislation regarding relations between races is separationist and seen by Blacks and Coloureds as unjust and discriminatory," the report said, adding that some blame attached to ordinary Whites as much as officials. "The manner in which so many whites treat blacks is of great importance," it said. "The objections do not end with the actions of officials or the police. Dissatisfaction is also caused by the action of ordinary citizens in everyday situations." The Commission emphasized the importance of communication between Blacks "and those whites concerned with the black wellbeing." The Commission listed the number of deaths as 575.³⁵⁵⁸

However, insofar as events on the ground were concerned, the Commission generally followed the police's point of view, demonstrating an evident bias. Systematically, the Commission misrepresented victims' ages, suppressed evidence, suggested that children had been engaged in violence that made it necessary to shoot them, and presented a false version of events. Stone-throwing children were represented as a serious threat to police officers' lives, making their deaths the result of a reasonable show of force in response. In fact, many had been shot in the back as they fled.³⁵⁵⁹ Forensic evidence was twisted to present a distorted interpretation of how victims had been killed, suggesting that they had been bending ³⁵⁵⁵ Pogrund, War of Words: Memoir of a South African Journalist, p. 276-277.

³⁵⁵⁶ Pogrund, War of Words: Memoir of a South African Journalist, p. 276.

³⁵⁵⁷ Noor Nieftagodien, The Soweto Uprising, (Johannesburg: Jacana Media, 2014), p. 20-21, 81.

³⁵⁵⁸ The New York Times, 'South African Judge Says Racial Justices Caused Soweto Riots', 1 March 1980: 3.

³⁵⁵⁹ Pohlandt-McCormick, "I Saw a Nightmare ...: Violence and the Construction of Memory (Soweto, June 16, 1976)", p. 29-34.

over to pick up stones to throw when the evidence suggested that they were shot in the back.³⁵⁶⁰

The Commission highlighted anything that might portray victims in a negative light (as the Sharpeville Commission did and as the van Wyk Commission would do extensively with Tsafendas). It stressed that some had been drinking (after doing blood alcohol tests on corpses), and claimed that traces of paint on bodies suggested that paint was used as an incendiary device. It manipulated evidence and intimidated witnesses, interrogated the parents of child victims, even obstructed some parents from locating their children's bodies. It strove to prove that the policemen's lives were endangered by the stones thrown by students and that it was only then that the police opened fire. This was a deliberate attempt to obscure the fact that the use of deadly force against students lacking deadly weapons was wholly inappropriate. Oral testimonies collected from many participants demonstrated how the police lied, but these were omitted by the Commission. These descriptions of the events of 16 June and publications based on them demonstrate vividly how the authorities subverted the truth and the Commission turned a blind eye to the fact.³⁵⁶¹

Ultimately, it was abundantly clear that the official explanation for the protests/riots, as "uncovered" by the Commission, was simply "an attempt by the apartheid state to exonerate itself of responsibility for its ill-conceived policies and the murderous intent of its security forces,"³⁵⁶² a "sham and a charade,"³⁵⁶³ and "another inquiry into the obvious, and at worst an effort to blame anyone except from the government."³⁵⁶⁴ The official narrative may have been accepted by ardent apartheid supporters but few among the general public gave it any credence.³⁵⁶⁵

³⁵⁶⁰ Pohlandt-McCormick, "I Saw a Nightmare ...: Violence and the Construction of Memory (Soweto, June 16, 1976)", p. 30.

³⁵⁶¹ Nieftagodien, The Soweto Uprising, p. 82.

³⁵⁶² Gary Baines, "The Master Narrative of South Africa's Liberation Struggle: Remembering and Forgetting June 16, 1976." The International Journal of African Historical Studies, Vol. 40, No. 2 (2007), p. 284.

³⁵⁶³ Sitze, The Impossible Machine: A Genealogy of South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission, p. 182.

³⁵⁶⁴ Pogrund, War of Words: Memoir of a South African Journalist, p. 276.

³⁵⁶⁵ Nieftagodien, The Soweto Uprising, p. 21.

One of the ironies of Soweto was the introduction of legislation to protect the police from any repercussions resulting from their actions in similar situations. In January 1977, Justice Minister James Krueger placed before Parliament an Indemnity Bill under which the State and its servants were indemnified against civil and criminal prosecutions of any kind for acts committed “in good faith with the intent of suppressing or terminating internal disorder.” Krueger told the Parliament, “Those who gave rise to the unrest, and had a part in it, and in the process were injured or suffered damages, cannot expect to load the police with defending unfounded claims.” The Bill became law in August 1977.³⁵⁶⁶ Retrospectively, the violence in Soweto in 1976 was claimed as an important turning point in the anti-apartheid movement.³⁵⁶⁷

COMMISSION OF ENQUIRY ON THE LANGA SHOOTINGS³⁵⁶⁸

In 1984, violence broke out in impoverished black townships in the East Cape and Witwatersrand. It was met with strong police action, leading to a number of deaths, all of which occurred in the context of police harassment and assaults against both activists and ordinary black families. Considering funerals of victims to be important flashpoints for further violence, the government ordered that such proprieties should take place on workdays to minimise attendance.

When it became apparent that workers intended to leave work en masse to go to funerals, they were prohibited. When protestors in the township of Langa held a march in protest, they were confronted by the police, who opened fire. Twenty protestors were killed, and forty-three were injured. The Minister of Law and Order promptly claimed that the police had feared that their lives were in imminent danger. To international outrage, the government decided to appoint a Commission of Enquiry under Justice Kannemeyer.³⁵⁶⁹

As the Commission went to work, it quickly became apparent that the police were not prepared for crowd management and had been equipped only with weapons of lethal force.

³⁵⁶⁶ Amnesty International, Political Imprisonment in South Africa, (London: Amnesty International Publications, 1978), p. 102.

³⁵⁶⁷ Pohlandt-McCormick, “I Saw a Nightmare ...: Violence and the Construction of Memory (Soweto, June 16, 1976)”, p. 25-28.

³⁵⁶⁸ All the information regarding this Commission has been taken from Nicholas Haysom’s 1986 journal article The Langa Shootings and the Kannemeyer Commission of Enquiry. Haysom is at the time of writing the United Nations Secretary-General’s Special Representative and head of the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan, and in the past has held high-level positions with both the United Nations and the Government of the Republic of South Africa in the post-apartheid period.

³⁵⁶⁹ Haysom, “The Langa Shootings and the Kannemeyer Commission of Enquiry”, p. 494-501.

Survivors testified that they had been taunted by the police and that victims, including a fifteen-year-old boy, had been shot without provocation. The Commission stated that “one can only conclude that this failure to equip the police patrols was the result of a policy deliberately adopted.” It went on to state that “at what level this decision was taken, and who was responsible cannot be determined from the evidence heard by the Commission.” What it did not do was seek to discover who took the fateful decision, although the Commission had the power necessary to call for such evidence.³⁵⁷⁰

Justice Kannemeyer announced that he would not hear “background evidence” about conditions in the black townships, even though it included allegations of rape and other violent behaviour on the part of the authorities, and how the police reacted to violence in the townships. This decision meant that crucial information about black living conditions was disregarded and the Commission relied solely on the police to provide evidence on this important aspect of the flare-up. Thus allegations about police misbehaviour went unheard and were omitted from the Report while the Commission listened to police witnesses describing incidents of violence and property damage in the Uitenhage area.³⁵⁷¹

One of the more sensational aspects of the Langa shootings was the claim by eye-witnesses that the police had placed stones among the bodies of those who had fallen in the shooting. Justice Kannemeyer, apparently unable to believe that the police could fabricate evidence, accepted their denials on this point. He argued, without supporting evidence, that the locals would have picked up the stones when they were confronted.³⁵⁷²

Finally, the Report criticised the decision to ban funerals, but did not find anyone responsible for the massacre. In general, the Commission tended to accept police testimony, including their contention (unsupported by the evidence) that stones had been thrown at them, causing them to fear for their lives and even concluding that some of the evidence given by the police was so “bizarre” that it must be true, as nobody would have made it up.³⁵⁷³

³⁵⁷⁰ Haysom, “The Langa Shootings and the Kannemeyer Commission of Enquiry”, p. 500-503.

³⁵⁷¹ Haysom, “The Langa Shootings and the Kannemeyer Commission of Enquiry”, p. 494-497

³⁵⁷² Haysom, “The Langa Shootings and the Kannemeyer Commission of Enquiry”, p. 506.

³⁵⁷³ Haysom, “The Langa Shootings and the Kannemeyer Commission of Enquiry”, p. 505.

Nicholas Haysom described Kannemeyer's approach to evidence as ad hoc and in places "extremely unsatisfactory." He argued that the Commissioner found against the police only when this could not be avoided and that when required to choose between two versions of an incident, "he seemed to lack the courage to find against the police." He said Kannemeyer seemed subconsciously to bring his own perception to what happened and how the police and the township residents acted.³⁵⁷⁴

The Sharpeville, Langa and Soweto Commissions concealed more than they uncovered.³⁵⁷⁵ They were aspects of a judicial system that was, "the world's most elaborate legal structure for the repression of political resistance of all kinds."³⁵⁷⁶ None of these Commissions could disguise what happened in Langa in 1984, or retrospectively Sharpeville in 1960 or Soweto in 1976. What they did was provide a convenient forum in which events could be presented in a way that was convenient to the government. This was the case not only for the three Commissions mentioned above but for quite a few set up during the apartheid years. It could be argued that the state compounded the physical violence originally directed at the victims by distorting and hiding evidence and misrepresenting incidents before the Commissions in an attempt to clear the government and police of blame. As we will see, the treatment of evidence at the Commission into Dr. Verwoerd's death was perhaps the worst of all.

THE COMMISSION OF INQUIRY INTO THE BROEDERBOND

In 1958, when Dr. Verwoerd became Prime Minister, the Broederbond acquired new, extensive powers as he granted it "co-responsibility with the party to prepare the electorate" for nationalist policies.³⁵⁷⁷ Dr. Verwoerd's government sought candidates for top government posts and through the secretive organisation the men running the army, government departments and important state-owned bodies such as the railways, many were Broederbond appointees.³⁵⁷⁸

³⁵⁷⁴ Haysom, "The Langa Shootings and the Kannemeyer Commission of Enquiry", p. 503-509.

³⁵⁷⁵ Sitze, The Impossible Machine: A Genealogy of South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission, p. 311.

³⁵⁷⁶ Austin T. Turk, Political Criminality: The Defiance and Defence of Authority. Beverly Hills: SAGE Publications, Inc., 1982), p. 146.

³⁵⁷⁷ Asmal et al., Reconciliation Through Truth: A Reckoning of Apartheid's Criminal Governance, p. 153-154.

³⁵⁷⁸ Morris, Every Step of the Way. The Journey to Freedom in South Africa, p. 160.

A. Hertzog and N. Diederichs became members of his cabinet and they were both former Broederbond colleagues who had served on the organisation's Executive Council.³⁵⁷⁹ In 1959, Dr. Verwoerd appointed Piet Meyer,³⁵⁸⁰ a close friend, as chairman of the South African Broadcasting Corporation.³⁵⁸¹ Meyer was a fanatical Nazi and a member of the Broederbond and later became head of that organisation.³⁵⁸² In 1964, the General Secretary of the Broederbond, Piet Koornhof, was also elected to government in a move that was seen as reflecting widespread acceptance of the Broederbond in government and of its hold over South African political life in general.³⁵⁸³

Before long, some members of parliament queried if the Broederbond was intimately involved in affairs of the state (no doubt knowing very well that this was the case) and Dr. Verwoerd was asked about his membership status. The United Party had identified the Broederbond as a potential weak point for the National Party and would not cease to demand an investigation in the hope that it would weaken them and strengthen the opposition.³⁵⁸⁴ At the same time, a growing number of churchmen were also expressing reservations of the Broederbond.³⁵⁸⁵

Feeling under political pressure, and perhaps horrified by Beyers Naudé's "treachery" (Naudé was the son of Jozua François Naudé, one of the founders of the Broederbond and its first chairman),³⁵⁸⁶ Dr. Verwoerd announced the appointment of a one-man Commission to inquire into the secret activities of the Broederbond, the Freemasons and the Sons of England. The inquiry, which was to be carried out by Justice D.H. Botha³⁵⁸⁷ of the Appellate Division, would be carried out secretly and would investigate if any of the above-named societies were guilty of:

Any form of subversion, treason or intrigue, directed at obtaining for itself domination of or unlawful influence over the people or the state, or any of its organs such as the central government, the provincial authorities or the administration of justice;

³⁵⁷⁹ The New York Times, 'Dr. Verwoerd Gets Wider Support', 27 November 1964: 11.

³⁵⁸⁰ See Chapter 1 for more about Piet Meyer.

³⁵⁸¹ Booth, The Race Game. Sport and Politics in South Africa, p. 38.

³⁵⁸² Grundy, Confrontation and Accommodation in Southern Africa: The Limits of Independence, p. 4.

³⁵⁸³ The New York Times, 'Dr. Verwoerd Gets Wider Support', 27 November 1964: 11.

³⁵⁸⁴ Wilkins and Strydom, Broederbond: The Super-Afrikaners, p. 321.

³⁵⁸⁵ The New York Times, 'Ministers Oppose Secret Group', 30 April 1963: 10.

³⁵⁸⁶ Harrison, The White Tribe of Africa: South Africa in Perspective, p. 89; Soggot, 'The Rev. Beyers Naudé', The Guardian, 8 September 2004.

³⁵⁸⁷ The judge was not member of any secret organization (Wilkins and Strydom, Broederbond: The Super-Afrikaners, p. 326).

Anything which might weaken the determination and will of the people of South Africa in the fight for their survival;

The acquisition of funds from hostile sources, of the use of its own funds, for the financing of subversive action against the Authority of the State, or of any threats to the security, peace and order of the people; or for the overthrow of the government by impermissible and undemocratic methods;

Nepotism or interference in appointments and promotions in the public service, the Defence Force, the police in such a way that people were appointed or promoted for reason other than merit;

Attempts to subvert the relations between the English and Afrikaans-speaking people with the object of bringing about strife and national discord, and undermining national unity;

Improper or objectionable activities which harmed, prejudiced or undermined the rights, liberties or interests of persons or groups;

Subversion in any form of the morals, customs and way of life of the people of South Africa by circumventing or transgressing the country's laws, or by any other means;

Become a serious danger to the peace and order in the body politic by exerting influence in an impermissible manner in the economic and cultural spheres;

Attempts to dominate the Prime Minister, Ministers, Administrators or any other persons in authority in an effort to use him or them in service of an organization such a manner that, as far as the performance of his or their official duties was concerned, loyalty was in the first place shown to other organization and not to the state.³⁵⁸⁸

There were some objections from the opposition and from elements in the press about the fact that the Commission would carry out its work in secret. The Rand Daily Mail queried Dr. Verwoerd's assertion that no crime had been committed when one of the main points of the inquiry was to consider the use of funds obtained from "hostile sources" and "subversive activities."³⁵⁸⁹ On June 19, 1964, the well-known apartheid critic Stanley Uys pointed out in the Sunday Times that the Commission had been set up by Dr. Verwoerd to investigate the potential criminal acts of an organisation of which he himself was a member and that this was a very clear conflict of interest.³⁵⁹⁰

³⁵⁸⁸ Serfontein, Brotherhood of Power: An Expose of the Secret Afrikaner Broederbond, p. 87; Wilkins and Strydom, Broederbond: The Super-Afrikaners, p. 321.

³⁵⁸⁹ Serfontein, Brotherhood of Power: An Expose of the Secret Afrikaner Broederbond, p. 94.

When the Inquiry was first mooted, Dr. Verwoerd had had to deal with complaints from the Broederbond, as there were many things they did not want brought to light. Prior to the Commission, Dr. Verwoerd had guaranteed to Broederbonder Meyer that the Commission would not look into anything that might cause the organisation problems, after which Meyer reassured the Broederbond that they could trust Dr. Verwoerd.³⁵⁹¹ They were indeed reassured. Dr. Verwoerd was greatly indebted to the Broederbond for the work that they had done towards passing the referendum that saw South Africa become a republic (discussed below) and he knew it.³⁵⁹²

The Broederbond reacted bullishly, stating that they welcomed the investigation and were prepared and delighted to give evidence. They stated their pleasure that two other organisations were also going to be investigated.³⁵⁹³ The Broederbond cooperated and made all its information completely available. Judge Botha was given full access to the organization's minutes, newsletters, study material, etc., where these were relevant, as well as its membership lists.³⁵⁹⁴

However, in a circular to its members, the Broederbond told them that the investigation resulted from an attempt by their enemies to take away the power of the Afrikaner people. Members were instructed that they should not reveal their names to the Commission without permission from their leaders, and that the leaders would do likewise. They were also told to have faith in Dr. Verwoerd, with the assertion that he would never do anything to damage the organisation; certainly a barely-encoded message that Dr. Verwoerd would ensure that nothing unflattering came to light. Dr. Verwoerd knew that the investigation had to go well, from the Broederbond's point of view. He owed them an enormous debt in the role that they had played in persuading their members to vote for a republic, and in securing him a successful political career.³⁵⁹⁵

The Commissioner simply did not look at a great deal of the material that was relevant to the project, including speeches that stirred up sentiment against English-speaking

³⁵⁹⁰ Serfontein, Brotherhood of Power: An Expose of the Secret Afrikaner Broederbond, p. 95.

³⁵⁹¹ Serfontein, Brotherhood of Power: An Expose of the Secret Afrikaner Broederbond, p. 96-97.

³⁵⁹² Wilkins and Strydom, Broederbond: The Super-Afrikaners, p. 323.

³⁵⁹³ Wilkins and Strydom, Broederbond: The Super-Afrikaners, p. 321-322.

³⁵⁹⁴ Pelzer, Die Afrikaner-Broederbond: Eerste 50 Jaar, p. 87-88.

³⁵⁹⁵ Wilkins and Strydom, Broederbond: The Super-Afrikaners, p. 321-324.

South Africans, and it chose never to explore the comments made by Hertzog in 1935 that condemned the Broederbond's machinations and how it had infiltrated the education system; a significant blind spot. Unsurprisingly, on March 1965, the commission reported that the Broederbond and the other two organizations were innocent of any of the above accusations,³⁵⁹⁶ despite the fact that the tentacles of the Broederbond stretched into every aspect of the state apparatus.³⁵⁹⁷

The fact that Dr. Verwoerd had elevated many Broederbonders to government positions was ignored. Judge Botha reported that he could reveal little of what he had learned because he had been given all the information in confidence and the public was supposed to simply accept this. Moreover, the investigation was carried out in secret (the first such case in the history of South Africa), and was allowed to present unsubstantiated findings. Moreover, Dr. Verwoerd had ensured that the remit of the investigation did not include a clause that had been mooted originally, to cover groups "which may interfere in politics secretly." Had this inclusion been left in, it would have been very difficult for the investigation not to rule against the Broederbond.³⁵⁹⁸

The judge presented his conclusion that the Broederbond was certainly innocent of any of the "irregular" activities of which it had been accused. More than that, his conclusion even commented very positively on much of its work,³⁵⁹⁹ claiming among other things that "through its resistance to communism and other ideologies inimical to the nation, the Bond has already done much to steel the will of the people to fight for its survival with all the means at its disposal."³⁶⁰⁰

Furthermore, paragraph 41 of his report states:

"I believe that it is unnecessary for the purposes of this report to outline here the achievements of the Bond, as it is clear from the documents submitted. The Bond itself does not boast in it. It is sufficient, I think, to state that the achievement of the Bond, in the relatively short span of its existence, is impressive, especially in certain areas, such as bringing together or uniting Afrikaners, the Afrikaans language, culture and traditions, the Afrikaners' part in the national economy and the business world, and the promotion of good ³⁵⁹⁶ Ngcokavane, Demons of Apartheid: A Moral and Ethical Analysis of the NGK, NP and Broederbond's Justification of Apartheid, p. 122.

³⁵⁹⁷ Wilkins and Strydom, Broederbond: The Super-Afrikaners, p. 331.

³⁵⁹⁸ Wilkins and Strydom, Broederbond: The Super-Afrikaners, p. 331.

³⁵⁹⁹ Pelzer, Die Afrikaner-Broederbond: Eerste 50 Jaar, p. 89.

³⁶⁰⁰ Report of the Commission of Enquiry into Secret Organization, 1965: p. 7.

relations between whites and the non-white groups in South Africa. A well-founded dynamic organization like the Bond, who in its 14 study groups or task forces has the finest experts in various fields, in a favourable environment, could hardly have been expected otherwise."³⁶⁰¹

After the findings were presented, Judge Botha thanked JPJ Coetzer, who had led the evidence before the Commission, and CM Van Niekerk, the secretary of the Commission, for all the hard work they had done towards completing the inquiry. Some years later, the two men would go to serve as, respectively, Secretary and Undersecretary of Justice, and as members of the Broederbond.³⁶⁰²

The Commission had given Dr. Verwoerd the result he needed, because the bottom line was that it was there to serve the government, and not the people, even if that meant misrepresenting reality. Only three years later, in 1968, Piet Meyer, Chairman of the Broadcasting Corporation, personally appointed to this position by his close personal friend Hendrik Verwoerd, and vice chairman of the Broederbond's Executive Council, confirmed that the organisation had been intimately involved with the government under Dr. Verwoerd, stating: "... because of our active participation in the realization of our republican ideal, the Afrikaner Broederbond aligned itself closer in practice with the national organising of the political struggle ..."³⁶⁰³

The Commission, ignoring all the evidence (in particular the fact that Dr. Verwoerd had given government positions to many Broederbonders), provided the result the government wanted, and a template for future Commissions of Inquiry under the corrupt apartheid government.³⁶⁰⁴ In general, after the Commission of Inquiry, the Broederbond continued to grow and spread its influence, now secure in its knowledge that the National Party would never try to interfere. Why would it, when so many of its members were also Broederbonders? While the Broederbond's power to impact on decision-making at governmental level is well-known, its influence at grass-roots level, in communities, schools, agricultural bodies and local chapters of the National Party, was also considerable,³⁶⁰⁵ and membership of the organisation grew enormously during Dr. Verwoerd's reigns as Minister for Native Affairs and Prime Minister.³⁶⁰⁶

³⁶⁰¹ Report of the Commission of Enquiry into Secret Organisations, 1965: p. 5.

³⁶⁰² Wilkins and Strydom, Broederbond: The Super-Afrikaners, p. 332.

³⁶⁰³ Serfontein, Brotherhood of Power: An Expose of the Secret Afrikaner Broederbond, p. 87.

³⁶⁰⁴ Wilkins and Strydom, Broederbond: The Super-Afrikaners, p. 324.

³⁶⁰⁵ Serfontein, Brotherhood of Power: An Expose of the Secret Afrikaner Broederbond, p. 188.

³⁶⁰⁶ G.H. Pirie, C.M. Rogerson and C.S.O. Beavon, "Covert Power in South Africa: The Geography of the Afrikaner Broederbond." Area, Vol. 12, No. 2 (1980), p. 99.

After Dr. Verwoerd's death his successor, Balthazar Johannes Vorster, would transform the organisation into a tool of the National Party.³⁶⁰⁷ Essentially, the Commission of Inquiry provided Dr. Verwoerd with an "invaluable smokescreen" behind which the government and the Broederbond could operate as before, immersed in "political intrigue and manipulation."³⁶⁰⁸

THE BOSS INQUIRY AND THE "INFORMATION SCANDAL"

In 1971, faced with pressure from the Press, the public and some eminent judges about the BOSS activities and extensive powers, Vorster appointed, as usual, a one-man Commission to inquire into all aspects of state security. The Commission was called Commission of Inquiry into Matters relating to the Security of the State, and the Judge who was appointed was Justice H. J. Potgieter.³⁶⁰⁹ Vorster said about it "I do this because it is of vital importance that the Republic should have the best machinery at its disposal to guarantee its security, and secondly to give all persons who have recently expressed misgivings or have launched attacks on BOSS and the legislation concerned the opportunity to lay their points of view and objections before the Commission."³⁶¹⁰

The first part of the Commission's brief was belated and largely superfluous while the second was clearly a concession to the critics. In the event, the Potgieter Commission proved, like many such commissions, to have been merely a device for deflecting protest. Once it was appointed, the noisy objections tailed off, leaving General van den Bergh and BOSS free to carry on with their appointed tasks. In the end, the Potgieter Report found BOSS innocent of any illegalities and recommended that phone tapping and mail interception be authorised by legislation.³⁶¹¹ Naturally, General van den Bergh was delighted with the Report, which he characterised as "excellent." He was particularly pleased because, as he said, it "recommends that I do much more than I am doing at the present time." On the other hand, the Rand Daily Mail commented about the decision "It seems ironic that a Commission which was appointed to allay public anxieties that the powers of BOSS were too sweeping should in the end recommend that those powers be extended."³⁶¹²

³⁶⁰⁷ Callinicos, South Africa: Between Reform and Revolution, p. 30.

³⁶⁰⁸ Wilkins and Strydom, Broederbond: The Super-Afrikaners, p. 333.

³⁶⁰⁹ International Defence and Aid Fund, BOSS: The First Five Years, p. 6, 12.

³⁶¹⁰ International Defence and Aid Fund, BOSS: The First Five Years, p. 12-13.

³⁶¹¹ International Defence and Aid Fund, BOSS: The First Five Years, p. 13-20.

³⁶¹² International Defence and Aid Fund, BOSS: The First Five Years, p. 22.

Despite the supine record of the Commissions examined above, not all such bodies and not all judges were servile supporters of apartheid, and one in particular, Judge Anton Mostert, risked his career in the cause of truth. In 1978, just seven years after the BOSS Inquiry whitewash, Judge Mostert, the sole member of a Commission of Inquiry into exchange control regulations, discovered evidence of widespread government corruption at the Ministry of Information. It became known as the "Information Scandal,"³⁶¹³ or more commonly "Muldergate," after Information Minister Cornelius Mulder. Sensationally, Prime Minister John Vorster and General van den Bergh were named as being involved. What was not known was that two years earlier, in 1976, Vorster and van den Bergh ordered the destruction of all "unnecessary documentation" that would have disclose their involvement.³⁶¹⁴

Then, in 1977, these two, with the co-operation of Mulder, pressured L.S. Reynders, who was investigating the Department of Information, to produce a document declaring them innocent of any involvement in unconstitutional or illegal activities. Investigator Reynders' findings duly offered Vorster, van den Bergh and Mulder the whitewash they wanted.³⁶¹⁵ Despite the fact that the newly elected Prime Minister, P.W. Botha tried to stop him, Judge Mostert proceeded with his inquiries and discovered the evidence. He said, "I have endeavoured to discover what particular interest of the state is furthered by suppression, albeit temporary, rather than disclosure of the evidence. I have been able to find none."³⁶¹⁶

Judge Mostert then disclosed the evidence, despite intense government pressure, at a Press conference. He said that Mulder's Information Ministry, seeking ways of influencing public opinion in favour of apartheid, collaborated closely and covertly throughout the 1970s with van den Bergh's BOSS, presumably with Vorster's knowledge and agreement.³⁶¹⁷ For making his disclosures public, Judge Mostert was dismissed and his Commission of Inquiry was disbanded.³⁶¹⁸

³⁶¹³ For more about the scandal see: Rees, M., Day, C. (1980) Muldergate: The story of the info-scandal.; Rickard, C. (2012) Thank You, Judge Mostert!

³⁶¹⁴ Sanders, South Africa and the International Media, 1972-1979: A Struggle for Representation, p. 62.

³⁶¹⁵ Pollack, Up Against Apartheid. The Role and the Plight of Press in South Africa, p. 31.

³⁶¹⁶ Smith, Anatomy of Apartheid, p. 43.

³⁶¹⁷ Burns, 'Pretoria Scandal Testimony Reveals Talk of Murder', The New York Times, 18 May 1980: 3;

Hachten and Giffard, The Press and Apartheid: Repression and Propaganda in South Africa, p. 243-244.

³⁶¹⁸ The Globe and Mail, 'Secret life of Pretoria', 6 April 1979: 6.

As a result of the scandal, the Erasmus Commission of Inquiry was appointed to investigate the irregularities in the Department of Information. In June 1979, the Erasmus Commission issued three reports which implicated Vorster and Mulder in misleading Parliament about secret funding of The Citizen newspaper. It laid responsibility for extensive financial irregularities on Mulder and van den Bergh.³⁶¹⁹ When L.S. Reynders was questioned by the Erasmus Commission, he said he had produced his “whitewash” under fierce pressure from van den Bergh. He said he feared that if he had opposed him, the general would “pulverize” him because “few people in this land realise what power van den Bergh possesses.”³⁶²⁰ Subsequently, van den Bergh was forced to resign and retire.³⁶²¹

CONCLUSION ABOUT THE ROLE OF COMMISSIONS OF INQUIRY DURING APARTHEID

As we have seen, the aforementioned Commissions and many more during apartheid were mere whitewashing machines whereby the government and police could avoid responsibility for their illegal or extrajudicial actions and secure results which the State desired. They were part of a judicial system that has been described as “the world’s most elaborate legal structure for the repression of political resistance of all kinds.”³⁶²² The Sharpeville, Soweto and Langa investigations in particular demonstrate how right Professor John Dugard was when he spoke of the way judicial commissions “were manipulated, and also the way in which inquest inquiries were conducted and the magistrates just ignored the evidence.”³⁶²³ This was how the apartheid machine worked, hiding the truth from the world and presenting an account of history which suited its self-image. In essence, these so-called investigations hid more than they exposed.³⁶²⁴

History has now consigned the above Commissions, Erasmus apart, to the dustbin. It is notable, however, that the Verwoerd Enquiry has never been seriously examined or questioned. Given the apartheid regime’s dismal record for truth-telling, state institutions’ unflinching instinct for secrecy and knowledge of the tokenist inquiries of the past, one would expect a questioning and sceptical approach to the Verwoerd Enquiry. Crucially, is the ³⁶¹⁹ Leonard, South Africa at War: White Power and the Crisis in Southern Africa, p. 163.

³⁶²⁰ Report of the Commission of Inquiry into Alleged Irregularities in the Former Department of Information, chap. 11, par. 385.

³⁶²¹ Sanders, Apartheid's Friends: The Rise and Fall of South Africa's Secret Service, p. 64, 77, 161.

³⁶²² Turk, Political Criminality: The Defiance and Defence of Authority, p. 146.

³⁶²³ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

³⁶²⁴ Sitze, The Impossible Machine: A Genealogy of South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission, p. 311.

Commission's portrayal of Tsafendas a truthful one and how accurate is its account of events surrounding Dr. Verwoerd's assassination? Strangely, scholars and writers who are researching the relevant period and the assassination seem generally to accept the van Wyk Report without question.

However, as we will shortly see, the Dr. Verwoerd Commission was no more objective or honest than any of the inquiries mentioned above. Indeed, it is arguably worse than its predecessors in that it concealed important facts about Tsafendas so as to maintain the fiction that he was a mad outcast without any serious political interest who killed Dr. Verwoerd because of a tapeworm. It went further than this, doing everything possible to belittle him in the eyes of the public so that no-one could think that Tsafendas was capable of committing a political crime.

INTRODUCTION TO THE COMMISSION OF ENQUIRY INTO DR. VERWOERD'S DEATH

On September 14, 1966, eight days after the killing, South Africa's new Prime Minister, John Vorster, announced in Parliament that a judicial investigation, a one-man Commission of Enquiry, would be launched immediately "into all aspects of the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd." The process would be led by Justice Jacques Theodore van Wyk, South Africa's representative at the World Court in The Hague. Vorster urged anyone with information about the matter, however trivial, to come forward and lay it before the Commission.³⁶²⁵

Back in Parliament eight days later, Vorster officially proclaimed the formation of a Commission of Enquiry into the Circumstances of the Death of the Late Dr. The Honourable Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd.³⁶²⁶ He affirmed that Judge van Wyk, who was present in the Distinguished Visitor's Gallery for the occasion, would be the chairman and sole member of the Commission.³⁶²⁷ Since the Commission would be a judicial one, it would come under the authority of the Minister of Justice, Mr P.C. Pelser.³⁶²⁸

BACKGROUND ON JUDGE JACQUES THEODORE VAN WYK (1913-1975)

³⁶²⁵ The Cape Argus, 'Judge Will Probe Dr. V's Death', 14 September 1966: 1; Daily Dispatch, 'Premier's Killing Full Inquiry', 15 September 1966: 1.

³⁶²⁶ Government Notice, No. 1435, 23 September 1966.

³⁶²⁷ Rand Daily Mail, 'Killing Inquiry To Be Secret', 22 September 1966.

³⁶²⁸ The Chronicle (Bulawayo), 'Dr. Verwoerd Inquiry in Camera', 22 September 1966.

As we have seen, when the National Party came to power in 1948, a minority of judges were members of the Party. Most, however, were relatively independent, and many supported the old United Party. The new government decided to appoint judges who would support its goals, creating a legal system that was decidedly biased in favour of Afrikaners' interests and the apartheid state. One of them was Jacques Theodore van Wyk.³⁶²⁹

Jacques Theodore van Wyk, a native of Vanrhynsdorp, Western Cape, was an enthusiastic nationalist and supporter of apartheid.³⁶³⁰ As is evident from the following incident, he was also a racist. In the early 1950s there was just one Black member of the Cape Town Bar, a man called Ndhlovu. Because the Group Areas Act had just come into force, he was prohibited from taking chambers in Temple Chambers, as this was a building in a "white" area. On the occasions when Ndhlovu was present in the common room, van Wyk refused to enter it.³⁶³¹

Advocate George Bizos said of Judge van Wyk:

"He was very intelligent and very knowledgeable, highly respected among the National Party, but he was also very supportive of apartheid, with close ties to the government. It was no surprise at all to me that he was appointed to head this Commission [on Verwoerd's assassination]; they were never going to appoint someone they did not trust."³⁶³²

Professor John Dugard, who knew van Wyk well, had this to say about him:

"Van Wyk was a very austere, strict man. He took his professional duties very, very responsibly. So he would not speak to any of the advocates while we were in Calvinia, which is a small town. We were all staying in the same hotel. There was only one hotel. But all the top senior advocates from Cape Town then, you knew them all socially. But he said to me, 'I do not want to be seen talking to any of these advocates because the local people will think that I am biased.' So, for two weeks, van Wyk and I were virtually incommunicado. He didn't speak to anyone else. He only spoke to me. We used to go for long walks in the country. So I know van Wyk very well. Professionally he was very austere, but politically van Wyk was very much a party person. He supported the National Party and was very much ³⁶²⁹ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016; Sachs, Justice in South Africa, p. 257.

³⁶³⁰ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017; Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016; Francois Marais quoted in Geni.com. Retrieved from <https://www.geni.com/people/Jacques-Theodore-Van-Wyk/6000000008317660124>

³⁶³¹ Friedman and Gauntlett, Bar, Bench and Bullshiflers: Cape Tales 1950-1990, p. 8-9.

³⁶³² Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017.

in favour of the government... he was, intellectually, one of the better judges. He and Beyers were intellectual giants, so to speak, amongst the National Party judges... they were certainly both political persons, and they owed their appointments to the government.”³⁶³³

Van Wyk represented the apartheid government in a number of high profile trials. In return for his service and loyalty, he was given a number of swift promotions. Aged just thirty-six, he was appointed KC in 1949, making him the youngest in South Africa to hold this position. He was promoted to Judge in October 1955.³⁶³⁴

One of van Wyk's landmark achievements was representing the apartheid government in the Harris case (Harris v Dönges) in the early 1950s³⁶³⁵ concerning the removal of Coloured voters from the Electoral Roll.³⁶³⁶ He was noted during proceedings to react viciously if any junior lawyers in the Cape Bar argued against the move. The voters' attorney, Pilkington-Jordan, wrote to United Party leader J.G.N. Strauss that both Beyers and van Wyk had treated the court with “scant courtesy” and that they had been “thoroughly rude” to Graeme Duncan KC, the leader of the legal team representing the voters. He said: “They really are monkeys in dinner jackets and the sartorial elegance of that garb does not in the least conceal the barbarian beneath ...”³⁶³⁷ Separately, van Wyk also served as an advisor to the Rhodesians in their talks between their Prime Minister Ian Smith and British Prime Minister Harold Wilson.³⁶³⁸

Van Wyk was elevated to the Appellate Division in January 1962, and was rewarded for his services with a position in The Hague. There, between 1962 and 1966, he served as an ad hoc member of the International Court of Justice, hearing the Ethiopia and Liberia v. South Africa case when the former collectively claimed to have a mandate to control South ³⁶³³ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

³⁶³⁴ Friedman and Gauntlett, Bar, Bench and Bullshiffters: Cape Tales 1950-1990, p. 73; Francois Marais quoted in Geni.com. Retrieved from <https://www.geni.com/people/Jacques-Theodore-Van-Wyk/6000000008317660124>

³⁶³⁵ The issue of legal favouritism became particularly pressing during the 1950s, when there was a dispute about the government's disenfranchisement of Coloured voters. In fact, this policy could ultimately be enacted because the government had appointed favoured judges to an enlarged Appellate Division. Among the new, partisan appointees were Beyers and van Wyk (Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016).

³⁶³⁶ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016; Friedman and Gauntlett, Bar, Bench and Bullshiffters: Cape Tales 1950-1990, p. 8-9.

³⁶³⁷ Davis and le Roux, Precedent and Possibility: The (Ab)use of Law in South Africa, p. 25.

³⁶³⁸ J.R.T. Wood, A Matter of Weeks Rather Than Months: The Impasse between Harold Wilson and Ian Smith Sanctions, Aborted Settlements and War 1965-1969, (Victoria: Trafford Publishing, 2012), p. 569-573.

West Africa.³⁶³⁹ His counterpart, representing both Ethiopia and Liberia, was Sir Louis Mbanefo, a Chief Justice from Nigeria.³⁶⁴⁰

South West Africa was a former German colony that had been captured by South Africa during the First World War, and administered by it following the war. After the Second World War, the area was supposed to come under the jurisdiction of the UN and to start the process of becoming independent. However, the then Prime Minister of South Africa, Jan Smuts, objected and stated the view that it should instead be absorbed into South Africa.³⁶⁴¹ From 1949, Whites from South West Africa were represented in the South African parliament, and apartheid law was applied throughout the area. The case arose when the applicants to the court maintained that South Africa was engaging in discrimination, which ran counter to its obligation to “protect to the utmost” the well-being of the area’s residents, and also claimed that South Africa was legally bound by international law not to practice discrimination, which it claimed had been established as an international norm, citing the official, stated practice of the UN, among other international bodies.³⁶⁴²

Van Wyk roundly rejected the idea that any organ of the UN had the right to “bind a dissenting minority” to the decisions it took, and firmly stated that no body of the UN had any such competence, as well as his view that it should not pursue it in any application or interpretation of the relevant legal Article. Van Wyk stated, in a comment described a few years later as “depressing” and “disappointing” but “not unexpected” that: “Applicants’ contention involved the novel proposition that the organs of the United Nations possessed some sort of legislative competence whereby they could bind a dissenting minority. It is clear from the provisions of the Charter that no such competence exists ...”³⁶⁴³ Essentially, his argument was that, for any UN ruling to be valid, every member would have to agree with it. Clearly, this view implied van Wyk’s (and the South African government’s) position that South Africa had the legal right to ignore any international ruling that it did not like about apartheid or any other internal matter. He stated that the applications to the court had not even tried to show any example of international practice that was consistent with the “alleged ³⁶³⁹ Marinus Wiechers, “South West Africa: The Decision of 16 July 1966 and its Aftermath.” The Comparative and International Law Journal of Southern Africa, Vol. 1, No. 3 (November 1968), p. 408.

³⁶⁴⁰ The New York Times, ‘Summary of the World Court’s Decision Rejecting Suit Against South Africa’, 19 July 1966: 16.

³⁶⁴¹ Rosalyn Higgins, “The United Nations and Lawmaking: The Political Organs.” The American Journal of International Law, Vol. 64, No. 4, The United Nations: Appraisal at 25 Years (September 1970), p. 43.

³⁶⁴² Higgins, “The United Nations and Lawmaking: The Political Organs”, p. 43-46.

³⁶⁴³ Higgins, “The United Nations and Lawmaking: The Political Organs”, p. 43-46.

norm” and that they relied, instead, on statements rather than practice, and on criticism of South Africa.³⁶⁴⁴

Judge van Wyk further argued that there was no proof that other states did not discriminate, that their official statements to the UN were not worth anything, and that in discriminating against its own citizens, South Africa was doing nothing wrong or indeed out of the ordinary. What is striking is that, while certainly he was correct in asserting that many other states practiced discrimination, South Africa was proud to do so, and had made said discrimination a matter of policy.³⁶⁴⁵

On July 16, 1966, the Court eventually ruled in South Africa's favour, dismissing the application of Ethiopia and Liberia on grounds that they had no specific legal right or interest in the performance of the Mandate for South West Africa. It was a triumph for van Wyk and apartheid, especially as Ethiopia and Liberia had attacked South Africa's apartheid policies in the hope that South Africa would be abandoned by the United Kingdom and the United States, and despite the fact that the UN did not endorse South Africa's racist policies, as the government had hoped.³⁶⁴⁶ Judge van Wyk's provocative manner of celebrating the Court's decision offended and angered many Africans. A number of African representatives at the UN decided they would celebrate Dr. Verwoerd's assassination in 1966, partly in response to the unseemly way in which van Wyk and the South African delegation had celebrated the rejection of Ethiopia's and Liberia's claim. Eventually, however, they decided against any kind of public demonstration.³⁶⁴⁷

The Tsafendas case was held in 1966, by which stage van Wyk had more than demonstrated his ability to support the National Party, and invariably come up with the judgment that it wanted. Beyers and van Wyk were appointed to oversee the case in a move that Professor Dugard interprets as the government taking care to ensure that the outcome would be in its favour: “I suspect that the government was very careful when it came to appointing judges to hear the Tsafendas case, and so that would explain why both Beyers and van Wyk were involved. They were certainly political persons and they owed their appointments to the government.”³⁶⁴⁸

³⁶⁴⁴ Higgins, “The United Nations and Lawmaking: The Political Organs”, p. 47.

³⁶⁴⁵ UN General Assembly, res n° 2154 (XXI), 17 November 1966. Available at <http://www.un.org/documents/ga/res/21/ares21.htm>

³⁶⁴⁶ Wiechers, “South West Africa: The Decision of 16 July 1966 and its Aftermath”, p. 408-428.

³⁶⁴⁷ PIDE's News Digest; Le Courrier d'Afrique, ‘A Eleicao do Sucessor’, 9 September 1966: 2. SR.

PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³⁶⁴⁸ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

The Tsafendas case resolved to the government's satisfaction, van Wyk continued to pass judgements that suited the State. For example, in 1970 he ordered a member of the opposition not to reveal the contents of a statement that had been banned from publication on the grounds that it contravened South Africa's Official Secrets Act and could "prejudice State security."³⁶⁴⁹ Together with two other judges, in 1974 van Wyk also presided over a case taken against the prominent anti-apartheid writer André Brink, who had written a book that "offended" apartheid sensibilities. The court found the book, which was published in Afrikaans in 1973, objectionable on a number of grounds, with van Wyk stating that it was "undesirable" on "moral, political and religious" grounds. Brink's book, Kennis van die Aand, which told the story of a Coloured actor who is in prison awaiting execution for the murder of his White lover, explicitly discussed sexual relations between people of diverse racial backgrounds in a contemporary (late 1960s/early 1970s) setting, was critical of the behaviour of South Africa's security police, mentioned real-life incidents that had resulted from apartheid such as the Sharpeville Massacre, and described White South Africans as being cruel to Blacks.³⁶⁵⁰

Van Wyk, who had stated in Die Transvaler that the book contravened South African law because it ridiculed the white section of the population,³⁶⁵¹ determined that the state had a clear interventionist role to play in keeping South African literature within the parameters that the racist state considered acceptable, arguing that the "likely readership" of the book was composed of people who were vulnerable to corruption by it.³⁶⁵² Whereas the other judges assessing the book were also in favour of banning it, van Wyk's view that it should be banned on all three of the criteria listed above was, in fact, a minority opinion. He stated that, although the book was fictional, it was written in such a realistic way that readers were likely to assume that it was based on fact.³⁶⁵³ André Brink characterised van Wyk as an "arch-conservative, narrow-minded rightist with a number of axes to grind with liberals."³⁶⁵⁴

In August 1973, van Wyk rose to the position of Judge President, replacing the newly retired Judge Beyers, and held this position until 11 November 1975. He died from cancer

³⁶⁴⁹ South China Morning Post, 'Ordered Not to Disclose Statement', 25 February 1970: 20.

³⁶⁵⁰ Margaret De Lange, The Muzzled Muse: Literature and Censorship in South Africa, (Amsterdam/Philadelphia: John Benjamins Publishing Company, 1997), p. 46; Laros, "Literary Autonomy on Trial: The 1974 Cape Town Trial of Andre Brink's Kennis van die Aand", p. 283-304.

³⁶⁵¹ De Lange, The Muzzled Muse: Literature and Censorship in South Africa, p. 48.

³⁶⁵² Laros, "Literary Autonomy on Trial: The 1974 Cape Town Trial of Andre Brink's Kennis van die Aand", p. 289.

³⁶⁵³ De Lange, The Muzzled Muse: Literature and Censorship in South Africa, p. 48-49.

³⁶⁵⁴ André Brink, A Fork in the Road. A Memoir, (London: Harvill Secker, 2009), p. 224.

five days later.³⁶⁵⁵ Of van Wyk, Dennis Davis, a High Court Judge in South Africa, and Michelle le Roux, an advocate of the High Court of South Africa, wrote: “Whereas Beyers was a man of pronounced personality and sometimes humanity, van Wyk possessed none of the latter. He did have a formidable intellect which was evenly matched by a parsimonious and mean-spirited view of the world, a true apartheid ideologue. Unlike Beyers he never showed an inch of compassion when confronted by the inhumane consequences of apartheid.”³⁶⁵⁶

³⁶⁵⁵ Friedman and Gauntlett, Bar, Bench and Bullshiflers: Cape Tales 1950-1990, p. 28, 77.

³⁶⁵⁶ Davis and le Roux, Precedent and Possibility: The (Ab)use of Law in South Africa, p. 18.

THE PURPOSE OF THE COMMISSION OF ENQUIRY

A Government Notice No. 1435, dated 23rd September 1966, set out the Commission's purpose in the following terms: "To enquire into and submit a report on all aspects relating to the death of the late Dr. the Honourable Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd which the said Commission deems to be in the public interest."³⁶⁵⁷ Judge van Wyk stated that the Commission would investigate twenty-eight different aspects of the assassination, including:

- The history of Tsafendas.
- Tsafendas's motives.
- Circumstances surrounding Tsafendas's entry into South Africa.
- Tsafendas's appointment as a messenger in the House of Assembly.
- Security arrangements in the Assembly.³⁶⁵⁸

The scope of the Enquiry was outlined in more detail in the Commission's Report, with the following questions:

1. "What is the history of the person who inflicted the fatal wounds on the late Dr. Verwoerd?
2. What were his motives?
3. Were there any accomplices?
4. Was there any neglect of duty on the part of any person which facilitated the commission of the deed or without which the deed probably would not have been committed?
5. (a) Who is responsible for this person's entry into South Africa?
(b) On what grounds and on what-conditions was he admitted?
(c) What facts were known to the official or officials concerned who authorized his entry?
(d) To whom did they convey any such information?

³⁶⁵⁷ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Annexure A, Government Notice No. 1435, dated 23rd September, 1966.

³⁶⁵⁸ Rand Daily Mail, 'Murder of Dr. V-Probe Widens', 13 October 1966.

- (e) Was there any neglect of duty in this connection?
- 5bis.
- (a) Who granted permission for temporary sojourn in this country?
 - (b) What was known to the officials concerned?
 - (c) What investigations were made?
 - (d) What investigations should have been made?
 - (e) Was there any neglect of duty in this regard?
- 5ter.
- (a) Did any Department or official at any time receive any knowledge which would have made withdrawal of permission for permanent residence desirable?
 - (b) To whom was such knowledge conveyed?
 - (c) What steps were taken as a result?
 - (d) Was there any negligence in this regard?
- 6.
- (a) What knowledge of the aforesaid individual did the Police or any other body or person have at any time prior to the attack?
 - (b) What should that knowledge have been?
 - (c) What was the duty of the Police or such body or person in respect of such knowledge?
 - (d) Was there any breach of duty on the part of the Police or any person or body in this connection?
- 7.
- (a) Who appointed this person as a messenger in the Houses of Parliament?
 - (b) By whom should this appointment have been made?
 - (c) What enquiry was made before the appointment took place?
 - (d) What enquiry should have been made?
 - (e) Whose duty was it to make such enquiry?
 - (f) Was there any breach of duty in this respect?
- 8.
- (a) Who was responsible for the safety of the Prime Minister in the Houses of Parliament?
 - (b) Who was responsible for the safety of the Prime Minister in the Chamber of - the Assembly?

- (c) Whose duty was it to make the necessary arrangements to ensure that unauthorized persons did not enter the Chamber of the Assembly?
 - (d) What arrangements were actually made?
 - (e) Were these arrangements adequate?
 - (f) Was there any breach of duty in this connection?
9. (a) Which person or persons were actually entrusted on this 6th September, 1966, with the duty of ensuring that unauthorized persons did not enter the Chamber of the Assembly?
- (b) What steps did such person in fact take to prevent the entry of the person concerned?
 - (c) What steps should he have taken in these circumstances?
 - (d) Was there any breach of duty in this respect?³⁶⁵⁹

THE WORK OF THE COMMISSION

The timeline of the various judicial proceedings following the assassination is as follows: September 26, 1966, the Commission begins preparatory work in Cape Town; October 17-20, 1966, Tsafendas's summary trial takes place at the Cape High Court; end November, 1966, the Commission concludes its work. Thus the Commission at times was interviewing witnesses who had already spoken to the police and in some cases had given evidence at the trial. In order to comply with its terms of reference, the Commission trawled far and wide for information about Demitrio Tsafendas.³⁶⁶⁰

A questionnaire was drawn up and given extensive publicity on Press and radio, and any individual with relevant information was requested to advise the authorities. Government departments, foreign embassies, banks and business houses were advised of the Enquiry's needs. As a result, the Commission received a large number of affidavits and numerous letters, as well as the statements made to the police by Tsafendas and by people who knew him, while all government departments declared their files open for inspection. One hundred and five persons, including Tsafendas, gave oral evidence before the Commission.³⁶⁶¹

³⁶⁵⁹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Annexure B.

³⁶⁶⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter I, Paragraph 4.

EVIDENCE GIVEN IN SECRET

On September 22, four days before the Commission began its work, Vorster announced that evidence would be presented behind closed doors because the case was too serious for all the evidence to be heard in public.³⁶⁶² He declared that the integrity of Judge van Wyk was sufficient guarantee that the people of South Africa would hear the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth.³⁶⁶³

On October 10, Judge van Wyk stated that it was his initiative that evidence be given in secret. Although he repeated Vorster's reasoning for the decision, he also offered a more credible sounding explanation. He said, "South Africa, more than other countries, has to see that nothing is done to prejudice the course of justice. It is not desirable that an inquiry of this kind should take place in public while criminal proceedings are pending. I did not think it is desirable to wait until after the completion of any criminal proceedings before starting this inquiry. A lot of evidence may be stale by then. As a great deal of the Enquiry relates to security matters, I do not think it would be wise for these matters to be heard in public."³⁶⁶⁴ This meant that the public would not hear what people said about Tsafendas, which was most convenient for Vorster and van den Bergh since by this time, as we have seen earlier, the police had heard from witnesses and discovered from other evidence that Tsafendas:

- was a passionate and committed Communist,
- while in Mozambique, he was "suspected of dedicating himself to communistic activities."
- a former dues-paying member of the South African Communist Party,
- had fought with Communists in the Greek Civil War,
- was a strong supporter of the independence of Mozambique and was arrested several times for his anti-colonial actions in Mozambique,
- was anti-apartheid, had joined the British anti-apartheid movement and had participated ³⁶⁶¹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter I, Paragraph 4.

³⁶⁶² Rand Daily Mail, 'Killing Inquiry To Be Secret', 22 September 1966.

³⁶⁶³ Rand Daily Mail, 'Killing Inquiry To Be Secret', 22 September 1966; The Canberra Times, 'South Africa: Assassination Inquiry', 23 September 1966: 5.

³⁶⁶⁴ Sunday Tribune, 'Dr. Verwoerd Inquiry: Judge Explains', 9 October 1966: 3.

in anti-apartheid demonstrations in London. While in London, he had met such leading anti-apartheid activists as the Canon John Collins and Solly Sachs.

- considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant, a dictator and “Hitler’s best student.”
- was a political animal and “a fanatic on politics” who “seldom spoke of anything else”
- had described the “United Party and National Party officials and members as capitalistic roughs.”
- was reported more than a year before the assassination by two different men as a dangerous Communist,
- had been characterised by another party as the “biggest Communist in the Republic of South Africa.”
- had engaged in distributing Communist propaganda both in South Africa and in Mozambique and was deported from Mozambique due to his Communist and anti-colonialist beliefs and activities.

More importantly, the key witness was Tsafendas himself, who would testify not once, but twice. Tsafendas had already told the police that he was anti-apartheid, anti-colonialist, anti-slavery and in sympathy with the people fighting racialism, that he was a former member of the South African Communist Party, that he considered Dr. Verwoerd not to be the real representative of all South Africans, that he wanted to see a government representing all the South African people, and most importantly that he was disgusted with Dr. Verwoerd’s racial policies and had killed him in the hope that a change of policy would take place after his death. Tsafendas was not going to have the chance to say all these things at his summary trial, so clearly the state could not permit him to repeat them in front of the Press and public at the Enquiry, when he was supposedly mad and killed Dr. Verwoerd because of a tapeworm.

Vorster would have been aware of all this information about Tsafendas since his closest associate, General van den Bergh, was in charge of the investigation. Vorster had already made a blunder when he declared just two weeks earlier that the police had no file on Tsafendas. As it turned out and was confirmed by the Commission, the police had four files on Tsafendas, one with his name on the Government’s Stop List. Both men would have been desperate to conceal two elements in particular from Tsafendas’s statements: first, the embarrassing revelation that he penetrated the security system for which they were responsible, and secondly that he was a Communist and anti-apartheid who demonstrated the existence of a dangerous opposition to the apartheid system. It would be much better for them and for apartheid if the assassin was a deluded lunatic rather than a political activist, particularly a Communist.

In addition, since the police investigation was still ongoing, Vorster and van den Bergh were not to know what else might be discovered and they could not leave this to chance. Better to control the information, releasing only what was convenient for them. As it turned out, the blocking of information proved crucial for Vorster and van den Bergh since new revelations from Tsafendas added to the picture of an intelligent political activist. They will discover that while in London he had associated with prominent anti-apartheid activists such as Canon John Collins, David Gardener, Solly Sachs and the ANC representative there, Tennyson Xola Makiwane.³⁶⁶⁵

More importantly, that just three days before the killing, Tsafendas had discussed with friends a hypothetical assassination of Dr. Verwoerd as being morally justifiable because he was a tyrant and a dictator who oppressed his people. The ANC contact and the assassination conversation were omitted from the Commission's Report and did not become known then or even later. Whatever evidence was given behind closed doors to the Commission was entirely beneficial to Vorster and van den Bergh.

THE PRESS

On September 24, 1966, Judge van Wyk ordered all of South Africa's newspapers to submit to the Commission all of their "files of reports published on the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, as well as the names of the writers and sources of information."³⁶⁶⁶ Newspapers duly obliged, sending to the Commission everything they had published about Tsafendas and the assassination, including the names of article writers and their sources. Several news articles, plus documents listing requested names, were found at the NASA.

³⁶⁶⁵ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁶⁶⁶ Rand Daily Mail, 'Questions on Dr. V's Death', 24 September 1966; The Cape Times, 'Press Ordered to Disclose Facts', 24 September 1966: 1.

That the Commission had knowledge of all that was carried by the written Press is very important because van Wyk's Report omitted several important and accurate news reports, most importantly statements by people who knew Tsafendas but also references to his political activities. This issue will be discussed in detail later in this chapter.

THE REST OF THE COMMISSION'S WORK

The Commission sent questionnaires and letters to all government departments and parastatals, requesting details of any dealings they may have had with Tsafendas. Completed questionnaires and related documents started arriving at the Commission after September 27. On October 9, van Wyk said he was pleased with the responses.³⁶⁶⁷ The Commission received copies of evidence collected by the South African police, the PIDE and the British police, as well as witnesses' statements. It was given secret communications between South Africa's embassies and foreign governments, information from different government departments, reports by officials and embassies of foreign governments, and the documented judicial process, plus all records relating to Tsafendas's movements in foreign countries, including his various hospitalisations. Overall, the Commission conducted what was effectively a detailed forensic audit of the movements of files and folders between different government departments and officials.

MISSING EVIDENCE

According to the Commission's Report, "One hundred and five persons, including Tsafendas himself, gave oral evidence before the Commission."³⁶⁶⁸ However, only forty-one of these statements were found in the archives. According to the Commission's interview schedule and its Report, Tsafendas gave evidence twice, on October 25 and on November 11. Neither of these statements was found in the archives and nor were the Dictaphone recordings which were supposed to accompany them. The system was that the words on a Dictaphone recording would also be set down in written form. It was discovered that whenever a written statement was missing, the Dictaphone version was missing, too, thus setting aside that statements went missing through carelessness or mishandling.

³⁶⁶⁷ Sunday Tribune, 'Dr. Verwoerd Inquiry: Judge Explains', 9 October 1966: 3.

³⁶⁶⁸ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter I, Paragraph 4.

Tsafendas's two statements to the Commission are not his only ones missing from the archives. As we saw in the Investigation chapter, his first statement to General van den Bergh is also missing. The content of the two statements to the Commission remains entirely unknown, although, as we will see, the Commission makes references to the way Tsafendas answered questions. However the references are extremely vague and no extracts are used.

The issue of missing evidence was also a factor in the police investigation, as we discussed earlier in Chapter 4, and it is indisputable that several statements disappeared at some point from the archives, for example, Patrick O'Ryan's statement to the police. During his cross-examination at the summary trial, the Attorney-General read substantial parts of the statement he gave to the police on September 17.³⁶⁶⁹

The interview schedule of the Commission was found at the archives. However, it is inaccurate as to the dates of when some of the interviews took place. For example, according to the schedule, Father Probst was down to give evidence on 19th October, but actually, according to the date on his statement, he testified on the 13th October. Gordon Winter was scheduled for 14th October, but the transcript of his testimony has gone missing from the archives. Two sworn written statements by him were found, dated 6th and 12th October; however, the first page of the second statement is also missing. In addition, some witnesses who were not listed in the schedule gave evidence to the Commission, such as N.D. Hartford of the Cape Argus. It is clear from the Commission's Report that Hartford gave evidence at some point after Tsafendas's summary trial, but his name was not on the schedule.³⁶⁷⁰ His statement was also not found in the archives.

Another example is Mogamat Isaacs, who gave evidence to the Commission on 21st October³⁶⁷¹ but is not listed on the schedule. It is clear that the interview schedule cannot be considered as a reliable source for the dates when the interviews took place, nor as a record of unlisted witnesses who also gave evidence. The issue of the missing statements and other evidence will be discussed in detail later in this chapter.

³⁶⁶⁹ Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³⁶⁷⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 75.

³⁶⁷¹ Mogamat Isaacs statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12. File: die Post aangeleentheid, NASA.

THE COMMISSION'S HEARINGS

INTRODUCTION

The Commission began hearings behind closed doors on 5th October, 1966 in the Thomas Boydell Building in Cape Town,³⁶⁷² with Judge van Wyk setting out a proposed schedule. He said, "We hope to hear all evidence, with the exception of evidence from witnesses who may be called to give evidence at the summary trial of Tsafendas, by the end of the month. After the trial has ended, the Commission may call witnesses who gave evidence at the trial."³⁶⁷³ Eventually, at least one of these witnesses, Patrick O'Ryan, would give evidence to the Commission presumably after the end of the trial, as there is no date on his statement. We will start the examination of these testimonies with the most important of them, that of Tsafendas's family. The various members gave evidence on October 21, 1966, just one day after Judge Beyers had delivered his verdict at Tsafendas's summary trial. Most of the family were interviewed together. This is their testimony:

REPORT REGARDING VISIT TO FAMILY MEMBERS OF DEMITRIO TSAFENDAS, PRETORIA, 21 OCTOBER 1966³⁶⁷⁴

Nicolas Vlachopoulos

This person is married to a half-sister of Tsafendas and is the owner of Proclamation Hill Café, 600 Church Street West, Pretoria. Mr Vlachopoulos says that he had seen Tsafendas about two years ago. Whilst in Pretoria Tsafendas worked at Poole's and City Engineering. He stayed in about 20 places. Tsafendas never made any friends. A Bible and two medical books – one about stomach ulcers – belonging to Tsafendas was in Vlachopoulos' possession and these he had handed over to Lt. Strumpher of the SA Police.

According to Vlachopoulos, Tsafendas had visited him at the Café. He was always bankrupt because he always used all his money to buy food. He habitually ate a huge amount of food but never mentioned a tape worm. They never actually conversed with each other and they never discussed politics. Tsafendas often disappeared for two or three days and then returned to the café where he would sit and read a newspaper for an hour or two, after which he would disappear again. He always had a Bible in his pocket.

³⁶⁷² Rand Daily Mail, 'Assassination Probe Begins', 5 October 1966: 1.

³⁶⁷³ Rand Daily Mail, 'Murder of Dr. V-Probe Widens', 13 October 1966.

³⁶⁷⁴ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

The wife of Vlachopoulos also saw Tsafendas for the first time in Pretoria. She had never seen him before. The members of the so-called "Christians" sometimes fetched Tsafendas to attend their services. He sometimes went to Johannesburg for two or three days to do so. Tsafendas never went to the cinema. He claimed that he was religious and that it was forbidden by his religion.

Victor Tsafandakis

This person worked as a draughtsman at Iscor Steel Works in Pretoria. He was Tsafendas's half-brother. According to him, Tsafendas had lived in Johannesburg about 23 years ago. During 1963 his half-brother encountered him in Lourenço Marques when he went there with a cousin to discuss affairs with the step-mother. Victor went there to fetch his mother and took Tsafendas back (to Pretoria) at the same time. Tsafendas worked in Pretoria for about six months and then disappeared again.

When he arrived in Pretoria he stayed with Victor for about two days, but he did not want him there any longer as he was a "disturbing personality." Tsafendas would rise at five in the morning and then move around. Tsafendas never complained about anything. However he seemed to have problems with his stomach and that must have been because he always ate too much. He never mentioned a tapeworm. Tsafendas always walked around with a Bible in his hand.

Victor Tsafandakis said that on occasion he said to Tsafendas that South Africa was a wonderful country. Tsafendas agreed and said it was progressive. As far as Victor could recall, Tsafendas never commented when Victor said that integration was not a good thing. He was vague and could easily be contentious. Victor could not recall that Tsafendas ever complained about the government. However, he did complain that he had to work for too little money. It was obvious that Tsafendas worshipped his father. He also said that even if he was handed R1.000, he would spend it all on food. According to Victor, Tsafendas was looking for too much but had too little to give. He described him as "shrewd" and "peculiar."

Marika Tsafandakis (stepmother)

Mrs. Tsafandakis (wife of Victor Tsafandakis)

Mrs. Vlachopoulos

Mrs. Nissiotis

Victor Tsafandakis

These five people were interviewed together.

Tsafendas's stepmother said that Tsafendas could not speak Portuguese when he arrived in Lourenço Marques from Egypt as a six-year-old, and could speak only Greek. He was sent to a Portuguese school once he had learned the language. She had no knowledge of an Anglican Mission School in Lourenço Marques.

Tsafendas was favoured over the other children and sent to Middelburg because Portuguese children could only receive a proper education either there or in Swaziland. After he returned from Middelburg, he was again sent to a Portuguese school. He started working in a restaurant in 1933 or thereabouts. She remembered that he attended boxing lessons at night. Between the ages of 15 to 17 he worked in Lourenço Marques. Thereafter he worked for a British aircraft company. His stepmother had heard from someone else that he had developed appendicitis and was hospitalised during that period. Mrs Tsafandakis later went to South Africa for her children's schooling. She had heard that Demitrio had worked at a café, but that he only worked intermittently and that he had been sent back to Lourenço Marques around 1937 or 1938 after the Police had been summoned as he had been accused of being a Communist.

Tsafendas returned to South Africa in 1939 at which time he worked for British Mining Supplies. From around 1940 until 1963 none of the family saw anything of him. Tsafendas only wrote to them when he needed money. In 1963 someone phoned Mrs Tsafandakis from Lourenço Marques to tell her that Demitrio had asked her to intervene in bringing him back to his family. She had felt it to be her duty to do so as his father had died. After his stepmother had fetched him he had stayed with his family for a while and then hired a room. He refused to commit himself to any work. The family were of the opinion that he had returned because he thought that his father may have left a legacy. He searched all the cupboards for anything that belonged to his father. He remained in Pretoria for about 6 months, after which the family lost all contact with him.

Tsafendas never talked to the family about his tapeworm. According to them, he was definitely not insane. He always had proper accommodation in Pretoria. According to his stepmother, Tsafendas only learned that he had coloured origins when he looked for work at the aircraft factory. He had grown up as one of her children. He was depressed after he had learned about this, but never said anything about it. The stepmother vehemently denied that she had arranged for him to be raped as he had claimed. Her brother had only arrived from Egypt in 1928. Mr Victor Tsafandakis thanked the Government and the police on behalf of his family for the way they had treated them.

COMMENTS ON VLACHOPOULOS'S TESTIMONY

According to Fotini Gavasiadis, Vlachopoulos's sister, who spent every day for nine months with him in Pretoria in 1963-1964, and to Mary Eintracht, Tsafendas's cousin who grew up with him in Egypt and Mozambique and was also in Pretoria in 1963-1964, Tsafendas always wanted to discuss politics, but the family were reluctant because they were afraid of the apartheid system. Tsafendas constantly criticised apartheid and everyone in the family kept telling him to "keep your mouth shut."³⁶⁷⁵

Furthermore, according to both women, Vlachopoulos had a very good relationship with Tsafendas and was closer to him than any of his other in-laws. He went along with Marika and Victor to Lourenço Marques from Pretoria, keen to meet Tsafendas, of whom he had heard so much from his wife. He assumed he could not meet him in South Africa since he was a banned person. In Mozambique, it was Vlachopoulos who begged and convinced J.J. van den Berg, the responsible officer at the South African consulate, to ignore the fact that Tsafendas was on his government's Stop List. Upon their return to Pretoria, Vlachopoulos gave Tsafendas a rent-free apartment and offered him work in his café. Finally, Vlachopoulos even travelled to Cape Town to attend the summary trial as he wanted Tsafendas to know that he was there; an act of morale support towards him.³⁶⁷⁶

According to Gavasiadis and Eintracht, Vlachopoulos often discussed politics with Tsafendas, as he sympathized with his radical ideas, but he never discussed such things in public and he continually urged him to following the same course.³⁶⁷⁷ Gavasiadis was aware that her brother told the police that they never discussed politics. “He lied,” she said and added:

³⁶⁷⁵ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

³⁶⁷⁶ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

“Everyone in the family did the same. They were all very afraid to admit that he was a Communist and against apartheid. Everyone knew Dimitri’s political ideas ... after the assassination, Nick and the others in the family tried to distance themselves as much as possible from Dimitri. They just couldn’t admit that Dimitri was a Communist and against apartheid. They all said we knew nothing about it. They were terrified, absolutely terrified. They did not know what would happen to them. My brother had helped him come to South Africa and was very close to him and he was more afraid than anyone. I have never seen him so scared in his life.”³⁶⁷⁸

Mary Eintracht’s memory is also that Tsafendas’s family was well aware of his political stance and that he often discussed it with them, especially Nick Vlachopoulos. She said:

“Everyone in the family said that they were not very close to him and knew nothing about his political ideas. They all said the same because they could not tell the police they knew he was a Communist and anti-apartheid and they had helped him to come to South Africa. Communists were persecuted at the time and they would have been in serious trouble if it had become known that they had helped someone they knew was a Communist to enter the country.”³⁶⁷⁹

Vlachopoulos stated that Tsafendas had “stayed in about 20 places” while in Pretoria. According to Tsafendas’s half-sister Katerina Pnefma, Gavasiadis and Eintracht this is entirely untrue.³⁶⁸⁰ The rest of the family members would also testify to the Commission, as we will soon see, that Tsafendas “always had proper accommodation in Pretoria.”³⁶⁸¹ Vlachopoulos was well aware of this as he was the one who had given Tsafendas a rent-free apartment. Vlachopoulos farther had previously given this apartment free to Antonis Bizos, ³⁶⁷⁷ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

³⁶⁷⁸ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

³⁶⁷⁹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

³⁶⁸⁰ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁶⁸¹ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

the father of Advocate George Bizos. Nick Vlachopoulos was a good friend of Antonis Bizos and Tsafendas was introduced to Antonis Bizos by him.³⁶⁸²

According to Eintracht and Gavasiadis, Tsafendas did not just visit Vlachopoulos's café shop, but worked there voluntarily for almost nine months, another fact that Vlachopoulos hid from the police. Gavasiadis said "My brother was initially not very keen on having him there because he was told that he would start arguing with customers over politics, but he never argued with anyone as long as he was there." Tsafendas worked voluntarily at the café and he was so good at the job that Vlachopoulos offered him permanent employment with good wages, but Tsafendas refused because he felt obligated since he was given a rent-free apartment. He worked full-time at the café when he was unemployed, and part-time when he was at F.A. Poole Engineering.³⁶⁸³

Gavasiadis said her brother's comment about Tsafendas not making friends was also a lie. She considered herself to have been a very good friend of Tsafendas and spent practically every day for nine months with him. They lived together for a few weeks and then they would often go to each other's apartments since they were in adjoining buildings, while they would often go out in the evenings. She believes that she was Tsafendas's best friend during the nine months he was in Pretoria. However he also had other friends to whom he introduced her. Gavasiadis also said her brother's claim that Tsafendas did not go to the cinema because it was forbidden by his religion was untrue. She could not understand why he said such a thing because he knew it was a lie. She said on the contrary, Tsafendas was a movie fan and went often to the cinema, with her and his half-sister Eleni, Vlachopoulos's wife.³⁶⁸⁴

It is also a lie that his half-sister had seen him for the first time in Pretoria in 1963. Eleni Vlachopoulos was born in 1936 in Lourenço Marques at a time when Tsafendas lived with the family. Furthermore, she was six when Tsafendas left South Africa and from 1939 to 1941, he had also lived with the family in Johannesburg. Tsafendas adored Helen as a baby and when she was older they corresponded regularly. Tsafendas would often send her gifts from overseas along with his letters. Vlachopoulos either lied about seeing him for the first time, or he meant the first time she was an adult.³⁶⁸⁵ Finally, it was Nick Vlachopoulos who ³⁶⁸² Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Michael Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

³⁶⁸³ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

³⁶⁸⁴ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

³⁶⁸⁵ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Michael Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

Tsafendas named as his next of kin when he took up residency in E.R. Carney, Clair Wood.³⁶⁸⁶

COMMENTS ON VICTOR TSAFANDAKIS'S STATEMENT

According to Katerina Pnema, Victor's sister, and Irene and John Michaletos, his cousins, Tsafendas and her brother were exact opposites. Tsafendas's father had talked to Demitrio about politics and history as he was growing up, but he did not do the same with Victor. Tsafendas's mother, Marika, seeing that Tsafendas was becoming rebellious, frequently urged her husband not to bring up Victor the same way. However, Victor and Tsafendas had a good relationship and they wrote regularly to each other when Tsafendas was away.³⁶⁸⁷

Pnema said Victor had volunteered to drive his mother in Lourenço Marques to meet Tsafendas, but he strongly opposed the attempt to bribe J.J. van den Berg and threatened to return to South Africa without them. He was the most fearful of all the family after the assassination because he had brought Tsafendas back to South Africa in his car and he feared the police would find out about what happened with van den Berg. He had even considered leaving South Africa and had a packed suitcase at the ready in case he had to leave suddenly.³⁶⁸⁸

Tsafendas stayed in Victor's house but he left after Victor discovered to his horror that Tsafendas had a large amount of anti-apartheid and Communist literature in his suitcase. According to Gavasiadis, Pnema and Eintracht, Tsafendas left after he was asked to throw them away. The atmosphere in the house was tense over the suitcase, but also because of Tsafendas's practically illegal entry to the country and political outspokenness. Victor's wife did not know about the issue with van den Berg, but she was terrified on account of the literature and Tsafendas's political ideas.³⁶⁸⁹

Pnema, Gavasiadis and Eintracht dispute the claim that Tsafendas told Victor South Africa was a "progressive country." They said Tsafendas held exactly the opposite point of view and that Victor lied. Elizabeth Groves, Tsafendas's landlady in Cape Town in 1966, ³⁶⁸⁶ Casper Andries Willemsse statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁶⁸⁷ Irene and John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁶⁸⁸ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁶⁸⁹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

agreed with the three women. She said Tsafendas had characterised Afrikaners to her as a “backward nation.”³⁶⁹⁰ According to the three women, fear made Victor lie about the things which he claimed Tsafendas said. They said Victor was often present when Tsafendas spoke against apartheid and he always pleaded with him to “not talk like this.”³⁶⁹¹ Eintracht also said that when Tsafendas talked about politics, Victor always asked him to lower his voice.³⁶⁹²

COMMENTS ON THE FAMILY'S COMMON STATEMENT

The most significant part of the above statement is that the family, including Marika, knew nothing of any tapeworm. This is highly important, because during the summary trial, it was stated that Tsafendas had the tapeworm since he was a small boy and that Marika was involved in an incident with it: “... he told me that a while back, when he was a little boy, about six feet of it came down. The doctor gave him something and six feet of it came down. He was sitting on a bucket. And then he fainted on the bucket, and his mother removed it and she destroyed it, and since then nothing has ever come down.”³⁶⁹³

Until the day she died, Marika denied any knowledge of a tapeworm. She confided to close family members that she was certain Tsafendas made it up to escape the death penalty. This was actually what the whole family thought, and they knew Tsafendas very well.³⁶⁹⁴ Furthermore, the family stated clearly that Tsafendas was “definitely not insane” and this is what they all still believe. All the members of the family who knew him well always maintained among themselves that Tsafendas was pretending to be mad so as to escape the death penalty. None of them ever believed that he really thought he had a tapeworm or that he was insane.³⁶⁹⁵ Gavasiadis and Eintracht also confirmed that the family did not disclose their knowledge of Tsafendas's political ideas and tried to distance themselves from him out of ³⁶⁹⁰ Elizabeth Magdalena Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁶⁹¹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁶⁹² Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

³⁶⁹³ Louise O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³⁶⁹⁴ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁶⁹⁵ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

fear. Equally important is that none mentioned knowing that Tsafendas was banned from South Africa.³⁶⁹⁶

According to Katerina Pnema, her mother deliberately did not tell the police about Tsafendas's Communist and anti-apartheid ideology or that he had been a member of the South African Communist Party. She told the author:

“We all said the same thing [that] he never discussed politics with us ... how could she and us have told them that he was a Communist? That he was anti-apartheid? That he was anti-colonialist? That he called Dr. Verwoerd ‘bastard,’ and ‘Hitler’s student’ and ‘dictator? That he had been getting us into trouble because of politics since he was child? They [the police] would have said ‘Why did you bring him here then [to South Africa]? Why didn’t you report him to the police?’ They might have even thought that we had the same ideas as him.

Remember, these were very difficult times for anyone who was even suspected of being a Communist and anti-apartheid. The Communist Party was illegal at the time in South Africa ... my mother had not only known that he was a political animal, but she had helped him to come to South Africa. Can you imagine what would have happened to her and to us if they knew that we knew that he was Communist and anti-apartheid and we helped him to come to South Africa? My poor mother was so terrified that they might find out they had bribed this guy in the embassy in Lourenço Marques and that they would all go to jail. None of us told the police that he [Tsafendas] was a Communist and anti-apartheid. How could we have said such things then? They might have deported us all or even worse ... who knows what they could have done to us if they had found out that we knew. Even so, it took another twelve years before our application to reside permanently in South Africa was accepted. We had to hire lawyers and appeal several times. We spent a fortune ...”³⁶⁹⁷

Marika in her family statement confirms that Tsafendas was treated as an equal member of the family and was even favoured over the other children when he was sent to South Africa for schooling, which is entirely true. This contradicts the picture Dr. Cooper gave of Tsafendas in the summary trial, where he claimed that he did not have a “normal family background.”³⁶⁹⁸ Several witnesses, including Tsafendas himself, confirm Marika's ³⁶⁹⁶ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

³⁶⁹⁷ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁶⁹⁸ Dr. Harold Cooper's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

statement that Tsafendas was “brought up as one of her children.”³⁶⁹⁹ The fact that she travelled to Lourenço Marques to meet him is alone sufficient to render the picture developed at the summary trial and would also be developed by the Commission as a travesty.

Marika states that Tsafendas learned about her not being his biological mother when he worked at the aircraft factory. This was in 1935, when Tsafendas was aged seventeen, not a child as implied at the summary trial. His reaction, one of depression then silence, would fit the reaction of an adult to such news. Marika's account about how he found out is compatible with what Tsafendas told some witnesses.

Tsafendas claimed in one of his police statements that his step-mother asked her brother to rape him when he was nine.³⁷⁰⁰ In 1946, in Grafton State Hospital in the United States, he spoke extensively about his sexual life and past sexual “traumas,” all of which he invented, but he did not mention the alleged rape.³⁷⁰¹ Tsafendas brought the rape story up with Dr. Cooper when he examined him for the defence at the summary trial. The author is not in position to know if such a rape occurred. What is almost impossible to believe is that his step-mother asked her brother to do such a thing and that Tsafendas really believed it happened. He spoke negatively about his relationship with his step-mother to various psychiatrists, but never to anyone else. On the contrary, he often described how loving she was and how she treated him as her own child.³⁷⁰² Tsafendas never spoke about the alleged childhood rape to anyone else but given the seriousness of such a claim and perhaps the embarrassment attaching to it, it was probably natural that he did not do so, always assuming it really happened.

Later in life, Tsafendas said two claims were necessary to make an “insane act” look real and convince someone you are mad:

- a. To have a family history of insanity and
- b. To have a childhood trauma.³⁷⁰³

³⁶⁹⁹ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Costas Michaeletos statement to the police, 10 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁷⁰⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁷⁰¹ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

³⁷⁰² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

³⁷⁰³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

The above would explain why Tsafendas said negative things about his step-mother to the psychiatrists, but not to anyone else. It is very possible that Tsafendas made the rape claim to the police because he knew he might need to pretend madness to avoid torture or worse as a consequence of killing Dr. Verwoerd. If a mad act became necessary, having a childhood trauma in his past would add authenticity. The fact that he had talked about sexual traumas at the Grafton State Hospital back in 1946 would further strengthen his claim. However, the author has not been able to establish for a fact why Tsafendas made a claim of rape or whether such an incident ever occurred.

The family also testified that Tsafendas “only wrote to them when he needed money.” However, according to Katerina Pnema, this is not true. She told the author that as far as she could remember, Tsafendas never asked for any money. On the contrary, his father, who was concerned for Demetri’s welfare abroad, regularly asked in letters if he needed money or any other help. Pnema believes that the family made the money reference to highlight the fact that Tsafendas was overseas writing letters and thus did not have a close relationship with them. Pnema said Tsafendas regularly corresponded with her father and her sister Eleni and he often sent presents for everyone in the family, including his step-mother.³⁷⁰⁴ Some of these gifts are still in the family’s possession. Mary Eintracht, also strongly denies that Tsafendas wrote to the family asking for money and confirms that he often sent presents along with his letters from overseas.³⁷⁰⁵

According to the family, Tsafendas “refused to commit himself to any work.” This is entirely untrue. Tsafendas worked over the Christmas-New Year period, December 9, 1963 to February 3, 1964, for City Engineering and Carron Limited,³⁷⁰⁶ and from February 7, 1964, to July 10, 1964 for F.A. Poole Engineering.³⁷⁰⁷ In addition, throughout this period, in his spare time, he worked voluntarily at Nicolas Vlachopoulos’s café.³⁷⁰⁸

On the question of Tsafendas’s return to South Africa, the opinion of some family members was that he had done so because he believed his father would have left him a legacy. They testified that he “searched all the cupboards for anything that belonged to his father.” Marika Tsafantakis gave quite a different reason for her stepson’s repatriation when ³⁷⁰⁴ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁷⁰⁵ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

³⁷⁰⁶ Report by D.G. Gallard of City Engineering and Carron Limited regarding Demitrio Tsafendas to the Commission of Enquiry, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 3. NASA.

³⁷⁰⁷ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁷⁰⁸ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

she was questioned by the police on September 7. She then said: "When he returned [to Mozambique] during 1963 he told me that he wanted to settle down and he wanted me to help him. I then caused him to come to South Africa and he subsequently got permanent residence in the Republic."³⁷⁰⁹ According to family members who were interviewed by the author, namely Katerina Pnema (half-sister), Fotini Gavasiadis (sister-in-law), Mary Eintracht (first cousin) and John and Antony Michaletos (first cousins), what Marika told the police on September 7 was the truth, that Tsafendas returned because he wanted to settle down, not because he thought his father had left him a legacy. He knew his father was not a wealthy man and he could not have expected to receive anything substantial.³⁷¹⁰

Tsafendas did ask if his father had left him anything and did indeed search the cupboards for anything that belonged to his father. However, according to all these family members, he was not looking for money or valuables but for personal belongings of his father. He worshipped Michalis and wanted to keep items, such as hats and books that he had sent to him from Europe. Michalis Tsafantakis had an extensive collection of anarchist and revolutionary literature and Tsafendas wanted to take it, not for sale, but to ensure its safekeeping. He knew how much the books meant to his father and he was well aware of how they had been a constant source of friction with Marika, who did not share his political ideas. Marika had already destroyed most of Michalis's literary hoard because she did not want her grandchildren to find it, but also because she saw no value in such books. Tsafendas searched diligently for any volumes she may have missed and kept safely whatever he found. Before he left South Africa for Rhodesia in 1964, he gave all the literature to Nick Vlachopoulos for safekeeping, telling him to "look after it like it is his own eyes."³⁷¹¹

³⁷⁰⁹ Marika Tsafantakis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁷¹⁰ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁷¹¹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

SYDNEY WILLIAM WIEHAND³⁷¹²

INTRODUCTION

The following is significant testimony because Sydney Wiehand was one of the messengers who interviewed Tsafendas for employment at Parliament. He described in detail how Tsafendas was appointed. Questioned by Mr. Terblanche and Judge van Wyk, Wiehand stated that he was a senior, permanent messenger and had worked in Parliament for eight years. He said his work consisted of supervising, looking after stores and handling complaints. If he received a complaint, he would take it to his superior, the chief messenger, Mr Burger, who would act on it. Wiehand said he made the rounds of Parliament once a day to ensure that everything was in order.

SYDNEY WIEHAND'S TESTIMONY

Evidence adduced on 5.10.1966

TERBLANCHE: Now, when people are appointed as messengers, or temporary messengers, have you anything to do with it?

WIEHAND: Yes well, we are called in, Sir, the three of us, to see what takes place.

TERBLANCHE: Now, who are "we"?

WIEHAND: We are also given a chance to question these people...

TERBLANCHE: Who are the "three"? You said the "three"?

WIEHAND: The three is Mr, Burger, the Chief Messenger, and the - well, I shouldn't say the "second in charge" but the third in charge is Mr. Schuin, and then myself.

TERBLANCHE: Who?

WIEHAND: S-c-h-u-i-n. And then myself, Sir. That is, the Chief Messenger and his three assistants.

TERBLANCHE: Now, the Chief Messenger - you've now named two assistants?

WIEHAND: Yes, because the other one is not there. He's sick.

TERBLANCHE: I see, but usually the three of you?

³⁷¹² Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

WIEHAND: Usually it is the three of us, yes.

TERBLANCHE: But when this man Tsafendas was considered, and interviewed, it was only the three of you?

WIEHAND: That's right, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: The Chief Messenger, you yourself and Mr. Schuin.

WIEHAND: Yes.

TERBLANCHE: Why are you, the three assistants, called in by the Chief Messenger?

WIEHAND: That is, if anything happens. Who knows what happens to the Chief - if he's not there one day, that we can take his place. We know exactly what to do. The question is to ask.

TERBLANCHE: Mr. Wiehand, can you remember what questions were put to Tsafendas when he was interviewed?

WIEHAND: Yes, Sir.

VAN WYK: Yes?

WIEHAND: No. I — he must be of sober habits. He must be always neat, and then also we ask him if he's got any sickness, or anything like that, then he must tell us. If so, then he must get a report from the doctor that he is fit for duty. Then we tell him: "The normal hours of working is long, but the work is not hard."

TERBLANCHE: Anything else asked from him?

WIEHAND: Well, then we ask him.

JUDGE VAN WYK: No, but what happened in the case of Tsafendas?

WIEHAND: When he came for an interview, he wasn't taken on straight away.

TERBLANCHE: But were you present when he was interviewed?

WIEHAND: Yes, yes.

TERBLANCHE: Well, what did you ask him then?

WIEHAND: Well, I asked him also about the other places where he had worked -

TERBLANCHE: You asked him where he worked?

WIEHAND: Yes.

TERBLANCHE: And what did he tell you?

WIEHAND: He told me he worked in Durban at some firm there. He worked about eleven months there, or something to that effect.

TERBLANCHE: In Durban?

WIEHAND: In Durban somewhere.

TERBLANCHE: Yes, and what else?

WIEHAND: And he said it was because of a reduction of staff.

TERBLANCHE: Yes?

WIEHAND: Because - of course, then we asked him if he had an unemployment card - Identity Card.

TERBLANCHE: And did he have an unemployment card?

WIEHAND: He had an unemployment card. He had an Identification Certificate, which number -

TERBLANCHE: What is an Identification Certificate?

WIEHAND: Well, it is almost like these papers when you haven't got your Identification Card yet.

TERBLANCHE: I see.

WIEHAND: We took that and compared it with the number on the - his Identity Number on the unemployment card. It corresponded, and then also if he had any references to show to us.

TERBLANCHE: And did he have any references?

WIEHAND: He had some references. There was one —

TERBLANCHE: What were these references?

WIEHAND: They were from different firms -

TERBLANCHE: Pardon?

WIEHAND: From different firms. One or two of them. I just can't remember how many, Sir -

TERBLANCHE: One or two?

WIEHAND: Yes, and then he had one - I think it was from a school — where he went to school, somewhere in Natal or the Transvaal. I can't remember, Sir. There's such a lot that I see.

TERBLANCHE: Mr. Wiehand, are there any notes kept of these interviews?

WIEHAND: Well, no Sir. The only thing on our records that we keep is a sheet that we make cut with his name, his Identification Number, the date he starts to work, the date he ends -

TERBLANCHE: Is this the type of sheet you are referring to? (Sheet of particulars shown to witness).

WIEHAND: That's right. This is one yes, Sir.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Just identify that?

WIEHAND: This is the one I made out.

TERBLANCHE: What is the annexure number?

WIEHAND: Beg your pardon?

TERBLANCHE: Annexure 'D', page 24, Exhibit 'I'? Yes?

WIEHAND: And then speaking to him, Sir, he said to me he speaks twelve languages, six fluently and six broken, but I never asked him what the languages were. I think if you look underneath, on that form, Sir, you'll see I've made a note there.

TERBLANCHE: Yes, there is a note. It didn't occur to you to ask him what languages he could speak?

WIEHAND: No, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: If he had told you he could speak Russian, would that have made you suspicious?

WIEHAND: Well, then I would have asked him, perhaps. I don't know. The man hadn't any - I mean, the appearance that he had wasn't anything like that. But just out of curiosity, I think, I asked him if he spoke languages, or whether he told me - I can't remember that.

TERBLANCHE: Wasn't it slightly strange for a man who could speak so many languages to - ?

WIEHAND: I did. I commented on it, Sir. I said to him: "It is rather strange that you come here to work as a messenger, whereas you can get a better position as a translator somewhere else? He said to me - then he had - he was a translator, or something, in a Durban Court, or something.

TERBLANCHE: Yes? An interpreter?

WIEHAND: An interpreter, yes.

TERBLANCHE: Yes?

WIEHAND: Then I said to him: "What is the good to come and work here? I mean, you can find a better position? He said, well, he can't find any work at the moment, and he must fill his stomach.

TERBLANCHE: Didn't it strike you as strange that a man of his age, and his ability, should be penniless?

WIEHAND: Well, Sir, the thing is - we get so many of them there, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: So many of what?

WIEHAND: These people. I mean, they've got good qualifications. Their ages count against them.

TERBLANCHE: What was that?

WIEHAND: Their ages count against them. I take it from myself, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: Yes?

WIEHAND: When I left my employment, I had to find new employment. I knew I wouldn't be able to -

TERBLANCHE: What are your qualifications?

WIEHAND: My qualification was - I was in charge of a cabinet workshop.

TERBLANCHE: A what?

WIEHAND: A cabinet workshop.

TERBLANCHE: And what are your educational qualifications?

WIEHAND: Well, I went to six, Sir, and then I went to seven, and then I went away and I came back, and I went to the next one higher up, but I don't I ever stayed to pass that -

TERBLANCHE: Yes?

WIEHAND: Well, that was the end of my interview where he was concerned.

TERBLANCHE: Mr. Wiehand, you also had before you, at that time, or didn't you - Annexure "By page 22 of Exhibit "I" Unemployment Insurance?"

WIEHAND: Yes, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: Now, according to that - that is on page 22 - according to that he had been employed by the City of Cape Town, Electrical Department, from the 13th of September, 1965, to the 25th of October, 1965 - a little more than a month, and he'd been employed by "Marine Diamond Corporation" from the 3rd of February, '66, to the 30th of March, 1966. That's for about two months. Didn't that give you a feeling that this man was not, perhaps, a very good worker?

WIEHAND: Well, no Sir. I don't - no, Sir. Not that. We get quite a good few like that.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Who has been from one job to the other?

WIEHAND: Yes, Sir. And they turn out quite good.

TERBLANCHE: You realised that he was going from one job to another?

WIEHAND: Yes.

TERBLANCHE: Did you ask him in what capacity he was employed by these firms?

WIEHAND: No, Sir. The only one about which he actually told me, was the one where he was an interpreter.

TERBLANCHE: At Durban?

WIEHAND: Yes.

TERBLANCHE: And why did he say did he terminate his employment there?

WIEHAND: That I can't remember, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: And did anybody ask him anything about his employment in Cape Town?

WIEHAND: I'm not quite sure, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: Did anybody ask him what his Nationality was?

WIEHAND: Yes, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: Who asked him?

WIEHAND: I also asked him that one, and so did my Chief, and my other colleague.

TERBLANCHE: You all three - ?

WIEHAND: Yea.

TERBLANCHE: Why did you all three ask him?

WIEHAND: Well, I mean – we're all there. I take it for granted we've all got the same idea.

TERBLANCHE: Yes, but did only one put the question?

WIEHAND: Well, one put the question, but I mean we would all like to put the same question. Everybody that was there, and he said he was a naturalised South African.

TERBLANCHE: And did he produce any proof that he was a naturalised South African?

WIEHAND: Well, we took it for granted that it was true, because of his identification.

TERBLANCHE: What was his identification?

WIEHAND: The slip that I've told you about, and when we took it and compared it with his unemployment card number.

TERBLANCHE: Didn't you know that foreigners also have identification cards?

WIEHAND: No, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: Didn't you know that?

WIEHAND: No, Sir. Not the one that he showed me - the one that he said he was waiting for his card to come. He applied for one.

TERBLANCHE: Yes, but didn't you know that foreigners are also issued with identification cards - ?

WIEHAND: For coming into the country, Sir?

TERBLANCHE: No, no. And when they're here they get a "Persoonskaart" Didn't you know that?

WIEHAND: No, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: Are you really qualified then to make these appointments, if you don't even know - ?

WIEHAND: Well, that is why we learn, Sir. We get trained for that.

TERBLANCHE: But how can you be trained, if you're not told that the fact that a person has an identification card is no proof that he is a South African?

WIEHAND: Well, Sir, in one instance we had one young fellow there. He was naturalised. He had his paper. I should say he had a form -

TERBLANCHE: Who was naturalised?

WIEHAND: Well, we had one young fellow there by the name of Barber, but he was a young boy.

TERBLANCHE: What is his name?

WIEHAND: Barber. I took it he should have had the same as that? (Just a minute, Sir. Just let me think). (Witness remains quiet for some seconds).

TERBLANCHE: Why are you taking such a long time? What are you trying to think about?

WIEHAND: No, Sir – the thing is this. He had some papers with him - quite a few. Now that I am thinking about Barber, I think he had a paper similar, to that –

TERBLANCHE: I'll show you another paper here, Mr. Wiehand. Annexure "A," page 21 of Exhibit "I"? Is that the paper you are referring to?

WIEHAND: I think it was something like this, Sir.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, but you see, that is no proof that he is a South African. It merely proves that he's got an identification number.

WIEHAND: Yes well, I mean, the man was employed all over the show. I mean, in Cape Town also.

TERBLANCHE: So why couldn't he be a foreigner and employed in Cape Town?

WIEHAND: It could be, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: Well, so you only had his word that he was a South African?

WIEHAND: He had the things that we asked for. We asked him if he was naturalised - whether he is a naturalised South African, so he said yes. And then we asked for the - TERBLANCHE: Why did you ask him whether he was naturalised? Why couldn't he have been born in South Africa?

WIEHAND: No, Sir. According to him - he said he came from Lourenço Marques.

TERBLANCHE: He said he came from Lourenço Marques.

WIEHAND: Yes, so then I asked him. He said, no, he was born in Lourenço Marques, but he was brought up in the Transvaal.

TERBLANCHE: And you asked him whether he was naturalised and he said yes?

WIEHAND: Yes.

TERBLANCHE: And were any further enquiries made to find out whether he was actually naturalised?

WIEHAND: Not that I know of, Sir. It could be. Then it falls out of my hands -

TERBLANCHE: Mr. Wiehand, the making of appointments is really not your concern. You are only present at the interview, in order to learn?

WIEHAND: That is right, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: Now, do you know that only South Africans - South African citizens - can be appointed as messengers, or temporary messengers? You know that?

WIEHAND: Yes, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: Now, Mr. Wiehand, after his appointment - or rather, did you afterwards discuss this man between the three of you?

WIEHAND: Yes, Sir. Not after his appointment! Before his appointment.

TERBLANCHE: I mean, after the interview?

WIEHAND: Yes, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: After he had gone, you three discussed him at length. What was the nature of this discussion that took place between you?

WIEHAND: Sir, we had to take into consideration the way he spoke, his mannerisms, how he dressed, and we couldn't find anything wrong. I mean, according to what we need there, for doing the work, and so forth, and coming into contact with the Members.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Were you ever required to make any check as to whether there was any security risk attached to a particular individual?

WIEHAND: No, Sir. We never had it before.

TERBLANCHE: You were never asked to make sure whether this man was not a security risk?

WIEHAND: No.

TERBLANCHE: You were never asked?

WIEHAND: No.

TERBLANCHE: And that you never discussed?

WIEHAND: We never discussed that, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: As long as he could do the work that he was employed for, that was all that you were concerned with?

WIEHAND: That's right, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: Afterwards, did you come into contact with him again, whilst he was working there?

WIEHAND: Yes, Sir when I go on the rounds, checking up each point, asking if there were any complaints, I used to come across him and I would ask him how was he doing, and he'd say, no, he was doing fine, and I asked him if he liked that type of work, and he said yes.

TERBLANCHE: And what impression did he make on you during all this time?

WIEHAND: Well, he was a quiet man. He wasn't the rough type, or anything like that. He was quiet - quietly spoken, well-mannered.

TERBLANCHE: Did he ever tell you anything about his previous history?

WIEHAND: No.

TERBLANCHE: Nothing?

WIEHAND: Nothing.

TERBLANCHE: He never told you about places he went to?

WIEHAND: No.

TERBLANCHE: Where he travelled - ?

WIEHAND: No, I never had the opportunity of speaking to him for so long.

TERBLANCHE: He never mentioned this during the interview -?

WIEHAND: Never. Nothing.

TERBLANCHE: So, that all you knew about him, really, was that he was born in Lourenço Marques?

WIEHAND: Yes, well that he told himself.

TERBLANCHE: That he grew up in the Transvaal, and you didn't know that he had ever left the country at all?

WIEHAND: No.

TERBLANCHE: As far as you were concerned, since he came to the Transvaal, when he was young, he had been in the Republic, ever since?

WIEHAND: Yes.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did you not ask him whether he had any previous convictions?

WIEHAND: No.

TERBLANCHE: You didn't ask him what he'd done in all his life? You didn't ask him what he'd done before he was an interpreter, and that sort of thing?

WIEHAND: No, I didn't ask him that.

TERBLANCHE: Nobody else did, either?

WIEHAND: No, Sir. My Chief may have asked him, afterwards.

TERBLANCHE: Did you have a messenger called Carroll - Houses of Parliament, "Carroll"?

WIEHAND: No, Sir. Not as far as I can remember, Sir.

NO FURTHER QUESTIONS

SYDNEY WILLIAM WIEHAND'S SECOND TESTIMONY TO THE COMMISSION³⁷¹³

Evidence adduced on 13.10.1966

Sydney William Wiehand: (Duly Sworn, states): (recalled)³⁷¹⁴

TERBLANCHE: Mr. Wiehand, you have already given evidence in this?

WIEHAND: Yes, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: Now, it is being alleged here in evidence before the Commission, that a certain complaint was made to you in regard to the way in which Tsafendas did his work as temporary messenger. Is that correct?

WIEHAND: No complaint that I can remember, unless the complaint is that - shall I have to say it in Afrikaans?

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes well, do?

WIEHAND: The complaint - well, I didn't treat that as a complaint. I was told that: "the man stuffs himself with food." It was: "stuffs himself with food, sits and sleeps."

TERBLANCHE: That was Mr. Pienaar, I think?

WIEHAND: Yes.

TERBLANCHE: And he asked you to remove him?

WIEHAND: No, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: He didn't ask you to remove him?

WIEHAND: He didn't. My reply was to him when he said that to me, was: "do not worry, I shall make sure that he is on his feet."

TERBLANCHE: Mr. Wiehand, why didn't you consider that as a complaint?

WIEHAND: Well, I mean there is quite a few of them at lunchtime - they have something to ³⁷¹³ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

³⁷¹⁴ This is Venter's second statement to the COE, the first being on October 5.

eat and they sit and sleep, until they are ready.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Where do they sit and sleep?

WIEHAND: Well, where they have there what'sname - meal.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Aren't they on duty then?

WIEHAND: Well, they are actually on duty all the time. There's no off-duty there with us. They have their meals as they can, until such time as when the rush starts, and then they get busy.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And that's quite usual?

WIEHAND: That's quite usual. I myself, Sir, after I have something to eat, and it is not actually time for me to go upstairs, I shut my eyes there, Sir, because I've got to work every night.

TERBLANCHE: But then, what did you mean by saying that you'll see that "he's on his feet"?

WIEHAND: Well, see that he has work, by shifting him to a different position - in between the two positions - then he must work upstairs and he won't get time to sit down,

JUDGE VAN WYK: If he's doing something that is quite usual, and not objectionable, why do you then say you'll do something about it?

WIEHAND: Well, they didn't like it, perhaps, there Sir - or whatever it is. I don't know, but I said that he mustn't worry. I'll see that he gets on his feet, because maybe he is right in the public eye there, because they are right up there on the Gallery.

TERBLANCHE: Now, on the 6th of September, were you on duty in, or close, to the - ?

WIEHAND: The foyer?

TERBLANCHE: Yes?

WIEHAND: I was in the foyer, yes.

TERBLANCHE: You were in the foyer? And what were you doing in the foyer?

WIEHAND: My job is that I must guide the public, and also help the visitors.

TERBLANCHE: Help the visitors to do what?

WIEHAND: That they go in the right direction. That they do not follow their M.P.'s into the Chamber.

TERBLANCHE: So, you had to see that no unauthorised persons went into the Chamber?

WIEHAND: That's right, Sir,

TERBLANCHE: Where were you standing, Mr. Wiehand?

WIEHAND: I was standing at the one pillar near to the passage.

TERBLANCHE: And did you move from there to another?

WIEHAND: No, I stood there all the time. My back was towards the Chamber and my face was towards the big doors.

TERBLANCHE: Weren't you supposed to move up to the one side of the screen at a certain stage?

WIEHAND: I'll move when the bell stops ringing, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: When the bell stops ringing?

WIEHAND: Then before I move from there I'll ask for silence, and then I move to the walk in between the wall and the screen to stop any member from entering the Chamber while the Speaker's procession is coming along.

TERBLANCHE: But before you move there, do you watch the door to the Chamber to see that nobody - no unauthorised person enters?

WIEHAND: Well, now and again I look that way, Sir. If I see strange faces there, you always follow their movements.

TERBLANCHE: Now, I want to put this to you, Mr. Wiehand, if you had seen Tsafendas entering the Chamber at that stage, would you have done anything about it?

WIEHAND: No, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: I take it the reason being the same as the others have testified to, that any messenger can enter the Chamber at that time?

WIEHAND: That is right, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: And no check is kept on the messengers to see that they, are in fact, taking messages to members, etc.?

WIEHAND: No, Sir. Sometimes these messages are given at the last minute.

NO FURTHER QUESTIONS-WITNESS EXCUSED

PIET BESTER BURGER³⁷¹⁵

Questioned by: Mr. Terblanche

Date: 13/10/1966

Mr. Burger is the head messenger at the Assembly. He worked there for almost twenty-three years at the time of the case and accordingly, he interviewed Demitrios Tsafendas for a messenger position at the Assembly. Burger approved Tsafendas for the position and appointed him. There were two colleagues, Piet Schuin and Sydney Wiehand, who were present when Burger conducted the interview. These two colleagues were always present when conducting interviews for the reason being that if they notice something about the person being interviewed, they could bring it to Burger's attention.

The messengers have to not only deliver messages but they must also stand at the entrance of the National Assembly when the First Minister passes by. These messengers stand there to close the door when the Speaker and his procession enter the National Assembly. Burger and his colleagues, an assistant and two seniors, are responsible for stopping any unauthorized person from entering the boardroom where the Assembly is held. Once the Speaker and his procession have entered the boardroom, only certain messengers may be inside the boardroom.

However, before the Speaker and his procession have entered the boardroom, any messengers, even temporary messengers, were able to be inside the room. The press or the private secretary often used temporary messengers to quickly deliver a message inside the boardroom. It was assumed that the messengers always had a message to deliver if they were seen inside the boardroom before the meeting begin, but, as soon as the Speaker and his procession entered the room, Burger ensured that only the allowed messengers are present inside. Thus, concerning the messengers, there was no control over who entered and left the room before the Speaker and his procession.

³⁷¹⁵ Piet Bester Burger testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

Burger stood on the second step to look over the assembly and to see that no one enters the boardroom who was not allowed. Next to Burger stood a temporary messenger, whom Mr. Burger himself called from the reading room. This messenger stopped any members of the Assembly from leaving before the procession. There was a screen where Burger stood to meet the Speaker. Burger and Wiehand were both there on the 6th of September. Burger had not seen Tsafendas on that day.

Dr. Verwoerd was going to speak at the Assembly, so many members stood outside to finish their cigarettes because they knew they were going to be inside for a long time. The door to the room was still open even when the bells rang. The corridor to the room was closed when the Speaker left his office.

AUTHOR'S NOTE: Nothing in the remaining testimony is relevant to Tsafendas or the assassination.

PETRUS ROBERT SAMUEL SCHUIN³⁷¹⁶

Questioned by: Mr. Terblanche

Date: 13/10/1966

Mr. Schuin was a head messenger at the parliament. He had been working there since September, 1953; a total of thirteen years. Schuin only reached standard 6 at school, after which he joined the parliament, working under Mr. Burger. On the 6th of September, Schuin was on duty and declared that by the time he entered the boardroom, Dr. Verwoerd was already seated.

He also declared that he saw Tsafendas as he was coming up to the table of the Assembly. Tsafendas was more or less at the head of the table of the Assembly by the time Schuin saw him. This occurrence, not being anything strange to Schuin, he noticed him and knew that it was his duty to be there if there would be any message to deliver and was expecting that Tsafendas would have a message for him (Schuin). The Parliament was not in sitting, nor has the Speaker and his procession arrived yet. Schuin was on the right-hand side of the speakers' chair and saw what happened.

³⁷¹⁶ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

Mr. Schuin noticed, during Tsafendas's interview, that there was nothing out of the ordinary about him. He noticed that Tsafendas was the same as any other person that had worked there.

MAJOR DANIEL JACOBUS ROSSOUW³⁷¹⁷

Testimony taken 14.10. 1966

Daniel Jacobus Rossouw (Declared under Oath):

Questioned by Mr. Terblanche and Judge van Wyk

TERBLANCHE: Major Rossouw, are you the Chief of the Security Police in Cape Town?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes I am.

TERBLANCHE: Were you also here in the Cape from 1962?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: No, I started here on the 26th of September 1963.

TERBLANCHE: What was your rank at that time?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Captain.

TERBLANCHE: Was a certain Captain Rossouw here before you?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes, a Captain Rossouw was here some years, but I cannot remember exactly which years they were.

TERBLANCHE: Who was that?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Brigadier – he is now Brigadier Rossouw.

TERBLANCHE: And you did not take over from him?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: No.

JUDGE VAN WYK: What is your rank now?

³⁷¹⁷ Major Daniel Jacobus Rossouw testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Major

TERBLANCHE: Do you know someone by the name of Hendrik Mulder?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes

TERBLANCHE: He claims that he spoke to a Captain Rossouw last year.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes I do remember someone by that name calling me last year.

TERBLANCHE: What did he say to you? Why did he call you?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: He called me on two occasions. The first time he wanted to report that he had overheard two Coloured people working in a factory in Paarden Island discussing how to kill the children of the Security Police and even how to kill the Police. On the second occasion he told me that his wife had run away and asked me to help him find her.

TERBLANCHE: Did you investigate the first report Major?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes, and it was found to be groundless.

TERBLANCHE: Did he call you on any other occasion?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: No.

TERBLANCHE: Did he ever tell you that certain people had told him that the Prime Minister would be killed and that he had told you about this?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: I have no knowledge of this whatsoever

TERBLANCHE: He never said this to you?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: No he never said that to me.

TERBLANCHE: Do you know someone called Nagel?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: At the moment he lives in Port Elizabeth – I do not know his rank - No I do not know this person.

TERBLANCHE: Did anyone call you after the death of the Prime Minister and tell you, “Major (or Captain) Mulder told you that this would happen” and that you replied that you do recall something like that?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: No I deny this – I know nothing about this.

TERBLANCHE: I want to move on to something else now - in your investigation did you find certain evidence about certain parcels for Tsafendas at the Post Office?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes, this was brought to my attention during the investigation from the Woodstock Police that a Mrs “Taizer” had handed him a document. A member of the police brought this slip to my office at my request and I then sent a staff member to retrieve the parcel from the Post Office and found that it was not a parcel but a letter – a pamphlet containing Bible texts.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Where is the pamphlet now?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: I gave it to Tsafendas.

TERBLANCHE: Can you recall the origin of the letter?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes, it came from America.

TERBLANCHE: Can you remember who sent it?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: No, but I wrote it down and it is in my office.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Was this handed over to a Code expert to determine whether it contained a code?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: No I examined it myself and am confident that there was no code in at all Your Honour.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes but even though it was a printed document it could still have been in code?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: True, but I found several more of these texts addressed to him and am satisfied that none of them were in code – they were just Bible texts with the quotations from the verses of the Bible

JUDGE VAN WYK: You are aware that the Bible is often used for code purposes, the order of the texts and so on?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes I am perfectly aware of that, but in this case I am certain this is not the case. I deal with these matters frequently and am confident that in this case there were no codes in the pamphlets.

TERBLANCHE: Was the name of the sender perhaps Barandella?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: No. The name Barandella is known to me and it is not Barandella. This was someone in America – I cannot recall it now

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes but there is also a Barandella in America

MAJ. ROSSOUW: No I am not aware of this.

JUDGE VAN WYK: There is a Barandella.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: The Barandella of whom I know is a young Coloured girl.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes she has an uncle in America

MAJ. ROSSOUW: I am not aware of that Your Honour. I will be able to find out the name for you.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes I should like to see those pamphlets which you found

MAJ. ROSSOUW: If Tsafendas still has them. I do not know whether he still has them because we gave them to him shortly after his arrest and I think he has nothing with him in the cell but I shall try to determine whether he still has them.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes it will be better that the Commission should see it.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Certainly I shall do my best to get hold of this but I really do not know that it will be available.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Are you the person who took a declaration from Tsafendas in the prison cell?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes I took a declaration from him.

TERBLANCHE: Did you question him later?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes I did and wrote the questions and the answers.

JUDGE VAN WYK: What language did you use with him?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: English.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And was it read out to him afterwards?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did he admit everything

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes and he was satisfied and signed it.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did you get the impression that what he said was the truth or did you think that sometimes he was sly?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: I thought that he told the truth. I never got the impression that he tried to evade any question. He answered all the questions spontaneously.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Was he totally prepared to answer everything?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes

JUDGE VAN WYK: What was your impression – how does he feel about his deed? Does he regret it, or is he indifferent about it or did he not show any obvious emotion about it?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: I shall answer you to the best of my ability – when I originally questioned him I accused him of being a horrible murderer. To which he answered, “That is what you think, but the world thinks differently!” At a later stage I asked him whether he regretted his deed yet and he answered that he did feel remorse and that he was very sorry about what he had done.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Another thing is that there is a lot of evidence that on the Friday morning BEFORE the murder people had been running back and forth screaming to one another that Dr. Verwoerd had been murdered – are you aware of this?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes I am aware of that.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did you come across anyone who had said that he had been told about the plan by Tsafendas?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: No he denies this strenuously. I have asked him repeatedly whether he had told anyone of his plan to murder the Prime Minister and he had always specifically said that he had never told anyone about this.

JUDGE VAN WYK: All the statements thus far have concurred that he did not drink, but one person stated that sometimes he would drink a whole bottle after which he became very talkative. Are you aware of any of this?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: He always told me that he did not drink at all; although I have come across one or two who said that they had seen him drink beer.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Have the Security Police ever found old Communist member lists dating from the 1940's?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: No I am not aware that such lists have been found. I do know that with the Rivonia trial such lists were found but they were new lists, not the old ones.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Around 1953 when the anti-Communist Act was promulgated, and the Communist Party was banned and even before then, the police did have documents relating to it and I wonder if they still exist and whether it would be possible to find them.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes although I was obviously not attached to the Security Police when the Communist Party was banned, but we do possess old files which should indicate whether there are such name lists of members.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Tsafendas said that he was a member for ten years from 1936 and I should want to obtain those old files.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes I shall investigate whether I can find such old files. But we also compiled files on all the people who were brought to our attention and if any such files contained his name then we would have opened a file on him and we do not have such a file, not locally in the Cape.

JUDGE VAN WYK: No not just in Cape Town – he would not have been a member here – but the liquidator of the Communist Party would have such a complete list of all Communists.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes we do possess those lists and I shall investigate this and bring the information to you.

TERBLANCHE: Is Evidence “T” which is a photocopy, the first statement that you took from him?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes.

TERBLANCHE: Is Evidence “U” the other further questioning that you conducted with him?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes.

Handed in as evidence.

TERBLANCHE: Major there is a memorandum here that you presented in which the name of the person who sent the registered letter to is “Vaughan A. Tomkins”?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes that is the name.

TERBLANCHE: Of “38 Walnut Street, Arlington F.4, Massachusetts, U.S.A.?”

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes.

COMMENTS ON MAJOR ROSSOUW'S TESTIMONY

This is a very important testimony as Major Rossouw was the police officer who questioned

Tsafendas while in custody. Major Rossouw was not a psychiatrist, but he was a senior police officer, with extensive experience of questioning prisoners, and thus a natural choice as Tsafendas's lead interrogator. As such, he must certainly have been able to tell whether Tsafendas could follow a conversation for more than fifteen minutes, whether he talked in a disjointed manner or suffered from thought-blocking. These were the characteristics imputed to Tsafendas in court, in effect that he was someone who could not answer questions or gave vague or irrelevant responses. However, Rossouw made no mention of any such issues in his testimony, saying instead that Tsafendas did not evade any questions and replied spontaneously to everything he was asked, while this was after he interrogated Tsafendas for many hours on several separate occasions.

More to the point, Rossouw got the impression that Tsafendas told the truth. It is important here to look at compatibility. What Tsafendas told Rossouw is compatible with what he told several witnesses before and after the assassination; it is also compatible with the evidence gathered by the police. However, it is not compatible with what was heard in the court about him or the way he was described by the Commission, particularly in regard to his motive for killing Dr. Verwoerd. However, as we will see, although the Commission was in possession of Tsafendas's statements to the police and the testimony of the officer who questioned Tsafendas and recorded those statements, its Report ignored what Tsafendas had to say about his motive. Instead the Commission turned to speculation, presenting a quite inaccurate and obscure picture of what it purported to believe was his motive.

A very important issue discussed by the Commission and Rossouw concerned the reported exchanges about Dr. Verwoerd's death at the Eleni. The Commission asked him,

"Another thing is that there is a lot of evidence that on the Friday morning BEFORE the murder, people had been running back and forth screaming to one another that Dr. Verwoerd had been murdered – are you aware of this?"

It is clear the Commission attached great importance to this incident. Rossouw replied that he knew of the incident but was unable to shed any light on it as Tsafendas denied that he had discussed his plans with anyone and he had no other information. The Major was telling the truth because most of those involved in the conversation were no longer in South Africa but had sailed on the Eleni. The South African police would subsequently question all the Eleni sailors and find out why and how this discussion had taken place that Friday morning. However, their evidence would be omitted from the Report and instead the Commission would speculate fruitlessly about what might have taken place when the sailors had told the police exactly what happened.

Another important aspect of Rossouw's testimony is that he makes no mention of the tapeworm. Indeed, nowhere in his testimony does he say anything to suggest that he thought Tsafendas to be insane, quite the opposite. As for the tapeworm, if Tsafendas believed he had a tapeworm and this had something to do with the assassination, would he not have told Rossouw, who questioned him so many times?

A final issue highlighted by Major Rossouw is that Tsafendas not only failed to show any remorse about the killing, but appeared to be happy and proud of it. When Rossouw accused him of being "a horrible murderer," Tsafendas replied, "That is what you think, but the world thinks differently." This remark clearly reflects Tsafendas's conviction that several people in South Africa and around the world would see his action as he saw it, namely as the justifiable killing of a tyrant.

N.D. HARTFORD³⁷¹⁸

In July, 1966, Tsafendas had a long interview with Mr. Hartford of the Cape Argus. They had already met at the beginning of the year when Tsafendas came to enquire whether there was any news of the so-called freedom fighters of Mozambique. He described himself as a rebel from Mozambique. Mr. Hartford thought that he might be able to provide material for a magazine article and asked him to return later for an interview. This interview was postponed a few times until it took place sometime in July. It lasted about 75 minutes. Tsafendas recounted inter alia, how he had entered the Union illegally in 1936. He made no secret of his strong anti-Portuguese feelings, but did not utter a word against the South African Government. He complained, inter alia, that he still suffered from headaches as a result of the treatment he had been given by the Portuguese in Lisbon after the war. Mr. Hartford's impression was that Tsafendas was normal; he had no reason to believe that he was mentally defective. This witness had listened to the evidence in the Supreme Court on Tsafendas's condition after the death of Dr. Verwoerd and his impression was that his condition must have deteriorated since the interview for, when he interviewed Tsafendas, the latter spoke fluently without any noticeable gaps in the conversation. He added, however, *that after he had heard the evidence, it occurred to him that Tsafendas had in fact sometimes evaded his questions, but not to such an extent as to arouse his suspicions about his mental condition.*³⁷¹⁹

³⁷¹⁸ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 75.

THE MULDER CASE

Hendrik Johannes Mulder had given a statement to the police on October 5. He had testified that he was offered £20,000 by three men to eliminate Dr. Verwoerd but he refused. The offer was renewed twice by telephone, where they called and said they had a fool-proof method of killing Dr. Verwoerd – by arranging a job for him in the Houses of Parliament. At another time, he had said a customer at a garage where he worked asked him to kill Dr. Verwoerd. Mulder also said two different men offered him a large sum to blow up the Die Burger newspaper building and that on another occasion he was blindfolded and taken to a meeting in a block of flats. Mulder was not able to describe any of these contacts with any precision. On October 14, Mulder and two policemen who were involved in his case – Laubser and van Wyk – gave evidence to the Commission. Mulder's testimony was similar to the one he gave to the police.

HENDRIK JOHANNES MULDER'S TESTIMONY TO THE COE³⁷²⁰

Declaration under oath.

Examined by Mr. Terblanche and Judge van Wyk:

TERBLANCHE: Mr Mulder where do you live?

MULDER: I live in Heathfield, Galway Road.

TERBLANCHE: And where do you work?

MULDER: For a firm called Decoza Knitting Mills in Cape Town

TERBLANCHE: And what is the nature of your work?

MULDER: Costing Accountant.

³⁷¹⁹ This testimony was not found in the archives, but according to the Commission's Report, the interview took place on November 11, 1966.

³⁷²⁰ Hendrik Johannes Mulder testimony in the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

TERBLANCHE: Are you a South African citizen, were you born in this country?

MULDER: Yes

TERBLANCHE: Where do you come from?

MULDER: From Uitenhage, sir

TERBLANCHE: Have you been overseas?

MULDER: Yes, I was in Venezuela, South America for 7 years

TERBLANCHE: What did you do there, Mr Mulder?

MULDER: I worked for Sekoni Mobil Oil as a career diver

TERBLANCHE: And did you encounter firearms in your work?

MULDER: Well, not actually firearms, but I learned a lot about explosives. We often had to open areas with explosives, with fuses, know how to cut certain lengths, because when one is under water, at a certain depth, there must be enough time to get away before the explosion.

TERBLANCHE: What kind of firm was it?

MULDER: An oil company – many of our oil mines were beneath the water of Lake Maracibo.

TERBLANCHE: Did you also learn self-defence?

MULDER: Yes, I am an expert in Kung-fu which is the Chinese version of Karate.

TERBLANCHE: Where did you learn this, Mr Mulder?

MULDER: In Maracibo. I encountered it in one of the JoJo's of clubs where this art was practised. I am the only man in the Republic who can slice two bricks in half.

TERBLANCHE: How do you do this?

MULDER: It can be done with the heel of the hand or with the side of the hand. Like this TERBLANCHE: Would you describe yourself as an expert in dangerous explosives?

MULDER: Not exactly an expert, but "I can make any gimmick" to explode things. On one occasion I wanted to add something to my petrol tank, but someone had put sand in my engine. One of the security police told me to walk away from the situation, and not meddle with explosives – so I walked away from the situation.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did you want to put sand in again to blow up the car?

MULDER: No I just wanted to give him a fright.

JUDGE VAN WYK: There was a report about this in the Burger newspaper not so?

MULDER: Yes, I gave a shooting demonstration to the Burger.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Are you a good shot?

MULDER: Yes I would always be successful in shooting someone.

TERBLANCHE: What kind of weapon do you use?

MULDER: My favourite is the American M.1911-45, which is an automatic pistol.

TERBLANCHE: Are you better with a pistol than with a shotgun? Or vice-versa?

MULDER: Well, I am handier with a pistol than with other firearms. I am accurate with all firearms, but am more comfortable with a pistol, certainly as regards speed.

TERBLANCHE: Special holsters are made especially for them, but you probably don't wear them, like the cowboys, do you?

MULDER: No, they are worn under one's shoulder, with a strap over the back of the shoulder and the holster is totally open, but there is a spin which holds it in place. This is so that one does not have to lift up the pistol, one can just pull the trigger by taking hold of the jacket with a fingertip, then take hold of the handle, pull it forward and the point of the holster is fastened to part of the pants so that the holster cannot move out of place with the pistol.

TERBLANCHE: Are your pistols specially prepared for you?

MULDER: No, not at all.

TERBLANCHE: Are they just the normal types?

MULDER: Yes they are normal but they one I previously mentioned is not obtainable in the Republic anymore today.

TERBLANCHE: While you were in South America did you also visit Argentina?

MULDER: Yes.

TERBLANCHE: What happened to you while you were there?

MULDER: At that time in Argentina someone shot Evuart [sic] Peron and several of us were held in prison on suspicion that we were responsible for shooting him and while in prison one of the others made it look as if he had hung himself and when the guards came in to investigate, we overcame them and managed to escape from jail.

TERBLANCHE: So you escaped, and how did you get away from there?

MULDER: With the boat of one of the Argentinians called a gunboat which is very fast.

TERBLANCHE: Did they find you?

MULDER: No, they could not find us, because we then returned to Venezuela, from which we could not be extradited.

TERBLANCHE: How did you get to Venezuela?

MULDER: We returned with one of the gunboats.

TERBLANCHE: Did you go there with one of the gunboats?

MULDER: No we went by aeroplane, but returned using the gunboat because we were trying to escape detection at all the airports, and rail connections because they would all have been alerted about us.

TERBLANCHE: How did you get to the gunboat?

MULDER: We knew from our tour through Buenos Aires that the gunboats were at anchor there.

TERBLANCHE: So you stole one?

MULDER: Yes we did steal one.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Were you detained although you were innocent?

MULDER: Yes, we were detained while we were entirely innocent. We were just strangers, and they just grabbed onto the nearest person, as often happens.

TERBLANCHE: You said you spent 7 years there?

MULDER: Yes. 7 years.

TERBLANCHE: Which years were those?

MULDER: Not exactly 7 years – from 1944-1950.

TERBLANCHE: When did you return to South Africa?

MULDER: I returned in January 1951.

TERBLANCHE: Where did you live after your return?

MULDER: I went to Port Elizabeth.

TERBLANCHE: How long did you live there?

MULDER: I lived there to 1955 or '56.

TERBLANCHE: Did you then go to Cape Town?

MULDER: Yes, I went to Cape Town.

TERBLANCHE: Have you been in Cape Town ever since then?

MULDER: Yes.

TERBLANCHE: Were you not away from there at all?

MULDER: No, never left Cape Town.

TERBLANCHE: Which year was it that the article in the Burger referred to by the Judge appeared in print?

MULDER: I really cannot recall – I am not a collector and I do not keep these things.

TERBLANCHE: Give us the approximate year.

MULDER: Around August 1960.

TERBLANCHE: Please tell the Commission the gist of the article please.

MULDER: The article was about my method of shooting, the method of carrying my pistol and my accuracy – such as being able to shoot a penny from between someone's fingers; and also my method of throwing a knife and ability to fight with a knife.

TERBLANCHE: Did photos of you appear in the article?

MULDER: Yes, there were a few photos of me.

TERBLANCHE: After the publication of this article did anything happen because of it?

MULDER: Yes, one evening while I was practising my Kung-fu in the garage, someone knocked first at the front door where my wife directed them to the garage at the back of the house. They did not want to enter into the house, but went around the back and knocked on my garage door but did not want to enter it. They called me to go outside and congratulated me on the fact that I am such a wonderful shot and so on.

TERBLANCHE: You 'they' – how many people were there?

MULDER: Three people.

TERBLANCHE: Did you know them?

MULDER: No, I had never seen them before.

TERBLANCHE: And what language did they speak?

MULDER: They spoke English, but one of them spoke Afrikaans remarkably well, the few times that he did speak.

TERBLANCHE: Were they white people?

MULDER: Yes.

TERBLANCHE: You say they congratulated you?

MULDER: Yes, they congratulated me on being such a good shot and asked me where I had learned to shoot and so on. I thought that perhaps they were interested in a demonstration or something like that.

TERBLANCHE: Do you know how they got there?

MULDER: They had a motor car there which was parked on the corner and they walked a short distance to the house. When they left I did not want to go with them as I was wearing exercise clothes, but I saw them walk around towards the Main road and get into a car. I remember it was one of the 1956-57 Dodge cars, a green colour but I could not see the registration number or any other details as it was already dark.

TERBLANCHE: What did you talk about?

MULDER: They asked me if I like money.

TERBLANCHE: Can you tell us about the conversation in the same language in which it was conducted?

MULDER: The man asked me: "Do you like money?" So I said to him: "Well, who doesn't". Then he said: "Would you like to earn some money?" To which I answered: "It all depends". He then said: "Well, you can earn quite a substantial amount". Then I said to him: "But what's the job?" He then said to me: "Oh, it's a very easy job, and it's not so easy. It all depends on how you are going to go about it". Then I was naturally totally confused and he next said to me: "We want to get this bastard Verwoerd out of this world. Do you think you can eliminate him?" Then I said: "What are you talking about? I don't know what the hell you're talking about". He then said: "Look, we're offering you an amount of 20,000 pounds to eliminate him". I said: "By what method?" So he said: "Well, you're a good shot. Shoot him". He said: "We will pay you the amount of 10,000 pounds now, and you sign a contract to the effect that you will shoot him. Once you have completed the job, we will pay you, or your wife and children, a further 10,000 pounds".

At this point, following a short interruption after the arrival of the Speaker, Terblanche continued with the questioning.

TERBLANCHE: Mr. Mulder, we got to where you told us about the offer which the three people made to you, please tell us what your answer was to them?

MULDER: My first answer was: "Don't you think the amount of 20,000 pounds is a little money for such a big man?" That was my first answer. Then I also said to him: "Look here, I am a married man". At that time I only had one child, a little boy, and then I said: "I am not interested in your offer."

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did it not shock you that people wanted to do such a thing?

MULDER: I do not know how you would feel, but I did not feel good about the whole idea. I wanted to deceive them, to put it bluntly, by accepting the first 10,000 pounds, but they wanted me to sign a contract and obviously they did not want to disclose in the contract what the organisation was or to whom I was responsible.

JUDGE VAN WYK: How did you want to do this?

MULDER: I tried to get hold of the first ten thousand pounds by saying to him:" Alright, I'll sign the contract-(and so- and- so) (sic) "but who am I responsible to?" Then they said, "No, never mind. You just sign the contract. We'll give you the ten thousand pounds".

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did they have the contract with them?

MULDER: Yes, they had the contract with them and they wanted me to sign it.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Was it a typed document or handwritten?

MULDER: No, they would not show it to me. I again asked him: "Who am I responsible to?" but they would not answer my question.

TERBLANCHE: And when you told them.

MULDER: When I told them that I was not interested, they left.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Where did the conversation take place?

MULDER: At my home, at the back next to my garage.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Can you describe the men? How old would you say they were?

MULDER: I cannot remember now. The one man I shall be able to recognise easily if I saw him today. He was short, I estimate about five foot six. He was well set. He had a large face, but it was not fat and he spoke fluent Afrikaans. He had curly hair, light curly hair, not exactly blonde, but light curly hair and this is the one I can remember very well.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Light curly hair?

MULDER: Light curly hair. The other one was a rather tall man – almost as tall as Detective van Wyk.

JUDGE VAN WYK: We do not know what he looks like!

MULDER: He was tall but he was wearing a hat. I could not see him very well. He was very slim. I cannot recall the third person anymore. The Security police took the descriptions from me at that time.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, but I want to know about the tall man with a hat. Did he have a dark or a light complexion?

MULDER: I really cannot say – as I said before, it was dark and they would not go into the garage where the light was on – everything was done outside.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But the other man which you could see?

MULDER: The other man I saw half-and-half, because the garage light fell on him at one stage.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And what were they wearing?

MULDER: The one person whom I can remember – I cannot remember at all what he was wearing. The other one I know was wearing a hat and a suit. And one was wearing sports clothes.

JUDGE VAN WYK: When they left did you not think: “Good Heavens, I must report these men to the Police?”

MULDER: Yes, I did think so, and I did it the next day – I immediately phoned the Security Police and told them what had happened.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, and then?

MULDER: The following day the Security Police came to see me and I made a statement in that regard.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And were the footprints of the men still visible?

MULDER: No, my back yard is completely tarred.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And where their car had been parked?

MULDER: The spot where their car had been parked was also tarred and there were no footprints either.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did any of the men smoke?

MULDER: No, none of them smoked while we were standing there.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And did you ask them how they would pay you? Cash, or whatever?

MULDER: No, I did not ask the, as I was so shocked about the offer. I never thought that the little article in Die Burger would land me in such a situation.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Which Police came to see you? Can you remember?

MULDER: To the best of my memory, I may be wrong, but I remember the names Erasmus, van Wyk and Conradie. I cannot recall accurately.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did they come to see you the next day?

MULDER: Yes they came to see me the next day. I had telephoned them immediately to inform them.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And you say it was in 1960?

MULDER: Yes it was in 1960 – I think in November.

JUDGE VAN WYK: When was the first attempt on Dr. Verwoerd's life?

MULDER: I think it was in April, 1961, not so?

TERBLANCHE: Yes, the Rand Easter Show in 1961 in April I think.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Could one then say that it was 5 months later that he was shot?

TERBLANCHE: What about a member of the Security Police, Erasmus?

MULDER: I think I met Erasmus recently when was working in Main Road as an instructor in self-defence for the Police, and he came in and tried to smash my bricks in half. He then asked me if I was committed, because he wanted me to join him where he was then working, but he did not tell me what it was that he was doing at that time.

TERBLANCHE: Where were you living at that time? At the same address?

MULDER: Yes at the same address.

TERBLANCHE: Is that the address which you gave us?

MULDER: Yes.

TERBLANCHE: How long have you been living there?

MULDER: About six years.

TERBLANCHE: Did those men again try to contact you?

MULDER: I do not know whether the Police followed it up.

TERBLANCHE: You do not know? These people?

MULDER: Yes, they phoned several times at work at that time

TERBLANCHE: How long after this incident? After this first incident which you have just told the Commission about?

MULDER: It was about a year later that they called me again. Eight months or a year later they phoned me again asked whether I had not yet considered their offer.

TERBLANCHE: At your place of work?

MULDER: Yes, at work.

TERBLANCHE: And then, what did you say?

MULDER: I just told them: "Look, I told you that I am not interested", and I put down the phone.

TERBLANCHE: Did you report that incident to the Police?

MULDER: Yes, I did report it.

JUDGE VAN WYK: How did they know where you worked? How did they find out?

MULDER: I cannot remember. Someone probably asked me where I worked that night –but they had my home address – they got that from Die Burger. They told me that. I could in all probability have told them where I work. I really cannot remember. It was such a long time ago. I can imagine that one of them had asked me where I worked should they want to contact me again. I would have told them but also added that they should not do so, as I was not interested.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But if you had the plan to deceive them in order to get hold of the ten thousand pounds, then you must have been a little bit interested, not so?

MULDER: The thing is that one gets such a fright in that instant, about that sort of offer; I mean, murder is not a thing that one normally contemplates.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But if you were thinking about the ten thousand pounds?

MULDER: I did think about the money and that I would trick them, but I did not much want...

JUDGE VAN WYK: But if they were prepared to give you the ten thousand pounds, then you could easily afterwards say to them that you knew nothing of ten thousand pounds! They could not after all sue you!

MULDER: Yes, but I also thought that if I did that, then could afterwards come after my wife and child.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did you tell your wife about this that night?

MULDER: My wife knows about it.

JUDGE VAN WYK: What did she say?

MULDER: She said I should stay away from such things.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Is your wife a South African?

MULDER: Yes, she is a Boer. She comes from Worcester.

TERBLANCHE: And were these the only two occasions that these people or any other person got in touch with you?

MULDER: No, someone phoned me about a year ago.

TERBLANCHE: Where were you when this person called you?

I was then working at Stewarts & Lloyds and I have no idea how they knew I was there.

TERBLANCHE: Yes?

MULDER: They asked me if I had reconsidered the offer. Then I said to them: "Look chaps, I have told you once before, I am not interested".

JUDGE VAN WYK: What did they say?

MULDER: They said to me: "We have a fool proof method by which you can actually eliminate Dr. Verwoerd. Then I said to him: "How" Then he said to me "We can arrange it that you get a job in the House of Parliament." Then they said to me that in that instance I would be close to Dr. Verwoerd on many occasions.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And then?

MULDER: My answer was short and to the point. I just said: "No dice" and I threw down the phone.

JUDGE VAN WYK: "No dice?"

MULDER: Yes, "No dice"! and then I threw down the phone – it is a slang word.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, but did you not then think: "Bit I must get the man to come to me, then I can set it up so that the police can catch him while he is with me", for instance?

MULDER: Your Honour, I have given certain information to the Police. We will come to one instance later. When they phoned me at Stewarts & Lloyds, I phoned the Security Police and told them about it.

JUDGE VAN WYK: That is the matter about which you have just told us?

MULDER: Yes, I told them, and I think in that instance I spoke to a Captain Rossouw at the Security Police in the city.

TERBLANCHE: You spoke telephonically?

MULDER: Yes, telephonically. I called them with the purpose that they could possibly take a declaration from me, or that we could possibly make a plan by which if they should phone me again, we could 'trap' them by tracing the phone from which they were speaking.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, but why did you not then do so when he made the offer again?

MULDER: Yes, but the whole office was full of people.

JUDGE VAN WYK: So then you did nothing further – did you just talk?

MULDER: No, then I phoned him

JUDGE VAN WYK: You phoned him to tell him about?

MULDER: I phoned him and told him that I want to tell him about it and I said to him: "This is what the offer was about and the next attack on Dr. Verwoerd's life will take place in the Parliamentary building.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Was it Rossouw to whom you said this?

MULDER: Yes, I think so.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And so?

MULDER: His response was: "Mr Mulder, you do not have to worry. Our Prime Minister is very well protected. We cannot do anymore."

TERBLANCHE: Did you suggest to him that you would help to catch those people?

MULDER: Yes, I wanted to work with the Security Police to catch them when they come to me again.

TERBLANCHE: But did you say this to the person with whom you spoke when you phoned him?

MULDER: No, no, I did not speak to them about at all again – I was very short and to the point with them.

TERBLANCHE: No, no, no! When you spoke to the Police?

MULDER: Oh with the Police?

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, when you phoned Mr. Rossouw?

MULDER: Well, when he answered me in that way I thought oh well, they are not interested. I am not either. I am just making a fool of myself.

JUDGE VAN WYK: You just said that you think it was Captain Rossouw?

MULDER: Yes, I think is Capt. Rossouw.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Can you not say so with certainty?

MULDER: I cannot say so with certainty, but a while ago someone phoned him, just after Dr. Verwoerd was murdered and then it was mentioned to him. Then he said yes, he could remember such an incident. He said he is also not certain.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Who called him?

MULDER: A friend called Nagel.

JUDGE VAN WYK: A friend of yours?

MULDER: I do not want to involve him here.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, but we would really want to know this. Nagel phoned Rossouw?

MULDER: Yes, he phoned Rossouw and said to him: "You see what happened? Mulder warned you." Then Capt. Rossouw said to him: "Yes, I know Mulder – I can remember something like that."

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did you also tell Nagel about this?

MULDER: Just after I had made the declaration and after I had called Capt. Rossouw, I told Nagel about the incident and I said: "They are not at all interested. Now they must just do whatever they want to do."

TERBLANCHE: Did he work with you at that time?

MULDER: No, he was just a friend. He is now in Port Elizabeth or one of those places. I do not know exactly where he is. He was here a while ago when he came to say goodbye and that he was going away.

TERBLANCHE: What did he do here in the Cape?

MULDER: He worked at a newspaper or something like that, if I am not mistaken. I had met him at one of the "clubs".

TERBLANCHE: Which club was that?

MULDER: One of our practice clubs. I was also an Instructor at the Technical College.

TERBLANCHE: So it was at the Technical College that you met him?

MULDER: I am not sure where I had met him.

JUDGE VAN WYK: How long after the conversation where people had told you that Dr. Verwoerd would be murdered in the Parliamentary building did you tell this information to Nagel?

MULDER: I think it was within a week of the incident – the murder of Dr. Verwoerd.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did you see him again after that?

MULDER: No, I did not see him again after that, but just after Dr. Verwoerd's murder he called me again.

JUDGE VAN WYK: From which place did he call you?

MULDER: He called me from here in the city. He was here in the city.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And what did he say to you?

MULDER: He said: "Hennie, your prophecy came true". But at that time I did not actually even know what had happened.

JUDGE VAN WYK: So you did not know what he was talking about?

MULDER: That is correct – I did not know what he was referring to, so I asked him: "What do you mean?" And then he said: "Dr. Verwoerd was murdered this morning"

JUDGE VAN WYK: Where were you when he called you?

MULDER: I was in the office where I am now working.

JUDGE VAN WYK: How long have you been working there?

MULDER: For about 4 months.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But how did he know that you work here if he has been away for such a long time?

MULDER: I wrote to him from time to time and his father probably gave my letters to him, but I had not heard from him for a long time.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And where did you write to him – what address?

MULDER: I addressed the letters to the National Printers. His father worked there – but I do not know if he is still there.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Does he not now have his own printers firm?

MULDER: I have no idea. He had problems with his wife and then he began drinking and so forth and moved on.

JUDGE VAN WYK: So he phoned you and said to you?

MULDER: "Your prophecy has come true".

TERBLANCHE: Did he say anything else when he phoned you?

MULDER: I cannot remember.

TERBLANCHE: Did he call you again after that?

MULDER: No, he did not call me again, but someone else did call me one day.

TERBLANCHE: I am asking you this because you said that he had talked to Capt. Rossouw.

MULDER: Yes, he apparently had talked to Capt. Rossouw.

TERBLANCHE: Then I want to know how you know that?

MULDER: He said so to me. He said that he had phoned Capt. Rossouw.

TERBLANCHE: In the same conversation?

MULDER: In the same conversation and asked him if he remembered if he knew me. Then Capt. Rossouw said to him: "yes, we know Mulder." Then he said: "Now I remember that he had warned you a year ago about an attack on Dr. Verwoerd in the Parliamentary building. Then Capt. Rossouw said yes he could remember something like that. He just was not absolutely sure, because so much water has flowed under the bridge.

TERBLANCHE: You also wanted to say something about 14 days ago?

MULDER: No, quite a while ago someone phoned me just after Dr. Verwoerd's death. I just do not know how they knew where to get hold of me.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Where did you get the phone call?

MULDER: They called me at work.

JUDGE VAN WYK: An English or Afrikaans-speaking person?

MULDER: English – the same voice as before.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And what did he say?

MULDER: "You see, Mulder, we had no need for you anymore. Somebody else did the job for us. And I can predict now that Advocate Vorster won't last another six months". Whether someone was playing the fool or not, I don't know, but that is what happened.

TERBLANCHE: Mr. Mulder, when you saw in the press that the Commission had been established, did you then put yourself forward to make a declaration?

MULDER: These declarations had already been made by me to the Police.

TERBLANCHE: Yes, but did you do so again?

MULDER: Yes, I made a declaration again.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Tell me, when did the three people contact you for the first time?

MULDER: It was in 1960.

JUDGE VAN WYK: So, in 1960, apart from your wife and the Police, did you tell anyone else?

MULDER: No, I never told anyone else. I never told anyone else, because I just felt it was none of their business and they might think I was playing the fool.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But did you not feel a little bit insulted that those people had thought that you would have been prepared to commit such a deed?

MULDER: Well, to tell the truth, I did not feel insulted immediately, but I was shocked. I was shocked that people could come to me with such an offer. After all, a married man with a wife and a child – to come to a man with such an offer just because he is a good shot and can fight well – this is just ridiculous. To tell the truth, I regard the incident as a farce. I thought they were playing the fool.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But after all they were strangers, so why would they play the fool with you?

MULDER: Yes, but I thought maybe they were just trying to test me, or something like that, because my name had appeared in the newspaper. Many people who come to see me say: “You are the bloke I saw in the paper who smashes bricks. Can you smash a brick?” I say, “Of course I can”. Then they go outside and pick up bricks and say: “Smash this brick for me”. And I say: “Alright, for five pounds I’ll do it for you.” It is unbelievable. They just do not believe it and many people do it just for a joke.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But have other people not also approached you to commit other murders? You know, to use your skills for other occasions – your firearm and so on?

MULDER: No, people like detectives have come to me. Quite a number of detectives and policemen that I have trained in Kung-fu – that is a deadly method of self-defence – all that kind of thing is what I do naturally.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Are there not people who are your enemies?

MULDER: Well, I think I have enemies – for instance quite a number of my family-in-law, who I have assaulted a number of times, but I do not think that I actually have enemies who want to land me in trouble.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Do you think that there are people who are opposed to you and perhaps have sent these people to you to get you into trouble?

MULDER: Possibly, quite possibly.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Have you ever felt that you are being watched or that people are following you?

MULDER: No, I have not felt that.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Possibly you feel that you have enemies and that they will do anything to get you into trouble?

MULDER: No, I have never had such a feeling.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And not in this instance, when the people came to you, did you not think that perhaps they wanted to get you into trouble?

MULDER: No, I have never had such an idea.

JUDGE VAN WYK: You did think it was a case of people “playing the fool”?

MULDER: I actually thought it could have been a prank.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But to be safe did you not think to protect yourself?

MULDER: For safety, to cover myself, in case anything happened, I always called the Security Police. I felt revulsion and very hurt the morning that I found out that Dr. Verwoerd had been murdered in Parliament, because I had already given them the warning a year earlier.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Apart from this Nagel, who else did you tell that Dr. Verwoerd – about the people who told you that Dr. Verwoerd would be murdered?

MULDER: No, I never told anyone else.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But did you not say?

MULDER: I can tell you that after that incident a year ago when I phoned Capt. Rossouw, that I simply felt that I would be making a fool of myself to disclose these things. I just felt that they had not taken any steps, and so I would be making a fool of myself. I thought, leave it alone, what will be, will be and I shall not get myself involved in such things.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, but you did then tell Nagel a week later?

MULDER: Yes, I did tell him about the little incident.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, but why just Nagel and not your wife as well?

MULDER: He was a very good friend and he is the kind of person who would keep it to himself. He is not the sort of person who would go to others and say Hennie said so and so.

JUDGE VAN WYK: So, it was only him?

MULDER: Yes, I only told him.

JUDGE VAN WYK: When did he leave the Cape?

MULDER: Well, I do not know – about ten or fourteen days after Dr. Verwoerd after he phoned me – it was the same day that Dr. Verwoerd was murdered, not afterwards. Then he left again.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did you see each other again?

MULDER: No, I did not see him at all, but I was only in touch with him telephonically.

JUDGE VAN WYK: So what did he come here for?

MULDER: I have no idea, Your Honour, I have no idea at the moment what Basil does, or where he works, or whether he works for himself. He talked about starting his own business for a long time, but he does not want to work in the Cape, he wants to get away from the Cape. So I think he just took to the road. But I think there is a Nagel in the Cape who worked at the Commercial printers and who had his own business. Perhaps it is his father.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Where does his father live?

MULDER: No, I do not know. His father did live in the city for a while, but I do not know as I never went to his house.

JUDGE VAN WYK: You just met him at the Club?

MULDER: This fellow Nagel I met at the Club. He told me he worked at the Commercial Printers.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But he was actually a good friend?

MULDER: He was a good friend of mine – in the sense that he was very interested in self-defence and so on and in physical exercise.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But you also have good friends amongst the Police too?

MULDER: Yes, I have several friends in the Police. For example Sybrand Hitchcock.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But why did you not tell them “What is wrong with the men that they do not want to negotiate?”

MULDER: Yes, but at that time when this incident happened, there were not any of the police with me in the Club.

JUDGE VAN WYK: I see. When did you start with them?

MULDER: Sybrand Hitchcock has only been with me for the last six or seven months. There were a few other police officers, like Odendaal and so on, who came to the club, but they could not deal with the hard physical exercise, so they soon left.

JUDGE VAN WYK: When did you get the call that Dr. Verwoerd would be murdered in the House of Assembly? When was that?

MULDER: Just a short while before he was murdered. After his murder, someone called me about Advocate Vorster.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, but did you then tell Hitchcock about it?

Yes, I did tell him about it.

JUDGE VAN WYK: You told Hitchcock about Advocate Vorster?

MULDER: Yes, I told him and then he said: “Why do you not go to the Security Police?” So I said: “No look, I did so a year ago when I warned about Dr. Verwoerd and I just made a fool of myself”.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And when was it that you warned them about Dr. Verwoerd?

MULDER: Around November 1960 – I may be wrong as the dates are no longer so clear for me.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But when did you warn them?

MULDER: I warned them the same day that the people came to see me.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, but when you warned them that Dr. Verwoerd would be murdered in the House of Assembly?

MULDER: That was a year ago.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, but when exactly?

MULDER: Around August of last year. The people who had come to see me originally said that there was a new movement starting up which is financed from England and that is called "The South African Freedom Army". And I gave the police this information about two months before they became aware of it.

JUDGE VAN WYK: When did you give them this information?

MULDER: No, I cannot remember that anymore.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did you give that information to the Police?

MULDER: Yes, to the police.

JUDGE VAN WYK: The Security Police?

MULDER: I told them that there is in the Republic a movement which is financed in England and the name is The South African Freedom Army and I believe that they dispersed those people.

JUDGE VAN WYK: When did you give the information to them? Can you remember?

MULDER: No, Your Honour, I cannot remember anymore.

JUDGE VAN WYK: When did you get the information about the South African Freedom Army? When did you get it?

MULDER: No, I cannot remember. The Police have all the records of the information which I gave them, but I remember that two months.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But did the same people come to you more than once?

MULDER: No they were only at my house on one occasion.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Then that must have been the occasion when they told you about the Freedom Army or was it when they phoned you?

MULDER: No these people told me about the SA Freedom Army at that time.

JUDGE VAN WYK: The same people?

MULDER: The same people told me that at that same time. Yes it was at the same time that they told me about the Freedom Army and then I told them – the Security Police. The same time that I made the declaration about the offer.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Oh?

MULDER: And two months after that there was a press report about a movement called the South African Freedom Army. I think the morning that I spoke to Sergeant van Wyk and then I asked him whether he had seen the press report and whether he remembered that I had told him about it a short while previously. Then I referred him to my declaration.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And what did he say?

MULDER: I cannot recall what Sgt. van Wyk had said – just that he had seen it.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Why should he know about it? Was he one of the policemen whom you had told about the incident?

MULDER: Yes, Sgt. van Wyk was one of the men attached to the Security Police of that time and who came to me and who took a number of declaration/statements from me.

NO FURTHER QUESTIONS-WITNESS DISMISSED

JOHANNES PETRUS FRANCOIS VAN WYK'S TESTIMONY TO THE COE³⁷²¹

Declared under Oath.

Examined by Mr. Terblanche and Judge van Wyk:

TERBLANCHE: Mr. van Wyk, are you a Detective-Sergeant attached to the Security Section of the SA Police?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: I am.

TERBLANCHE: Do you know the previous witness, Hendrik Mulder, who has just testified?

³⁷²¹ Johannes Francois Petrus van Wyk's testimony in the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: He is known to me.

TERBLANCHE: When did you meet him for the first time?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: It was in 1961. I cannot remember the precise date.

TERBLANCHE: Were you with someone or were you alone?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: I was with the retired Detective-Sergeant Loubscher [sic], also attached to the Security Police of that period.

TERBLANCHE: Why did you go to see him?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: Because he had on a previous occasion provided information to us about an intended sabotage action.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Which sabotage incident was this?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: He had stated that a proposition had been made to him about a fantastic amount of money which would be given to him if he was prepared to blow up the offices of "Die Burger" newspaper in Keerom St. in Cape Town.

TERBLANCHE: And that was the reason for your visit to him?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: That is correct.

TERBLANCHE: What did he tell you about that proposition which had been made to him?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: Well, he said that one evening two Jews went to his home and said that they had seen an article in "Die Burger"³⁷²² newspaper the supplement section – which dealt with his expertise with firearms.

TERBLANCHE: Yes?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: They apparently said to him that if he was prepared to blow up the offices of Die Burger newspaper in Keerom St. they would pay him a fantastic amount of money.

TERBLANCHE: Did he mention the amount?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: I recall the amount of R20,000.00. It could have been either Rands or Pounds, but I do know that the amount was "twenty thousand".

TERBLANCHE: Did he mention how they wanted him to do it?

³⁷²² Incorrectly spelled as "Bruger" throughout this testimony.

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: They told him that it would be easy for him to gain entry to the offices by just going there and telling the Editor that he had another story to give them about his expertise with firearms, and that he should take along a parcel containing a time bomb. He should then leave the parcel in the offices and walk out. People who would later come across the parcel would simply assume that someone had forgotten it and leave it untouched.

TERBLANCHE: Mr. van Wyk, did the two of you question Mr. Mulder about this statement?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: I questioned him very thoroughly about his statement to us. He was very vague. He could not give a description about the two people, except that they looked like Jews. He said that they had arrived in a motor car, but could not provide the make, or colour or the registration number of the car, but emphasised that he definitely could identify them if he saw them again.

TERBLANCHE: Did you at that time make any arrangements with Mr. Mulder?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: We arranged that when the people visited him again he would notify us immediately.

TERBLANCHE: From what he had said did you think that those people would visit him again?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: He said that he had told them that he would help them, but that he needed time to think it over. His excuse was that he would want to be able to have the time to report the incident to us. According to him they said that they would return in two or three days. That was why we asked him to contact us immediately when they did so.

TERBLANCHE: Apart from that arrangement with him did you do anything else?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: Without saying anything to him we did actually keep the house under observation to see whether any people did indeed visit him. For almost ten days nobody visited him while we were there. So, we went to see him again, when he told us that the same two people had visited him again. That was during the time that we put his house under observation.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Why did he not inform you?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: He only claimed that he had been too busy. I then remarked that this was strange because we had not observed the car at his house. His immediate reaction was to claim that the car had parked at the bottom of the road and that he had only seen the red lights as they drove away. I then repeated that it was strange that we had not seen the people enter the house, to which he replied that they had approached his house from behind the bushes which were behind the house.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Could he describe the people?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: He could never give a description apart from adding that one of them was starting to go grey just above his ears. That was the only description he could give.

TERBLANCHE: Did you approach him again?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: We asked him to stay in touch with us on a regular basis, and a while later I went to see him again to enquire why he had not been in touch with us. By that time he had again changed employment and we had difficulty in tracing him. He then told us that the men had again visited him when he was alone at home, and that they persuaded him to get into a large car with them and then they had driven to Sea Point where they all went into a block of flats and entered a flat on the 5th floor where 7 people were assembled. I questioned him thoroughly about this incident but he could not give a description of the car which I said to him was strange, but his reply was that when they entered his house they blindfolded him, led him to the car and forced him into the back of the car while the two men sat in the front. Then I asked him how he knew it was a large car and he replied that he could feel that it was large car and therefore assumed that it was large.

I asked him to try to get the number of the car, or the names of the people and also while he did not peep out of the blindfold while he was sitting in the back of the car. He then immediately responded that he had peeped, by moving the blindfold while he was bending down to fasten his shoelace, but that he still could not see anything because he found that there were two black curtains on the inside of the car windows.

I then asked him how he knew they were in Sea Point if he was blindfolded and his reply was that the roads were very steep and thus he made that assumption. When I asked him how he knew that the flat was on the 5th floor, he said that he felt the movement of the lift which took a little while to reach the next stage and so he knew that it was block of flats and not a house. When I asked him how he knew it was the 5th floor, he said that the one person had said to the other that he should press the button for the 5th floor.

Once again he could not identify them because he was blindfolded and when I asked him how he knew that there were 7 people, he said because he could distinguish 7 voices, and then he added that he suddenly remembered, whilst he was talking to me, that while in the flat, he once again moved his blindfold a fraction and noticed that the one person had red hair and that was the only description he could give of all the 7 people. This story sounded altogether too fantastic and we thought it was entirely implausible.

TERBLANCHE: Mr. van Wyk, did he ever report to you that people approached him to murder Dr. Verwoerd?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: Never. While he reported other things to me, he never mentioned an attack on Dr. Verwoerd.

TERBLANCHE: Have you ever spoken to his wife?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: No, we never saw her and I never saw her.

TERBLANCHE: Do you know a person by the name of Nagel?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: Well, I know several different people with that name.

JUDGE VAN WYK: He said it is a person who worked at the National Press to whom he had said that he had received a message about the murder on Dr. Verwoerd?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: No your Honour, I do not know that Nagel. The Nagels that I know are all criminals. They have no connection with this Mulder.

TERBLANCHE: He said that he had in 1960 also told the two of you about the "South African Freedom Army" which is based in England and operates here.

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: The only time that the "Freedom Army" was heard about was in 1963 when it was actually known as "The African Resistance Movement."

TERBLANCHE: No, he says the name was The South African Freedom Army and that it is financed in England and that it was after he had told the Police about his information that people had asked him to murder Dr. Verwoerd and also that after he had told the Police about the South African Freedom Army that 2 months later the newspapers first reported about these rumours and that he had then said that to you remember? Did he tell you about the South African Freedom Army?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: No he never reported this to me. He also never gave us any information about this subject and if he had given it to other members of the police force I would have heard about in the course of my work because it is those kind of files that I deal with personally all the time.

TERBLANCHE: Do you know a detective called Erasmus?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: Yes, that is Captain Erasmus of the Diamond Section.

TERBLANCHE: Was he based here in the Cape?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: He was here from the 1st of January until the 31st of March 1963, with the Security Section of the Police.

TERBLANCHE: And after that? Where did he go?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: Afterwards he served with the Diamond Section of the Police in different places.

TERBLANCHE: He told us that in 1960 he was offered R20,000.00 to murder Dr. Verwoerd. Have you any knowledge of this?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: No, your Honour. If he had given such information I should also have known about it.

TERBLANCHE: He said that they wanted to give 10,000.00 Pounds in advance and that then 10,000.00 Pounds after he had done it, but that he had to sign a document?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: No the first information from him was that which I have just given to you.

TERBLANCHE: Which information is this?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: About the sabotage at Die Burger offices.

TERBLANCHE: When he informed the Police?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: Yes, he did give other information about other people in 1963.

TERBLANCHE: What was the information that he gave in 1963?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: It was information that he gave to me personally, about the investigation about Alexander and others, who worked in the High Court in Cape Town. It involved a man called "Enval Marnie". A typewriter that Dr. Alexander used for the typing of his documents was hidden by "Enval Marnie" who worked at "Cape Oil Products" and Mr. Mulder worked at the same place and after it became known that Enval Marnie had given testimony in the case he reported to me that Enval Marnie held Communist meetings daily at his workplace and this was investigated and found to be false.

TERBLANCHE: Also found to be false?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: Found to be totally false.

TERBLANCHE: And did he come to you with that information?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: Soon after the man had testified and this was reported in the papers I bumped into him and he said to me by the way you probably know Enval Marnie and after I confirmed this he gave me the above statement.

TERBLANCHE: He has also told us that he is an Instructor at Wynberg and that he trains the Police in "Kung-fu"?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: I have no knowledge of this.

TERBLANCHE: He told us here that he has been working at the same place since about 1960. Do you know that he had worked at other places?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: I know that at one time he worked at a place in Lower Main Road in Observatory. Unfortunately I am not now in a position to give the name of the firm. Afterwards he worked at a shop on the corner of Essik Street and Victoria Road in Woodstock. Then he worked for a while at Cape Oil Products in Maitland. Afterwards he worked at an engineering firm and now he is at another firm in Garfield Road in Claremont. He continually moves from one workplace to another. He makes a statement to us and then by the time we go to investigate it he has already moved to another workplace.

NO FURTHER QUESTIONS-WITNESS EXCUSED

PETRUS GERHARDUS LAUBSER TESTIMONY TO THE COE³⁷²³

Declared under Oath.

Examined by Mr. Terblanche and Judge van Wyk:

TERBLANCHE: Mr. Laubser, you were attached to the Security Dept. of the SA Police from September 1961 until 1963?

LAUBSER: Yes I was.

³⁷²³ Petrus Gerhardus Loubser testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

TERBLANCHE: During that period did you come into contact with a certain Hendrik Mulder?

LAUBSER: Yes I did.

TERBLANCHE: I assume that you saw him here this morning?

LAUBSER: Yes, I saw him.

TERBLANCHE: How did it happen that you came into contact with him?

LAUBSER: It was during 1962, when one day I received an assignment from Major van der Westhuizen to speak to him concerning certain information, so Detective-Sergeant van Wyk and I went to see him and when we got to his house he told us that three white men had gone to his house the previous night and made a certain proposition to him, but he could not give us a description of the three men –

JUDGE VAN WYK: What was the proposition?

LAUBSER: He said that the three men had apparently read an article on him in the "Klein Burger" (so called at that time) – about his expertise with firearms and Karate and that sort of thing, and the men made the proposition that he should return to the Burger as he knew people there, and that they would give him a time bomb which he should leave there to blow up the building – and at a later stage –

JUDGE VAN WYK: Would they have paid him to do this?

LAUBSER: Yes, they would have paid him a certain amount to do this.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Can you remember what the amount was?

LAUBSER: No, I cannot remember anymore, but it was a large amount. Well. He then said that he would think about it and that they should visit him again, and then on a later occasion he also said to me that the three men had made a proposition to him, in that they wanted him to act as an instructor to 20,000 volunteers which he had already recruited. The training would take place at a camp which was to be established and he was wanted because of his expertise with firearms.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But the three men never returned to him.

LAUBSER: We placed him under observation on various evenings to see whether the alleged car returned to his house. I spoke to him on another occasion at the end of 1962. This took place at a shop in Main Road, Woodstock where he then worked at a men's outfitter.

The subject of motor cars came up and he then told me that around the time that Dr. Verwoerd had just come into power, around 1959, when he was working as a motor mechanic at a certain garage in District Six which was owned by a Jew, that he and a client argued about the outrageously high price of the repairs. This person then made a proposition to him about shooting Dr. Verwoerd, but he declined, saying he was not interested. Think about this: the proposition was made to him in 1959 and it was only in 1962 that he first reported the incident to us.

TERBLANCHE: Did you question him about this man?

LAUBSER: Yes I did. He said the man is no longer there. The garage is closed. He could not provide the man's name, he could not give the name of the garage, he could not remember anything!

TERBLANCHE: Could he give you any definitive description of these people?

LAUBSER: No he could not although we asked him repeated occasions. He just said that he thought they were three Jews. He could not give a description of the car and he could not describe the number or anything – nothing!

JUDGE VAN WYK: Do you know anything about a message that he had sent about someone calling him on the telephone?

LAUBSER: Yes from time to time he said that people were allegedly calling him repeatedly. The strange thing about all this is that at the time that he gave us the information he was unemployed and had been without work for months. But then as soon as he allegedly started working somewhere then these people would call – and how they knew about his workplace so quickly is beyond strange.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But he let you know about these calls made to him on more than one occasion?

LAUBSER: I do not know about that. I only went to him on that one occasion on Major van der Westhuizen's instruction.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But then how did he come to tell you about the many places where calls had been made to him?

LAUBSER: He told that to me after I had seen him again that the people had been calling him repeatedly.

JUDGE VAN WYK: I see.

LAUBSER: But he does not know – he never knows – I still do not believe that he knows who these people are or where they can be found.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But did he not ever tell you that he had received a call telling him that Dr. Verwoerd would be murdered in Parliament?

LAUBSER: No, I know nothing of that – he never told me about anything like that.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Have you ever heard that he had made that statement?

LAUBSER: No.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Have you heard it now?

LAUBSER: No, nothing yet.

JUDGE VAN WYK: He has just told us that he had called Captain Rossouw to give his this information.

LAUBSER: I see him quite often and I do not remember him telling me about this.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Where do you see him regularly?

LAUBSER: I have seen him on a number of occasions in Woodstock when he has walked past me and greeted me and although he knows that I am connected with the Security Police, he never reported this to me.

JUDGE VAN WYK: He has just said that he again had a call from someone who said that Advocate Vorster would only last six months now that they have dealt with Dr. Verwoerd?

LAUBSER: No your Honour, I do not know anything about this. I think the man has a fantastic imagination. That is my opinion of him.

NO FURTHER QUESTIONS-WITNESS DISMISSED

CONCLUSION

Detective van Wyk testified that in 1962 Mulder claimed that two men offered him 20,000 Rand or pounds to blow up the offices of Die Burger newspaper by leaving a time-bomb in the building in Cape Town. Mulder could not describe the men or their car. After Mulder reported the alleged offer to blow up the Die Burger newspaper building, the police secretly observed his house. Mulder later told him the two men had returned during this period, but the police watchers said no-one visited. Later again, Mulder claimed he was blindfolded and taken to a meeting on the 5th floor of a block of flats, a story which the police considered “altogether too fantastic and entirely implausible.”

Dt. Sgt. van Wyk said Mulder also claimed a man at his workplace held Communist meetings, an allegation which the police found to be false. As for the blindfolded visit to a block of flats, van Wyk said the police considered it “altogether too fantastic and entirely implausible.” Mulder also told Dt. Sgt. van Wyk in 1962 that three years earlier a man had asked him to assassinate Dr Verwoerd. The detective naturally stated that “the proposition was made to him in 1959 and it was only in 1962 that he first reported the incident to us.”

Laubser testified that he interviewed Mulder after he told police he had been offered a large sum of money to blow up the Die Burger newspaper by planting a time bomb, but he could not describe the men who made the offer. On another occasion, he said he was working as a mechanic at a garage when a customer tried to persuade him to shoot Dr. Verwoerd. He said he could not describe the customer and the garage itself was by now closed. Laubser concluded that Mulder “has a fantastic imagination.”

Mulder's story is far-fetched, full of inconsistencies and lies, as both policemen correctly noted. As to his connection with Tsafendas, the only remote connection was when Mulder claimed his contacts told him they could arrange access to Dr Verwoerd by securing a position in Parliament. That Tsafendas had reached Dr. Verwoerd by just such a method, as a Parliamentary messenger, had been all over the newspapers for more than a month. It is well within the bounds of possibility that an evident fantasist such as Mulder could have made up such a claim retrospectively to strengthen his story. The Commission quite rightly shared the two policemen's opinion regarding Mulder's testimony, and would not mention his case in its Report.

SYNOPSIS OF OTHER TESTIMONIES

The following are synopsis of testimonies or statements given to the Commission. They were found in the archives but have nothing or very little to say about Tsafendas and are of no importance:

THELMA BERYL SUDDER

Sudder was Rowley Israel Arenstein's secretary and was questioned by the police after they learned that Tsafendas often visited Arenstein's office in Durban. She testified on 22nd October:

“I was shown a police file containing several newspaper photographs of Tsafendas. I have never seen him in my office or with Mr. Arenstein. If Tsafendas did call to see Mr. Arenstein, I was the most likely person to attend to him. There was a rumour that Tsafendas had worked at the Court in Durban as an interpreter. Our offices are situated opposite the Court buildings (Supreme Court and Magistrate's Court). I had already discussed this fact before Capt. Broodryk had interviewed me, and I am therefor positive, as far as I am concerned, that he has never called at our office. To the best of my knowledge I have never seen him.”³⁷²⁴

NICOLAI ROMANOFF (Crown Prince)³⁷²⁵

This appears to be the statement of person who calls himself the 'Crown Prince.' He testified that Tsafendas was a hired assassin hired by someone called John Pascilly in Tangier where he was “given full training then given a one-year living, then sent out on a job. He was hired by Col. Nasser who paid R100,000 for the assassination. The object being to destroy the PMs conference held in England at that time.” He then went on to say that Tsafendas was also hired to assassinate Ian Smith, the Prime Minister of Rhodesia, on 21 September 1966, and then 5,000 guerrillas who were stationed in Zambia were going to invade the country.³⁷²⁶ The rest of the statement contains information along the same lines, some of it even more absurd

³⁷²⁴ Thelma Beryl Sudder statement to the COE, 22 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁷²⁵ No date is given in this statement.

³⁷²⁶ Nikolai Romanoff statement to the COE, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

which suggests that Romanoff's statement cannot be taken seriously. The Commission and the police also did not appear to treat his statement seriously.

PETER CECIL VISSER

Visser was the assistant manager at the Mount Nelson Hotel, Cape Town, where it was rumoured that Tsafendas had applied for a job. Visser testified that "Tsafendas did not apply to our hotel for a position."³⁷²⁷

ANATOLE URBANIAK

Urbaniak was manager of the Grand Hotel in Cape Town and a member of the hotel Board. He testified that Tsafendas had made a job application to the hotel Board in Pretoria, which was turned down, but he had not applied to the Grand Hotel in Cape Town. He had no personal knowledge of him.³⁷²⁸

HENDRIK KLOPPER

Klopper was the Speaker of the National Assembly and was in charge of Parliament and its staff, including messengers and cleaners. Klopper's testimony is sixteen pages long and involves discussion between him and the Commission on ways to improve security and which measures would work if implemented. None of it relates to Tsafendas or the assassination.³⁷²⁹

SAREL JOHANNES VENTER

He was a major in the South African police, attached to the staff of the Divisional Commissioner in Cape Town. His testimony concerns discussions he had in the past regarding security in the House of Assembly. It includes nothing about Tsafendas.³⁷³⁰

ROBERT JOHN MCFARLANE³⁷³¹

³⁷²⁷ Peter Cecil Visser statement to the COE, 3 November 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁷²⁸ Anatole Urbaniak statement to the COE, 3 November 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁷²⁹ Hendrik Klopper testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

³⁷³⁰ Sarel Johannes Venter's statement, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

McFarlane, Secretary to the House of Assembly, gave evidence twice to the Commission, but there is nothing in his statements relevant to Tsafendas, who is not even mentioned. His first testimony mainly concerned internal security arrangements such as the duties of police, reception of parcels and vetting procedures. McFarlane testified for a second time on October 25, 1966, answering questions from the Commission about security arrangements in the House. These ranged over the quality and availability of messengers, screening practices and the question of previous convictions. McFarlane said the current system had operated without fault since 1910 and the House had employed many thousands of messengers.³⁷³²

³⁷³¹ Robert John McFarlane testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA; Robert John McFarlane testimony to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

³⁷³² Robert John McFarlane testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA; Robert John McFarlane testimony to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

STATEMENTS, LETTERS AND MEMORANDA

The following are important statements taken by the SA police on behalf of the Commission, as well as letters³⁷³³ and memoranda sent to the Commission. Several others were found but they did not contain anything significant or that has not been said already.

GENERAL HENDRIK J. VAN DEN BERGH'S MEMORANDUM TO THE COE³⁷³⁴

Memorandum

Testimony of Major-General H. J. Den Bergh - Commentary by Lieutenant General J.M. Keevy, Commissioner of the South African police.

1. The circumstances surrounding the finding of S.A. Police file WD. 10/10/4102 are set out completely in the memorandum C. 8/66/4/1 of 14 October 1966 addressed to me by my Head Office, Pretoria, the original of which has already been submitted to the COE.
2. Paragraphs 2.1 and 2.2 of the same memorandum deals with SA Police Headquarters file C. 6/835/3697 (C. 6/1835/3697 is the correct reference number).
3. As a result of inquiries made by my Head Office, the indications are that this file was destroyed in 1963 when the Security Police moved from Wachthuis to Kompol building.
4. Destruction of files are maintained by the Archives Law 6/1962 which came into force on 14 May 1962 (see Proc. R103 of 1962) and the regulations issued thereunder (see Government Notice No. 1380 of 1963, published in Extraordinary Gazette 595 of 06/09/63). In addition to this the departmental instructions contained in Special Order 14A of 1961 (Annexure A) as read with Standing Order 340 (Annexure B) also applies.
5. In summary, the S.A. Police policy could be set out as follows:
 - a) General correspondence files from Head Office to division offices are kept under the Archives Law 6/1962 and regulations as they appear in Government Notice 1380 of 1963 published in Extraordinary Gazette 595 of 06/09/1963 and standing order 340 as amended. No correspondence files in the latter offices are thus destroyed unless proper authorization from the Director of Archives is obtained. Secret and confidential files are included. Of such files which are destroyed, proper record with archive authorisation affixed thereto, is kept.

³⁷³³ Witnesses who, for whatever reason, were unable to testify physically to the Commission, sent their statements by post.

³⁷³⁴ General H. J. Den Bergh memorandum to the COE, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File VDSO 17-64, NASA.

b) Standing destruction authorisation was obtained from the Director of Archives for the annual destruction of correspondence files in district and Station Commanders' offices, personal files, registers, forms, dockets, etc. in all offices, and it is in terms of the provisions of Order 340 and Special Order (A) 14A / 1961. This policy was also applicable for the year 1963.

6. Files at Headquarters, Pretoria, as well as Division Offices, of the nature of the missing Tsafendas file C. 6/1835/3697 (not C. 6/835/3697 as Home Affairs has it) should, according to existing orders be strictly treated by the provisions of the Archive Law and regulations. This means that a record must be kept of each file that was destroyed or transferred to an archive repository.

7. The S.A. Police maintains a uniform filing system, which however for obvious reasons cannot be used with the Security Police.

8. Concerning the reservation list of illegal immigrants, a list gets sent to Security Head Office, Pretoria, and all border posts which control the entering of persons in the RSA. This aspect has already been dealt with by way of a comprehensive memorandum submitted to the commission.

9. A list on which Tsafendas's name appears has been in the possession of the Security Police since 1965. The question whether they should not have established on 06.09.66 if his name appears on that list before unequivocally declaring that the police knew nothing of him, is an open one. The list covers persons prohibited from entering the country and as such the police accept that a person whose name appears on it, is not in the country.

10. Regarding the lack of safety measures at the Assembly, I want to explain that the whole matter is currently under consideration and review by all the parties concerned.

11. Finally, I refer to the desirability or otherwise that the names of the mentally deranged who could possibly be a threat to the country's rulers and the like, be given to the SA Police by the doctors who treat them. It could serve a useful purpose if their names are kept on file as applications from people who want to be employed in positions of security interest can be selected with greater thoroughness.

Signed by J.M. Keevy. Commissioner of the South African police.

Cape Town 18 October 1966.

CHRISTO VAN³⁷³⁵ MALEN³⁷³⁶

I am an adult white man presently awaiting trial at the Dundee Prison. I make this statement willingly well-knowing that I do so under oath.

In 1964 I was a hard labour prisoner in Standerton Prison. During September of that year I escaped from that prison. I then went to Pretoria where I did odd jobs at private homes. I boarded with Mr Cilliers whose house was behind new flats called Lampfopolis Heights. Before that I boarded with Mr Pretorius in Pretoria West. I also did odd jobs at overseas ambassadorial houses situated against Meintjieskop in Pretoria, so I knew the area very well. I worked as a welder. I also knew the area around Libertas (PM's residence) and often spoke to police guards.

From 1959-1961 I had my own business as welder and plumber and during that time Dennis Stafunus worked for me as a welder and I do not know whether he was Greek or Portuguese or where he lived. I also stayed at Lampfopolis Flats while I had my business and later stayed with Mr Pretorius and then with Mr Cilliers after I escaped from prison and thence to Durban. When I spoke to the police guard at Libertas I often saw a black Dodge car driving past Libertas. There were always three men in the car and one of them was Dennis Stefanus? I do not know the name of the police guard.

In November 1964 at midday while walking in the road about 100 ft. from Libertas the same car with three men sitting in the front stopped next to me. One of the men was Dennis Stefanus who introduced me to the other men and he asked me if I work in the area. One of the other men spoke to Dennis Stefanus in an unknown language which was not Greek or Portuguese with which I am familiar. Dennis Stefanus asked me whether I had access to government departmental houses and I replied that a permit from the Dept. of Public Works was only given to employees, otherwise the premises were out of bounds. I was then asked to help them gain entry as they had seen that I was friendly with the police guard but I told them this was impossible. On the rear seat of the car I noticed a camera with a long attachment in front.

Approximately 3 or 4 days later when I returned to my boarding house sometime between 5 and 6 pm I saw the same parked in the road outside. When I went inside I saw the same three men sitting on a couch in the back porch which was behind my room. They greeted me and then followed me when I entered my room and talked for a while with Dennis Stephanus acting as interpreter and I was asked to help them and that it was not hard work and I would be well paid. One of them then opened a black leather attaché case and took out a sketch pad, asking me to draw a plan of the late Dr. Verwoerd's house and also the house of the Minister of Justice. They again said that they would pay me very well and took out a roll of banknotes which they would give me immediately with more to come once I had given them the plans.

³⁷³⁵ It might be 'von' instead of 'van.' This is a handwritten statement and the name is not very clear.

³⁷³⁶ Christo van Malen's statement to the COE, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

I refused because I thought they were up to no good and were trying to entice me into a trap. I asked them to leave my room after which there was an argument and while I accompanied them to the car Dennis Stephanus attacked me and stabbed me in my face, left arm and also in my back. I do not know who actually stabbed me because it was dark. Mr Cilliers, the landlord then phoned the police, the three men drove away. I was taken to the hospital by the Sunnyside police but I did not want to lay a charge because I was an escaped prisoner and did not want to be identified. I recently heard that Mr Cilliers had died in a police cell in Pretoria. When I returned to the boarding house and was walking to my room I noticed something lying on the ground where the fighting had taken place. I picked it up and when I got to my room I saw that it was photos of Chinese or Asiatics which I could also tell from the writing on the back of the photos. My wife has them and will give them to the police.

In February 1965 I moved from Pretoria to Durban where I lived with Mr Botha in Umbilo, Durban. I was known to the Bothas as Eddie van Malen. Two months after I arrived in Durban I met Dennis Stefanus and Demetry Tsafendas (sic) and accompanied them to their room in a private hotel near to the Durban Railway Station. I have seen photos of Tsafendas (after the assassination of the late Dr. Verwoerd and recognised him as the man introduced to me by Dennis Stefanus in Pretoria and also as one of the men in the black car. A month after I had told them where I lived, Tsafendas approached Mr Botha who agreed to let a room to him for two nights. Tsafendas again spoke about the plans but I ignored him. I moved to another place, but when I subsequently saw Mr Botha he told me that Tsafendas and other strangers often returned to search for me and asked where I was but he never disclosed my whereabouts to them.

PATRICK O'RYAN³⁷³⁷

9 Westminster Road, Lansdown. Teacher at Bishop Lavis High School.

Yesterday K/S/S Gray, stationed at Epping who was stationed at Epping, was with him and told me that he was often in personal contact with Tsafendas. Tsafendas stayed with him from November 1965 to February 1966. He stayed with him for free, as he was broke. He was still a letting agent in 1965. Tsafendas asked him for a room. Tsafendas always behaved like a normal person, except that his interpretations of the Bible differed from his. He believed implicitly that he was a Christian but could not understand that Jesus was first in Heaven and afterwards came to Earth through Maria. He believed that he had a worm in his stomach. He often ate a great deal and also often just lay in bed all day. He also often used the Lord's name in vain unnecessarily and then I told him that a Christian does not do that. Sometimes he went to church with them on Sundays and participated in the services. He never gave a proper spiritual interpretation of the scriptures. Nobody ever visited him there. Letters were delivered to him there. There was one from the Meat Board in which they asked him to interpret at a conference. That was about 3 months ago. He did not go.

He also worked at the City Tramways but his probation time there was not approved. He worked at Diamond Marine Corp. He said that the person who should have trained him did not do so and he became very angry. He called the person a "bastard." He said this to everyone born in South Africa like that. He apparently nearly lost his life on one occasion when on the boat taking them to the "Barge" and this frightened him and he asked me to pray with him. When he prayed he burst into tears. After that he was normal again. He also recounted that while he was somewhere in a Portuguese prison that he had been hit on his head and how someone else was also hit like that until he died. He never wanted to repeat that story in front of other people. He said that he had stayed at two places in Observatory. They took him to a place in Devon Street in Woodstock where he then stayed. He also apparently lived in Mouille Point and Vredehoek, and also at a hotel, which name I cannot remember. He applied to the French Consulate for work. They must have his references. He said that his mother was non-white. He received a letter from a John Machletos from overseas which had been forwarded to him from Marine Diamond. He did not smoke or drink to his knowledge.

³⁷³⁷ Patrick O' Ryan statement to the COE, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

GORDON WINTER'S STATEMENT TO THE COMMISSION³⁷³⁸

This is s statement by Gordon Winter, a reporter employed by POST newspapers in their offices at 14 Upper Darling Street, Cape Town.

I, Gordon Winter, swear on oath that the following statement by me is completely true:

Monday, September 26, 1966, I visited Mr. Omar Vallie, aged 65, at his cafe, "The Star Cafe" in Tennant Street, District Six, Cape Town. I asked Omar Vallie if he was the father of one Isak Vallie. Omar Vallie said he was the father of Isak. I asked Omar Vallie to direct me to Isak. Omar told me that Isak was working. I asked Omar to give a message to Isak. I asked Omar to tell Isak that I wished to speak to him. I gave Omar my telephone number at work (25601 Cape Town) and asked him to tell Isak to telephone me. Omar said he would do this.

Next day, on Tuesday, September 27, 1966, a man telephoned me. He said his name was Isak Vallie. I told him that I wished to interview him in connection with rumours which I had heard concerning Demetrio Tsafendas, the alleged assassin of Dr. Verwoerd. Isak told me that he would talk to me but not on the telephone. I asked Isak where he was speaking from. He said a shop in Upper Darling Street. I went to this shop and met Isak Vallie. I told him that I had heard a rumour that he had met a man named Tsafendas. I said I understood that Tsafendas had described himself as a Russian sailor (To Isak Vallie). Isak told me that this was true.

Isak then told me that Demitrio Tsafendas had entered his father's cafe in Tennant Street, at about 10:30 one morning about three or four weeks before the death of Dr. Verwoerd. Isak said he had been present when Tsafendas sat down in the cafe and was offered a cup of tea by his father (Mr. Omar Vallie.) Isak told me that Tsafendas had spoken of liking Indian food. Isak told me that Tsafendas had laboured this point and that he, Tsafendas had asked how the food was cooked. Isak told me that he was of the opinion, at the time, that Tsafendas was trying to "scrounge" free food.

Isak told me that Tsafendas had said he was off a Russian ship and that he was from Russia. Isak said Tsafendas had spoken of living in Woodstock. Isak said Tsafendas had spoken of looking for a job. Isak said he was behind the service hatch at one point when he saw Tsafendas talking to a man named "Berny." Isak said he had later heard Tsafendas tell "Berny" that he, Tsafendas, had had "dealings" with Russian fishing vessels off the coast of Walvis Bay. I asked Isak how this subject had been broached. Isak said, and I quote him, "He volunteered the information that he had had dealings with the Russian ships. He (Tsafendas) said he had changed clothes for food." (I took it that he meant Tsafendas changed clothes for food with the Russian fishermen.)

³⁷³⁸ Gordon Winter's statement to the COE, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12. File: die Post aangeleentheid, NASA.

I then asked Isak to introduce me to his father, Omar Vallie. Isak walked with me from the shop in Upper Darling Street, and took me to his father's cafe in Tennant Street. There, I asked Omar Vallie if he had met Tsafendas. Omar Vallie said he had done so. Omar Vallie confirmed exactly what his son Isak had told me with one exception. Omar Vallie told me that he had not heard Tsafendas talk about having dealings with Russian fishermen in Walvis Bay. At this point, a man who I was later to learn was Isak's brother, Sulaiman Vallie, entered the cafe. He was introduced to me. He then joined the conversation.

I then told Omar Vallie and his two sons, Isak and Sulaiman, that I intended publishing their story in POST. They said they did not want the story in POST. I persuaded them to let me publish the story when I explained that the Prime Minister had suggested that any person having information, however trivial, about Tsafendas, should come forward. Isak told me, in front of his brother Sulaiman and his father, Omar Vallie, that the family had not reported the matter to the police. Isak said: "No, we were scared of getting involved because my brother and I have had problems with the Security Branch in the past and we were afraid we might be suspected of being mixed up with Tsafendas"

Isak then told me that Sulaiman had just finished serving a 12-month jail sentence in connection with the possession of explosives. Isak said Sulaiman had been released from jail in early August. Isak also said he had been involved with the Security Branch some time ago in connection with the smuggling of letters from prisoners on Robben Island. Isak said he had been questioned by Security Branch men who had also visited the shop where he works. I remember that Isak said something about the shop address being used as a "cover" address.

I asked Omar Vallie and Isak Vallie how they knew for sure that the man who came into their cafe was, in fact, Demetrio Tsafendas. The two men told me that they had recognised Tsafendas's photograph in the newspapers just after the murder of Dr. Verwoerd. They said they were quite positive about their identification of Tsafendas and that "Berny" had also identified Tsafendas. I asked if I could interview "Berny." Isak sent someone to look for "Berny" I gather, because shortly afterwards a little boy entered the cafe and spoke to Isak. Isak immediately told me that "Berny" was not at home. I dropped the idea of speaking to "Berny" because I was satisfied that Omar and Isak Vallie were telling me the truth. I could see no reason why they should be lying about meeting Tsafendas because they had already indicated that they did not want the matter publicised. I asked Mr. Omar Vallie to pose for a picture. He refused and I was unable to persuade him to pose. I asked Isak to pose and he refused. I finally persuaded him to pose and I took several pictures of him in the doorway of the cafe. In the background of my pictures the figure of his brother can be seen, (his face is clear and proves that he was present when I took the pictures.)

Isak does not know that his brother Sulaiman is also in the picture, I should imagine, so it would be interesting to see if he, Isak, admits that his brother Sulaiman was present when I took the photographs.) Omar Vallie was rather unhappy about me taking pictures but his son Isak talked him into letting me publish the pictures and my story. The old man (Omar) made it clear that he was worried in case the police were, "suspicious" about the family connection with Tsafendas. I pointed out that it was better for the family to admit knowing Tsafendas, rather than face the possibility, that Tsafendas might, conceivably, mention that he knew them (in court evidence). This point was made by me to influence the Vallie family into letting me publish their story. Isak grabbed at this and said to his father that it would "look bad" if Tsafendas stated in court that he knew the Vallie family. Omar Vallie agreed that if he was a policeman he would also be suspicious.

At about 3 p.m. Isak Vallie came into my office on the third floor of Qranje House, 14 Upper Darling Street. He asked me NOT to publish the article about his family having met Tsafendas ... I immediately realised that the family were getting worried of possible repercussions. With this in mind I carefully read through my notes of my interview and asked Isak Vallie if they were correct. Isak confirmed that my notes were correct and he substantiated everything I had written. This is very important because two others were present in the office when I read my notes to Isak Vallie. The two men were; MR. MIKE NORTON, Cape Editor of POST and Mr. David ANDREWS, a freelance reporter, for POST.

I talked to Isak Vallie at length and persuaded him to let me publish the article. When he left the office I made a careful point of asking Mr. Norton and Mr. Andrews to remember that Isak had quite clearly confirmed my notes of my interview with him. I pointed out that Isak Vallie might possibly deny my article after it was published. (I have experienced this dozens of times in the last six years while I have worked in South Africa as a journalist.)

Earlier in the day I had asked Isak to sign a statement permitting me to publish my article just in case he DID try to deny it.)

On my return to my office I asked Mr. Norton to witness this by placing his initial to it. He did so. It would be interesting to discover if Isak Vallie DENIES having signed this piece of paper. Next day, on Wednesday, September 28, Isak Vallie came into my office again. He again asked me not to print the article. Mr. Norton was present during this interview. I had already written my article and I allowed Isak Vallie to read it in the presence of Mr. Norton. After Isak Vallie had read the article I made a special note of asking him (Isak Vallie) if I had made any mistakes. He said my article was 100% correct and factual but he asked me to delete the mention I had made of his being questioned by the Security Branch in connection with the smuggling of letters from prisoners on Robben Island.

I asked Isak Vallie why he wished me to delete this part. He said he was worried about the Security Branch. I pointed out to him that the Security Branch ALREADY knew about this because he had been questioned by them— so why should he worry? The logic of this baffled Isak and he agreed, rather reluctantly, to let me leave this in. Isak asked me not to publish his picture. I also talked him out of continuing in this vein by stating that I would telephone Johannesburg to request that his picture be held out. (In all truth, I misled Isak and had no intention of telephoning Johannesburg to make this request.) Before Isak left my office I made quite certain that he again confirmed the accuracy of my article— in Mr. Norton's presence. Isak definitely agreed that my article was completely factual.

When Isak had gone I asked Mr. Norton to keep the matter fresh in his mind because I said I was convinced that Isak would deny my story later. Today, October 5, 1966, I was telephoned by Sergeant van Wyk of the Security Branch. He asked me to visit him in his office. I did so at 3 pm. Mr. van Wyk told me that he had taken an affidavit from Isak and also an affidavit from Omar. Mr. van Wyk asked me to give him my version. I gave Mr. van Wyk all the details and showed him the signed permission to publish by Isak Vallie. Mr. van Wyk was quite clearly doubtful about my side of the story. I asked him point-blank if he believed me or if he believed the two Vallie men. Mr. van Wyk made no bones about it. He said he believed the two Vallie men. I asked him why. He replied "I have two affidavits." I then offered to make an affidavit. Mr. van Wyk said he was "not interested." I explained how I had talked to Isak Vallie, and gone through my interview again, in the presence of Mr. Norton— and that I would ask Mr. Norton to sign an affidavit supporting me. Mr. van Wyk said he was "not interested." Mr. van Wyk said he had "completed his investigations into the matter” and that he intended to hand the “file” over to Mr. Justice J.T. van Wyk, who is heading the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's death.

I pointed out to Mr. van Wyk that his “file” would be rather one-sided if he did not include my affidavit and the affidavits-of my witnesses. I also pointed out that I would like him (Mr. van Wyk) to take a statement from Sulaiman Vallie to see if it checked with what Isak Vallie and Omar Vallie had said. Mr. van Wyk replied: “That is a waste of time. Sulaiman would only tell the same story as his father and brother.” I pointed out to Mr. van Wyk that I thought him clever enough to find out if Sulaiman's version was true or not. But Mr. van Wyk again repeated that he had closed his investigation and that he was “not interested” in seeing Sulaiman. I asked Mr. van Wyk to call in Sulaiman Vallie and let me question Sulaiman in his (Mr. van Wyk's) presence. Mr. van Wyk said he was not interested in doing this. I asked Mr. van Wyk if he would believe me if I made an affidavit. In the presence of a witness, Mr. van Wyk replied: “No.” I then pointed out that Mr. van Wyk was clearly of the opinion that I would lie on oath and that this was defamatory of myself.

At this point the witness, I think he is also a Security Branch man, walked away. During my interview with Mr. van Wyk I told him that I had not written the Tsafendas article simply for sensationalism. I told Mr. van Wyk that I was of the opinion, after speaking to Isak and Omar Vallie, that I was entitled to think the matter of some importance — even if later it was to be ascertained that Tsafendas was merely lying to the two Vallie men. Mr. van Wyk made a great play on my use of my phrase “I was of the opinion” and he told me; “You are not entitled to write your opinion.” I take strong exception to Mr. van Wyk's attitude in this whole matter and for this reason, I submit this sworn statement.

Signed ... Gordon Winter

Agreed to & witnessed ... (Indecipherable name)

Agreed to & witnessed... (Indecipherable name)

6/10/1966

The following is part of the second statement by Gordon Winter to the Commission. This is only the second page of the statement as its first page was not found at the archives.

GORDON WINTER'S SECOND STATEMENT TO THE COMMISSION³⁷³⁹

I asked Isak if he wished me to delete this part. He said he did because he was "worried" about the Security Branch. I pointed out to Isak that the Security Branch already knew because they had questioned him on the matter so why should I leave that out of the story? The logic of this appeared to bemuse Isak because he then reluctantly, allowed me to leave it in.

Isak asked me not to publish a photograph of him. I told him that it was rather late because my firm printed its Cape edition on Wednesday. But I told Isak that I would put a telephone call through to Johannesburg and ask them not to use the photograph. Isak appeared satisfied by this and after some discussion - during which I said he must not be afraid of the Security Branch (if he was tailing the truth) Isak agreed that the story be published. He left us with the impression he was not happy about the publication of the story however and that he had been "talked into it" by me.

Just before he left I again got him to confirm that my article, as read by him, was factual. In Mr. Norton's presence, Isak agreed that my story was completely correct. When Isak had left the office I asked Mr. Norton to keep the matter fresh in his mind because, I said, I was convinced Isak would deny my story when he read it in the newspaper. Norton asked me if I intended telephoning Johannesburg to ask them to take out the photograph of Isak. I told Mr. Norton that I was not going to make the request and that when I made this remark to Isak, I had had no intention of doing so.

I wrote my article in good faith, firmly believing that I was entitled to bring the matter into the open. It may be ascertained that Tsafendas, if he did make the statements as alleged by Omar and Isak Vallie (to me), was deliberately telling them lies. On the other hand he may not have been. I was of the opinion, when I wrote my article, that this was a matter for the police to thrash out. I would like, at this stage, to make it quite clear that I realised the Security Branch would approach me- after the publication of my story. I pointed this out to Mr. Norton BEFORE the article was published. For this reason, I submit that it is clear that I could hardly have fabricated the statements which Omar and Isak Vallie have now repudiated.

³⁷³⁹ Gordon Winter statement to the COE, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12. File: die Post aangeleentheid, NASA.

Signed ... Gordon Winter

Agreed to as correct as far as I am concerned M. Norton.

Agreed-to as-correct as far as I am concerned ... (indecipherable name)

Cape Town. 12.10.66.

Sworn to before me at Cape Town this 12th day of October 1977.

D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505. Commissioner of Oaths.

COMMENTS ON WINTER'S EVIDENCE TO THE COMMISSION

According to the Commission's schedule, Winter was down to give oral evidence on 14 October; he later confirmed that he gave oral evidence to the Commission. However, his statement, like so many others, has gone missing and was not found in the archives. Winter is aware that his statement has disappeared; more importantly, he knows why and who was responsible for this. He told David Beresford in 1998:

“I also wish to stress that H J van den Bergh made quite sure that my evidence to the Commission of Inquiry in Verwoerd's death (that I had discovered that Tsafendas had definite links with Russian seamen and that Tsafendas spoke Russian) was completely (and illegally) eradicated from the minutes of that Inquiry ... All H J wanted the public to believe was that Tsafendas was totally mad and that if he managed to get out of Death Row he would definitely kill again.”³⁷⁴⁰

OMARJEE VALLIE³⁷⁴¹

Indian male, owner of the Star Café in Cape Town.

³⁷⁴⁰ Gordon Winter to David Beresford, 8 September 1998. From David Beresford's personal collection.

³⁷⁴¹ Omarjee Vallie statement to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12. File: die Post aangeleentheid, NASA.

About three to four weeks before Dr. Verwoerd was murdered, I was standing in my café when I noticed a white man standing outside in the street. He stood there for some time and I then called him inside. He entered the café and I offered him a cup of tea. While he was drinking the tea I asked him where he came from and he told me that he came here with a steamer. I asked him what kind of a steamer and he told me a Russian Steamer. I then asked him when and he told me a long time ago. He then told me he was staying in Woodstock and that he was looking for a job. Some customers then entered the shop and I attended them. The white man finished the tea and left the café without saying anything.

After the murder, I saw a photo in a newspaper and identified it as the photo of the man who was in my café. The name underneath the photo was given as Demetrio Tsafendas. My son, Isaac Vallie, was not in the café at the time but when I saw the photo in the paper I told him that I gave this man Tsafendas a cup of tea. About a week ago, a reporter of the "Post" called at the Café and my son Isaac then told him what happened. I was present when my son talked to the reporter. He never told the reporter that we overheard Tsafendas talking to another man, telling him that he had dealings with seamen from Russian fishing vessels. I never knew Tsafendas was working at S.W.A. or Walvis Bay. Tsafendas never talked to anybody while he was in the café. I only had the conversation with him because when I saw him outside, I thought he was a member of the C.I.D. looking for somebody. The reporter never asked me whether I made a report to the police and I never told him that I did not report it because the police will have suspicions about him meeting my family.

I never reported Mr Tsafendas's visit to my shop to the police because I did not think that his visit could help them in their investigations. To me it seems silly to use the words "Tsafendas posed as Russian sailor" because nothing of that sort was ever said by Tsafendas and it was also never mentioned during the conversation with the reporter. The fact that Tsafendas told me that he came to the Republic on a "Russian steamer" does not mean that he said he was a sailor on a Russian ship and the reporter was never given to understand that it was the case.

Statement taken by ... (Indecipherable name) D/Sgt.

ISAAC VALLIE³⁷⁴²

I am an adult Indian man living at 1 Greatmore Street, Woodstock. I have just been shown the newspaper "POST" by the Police. The person Demitrio Tsafendas is totally unknown to me. I was not in my father's café on the day when, it is alleged, he came in to drink a cup of tea. I am indeed aware of the report which appears in the Post newspaper. About 14 days ago I did have a conversation with someone who works for Post and told him that my father told me that Tsafendas was in our café once. About a week ago Mr. Gordon Winter, a reporter at the Post came to see my father and I and I did talk to him then after he said that he wanted to write a story about Tsafendas. That was when I told him that my father says that a white man, whose photo he had seen in a newspaper was recognized by him as Tsafendas; this was about 3 weeks before the murder of the late Dr. Verwoerd. He was standing in front of our café and my father invited him inside and served him with tea. Upon my father's question about where he lived, he answer that he lived in Woodstock and that he had arrived in the Republic of SA from a Russian ship. I did not Mr... (The second page of the statement is missing).

MOGAMAT ISAACS³⁷⁴³

Sirs, Mr. Gordon Winter, of our staff, has asked me to confirm that I gave him the tip-off about the Vallie family having met Demitrio Tsafendas and that they had stated Tsafendas had mentioned that he was a Russian. This is correct. I told Mr. Winter these facts on September 24, 1966. I told him that he should go to see Isak Vallie because there might be a story for him there. Mr. Winter asked me for more details. I told him that I had spoken to Isak Vallie and that Isak Vallie had told me that Demitrio Tsafendas had once visited his father's cafe, The Star Cafe, in Tennant Street, District Six, Cape Town. I told Mr. Winter that Isak claimed that Tsafendas had spoken of being from Russia and that he (Tsafendas) had also spoken of having had some dealings with Russian fishing vessels off Walvis Bay.

Mr. Winter asked me why I did not write the story. I told Mr. Winter that the Vallies did not want me to write the story. Mr. Winter then said Post would still want the story and that I should go and get it. I told him that I did not want to get involved with the Vallie family because I knew that they had good connections in the underworld. I also told Mr. Winter that the Vallie family were associated with Sherif Khan, the well-known Johannesburg underworld figure. I told Mr. Winter that there was a risk that I would be beaten up if I wrote a story which the Vallies did not want publishing.

³⁷⁴² Isaac Vallie statement to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12. File: die Post aangeleentheid, NASA.

³⁷⁴³ Mogamat Isaacs statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12. File: die Post aangeleentheid, NASA.

Mr. Winter then said he would go and get the story from the Vallie family because he was not scared of being beaten up. I told Mr. Winter the address of the cafe (The Star Cafe in Tennant St.) and I drew a sketch for him so that he would find it easily. Since Mr. Winter's article appeared on our front page, on October 2, 1966, I have deliberately avoided the Vallie family just in case they may blame me for the fact that Mr. Winter wrote about them — apparently against their wishes.

I SWEAR THAT THIS IS THE TRUTH, THE WHOIE TRUTH, and NOTHING BUT THE TRUTH, SO HELP ME GOD.

Signed ... Mogamet Isaacs

Witnessed ... Gordon Tobin

GORDON TOBIN'S MEMORANDUM TO THE COE³⁷⁴⁴

20 October 1966.

Subject: Vallie article in POST.

Sirs, I was present in the Cape Town offices of POST on September 24 1966, when Mr. M. "Sharkey" Isaacs, (a POST reporter) told Mr. Gordon Winter that he did not want to write an article about Isak Vallie and Demitrio Tsafendas. Mr. Isaacs told Mr. Winter that, according to Isak Vallie, Tsafendas had once been to his father's cafe in Tennant Street, District Six and that Tsafendas had mentioned that he was a Russian and that he had had dealings, swopping food for clothing, with fishermen on Russian fishing vessels off the coast of Walvis Bay, SWA. Mr. Winter asked Mr. Isaacs why he did not want to write the article about this matter. Mr. Isaacs replied that he was scared of being beaten up by the Vallie family because the Vallie family did not want the article published. Mr. Winter then said he would go and interview the Vallie family and get the story. At that stage I left the office.

³⁷⁴⁴ Gordon Tobin memorandum to the COE, 20 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12. File: die Post aangeleentheid, NASA.

Signed ... Gordon Tobin.

Witnessed ... (indecipherable name)

A.J. HARRISON'S LETTER³⁷⁴⁵

The person referred to arrived in the shop at approximately 9.05 a.m. on September 6th, just after I had opened - he was the first customer and no one else entered the shop whilst I was serving him. He wore grey, baggy flannels, a white shirt and a light-coloured jacket. His general appearance gave me the impression that he was either a fisherman or a merchant seaman. He spoke fluent English and asked me for the prices of the sheath knives displayed in the shop window. I showed him two sheath knives and after looking at the first one, he placed it on the counter and then removed the second one from the sheath, asking why the knife was so tight to remove. I explained that it was a metal sheath with a spring clip, which prevented the knife from slipping out.

He then replaced the knife in the sheath and slipped it on the inside of his trousers with the leather top of the sheath facing outwards. He then removed the knife and once more asked the price. He tendered a R10.00 note from his wallet in payment. Whilst I was getting his change, he looked at an advertisement of a pistol and enquired whether one needed to have a licence to purchase same. I informed him in the affirmative. I did not enquire his reason for purchasing the knife and he tendered no reason for doing so. This was the first time I had seen this person and when I was called to the Identification Parade, I was absolutely certain that the person I identified was the person who had purchased the knife from me and now known to our nation as Demitrio Tsafendas.

WILLEM NEL VISSER³⁷⁴⁶

³⁷⁴⁵ A.J. Harrison letter to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File 3. NASA.

³⁷⁴⁶ Willem Nel Visser statement to the COE, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

No.29097 Sergeant.

I am a sergeant in the South African Police stationed at Durban Central where I was in charge of the Immorality section.

On a date before the 11th of September I was spoken to by Mr. Brian Rudden who is connected to the Sunday Times as a reporter. Mr. Rudden wanted to know if I knew the alleged assassin - Mr. Tsafendas - of Mr. Dr. Verwoerd. I shared that I knew Tsafendas simply as an interpreter in the Regional Courts of Durban where he (Tsafendas) worked as interpreter in a fornication case I handled. Mr. Rudden wanted to know what Tsafendas's attitude towards the Immorality Law was and I notified him the following: "That Tsafendas have asked what people say when I arrest them under the Immorality Law and whether I catch a lot of these cases. That Tsafendas was interested no more and no less in such business than a normal member of the public is interested when they hear what kind of cases I deal with." Mr. Rudden also wanted to take a portrait of me to publish in the "Sunday Times" which I refused to allow, because of Captain du Toit, my commanding officer, had not given permission. The report of Mr. Rudden is mere sensationism and untrue.

Durban. 17/10/66. 1.35 p.m.

HELEN STRUTHERS³⁷⁴⁷

White woman, aged 32 years, Greyville, Durban.

I am an adult White woman, resident and employed at the above address.

During late June or early July, 1965, on a Sunday evening, a White male who had the appearance of a Greek, paid a visit to me. He introduced himself to me as Demetrios. I accepted that he was Mr Demetrios.

I have seen a photograph of the assassin of the late Dr. Verwoerd and identified the photo as being the same person who paid the visit to me in 1965 and who will be referred to as Demetrios hereafter. Mr Demetrios said that he had come to thank me for having visited with him whilst he was in hospital. At that stage, his hand was bandaged. I pointed out to him that he was mistaken and that I had never visited him. Mr Demetrios said that he belonged to our faith, The Fellowship of Christ, and I accordingly invited him into my house. We did not discuss anything along political lines and Mr Demetrios did not make his political beliefs known to me. He asked if he could see me again, apparently to promote a personal relationship, but I rejected his request and I also rejected to correspond with him. After about an hour, Mr Demetrios left my house and that was the first and last time that I had ever seen or heard from him. Mr Demetrios did not relate his travels to me and there was very little else that we discussed.

Helen Struthers.

The above statement was taken by ... (Indecipherable name) ... 40205 D/Sgt.

Durban. 12.50 p.m. 19/10/66

³⁷⁴⁷ Helen Struthers statement to the COE, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

DR. WILLEM LODEWICUS DANIEL MATTHYS VENTER³⁷⁴⁸

Adult White Male, N.G Minister, Parow.

On 06/09/66 at about 2:18 pm I was in the Assembly. The bells had already rung and we waited for the Speaker to enter. My position is near Dr. Verwoerd (deceased's) chair. While there were still members walking past, Mr. Jan Visse made the remark - "Look, that guy is not properly dressed yet." He referred to the messenger (D. Tsafendas), now the accused. I saw accused fiddling with his clothes near his pants, where you usually tie your suspenders. I saw him take something shiny from his pants and pointed Mr. Visses' attention to it. By then Dr. Verwoerd was already in the hall and had taken his seat.

Accused very quickly approached from the big door heading in the direction of Dr. Verwoerd. I was under the impression that he wanted to pass behind the Speaker's chair before the Speaker came. When the accused was right behind Dr. Verwoerd, he bent over and disappeared from my sight. Immediately after that, I observed an expression of shock and surprise on deceased's face. I saw the accused partially behind Dr. Verwoerd and noticed that his hand was moving up and down swiftly. I saw no knife until Dr. Verwoerd slightly fell forward and I then saw the accused with a knife in his hand, and he then again brought his hand down and stabbed Dr. Verwoerd in the neck.

Several other members and I jumped up. Chaos ruled. Some people grabbed the accused and someone shouted "Get the knife." Accused was thrown to the ground halfway across the bench and his hand with the knife was near me. I grabbed the hand and forced the fingers open to take the knife. His fingers were clenched around the knife. After the accused was overwhelmed, I put the knife on the table in front of the Speaker chair, where the police had taken it.

Cape Town. 19/10.1966

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

³⁷⁴⁸ Dr. Willem Lodewicus Matthys Venter statement to the COE, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

VIOLET IRENE MANNING³⁷⁴⁹

E/F/A. Cape Town

I am a housewife residing at the above address. I let rooms at No. 7 Prince Street.

Approximately October-November 1965 I had rooms advertised at the latter place and Demetrio Tsafendas answered my advert and came to see me. He rented Room 3 next to the Ferreiras. It was a serviced room but I found him making his own bed. When he came to me he was well-dressed, well-spoken, and gave a good impression. I thought him to be a Greek. For a few weeks he attracted no unfavourable attention, until Mrs Ferreira came to me to complain that he was a nuisance. She said he was going into her kitchen to fetch water and that he was spilling water on the floor. I spoke to Tsafendas, but after some time, the Ferreiras complained again. When he was interviewed, he said that Mrs Ferreira was blackmailing him, I had given him instructions not to go into her kitchen, so I gave him notice to leave at the end of the month, which was two days later. He returned my keys at the end of the month and left.

During his stay, I regularly inspected his room. I also spoke to him. He told me he had just come from Mozambique and that he was looking for a café or catering business to buy. From his general appearance, he appeared to be a businessman. When he paid me, he had a bundle of notes and I took him to be a man of means. During the days he went out, I thought to look for a business. He never spoke politics that I know of. In his room I saw two good suitcases, a box with pots and pans, a good briefcase etc. He received no visitors that I know of.

V.I. Manning. Cape Town. 21/10/66.

Statement taken by me. D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

³⁷⁴⁹ Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

JOHANNES CHRISTOFFEL BROODRYK³⁷⁵⁰

I'm a Captain in the South African Police stationed at The Grays, Johannesburg and attached to the security police.

On Friday, October 21, 1966 at about 11 am I was present when Brigadier Bester interviewed Rowley Israel Arenstein at office Nr. 505, The Grays, Johannesburg in connection with the assassination of the late Dr. Verwoerd. Arenstein denied knowing Tsafendas, that Tsafendas ever was a client of his or that he at any time granted him an interview. During the interview it was clear that he was completely honest with the police in connection with this matter. He also stated that his secretary, Mrs. Suddes would know if Tsafendas was at any time in his office. He sent a letter to Mrs. Suddes, directing her to give me all possible help, and handed the letter over to me.

Saturday afternoon, 22 October 1966, I interviewed Mrs. Suddes in Durban. I took an affidavit from her. It was clear to me that she was completely honest with me and gave all possible assistance. She told me that she did not share the political views of her employer, Mr. Arenstein, but was not willing to mention it in her statement as she was still in his employ. From past experience, I know that Mrs. Suddes is fully aware of all matters relating to this law firm. I showed her a file containing various newspaper photographs.

Johannesburg 24.10. 1966.

MAURICE KLEIN³⁷⁵¹

25 October 1966.

Mr. Maurice Klein, the owner of Wm. Rawbone en Kie, a local hardware store, claimed that Mr. Tsafendas was in his shop on September 6th 1966. Mr. Klein said that Mr. Tsafendas entered his shop and requested the price of a sheath knife which was in the showcase. Mr.

³⁷⁵⁰ Johannes Christoffel Broodryk statement to the COE, 24 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁷⁵¹ Maurice Klein testimony to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

Klein told him it was R3.30 and Mr. Tsafendas bought the sheath knife. The blade of the knife was approximately 5½ inches long. Mr. Klein did not ask Mr. Tsafendas what his purpose was with the knife, even though he knew it was a dangerous weapon. Mr. Klein was not aware of Article 10 Act 54 of 1949, which entails that the owner of the shop has to enquire to the reason why a client wanted a knife. Mr. Klein stated that he has never seen Mr. Tsafendas before.

ALBERT VERCUAL³⁷⁵²³⁷⁵³

25 October 1966.

Mr. Vercual; a foreman at F.A. Poole, an engineering firm, personally knew Mr. Tsafendas. F.A. Poole was also the place where Mr. Tsafendas worked from 7th February 1964 until 10th July 1964 under Mr. Vercual's management. Mr. Vercual claimed that Mr. Tsafendas was an intelligent man, just untidy and lazy in rounding off his work. He also said that Mr. Tsafendas was a very friendly, social and talkative person, but he was always looking to quarrel with the white workers. Mr. Vercual would usually receive complaints from the other (white) foremen, but never from the black workers. Mr. Vercual would always reprimand Mr. Tsafendas, but Mr. Tsafendas would normally just not respond.

On one occasion Mr. Vercual had an argument with Demitrio about his poor workmanship and he (Demitrio) was very angry about it. Later Mr. Vercual got reports that Demitrio wanted to fight with the foremen. Mr. Vercual went to him and told him: "You are always causing trouble. I want you to leave." Demitrio walked off. And later returned to Mr. Vercual's office asking why he had to leave. Mr. Vercual again asked him to leave, this causing Mr. Tsafendas to turn around and grabbing the door handle – his knuckles turned white – and he said to Mr. Vercual: "You are like your bloody Government, but I will get you, and I will get your Prime Minister too!"

Mr. Vercual stated that he never got the impression that Mr. Tsafendas wasn't right in his mind. F.A. Poole moved from their warehouse and Mr. Tsafendas was tasked with organizing the move and he handled it effortlessly. Mr. Tsafendas was busy sawing of the ³⁷⁵² Albert Vercual statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁷⁵³ His surname in his statement to the police is given as Vercoueil.

letters which made up the company's name and then dropping the letters to the ground, upon which Mr. Vercual saw this and told him not to drop the letters as they will be re-used. Mr. Vercual walked on and heard Mr. Tsafendas say: "The bloody foreman does not know what he is doing." Mr. Tsafendas never spoke of his worm. His threat against the First Minister was the only incident that Mr. Vercual knows about.

JOHANNA HENDRIEKA MULRENAN³⁷⁵⁴

U/W/Vrou – Woman, Green Point.

I reside at the above address; I am a housewife and rent out 5 rooms in the house to men.

During September 1965 Tsafendas stayed with me for 1 or 2 weeks. The room was advertised. Although I accepted him as a boarder in one of the rooms, I soon observed that he was not neat in his room and told him to look for another place. He prepared food in my kitchen and was a big eater. He also never removed his big hat and wore a coat all the time. He worked at the power station during his stay with me. Apart from the fact that he was messy, he never drank and that sort of thing. He said was from overseas, was Portuguese and spoke many languages. I know nothing more of his movements or anything else about him.

J.H. Mulrenan. Cape Town. 26/10/1966.

HANNO PROBST³⁷⁵⁵

C/o Mangete Catholic Mission Station. Mangete Zululand

I am a European male born in Germany and am at present the Priest in charge of the Mangete Catholic Mission station in Zululand. Sometime during 1965, I cannot remember the exact date, but it must have been during June, I went to the town of Mandini to collect mail and do some purchases at the Mandini store. At the Mandini store, as I emerged I noticed a person, who appeared to me to be a coloured, sitting on a bench in front of the store. I noticed that this person's one arm was wrapped in bandage and as he looked rather lost, I approached him to find out whether I could be of any assistance. I immediately realised that this person was not a South African because of his dark complexion and general appearance. I even told him that he was not a South African but that he came from Mozambique. He appeared to be much surprised at this remark I passed and asked me how I knew he came from Mozambique. I told him that I had travelled a lot and knew, by his appearance that he was actually a Mozambique citizen. This person thereupon informed me that he too, had done much travelling and that he could speak eight different languages.

³⁷⁵⁴ Johanna Hendrieka Mulrenan statement to the COE, 26 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

³⁷⁵⁵ Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

I tried him out in different languages and found that he could speak Spanish, Czech, Italian, German, the Munich Dialect of German and English fluently. During our conversation he also mentioned to me that he had been to Germany and actually stated that he had visited Munich in Germany. Because very few people in South Africa can speak or understand the Munich Dialect of German I spoke to him in this dialect. I was surprised to hear that he could speak this dialect so well. I gained the impression that this person was very well trained in the different languages and I actually said to him that he must have had very good teacher in Moscow to be able to speak the different languages so well. To my surprise he admitted have been in Moscow.

During our conversation, this person asked me to what church I belonged apparently because he recognised me as a priest. I informed him that I was attached to the Roman Catholic Church. He then suddenly started to swear at the Roman Catholic Church and also at the Portuguese Government in Mozambique, stating that the Nuns in Mozambique Hospitals inject the natives to get rid of them and that the Portuguese Government approves of this. I became annoyed at his groundless accusation and told him that he was a communist and that he reacted like a Zimba of the Congo. I told him what the Catholic Church does for the natives and that it definitely not to get rid of them, but on the contrary to help them. I told him that we have a law against Communists in this country and that he would not get far in South Africa and that it would be better if he returned to Mozambique. I then left him. This person did not introduce himself to me and at that stage I did not know what his name was or where he was employed.

The following morning I again went to Mandini. As I had given the matter thought (I refer to my meeting with the European the previous day) I decided to bring the matter to the attention of the security officer at Mendini Paper Factory (SAPPI). I spoke to a Mr. van Vuuren at this Factory and told him what had transpired between me and the other person the previous day. I told Mr. van Vuuren that this man was a Communist and a dangerous person. I did not know who he was because he did not introduce himself to me but I gave Mr. van Vuuren a description of him. I cannot remember that I pointed him out to Mr. van Vuuren at his office. I can however, recollect that this person told me during our conversation that he worked for Roberts construction at Mendini.

After the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, I heard on the radio that the assassin was of Portuguese origin and that he could speak eight different languages. Mention was also made of the fact that he used to work at Mandeni. I immediately realised then that the person I had occasion to meet at the Mendini Store must be the assassin, I have seen this man only once, on this particular day at the Mandini store and never again. After the murder of Dr. Verwoerd I saw a photo of the alleged assassin in some newspapers and recognised the man of which the photo was published, as the same person I had spoken to at the Mandeni store. The name of this person was given in the newspapers as Demetrios Tsafendas.

On a certain day, subsequent to my meeting with Tsafendas at the Mandini Store, I spoke to Coloured male Gladstone Dunn who resides in the Mangete Reserve. I mentioned the incidence at the store to him and also gave him a description of Demetrios Tsafendas. He then informed me that the same man had on one occasion visited him and had stayed with him overnight. I have not seen Demtrios Tsafendas in the Mangete Reserve or at any other place, except Mandini on that one occasion. I however suspect that he must have had some influence on the inhabitants of the Mangete Reserve. I say this because, during the period Demetrios Tsafendas stayed at Mandini, the youngsters in the Mangete Reserve became unruly and aggressive. This, however, is only suspicion because since the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd everything became quiet again and the youngsters controllable. I have reported the incidence with Demetrios Tsafendas only to Mr. van Vuuren at the Mandini Paper Factory. I have not reported to the South African Police or to any individual Policeman. The first time I have mentioned the incidence to the South African Police was on 9.9.1965 when I was approached by D/Sergt. Els of the Security Police Empangeni to whom I have made a statement.

Mangete. 13.10.1966 at 11.30 am.

Statement taken by me ... (Indecipherable name) Captain

COLONEL SPENGLER³⁷⁵⁶

Cape Town, 13 October 1966.

Captain Marx declares the following:

On 5.3.1964, Sergeant Warrant Officer Bezuidenhout and I received a letter from Mr. Howard of the Department of Home Affairs. This letter as I could remember, was directed to the Honourable Minister of Home Affairs and written by Tsafendas. It was about bribery in respect of the issuance of passports. The author acted as informer and had no self-complaint. The persons named in the letter were spoken to by Sergeant Warrant Officer Bezuidenhout, in the presence of the informer. They both denied that they had paid bribes to any person. A letter was written by me on 03/20/1964 to the secretary of Home Affairs, Pretoria, and read as follows:

Attached letter addressed to his honourable, the minister of Home Affairs, was handed to Captain Marx by Mr. J. Howard on 03/05/1964. The author was interviewed and an investigation was made, but no evidence could be obtained to connect any person with his allegations. The persons who are claimed by the writer of the letter, to have the bribes, were questioned in his presence but denied the allegations. No file was opened in this regard, as no specific complaint could be found. As far as can be remembered, the accusation was that the two people who were spoken to, paid bribes to officials at the Department of Home Affairs. This information is largely supplied from memory as little supporting documentary proof is available.

³⁷⁵⁶ Colonel Spengler statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File VDSO 17-64, NASA.

IN ADDITION:

- On the 15th November, the Liberal Party of South Africa sent a letter informing the Commission that the members of the party had no knowledge of Tsafendas.³⁷⁵⁷
- A list from the Department of Home Affairs was sent to the Commission with the names on the Stop List of the Ministry. Tsafendas appears as Demitrio Tsafandakis and Demitrio Tsafendas, born in Lourenço Marques or Delogoia Bay in 14.1.1918, listed in group G, interior file no/SA Police reference B7771.³⁷⁵⁸

³⁷⁵⁷ Letter of Mrs. Klugman, secretary of the Liberal Party, to the Commission. 17 October 1966. K150. Vol. 6, File 3. NASA.

³⁷⁵⁸ Stop List of the Department of Home Affairs. K150, Vol. 3, File: Policie daran. NASA.

ANALYSIS OF THE COMMISSION'S REPORT

The resulting Report, thirty single-spaced, double-column pages consisting of eleven chapters and two annexures, purports to give a detailed account of Tsafendas's life. It looks impressively detailed and convincing to someone who is unaware of Tsafendas's life and is reading the Report to find out about him. However, despite the huge input, it is a mishmash of often superficial information, lacking answers to crucial questions, at times evasive and invariably denigratory where Tsafendas is concerned.

Surrendering any pretence to even-handedness, the Report goes into considerable detail when dealing with something that might fit the picture of a schizophrenic or apolitical Tsafendas, but is significantly less forthcoming when facts contradict such an image. In addition, the language used to describe Tsafendas is frequently of a belittling nature, often misrepresenting his character and intentions. What highlights the dishonesty of the document is that the evidence gathered by the Commission is materially very different from that which appears in its Report. The purpose of this section is to examine the errors in the Commission's Report, including its omissions and distortions. Those parts of the Report which are not discussed are free of error or contain nothing relevant. This is the list, with the Report's chapters:

Chapter I: Introduction

Chapter II: The History of Demitrio Tsafendas

Chapter III: Demitrio Tsafendas's Motives

Chapter IV: Were there Accomplices?

Chapter V: The Permit for Temporary Sojourn

Chapter VI: The Permit for Permanent Residence

Chapter VII: The Visa to Visit Rhodesia and Mozambique

Chapter VIII: Demitrio Tsafendas's Return via Durban on 8th March

Chapter IX: The Removal Order

Chapter X: The House of Assembly

Chapter XI: The Police

CHAPTER II: THE HISTORY OF DEMITRIO TSAFENDAS

Chapter II of the Commission's Report deals exclusively with Tsafendas's life, from the day he was born to the summary trial. According to the Commission, Tsafendas's "history has been compiled from information obtained from the sources referred to above. A part is derived from statements which Tsafendas made to policemen and other persons. Where any material fact has been supplied solely by Tsafendas, this is stated explicitly in this report."³⁷⁵⁹ Tsafendas's life story in terms of chronological order and his travels is mostly accurate, but there are some places which he visited that are not mentioned, for example his second visit in London in 1962.

The analysis of the Report is presented in two parts. In the first, we will examine some general topics that are mentioned throughout the Report, such as Tsafendas's employment, his political ideas, his mental state etc. The second part deals with specific incidents mentioned in the Report, for example the vitally important Eleni, his fight with Vergos and so on.

³⁷⁵⁹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II A, Paragraph 1.

PART I: GENERAL SUBJECTS

TSAFENDAS'S POLITICAL ACTIVITIES AND IDEOLOGY

The Report ranges widely over Tsafendas's political activities, giving the impression that he was not as indifferent or "confused" about politics as he was portrayed at the summary trial.

The Report states:

- That Tsafendas was a member of the South African Communist Party from 1937 to 1942.³⁷⁶⁰
- That the South African police had four files on him.³⁷⁶¹
- That he was dismissed from a job in Mozambique due to his Communist tendencies.³⁷⁶²
- That he was suspected of disseminating Communist propaganda in Mozambique in the late 1930s.³⁷⁶³
- That he was engaged in distributing Communist propaganda in South Africa in the early 1940s.³⁷⁶⁴
- That he was on the Stop List of the Government because he was listed as Communist.³⁷⁶⁵
- That his nine visa applications for entry to South Africa were all turned down because he was listed as a Communist.³⁷⁶⁶
- That the Department of Immigration had two files on him.³⁷⁶⁷
- That he was reported by two different men to a South African security officer as a "dangerous Communist" and was also characterised as a "Communist bastard."³⁷⁶⁸
- That he expressed himself strongly against the South African Government and in favour of Communism.³⁷⁶⁹

³⁷⁶⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II A, Paragraph 23.

³⁷⁶¹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter XI, Paragraphs 4 and 5.

³⁷⁶² Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II A, Paragraph 19.

³⁷⁶³ Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³⁷⁶⁴ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II A, Paragraph 26.

³⁷⁶⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraphs 29-30; Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter VI, Paragraphs 19-20.

³⁷⁶⁶ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter VI, Paragraphs 18 and 20.

³⁷⁶⁷ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter IV, Paragraph 19; Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter IV, Paragraph 20.

³⁷⁶⁸ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 29

- That he was arrested and imprisoned by the Portuguese Public Security Police accused of making subversive statements.³⁷⁷⁰
- That he had attended several meetings of the Anti-Colonial Movement and the Anti-Apartheid Movement.³⁷⁷¹
- That he tried to recruit people for an uprising in South Africa and Mozambique.³⁷⁷²

All of the above information is true, but every one of the points listed, apart from the last one, was already known to the public through the Press, therefore the Commission could not feasibly omit them. That Tsafendas was a former member of the SACP was something he admitted to the police when interrogated, was well-known to many of his friends and acquaintances and was published by The Post on 30th October, 1966 while the Commission was still collecting evidence. That Tsafendas was fired from a job in Mozambique because of his Communist tendencies, that he was placed on the Stop List because of his beliefs and that he was actively engaged in Communist propaganda while in South Africa in the early 1940s were all facts contained in various official documents and quoted by the South African Press.

However, Tsafendas's political activities were significantly more wide-ranging than those outlined by the Commission and extended over many years and many countries. The Commission omitted the majority of these activities while downplaying others. What was easy to ignore was information about Tsafendas given verbally to the police or to the Commission and this is perhaps one reason why so many statements have gone missing. Other important details may have been disregarded because the Commission thought them unimportant. What is likelier, however, is that a vigorous, politically engaged activist as suggested by this evidence was the very opposite of the vapid and pathetic figure the Commission persistently sought to present.

³⁷⁶⁹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 32.

³⁷⁷⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter III C, Paragraph 19.

³⁷⁷¹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 32.

³⁷⁷² Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 32.

OMISSIONS AND DOWNPLAYING OF TSAFENDAS'S POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

Let us examine what has been said and what has been omitted or downplayed with regard to Tsafendas's political ideas and activities.

TSAFENDAS'S POLITICAL ACTIVITIES WHILE IN ENGLAND

*While in England, Tsafendas was noticed in the company of leftists. According to Tsafendas, some of these persons expressed the opinion in private discussions that the Prime Minister of South Africa should be shot, but he could not remember who had said so.*³⁷⁷³

According to Tsafendas he attended several political meetings in England, including meetings of the Committee of African Organizations, the Anti-Colonial Movement and the Anti-Apartheid Movement.

*Evidence was submitted to the Commission that Tsafendas had tried to recruit people to take part in an uprising in South Africa. He admits that he did in fact try to recruit people for an uprising, but says that his aim was confined to the Territory of Mozambique.*³⁷⁷⁴

The Commission here reveals that Tsafendas was politically active while in England. Once again, the information is correct, but the Commission has omitted important facts. The most significant of these concerns Tsafendas's political aims and activities at the time which are relevant to his motive for killing Dr. Verwoerd. Edward Furness, a South African living and working in London at the time, testified to the South African police that Tsafendas was "a regular visitor" to a Labour Party office which was used by members of the anti-apartheid movement, and that he had seen him there "in company of several members" of the movement. Furness testified that Tsafendas told him that he wanted to "create a resistance to the regime of South Africa and mentioned civil disobedience and anything that would get the South African regime out of power."³⁷⁷⁵

Not only was this testimony in the possession of the Commission, but Furness also gave evidence personally to the Commission. What is important is Tsafendas's reported willingness to do anything that would get the South African regime out of power. The statement demonstrates his eagerness to oppose apartheid a full six years before Dr.

³⁷⁷³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 31.

³⁷⁷⁴ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 32.

³⁷⁷⁵ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Verwoerd's killing. It makes clear that Tsafendas's ultimate objective was the destruction of apartheid, with the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, if that should be necessary, an assist to that end. This is entirely compatible with what Tsafendas told the police when questioned about his motive (that he was "disgusted" with apartheid and hoped that "a change of policy would take place" after the killing³⁷⁷⁶) and it was what more than a hundred of witnesses said to the police, to the Commission and to the author. However, it was totally incompatible with the scene in court, where Tsafendas was presented as a man without any political interests, who in fact supported the Government, and who killed Dr. Verwoerd because of a tapeworm he believed lived inside him. Furness's statement could also have been used by the Commission when discussing Tsafendas's motive for killing Dr. Verwoerd, but again it is omitted.

A significant omission is Tsafendas's personal relationships in England. The Report says "Tsafendas was noticed in the company of leftists," but it does not give any names. However, it was known to the Commission that Tsafendas associated while in London with Commander Thomas Fox-Pitt, the secretary of the Anti-Slavery Society and one of the leading figures in the modern anti-slavery movement who had characterised Tsafendas as "very simple-minded and not at all sinister."³⁷⁷⁷ It was also known that he had met and associated with prominent anti-apartheid activists such as David Gardener,³⁷⁷⁸ Canon John Collins and Solly Sachs.³⁷⁷⁹

Furness, who testified both to the police and to the Commission, told the police that Tsafendas was "a regular visitor" to the offices of the anti-apartheid movement and that he had seen him "in company of several members of the party, including David Gardener" and that it was "beyond doubt that he associated" with the movement and its members.³⁷⁸⁰ He also told the police that an "African" man named "Tennison" was there regularly and often gave speeches.³⁷⁸¹ Although the police were given only the first name of this "African," it should not have been difficult to deduce that the man was the ANC representative in London, Tennyson Xola Makiwane. He was, after all, a Black South African and a prominent activist associated with the British anti-apartheid movement.

³⁷⁷⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁷⁷⁷ The Guardian, 'Winding Back', 30 September 1966: 10.

³⁷⁷⁸ Edward Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966, K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁷⁷⁹ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁷⁸⁰ Edward Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966, K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁷⁸¹ Edward Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966, K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

When the name of Rowley Arenstein, the South African Communist lawyer and anti-apartheid activist, was mentioned by two witnesses during the investigation, the police and the Commission made inquiries about a possible connection, questioning Arenstein, his secretary and Tsafendas himself. It would seem obvious that Tsafendas would be asked about any links in London to prominent anti-apartheid activists. The Commission refers to Tsafendas's response to questions about Arenstein, first that he did not know him, then when faced with the witnesses' statements, that he had only a casual business acquaintanceship with him. The Commission's Report clearly suggests that there was no real connection between Tsafendas and Arenstein (this incident will be discussed later in this chapter). However, what is surprising is that it makes no reference to any of the London activists mentioned above or whether Tsafendas was asked to explain his knowledge of or relationship to any of them. It seems that the Commission did not find it necessary to find out, or, having found out, did not wish to make Tsafendas's anti-apartheid links public knowledge.

What suggests that Tsafendas must indeed have been asked about the London activists is that the Commission went to great lengths to find out about Tsafendas's relationship with people such as John Michaletos (discussed later in this chapter), who were far less important to the apartheid authorities than Sachs, Makiwane and Canon Collins. Furthermore, the Commission appeared to have examined even the most far-fetched rumours about Tsafendas and his connections, even that he had murdered and raped women all over the world; since it specifically mentions these rumours in its Report (Chapter II B, Paragraph 43).

The absence of the London names is of particular interest in the case of Tennyson Makiwane. Tsafendas was very proud of his association with the anti-apartheid movement in London and his participation in demonstrations and meetings, and he talked widely, about his activities, especially his association with Makiwane. Witnesses who heard him talk of these matters included Fathers Minas Constandinou and Nikola Banovic, Mary Eintracht, Fotini Gavasiadis, Katerina Pnefma, Patrick O'Ryan and Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis. As Tsafendas explained it, he did not have any personal relationships with the activists, they were not bosom friends; he had simply met them at anti-apartheid meetings and had volunteered his services as a helper. His association with them was basically running errands and helping out with small jobs required in any organized movement. The fact that Makiwane and Sachs are mentioned by different witnesses confirms Tsafendas's claims, and when Tsafendas returned to South Africa in 1963, his bags contained a large quantity of anti-apartheid literature. He told witnesses that it was given to him by members of the British anti-apartheid movement, though he did not mention any names.³⁷⁸²

Furness's statement to the Commission was not found in the archives, therefore we cannot know what he said and whether he gave additional information about Tsafendas's activities in London. However, Tsafendas subsequently told Father Minas Constandinou that he was surprised that the police knew so much about what he did at this time and place.³⁷⁸³ It is interesting that in his statement to the police, Tsafendas volunteers information about some of his activities in London, while omitting reference to his political activism elsewhere, for example his 1965 arrest in Beira or his participation in the Greek Civil War. This would clearly suggest that he was specifically asked about his activities during his time in London.

Finally, the Commission has used the English language in such a way as to raise doubts regarding the veracity of Tsafendas's statements. It may not be obvious to non-native English speakers, but the expression "According to Tsafendas ..." suggests that it was only Tsafendas who mentioned his activities. That could imply that there was doubt as to the veracity of his statement because he alone was quoted. However, the Commission knew his claims were true because Furness had confirmed them in his statement. The phraseology used by the Commission seemed intended to cast doubt on the truth of Tsafendas's comments. The inescapable conclusion is that the Commission either considered Tsafendas's association with leading members of the anti-apartheid and anti-slavery movements in London to be unimportant, or it suppressed the information in order not to link Tsafendas in any way with the ANC and such well-known activists.

TSAFENDAS'S IMPRISONMENT IN PORTUGAL IN 1949

*Apparently the Portuguese authorities would not accept Tsafendas's refugee passport, nor his claim that he was a Portuguese subject, the result being that he was arrested at the border post Barca d'Alva on 8th February, 1949. It appears that he was afterwards detained for a long time.*³⁷⁸⁴

The Commission deals with Tsafendas's arrests and imprisonments in Portugal in fewer than fifty words which contain one blatant inaccuracy and lack any semblance of factual detail. As such, the Commission seriously underplays the significance of these events. Tsafendas was indeed arrested at Barca d'Alva but the date was November 8, 1949, not February 8, 1949. He was detained because of doubts about his passport and his claim to ³⁷⁸² Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁷⁸³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

³⁷⁸⁴ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 17.

Portuguese citizenship. The passport in fact was valid and the Lourenço Marques authorities informed the Portuguese police that Tsafendas was indeed a Portuguese citizen. However, they added that he had been dismissed from a job for “voicing Communist ideas” and that he was suspected of “spreading Communist propaganda” although “nothing was proven.”³⁷⁸⁵ It was because of these two incidents, not the passport, that Tsafendas was detained and interrogated. While he arrested on the passport issue, he was subsequently detained for a lengthy period because of the two incidents.

As for the Commission's vague reference to “a long time in detention,” Tsafendas was held at Barca d'Alva for three months, then transferred to the Aljuba Prison for political prisoners in Lisbon, where he remained for several more months.³⁷⁸⁶ The Commission was aware of the reasons for Tsafendas's lengthy detention, but omitted them whilst implying that he was held over a passport problem.

TSAFENDAS'S IMPRISONMENT IN PORTUGAL IN 1952

A more important omission by the Commission, one that was left out altogether, concerned a further term of imprisonment in Portugal. After being denied entry to Mozambique in 1951 and informed that he was now banned from the country, Tsafendas was sent back to Portugal. Upon his return to Lisbon in January 1952, he was detained for the usual reasons - his 1930s Communist and anti-Portuguese activities in Mozambique.³⁷⁸⁷ This time he was held in the notorious Cascais (Caxias) Fort.³⁷⁸⁸ That establishment and Aljuba were the two facilities set aside for political prisoners. Both were effectively run by the PIDE.³⁷⁸⁹

Historically, military courts dealt with suspicions of political dissent. Later, this responsibility was handed to the PIDE, whose officers decided who should be arrested -- in ³⁷⁸⁵ PIDE Confidential Report about Demitrio Tsafendas, 7 June 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³⁷⁸⁶ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT

³⁷⁸⁷ Confidential Letter of the Director of PIDE to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, no: 2.077- S.R., 3 May 1961. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Diario Popular, ‘E Conhesido em Lisboa o Assassino do Dr. Verwoerd’, 9 September 1966.

³⁷⁸⁸ PIDE Report regarding Tsafendas, 5 May 1956. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Diario Popular, ‘E Conhesido em Lisboa o Assassino do Dr. Verwoerd’, 9 September 1966.

³⁷⁸⁹ Vincent, ‘The Shame of Portugal’, The Spectator, 12 April 1962: 11.

practice all those who opposed or might oppose the government – and how long they should serve. By the time Tsafendas was arrested, many hundreds of political prisoners filled these two gaols and reports were widespread of ill-treatment, including beatings, cigarette burns, tiny damp cells, and permanent darkness. These and more systematic tortures were reported in 1962 by an Amnesty International investigation that confirmed appalling conditions in both prisons.³⁷⁹⁰

Tsafendas himself was tortured in Cascais Fort by the administration of electric shocks aimed at discovering if he supported any active movements for the independence of Mozambique.³⁷⁹¹ Although he was a political prisoner for almost a year in 1949 and another year in 1952, the Commission omitted this information from its Report. This was despite the fact that Judge van Wyk was well aware of them from PIDE's report, Tsafendas's own statement and Hartford's interview, all of which mentioned both arrests.

Also missing from the Commission's Report are the names of the two prisons, evidently because questions would be asked as to why a person held on a travel issue should be incarcerated in a prison for political offenders. It seems inescapable that the Commission's omissions regarding Tsafendas's second arrest and his incarceration in political prisons were intended to conceal the real extent of Tsafendas's political engagement.

TSAFENDAS'S ARREST IN MOZAMBIQUE IN 1964

*On 16th November, 1964, Tsafendas was arrested by the Portuguese Security Police for making subversive statements. These statements show strong feelings against Portugal. On this occasion, according to his statement to the Police, he was under the influence of liquor. During his detention he read books written in Bantu languages, but never the Bible. On 26th January, 1965, he was released.*³⁷⁹²

All of the above information is correct. However, very little is vouchsafed about Tsafendas's conduct while his political activity is downgraded or omitted. Importantly, the Commission ignored another arrest, again for subversive propaganda, that took place only a few days after he was released. We will examine this case below.

³⁷⁹⁰ Vincent, 'The Shame of Portugal', The Spectator, 12 April 1962: 11.

³⁷⁹¹ Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA; The Cape Argus, 'Brainwashed in Jail Held Man Told Argus.' 7 September 1966: 3; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

³⁷⁹² Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter III C, Paragraph 19.

The details of Tsafendas's November 16 arrest and imprisonment on serious charges, are not given in the Report, which appears to treat the incident as some sort of alcoholic peccadillo. The political ideas and statements Tsafendas made to the police are nowhere to be seen, although they were known to the Commission. In reality, Tsafendas was arrested in Maforga, a small town five miles from Gondola, on November 16, 1964, by the Portuguese Public Security Police, accused of "making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses." He was taken to a police sub-station in Beira for interrogation.³⁷⁹³ This was known to the Commission.

When the police discovered that his suitcase contained books that were anti-apartheid, anti-colonialist and pro-Communist, as well as several Bibles, he was accused of pretending to be a missionary spreading Christianity, while actually preaching "under the guise of religion in favour of Mozambique's independence ..."³⁷⁹⁴ Due to the seriousness of the charges, he was handed over to the Sub-Delegation of PIDE in Beira.³⁷⁹⁵ There, he was interrogated by PIDE's Sub-Inspector, Joaquim Piçara Sabino, Brigade Chief Augusto de Sousa Maia, and agent Virgílio Francisco.³⁷⁹⁶

While in custody, Tsafendas was asked by the police if he had "dedicated himself to preach as a missionary and, under the guise of this same religion, advertised in favour of Mozambique's independence." Tsafendas replied that he was "a Christian who considers himself a representative of God on earth, a missionary that wishes he could preach the Christian religion but that he is not allowed to because, on this earth, there is no freedom of expression." He maintained, however, that he strongly supported the independence of Mozambique, but was not a member of any subversive group.³⁷⁹⁷ The information concerning his religious activities and non-subversive support for Mozambican independence support was probably not known to the Commission since PIDE omitted it from the report they gave to the South African police.

³⁷⁹³ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³⁷⁹⁴ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Costas Poriadis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

³⁷⁹⁵ PIDE report about the Defendant: Demitrio Tsafendas or Dimitrius Tsafendakis. 19 January 1965. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; PIDE report regarding Demitrio Tsafendas or Dimitrius Tsafendakis, 19 January 1965. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas

³⁷⁹⁶ PIDE Record of questions. 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³⁷⁹⁷ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

Even so, the Commission was certainly in possession of a statement by Inspector Horacio Ferreira, the officer in charge of the police cells where Tsafendas was kept for some fourteen days after his arrest. This statement was found in the Commission's archives in NASA and used in the Report for its reference to Tsafendas reading books in Bantu languages. It was Inspector Ferreira who stated that during his detention, Tsafendas was often seen to read books written in "Bantu languages, but never the Bible." However, Inspector Ferreira's statement provided information of much greater importance than Tsafendas's choice of reading matter, information which the Commission chose to ignore. Ferreira characterised Tsafendas as "intense anti-white" and someone convinced that "the Portuguese Government has never done anything for its non-whites." He also said he considered Tsafendas to be "normal" and "a very intelligent person."³⁷⁹⁸ Although Inspector Ferreira was able to observe Tsafendas in detention for fourteen days, the Commission used the least significant of his observations; that is what Tsafendas read while in custody. That he was characterised as "intense anti-white," "anti-Portuguese" and "a very intelligent person" are omitted.

As for the reference to liquor, the PIDE report held by the Commission said that Tsafendas had confessed to making anti-Portuguese statements but added that "he was under the influence of liquor and also under exultations (excitement)." However, according to the PIDE report, Tsafendas also made it clear to his interrogators that "these words were caused by the ideas which he had about the independence of Mozambique, a Mozambique governed by natives whether white or black, but separate from the mother-country." The PIDE reported concluded that "although, as above mentioned, Tsafendas is mentally disabled, the truth is you find in him a true spirit of rebellion against the ruling institutions, and a clear adhesion to the independence of Mozambique."³⁷⁹⁹

None of the above is mentioned in the Commission's Report, although it was all set out in the PIDE report to the South African police which was in the Commission's possession. Tsafendas's political convictions, especially his support for the independence of Mozambique, are all omitted, while his anti-Portuguese stance is attributed to liquor. Although Tsafendas had made it clear that these words were his ideas, despite the fact that he had been drinking, the Commission conveniently omitted Tsafendas's whole statement and ³⁷⁹⁸ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, File 1/5. FILE Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

³⁷⁹⁹ Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

included the comment about the liquor, thus giving a completely different picture of the incident and of Tsafendas.

It is no surprise, therefore, that Tsafendas's most "dangerous" political statement, his carefully considered prescription for a future Mozambique as an independent country "governed by natives whether white or black, but separate from the mother-country," does not see the light of day. In summary, Tsafendas's political activities and convictions, most importantly his support for an independent Mozambique and his efforts to raise awareness for this cause, are downgraded, omitted or offhandedly attributed to alcohol and thus of little consequence.

TSAFENDAS'S SECOND ARREST BY THE PORTUGUESE SECURITY POLICE IN MOZAMBIQUE

Tsafendas's arrest and imprisonment in Lisbon in 1952 is not the only one omitted from the Report. Soon after his release in January 1965, in the incident discussed just above, Tsafendas was arrested again by the Portuguese police in Mozambique and this arrest is not to be found in the Commission's Report. Newspapers worldwide such as the British Daily Mirror and The Daily News, The Herald of Melbourne, Australia, the Rhodesia Herald and the Herald African News Service, as well as The Star in South Africa, plus many others reported clearly that Tsafendas was twice arrested, detained and questioned about "suspicious activities" while in Mozambique, and not just once as stated by the Commission in its Report.³⁸⁰⁰ The Dagbreek had referred to three arrests and had even reported that Tsafendas had "clashed with the law in the USA and Mozambique, and especially his activities in Mozambique left a huge question mark over and around his name."³⁸⁰¹ According to these Press reports, the second arrest, which the Report omitted, was Tsafendas being arrested in Beira "after being seen in cafes with Coloured political suspects."³⁸⁰²

Press reports aside, the South African embassy in Lisbon, on September 7, the day after the assassination, informed the Secretary for Foreign Affairs in Cape Town that Tsafendas "has a criminal record in Mozambique, where he is said to have been arrested on several occasions after creating public disturbances, including shouting pro-Communist anti-³⁸⁰⁰ The Daily News, 'Tsafendas Seen As 'Mystery Man'', 8 September 1966: 17; The Herald (Melbourne), 'The Killer: Five Passports and A Record of Subversion', 8 September 1966: 1; The Rhodesia Herald, 'Assassin Said To Have Been Deported From P.E.A. for Communist Connections', 8 September 1966: 1; The Star, 'Assassin Had Five Passports', 10 September 1966: 3.

³⁸⁰¹ Dagbreek, 'Tsafendas Het Vir V.V. in Persie Gewerk', 11 September 1966.

³⁸⁰² Daily Mirror, 'The Clouded Past of An Assassin', 9 September 1966: 11.

Portuguese slogans.” It went on to say “if information correct, we suspect Portuguese may play down assassin’s previous political activities and we would suggest full details in this connection be sought.”³⁸⁰³ However, the Commission mentions only one arrest in Mozambique, the one in November 16, 1964.

Shortly after his release from PIDE custody on January 26, Tsafendas found a job as an interpreter at the docks in Beira. However, he was dismissed after attempting to organise a strike. The dock owner did not report the incident to the police because he was a friend of Tsafendas’s brother-in-law, Gerry Pnema, and did not want to cause him trouble.³⁸⁰⁴ A few days later, Tsafendas was in a bar with several Mozambicans and Greeks, among them Andreas Babiolakis, Costas Poriadis and Nick Papadakis. At one point, Tsafendas bought beer for everyone, then paraphrasing Mark Anthony in Shakespeare’s Julius Caesar, happily called out, “Friends, countrymen, lend me your glasses.” However, when he called on them to drink to a recent attack by FRELIMO rebels, everyone froze and lowered their glasses untouched while Tsafendas downed his beer. The bar owner politely asked Tsafendas to leave and he never returned.³⁸⁰⁵

The next day, Tsafendas was arrested by the Portuguese police because of his comments at the bar and his activities at the docks which the police had learned about by then. However, he was released almost immediately because the police had by now accepted that he was “mentally ill and therefore not chargeable at a juridical or penal level” and there was no point in detaining him any longer.³⁸⁰⁶

It is likely that the Commission was unaware of the details of this arrest. However, since two arrests were reported widely by the South African media, the Commission might have been expected to make inquiries, as it did with other, less important and far-fetched, stories about Tsafendas. The second arrest was well-known within the Greek Community in Beira and Gondola, and Tsafendas gave evidence twice to the Commission and could have answered questions about the issue.

³⁸⁰³ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Lisbon, to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 07 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁸⁰⁴ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁸⁰⁵ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Costas Poriadis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

³⁸⁰⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Costas Poriadis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

TSAFENDAS'S ARREST AND IMPRISONMENT IN MOZAMBIQUE IN 1951

*In October, 1951, Tsafendas left Portugal for Lourenço Marques where he was not allowed to land, the result being that he was forced to return to Portugal in January, 1952.*³⁸⁰⁷

The Commission here omits the reason Tsafendas was “not allowed to land” in Mozambique – that he was listed as Communist and suspected of involvement in subversive activities. PIDE had withheld this information from the reports it gave to the South African police, but Antony Maw, Greece’s honorary Consul in Lourenço Marques, revealed to the South African police that the refusal was due to Tsafendas’s “suspected Communist tendencies.”³⁸⁰⁸

Furthermore, the fact that Tsafendas was denied entry to Mozambique and his subsequent deportation was published in the South African Press, with at least three newspapers, The Daily News, the Pretoria News and The Star reporting that Tsafendas was deported from Mozambique because of “Communist activities.”³⁸⁰⁹ Also absent is Tsafendas’s arrest in Lourenço Marques following the refusal to be “allowed to land,” and his subsequent two weeks’ imprisonment when he was interrogated by the Portuguese police regarding his past “unclear activities” in Mozambique in the late 1930s.³⁸¹⁰ However, this information was also omitted by PIDE and not reported by the South African Press of the time.

Yet another omission is Tsafendas’s extraordinary appendicitis deception. When he learned that he would not be allowed off the ship that had taken him to Lourenço Marques, Tsafendas doubled up dramatically, pretending to be in terrible pain from appendicitis. He was rushed to a hospital ashore, from which he calmly walked out, but was apprehended sometime later. The appendicitis trick spread through the entire Greek community in Lourenço Marques, although none of those questioned mentioned it to the police. Antony Maw, in his statement to the police, said only that Tsafendas had “claimed illness,”³⁸¹¹ without specifying it, though he was well aware of the appendicitis act.³⁸¹² ³⁸⁰⁷ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 23.

³⁸⁰⁸ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

³⁸⁰⁹ The Daily News, ‘Tsafendas Seen As ‘Mystery Man’’, 8 September 1966: 17; Pretoria News, ‘Dimitrio A Red, They Alleged’, 7 September 1966: 1; The Star, ‘Assassin Had Five Passports’, 10 September 1966: 3.

³⁸¹⁰ PIDE Record of questions. 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; PIDE Confidential Report about Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; John Michaleto in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

³⁸¹¹ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub File: 1/8. NASA.

³⁸¹² Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

TSAFENDAS'S EXILE

The Commission's Report makes no reference at all to the fact that Tsafendas was banned from entering and residing in Mozambique, the country of his birth, and was forced to live in exile from 1951 to 1963.³⁸¹³ Nor is there mention of the fact that he had made at least six applications to be allowed to return in Mozambique since 1939 and all were turned down. PIDE had removed this information from the reports they gave to the South African police, presumably because they would have had to include the reasons for the banning, which were Tsafendas's Communist and anti-colonialist ideas and activities. PIDE's omission was compatible with its director's order to withhold from the South African police "any information indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of Mozambique."³⁸¹⁴

However, Tsafendas had spoken about his exile when interrogated by the South African police, stating that in August or September, 1963, he "received amnesty" in order to be allowed to return to Mozambique.³⁸¹⁵ One receives amnesty to return to a country only after being banned from residing there. The issue of the amnesty will be discussed again shortly. Furthermore, the fact that he was forced to live in exile was published not only in the South African Press (for example Pretoria News, 'Dimitrio A Red, They Alleged', 7 September 1966, and The Star, 'Assassin Had Five Passports', 10 September 1966), but worldwide (The Daily News, 'Tsafendas Seen As 'Mystery Man'', 8 September 1966; The Herald, 'The Killer', 8 September 1966; The Rhodesia Herald, 'Assassin Said To Have Been Deported From P.E.A. for Communist Connections', 8 September 1966).³⁸¹⁶ Therefore, the Commission was aware of it but chose to omit it, either because it felt that Tsafendas being exiled from Mozambique for his Communist and anti-colonial activities was not worth mentioning or it wished to downplay the extent of Tsafendas's political activism.

TSAFENDAS'S AMNESTY IN 1963

³⁸¹³ Confidential Letter of the Director of PIDE to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, no: 2.077- S.R., 03 May 1961. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Letter of a police agent to the Ministry of Interiors regarding Tsafendas's exile. 30 October 1962. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³⁸¹⁴ Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³⁸¹⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁸¹⁶ The Chronicle (Bulawayo), 'Tsafendas: Mystery Man of Parliament', 8 September 1966: 1; The Daily News, 'Tsafendas Seen As 'Mystery Man'', 8 September 1966: 17; The Herald, 'The Killer', 8 September 1966: 1; Pretoria News, 'Dimitrio A Red, They Alleged', 7 September 1966: 1; The Rhodesia Herald, 'Assassin Said To Have Been Deported From P.E.A. for Communist Connections', 8 September 1966: 1; The Star, 'Assassin Had Five Passports', 10 September 1966: 3.

*In 1963 he left Portugal for Lourenço Marques where he stayed with an uncle for a short time.*³⁸¹⁷

This single sentence makes no mention of the fact that Tsafendas was given an amnesty by the Portuguese Government and that is why he was allowed to return to Mozambique. That Tsafendas had received an amnesty by the Portuguese Government was known to the South African police as he had told them so when he was interrogated on the 11th of September:

“In August or September, 1963, I received amnesty and the Social Services agreed to pay my boat fare to Lourenço Marques. I left immediately on the Princippi Perfecto and arrived in L.M. during approximately October, 1963.”³⁸¹⁸

Paragraph 41 provides an obvious opportunity for the Commission to report the amnesty, but it fails to do so. The reason seems obvious: if the Commission had mentioned that Tsafendas received amnesty from the Portuguese Government, the question would have been, “Why did he need an amnesty to return to the country in which he was born and of which he was a citizen?” Amnesties were for people who had been convicted of an offence, so the next question would have been, “what had Tsafendas done?”

It is just possible that the Commission considered the amnesty question not important enough to include in its Report. It is much more likely that the Commission deliberately suppressed the information as it would have demonstrated that Tsafendas was more politically active than was known at the time, which was why he was in exile from Mozambique for all those years. This would be just one omission, a minor one in comparison to the others, by the Commission regarding Tsafendas's political activities and involvement.

TSAFENDAS IN GREECE (Chapter II B, Paragraphs 11-15) AND HIS PARTICIPATION IN THE CIVIL WAR

All the evidence regarding Tsafendas's participation in this war is presented in Chapter 2 of this study. To describe Tsafendas's movements while in Greece, the Commission uses mostly information taken from his September 11 statement to the South African police. The fact that he had joined the Democratic Army of Greece (DSE), the military wing of the Greek ³⁸¹⁷ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 41.

³⁸¹⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

Communist Party, during the Greek Civil War is omitted. At least seven witnesses, Cleanthes Alachiotis, Nikolaos Billis, Elias Constantaras, Nikolas Kambouris, Giorgos Kantas, Grigoris Pouftis and Michalis Vasilakis, had testified to the South African police that Tsafendas told them he had joined the DSE during the Civil War. His participation in the war was also known to some of his close friends, like Babiolakis, Papadakis, Poriазis and Kyriakakis, although they had not testified to the police. Some relatives, including Katerina Pnema and Mary Eintracht, were also aware of it, but had not reported it to the police.

A statement by the Eleni seaman, Nicolas Mavronas that was found in the NASA, says Tsafendas told the crew that “he joined the Greek army during the war and that he is an expert shot.”³⁸¹⁹ The army Mavronas referred to was the DSE, and the war was the Civil War, the most recent war in Greece. The South African policeman who took Mavronas’ statement did not specify the war Tsafendas talked about and seemed to assume it was the Second World War. Six seamen who participated in the Eleni conversation and were interviewed by the South African Police and by the author said they clearly remembered Tsafendas saying he served with the Allied Navy during the Second World War and with the DSE during the Greek Civil War. They were positive that Tsafendas never said he joined the Greek regular army. None of them doubted him because it was clear that he knew about the DSE and how it was organized and operated.³⁸²⁰ The Commission was in possession of Mavronas’ statement, but it made no mention of what he said regarding Tsafendas joining the Greek Army and being an expert shot. Ignoring this important information, it went instead into great detail about some far-fetched rumours and information concerning Tsafendas and how it investigated them and found them to be untrue.

More rumours were contained in a report submitted to the Commission by the Die Landstem newspaper. The Commission examined some of these rumours and declared them to be untrue. However, the telegram also contained some correct references to Tsafendas, for example how he left South Africa by sea during the Second World War and the dates of his entry to some of the countries to which he travelled. The Commission refers to this telegram in Chapter II B, Paragraph 43, where a whole section deals with rumours about Tsafendas:

“At a relatively late stage, the Commission received information from a weekly newspaper that there were rumours that Tsafendas had fled from South Africa, because he ³⁸¹⁹ Nicolas Mavronas statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol 3, File Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

³⁸²⁰ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

was wanted by the police for attempted murder, that he had committed a murder in Mozambique, that he had raped and seriously assaulted a woman in Montreal, that he had raped and assaulted a White Woman in Ontario, that he had blown up a ship with dynamite in Boston, that in New York he was found on his way to the docks with explosives, that in Greece he was suspected of murders and rapes, that in Portugal he had strangled and raped a young girl, that in Germany he was suspected of murders. Tsafendas denies all these allegations. From the information at the Commission's disposal, it appears unlikely that the allegations concerning the reason for his departure from South Africa in 1942 have any foundation. The same applies to the alleged crimes in Canada, the United States of America, Portugal and Mozambique. No evidence of any other alleged crimes came to the knowledge of the Commission. As yet no reply has been received to some of the enquiries that were made, and should any information worthy of mention come to hand after the submission of this report, it will be given in a supplementary report."

However, Die Landstem's telegram also contained the following information:

*"In 1947 he was sent to Greece which was in a bad state after WWII. There was general hunger, food shortages and unemployment among the Greek people. Tsafendas wandered around starving and without shelter until he joined the Greek Communist Party with whom he fought against the Greek Government."*³⁸²¹

While taking pains to set out a series of wild rumours, and then discount them, the Commission failed to mention Tsafendas's participation with the Communists in the Greek Civil War. This must have sounded far more real than all the other material since Tsafendas had admitted to the South African police and to the Commission that he was a member of the SACP in the late 1930s and early 1940s. More importantly, Tsafendas was indeed in Greece during the Civil War. Even if the Commission had previously been unaware of this fact, it was no aware of the fact and could have researched the matter further.

It seems possible that the Commission dismissed Mavronas' statement in the belief that it was inaccurate since Tsafendas was known not to be in Greece during the Second World War, the war the Commission wrongly assumed Mavronas was referring to. However, on other occasions when a witness gave inaccurate evidence to the Commission, Judge van Wyk pointed it out. For example, in Chapter II B, Paragraph 41, the Report says:

"In 1963 he left Portugal for Lourenço Marques where he stayed with an uncle for a short time. One witness alleged that he saw Tsafendas in Zambia during June, as well as in various other months in 1963. Tsafendas denies that he ever visited that country, and says that he did not leave Portugal until August or September, 1963."

³⁸²¹ Die Landstem telegram. n.d. K150, Vol 5. NASA.

The author is not in position to know whether the missing statements from the Eleni crew were suppressed by the Commission or whether they were never given to it. The fact that they were not found in the NASA does not necessarily mean that they were not given to the Commission, since almost seventy statements taken by the Commission itself have now gone missing and clearly these statements were in the hands of the Commission at the time.

The Commission also attempted to locate John Michaletos, the man who recruited Tsafendas to the DSE in 1947. First, the South African police asked Costas Michaletos about John Michaletos, claiming that they had found a letter by him, sent from Greece, in Tsafendas's possession. It was known that Tsafendas corresponded with various people around the world and it is likely that the police found some of these letters at the time of his arrest. Therefore, why would the police ask about someone in Greece corresponding with him? It could have been the contents of the letter (which was not found in the archives), but it could also have been that Tsafendas told the police or the Commission during interrogation that he had joined the DSE during the Greek Civil War and that John Michaletos had recruited him. Costas Michaletos characterised John Michaletos to the South African police as an "active communist" in 1952. This suggests that he was also "active" during the Civil War which had ended only three years earlier. It also suggests that Costas Michaletos was possibly asked specifically about John Michaletos's political ideas.

Inquiries by the police and the Commission about John Michaletos did not stop after the approach to Costas Michaletos. Indeed, the authorities went to great lengths to find out more about this Communist Michaletos. Apparently they did not see him just as someone who just wrote letters to Tsafendas. On November 7, 1966, the Commission of Enquiry contacted the Portuguese Embassy in Pretoria "requesting any possible information regarding an individual named John Machletos from whom, allegedly, Demitrio Tsafendas, who claims to be a Portuguese citizen, would have received mail from abroad." The Commission's request was passed by the embassy to the Director General of PIDE in Lisbon.³⁸²² On November 17, PIDE sent a letter to the Director-General for Political Affairs and Internal ³⁸²² Confidential Letter of the Director-General of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the Director of PIDE requesting information regarding John Machletos. 7 November 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

Administration in Lisbon stating that “there are no records of John Machletos in the registries of this Police.”³⁸²³

The question is: Would the Commission have gone to these lengths about a simple letter-writer? Tsafendas corresponded regularly with people abroad, like Father Nikola Banovic in Istanbul and George Grispos in Rhodesia, and the Commission made no inquiries about them. That said, it cannot be ruled out that the South African authorities did not become aware of such information.

Since John Michaletos was a Greek and lived in Greece at the time, the first and most logical thing for the Commission to do would have been to contact the Greek authorities. However, it seems that, assuming they were contacted, the Greece authorities were unable to locate Michaletos and the Commission then turned to the Portuguese. The request, made on November 7, came two weeks after Tsafendas's summary trial, suggesting that contacts with the Greeks could have had taken up the intervening period. Given the Greek government's readiness to help the South African police, as already demonstrated by its co-operation over the Eleni, it would surely have been willing to help the South Africans with the Michaletos request, too. A possible explanation for the Greeks' failure to locate Michaletos is that his name was misspelled by the Commission. It appeared as Machletos in the Commission's request and also in the PIDE letter to the government in Lisbon, therefore it is very possible that it was also misspelled when it was given to the Greek authorities.

There are no records of any of the Commission's requests in the National Archives of South Africa. However, the Portuguese National Archives contain the Commission's request in PIDE's file on Tsafendas. There are no records of Tsafendas in the Greek National Archives and therefore it cannot be ascertained with certainty whether the Greek authorities were indeed contacted by the South Africans. Would the Commission have made enquiries to PIDE about a childhood friend who was just writing to Tsafendas? Although the Commission tried strenuously to locate this man, he is not mentioned in the Report.

TSAFENDAS BEING A COMMUNIST

Within twenty-four hours of Dr. Verwoerd's assassination, all of South Africa knew from the Press and radio that Tsafendas was a Communist who had been deported from Mozambique ³⁸²³ Letter of the Director of PIDE to the Mr. Director-General for Political Affairs and Internal Administration regarding John Machletos. 16 November 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

because of his Communist beliefs and activities.³⁸²⁴ Further reports in the ensuing days added details to the sketchy early dispatches.³⁸²⁵ Even PIDE had to admit to the SA police that in the late 1930s in Mozambique, Tsafendas was “suspected of dedicating himself to communistic activities.”³⁸²⁶ Despite this, the word Communism was never heard during his summary trial. On 30th October, while the Commission was still at work, The Post newspaper revealed that Tsafendas had been a member of the SACP.³⁸²⁷

As with the public, it was the day after the assassination, 7th of September, that the South African authorities themselves learned of Tsafendas's adherence to Communism. On that day, the South African Embassy in Lisbon informed the Secretary for Foreign Affairs in Cape Town that Tsafendas “has a criminal record in Mozambique, where he is said to have been arrested on several occasions after creating public disturbances, including shouting pro-Communist anti-Portuguese slogans ... if information correct, we suspect Portuguese may play down assassin's previous political activities and we would suggest full details in this connection be sought.”³⁸²⁸

As we have seen, the Portuguese did exactly what was said in this telegram, but the South African police made no great effort to discover more about these political activities. They appeared simply to accept what was given to them by the Portuguese. As for the Commission, although it included in its Report that Tsafendas was a Communist and a former member of the SACP, both already known and published facts, it soft-pedalled the extent and the significance of his political activities and involvement with Communism.

TSAFENDAS DESCRIBED AS A COMMUNIST BY WITNESSES WHO KNEW HIM

³⁸²⁴ Pretoria News, ‘Dimitrio A Red, They Alleged’, 7 September 1966: 1.

³⁸²⁵ Dagbreek, ‘Tsafendas Het Vir V.V. in Persie Gewerk’, 11 September 1966; The Daily News, ‘Tsafendas Seen As ‘Mystery Man’’, 8 September 1966: 17; The Herald (Melbourne), ‘The Killer: Five Passports and A Record of Subversion’, 8 September 1966: 1; The Rhodesia Herald, ‘Assassin Said To Have Been Deported From P.E.A. for Communist Connections’, 8 September 1966: 1; The Star, ‘Assassin Had Five Passports’, 10 September 1966: 3.

³⁸²⁶ Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³⁸²⁷ Gordon Winter, ‘Tsafendas: I Was A Communist’, The Post, 30 October 1966: 1.

³⁸²⁸ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Lisbon, to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 07 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

A number of Tsafendas's acquaintances and workmates testified that Tsafendas was a Communist; Vergos even describing him as "the biggest Communist in the Republic."³⁸²⁹ However, only a few of these statements were included in the Report. A detailed account of Tsafendas's Communist activities and statements about his political ideology can be seen in his biography in Chapter 2. More statements can be seen in Chapter 4.

Durban Men's Home

*On 21st June, 1965, he moved into the Durban Men's Home, Durban, where he lived until 24th August, 1965. At this home he expressed himself strongly against the South African Government and in favour of Communism.*³⁸³⁰

This information is correct but again important aspects of the situation are omitted, including Tsafendas's own words. The police and the Commission interviewed two people from Durban's Home and the Report is based on their testimonies. This is what they said:

Robert Smith, the night clerk at Durban Men's Home, told the police that Tsafendas was a "Communist," "a fanatic on politics and seldom spoke of anything else" and had said that "the United Party and National Party officials and members were capitalistic roughs." Tsafendas had also told him that the "South African Government's policy was 'rotten'" and often compared conditions in South Africa with those in Russia, stating, "Look at all the poor people in South Africa, such conditions don't exist in Russia because Russia is a Communistic state." Smith also testified that Tsafendas had "a large quantity of literature" but he did not "know the nature thereof."³⁸³¹

Kenneth Ross was the manager in Durban Men's Home. He testified that Tsafendas was "very fond of discussing politics and gave me the opinion that he was well versed in politics. Tsafendas objected to the Communists being banished to Robin-Island [sic] because of their political opinions and actions. In general, Tsafendas opposed to every decision taken by the South African Government and freely voiced his opinion to me. He was blatantly opposed to the National Party policy, the policy of the present Government, and was definitely pro-Russian. I am aware that Tsafendas possessed a large quantity of literature but did not take note of the names of the books he read.”³⁸³²

³⁸²⁹ Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁸³⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 32.

³⁸³¹ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Tsafendas's comments to Smith and Ross vividly reflect the strength of his passion for Communism and his detestation of the South African government and its policies. They stand out in strong contrast to the generalised, fourteen-word statement by the Commission, that “he expressed himself strongly against the South African Government and in favour of Communism.” The vigour and intelligence of Tsafendas's condemnations challenge his diagnosis as schizophrenic at his summary trial. In condensing Tsafendas's views into a single sentence of indirect speech, the Commission deprives the reader of any sense of the man's convictions and thus his personality.

On the other hand, another section of the Report reproduces word for word what Tsafendas said to Dr. Sakinofsky about his political ideas. These too were strongly anti-government but they were discounted as the beliefs of a “deluded” person and therefore irrelevant and not to be taken seriously. They were included only to support the idea that Tsafendas was incapable of clear political thought. Thus the Report goes into detail when dealing with something negative about Tsafendas or something that will fit with the schizophrenic picture, but is much less detailed with anything that contradicts such an image. Tsafendas's words to those many witnesses flatly contradicted what he told Dr. Sakinofsky and what was heard about him at the summary trial, but the Commission chose to ignore them and write in vaguely generalised terms instead. In this way, it covered itself: it did not lie since Tsafendas had indeed spoken against the government, but by omitting his actual words, it ensured that the world did not learn the specifics of Tsafendas's beliefs or the truth of his passion. However, manipulative as ever, when it came to his so-called “deluded” comments, the Commission carried them in full.

Among the most important omissions were the description by Smith and Ross of Tsafendas as a “fanatic on politics,” well-versed on politics,” who “seldom spoke of anything else” This is what several other witnesses told the police and the author, too, some even describing him as a political animal. No mention of any of these statements is made in the Report. As we will see, even his arrest by the Portuguese in 1964 for political reasons will be attributed by the Commission simply to liquor.

Another omission is that Tsafendas had, according to both these witnesses, “a large quantity of literature” with him. Why would the Commission omit such an innocuous statement? Certainly it was not of major importance that Tsafendas had many books with him. However, it is a positive aspect of his character rather than a negative one and as such is consigned to the dust-bin by the Commission which invariably prefers the negative. What is more, the books reference is not as unimportant as it might seem, since it shows Tsafendas in a positive light, suggesting that, as several other witnesses testified, Tsafendas was well-read, cultured and educated, and not the dumb and hopeless wreck portrayed at the summary trial and by the Commission's report.

³⁸³² Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Tsafendas's political ideas, as mentioned by both witnesses, are lucid, well-grounded and perfectly logical, including, for instance, his stated opposition to the political imprisonment of Communists on Robben Island, but this, like all the others, is omitted in favour of vague generalisations. This evasive tactic by the Commission is a major issue since Tsafendas's own words could never be considered by a neutral observer to be the words of a deluded schizophrenic who murdered Dr. Verwoerd because of a tapeworm.

Tsafendas and the "Roman Catholic" Priest

Chapter II C, Paragraph 30 deals with the testimony of a Roman Catholic priest who informed J.J. Botha, a factory security officer, that Tsafendas was a Communist. Botha passed this statement to the police. In addition, the Report says Tsafendas told the priest that he had been to Russia and that was where he learned all the languages he could speak. According to the Report, the priest also said that Tsafendas was hostile towards the Roman Catholic Church and the South African government.³⁸³³ The Commission does not name the priest, referring to him only as "a Roman Catholic priest," although it knew his identity since he had testified about meeting Tsafendas to the police and to the Commission itself. His name was Hanno Probst.

Although the priest's two statements quoted above are correct, three other elements from his evidence are omitted. First, Father Probst denounced Tsafendas as a Communist to a second security officer, Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren. He described Tsafendas as a "Communist and a dangerous person" and asked van Vuuren to "get rid of him."³⁸³⁴ It seems the Commission found this unimportant or wished to avoid the reference to Tsafendas being a ³⁸³³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 30.

³⁸³⁴ Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

dangerous person. The second omission concerned a report of Tsafendas's links to young Blacks in a local reserve. Father Probst testified to the Commission that he suspected Tsafendas of being a kind of political agitator having “some influence on the inhabitants of the Mangete Reserve. I say this because, during the period Demetrios Tsafendas stayed at Mandini, the youngsters in the Mangete Reserve became unruly and aggressive. This, however, is only suspicion because since the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd everything became quiet again and the youngsters controllable.”³⁸³⁵

The Commission must have seen here the echo of something similar in Tsafendas's past. In Mozambique, Tsafendas had urged workers at a dock and at the Hume Pipe Company to go on strike. He had also toured the rural areas of Beira preaching in favour of Communism, for the independence of Mozambique and against the Portuguese policy of forced cotton. He was arrested and accused of “making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses.”³⁸³⁶ According to the police he pretended to be a Christian missionary spreading the word about religion, while in reality, he was preaching “under the guise of religion in favour of Mozambique's independence ...”³⁸³⁷ It is not impossible, given Tsafendas's past, that he did the same thing in the Mangete Reserve.

Finally, Father Probst testified that Tsafendas at one point started “swearing at the Mozambique government, saying it did nothing for the black people.”³⁸³⁸ In thirteen words, Tsafendas demonstrated his antipathy for the colonialist government and his sympathy for the Blacks. It is not a hugely important statement but that it was omitted from the record is yet another example of Tsafendas's political engagement being hidden from the light of day.

TSAFENDAS AND ROWLEY ARENSTEIN

³⁸³⁵ Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁸³⁶ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³⁸³⁷ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Costas Poriazis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

³⁸³⁸ Father Hanno Probst statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

*Here he also made enquiries about the home address of an attorney Arenstein, a well-known communist.*³⁸³⁹

*Mrs. Theron, the wife of an attorney in Durban, gave evidence that on more than one occasion she had seen Tsafendas going to the office of the Arenstein referred to above. Tsafendas could not recollect the name Arenstein, but recognized a photograph of Arenstein as being that of a person resembling the attorney whom he went to consult in connection with a translation bureau which he wished to buy. He also explained in which building the office of the attorney he interviewed was, and this is exactly where Arenstein's office is situated. However, there are also other attorneys in the same building. Mr. Arenstein and his typist deny that Tsafendas ever visited him.*³⁸⁴⁰

Robert Smith, the night clerk at Durban Men's Home, told the police that Tsafendas had asked him if he knew Arenstein's residential address.³⁸⁴¹ Esperanza Theron, wife of attorney Daniel B. Theron, testified to the police that the "offices occupied by my husband were situated adjacently the offices occupied by the listed communist, Rowley Arenstein. I was my husband's secretary and was thus always in the office. During 1965 or late 1964, I observed a White or Coloured male whom I have since identified from photographs in the newspapers as Demitrio Tsafendas, frequenting the offices of Rowley Arenstein. Demitrio Tsafendas used to pay visits to Arenstein's office regularly and on occasion he would greet me. I observed Demitrio Tsafendas actually entering the general office of Rowley Arenstein but am unable to state for what purpose he visited Arenstein. I am unable to state the period of time that he used to visit Arenstein, but the visits were very regular. I have also observed Demitrio Tsafendas in the presence of Rowley Arenstein walking down the corridor from Arenstein's office."³⁸⁴²

As result of Theron's testimony, Arenstein and Thelma Beryl Suddes, his secretary, were questioned by the police. She testified that "to the best" of her "knowledge" she had never seen Tsafendas in Arenstein's office.³⁸⁴³ Arenstein was questioned on September 24, ³⁸³⁹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 32.

³⁸⁴⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 33.

³⁸⁴¹ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁸⁴² Eperanza Theron statement to the police, 24 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁸⁴³ Thelma Beryl Suddes statement to the COE, 22 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

1966, by Brigadier Baster "at office No. 505, The Grays, Johannesburg, in connection with the assassination of the late Dr. Verwoerd."³⁸⁴⁴

At the time, Arenstein was in police custody accused of "furthering the aims of Communism" and was about to go on trial on such a charge. The last thing he wanted at such a time was to be involved with Tsafendas and the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. Was it remotely possible that he would admit to knowing Tsafendas? The same would apply to his secretary. The logic of their circumstances demanded that both would deny any knowledge of Dr. Verwoerd's alleged assassin. On October 31, 1966, Arenstein was sentenced to four years' imprisonment under the Suppression of Communism Act for furthering the aims of Communism.³⁸⁴⁵

Tsafendas's statement to the Commission has gone missing and therefore the author cannot know exactly what he said in evidence. According to the Commission's Report, Tsafendas did not remember Arenstein's name, but said he recognized a photograph of him as "a person resembling the attorney he went to consult in connection with a translation bureau which he wished to buy." Tsafendas's reply is very smart. Obviously realising that someone had seen him in Arenstein's office, he made up a story about a translation bureau as an explanation for meeting innocently with Arenstein. This was less risky than a flat denial since he could not be aware of who had testified.

What is surprising is that the Commission seemed to accept Tsafendas's word and Arenstein's denial. The explanation presumably was its readiness to downplay Tsafendas's political associations and activities, especially in connection with prominent Communists and anti-apartheid activists. An earlier example of this was Tsafendas's association with David Gardener, Solly Sachs and Canon John Collins which were omitted completely.

TSAFENDAS'S THREAT AGAINST DR. VERWOERD

On 10th July, 1964, Mr. Vercuiel dismissed Tsafendas from employment with Messrs. F. A. Poole (Pty.), Ltd., because of the untidiness of his work and his constant quarrelling with the other workers. Mr. Vercuiel gave evidence that Tsafendas was most upset about this and uttered the following threat:

³⁸⁴⁴ Johannes Christoffel Broodryk statement to the COE, 24 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁸⁴⁵ South African History Online, Rowley Israel Arenstein.

“You are just like your bloody Government. I will get you. I will also get your Prime Minister.”

Mr. Vercuiel said that at the time he did not report this threat to any person, but when he heard that Tsafendas had stabbed Dr. Verwoerd to death, he immediately recalled the incident. In a statement in writing made in September, 1966, the alleged threat is worded as follows:

“You are just like your bloody Government. I will kill your Prime Minister yet.” Mr. Vercuiel made a favourable impression, but the possibility that his memory played him false after such a long time had elapsed cannot be excluded.”³⁸⁴⁶

This incident seems to be of no great importance, since Tsafendas's remarks are the sort of thing anyone might say in the heat of the moment. What is surprising is the Commission's attempt to downplay the flare-up by suggesting that Vercuiel might have got things wrong because of the passage of time. In fact, two years had passed since the incident, and the Commission did not offer the same excuse for witnesses' evidence made more than two years ago, for example Antony Maw, who described in detail events from 1951. The fact that the wording in the two statements is slightly different does not mean the witness misremembered the incident. The import of the statement is the same.

³⁸⁴⁶ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 10.

TSAFENDAS'S CHARACTERISATIONS OF DR. VERWOERD

Apart from reproducing Vercuiel's comment, the Report does not refer to anything Tsafendas said about Dr. Verwoerd, although several witnesses reported comments he freely made.

Tsafendas himself spoke about the Prime Minister when questioned by the police. He said that he considered Dr. Verwoerd was not the true representative of South Africa. "I wanted to see a government representing all the South African people. I do not think the Nationalist Government is representative of the people and I wanted to see a different government."³⁸⁴⁷ He further told the police that he was "disgusted with his (Dr. Verwoerd's) racial policies" and he said, "I always had a grudge against the South African Government on account of its racial policies and I hated Dr. Verwoerd because he was a foreigner - a Hollander."³⁸⁴⁸ (The issue of foreigner/Hollander is discussed extensively in the previous chapter).

The fact that Tsafendas did not consider Dr. Verwoerd to be properly representative of all the South African people was something that the police and almost certainly the Commission were told by several witnesses. They testified that Tsafendas described Dr. Verwoerd as a dictator and a tyrant who oppressed his people and he regularly characterised him as "Hitler's best student." In addition, Jacobus Bornman, told the police that Tsafendas "often criticised the government, his exact words I don't remember, but it seemed to me that he had a grudge against Dr. Verwoerd."³⁸⁴⁹ Edward Furness testified that Tsafendas wanted "to create a resistance to the regime of South Africa and mentioned civil disobedience and anything that would get the South African regime out of power."³⁸⁵⁰ None of these opinions which so animated Tsafendas finds any mention in the Report.

TSAFENDAS'S ATTEMPT TO RECRUIT PEOPLE FOR AN UPRISING IN SOUTH AFRICA

*Evidence was submitted to the Commission that Tsafendas had tried to recruit people to take part in an uprising in South Africa. He admits that he did in fact try to recruit people for an uprising, but says that his aim was confined to the Territory of Mozambique.*³⁸⁵¹

³⁸⁴⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁸⁴⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁸⁴⁹ Jacobus Johannes Bornman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁸⁵⁰ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁸⁵¹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 32.

*He denied that he had ever tried to canvass support in London for an uprising in South Africa. His efforts, he said, were confined to Portuguese territories.*³⁸⁵²

The Commission here makes an important revelation: that Tsafendas, while in England, attempted to recruit people for an uprising. According to the Report, Tsafendas denied that he tried to bring about an uprising in South Africa and said it was meant for Mozambique. Whichever country was to be involved, the plan demonstrated Tsafendas's passion and dedication to his goal. That goal was clearly stated by a witness to the Commission, Edward Furness, but was not included in the Report: he wanted "to create a resistance to the regime of South Africa and mentioned civil disobedience and anything that would get the South African regime out of power."³⁸⁵³ That was in the early 1960s, half a decade before the assassination, a pointer to Tsafendas's commitment to his intention.

The Report said Tsafendas's remarks about the uprisings were disclosed when "evidence was submitted to the Commission." However, no such evidence was found in NASA. This is no great surprise, since a great deal of evidence have gone missing, especially those portraying Tsafendas as a revolutionary. That this evidence is missing is further clear proof that important evidence disappeared from NASA. The Commission has omitted several very important incidents showing Tsafendas as a revolutionary person. In this case it did publish a report reflecting Tsafendas's revolutionary nature, but it would best be described as a "bare-bones" account.

PIDE'S FILE ON TSAFENDAS

PIDE had a file on Tsafendas since 1938 but lied to the South African police that they did not. This was obviously an attempt to withhold any information pointing to Tsafendas as "a partisan for the independence of Mozambique."³⁸⁵⁴ However, just one day after the assassination, the South African embassy in Lisbon, citing "a reliable local source," revealed that Tsafendas "has a criminal record in Mozambique, where he is said to have been arrested on several occasions after creating public disturbances, including shouting pro-Communist anti-Portuguese slogans." The embassy even warned the South African police that "If information correct, we suspect Portuguese may play down assassin's previous political ³⁸⁵² Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18.

³⁸⁵³ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁸⁵⁴ Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

activities and we would suggest full details in this connection be sought.”³⁸⁵⁵ The Commission, like the South African police, was aware of the above information. However, it seems that it did not make any further inquiries but simply accepted what was given to it by the Portuguese.

TSAFENDAS'S ARGUMENT WITH A COLLEAGUE ABOUT SALAZAR

*A Portuguese who was also employed by the firm said that Tsafendas had assumed a hostile attitude towards him because he had refused to discuss Dr. Salazar with him.*³⁸⁵⁶

The Commission here tells only half of the story. According to Antonio Teixeira Da Silva, the Portuguese colleague in question, Tsafendas first asked him what he did in Mozambique. Da Silva told him that he had served in the Portuguese Army for three years. According to Da Silva, Tsafendas asked what salary he got and whether the army had often had trouble with the natives. Tsafendas then asked him for his opinion of Salazar, which he refused to discuss. Tsafendas then became hostile towards him.³⁸⁵⁷

Tsafendas strongly supported Mozambique's independence from Portugal and wanted to see “a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the mother nation.”³⁸⁵⁸ For this reason, he repeatedly conducted “subversive” propaganda in Mozambique, seeking to raise awareness about Communism and the possible independence of Mozambique. His activities there led to his five arrests by the Portuguese police, imprisonment and torture, the loss of at least three jobs and the creation of a PIDE file (n° 10.415)³⁸⁵⁹ which got fatter with every passing year, finally reaching around 130 pages. According to Inspector Horacio Ferreira, of the Portuguese Security Police in Mozambique, Tsafendas was “intense anti-White” and told him that “the Portuguese Government has never done anything for their non-Whites.”³⁸⁶⁰

Peter Pappas, whose café in Durban Tsafendas often visited, said Tsafendas “spoke angrily about the Salazar regime in Portugal and about the Mozambique police.”³⁸⁶¹ While in ³⁸⁵⁵ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Lisbon, to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 07 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁸⁵⁶ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter III C, Paragraph 8.

³⁸⁵⁷ Antonio Teixeira Da Silva statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁸⁵⁸ PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³⁸⁵⁹ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³⁸⁶⁰ Col. van Wyk's report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

³⁸⁶¹ Rand Daily Mail, 'Tsafendas: In the Eyes of A Friend', 14 September 1966.

Cape Town, Tsafendas visited Mr. N.D. Hartford, a reporter with the Cape Argus. He described himself as “a rebel from Mozambique,” and asked him if there was any news of the freedom fighters there, saying he was interested in their efforts to overthrow Portuguese rule in Mozambique. Tsafendas refused to serve in the Portuguese Army because, he said, he “did not want to serve a dictatorship.”³⁸⁶² Albert Vercueil, Tsafendas’s foreman at F.A. Poole, testified that Tsafendas “was well-built and strong, and bullied the other Portuguese workers.”³⁸⁶³ Tsafendas did the same in other jobs with Portuguese workers who were supportive of Salazar’s regime.³⁸⁶⁴ Thus it seems unlikely that Tsafendas became hostile towards Da Silva simply because he refused to discuss Salazar with him. Far more likely is that Tsafendas was angered that Da Silva had served in the Portuguese Army and perhaps concluded that he supported the Salazar regime.

JACOBUS BORNMAN

*Mr. Bornman, who occupied the same room as Tsafendas, stated that Tsafendas did not show any signs of being mentally abnormal. He was good-natured, but had messy habits. His topics, of conversation were politics and women. He was strongly opposed to the policy of the Government. He read only English-language newspapers and was sometimes upset by what he had read. At times he passed the remark that the Government was doing so much for the Coloureds that it would be better for him to be a Coloured.*³⁸⁶⁵

Bornman was Tsafendas’s roommate for six to seven weeks in Mrs. Groves’s boarding house. Although the Commission’s Report includes some positive comments about Tsafendas made by Bornman, they are few and far between in comparison to his full testimony, while some important comments are missing. Bornman testified that “Tsafendas’s conversations were always about women and politics. He never talked about anything else. Tsafendas was dissatisfied with conditions in R.S.A and he has often criticized the government, his exact words I don’t remember, but it seemed to me that he had a grudge against Dr. Verwoerd. He stood up a lot for the Coloureds.” The Commission admits Bornman’s remark that Tsafendas strongly opposed the policy of the government, but omits ³⁸⁶² The Cape Argus, ‘Brainwashed in Jail Held Man Told Argus.’ 7 September 1966: 3; Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 75.

³⁸⁶³ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁸⁶⁴ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁸⁶⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 58.

that Tsafendas “stood up a lot for the Coloureds,” a most important statement since Tsafendas was portrayed at the summary trial as “unsympathetic towards the Coloureds.”

Also important was Bornman saying Tsafendas seemed to have “a grudge against Dr. Verwoerd.” Several other witnesses reported similar, even stronger, remarks by Tsafendas, for instance that he considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a dictator and a tyrant, and that he described him as “Hitler’s best student.” None of the above statements was included in the Report. The Report finally states that Tsafendas told Bornman he would have been better off as a Coloured than a White because the Government was doing “so much for them.” Bornman has made no such comment in his statement to the police on October 3, which means that he probably made it to the Commission hearing. Forty-six witnesses who were interviewed by the author said they never heard Tsafendas make any such comment and they could not believe he held such opinions. It is not impossible that Tsafendas was being sarcastic, as he often was, according to several friends the author interviewed. The fact is, however, that the Commission included the disputed statement and omitted the one about standing up for the Coloureds.

Although Bornman’s lively, first-person statement was one of the most positive about Tsafendas, the Commission downplayed it significantly by omitting crucial comments and reducing it to five flatly-delivered sentences. Bornman’s comments regarding Tsafendas’s personality are examined in the section ‘Landlords and Flatmates’ of this chapter.

SOUTH AFRICAN RAILWAYS AND HARBOURS

*On one occasion while he was working there, he intimated that to his mind the South African Government was handling its Bantu problems better than Great Britain was dealing with problems in connection with the West Indians.*³⁸⁶⁶

No statement to this effect or any like evidence was found in the archives and none of Tsafendas’s colleagues at this job testified to his saying anything of the sort. It is always possible that such a statement was among testimony that has gone missing. In those circumstances, the author cannot know how and when Tsafendas made the remark attributed to him and how faithful the Commission’s account is to his words. What is certain is that this is a statement which shows support for the apartheid government and it is not what Tsafendas believed. Working for a governmental enterprise, it would have been very stupid for ³⁸⁶⁶ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 26.

Tsafendas publicly to attack the government, as he often did with people he knew.

Statements that show Tsafendas's real political ideas are listed earlier in this study and later in this chapter. It is important to mention that once again the Commission has included a statement portraying Tsafendas as a supporter of the apartheid government while omitting several where he condemned the government and affirmed his anti-apartheid, anti-colonialist and Communist beliefs. The statement in question was read to forty-six people who knew Tsafendas well and every single one declared that he could never have meant what he was quoted as saying. For reasons of space, the names of the forty-six will not be listed here; but their testimonies, along with the issue in general, have already been discussed extensively in Chapters 4 ("Tsafendas Meets His Lawyers") and 5 ("Dr. Cooper's Testimony").

TSAFENDAS'S FIVE PASSPORTS

The South African and Portuguese Press reported that on one of his arrests in Mozambique, Tsafendas was found to be in possession of five passports.³⁸⁶⁷ However, the Report makes no mention of this. Even if it believed the reports to be mere rumours, one would have expected the Commission to investigate the issue. After all, it had probed and dismissed other rumours involving conspiracies about the assassination and Tsafendas's past, some of them considerably more far-fetched than this one.

There was certainly nothing sinister about the five passports, which were almost certainly old passports Tsafendas had held onto. PIDE made no mention of them in their reports. Had the passports been forgeries or suspect in any way, this would have been stated by PIDE in its reports. Even if the information had been omitted from PIDE's reports for the South African police, it would certainly have been included in their own secret and confidential reports after the arrest. Furthermore, four witnesses confirmed that Tsafendas did indeed keep some, if not all, of his old passports. Mary Eintracht, Ira Kyriakakis and Andreas Babiolakis told the author that Tsafendas retained his out-dated passports as souvenirs.³⁸⁶⁸ A ³⁸⁶⁷ Dagbreek, 'Tsafendas het vir V.V. in Persie Gewerk', 11 September 1966; Daily Mirror, 'The Clouded Past of An Assassin', 9 September 1966: 11; The Daily News, 'Tsafendas Seen As 'Mystery Man'', 8 September 1966: 17; The Herald (Melbourne), 'The Killer: Five Passports and A Record of Subversion', 8 September 1966: 1; The Rhodesia Herald, 'Assassin Said To Have Been Deported From P.E.A. for Communist Connections', 8 September 1966: 1; The Star, 9 September 1966: 5, 'More Uncovered On Assassin's History'; The Star, 'Assassin Had Five Passports', 10 September 1966: 3.

³⁸⁶⁸ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

Greek man in Mozambique named Manuel Tsokos also told The Star, one of the newspapers that published the story of the five passports, that Tsafendas had “several different passports.”³⁸⁶⁹

The Commission omitted the reference to five passports from its Report for what seem to be obvious reasons: that such information could have fuelled conspiracy theories suggesting that Tsafendas was a hired assassin or part of a Communist plot and was therefore much more than a helpless human being. There was, in fact, a perfectly logical explanation for the passports, but the Commission chose to avoid all mention of the subject, presumably to avoid adding to the rumours.

EVIDENCE REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S POLITICAL IDEAS WHICH HAVE BEEN OMITTED BY THE COMMISSION

The following comments are taken from statements given to the police and the Commission by people who knew Tsafendas. All were in the Commission's possession but were omitted from its Report. On occasion, the Commission referred to some of these witnesses and some of the things they said, but they omitted their political comments:

- Edward Furness, who met him in London, testified that Tsafendas wanted to “create a resistance to the regime of South Africa and mentioned civil disobedience and anything that would get the South African regime out of power.” Furthermore, he testified that Tsafendas was a regular visitor to the offices of the British anti-apartheid movement and that he had seen him in the company of members of the movement, including David Gardener. He had also mentioned that Tennyson Makiwane, the ANC representative in London, was regularly present in the offices and often gave speeches there.³⁸⁷⁰
- Kenneth Ross was Tsafendas's landlord in Durban for two months in 1965. He testified that Tsafendas was “very fond of discussing politics and gave me the opinion that he was well versed in politics. Tsafendas objected to the Communists being banished to Robin Island [sic] because of their political opinions and actions. In general, Tsafendas opposed to every decision taken by the South African Government and freely voiced his opinion to me. He was blatantly opposed to the National Party policy, the policy of the present Government, and was definitely pro-Russian.”³⁸⁷¹

³⁸⁶⁹ The Star, ‘Assassin Had Five Passports’, 10 September 1966: 3.

³⁸⁷⁰ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

- Jacobus Bornman testified that Tsafendas “stood up a lot for the Coloureds” and “often criticised the South African government and seemed to have a grudge against Dr. Verwoerd.”³⁸⁷² Bornman is mentioned in the Report but it carries none of these comments. His case is discussed in detail earlier in this section.
- Robert Smith was a night clerk at the Durban Men’s Home where Tsafendas stayed for two months in 1965. He testified that Tsafendas was “a Communist,” “a fanatic on politics and seldom spoke of anything else” and had described “United Party and National Party officials and members as capitalistic roughs.” Tsafendas had told him that the “South African Government’s policy was ‘rotten’” and often compared conditions in South Africa with those of Russia, to South Africa’s detriment, stating, “Look at all the poor people in South Africa... such conditions don’t exist in Russia because Russia is a Communistic state.” More importantly, Smith had testified to the police that Tsafendas had told him that when he lived in London he had associated with Canon John Collins and Solly Sachs, both leading members of the British anti-apartheid movement.³⁸⁷³
- According to Inspector Horacio Ferreira, of the Portuguese Security Police in Mozambique, Tsafendas was “intense anti-White” and told him that “the Portuguese Government has never done anything for their non-Whites.”³⁸⁷⁴
- Patrick O’Ryan told the police that Tsafendas “was against the state policy of both South Africa and Portugal” and that he “labelled the apartheid policies as unfair.”³⁸⁷⁵ O’Ryan is mentioned in the Report but these comments are not. His case is examined earlier in this section.
- Johannes Botha, a security officer, told the police that Nick Vergos characterised Tsafendas in a remark to him as the “biggest Communist in the Republic of South Africa.”³⁸⁷⁶ The Commission refers to Botha and to Vergos, but these comments are omitted. His case is discussed in the “Vergos Case” section of this chapter.

³⁸⁷¹ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁸⁷² Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁸⁷³ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁸⁷⁴ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

³⁸⁷⁵ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³⁸⁷⁶ Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

- Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren, a security officer at the Mandini Paper Factory in Zululand, told the police that Nick Vergos said Tsafendas “was not Greek, but a kaffir and a Communist.”³⁸⁷⁷
- Father Hanno Probst reported Tsafendas to a security officer as a “communist and a dangerous person.”³⁸⁷⁸ He also suspected Tsafendas of being a political agitator, stirring up disaffection among young Blacks in the Mangete Reserve. “I say this because during the period Demetrios Tsafendas stayed at Mandini, the youngsters in the Mangete Reserve became unruly and aggressive. This, however, is only suspicion, because since the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd everything became quiet again and the youngsters controllable.”³⁸⁷⁹
- Roelof Swiegers testified that Tsafendas “leaned towards the communist side.”³⁸⁸⁰
- Keith Martincich testified that Tsafendas “on quite a few occasions he had discussed politics with me. He said he did not like the Government and that he was given a hard time in South Africa. He said the Government won’t reign very long.”³⁸⁸¹ The Commission refers to Martincich, but these comments are omitted.
- Elizabeth Groves was Tsafendas’s landlady for six or seven weeks and a retired psychiatric nurse. About Tsafendas she said, “I received complaints that he was argumentative and towards me he said that we Afrikaners are a backward nation. It was clear that he had nothing good towards Afrikaners.”³⁸⁸² The Commission refers to Mrs. Groves, but these comments are omitted. Her case is discussed in the ‘Landlords and flatmates’ section.
- Gillian Claire Liebermann, personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation, testified to the police that Tsafendas had attempted to discuss politics with her and that she had got the “impression that he does not agree with authority (Governmental or other). I cut him short, saying that in my capacity of my work I do not discuss politics. I ³⁸⁷⁷ Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁸⁷⁸ Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁸⁷⁹ Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁸⁸⁰ Roelof Erasmus Swiegers statement to the police, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van vorm Z 204. NASA.

³⁸⁸¹ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁸⁸² Elizabeth Magdalene Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation.”³⁸⁸³

- Antony Maw testified that the Portuguese authorities in Mozambique did not allow Tsafendas to enter the country on grounds of suspected Communist tendencies.³⁸⁸⁴
- A report from Col. van Wyk of the South African police characterised Tsafendas as being regarded in Mozambique as “intensely anti-white.”³⁸⁸⁵
- Peter Pappas, whose café in Durban Tsafendas often visited, said Tsafendas “spoke angrily about the Salazar regime in Portugal and about the Mozambique police.”³⁸⁸⁶
- Reports from Mozambique which emerged after the assassination said that Tsafendas was “violently anti-Portuguese.”³⁸⁸⁷
- Gladstone Dunn testified that Tsafendas expressed the opinion that the South African Government “was not playing fair with the non-Whites. He said that the wages paid to non-Whites was very unsatisfactory, as well as the political situation.”³⁸⁸⁸

CONCLUSION

Although the Report referenced some of Tsafendas's political activities, it fell far short of describing the full extent of his political involvements. Apart from one particular instance, that Tsafendas urged an uprising against the colonial rulers of Mozambique, all the information the Commission presented was already in the public domain through the media. Furthermore, the incidents mentioned are frequently downplayed or misinterpreted, in particular in regard to Tsafendas's Communist and anti-apartheid links. The most glaring omissions are that Tsafendas had associated in London with leading anti-apartheid activists such Solly Sachs, Canon John Collins and David Gardener, some of his prison terms under the Portuguese due to his Communist and anti-Portuguese activities, the fact that he was exiled from Mozambique for twelve years because of these activities and that he fought with the Communists in the Greek Civil War.

It is notable that the Commission went to great lengths to locate John Michaletos, a Greek Communist childhood friend of Tsafendas who recruited him in the Democratic Army, ³⁸⁸³ Gillian Claire Liebermann statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁸⁸⁴ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub File: 1/8. NASA.

³⁸⁸⁵ Col. van Wyk's report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

³⁸⁸⁶ Rand Daily Mail, 'Tsafendas: In the Eyes of A Friend', 14 September 1966.

³⁸⁸⁷ The Cape Argus, '180-Day Prison for Tsafendas?', 7 September 1966: 1.

³⁸⁸⁸ Gladstone Dunn statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA the military wing of the Greek Communist Party during the Civil War. Despite the Commission's efforts, no mention of Michaletos is made in the Report. That Tsafendas was described by several witnesses as a Communist and by one as "the biggest Communist in the Republic" are omitted.³⁸⁸⁹ Generally, Tsafendas's Communist activities and statements are downplayed as incompatible with the picture of him crafted from evidence by the Commission and the police.

A very important omission is that PIDE had a file on Tsafendas since 1938. Although PIDE lied to the South African police that they had no such file, South Africa's embassy in Lisbon had informed its superiors in Cape Town of the existence of just such a file. What is more, the embassy warned that the Portuguese would attempt to downplay Tsafendas's political activities, which is exactly what they did. Nevertheless, still the South African police appeared to accept at face value what the Portuguese gave them.

Evidence that Tsafendas was clearly a political animal, an anti-apartheid fanatic, a Communist, and a committed supporter of an independent Mozambique finds no place in the Report. Omitted also are his descriptions of Dr. Verwoerd as a dictator and a tyrant, as well as his oft-repeated characterisation of Dr. Verwoerd as "Hitler's best student."

Not only is Tsafendas's ideology absent, but so are the words he used to describe and explain it to his friends and acquaintances, to the South African police and to PIDE. This is important because it deprived readers of the opportunity to know exactly what Tsafendas believed and to decide how "deluded" he was, or indeed whether he was deluded at all. When someone repeated to the police various specific remarks Tsafendas had made about politics, the Commission would generalise or summarise the statements, instead of using Tsafendas's own words, as related by the witness. An example of this is seen with two witnesses in Durban Men's Home. Tsafendas's exact remarks to them are omitted in favour of a woolly paraphrase by the Commission that Tsafendas "expressed himself strongly against the South African Government and in favour of Communism."³⁸⁹⁰

It would have been revealing to learn exactly what Tsafendas said when he condemned the government and in what terms he expressed his preference for Communism. However, his words did not sound like the words of a madman and this could well have been why they were not included. On the other hand, the Commission did include Tsafendas's own words to the psychiatrists. The comments which Tsafendas made to Dr. Sakinofsky are also against the South African government, but they are considered “deluded” and apolitical.

³⁸⁸⁹ Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁸⁹⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Parangraph 32.

The Commission has not included even one of the many statements made by Tsafendas about his political ideas to the South African and Mozambican police or to people who knew him. If this was done, it would have been obvious that Tsafendas said completely different things to his psychiatrists than he did to his friends and acquaintances; what he told his friends and acquaintances were serious and clear political thoughts, also compatible with what he told the police, something that did not fit with the portrayal of Tsafendas at the court.

The following is a short summary of Tsafendas's political activities which were omitted by the Commission:

- The Commission refers to Tsafendas's involvement with the British anti-apartheid movement and that he was noticed “in the company of leftists,” but fails to name any of these leftists, when it was known to Judge van Wyk that he had met and associated with prominent members of the movement such as Tennyson Makiwane, Canon John Collins, David Gardener and Solly Sachs.
- That Tsafendas, while in London, had a friendly association with Commander Thomas Fox-Pitt, the secretary of the Anti-Slavery Society and one of the leading figures in the modern anti-slavery movement.³⁸⁹¹
- His participation alongside the Communists during the Greek Civil War.
- That he was considered by PIDE to be “a partisan for the independence of Mozambique.”
- He was accused by PIDE of preaching “under the guise of religion in favour of Mozambique's independence ...”
- The true reasons for his imprisonment in Lisbon in 1949.
- His arrest and imprisonment in Lourenço Marques in 1951.
- That he was allowed to enter Mozambique and deported in 1951 because of his Communist and anti-Portuguese activities in the 1930s.
- He was exiled from Mozambique for twelve years and was allowed to return in 1963 only after he received amnesty by the Portuguese government.
- His arrest and imprisonment in Lisbon in 1952.
- The true reasons for his imprisonment in Beira in 1964.

³⁸⁹¹ The Guardian, ‘Winding Back’, 30 September 1966: 10; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

- His arrest in February 1965 in Beira.
- That PIDE had a file on him since 1938, the Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. However, this was not known to the Commission as PIDE lied about it to the South African authorities.

Why did the Commission omit the facts that Tsafendas was a passionate Communist who had participated in a military conflict with the Communists and had associated with members of the British anti-apartheid movement in London? Gordon Winter, who worked as a journalist for the Post and the Citizen, while he was also a BOSS agent and very good friend of H.J. van den Bergh, the man in charge of the Tsafendas police investigation, said that it was because the General wanted to downplay and even omit Tsafendas's Communist activities and beliefs.³⁸⁹² Why? Winter's explanation seems more than just logical:

“He [General van den Bergh] didn't want it in. It's an embarrassment for him that this man who was a) dangerous, b) mad, c) Coloured, got a job at the House of Assembly, and HJ's policemen or security... it doesn't matter about going to work Pelindaba or whatever you call it, for a uranium base or whatever. This is not a Kruger Park ranger job; we're talking about in the House of Assembly. It's embarrassing for HJ, the supremo of intelligence, for his mob to allow this lunatic – if he was a lunatic – into the House of Assembly, and he then went in with two daggers. That's some security! No wonder they wanted to keep it quiet ... if there was a political motive, it's hardly pro-South Africa. And if it was a political motive, surely wouldn't the Kremlin get some benefit from that? A nice bit of propaganda. You don't want that. The reds under the beds in South Africa were the enemy. We don't let them score victories. Think about it. Its common sense.”³⁸⁹³

³⁸⁹² Gordon Winter in A Question of Madness.

³⁸⁹³ Gordon Winter in A Question of Madness.

Common sense indeed...

TSAFENDAS'S CHARACTER ACCORDING TO THE COMMISSION

In its determination to prove that Tsafendas was mad, the Commission distorted, manipulated and ignored the evidence of witnesses on a comprehensive scale, manufacturing an unrecognisable caricature to suit its purposes. In what can only be described as character assassination, it employed a series of unfounded characterisations to misrepresent Tsafendas's actions and intentions. Its basic tactic was to omit from its Report anything positive, while including everything negative.

An appraisal of the statistics proves this beyond dispute. Of the two hundred witnesses who were interviewed by the police and the Commission, 44 made positive statements about Tsafendas's character or in some way contradicted the Report's negative picture. Of the rest, 6 made negative comments, while the others had nothing either positive or negative to say about him. In percentage terms, that means 22% of statements were positive, 3% were negative and the remaining 75% were neutral. However, the Commission used only 1 of the 44 positive comments; that is only 2.2%, while at the same time using 100% of the negative. Even the single positive reference, by Bornman, that Tsafendas was "good-natured,"³⁸⁹⁴ is a drop in the ocean in comparison with the totality of Bornman's favourable testimony. This must be more than a coincidence. In short, everything that supported the theory that Tsafendas was mad or as described by the psychiatrists at his summary trial is included, while everything that contradicts it is omitted.

If 200 people are asked about a particular person, many different opinions will be volunteered. For some, a person like Tsafendas might be a freedom fighter, for others a terrorist. To a university professor, he might appear uneducated while an ill-educated person could conclude he was a professor. Well-bred people might think him rude and boorish, others that he is excessively polite. The safest way to judge someone is generally by his actions, although personal opinions cannot be discounted, especially when the vast majority say exactly same thing. The Commission has described Tsafendas with the following characterizations: maladjusted, rejected, frustrated, feckless rolling-stone, boastful, selfish, unscrupulous and crafty. Let's examine them one by one:

³⁸⁹⁴ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 58.

BOASTFUL

Of the two hundred witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission, only one testified that Tsafendas was “boastful.” This was Wilhelmina de Vos, the same woman who told the police that she “considered him to be a completely normal person”³⁸⁹⁵ and then told the Commission that he was mad.³⁸⁹⁶ The Commission refers to this incident in Chapter II C, Paragraph 65.

The Commission makes two more references to Tsafendas's alleged boastfulness. One is that he appeared to be boastful while working at City Engineering (Chapter II C, Paragraph 7):

*“On 9th December, 1963, he was employed as a fitter by Messrs. City Engineers and Carron Ltd. He was asked to resign and left the firm on 3rd February, 1964. Here he displayed signs of boastfulness.”*³⁸⁹⁷

Johannes Benade, a colleague at City Engineers and Carron Ltd, said Tsafendas “pretended to be a welder fitter. According to the work he delivered, it was clear that he did not have much knowledge on the subject, and as a result he was dismissed on 03/02/64.”³⁸⁹⁸ However, D.G. Gallard, the secretary of the company, in a letter to the Commission of Enquiry, did not mention anything about Tsafendas being dismissed or being asked to resign. The letter simply stated that Tsafendas resigned, without offering an explanation or further detail.³⁸⁹⁹ Neither Benade nor Gallard said anything about Tsafendas being boastful, unless the Commission considered such an attitude to be implicit in Tsafendas's “pretending to be a welder fitter,” in the contemptuous opinion of Benade. The statements by these two witnesses are the only ones found in the archives from employees of this company.

The same applies to the incident described in Chapter IV, Paragraph 3, which states,

“These stories probably owe their origin to the two drafts of R20 each which Tsafendas's brother-in-law sent to him for furniture which had been sold, the payments which Tsafendas received from the Hume Pipe Co., and Tsafendas's statement to the Greek ³⁸⁹⁵ Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁸⁹⁶ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 65.

³⁸⁹⁷ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter III C, Paragraph 7.

³⁸⁹⁸ Johannes Tobias Benade statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁸⁹⁹ Report by D.G. Gallard of City Engineering and Carron Limited regarding Demitrio Tsafendas to the Commission of Enquiry, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 3. NASA.

Consul that he had received R5,000 from South Africa ... his statement to the Greek Consul is typical of a boastfulness which he displayed from time to time.”

The Greek Consul mentioned is Captain P.A. Sanianos, the Consul in Beira, who had mentioned that Tsafendas received R5.000 from his family, as stated in the same part of the Report. A South African police report said Sanianos told them he had several conversations with Tsafendas, who he regarded as “a very intelligent person.”³⁹⁰⁰ Sanianos made no mention of boastfulness or anything that could be taken as such. His full statement is available in the Investigation chapter. It seems highly unlikely that Sanianos made another statement to the Commission; he was not on the list to give evidence to the Commission and he lived permanently in Beira and the only statements that he or anyone else in Beira made were those given to Lt.-Col. van Wyk. Therefore, there seems to be no foundation for the claim that Tsafendas appeared boastful to the Greek Consul. The author asked seventy-one witnesses who knew Tsafendas, including several who knew him extremely well and for many years, whether he was boastful. All strongly rejected such a description.

MALADJUSTED

This word is defined by the Oxford Living Dictionaries as “failing to cope with the demands of a normal social environment.” It is difficult to know in which way the Commission believed Tsafendas to be maladjusted. He grew up a happy child in a loving family environment, coped well and interacted normally with his classmates when sent away to boarding school, and from the age of eighteen looked after himself and forged his own future. He spent several years at sea during World War Two servicing Allied ships, and after the war travelled through at seventeen countries.

Wherever he went, he managed to find work, ranging from welding, which was his trade, to bus conducting, to selling goods on commission or teaching English. He read widely and came to adopt firm political principles, which, when he acted on them, brought him periods in exile and prison. On several occasions, he managed to secure his release by deceiving the authorities. To describe such a person as maladjusted is to misunderstand the meaning of the word. Tsafendas coped with the “normal social environment” with ease and aplomb.

³⁹⁰⁰ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

REJECTED/FRUSTRATED/OUTCAST

Apart from Dr. Cooper, who spoke at the summary trial of Tsafendas's alleged frustration, there is no evidence that he was frustrated. None of the two hundred witnesses who were interviewed by the Commission and the police or the seventy-one who spoke to the author testified that Tsafendas was frustrated. As for being rejected and outcast, these are also inaccurate characterizations and it something that has been discussed extensively in the sections covering his relationships with his family and with the Greek community in this chapter.

FECKLESS ROLLING STONE

Calling Tsafendas a "feckless rolling-stone" is like calling Odysseus the same. Tsafendas never travelled aimlessly or just for the sake of it. Wherever he went was for a purpose. He was banned from South Africa and Mozambique and was prosecuted in Portugal. As result of this, he travelled either to find employment (Sweden, Germany, England), or because he was deported there (Greece and Germany again), or because counties were on the way to his destination (Syria, Lebanon, France, Spain, Denmark, Italy) or simply for a holiday (Bulgaria, Rhodesia, Greece again).

The Commission was aware that Tsafendas was forced to spend the years from 1951 to 1963 in exile since he was banned from Mozambique, the country of his birth, because of his pro-Communist and anti-colonialist activities. It was also aware that at the same period he was also barred from South Africa because he was a "half-caste" and a Communist. In the years up to 1963, Tsafendas made nine applications for permanent residence in South Africa and all were rejected; he made at least six to be allowed to return to Mozambique, all of which were turned down.

Mozambique was then a Province of Portugal and Tsafendas was officially a Portuguese citizen. However, not only was he banned from Mozambique, he was prosecuted and imprisoned in Portugal. The authorities objected to his past political activism in Mozambique and the fact that he was a Communist who opposed the dictatorship of Premier Antonio Salazar. As for drifting around the world, Mozambique and South Africa were the only countries Tsafendas lived in prior to being banned from them, although as a child, he had also lived for a year in Egypt. While serving the Allied cause as a merchant seaman in World War Two, he was stationed in Canada and in the United States. In 1947, he was deported from America to Greece and it was then that his odyssey began. With Mozambique, Portugal and South Africa inaccessible, he tried to find a place to live.³⁹⁰¹ All these travels were known to the Commission.

The fact is Tsafendas was travelling because he was not allowed to live where he wished to live, in Mozambique and South Africa. "Forced globe-trotting," he called it.³⁹⁰² If one of his visa applications had been successful, he would have gone there immediately. It is true that Tsafendas travelled much more widely than most people, but an analysis of his journeys and intentions comprehensively disproves the Commission's characterization of Tsafendas as a "feckless rolling-stone." He spent the first twenty-three years of his life in Mozambique, Egypt and South Africa. He lived in those countries because that was where his family was. From 1941 to 1947, he lived in the United States or, during the Second World War, at sea serving in American Liberty Ships. In 1947, and against his will, he was deported to Greece because of his Greek origins, although he wanted to return to Mozambique.

While in Greece, he joined the Democratic Army, the military wing of the Greek Communist Party, and fought with them in the civil war. When it was obvious that the Communists had lost and the war was coming to an end, Tsafendas applied for a visa to return to South Africa. In his application he wrote, "I am here a man without a country, living in strange lands with people who have different ways of living, customs and languages."³⁹⁰³ The application was turned down. He decided to try Mozambique, via Portugal. He managed to do this by taking ship from Greece to France, then travelling on foot to Portugal through Spain.³⁹⁰⁴

In Portugal, in November 1949, Tsafendas was arrested because the authorities had questions about his identity. It was discovered that he was indeed a Portuguese citizen, but had not served his compulsory term in the military and that he had been dismissed twice from jobs in Mozambique for Communist activities.³⁹⁰⁵ Tsafendas spent the next year in prison but ³⁹⁰¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁹⁰² Demetrios Tsafendakis Affidavit, November 1965. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen, NASA; Father Minas Constantinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁹⁰³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 17.

³⁹⁰⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁹⁰⁵ PIDE Confidential Report about Demitrio Tsafendas, 7 June 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

was then released and boarded a ship to Mozambique. He arrived there in October 1951 but was refused entry because he was listed in official files as a Communist and suspected of involvement in subversive activities.³⁹⁰⁶ This refusal led to his next twelve years being spent in exile. In January 1952, he was back in Portugal and was arrested in Lisbon. The police discovered that he was a Communist and an avowed anti-colonialist who was under suspicion of “unclear activities” during his time in Mozambique and put him in jail again.³⁹⁰⁷

Upon his eventual release a few months later, with his chosen destinations South Africa and Mozambique unattainable, he decided to go to Sweden, where he had heard he could get a job as a welder. He travelled there through Denmark, and eventually got a job as a carpenter.³⁹⁰⁸ He did not stay in Sweden long as the weather was too cold and the money too little, so he moved to Hamburg, Germany and found work as a welder. Tsafendas remained in Germany from early 1954 to June 1955. During his time there, he sent off applications to be allowed to return to Mozambique and to South Africa. All were rejected and in mid-1955 he returned once more to Portugal and spent the next three years working as a hawker in Lisbon.³⁹⁰⁹

In 1958, Tsafendas travelled to Brussels to sell embroidery at the international exhibition, Expo 58. From there, he went back to Germany and spent the next year and a half in Frankfurt, working for one and half months at Fries and Son, six months for Anglo-American Fashions and Designers, and then another six months at a US Army printing works.³⁹¹⁰ During his time in Germany, he lived on his own but had a relationship with a German girl who was a Communist.³⁹¹¹

In May 1959, Tsafendas travelled to Britain, hoping to find a job. He was refused a work permit and took “clandestine” jobs to survive.³⁹¹² While in London, once again, he applied for permission to enter South Africa, sending a letter and an application form dated August 4, 1959 to the Union's immigration attaché in London. A note attached to his file at the embassy stated that Tsafendas had sought permanent residence status in South Africa

³⁹⁰⁶ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

³⁹⁰⁷ Diario Popular, ‘E Conhesido em Lisboa o Assassino do Dr. Verwoerd’, 9 September 1966.

³⁹⁰⁸ Ochsenzoll Hospital report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1, Sub-file: 1/8. NASA.

³⁹⁰⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

³⁹¹⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁹¹¹ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

³⁹¹² PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

several times without success, that in 1941 he entered illegally and was fined; it said he had Communist leanings and had threatened to enter without permission if he was denied again. The diplomat dealing with the application wrote, "Refusal is suggested!" On September 11, 1959, "Demetrio Tsafandakis, alias Demetrio Tsafendas," was blacklisted by the South African Department of the Interior, meaning that he could receive no passport or admission facilities without the consent of the Department's head office.³⁹¹³

In London he also became politically active with anti-apartheid and anti-fascist organisations. He was discovered to be in the country illegally and in December 1959, the British sent him back to Germany, where he spent the next six months working in a tractor factory in Munich.³⁹¹⁴ In March 1960, he read about the Sharpeville massacre and decided to return to South Africa and "do something" against Dr. Verwoerd and apartheid.³⁹¹⁵

Convinced by now that he would not be allowed to enter the country legitimately, he decided on an illegal route, "through the African states south to South Africa." The first stage took him through the Balkan States to Piraeus, Greece, then he took a ferry to Alexandria, Egypt. There his passport expired and he was unable to renew it or replace it, but with the help of the Red Cross, he managed to get to Beirut and Jerusalem.³⁹¹⁶

With his Africa North-to-South plan blocked, Tsafendas decided to return to Portugal. Travelling through Lebanon and Syria by bus, he crossed the Taurus mountain range and reached Ankara, Turkey in May 1961. A month later, he arrived in Istanbul, where he worked as a teacher of English at the best private language college in Turkey at the time, the Limasollu Naci College.³⁹¹⁷

In December 1961, he left to visit a former comrade from the Greek Civil War who lived in Sofia, Bulgaria. His visit lasted two weeks and then he went to Greece to spend Christmas with his good friend John Michaletos and his family.³⁹¹⁸ In January 1962, he travelled to the island of Crete to meet his relatives and see where his beloved father and his hero great-grandfather were born. From Greece, he travelled to Italy, then took the train to ³⁹¹³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraphs 28-30.

³⁹¹⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁹¹⁵ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

³⁹¹⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁹¹⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁹¹⁸ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

Lisbon, where he arrived in February 1962.³⁹¹⁹

Tsafendas worked as a welder in Lisbon until July 1962, when he went back to England and again participated in anti-apartheid and anti-fascist demonstrations. In late 1962, he learned that his father had died and he determined to visit his grave in South Africa. After several more unsuccessful applications for a visa for Mozambique and South Africa, in August or September of 1963, after twelve years of exile, the Portuguese government relented. Convinced by an “act” he put that he was mad but harmless, and “reformed” in terms of his political ideology, the authorities gave him amnesty and permission to return to Mozambique.³⁹²⁰

In October 1963, he arrived in Mozambique and a month later, with the help of his family, he was back in South Africa in Pretoria. He remained in Pretoria until July 1964, working for five months for F.A. Poole Engineering and the rest of the time at his half-sister's café. He crossed into Rhodesia to visit another half-sister he had not seen since 1941, and from there went again to Mozambique. He remained in Beira from October 1964 until November 1964, working for the Hume Pipe Company,³⁹²¹ before being arrested by the Portuguese police for “making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses.”³⁹²²

After three months in jail in Beira, he left Mozambique for Durban in March 1965. He remained there until October 1965, working off and on as an interpreter at the Durban Court, as a welder at Fraser and Chalmers for two months and for a month for South African Railways. After receiving a letter from a girl who said she wanted to meet and marry him, he travelled from Durban to Cape Town, where he met her. He remained in Cape Town from October 1965 until September 1966.

None of the above travels can be described as aimless. Tsafendas himself, as already ³⁹¹⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁹²⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

³⁹²¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

³⁹²² PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

mentioned, characterised them in his affidavit as “forced globetrotting”³⁹²³ and he was right. Several countries happened to be on the way to his destination, like France, Italy, Spain, Syria, Lebanon, Denmark and Turkey. Naturally, he spent little time there because he was just passing through. This does not apply to Turkey, where he got a teaching job and stayed for seven months. He visited Greece for the second time, Rhodesia and Bulgaria for holidays. For business and work, he travelled England, Belgium and Sweden, while one of the Liberty ships during the Second World War also took him to Canada. Apart from places where he stayed only weeks or a few months, this is his life story:

- Six years in Egypt, all in Alexandria (1919-1925).
- Seventeen years in Mozambique: 16 years in Lourenço Marques and one in Beira (1918-1919, 1925-1939, 1963-1964).
- Five years in South Africa: approximately two years in Pretoria, one in Johannesburg, one in Cape Town and a eight months in Durban (1939-1941, 1963-1966, plus school in Middleburg).
- Six years in the USA in Boston and New York, a lot of this time at sea (1941-1947).
- Two years in Greece, all in Athens (1947-1949).
- Six years in Portugal, all in Lisbon (1951-1953, 1955-1958, 1962-1963).
- Three years in Germany, all in three cities, Munich, Frankfurt and Hamburg (1953-1955, 1958-1959).
- Seven months in Turkey in Istanbul (1961).³⁹²⁴

This is not drifting, it is the odyssey of a man who was forced to live in exile from the country where he was born (Mozambique) for twelve years, who for sixteen years was not allowed to enter the country where his family lived (South Africa) and who was prosecuted and imprisoned because of his political beliefs in the country of his official nationality and where, after Mozambique, he spent most of his time (Portugal). Wherever he was, he always applied for permission to return to Mozambique and South Africa. Had he been allowed to return to either country or left in peace in Portugal, this vast Baedeker of travel would never have been opened.

Tsafendas travelled through so many countries mainly for two reasons:

- In search of a better place to stay and work

³⁹²³ Demetrios Tsafendakis Affidavit, November 1965. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen, NASA.

³⁹²⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

- He needed to cross through many countries to reach his destination.

Tsafendas's desperate efforts to return to Mozambique or South Africa and find a place to live and work without being followed by the police do not constitute being branded as a "feckless rolling-stone." His peregrinations recall those of Odysseus, who travelled for ten years through many different places to reach his destination. All of these travels and the reasons for them were known to the Commission, therefore to characterise Tsafendas as a feckless rolling-stone was a travesty of the truth.

UNSCRUPULOUS AND SELFISH

To characterize Tsafendas as unscrupulous and selfish is arguably the most unpleasant and the least accurate of all of the Commission's negative pen portraits. Tsafendas, voluntarily and without charge, taught English to children on three different occasions in his life: in Lourenço Marques in the 1930s, in Istanbul in 1961 and in Beira in 1964. He did this because he believed strongly that education was a person's greatest asset and the best way to get out of poverty and become a better and more useful person to society. This is hardly what an unscrupulous and selfish man would do.

Peter Pappas, a café proprietor in Durban, said he "sometimes gave him [Tsafendas] a free meal, but when he started work he paid me." Pappas also said that Tsafendas was friendly with White "down-and-outs" and when he had some money he would give them a few cents.³⁹²⁵ This was not the first time Tsafendas helped poor people, though penniless himself. In Cape Town, he aided his young flatmate, Jacobus Bornman, when he was out of funds, and then declined to take the money back.³⁹²⁶ Both of these incidents were known to the Commission, but there was no mention of them in the Report.

Tsafendas regularly bought food, sweets and toys for the family of Patrick O'Ryan, who was hosting him. When Patrick complained that this was embarrassing for him since he was the head of the family, Tsafendas's told the children that it was he and his father who had made the purchases.³⁹²⁷ Tsafendas also helped a colleague in Beira to build a room for his daughter, who was to get married.³⁹²⁸ He worked voluntarily in his half-sister's cafe in ³⁹²⁵ Rand Daily Mail, 'Tsafendas: In the Eyes of A Friend', 14 September 1966.

³⁹²⁶ Jacobus Johannes Bornman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁹²⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Reuben O' Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Father Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

³⁹²⁸ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

Pretoria for nine months, refusing to take any money, after she had given him a rent-free apartment.³⁹²⁹ He sent a “thank you” card to his uncle in Crete after he had stayed in his house for a few days in January 1961.³⁹³⁰ He urged Greek sailors of the Eleni tanker to boycott South Africa’s economy by spending as little money as possible. In order to show them the hardships of apartheid, he took some of these sailors to a township in Cape Town.³⁹³¹ Once again, these are not the actions of an unscrupulous and selfish man.

An unscrupulous and selfish person is by definition someone concerned primarily with his own well-being, no matter how this is achieved. Such a person would never act disinterestedly, in pursuit of what he saw as noble political ends or out of concern for others, sometimes risking life and liberty in the process, as Tsafendas did in the following cases:

- In England, Tsafendas became involved with the anti-fascist and the British anti-apartheid movement and participated in meetings and demonstrations arranged by both movements.³⁹³²
- He voluntarily joined the Greek Communists in the Greek Civil War to fight for a cause he believed in.³⁹³³
- In Mozambique, he protested against Portugal’s forced cotton policy and later toured villages preaching about Communism and working for the independence of Mozambique, although he knew he could be arrested. When he was eventually detained and accused of pretending to be a Christian missionary while in reality preaching “under the guise of religion in favour of Mozambique’s independence,”³⁹³⁴ he told the police that what he wanted was “a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or ³⁹²⁹ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

³⁹³⁰ Aris Tsafantakis in a personal interview, 13 April 2016.

³⁹³¹ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 15 February 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

³⁹³² Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demetrio Tsafendas, NASA; Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁹³³ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 15 February 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015. Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

³⁹³⁴ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

black, and therefore separated from the Mother-nation.”³⁹³⁵

Finally, a selfish and unscrupulous man would never have committed the ultimate act of assassination, knowing that there was no escape for him and that his life would very probably end soon as a result. This is conclusive proof of Tsafendas unselfishness. His conviction that he was doing the right thing and that a “change of policy would take place” after the assassination were enough for him to act as he did.

TSAFENDAS PRESENTED AS A BEGGAR

*Tsafendas was always begging for a place to sleep and for meals. At Beira, for example, he slept at the fire-station for a time.*³⁹³⁶

The above statement is one of the clearest indications of the Commission's effort to belittle and humiliate Tsafendas. Although it is true that Tsafendas slept at the fire-station in Beira at one point, the rest of the statement is completely inaccurate. The usage of the word “beg” is completely inaccurate and harsh. The circumstances of Tsafendas when he slept in the fire-station are also not mentioned, although known to the Commission and very important.

Tsafendas was released from prison in Beira, having spent three months there, on January 26, 1965.³⁹³⁷ Penniless and without a place to stay, he had two options: to find himself somewhere to sleep and stay until he stabilize his situation or to ask for help from his friends. Obviously embarrassed to ask his friends' for help, also maybe thinking that he might put them into a difficult and uncomfortable situation since he was just released from prison, he chose to not go to one of them. Instead, he went to the fire-station and asked the fire-fighters if he could sleep in the department's premises and they agreed and eventually spent ten nights there.³⁹³⁸ No one else told the police and the Commission from the statements found at the archives that Tsafendas “begged” or even asked for a place to sleep. This is the only case, so to use the word “always” is entirely inaccurate. Furthermore, probably a lot of people would have done the same in Tsafendas's condition.

³⁹³⁵ PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³⁹³⁶ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter III C, Paragraph 20.

³⁹³⁷ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA; Chapter II C, Paragraph 19.

³⁹³⁸ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

Two more witnesses, George Ananiades and George Liberopoulos, stated to the police something that is compatible with the Commission's report. Lt.-Colonel van Wyk wrote in his report after he had questioned both that Tsafendas "practically forced himself upon them and they treated him and often paid for his meals but further had nothing to do with him. He never spoke about politics with them. They describe him as a normal person with a very high-intelligence."³⁹³⁹

Furthermore, John Verghis, the owner of a café in Beira which Tsafendas often visited, testified to the police that Tsafendas "frequently visited the cafe where he spent time in the company of other Greeks. The subject was quiet and never spoke much and never about politics. It seemed to him that the subject always visited the café to see just if someone would give him something to eat or drink. ... According to him Tsafendas was a normal person."³⁹⁴⁰ John Galanakis was given by Tsafendas when he later entered his shop the impression that he "was on the scrounge, but realised that he was an intelligent man and that he spoke Greek, Portuguese and Afrikaans fluently."³⁹⁴¹

All the above statements were given to Lt.-Colonel van Wyk of the South African police when he visited Mozambique. He concluded in his report that Tsafendas "was most of the time without money and took advantage of others." This seems to be in line with what Lt.-Colonel van Wyk was told. However, it is noticeable that these statements and opinions came only from people who knew Tsafendas in Mozambique and especially in Beira, at a time when he was finding it difficult to make ends meet. A closer look at Tsafendas's problems in Mozambique throws some light on his behaviour and attitudes there. He was arrested twice, he spent three months in police custody and he had difficulty finding work. That he was pressed for cash is evident from the fact that he asked Nick Vlachopoulos, his brother-in-law in Pretoria, to sell some furniture that he had left in storage there. Vlachopoulos did so and sent the proceeds to Tsafendas in Mozambique. It is unlikely that Tsafendas would have sold his furniture unless he was in a serious financial situation. If he just wanted to get rid of the furniture, he could have sold it himself before he left Pretoria.

In total, the police and the Commission questioned some two hundred witnesses and only the Beira interviewees commented along those lines. None of the witnesses in South ³⁹³⁹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

³⁹⁴⁰ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

³⁹⁴¹ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

Africa or elsewhere in Mozambique and Rhodesia confirmed this picture of Tsafendas; indeed, some, like Bornman and Pappas, testified that Tsafendas was the exact opposite and helped people financially, although he was poor himself. However, even in Beira, things were not exactly like this.

Andreas Babiolakis, Costas Poriазis and Nick Papadakis, who knew Verghis well and often visited his café, disagree with Verghis's assumption that Tsafendas visited the café "just to see if someone would give him something to eat or drink." Certainly, Greeks often offered to buy drinks for Tsafendas and for each other, but this was customary when the Greeks sat together. If a new person arrived and was invited to join their company, someone would buy his drink. According to Andreas Babiolakis and Nick Papadakis who were present in Beira at the time, however, Tsafendas would only accept if he had enough money to buy the next round. Most times, he could not afford to buy everyone a drink, so he would decline their offer, but he would sit in their company and talk and listen.³⁹⁴²

Ananiades and Liberopoulos stated to the author that they strongly disagree with van Wyk's interpretation of their words with regards to Tsafendas forcing himself upon them and strongly condemn the use of the word "begging" which they state that it is a lie. Ananiades disagrees with the report's comment that Tsafendas "practically forced himself upon them" and believes it is "inaccurate." He told the author that Tsafendas "was not the kind of man" described by the Commission. He states that if the Commission based the conclusion in question in his statement to the police, that it is mistaken as this is not what he had meant. He told the author:

"No, no, no, no. It was nothing like that. I met him one day in Costa do Sol where we had coffee. We spoke and he said he was leaving the next day for South Africa. That was all. He never asked me to pay anything for him or to give him any money. Nothing. Never. I can't say if he generally was a beggar, but he was not like that with me and did not give me any such impression. He did not look or act like a beggar. It is not true [that Tsafendas forced himself upon him]. I don't know why it is in my statement, but I never said anything like that."³⁹⁴³

Liberopoulos associated often with Tsafendas and considered him to be a very "intelligent and political person." He does not remember what he told the police, but he too ³⁹⁴² Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Costas Poriазis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

³⁹⁴³ George Ananiades in a personal interview, 21 June 2016.

disagrees that Tsafendas “forced himself upon them” which finds to be “not true.” When he first met Tsafendas, he had paid for his dinner because it was Greek tradition for the people who lived there to pay for a visitor’s dinner, although Tsafendas was reluctant to allow him to do so. The next day, Liberopoulos attempted to pay again, but Tsafendas refused and paid for both of them. Liberopoulos characterises Tsafendas as a “proud man” and “no beggar.” He told the author:

“He never took advantage of me or of anyone I knew. He would come and sit with us but would never accept a drink if he could not afford to buy you one in return. He would make excuses to avoid accepting the drink, and would never admit that it was because he could not afford the next round.”

Liberopoulos had also tried to distance himself from Tsafendas during the questioning.³⁹⁴⁴

Evidence of egregious omission and distortion by the Commission concerns the case of a twenty-escudos loan. It was known to the Commission that John Emmanuel Marvis lent Tsafendas twenty escudos, which he paid back a few days later.³⁹⁴⁵ This incident is omitted. However, what the Commission does mention, in Chapter II C, Paragraph 21, is that “on one occasion, he (Tsafendas) was seen with a wad of hundred-escudo notes.” The person who made this statement was Marvis, but what the Commission omitted was that Marvis had seen the money when Tsafendas paid him back. Obviously, to have carried the full Marvis story would have contradicted the Commission’s preferred picture of Tsafendas begging for meals and a place to stay. Tsafendas also was given money to sail from Beira to Durban by Costas Poriakis, and Giannos and Andreas Babioulakis, but he paid all of them back about a month later.³⁹⁴⁶

There were several known occasions when Tsafendas acted with generosity towards poor people although he was poor himself. While the Commission mentioned that he was a beggar, it failed to include any of the evidence of his generosity. Jacobus Bornman was Tsafendas’s flatmate for two months in Cape Town. When he was broke, Tsafendas voluntarily gave him five cents and when Bornman tried to return the money, Tsafendas ³⁹⁴⁴ George Liberopoulos in a personal interview, 6 July 2015.

³⁹⁴⁵ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

³⁹⁴⁶ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Costas Poriakis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

refused to take it back.³⁹⁴⁷ The Commission's report refers to Bornman but not this statement of his. Peter Pappas, owner of a Greek café in Durban, said when Tsafendas had some money he would give "a few cents to the white down-and-outs of the city." Pappas said also had said, "When his luck was out, I sometimes gave him a free meal, but when he started work he paid me."³⁹⁴⁸

Furthermore, Richard Poggenpoel testified to the police and the Commission that when Tsafendas stayed in his house for two weeks, he did not pay for lodging because he was unemployed. However, a few weeks later and after he had moved out of his house, Tsafendas visited Poggenpoel and gave him R4. Poggenpoel did not want to take the money, which he had not asked for, but Tsafendas insisted on paying him.³⁹⁴⁹ All this was known to the Commission but was left out of its Report, presumably because they were not the things a beggar would do and therefore contradicted such a claim.

The author asked seventy-one witnesses whether Tsafendas could be described as a beggar and not one agreed. For reasons of space and since the witnesses' statements about his character are listed in the previous chapter, such statements will not be listed here, but the following are some examples of views as to whether he was a beggar:

- One evening in August 1966, some of the Eleni seamen asked Tsafendas to take them to a Greek restaurant. He did so and despite their protests, he paid the bill for everybody. Tsafendas said the crew were "strangers in his town" and since he was the host, he should pay.³⁹⁵⁰ Patrick O'Ryan and his son Reuben O'Ryan in whose house Tsafendas lived for five months said that he constantly bought food and sweets and toys for their family. When Patrick complained that it was embarrassing for him to be seen that their guest was bringing more food and toys in his house than him, Tsafendas did not stop, but started claiming to the children that it was their dad who had bought it and not him.³⁹⁵¹ Tsafendas also sometimes gave money to Allan O'Ryan for his bus fare to school.³⁹⁵²

³⁹⁴⁷ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁹⁴⁸ Rand Daily Mail, 'Tsafendas: In the Eyes of A Friend', 14 September 1966.

³⁹⁴⁹ Richard Poggenpoel statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013.

³⁹⁵⁰ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 15 February 2014; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

³⁹⁵¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Reuben O' Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Father Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

³⁹⁵² Allan O' Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019.

Emanuel Tsabouniaris, one of the Eleni seamen, told the author that he gave Tsafendas money to buy him a few things ashore and when he returned with them, he told Tsafendas to keep the change. Tsafendas insisted that he take back the change. Tsabouniaris said, "He was always very prompt with our financial dealings." Tsabouniaris also said that "the only thing I found strange was that his profession of a hawker did not match his character. He was very educated and very polite for a hawker. The thing that impressed me more was that he was very proud. He was doing the job with pride, not like a beggar or trying to make you buy in a sleazy way. He was a true gentleman."³⁹⁵³

Father Nikola Banovic became very sad upon hearing that the Commission had presented Tsafendas as a beggar, and found it hard to believe it. He told the author, "Dimitris was a very generous man. If he had two drachmas (Greek currency of the time) in his pocket, he would give them both to someone in need. He was not a beggar, this is libel... I remember he always used to give good tips to waiters and taxi drivers."³⁹⁵⁴

THE MISSING BIBLE

*However, he remained at the hostel until 14th April, 1965, and when he left he took the Bible that was in his room with him.*³⁹⁵⁵

The above statement refers to the time when Tsafendas lived at the E.R. Carney Hostel, Clair Wood, while working for the South African Railways and Harbours. The statement is by Casper Andries Willemse, the hostel's housemaster, and it is correct.³⁹⁵⁶ But once again a positive comment about Tsafendas is omitted since Willemse, had also characterised Tsafendas as "a sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man."³⁹⁵⁷

TSAFENDAS'S CHARACTER ACCORDING TO PEOPLE WHO MET HIM AND TESTIFIED TO THE COE OR TO THE POLICE

Let us now consider what Tsafendas's friends and close acquaintances said about him in the period leading up to the assassination. All of the statements below were in the possession of the Commission and were omitted from its Report. The study includes here only their ³⁹⁵³ Emanuel Tsabouniaris in personal interview with the author, 14 June 2016.

³⁹⁵⁴ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

³⁹⁵⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 26.

³⁹⁵⁶ Casper Andries Willemse statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁹⁵⁷ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), 'Assassin - Man With A Chip On His Shoulder', 11 September 1966: 1, 8.

comments about Tsafendas's character and not his political ideas or his mental state as these are discussed in the relevant sections of this chapter:

1. Kenneth Heugh Ross, Tsafendas's landlord for two months: "Tsafendas was very fond of discussing politics and gave me the opinion that he was well versed in politics. Tsafendas objected to the Communists being banished to Robin Island [sic] because of their political opinions and actions. In general, Tsafendas opposed to every decision taken by the South African Government and freely voiced his opinion to me. He was blatantly opposed to the National Party policy, the policy of the present Government, and was definitely pro-Russian. I am aware that Tsafendas possessed a large quantity of literature but did not take note of the names of the books he read."³⁹⁵⁸
2. Johannes Aurets, Tsafendas's supervisor at South African Railways, told the police that Tsafendas "was a well-mannered and well-spoken person. He associated with those working with him. He was soft-spoken and appeared to be of a good nature. During the time he was employed under my supervision, i.e. for approximately three weeks, I did not see him being cross at any time. He was a good worker."³⁹⁵⁹
3. August Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria. He found him to be "very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet."³⁹⁶⁰
4. Patrick O'Ryan hosted Tsafendas in his home for five months in 1965-1966 and was close to him up to his arrest. Tsafendas was described to him by a preacher of the Christian Church as a "highly cultured gentleman, a very refined gentleman who speaks seven languages."³⁹⁶¹ He formed a "deep liking"³⁹⁶² for Tsafendas and considered him to be an "enlightened person."³⁹⁶³ He also testified that "I had confidence in him and used to like him. He was a very kindly man. In my experience of him he had a good heart ... I never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind," or that he "was mentally disturbed."³⁹⁶⁴ He also found Tsafendas to be "well-spoken and had good vocabulary."³⁹⁶⁵

³⁹⁵⁸ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁹⁵⁹ Johannes Jaonus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁹⁶⁰ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁹⁶¹ Patrick O' Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

³⁹⁶² Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³⁹⁶³ Patrick O' Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

³⁹⁶⁴ Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

5. Inspector Horacio Ferreira of the Portuguese Security Police was in charge of the cells where Tsafendas was held in custody in Beira in 1964. His statement to the police said he considered Tsafendas to be “normal and regarded him as a very intelligent person.”³⁹⁶⁶
6. Ian Boswell, administrative assistant at the Department of Labour in Cape Town. He interviewed Tsafendas three times in 1966 and testified that “he was at all times neatly dressed and never gave the impression of being destitute. Aside from being over-talkative, he showed no symptoms of abnormality, during his interviews with me.”³⁹⁶⁷
7. John Bornman lived with Tsafendas for six-seven weeks in April and May of 1966. He found Tsafendas to be “normal, intelligent and friendly. He was neat in his person, but his eating habits were messy.” Bornman also testified that when he was broke, Tsafendas lent him five cents and when Bornman tried to return the money, Tsafendas refused to take it back. Furthermore Bornman testified that Tsafendas “stood up a lot for the Coloureds.”³⁹⁶⁸ The Commission’s report refers to Bornman but none of the above is included.
8. Ralph Lighton, who worked with Tsafendas for nine to ten weeks at the Marine Diamond Corporation, testified to the police that he “never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers.”³⁹⁶⁹
9. Captain P.A. Sanianos, the Greek Consul in Beira “was often in the company of the subject and others had several conversations with him. He considered Tsafendas to be “a normal and very intelligent person.”³⁹⁷⁰
10. Cornelius Rudolph, the head court interpreter on the staff of the Magistrate of Durban, accepted Tsafendas as a Portuguese and Greek interpreter. Rudolph used him “on several occasions” over six months and “got to know him pretty well.” He said, “I spoke with him several times, he seemed to be a normal person and intelligent. He spoke English properly.”³⁹⁷¹

³⁹⁶⁵ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³⁹⁶⁶ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

³⁹⁶⁷ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

³⁹⁶⁸ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA

³⁹⁶⁹ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁹⁷⁰ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

³⁹⁷¹ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

11. Violet Irene Manning was Tsafendas's landlady for almost two months in 1965. She told the Commission of Enquiry: "it was a serviced room but I found him making his own bed. When he came to me he was well-dressed, well-spoken, and gave a good impression. From his general appearance he appeared to be a businessman. When he paid me, he had a bundle of notes and I took him to be a man of means."³⁹⁷²
12. Carel van Heerden was senior security officer for the Marine Diamond Corporation and worked with Tsafendas for around three months in 1966. He told the police: "We were transferred from the Marina on a small outboard boat to the Col pontoon. It was terrible, rough seas, so much so that almost all of us old hands got seasick. It struck me that Tsafendas adapted well. He was one of the few who was not seasick. Upon landing, he filled the mess basin on the lower deck with water and started shaving. His calm way struck me that he must know the sea. Tsafendas was employed as a pump, or engineer, operator and did not work under my direct supervision. I introduced myself to him and talked to him. He was friendly, outgoing, and not aloof. I noticed that his eating was messy. Otherwise he was completely normal."³⁹⁷³
13. Neville Judson worked with Tsafendas for Mike's Outfitters for forty-two days in July and August 1966, frequently driving him to the tanker Eleni while it was docked in Cape Town. Of Tsafendas, he told the police that he "never in no way got the impression that he could be mentally deranged. He appeared to be a normal man with normal reasoning powers."³⁹⁷⁴
14. Gillian Claire Lieberman was a personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation who was often visited by Tsafendas in her office. She "found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation, but a strange type of person, a unique character. I got the impression that he was physically different in dress and appearance. He was a big man, with a particularly striking big hat, stainless steel teeth, sloppy, dirty clothing."³⁹⁷⁵
15. Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys, employment officer at the Department of Labour in Cape Town, interviewed Tsafendas twice. He testified to the police that Tsafendas was "neatly dressed" and he "never got the impression that there was mentally anything wrong with ³⁹⁷² Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

³⁹⁷³ Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden statement to the police, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁹⁷⁴ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

³⁹⁷⁵ Gillian Claire Liebermann statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

- him or that he acted abnormally.”³⁹⁷⁶
16. John Galanakis was given by Tsafendas when the later entered his shop the impression that he “was on the scrounge, but realised that he was an intelligent man and that he spoke Greek, Portuguese and Afrikaans fluently.”³⁹⁷⁷
 17. Albert Vercueil, Tsafendas's boss at F. A. Poole in Pretoria, said that in the five months he worked with Tsafendas, he found him to be a “very friendly, social and talkative person,”³⁹⁷⁸ “not a very good worker, but will say that he was an intelligent worker.”³⁹⁷⁹ He also testified to the Commission of Enquiry that he considered Tsafendas to be “an intelligent man, just untidy and lazy in rounding off his work.” He never got the impression that Mr. Tsafendas was not right in his mind.³⁹⁸⁰
 18. Helen Grispos knew Tsafendas from birth and grew up with him, while her husband was Tsafendas's best childhood friend. She told the police that Tsafendas was “well-mannered and intelligent.”³⁹⁸¹ She also told the author that she never thought Tsafendas was insane. “He never did or said anything to make me or George (her husband) think that he was insane.”³⁹⁸²
 19. Reginald Maile, guard on the Eleni, testified that Tsafendas was “on very friendly relations with the crew ... He was sober, polite and perfectly normal.”³⁹⁸³
 20. Robert Smith, Tsafendas's landlord for two months: “Tsafendas was in my opinion a fanatic on politics and seldomly spoke of anything else ... I am also aware that he has a large quantity of literature but do not know the nature thereof.”³⁹⁸⁴
 21. Sydney Wiehand, Tsafendas's colleague at the House of Assembly testified that Tsafendas “was a quiet man. He wasn't the rough type or anything like that. He was quiet, quietly spoken, well-mannered.”³⁹⁸⁵
 22. Hendrik van Loggenberg knew Tsafendas and his family well in Pretoria. He told the ³⁹⁷⁶ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

³⁹⁷⁷ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

³⁹⁷⁸ Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁹⁷⁹ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁹⁸⁰ Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁹⁸¹ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

³⁹⁸² Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

³⁹⁸³ Reginald Robert Maile statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

³⁹⁸⁴ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁹⁸⁵ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

- police that Tsafendas “definitely came across as normal ... he also seemed healthy ...”³⁹⁸⁶
23. John Gianouris, the Greek Vice Consul at Lourenço Marques, described Tsafendas as “a normal and intelligent person.”³⁹⁸⁷
 24. Petrus Schuin, the head messenger at the Parliament, was also one of the three men who had interviewed him and appointed him. He told the Commission of Enquiry that “there was nothing out of the ordinary about him. Tsafendas was the same as any other person that had worked there.”³⁹⁸⁸
 25. Sydney Wiehand, a messenger who was also on the interview panel in the House of Assembly, said Tsafendas “was a quiet man. He wasn't the rough type or anything like that. He was quiet, quietly spoken, well-mannered.”³⁹⁸⁹
 26. Elizabeth Groves was Tsafendas's landlady for six or seven weeks and a retired psychiatric nurse. About Tsafendas she said, “I received complaints that he was argumentative and towards me he said that we Afrikaners are a backward nation. It was clear that he had nothing good towards Afrikaners.”³⁹⁹⁰
 27. Lt.-Colonel P.J.B. van Wyk wrote in his report from Mozambique that Tsafendas, “for all purposes, can be seen as a normal, intelligent person.”³⁹⁹¹
 28. Jose Lopez Baltazar, a fireman in Beira, testified that “when Tsafendas was in the presence of Whites, he said little or nothing, but was friendly and talkative with the Bantu.”³⁹⁹²
 29. Owen Smorenberg, who worked with him for five-six weeks, testified that “Tsafendas was very talkative and gave the impression that he was very friendly. He wanted to talk to everybody and it became known to me that he was able to speak different languages.”³⁹⁹³
 30. Keith Martincich who worked with him at the Marine Diamond Corporation testified that Tsafendas “spoke to me every day and I got the impression that he was sociable

³⁹⁸⁶ Hendrik Johannes van Loggenberg statement to the police, 8 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁹⁸⁷ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

³⁹⁸⁸ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

³⁹⁸⁹ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

³⁹⁹⁰ Elizabeth Magdalene Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁹⁹¹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

³⁹⁹² Col. van Wyk's report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

³⁹⁹³ Owen Smorenburg statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Leer W.D. 10/10/ 4102 oor Stafendas. NASA.

- type.”³⁹⁹⁴
31. William Mare Volbrecht, Tsafendas's school mate at the English Medium Primary School in Middleburg, testified to the police that he was “never a loner and freely mingled with us.”³⁹⁹⁵
 32. Redvers Quintin Wakfer, who worked with Tsafendas for six weeks at the Power Station in Cape Town, testified that Tsafendas was “neatly dressed.”³⁹⁹⁶
 33. Edward Furness testified that Tsafendas “was well-dressed and appeared to be wealthy.”³⁹⁹⁷
 34. Katerina Pnema, his half-sister, testified that Tsafendas “was well-dressed and gave a good appearance” although as far as she could see he had no visible means of support.³⁹⁹⁸
 35. Garnet Muller, Tsafendas's supervisor at South African Railways for three weeks, testified that Tsafendas gave him to understand that he took the job on a temporary basis. He “observed Demitrio Tsafendas to possess intelligence above that of the average person who is likely to accept a position with the little responsibility which is attached to that of shed attendant.”³⁹⁹⁹
 36. Kyriakos Skordis who Tsafendas used to visit at his coffee shop in Durban for several months in 1965, testified that he “appeared to be quite normal and was apparently in a poor financial position.”⁴⁰⁰⁰
 37. Richard Poggenpoel lived with him for two weeks and kept on associating up to his arrest, “there was no mention or impression that he was mentally abnormal. He lived a completely normal life.”⁴⁰⁰¹
 38. George Ananiades met Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques in 1963 and described him in ³⁹⁹⁴ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁹⁹⁵ William Mare Volbrecht statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Verklaring deur Majdor Venter. NASA.

³⁹⁹⁶ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA; Redvers Quintin Wakfer statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub File: 1/5, Subject Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

³⁹⁹⁷ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁹⁹⁸ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

³⁹⁹⁹ Garnet Vincent Muller statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁰⁰ Kyriakos Skordis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁰¹ Richard Poggenpoel statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

his statement to the police “as a normal person with a very high-intelligence.”⁴⁰⁰²

39. Helen Daniels told the police: “besides his messy ways, I did not notice anything abnormal about him. There was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal. His stories about travelling abroad was interesting.”⁴⁰⁰³
40. Costas Michaletos,⁴⁰⁰⁴ who knew Tsafendas from birth, stated, “Ever since I knew Dimetrios Tsafantakis, I never, any time observed that he showed any deviations. He also never was an aggressive type person.”⁴⁰⁰⁵
41. James Summers, owner of the “Barlings Tea Lounge,” which Tsafendas frequented for four months, testified that Tsafendas “was no nuisance, and appeared to be a quite normal, innocent type. I never had reason to even suspect that he could be mentally unbalanced. He acted quite normal.”⁴⁰⁰⁶
42. George Liberopoulos met Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques in 1963 and described him in his statement to the police as “a normal person with a very high-intelligence.”⁴⁰⁰⁷
43. Gideon Cloete, an employee in the Department of Labour, met Tsafendas twice and said he “seemed eager to get employment, was neatly dressed and had a clean appearance.” Cloete said he saw no signs of abnormality, that “he seemed perfectly normal.”⁴⁰⁰⁸

In addition, we should remember statements which people made to newspapers about Tsafendas which were in the Commission's possession:

1. Dr. Samuel Schmahmann, a classmate, recalled Dimitri as “a popular boy and not the least introverted. I particularly remember him singing a Greek song at a school concert,” he said. “He was very funny and had us all in stitches.”⁴⁰⁰⁹
2. Guenther Haafe, doorman at the Frankfurt factory where Tsafendas worked for six weeks in 1958. Eight years later, after the assassination, he still remembered the jovial greeting which Tsafendas gave him every morning. “He was a jolly man, always smiling

⁴⁰⁰² Col. van Wyk's report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁰⁰³ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

⁴⁰⁰⁴ The correct spelling is Michaletos, not Michaeletos. Costas Michaeletos statement to the police, 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁰⁵ Costas Michaeletos statement to the police, 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁰⁶ Herbert James Summers statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁰⁷ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁰⁰⁸ Gideon Jacobus Cloete testimony at Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, NASA.

⁴⁰⁰⁹ Rand Daily Mail, ‘Boyhood Days of Tsafendas’, 8 September 1966.

and friendly. He would almost always come into my locker (room) to say Hi. He was really one of the friendliest workers I have met and trust me, in my twelve years as a doorman I have seen thousands and thousands of faces coming in and out; this man was courteous, they do not make them like that anymore.”⁴⁰¹⁰

3. Peter Pappas, owner of a café in Durban, said when Tsafendas had some money he would give “a few cents to the white down-and-outs of the city.” Pappas said also had said, “When his luck was out, I sometimes gave him a free meal, but when he started work he paid me.”⁴⁰¹¹
4. Horst Hartmann, Tsafendas's employer in Frankfurt, Germany, at the heavy engineering company Fries and Son, characterised Tsafendas “as extremely nice and friendly ... He looked like a successful business man. I thought he was more likely to apply for an executive job than as a welder. Well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous, a very pleasant man...he made a good impression and he spoke good German, so I took him on...” Tsafendas “left on his own wish,” although Hartmann “would have liked to keep him.”⁴⁰¹²
5. J. Willemse, a former landlord, characterised Tsafendas as a “sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man.”⁴⁰¹³
6. Tsafendas made a “good impression” on his colleagues in Frankfurt; they said he was “always smiling” and characterized him as being “very kind”, “a nice guy” and a “good comrade.”⁴⁰¹⁴

Do all these people, over fifty of them, describe the same man as that portrayed by the Commission? All of their comments were in the possession of the Commission but not one was used in its Report. Tsafendas is described by these men and women as an intelligent, polite, talkative, sociable and friendly person, perfectly able to reason in conversation, well-

⁴⁰¹⁰ Natal Witness, ‘Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...’, 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, ‘Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte’, 8 September 1966; The Daily News, ‘Tsafendas Seen As ‘Mystery Man’’, 8 September 1966: 17.

⁴⁰¹¹ Rand Daily Mail, ‘Tsafendas: In the Eyes of A Friend’, 14 September 1966.

⁴⁰¹² Daily Dispatch, ‘He Made A Good Impression’, 8 September 1966: 1; Natal Witness, ‘Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...’, 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, ‘Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte’, 8 September 1966.

⁴⁰¹³ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), ‘Assassin - Man With A Chip On His Shoulder’, 11 September 1966: 1, 8.

⁴⁰¹⁴ PIDE's News Digest; Le Courrier d'Afrique, ‘Em Torno Do Assassinado do Primeiro Ministro Sulafricano; Versoes Contraditorias Circulam Sobre A Personalidade Do Assassino’, 9 September 1966: 1. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Daily Dispatch, ‘He Made A Good Impression’, 8 September 1966: 1; Natal Witness, ‘Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...’, 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, ‘Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte’, 8 September 1966.

dressed and courteous. Witnesses like Kenneth Heugh Ross⁴⁰¹⁵ and Robert Harpur Smith⁴⁰¹⁶ had also commented on the fact that Tsafendas had a large quantity of books in his possession, suggesting that he was a literate person but again, this was not mentioned in the Report.

The Commission seemed to base its description of Tsafendas on a figment of Judge van Wyk's imagination, created with only one intention, which is to belittle Tsafendas in the eyes of the public. The Commission's Report is a travesty of the truth, picking and choosing witnesses, using and ignoring their statements to create a Tsafendas who never existed. The statistics tell the story and are worth repeating: Of the 200 witnesses who were interviewed by the police and the Commission, 44 made positive statements about Tsafendas's character, and 6 negative, with the remainder neutral. Thus, 22% of the statements were positive, 3% were negative and the remaining 75% neutral. However, the Commission used only 1 of the 44 positive statements, thus the 2.2%, in comparison to 100% of the negative ones. Could anything better demonstrate the Commission's bias and aim? The 44 positive statements about Tsafendas, along with the 6 more listed above, contradict not only the Commission's caricature of him, but also the picture of him that emerged during the summary trial; that Tsafendas was withdrawn, isolated, unsociable, unfriendly, unable to function on a reasonable level, unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes, a man who suffered from thought-disorder and was unable to speak properly.

CONCLUSION

The Commission manipulated witnesses' testimonies and other evidence to mispresent Tsafendas and some situations to his disadvantage. It also used negative characterisations of him for which there was no support. It seems obvious that the Commission's intention was not to reveal the real Tsafendas, but to create a distorted version of him, which would arouse the public's contempt and thus ensure that no-one would ever think of him as a hero or attribute a political motive to his act.

⁴⁰¹⁵ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966, K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁰¹⁶ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

TSAFENDAS'S MENTAL STATE

The Report contains some comments made about the mental state of Tsafendas by people who knew him. In this section we will examine what the Commission has included and what it has omitted.

TSAFENDAS'S FAMILY'S OPINION ABOUT HIS MENTAL STATE

*They (the family) realized that he was eccentric, but did not think he was mentally disordered. The half-sister who lives in Rhodesia stated that the family did realize that he was not quite normal after he returned from Portugal. He said nothing to them about his alleged worm.*⁴⁰¹⁷

The Commission states that Tsafendas's family "realized that he was eccentric, but did not think he was mentally disordered." This is accurate, but the family had made a much stronger statement regarding his mental state. They told the Commission clearly that Tsafendas "was definitely not insane."⁴⁰¹⁸

The Commission also states that his half-sister in Rhodesia, Katerina Pnefma, stated that "the family did realize that he was not quite normal after he returned from Portugal." Her statement contradicts the view of other family members that "he was definitely not insane." Furthermore, the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali who had interviewed Pnefma when she made this comment, added at the bottom of the report that "At the time of the interview, Mrs. Pnefma was considerably upset and her opinion and facts might be slightly biased and inaccurate."⁴⁰¹⁹ Clearly the Commission ignored this caveat.

Furthermore, Pnefma stated in a personal interview with the author:

"Of course I was upset! He [Tsafendas] had ruined my life. I knew he had the moment I heard about it [the assassination]. I remember it as if it was yesterday. I was by myself in the house ... no, they [the policemen] didn't have a typing machine; they were keeping notes ... I don't remember saying that he was unbalanced, but he certainly was not ... no it is untrue that we thought he was unbalanced. He was perfectly sane. He was very clever, cleverer than any of us [the family]. I must have meant that he had crazy political ideas. I don't remember saying that at all ... I remember saying that he was talking rubbish! He was always talking rubbish, but I couldn't tell the police what exactly he was saying! He was saying that the South Africans are Nazis, he was calling Dr. Verwoerd Hitler's best student ... that us and most Whites were exploiting the Black Rhodesians ... he was calling the Greeks racists, saying that one day the Rhodesians would kick us all out and take back what we stole from them ... that one day the Blacks in South Africa would throw the Whites into the sea ... He believed Mozambique and South Africa should have a colourful flag, like a rainbow or something in order for each colour to represent each race! Have you heard anything more absurd? He used to say that Jesus Christ was socialist and if he was alive today he would have been a revolutionary fighting apartheid and for the independence of Mozambique! Can you believe it? Well, this is what he was saying, all this kind of nonsense! How could I have told all these things to the police? They would have said 'Why didn't you report him to the police since he had such crazy ideas? Didn't you know he was dangerous?'

⁴⁰¹⁷ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 6.

⁴⁰¹⁸ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴⁰¹⁹ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

You can't imagine how many people had told my poor father to do something with him and his crazy political ideas. You can't imagine how many! Even my poor mother told him to talk to him because he would get us into trouble someday, as he was often doing, but my dad did nothing. It was actually all his fault. He taught him all these things, but my father was a cautious man, he was not like Dimitri; he wouldn't go around saying all these stupidities. His son was the opposite; he couldn't keep his mouth shut ... what about the other thing? He changed his name because he thought it was insulting to be called Tsafantakis since this was the name given to our ancestors by the Turks! Wasn't this nonsense?"⁴⁰²⁰

Despite the frailty of the evidence it adduced, the Commission apparently felt it could not omit the opinions of Tsafendas's family about his mental condition since this was something everyone would have wondered about.

⁴⁰²⁰ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

NEGATIVE STATEMENTS REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S MENTAL STATE IN THE COMMISSION'S REPORT

Let us now examine those parts of the Report where people spoke negatively about Tsafendas's mental state:

Wilhelmina de Vos

*She says that at times his conversation was confused and her impression was that he was mad.*⁴⁰²¹

De Vos was Tsafendas's landlady for about a month. We must assumed that she made this comment above to the Commission, because she gave a completely different statement to the police two weeks before the trial began, saying that she "considered him to be a completely normal person."⁴⁰²² De Vos's testimony to the Commission has gone missing, so the author cannot know when she gave evidence. It is possible that she did so after or during the summary trial as this could explain her change of opinion. Perhaps influenced by what she heard in the court, she changed her mind; perhaps she felt overawed by those learned psychiatrists who testified that Tsafendas was mad. We do not know whether the Commission asked her why she changed her mind. What we do know is that the Commission ignored the statement she made to the police on October 3 and included her new testimony. Without knowing the background of the new testimony, it would be imprudent for the author to speculate further. However, the fact is that before the trial de Vos gave an entirely different statement to the police saying Tsafendas was a completely normal person.

James Johnston

*Mr. Johnston, a minister of his church, gained the impression that he was slightly unbalanced.*⁴⁰²³

This fifteen-word sentence at the end of a short paragraph about Tsafendas's religious practices demonstrates an extraordinary distortion by omission and a very clear attempt by ⁴⁰²¹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 65.

⁴⁰²² Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰²³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 42.

the Commission to manipulate a witness's words to Tsafendas's disadvantage. Johnston was a defence witness and testified in the summary trial. His case was examined there, but we will discuss it again here in the context of the Commission's statement.

Johnston told the police on October 6 that he had "only seen Tsafendas periodically and had no discussions with him ... I do not know Tsafendas very well and the longest discussion I had with him was for about 10 minutes at each occasion."⁴⁰²⁴ Thus the opinion of a man who spoke to Tsafendas twice for a total of twenty minutes is included in the Report while, as we will see, the opinions of people who knew Tsafendas for weeks, months and years are omitted. That Johnston hardly knew Tsafendas is obviously not taken under consideration by the Commission and is not mentioned in the Report.

However, where the Commission glaringly infringes the judicial traditions of neutrality and objectivity is by reporting only part of Johnston's statement. Johnston testified that he had concluded that Tsafendas was "slightly unbalanced and that he seemed to have a mysterious background, but otherwise he appeared to be all right."⁴⁰²⁵ The Commission chose to omit the second part of Johnston's sentence but report the first part. A final, blatant act of omission was to come: Johnston also told the police that he had seen Tsafendas the night before the assassination and although he did not speak to him, he "appeared to be perfectly normal."⁴⁰²⁶ The Commission omitted this statement, too.

Patrick O'Ryan

*Mr. O'Ryan never gained the impression that there was anything seriously wrong with him. He did tell them, though, about the tapeworm which he was supposed to have. Sometimes he called it a snake, and said that he had to feed it constantly.*⁴⁰²⁷

Tsafendas stayed at the O'Ryan household for some five to six months (November 1965-April 1966), and remained close to O'Ryan after he left. The Report has conflated some of O'Ryan's words and omitted others. He did not say that he "never gained the impression that there was anything seriously wrong with him." He said that he believed Tsafendas "was not spiritually or mentally disturbed ... I never got the impression that something was wrong

⁴⁰²⁴ James Johnston statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰²⁵ James Johnston statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰²⁶ James Johnston statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰²⁷ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 55.

in his mind.”⁴⁰²⁸ Furthermore, he told the court he “never actually doubted his mental state” and that Tsafendas’s mind was similar to the one “the majority of people have.”⁴⁰²⁹ There is a significant difference between saying there is nothing seriously wrong and saying there is nothing wrong. The first expression means that while there is nothing seriously wrong, there is something wrong; the second means there is absolutely nothing wrong.

The Report mentions Tsafendas’s references to O’Ryan about the tapeworm. This issue has been discussed extensively in the Summary Trial Chapter but it should be mentioned here that O’Ryan spoke of the tapeworm to the Commission, while he had not done so to the police. As already noted, O’Ryan testified to the Commission after he had testified to the police and after he was asked by the lawyer Wilfrid Cooper to mention it to save Tsafendas’s life.⁴⁰³⁰

O’Ryan also made several positive statements about Tsafendas’s character, but none of them was included in the Report. For instance, he said that he formed a “deep liking” for Tsafendas and that he “had confidence in him ... he was a very kindly man. In my experience of him he had a good heart ... I never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind,” or that he “was mentally disturbed... he was well-spoken and had good vocabulary.”⁴⁰³¹ O’Ryan’s opinion about Tsafendas is discussed later in this chapter in the “Landlords and Flatmates” section. For his personal relationship with Tsafendas, see his testimony in the Summary Trial Chapter and at Tsafendas’s biography.

Keith Martincich

*At times he heard Tsafendas talking to himself. On one such occasion he heard Tsafendas say that he had dived into the sea from the boat to save people. He clapped his hands and jumped up and down like a child.*⁴⁰³²

These three sentences are excerpted from a lengthy statement by Martincich, who had worked with Tsafendas for three weeks at the Marine Diamond Corporation. While the tone of Martincich’s observations is generally hostile, the Commission’s selection of the incidents ⁴⁰²⁸ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴⁰²⁹ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴⁰³⁰ Patrick O’ Ryan in A Question of Madness; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Father Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

⁴⁰³¹ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴⁰³² Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 56.

quoted seems designed to question Tsafendas's mental stability. It seems Martincich was the only one of two hundred witnesses questioned by the police and the Commission who noticed Tsafendas talking to himself. The author also asked seventy-one people who knew Tsafendas if they ever saw him talk to himself and all said absolutely not. For reasons of space, the study will list here only people who knew Tsafendas very well who never spotted him addressing himself:

- His half-sister Katerina Pnefma;⁴⁰³³
- Mary Eintracht, his first cousin, who grew up with him in Egypt and Lourenço Marques and spent a lot of time together in a period of nine months in 1964;
- Fotini Gavasiadis who spent every day with him for nine months in Pretoria in 1963-1964;
- Father Michalis Visvinis who visited him for three-four years in prison (1990-1994);⁴⁰³⁴
- Father Nikola Banovic who lived with him at the same house for four months in 1961 and then lived right next to his house for another three;⁴⁰³⁵
- Ira Kyriakakis who grew up with him and spent a lot of time together in 1964 and 1965;⁴⁰³⁶
- Fathers Minas Constandinou, Ioannis Tsafaridis and Michalis Visvinis, who very regularly visited him in prison and the hospital during the late 1970s, the 1980s and the 1990s;⁴⁰³⁷
- Andreas Babiolakis who knew him since they were children, lived him for two months in 1964 and associated with him for about a year then;⁴⁰³⁸
- Thirteen crewmen from the Eleni who saw him every day for forty-two days in 1966;⁴⁰³⁹
- Elias Constantaras who lived under the same roof for two months in Cape Town in 1966 and knew him for more than a year;⁴⁰⁴⁰

⁴⁰³³ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁰³⁴ Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

⁴⁰³⁵ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁴⁰³⁶ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁴⁰³⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Father Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015; Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

⁴⁰³⁸ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

⁴⁰³⁹ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Panteleimon Aspiotis in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 19 January 2016; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁴⁰⁴⁰ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

- Irene Michaletos who knew him very well for more than a year (1964-1965), when he often visited her house in Beira;⁴⁰⁴¹
- Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousins and sons of Artemis Michaletos, Tsafendas's aunt and his father's sister who brought him up in Egypt. They first met Tsafendas in 1951 in Lourenço Marques and got to know him between 1963 and 1965 in Mozambique.⁴⁰⁴²
- Alexander Moumbaris who spent three months in a cell next to Tsafendas's in Pretoria Prison. They spoke every day for an hour when they exercised together in the prison yard.⁴⁰⁴³
- Costas Poriазis who met him in 1964 in Beira;⁴⁰⁴⁴
- Alexandra Vaporidis who knew him for about six months in Istanbul in 1961;⁴⁰⁴⁵
- Nick Papadakis, who knew Tsafendas for two-three months and lived with him for two months in Mozambique in 1964;⁴⁰⁴⁶
- Panagiotis Peroglou, Stratis Vamvarapis, Antonis Nichas and Costas Chagios, who were Tsafendas's friends in Cape Town for more than a year.⁴⁰⁴⁷

It could be argued that everyone talks to himself occasionally, either audibly or inaudibly, and the whole human race is not crazy. As for Tsafendas jumping up and down, this is open to speculation. It appears to be childish, but again many people will do something silly on the spur of the moment. Alternatively, Tsafendas may have had a few drinks then – Martincich testified that Tsafendas “occasionally had a few drinks” - or Martincich might have misunderstood his action. The fact is that of two hundred witnesses who knew Tsafendas, most of them much better than Martincich, none testified to ever seeing such behaviour; the same response came from interviews with seventy-one other friends, relatives and acquaintances by the author. However, what also needs to be mentioned is that the Commission omitted from its Report a remark made by Martincich about Tsafendas, namely that he got the impression “there was something mentally wrong with him”⁴⁰⁴⁸ This was his ⁴⁰⁴¹ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁴⁰⁴² Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁴⁰⁴³ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017.

⁴⁰⁴⁴ Costas Poriазis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

⁴⁰⁴⁵ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

⁴⁰⁴⁶ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

⁴⁰⁴⁷ Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015; Miltiades Kaldis in a personal interview, 12 March 2016; Antonis Nichas in a personal interview, 31 March 2016; Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016; Stratis Vamvarapis in a personal interview, 31 May 2016.

⁴⁰⁴⁸ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

conclusion after seeing Tsafendas mumbling to himself and on one occasion jumping up and down.

Number of the Negative Statements used by the Commission

The Commission has included three of the four negative statements about Tsafendas's mental state from approximately 200 witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission itself. The fourth witness who made a negative statement is Caroline Barbeau who told the police that after speaking to Tsafendas a few times in 1965, she formed the impression that he was "not all there."⁴⁰⁴⁹ However, the Commission did not include her opinion in the Report, although it was in possession of her testimony. Her statement is examined in the previous two chapters.

POSITIVE STATEMENTS REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S MENTAL STATE INLCUDED IN THE COMMISSION'S REPORT

- *Neither the Chief Messenger nor the two senior messengers had any reason to believe, either during their interview or while Tsafendas was employed at the House of Assembly during August and September, that he was mentally disordered. Nor did the policemen and other messengers who came into contact with him at the House of Assembly notice anything wrong.*⁴⁰⁵⁰
- *During June and July, 1966, he had his meals with Mrs. Scott at No. 42, Chamberlain Street, Woodstock ... In her opinion he was normal.*⁴⁰⁵¹
- *In July, 1966, Tsafendas had a long interview with Mr. Hartford of the Cape Argus. Mr. Hartford's impression was that Tsafendas was normal.*⁴⁰⁵²
- *According to persons who know the family in Pretoria, they were not exactly taken up with this member of the family. They realized that he was eccentric, but did not think he was mentally disordered.*⁴⁰⁵³
- *Mr. Bornman, who occupied the same room as Tsafendas, stated that Tsafendas did not show any signs of being mentally abnormal.*⁴⁰⁵⁴

⁴⁰⁴⁹ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁵⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 73.

⁴⁰⁵¹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 67.

⁴⁰⁵² Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 74.

⁴⁰⁵³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 6.

⁴⁰⁵⁴ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 58.

- On Sunday evening, 4th September, 1966, attended a church service at the home of a certain Mr. Hall in Pinelands. On that occasion he appeared to be normal.⁴⁰⁵⁵

According to Harry Hall's statement, Tsafendas did not only appear to be normal "on that occasion," but generally. Having knowing him since March 1966 until his arrest, he had testified that he regarded Tsafendas "as a sub-standard intellect, but otherwise found him to be reasonably normal."⁴⁰⁵⁶

The Commission included in its Report the above statements testifying to Tsafendas's mental normality. They come from people who knew him socially or professionally plus his colleagues at the Parliament. The fact that none of his colleagues at the House of Assembly noticed anything wrong with him over the thirty-five days they worked with him is of prime importance. Yet it was not mentioned at the summary trial, where Tsafendas was presented instead as a person who was unable to conduct even his simple duties as a messenger.

POSITIVE STATEMENTS REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S MENTAL STATE OMITTED FROM THE COMMISSION'S REPORT

Although the Commission included the above positive statements about Tsafendas's mental state in its Report, very many more were collected but did not see the light of day, For example:

1. Ralph Lighton, who worked with Tsafendas for nine to ten weeks at the Marine Diamond Corporation, testified to the police that he "never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers."⁴⁰⁵⁷
2. Charles Woods, Tsafendas's supervisor at Fraser and Chalmers, characterised him as a "good tradesman,"⁴⁰⁵⁸ "a very good worker, far from being a crank, fairly intelligent, but a violent type."⁴⁰⁵⁹
3. Inspector Horacio Ferreira of the Portuguese Security Police was in charge of the cells where Tsafendas was held in custody in Beira in 1964. His statement to the police said he considered Tsafendas to be "normal and regarded him as a very intelligent person."⁴⁰⁶⁰

⁴⁰⁵⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 90.

⁴⁰⁵⁶ Harry Hall statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁵⁷ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁵⁸ Charles Edwin Woods statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁵⁹ The Cape Times, 'Tsafendas in Brawl in Canteen', 9 September 1966: 15.

⁴⁰⁶⁰ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

4. Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden was senior security officer for the Marine Diamond Corporation and worked with Tsafendas for around three months in 1966. "He was friendly, outgoing, and not aloof. I noticed that his eating was messy. Otherwise he was completely normal."⁴⁰⁶¹
5. Johannes Aurets, Tsafendas's supervisor at the South African Railways, told the police Tsafendas "was a well-mannered and well-spoken person. He associated with those working with him. He was soft-spoken and appeared to be of a good nature. During the time he was employed under my supervision, i.e. for approximately three weeks, I did not see him being cross at any time. He was a good worker."⁴⁰⁶²
6. Garnet Muller, Tsafendas's supervisor at South African Railways for three weeks, testified that he "observed Demitrio Tsafendas to possess intelligence above that of the average person who is likely to accept a position with the little responsibility which is attached to that of shed attendant."⁴⁰⁶³
7. Hulse, who worked with Tsafendas at Marine Diamond Cooperation from December 1965 to March 12, 1966, stated that Tsafendas "did not appear to be disturbed at any stage."⁴⁰⁶⁴
8. Antonio Teixeira Da Silva, who worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole's engineering works in 1965, testified that Tsafendas "was acting normal and I never noticed anything wrong with him. I have seen an insane person before but I can state that the accused never behaved as an insane person whilst employed here."⁴⁰⁶⁵
9. Albert Vercueil, Tsafendas's boss at F. A. Poole in Pretoria, said that in the five months he worked with Tsafendas, he found him to be "an intelligent worker."⁴⁰⁶⁶ He also testified to the Commission of Enquiry that he considered Tsafendas to be "an intelligent man, just untidy and lazy in rounding off his work." He said "Tsafendas was a very friendly, social and talkative person but he was always looking to quarrel with the white ⁴⁰⁶¹ Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden statement to the police, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁶² Johannes Jaonus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁶³ Garnet Vincent Muller statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁶⁴ Hulse statement to the police, 28 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁶⁵ Antonio Teixeira Da Silva statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁶⁶ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

- workers. He never got the impression that Mr. Tsafendas wasn't right in his mind."⁴⁰⁶⁷
10. August Karel Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria. He found him to be "very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet. I never noticed anything abnormal about him, except that he had a strange look when I looked him straight in the eyes. He never gave me the impression that he was suffering from any mental disease."⁴⁰⁶⁸
 11. Cornelius Rudolph, the head court interpreter on the staff of the Magistrate of Durban testified that Tsafendas "was in the habit of regularly reporting two or three times a week to ask whether there is any interpretation work." He used him "on several occasions" over a period of six months and "got to know him pretty well ... I spoke with him several times. He seemed to be a normal person and intelligent."⁴⁰⁶⁹
 12. Nikolaas Nel worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole and told the police that Tsafendas "seemed normal."⁴⁰⁷⁰
 13. Neville Judson worked with Tsafendas for Mike's Outfitters for forty-two days in July and August 1966. He testified that he "never in no way got the impression that he could be mentally deranged. He appeared to be a normal man with normal reasoning powers."⁴⁰⁷¹
 14. Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen, was Tsafendas's tram instructor in December 1965 and January 1966. He testified that "other than his slow response, I did not at all get the impression that mentally anything was wrong with him. He is mentally normal."⁴⁰⁷²
 15. Helen Grispos knew Tsafendas from birth and grew up with him, while her husband was Tsafendas's best childhood friend. She told the police that Tsafendas was "well-mannered and intelligent."⁴⁰⁷³ She also told the author that she never thought Tsafendas was insane.

⁴⁰⁶⁷ Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁶⁸ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁶⁹ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁷⁰ Nikolaas Jacobus Nel statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁷¹ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

⁴⁰⁷² Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁷³ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

“He never did or said anything to make me or George (her husband) think that he was insane.”⁴⁰⁷⁴

16. Hendrik van Loggenberg knew Tsafendas and his family well in Pretoria. He testified that Tsafendas “definitely came across as normal ... he also seemed healthy ...”⁴⁰⁷⁵
17. Captain P.A. Sanianos, the Greek Consul in Beira “was often in the company of the subject and others had several conversations with him.” He considered Tsafendas to be “a normal and very intelligent person.”⁴⁰⁷⁶
18. James Summers, owner of the “Barlings Tea Lounge,” which Tsafendas frequented from July 1966 until the assassination, testified that Tsafendas “was no nuisance, and appeared to be a quite normal, innocent type. I never had reason to even suspect that he could be mentally unbalanced. He acted quite normal.”⁴⁰⁷⁷
19. John Gianouris, the Greek Vice Consul at Lourenço Marques, described Tsafendas as “a normal and intelligent person.”⁴⁰⁷⁸
20. Kyriakos Skordis who Tsafendas used to visit at his coffee shop in Durban for several months in 1965, testified that he “appeared to be quite normal.”⁴⁰⁷⁹
21. Inspector Horacio Ferreira of the Portuguese Security Police was in charge of the cells where Tsafendas was held in custody in Beira in 1964. He testified that he considered Tsafendas to be “normal and regarded him as a very intelligent person.”⁴⁰⁸⁰
22. Costas Michaletos,⁴⁰⁸¹ who knew Tsafendas from birth, testified that “Ever since I knew Dimetrios Tsafantakis, I never, any time observed that he showed any deviations. He also never was an aggressive type person.”⁴⁰⁸²

⁴⁰⁷⁴ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

⁴⁰⁷⁵ Hendrik Johannes van Loggenberg statement to the police, 8 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁷⁶ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁰⁷⁷ Herbert James Summers statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁷⁸ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁰⁷⁹ Kyriakos Skordis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁸⁰ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁰⁸¹ The correct spelling is Michaletos, not Michaeletos. Costas Michaeletos statement to the police, 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁸² Costas Michaeletos statement to the police, 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

23. John Galanakis, who met Tsafendas in Umtali in 1964, told police that he found Tsafendas to be “an intelligent man.”⁴⁰⁸³
24. Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys, employment officer at the Department of Labour in Cape Town, interviewed Tsafendas twice. He testified to the police that Tsafendas was “neatly dressed” and he “never got the impression that there was mentally anything wrong with him or that he acted abnormally.”⁴⁰⁸⁴
25. Gideon Cloete, an employee in the Department of Labour, met Tsafendas twice and said he “seemed eager to get employment, was neatly dressed and had a clean appearance.” Cloete said he saw no signs of abnormality, that “he seemed perfectly normal.”⁴⁰⁸⁵
26. George Liberopoulos met Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques in 1963 and described him to the police as a “normal person with a very high intelligence.”⁴⁰⁸⁶ Liberopoulos also stated to the author that he “never believed that Tsafendas was insane. He was perfectly normal; very clever man.”⁴⁰⁸⁷
27. Reginald Robert Maile was the guard on the Eleni while it was docked in Cape Town from July 26, 1966 to September 3, 1966. He saw Tsafendas every day and told the police that he “never got the impression that he could be mentally defective. He was sober, polite and perfectly normal.”⁴⁰⁸⁸
28. George Ananiades met Tsafendas in 1963 and described him to the police as a “normal person with a very high-intelligence.”⁴⁰⁸⁹ He later told the author that Tsafendas “is impossible to have been insane. He was a very intelligent and educated man. He was definitely able to function on a reasonable level.”⁴⁰⁹⁰
29. Ian Boswell, administrative assistant at the Department of Labour in Cape Town. He interviewed Tsafendas three times in 1966 and testified that “he was at all times neatly ⁴⁰⁸³ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁰⁸⁴ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

⁴⁰⁸⁵ Gideon Jacobus Cloete testimony at Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, NASA.

⁴⁰⁸⁶ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁰⁸⁷ George Liberopoulos in a personal interview, 6 July 2015.

⁴⁰⁸⁸ Reginald Robert Maile statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

⁴⁰⁸⁹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁰⁹⁰ George Ananiades in a personal interview, 21 June 2016.

dressed and never gave the impression of being destitute. Aside from being over-talkative, he showed no symptoms of abnormality, during his interviews with me.”⁴⁰⁹¹

30. John Verghis, owner of a coffee shop in Beira which Tsafendas visited often for several months, said he considered him to be a “normal person.”⁴⁰⁹²

31. For two months in 1966 Tsafendas had his meals in Mary Scott’s boarding house. She told police that she “never got the impression that he could be mentally unbalanced. To me he appeared perfectly normal.”⁴⁰⁹³

32. Lt. Col. P.J.B. van Wyk of the South African police interviewed several people in Rhodesia and in Mozambique, including in Beira and Lourenço Marques, who knew Tsafendas. He stated in his report that Tsafendas, “for all purposes, can be seen as a normal, intelligent person.”⁴⁰⁹⁴

33. John Bornman lived with Tsafendas for six-seven weeks in April and May of 1966. He testified to the police that he found Tsafendas to be “normal, intelligent and friendly. He was neat in his person, but his eating habits were messy.”⁴⁰⁹⁵

34. Patrick O’Ryan hosted Tsafendas in his home for five months in 1965-1966 and was close to him up to his arrest. Tsafendas was described to him by a preacher of the Christian Church as a “highly cultured gentleman, a very refined gentleman who speaks seven languages.”⁴⁰⁹⁶ He formed a “deep liking”⁴⁰⁹⁷ for Tsafendas and considered him to be an “enlightened person.”⁴⁰⁹⁸ He “never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind,” or that he was “mentally disturbed.”⁴⁰⁹⁹

35. Violet Irene Manning was Tsafendas’s landlady for almost two months in 1965. She told the Commission of Enquiry: “it was a serviced room but I found him making his own ⁴⁰⁹¹ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

⁴⁰⁹² South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁰⁹³ Mary Kathleen Scott statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁹⁴ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁰⁹⁵ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁰⁹⁶ Patrick O’ Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

⁴⁰⁹⁷ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴⁰⁹⁸ Patrick O’ Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

⁴⁰⁹⁹ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

bed. When he came to me he was well-dressed, well-spoken, and gave a good impression. From his general appearance he appeared to be a businessman. When he paid me, he had a bundle of notes and I took him to be a man of means.”⁴¹⁰⁰

36. Elizabeth Groves was Tsafendas's landlady for six or seven weeks and a retired psychiatric nurse. About Tsafendas she said, “I was a nurse and worked in lunatic institutions. He was a normal person to the best of my knowledge.”⁴¹⁰¹
37. Alice Mary Theyser was Tsafendas's landlady from July 1, 1966 to August 30, 1966, just six days before the assassination. She testified that she “never got the impression in any way that he might be mentally unbalanced. To me he appeared a quite normal person.”⁴¹⁰²
38. Helen Daniels lived with Tsafendas in her parents' house for six weeks in 1965 and “did not notice anything abnormal about him. There was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal.”⁴¹⁰³
39. Richard Poggenpoel lived with him for two weeks in his house and kept on associating up to his arrest, “there was no mention or impression that he was mentally abnormal. He lived a completely normal life.”⁴¹⁰⁴
40. J. Willemse was Tsafendas's landlord for one month in 1965. He characterised him as a “sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man.”⁴¹⁰⁵
41. Marika Tsafantakis Tsafendas's stepmother, testified to the Commission that Tsafendas was “definitely not insane.”⁴¹⁰⁶
42. Victor Tsafandakis, Tsafendas's stepbrother, testified to the Commission that Tsafendas was “definitely not insane.”⁴¹⁰⁷

⁴¹⁰⁰ Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

⁴¹⁰¹ Elizabeth Magdalene Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴¹⁰² Alice Mary Theyser statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴¹⁰³ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

⁴¹⁰⁴ Richard Poggenpoel statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴¹⁰⁵ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), ‘Assassin - Man With A Chip On His Shoulder’, 11 September 1966: 1, 8.

⁴¹⁰⁶ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴¹⁰⁷ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

43. Mrs. Tsafandakis, wife of Victor Tsafandakis and Tsafendas's sister-in-law, testified to the Commission that Tsafendas was "definitely not insane."⁴¹⁰⁸
44. Eleni Vlachopoulos, Tsafendas's stepsister, testified to the Commission that Tsafendas was "definitely not insane."⁴¹⁰⁹
45. Evangelia Nissiotis, Tsafendas's stepsister, testified to the Commission that Tsafendas was "definitely not insane."⁴¹¹⁰

As we see from the foregoing, there were at least another 45 statements in the Commission's possession where people had commented positively about Tsafendas's mental state and all were omitted. Some were particularly important because they were from people who had lived with him or worked with him and knew him well. Thus the positive statements about Tsafendas's mental state total 51 out of the 200 statements, or 25.5%. Of the remaining statements, 4 were negative, 2%, while the rest of the witnesses made no comment on Tsafendas's mental state, presumably because his conduct as they knew it never suggested there could be anything wrong with him. Out of the 4 negatives, 3 were included. That makes it 3 out of the 4 negative and 6 (since we are not sure about the number of his colleagues in the Parliament the Commission refers to) out of the 51 positive. Thus, the Commission made use of 75% of the negative statements in comparison to 11.7% of the positive ones. It should be also noted that exactly the same thing has happened with other positive and negative statements regarding Tsafendas's personality; all the negative ones are included, while only a very small number of the positives is mentioned.

It is notable that the negative responses came from people who did not know Tsafendas well. The fact that Johnson, who had spoken to Tsafendas for twenty minutes in his entire life, is included, while the words of people who knew him well are omitted is indicative of the Commission's aim.

The author has also interviewed several people who lived, worked and knew Tsafendas, but their statements will not be included here as they were not in possession of the Commission. However, they are included in Chapter 5. Finally, one more significant opinion is that of the US Immigration authorities. They dealt with Tsafendas for five years and were aware of his hospitalizations while in the United States. They also knew that he had faked ⁴¹⁰⁸ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴¹⁰⁹ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴¹¹⁰ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

mental illness in 1943 while he was in their custody, discovered when he was taken to a hospital. It was for that reason that they believed “he was unstable though not (not)⁴¹¹¹ insane.”⁴¹¹² The Commission makes no mention at all of their opinion.

CONCLUSION

Only four of two hundred people who were interviewed by the COE and the police testified negatively about Tsafendas's mental state and none of these four could be considered a reliable witness. Johnston had spoken to Tsafendas for twenty minutes all his life, de Vos initially testified to the police that Tsafendas was perfectly normal and then told the Commission that he was mad, while Martincich was the only witness out of two hundred who noticed that Tsafendas was talking to himself and assumed he was mad. That leaves only Barbeau, who, like Johnston, was a member of the Christian Church, and clearly tried to distance herself from Tsafendas by belittling him. Even these four “negative” statements did not mention any of the things that were stated in court about Tsafendas, namely that he was unable to function on a reasonable level or follow a conversation after fifteen minutes, that his speech was disjointed, that he suffered from thought-blocking and that he had confused ideas. The fact that the Report contains 75% of the negative statements about Tsafendas's mental state but only 11.7% of the positive ones points to a significant bias by the Commission.

⁴¹¹¹ This is exactly how it appears in the telegram. There is a second ‘not’ within brackets.

⁴¹¹² Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Washington to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

TSAFENDAS'S EMPLOYMENT

In this section, the study deals with Tsafendas's employment record and what his colleagues thought of him. Tsafendas was medically examined for some of these jobs and was found to be perfectly healthy each time. However, the issue of the medical examinations will not be discussed here since it is considered at length in the section Medical Examinations.

The Commission refers to several positions which Tsafendas held, but the study will comment only on those which raise doubts over issues such as the Commission's treatment of witnesses' statements, omissions, repetitions, undue bias and so on. As we will see, the Commission's Report invariably dwells on situations which place Tsafendas in a bad light while passing swiftly over jobs where workers had positive things to say about him. Anything which supports the theory that Tsafendas was mad or as described by the psychiatrists at his summary trial is included, while anything that contradicts the theory is omitted.

IN GERMANY

*It appears that Tsafendas was employed in Germany during 1959 from where he went via France to the United Kingdom in May, 1959. (B.7771.)*⁴¹¹³

This sketchy, two-line summary omits a large amount of information, much of it complimentary to Tsafendas, which was well known to the Commission. In September 1958, Tsafendas travelled to West Germany from Belgium and registered at Frankfurt Aliens Office.⁴¹¹⁴ On September 18 he started work as a welder at the heavy engineering company of Fries and Son in a Frankfurt suburb. Mr. Horst Hartmann, Senior Personnel Officer at the company, said,

“He drove up here in a big battered American car. I thought he was more likely to apply for an executive job than as a welder. Well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous ... a very pleasant man. He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman, and his looks certainly didn't fit the job he wanted. But he spoke good German, so I took him on. We liked him ... always laughing, a good worker.”⁴¹¹⁵

Six weeks later Tsafendas left Fries and Son voluntarily, with a very good reference ⁴¹¹³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 27.

⁴¹¹⁴ The Cape Argus, 'Did He Live in W. Germany?', 7 September 1966 (late edition): 2.

⁴¹¹⁵ Daily Dispatch, 'He Made A Good Impression', 8 September 1966: 1; Daily Express, 'The Assassin', 8 September 1966: 2; Natal Witness, 'Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...', 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 'Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte', 8 September 1966.

in his briefcase. Horst Hartmann said, "He left of his own accord ... we would have liked to keep him."⁴¹¹⁶ Tsafendas also made a lasting impression on Guenter Haafe, fifty-seven, the factory gatekeeper, who after the assassination remembered the jovial greeting Tsafendas gave him every morning. He said:

"He was a jolly man, always smiling and friendly. He would almost always come into my locker room to say hi. He was really one of the friendliest workers I have met and trust me, in my twelve years as a doorman I have seen thousands and thousands of faces coming in and out. This man was courteous; they do not make them like that anymore."⁴¹¹⁷

Three other workmates said, "He was a nice guy," "He was a good comrade" and "He left me with a good impression."⁴¹¹⁸ Tsafendas then worked for six months for Anglo-American Fashions and Designers in Frankfurt, and for about another six months at a US Army printing works in Hochst, a district of Frankfurt.⁴¹¹⁹ The general impression among his colleagues was that Tsafendas was "very kind" and "always smiling."⁴¹²⁰

The Commission was well aware of the above information, but saw fit to exclude it from its Report. It might be argued that a listing of work places was relatively unimportant, but the same cannot be said of the witnesses' comments. Not only were the opinions ventured about Tsafendas positive, they showed him in a completely different light to the way he was pictured at the summary trial. There, Tsafendas was described as a bad worker, dirty, looking neglected, withdrawn, isolated, unsociable, unfriendly and uncommunicative. The contrast with the views of his workmates could hardly be greater.

⁴¹¹⁶ Daily Dispatch, 'He Made A Good Impression', 8 September 1966: 1; Daily Express, 'The Assassin', 8 September 1966: 2; Natal Witness, 'Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...', 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 'Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte', 8 September 1966.

⁴¹¹⁷ Daily Dispatch, 'He Made A Good Impression', 8 September 1966: 1; Natal Witness, 'Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...', 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 'Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte', 8 September 1966.

⁴¹¹⁸ Daily Dispatch, 'He Made A Good Impression', 8 September 1966: 1; Natal Witness, 'Tsafendas Was So Friendly ...', 10 September 1966; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 'Tsafendas Trabalhou Como Soldador em Frankforte', 8 September 1966.

⁴¹¹⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴¹²⁰ PIDE's News Digest; Le Courrier d'Afrique, 'Em Torno Do Assassinado do Primeiro Ministro Sulafricano; Versoes Contraditorias Circulam Sobre A Personalidade Do Assassino', 9 September 1966: 1. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

THE LIMASOLLU NACI COLLEGE IN ISTANBUL

*The next country he visited was Turkey. It appears that he was there during the second half of 1961 and the beginning of 1962. He was employed for two months as a teacher of English.*⁴¹²¹

Another item on the file contains the following note:

*“Applicant can speak German and a little Afrikaans. English fluently. 1963—Marine Watchman in Lisbon— (Certificate issued by Police in Portugal seen) 1961-1962— Teacher of English at Limasolla Nace College, Turkey.”*⁴¹²²

The Commission here refers to something very important: that Tsafendas was employed as a teacher of English while in Turkey. This had already been published by the South African media and Tsafendas had referred to it when he was questioned by the police; however, it was not mentioned during the summary trial. The reference in the Report was not only brief, but incomplete and inaccurate. The name of the school where Tsafendas taught was not given in the first reference to Turkey in Chapter II B of the Report, although it was known to the Commission and was stated in the second reference, in Chapter VI.

The length of time that Tsafendas spent as a teacher is wrong, being closer to six months than two. However, it was Tsafendas who told the police that he had worked for two months.⁴¹²³ Why he got this wrong is not known to the study, but could be due to confusion under pressure from police questioning or fatigue or a simple miscalculation. The figure of approximately six months was confirmed by Father Nikola Banovic and Alexandra Vaporidis, who met Tsafendas in Istanbul. Tsafendas spent four months living at the home of Father Nikola, who said Tsafendas attended at the college throughout this time. He continued teaching there for another two or three months until he resigned in the middle of December 1961.⁴¹²⁴

Let us now consider a few things about the college and its owner. Limasollu Naci (1921-1992), who became one of Tsafendas's best friends, was a Turkish-Cypriot who moved from Cyprus to Turkey when he was four. He began his working life as a photographer and in 1940 became the first professional to use cine film in Istanbul. He held ⁴¹²¹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 37.

⁴¹²² Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter VI, Paragraph 4.

⁴¹²³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴¹²⁴ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2014.

his first photo exhibition at the Faculty of Arts in 1947, opened his second in 1948 at the Community Centre in Beyoğlu, and later exhibited his work in Paris and London. He won first prize in an international photography contest in Turin, Italy in 1948.⁴¹²⁵ Limasollu is widely recognised as pre-eminent in the provision of private foreign language instruction and distance learning in Turkey. He also pioneered the concept of introducing young Turks to foreign languages at summer camps, initially in the coastal regions of Turkey and later in Britain.⁴¹²⁶ He established the Istanbul College that bears his name in 1953; it was the first private language institute in Turkey and widely considered to be the best and most prestigious, with many students from wealthy and powerful families.⁴¹²⁷

Tsafendas's college work flatly contradicts the trial presentation of him, especially with regard to his ability to work and even to function on an everyday basis. In court he was portrayed as unable to function on a reasonable level, unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes, talking in a disjointed manner, suffering from thought-disorder and unable to do more than a menial job. Therefore, if his work at the college was known, the natural question would have been: 'How was it possible that a schizophrenic man with all the aforementioned disabilities managed to secure such a position and keep it for six months?'

In addition, Tsafendas used the reference he received from Mr. Limasollu Naci to get his job at Parliament. For this reason if for no other, one would have expected the South African authorities or the Commission to inquire about Tsafendas's time at the Istanbul College. Strangely, while these officials made enquiries all around the world and managed to find information from almost everywhere Tsafendas had been, Turkey came up empty. Tsafendas spent six to seven months in Turkey holding down a job which seemed far beyond the abilities of his emerging picture, yet nothing is said about it. We cannot, of course, exclude the possibility that the Commission did indeed discover about Tsafendas's time at the college, but then chose to omit its findings because they would contradict the way he was represented in court.

⁴¹²⁵ En So Haber, "Limasollu Naci kimdir", 23 May 2012.

⁴¹²⁶ Ayse Sule Akinturk, The Politics of English As A Foreign Language: The Case of Turkey, p. 204.

⁴¹²⁷ Durgun, A General Outlook on Teaching Foreign Language via Distance Learning in Turkey, p. 2; Adviye Vedia Limasollu in a personal interview, 8 January 2016.

F.A. POOLE

On 7th February, 1964, he started work as a fitter with Messrs. F. A. Poole (Pty.), Ltd.

*A foreman employed by the firm gave evidence that once Tsafendas had threatened to stab him with a knife and another person gave evidence that one day Tsafendas had threatened a Bantu with a knife. A Portuguese who was also employed by the firm said that Tsafendas had assumed a hostile attitude towards him because he had refused to discuss Dr. Salazar with him.*⁴¹²⁸

*On 10th July, 1964, Mr. Vercueil dismissed Tsafendas from employment with Messrs. F. A. Poole (Pty.), Ltd., because of the untidiness of his work and his constant quarrelling with the other workers.*⁴¹²⁹

Tsafendas's argument with a colleague about Salazar

This issue is discussed in the "Political Activities and Ideas" section of this Chapter.

Tsafendas's Dismissal from F.A. Poole

The Commission stated that Tsafendas was dismissed because of his constant quarrelling with the other workers. This tells only half of the story. What the Commission omitted was that Tsafendas argued only with the White workers and not the Blacks. Vercueil told the Commission that "Tsafendas was a very friendly, social and talkative person, but he was always looking to quarrel with the white workers." Vercueil "would usually receive complaints from the other (white) foremen, but never from the black workers."⁴¹³⁰

Furthermore, Vercueil had testified to the police that Tsafendas "bullied the other Portuguese workers. He had fights with several white workers."⁴¹³¹ Nikolaas Nel, another worker, testified that Tsafendas "was certainly unpopular among white workers. Accused adapted more to the non-whites."⁴¹³²

⁴¹²⁸ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter III C, Paragraph 8.

⁴¹²⁹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter III C, Paragraph 10.

⁴¹³⁰ Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴¹³¹ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴¹³² Nikolaas Jacobus Nel statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

In addition, although Vercueil dismissed Tsafendas for “untidiness in his work,” he had also stated that “he was an intelligent worker, mainly because he quickly grasped when work was entrusted to him. However, I found him very sloppy in his work. I found him to be very friendly, but very opinionated. He would not, for example, work according to the assignment, but as he decides... Personally I would say that he is an intelligent person and completely mentally balanced. I now show some tools and work produced by the accused personally and performed to give you an idea of the degree of initiative he laid to the day ... F.A. Poole moved from their warehouse and Mr. Tsafendas was tasked with organizing the move and he handled it effortlessly.”⁴¹³³

Colleagues' Opinions about Tsafendas

Vercueil also testified to the Commission that “he never got the impression that Mr. Tsafendas wasn't right in his mind. F.A. Poole moved from their warehouse and Mr. Tsafendas was tasked with organizing the move and he handled it effortlessly.”⁴¹³⁴ These statements are very important because they contradict claims that Tsafendas was a bad worker, unable to do more than a menial job, withdrawn and isolated. The Commission omitted from its Report the assessment of Tsafendas's mental state and character offered by Vercueil (“friendly, sociable, talkative, quarrelsome with whites”), who worked with him for five months, while including the negative opinion of James Johnston, who spoke to Tsafendas for twenty minutes in his entire life. Vercueil testified that after Tsafendas was dismissed, he threatened him and Dr. Verwoerd. This issue is discussed in the section on Tsafendas's political activities and ideas.

Vercueil's comments about Tsafendas's character are not the only ones from employees at F.A. Poole. Three other men gave evidence about Tsafendas, each having worked with him for five months:

⁴¹³³ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴¹³⁴ Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

- Antonio Teixeira Da Silva testified that Tsafendas “was acting normal and I never noticed anything wrong with him. I have seen an insane person before but I can state that the accused never behaved as an insane person whilst employed here.”⁴¹³⁵
- Nikolaas Nel testified that Tsafendas “seemed normal,” but also that he had a “messy and dirty appearance.”⁴¹³⁶
- August Karel Oestrich testified that he found him to be “very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet. I never noticed anything abnormal about him, except that he had a strange look when I looked him straight in the eyes. He never gave me the impression that he was suffering from any mental disease.”⁴¹³⁷

FRASER AND CHALMERS

*His next employers were Messrs. Frazer and Chalmers, at Mandini, Zululand. There he worked as a fitter and turner from 19th April, 1965 to 19th May, ' 1965, when he was dismissed after a fight with a Greek, a certain Nicholas Vergos.*⁴¹³⁸

The Commission deals extensively with the fight, but does not say anything about Tsafendas's work there. The fight is examined in detail at the ‘Vergos incident’ section in this chapter. An important omission here is a statement by Charles Woods, Tsafendas's supervisor at Fraser and Chalmers. Woods characterised Tsafendas as a “good tradesman,”⁴¹³⁹ “a very good worker, far from being a crank, fairly intelligent, but a violent type.”⁴¹⁴⁰ Woods's statement is yet another contradiction of the claims in court that Tsafendas was a poor worker fit only for menial jobs.

CITY TRAMWAYS

On 12th November, 1965, he applied for a position as a bus conductor with City Tramways, Cape Town. Once again he was examined medically and nothing was found to be wrong with ⁴¹³⁵ Antonio Teixeira Da Silva statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴¹³⁶ Nikolaas Jacobus Nel statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴¹³⁷ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴¹³⁸ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 28.

⁴¹³⁹ Charles Edwin Woods statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴¹⁴⁰ The Cape Times, ‘Tsafendas in Brawl in Canteen’, 9 September 1966: 15.

him. He stated, inter alia, that he had never had a nervous breakdown. He had to report as a learner-conductor on 24th November, 1965, but he did not do so until 29th December, 1965. The instructor noted the following, inter alia, concerning him: "Trainee is slow and seems lazy too. He won't last long if he passes out. Slow in uptake. Won't last. Mind seems blank at times.

In any case Tsafendas found the work too exacting, and he resigned on 12th January, 1966.⁴¹⁴¹

All the above information is taken from a statement by Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen, the Tramways' instructor. He also said: "Other than his slow response, I did not at all get the impression that mentally anything was wrong with him. He is mentally normal. There are many rejected applicants because they are found to be of a bad standard."⁴¹⁴² Once more, the Commission acts as censor by selection, including what is negative about Tsafendas and omitting what is positive and thus giving a distorted impression of what Oosthuizen actually said.

GROOTE SCHUUR HOSPITAL APPLICATION

In the meantime he applied on 17th November, 1965, to the personnel officer of Groote Schuur Hospital for a position in the reception section. Owing to his lack of qualifications, as well as the poor impression he made on the officer concerned, the application was not successful.⁴¹⁴³

The Commission states that Tsafendas made a poor impression on the personnel officer who interviewed him (his name in the statement is indecipherable). However, that is not what the officer said. His words were, "apart from his lack of qualifications, the applicant did not impress me as a person in other respects suitable for appointment as Receptionist Officer at this hospital."⁴¹⁴⁴ What he is saying is that apart from his lack of formal qualifications, Tsafendas did not have the other attributes necessary to be a receptionist. This had nothing to do with the impression he made personally on the officer. In a new twist to its ⁴¹⁴¹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 49.

⁴¹⁴² Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴¹⁴³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 50.

⁴¹⁴⁴ Personnel Officer's statement regarding Tsafendas's application, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Leer W.D. 10//4102 Dor Stafendas. NASA.

generally hostile approach, this is not a case of the Commission including yet another negative opinion about Tsafendas, but of inventing one where none exists.

MARINE DIAMOND CORPORATION

The next place where he sought employment was the Marine Diamond Corporation in Cape Town.

*On 13th January, 1966, he was examined by this company's medical officer and nothing was found to be wrong with him. Once again he declared that he had never had any mental or nervous disease.*⁴¹⁴⁵

Mr. Martincich, who worked with Tsafendas on the Colponton, told the Commission that Tsafendas occasionally had a few drinks or drank a bottle of light wine and then talked a lot of nonsense. On one occasion Tsafendas told him that the South African Government would not last long. When this witness told him on another occasion that he was talking nonsense, Tsafendas wanted to assault him, but when he saw that the witness was going to use Karate against him, he immediately calmed down and apologized. On another occasion he said that he was expecting a large sum of money, that he was an important businessman and that he really did not know why he was wasting his time on the boat.

*He was often in the company of non-Whites and explained that they were more sympathetic towards him than the Whites. According to this witness, Tsafendas was exceptionally lazy and childish, and his table manners were bad. At times he heard Tsafendas talking to himself. On one such occasion he heard Tsafendas say that he had dived into the sea from the boat to save people. He clapped his hands and jumped up and down like a child.*⁴¹⁴⁶

The Commission refers to Tsafendas's employment in Marine Diamond Corporation in Chapter II C, Paragraphs 53, 55, 56 and 57. The Commission includes the fact that "he was examined by this company's medical officer and nothing was found to be wrong with him. Once again he declared that he had never had any mental or nervous disease." This is something that will be examined later in this chapter, in the section about the Medical Examinations.

Most of the information in the Report about Tsafendas's time with the company is from his colleague, Keith Martincich. Martincich was one of five workmates who testified to ⁴¹⁴⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 53.

⁴¹⁴⁶ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 56.

the police and the Commission. The other four colleagues evidently knew Tsafendas much better than Martincich, as they had worked with him at least three times longer than Martincich's three weeks, and had given more detailed statements about his behaviour and time in the job. Yet the Commission included almost all of Martincich's testimony while ignoring that of those who knew him better. It is the only time in the Report that the Commission has used so many details from a single witness's statement.

These four other colleagues had all spoke in a positive manner about Tsafendas, but their statements were not used and it was the generally hostile statement by Martincich, which dominated the Commission's Report. The only point which appeared from the other four colleagues' statements was that Tsafendas "expressed his disapproval of the Government's colour policy" to his colleagues. This was significant in view of a reference by the Commission to Tsafendas talking a lot of nonsense when drinking. The Report did not specify the nature of this "nonsense," although Martincich had spelled it out as follows:

"On various occasions he had said that he was staying with a Coloured or Malay family in Lansdowne. He also said the Coloureds were better than the Europeans. He said they were more friendly and had more sense than the Europeans, and showed more understanding. When I said he was talking nonsense, he got cross and lifted himself as though he wanted to tackle me."⁴¹⁴⁷

This statement is precisely the opposite of what was heard at the summary trial, that Tsafendas was unsympathetic towards Coloured people, which may have been why it was left out of the Report. What the reader does not learn is that Tsafendas's "nonsense" talk actually constituted his views on serious political and social matters. Such opinions would certainly not have been considered nonsense by many people if the Commission had explained what the so-called nonsense was.

Martincich's testimony that Tsafendas spoke against the government and apartheid is included in the Report, but a positive remark is omitted. This was that Martincich, who spoke to Tsafendas every day, got "the impression that he was a sociable type."⁴¹⁴⁸ This contradicts evidence at the summary trial from psychiatrists who examined him and diagnosed him as ⁴¹⁴⁷ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴¹⁴⁸ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

“rather isolated from his surroundings”⁴¹⁴⁹ and a “withdrawn and isolated individual.”⁴¹⁵⁰ As we have seen, tens of people testified that Tsafendas was a sociable, talkative and friendly person, but none of these statements were included by the Commission. Martincich’s comment that Tsafendas was mumbling to himself and on one occasion had jumped up and down has been examined in the “Mental State” section of this chapter.

Let us examine now what the other four colleagues of Tsafendas told the Commission and the police:

- Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden was senior security officer for the Marine Diamond Corporation and worked with Tsafendas for around three months in 1966. He testified that, “We were transferred from the Marina on a small outboard boat to the Col pontoon. It was terrible, rough seas, so much so that almost all of us old hands got seasick. It struck me that Tsafendas adapted well. He was one of the few who were not seasick. Upon landing, he filled the mess basin on the lower deck with water and started shaving. His calm way struck me that he must know the sea. Tsafendas was employed as a pump, or engineer, operator and did not work under my direct supervision. I introduced myself to him and talked to him. He was friendly, outgoing, and not aloof. I noticed that his eating was messy. Otherwise he was completely normal.”⁴¹⁵¹
- Ralph Lighton, who worked with Tsafendas for nine to ten weeks at the Marine Diamond Corporation, testified to the police that he “never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers.”⁴¹⁵²
- Hulse, who worked with Tsafendas at Marine Diamond Cooperation from December 1965 to March 12, 1966, stated that Tsafendas “did not appear to be disturbed at any stage.”⁴¹⁵³
- Gillian Clare Lieberman, personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation, whose office Tsafendas visited testified, “I had various discussions with him. I got quite interested in him as an individual... By his talks he gave me the impression that he does ⁴¹⁴⁹ Dr. Harold Cooper’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA; Jacobus Andreas Johannes Erasmus’ testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 20 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴¹⁵⁰ Reynh van Zyl’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴¹⁵¹ Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden statement to the police, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴¹⁵² Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴¹⁵³ Hulse statement to the police, 28 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

not agree with authority (Governmental or other). I cut him short, saying that in my capacity of my work I do not discuss politics. I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation, but a strange type of person, a unique character. Apart from him being well travelled etc. I got the impression that he was physically different in dress and appearance. He was a big man, with a particularly striking big hat, stainless steel teeth, sloppy dirty clothing.”⁴¹⁵⁴

At least three of these four witnesses, Hulse, Lighton and van Heerden, and maybe even Lieberman, too, spent more time with Tsafendas than the three weeks Martincich did. All testified that Tsafendas was perfectly sane and they commented positively about his intelligence. Yet none of their comments was used in the Report. Two praised Tsafendas's verbal skills, saying that he had “excellent reasoning powers” and was “able to reason in conversation.” These two statements are important in that they contradict the psychiatrists' trial evidence, that Tsafendas was “unable to function on a reasonable level,” “unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes” and that he talked in a “disjointed manner.” However, these opinions were omitted from the Report.

Another very important omission is van Heerden's statement describing Tsafendas working in difficult conditions in a calm and confident manner – a sharp contrast to the oft-repeated claims that he could barely manage menial work. An example of the latter is Smorenberg's claim that Tsafendas made childish mistakes at work. This statement was, of course, included. Finally, the Report carried no mention of Tsafendas being characterised as friendly and outgoing, clearly so as not to muddy the picture presented at the trial of a withdrawn, unsociable and isolated individual.

MAGISTRATE'S COURT IN DURBAN

*From time to time Tsafendas acted as an interpreter at the Magistrate's Court in Durban, and he acquitted himself fairly well of his task.*⁴¹⁵⁵

Tsafendas worked for some five months as a part-time interpreter, providing his services whenever needed. The head interpreter at the Court, Cornelius Johannes Rudolph, said, “It happened that I made use of his services on several occasions. He was in the habit of regularly reporting two or three times a week to ask whether there is any interpretation work.

⁴¹⁵⁴ Gillian Claire Lieberman statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴¹⁵⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 25.

I got to know him pretty well and would have no trouble identifying him. I spoke with him several times, he seemed to be a normal person and intelligent. He spoke English properly.”⁴¹⁵⁶

Although Rudolph does not refer directly to Tsafendas's working abilities, we can assume they must have been acceptable since he used him several times. However, the important thing here is Rudolph's personal opinion of Tsafendas. Having spoken to him several times, he found him to be a normal, intelligent person. However, Rudolph's opinion is omitted from the Commission's Report.

SOUTH AFRICAN RAILWAYS

On 16th March, 1965, he was employed by the South African Railways and Harbours as a shed attendant at R90 per month. He was examined medically and nothing was found to be wrong with him. In a written statement in connection with this examination he stated, inter alia, that he had never had any nervous or mental disease. When he was employed by the Railways, he was so poor that the Railway staff collected R2 for him. It was arranged for him to board at a railway hostel. On one occasion while he was working there he intimated that to his mind the South African Government was handling its Bantu problems better than Great Britain was dealing with problems in connection with the West Indians.

*On 6th April, 1965, one of his fellow workers gave him a dousing for a joke. The result was that Tsafendas immediately absconded. However, he remained at the hostel until 14th April, 1965, and when he left he took the Bible that was in his room with him.*⁴¹⁵⁷

As usual, the Commission portrays Tsafendas in a negative fashion – he accepts charity, cannot take a joke, walks out on his job (which it describes as absconding) and steals a Bible. The only positive mention is that “nothing was found to be wrong with him” when he was medically examined. This could hardly have been omitted as passing a medical was known to be necessary for a job with the company. The issue of the medical is considered in the Medical Examinations and Hospitalizations section of this chapter.

Then, the Report says:

“On one occasion while he was working there, he intimated that to his mind the South

⁴¹⁵⁶ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴¹⁵⁷ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 26.

African Government was handling its Bantu problems better than Great Britain was dealing with problems in connection with the West Indians.”

No statement or any other evidence has been found that contains this reported remark, but it could easily have been included in material that has gone missing. Here again the Report carries a statement which appears to show Tsafendas supporting the apartheid government. Omitted are instances, known to the Commission, where he criticised or condemned the government and declared his Communist beliefs.

The author cannot know the circumstances under which Tsafendas made his reported statement about the ‘Bantu problem,’ assuming that he made it at all. The fact is it is not what he really believed. However, working as he did for a government company, he would have been very stupid publicly to criticise the government’s racial policies, as he did to many of his friends and acquaintances. Examples of Tsafendas’s real political beliefs have been listed on several occasions on this study. The statement quoted in the Report was read to forty-six people who knew Tsafendas and every one denied that Tsafendas could have meant what he supposedly said. For reasons of space, their names will not be included here, but this issue has been examined in the Summary Trial Chapter.

It is important to mention here that Garnet Muller, Tsafendas’s supervisor at this job, gave a statement to the police which was in the Commission’s possession. Muller testified that Tsafendas gave him to understand that he took the job on a temporary basis. He said he had “observed Tsafendas to possess intelligence above that of the average person who is likely to accept a position with the little responsibility which is attached to that of shed attendant.”⁴¹⁵⁸

Johannes Aurets, another of Tsafendas’s supervisors at South African Railways, told the police Tsafendas “was a well-mannered and well-spoken person. He associated with those working with him. He was soft-spoken and appeared to be of a good nature. During the time he was employed under my supervision, i.e. for approximately three weeks, I did not see him being cross at any time. He was a good worker.”⁴¹⁵⁹ The Commission preferred to ignore these two character observations and instead highlight the irrelevant facts that Tsafendas was very poor and someone played a joke on him, which he did not like. The issue of the Bible has been discussed earlier in this chapter.

⁴¹⁵⁸ Garnet Vincent Muller statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴¹⁵⁹ Johannes Jaonus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

TABLE BAY POWER STATION

*In Cape Town his first job was that of a fitter and turner at the Table Bay Power Station. He started work there on 13th September, 1965, but his work being unsatisfactory he was given seven days' notice on 25th October of the same year. He then immediately resigned. The foreman under whom he worked found that at times he made childish mistakes.*⁴¹⁶⁰

The above statement is correct, but again important information is omitted. Two employees from this company were interviewed by the Commission and the police. One was Owen Smorenberg, the foreman mentioned above, who also acted as defence witness in the summary trial, and the other was Redvers Wakfer, who interviewed Tsafendas for the job. It was Smorenberg who testified that Tsafendas made childish mistakes in his work and he had said the same at the summary trial. Since his testimony has been examined there, Chapter 5, the matter will not be discussed here again. What is important here is that the Commission included this negative comment about his working abilities, but omitted most of the many positive statements from colleagues who testified that he was a good worker.

A surprising omission here is Smorenberg's impression that Tsafendas was unsympathetic towards the Coloureds and that he believed that Vorster and Dr. Verwoerd were the right men to be in these positions.⁴¹⁶¹ This is what Smorenberg told the court and said to the police. This statement has been examined in the Summary Trial Chapter. What is also omitted is what Redvers Wakfer told the police, that Tsafendas "appeared to be quite normal and was neatly dressed."⁴¹⁶² Just one of many similar positive statements which the Commission ignored.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

*On 7th August, 1965, Tsafendas reported to the Department of Labour in Durban, and asked for work as a "handyman storeman."*⁴¹⁶³

During April and May, 1966, he applied to the Department of Labour for sick benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act, and in all he received R56. In June of the same year an ⁴¹⁶⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 44.

⁴¹⁶¹ Owen Smorenburg statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Leer W.D. 10/10/ 4102 oor Stafendas. NASA.

⁴¹⁶² Redvers Wakfer statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub File: 1/5, Subject Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

⁴¹⁶³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 34.

application for a further amount was refused since he had already received the full amount to which he was entitled."⁴¹⁶⁴

*On 25th May, 1966, he applied to the Department of Labour's employment officer for light work as a clerk or salesman or, alternatively, as an operator-welder or fitter. He was requested to submit a medical certificate to the effect that he was fit for work, but on 6th June, 1966, he again turned up without the required certificate. On 30th June he was referred to Chrysler (S.A.) Pty. Ltd., Elsie's River, for employment as an operator-welder, but was not employed.*⁴¹⁶⁵

Another example of Tsafendas being portrayed in a bad light while any positives were ignored is his experience at the Department of Labour. Although the Report refers three times to this Department and Tsafendas's visits to it, there is no mention of the comments made by employees who interacted with him there. It is also stated that Tsafendas did not bring a medical certificate, which again tells only half of the story. Let us first see what the workers in this Department said which was omitted from the Report:

- Ian Boswell, administrative assistant at the Department of Labour. He interviewed Tsafendas three times in 1966 and testified to the police that "he was at all times neatly dressed and never gave the impression of being destitute. Aside from being over-talkative, he showed no symptoms of abnormality during his interviews with me."⁴¹⁶⁶
- Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys, employment officer at the Department of Labour, interviewed Tsafendas twice. He told the police that he "never got the impression that there was mentally anything wrong with him or that he acted abnormally."⁴¹⁶⁷
- Gideon Cloete, also at the Department of Labour, interviewed Tsafendas twice. According to Cloete, Tsafendas "had a neat appearance and made a good impression." He did not notice any "signs of abnormality" and "appeared totally normal" to him.⁴¹⁶⁸

Taken together, these three officers interviewed Tsafendas seven times. All said that he showed no signs of abnormality and Boswell and Cloete testified that he was neatly dressed. These were important statements as they clearly contradicted the State's portrayal of ⁴¹⁶⁴ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 59.

⁴¹⁶⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 62.

⁴¹⁶⁶ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

⁴¹⁶⁷ Pieter Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

⁴¹⁶⁸ Gideon Jacobus Cloete testimony at Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, NASA.

Tsafendas at his summary trial, as a man of dirty and neglected appearance who suffered from schizophrenia, but they were omitted from the Report.

As for the medical certificate, the Report has manipulated a witness's evidence on this matter in such a way as to portray Tsafendas in a distinctly negative light. Boswell did indeed state that Tsafendas failed to present such a document despite being asked to do so. However, Boswell also testified that "Tsafendas shortly after produced a certificate to the effect that he had been treated for a nasal complaint at Groote Schuur Hospital. This was accepted as a certificate of fitness and an application for Unemployment Benefits taken by myself."⁴¹⁶⁹

From April 19, 1966 to May 15, 1966, Tsafendas was under the medical supervision of Dr. Leon Solomon at Groote Schuur Hospital suffering from "a deviated nasal septum and epistaxis," and underwent surgery on his nose. Dr. Solomon during this period did not report any mental disability and found Tsafendas to be fit to return to his work at Marine Diamond Corporation.⁴¹⁷⁰ Since Tsafendas was declared fit to return to work by Dr. Solomon just three weeks ago, naturally this certificate was deemed acceptable by Boswell.

The fact that Tsafendas was in possession of this certificate from May 17 means that he could easily have produced it for Boswell on June 6 and the likelihood is that he simply forgot to bring it. What is important is that the Commission was aware of the existence of the certificate from Dr. Solomon and aware that Tsafendas had given it to Boswell. However, it omitted these two facts, thus grossly misrepresenting the issue of the medical certificate and making it appear as if Tsafendas was unable to produce the document, implying that there was something wrong with his health.

Actually, Tsafendas was in possession of at least two medical certificates proving him fit for any work. These were from the two state doctors, Dr. C. Been⁴¹⁷¹ and Dr. A.C. McDonald,⁴¹⁷² who examined him for his permanent residence application. This also suggests that Tsafendas probably forgot to bring the certificate on that specific occasion. The ⁴¹⁶⁹ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

⁴¹⁷⁰ Dr. Leon Solomon's medical report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA; Medical certificate issued by Dr. Solomon for the Employment Insurance Act, 1946. 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA.

⁴¹⁷¹ Demitrio Tsafendas medical certificate issued by Dr. Been for the Aliens Act, 1937. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

⁴¹⁷² Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

Commission was well aware of that, too, but did not find it necessary to mention it here or anywhere else in its Report.

MIKE'S OUTFITTERS

In July, 1966, he entered into an agreement with Michaelis Augustides of Mike's Outfitters, Woodstock, by which he would receive commission on the purchases of crew members whom he brought to the shop. For this purpose, one of the shop assistants accompanied Tsafendas to the ship on a few occasions, and brought some of the crew members to the shop. In this way Tsafendas earned about R12.⁴¹⁷³

Neville Judson was the shop assistant who accompanied Tsafendas to the ship, which was the Eleni. He said of Tsafendas that he "never in no way got the impression that he could be mentally deranged. He appeared to be a normal man with normal reasoning powers."⁴¹⁷⁴ Judson's statement was not used by the Commission.

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY

Towards the end of June, or at the beginning of July, 1966, he went to the House of Assembly to enquire about a post as a messenger. He had most probably heard from other unemployed persons at the Department of Labour that he might be able to get a situation there.

On 18th July, 1966, he was summoned by the Chief Messenger, and after an interview with the Chief Messenger and two senior messengers he was notified in writing on 20th July, 1966, to report for duty on 1st August, 1966, at 7.45 a.m. He did so, and worked there until 6th September, 1966.

Particulars of his engagement and the Commission's findings thereon are dealt with in Chapter X.⁴¹⁷⁵

Neither the Chief Messenger nor the two senior messengers had any reason to believe, either during their interview or while Tsafendas was employed at the House of Assembly during August and September, that he was mentally disordered. Nor did the policemen and other messengers who came into contact with him at the House of Assembly notice anything

⁴¹⁷³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 77.

⁴¹⁷⁴ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

⁴¹⁷⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 73.

wrong.⁴¹⁷⁶

The Commission has used Tsafendas's statement to the police as the source of how he heard about a possible job at the House of Assembly. However, he had lied. Many years later, in 1987, when he was in Pretoria Central Prison, Tsafendas described to a senior magistrate, Mr. T.I. Potgieter, how he got the job:

“One day I was sitting in front of the Assembly and I bought fish and chips from a Portuguese shop across the road... I sat on a bench and started throwing pieces to the seagulls... While I was doing that, somebody comes and sits next to me on the bench. He was a small man, dark, he says, ‘What are you doing here?’ I say to him, ‘Well, I’m doing nothing.’ He says to me, ‘Are you out of a job?’ I said, ‘Yes.’ He says to me, ‘Look, there is a part-time job here. Don’t say I told you. Go there and tell them, inquire if you can get the job, but don’t say I sent you or told you about it.’ So, I went there ...”⁴¹⁷⁷

A few years later, Tsafendas repeated the story to Father Minas Constandinou, but with crucial detail added. He said that sometime, probably in July, he started observing the Parliament building to explore the possibility of assassinating Dr. Verwoerd. His preference was to kidnap him and exchange him for political prisoners, but he knew that would be impossible on his own. He had hoped that one day the common people would storm the building, as the French revolutionaries had done with the Bastille. He visited the place two or three times in a week but not every day, so as not to be noticed. He would sit on a bench and feed the birds while observing the building. One day, a man came out of the building and started talking to him, while he also fed the birds. They started talking about the birds and then Tsafendas told him he was unemployed. The man told him that he was a messenger and that the Parliament was desperate for messengers and he should apply for the position. He assured him he would be accepted as they were short-staffed. Tsafendas could not believe his luck. He went to the barber, had a haircut and shave, bought a new suit and attended the interview.⁴¹⁷⁸ What happened in the interview and thereafter is discussed later in this chapter in the “House of Assembly” section.

HUME PIPE COMPANY

⁴¹⁷⁶ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 74.

⁴¹⁷⁷ Interview by Mr T.I. Potgieter, Senior Magistrate, Pretoria with Mr Demitriou Tsafendas at the Pretoria Central Prison on 20 October 1987. Correctional Services. File 80/0043, A123, Dimitrio Tsafendas, Vol 1. NASA.

⁴¹⁷⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

*During September and October, 1964, he worked for the Hume Pipe Company at Gondola, near Beira.*⁴¹⁷⁹

*On 9th October, 1964, he re-entered Rhodesia at Umtali. In Umtali he tried to buy a farm, but since it appeared that he had no money, no transaction took place. He also said that the silver fillings in his teeth had been done in Russia. (To the Commission he stated that he had obtained these in Turkey.) Because he had no visa, he was declared an illegal immigrant, and deported to Mozambique on 10th October, 1964.*⁴¹⁸⁰

The Commission here is in error as to when Tsafendas worked at the Hume Pipe Company. Lt. Col. van Wyk wrote in his report regarding Tsafendas's activities in Rhodesia and Mozambique: "From there he went directly to Gondola near Beira, where he was arrested by the Security Police of Mozambique because of subversive activities on 16.11.64 while he worked at Hume Pipe, Gondola."⁴¹⁸¹ In reality, the two above paragraphs of the Commission's Report would have been correct if they were the other way round, as Tsafendas got the job at Hume Pipe after he returned to Mozambique on October 10. This is evidently an innocent and unimportant mistake on behalf of Judge van Wyk since it makes no difference whether Tsafendas worked a month later or earlier at this company. However, it is indicative of the difficulties the Commission (and the author) faced in order correctly to reconstruct Tsafendas's life story based on thousands of documents and reports.

CONCLUSION

The Commission once again has misrepresented Tsafendas on the issue of employment and his ability properly to do a job. Several important facts are missing, for example the fact that he worked at Limasollu Naci College as a foreign language teacher for six months. This alone contradicted the claim that Tsafendas was unable to do more than a menial job, that he was unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes, that his speech was disjointed and that he suffered from thought-disorder. Missing also are very positive comments about Tsafendas's character and working abilities. Tsafendas is described by most of his colleagues as a friendly, talkative, polite and intelligent worker, a total contradiction to the way he was described at his trial and by the Commission.

⁴¹⁷⁹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 17.

⁴¹⁸⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 18.

⁴¹⁸¹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

TSAFENDAS'S LANDLORDS AND FLATMATES

This section examines what the Commission has written about Tsafendas's landlords and flatmates. Their testimony is important because several of them spent a significant amount of time with him. The study examines what the Commission took from their testimonies and what was omitted from them.

TSAFENDAS'S ACCOMMODATION IN PRETORIA IN 1963

*After Tsafendas's arrival in Pretoria from Lourenço Marques, he stayed with his half-brother for a few days and then lived in rooms in various parts of the city.*⁴¹⁸²

It is correct that Tsafendas stayed at his half-brother's house for a few days, but entirely incorrect that he "lived in rooms in various parts of the city." That claim was taken from Nick Vlachopoulos testimony to the Commission where he stated that Tsafendas "stayed in about 20 places in Pretoria."⁴¹⁸³ However, Tsafendas's step-mother, his two half-sisters and his half-brother, all told the Commission that Tsafendas "always had proper accommodation in Pretoria."⁴¹⁸⁴ The Commission itself wrote in its Report after interviewing the above members of Tsafendas's family that "after his stepmother had fetched him, he had stayed with his family for a while and then hired a room."⁴¹⁸⁵ Judge van Wyk ignored the evidence of these witnesses in favour of the remark by Vlachopoulos.

The statement of Tsafendas's family was confirmed to the author by Katerina Pnefma, his half-sister, Mary Eintracht, his first cousin who was in Pretoria at the time, and Fotini Gavasiadis, Vlachopoulos's sister. All of these witnesses told the author that after Tsafendas left his half-sister's house, he lived for a few weeks at Gavasiadis's house and for the remainder of the nine months he spent in Pretoria, he lived in a rent-free apartment provided by Nick Vlachopoulos (Gavasiadis's house was also owned by Vlachopoulos). Eintracht, Pnefma and Gavasiadis agreed that Tsafendas never stayed anywhere else.⁴¹⁸⁶

⁴¹⁸² Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 5

⁴¹⁸³ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴¹⁸⁴ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴¹⁸⁵ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴¹⁸⁶ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

TSAFENDAS NOT PAYING PART OF THE RENT

On 28th August, 1964, he went to stay at a boarding house in Beira, and there he was often seen with a Bible in his hand. On 8th October, 1964, he left Beira without having paid for part of his board and lodging.⁴¹⁸⁷

The above statement is correct, but by telling only half the story, it implies that Tsafendas fled to avoid paying his bill, and this was not the case. Stelios Marangos, the owner of the boarding house, testified to the police that Tsafendas “stayed at his lodgings from 28 August 1964 to 8 October 1964. He was unemployed and had only paid his lodgings for the period 28 August to 28 September. When he left, he said he was going to look for work at the firm that lays the pipeline from Beira to Rhodesia.”⁴¹⁸⁸ Tsafendas had obviously told Marangos what his plans were and his landlord clearly did not view him as some kind of absconder.

According to Nick Papadakis, who lived in the boarding house, and Tsafendas's childhood friend Andreas Babiolakis, Tsafendas told Marangos that he would leave as soon as his money ran out, but Marangos insisted he should stay. When Tsafendas eventually left, his intention was to get a job on the Beira-Rhodesia pipeline, but instead he found work with the Hume Pipe Company in Gondola.⁴¹⁸⁹ However, soon after he started there, he was arrested by the Portuguese Public Security Police and accused of preaching “under the guise of religion in favour of Mozambique's independence.”⁴¹⁹⁰

Tsafendas was kept in custody for three months before being freed on January 26, 1965.⁴¹⁹¹ He then managed to secure work as an interpreter at Beira docks, but he was dismissed for urging the Mozambican workers to strike in protest at their working conditions.⁴¹⁹² On March 5, 1965, he left Mozambique for Durban.⁴¹⁹³

⁴¹⁸⁷ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 16.

⁴¹⁸⁸ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴¹⁸⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴¹⁹⁰ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴¹⁹¹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA; Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 19.

⁴¹⁹² Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴¹⁹³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

It is not known to the author whether Tsafendas eventually gave Marangos what he owed him – his travels, incarcerations and periods of unemployment must have made contact difficult - but there is abundant evidence that Tsafendas always paid his debts. Peter Pappas, the owner of a café which Tsafendas frequented in Durban, said, “When his luck was out, I sometimes gave him a free meal, but when he started work he paid me.”⁴¹⁹⁴ One day, John Emmanuel Marvis, a Greek friend in Beira, lent Tsafendas twenty escudos and Tsafendas repaid him a few days later.⁴¹⁹⁵ Some of his friends in Mozambique, including Costas Poriakis and Andreas and Giangos Babiolakis, voluntarily gave him money to travel from Beira to Durban. About a month later, Tsafendas paid back the money, even though they had insisted they did not want it back.⁴¹⁹⁶

MRS. MANNING

*During October, 1965, he hired a room at No. 7, Prince Street, Vredehoek, from a Mrs. Manning. There his neighbours complained that he would come to fetch water in their kitchen and spill it on the floor, with the result that he was given notice to vacate the room.*⁴¹⁹⁷

The above statement, made to the Commission by Manning, is correct, but the Report distorts the picture by omitting her opinion of Tsafendas. She testified in full that:

“He rented Room 3 next to the Ferreiras. It was a serviced room but I found him making his own bed. When he came to me he was well-dressed, well-spoken, and gave a good impression. I thought him to be a Greek. For a few weeks he attracted no unfavourable attention, until Mrs Ferreira came to me to complain that he was a nuisance. She said he was going into her kitchen to fetch water and that he was spilling water on the floor... During his stay, I regularly inspected his room. I also spoke to him... From his general appearance, he appeared to be a businessman. When he paid me, he had a bundle of notes and I took him to be a man of means.”⁴¹⁹⁸

⁴¹⁹⁴ Rand Daily Mail, ‘Tsafendas: In the Eyes of A Friend’, 14 September 1966.

⁴¹⁹⁵ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

⁴¹⁹⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Costas Poriakis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

⁴¹⁹⁷ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 45.

⁴¹⁹⁸ Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

It is clear that Manning was favourably impressed by Tsafendas; he made his own bed though he did not have to, he was well-spoken and dressed well. However all these positive comments are omitted from the Report and once again the only negative reference is recorded.

DURBAN MEN'S HOME

*On 21st June, 1965, he moved into the Durban Men's Home, Durban, where he lived until 24th August, 1965. At this home he expressed himself strongly against the South African Government and in favour of Communism.*⁴¹⁹⁹

This part is examined in the "Political Activities and Ideology" section.

PATRICK O'RYAN

In Chapter II C, Paragraphs 47, 48, 55 and 56, Tsafendas's time at Patrick O'Ryan's house is mentioned. Tsafendas stayed at his house for about five months (November 1965-April 1966), and remained close to O'Ryan up to his arrest. Tsafendas considered O'Ryan the best person he ever met and the best friend he ever had. Although he stayed there for five months there and was very close to O'Ryan and his family, only limited information is used from his statement.

During his time off he also stayed with Mr. O'Ryan. He never paid the O'Ryan's any board.

*Mr. O'Ryan never gained the impression that there was anything seriously wrong with him. He did tell them, though, about the tapeworm which he was supposed to have. Sometimes he called it a snake, and said that he had to feed it constantly.*⁴²⁰⁰

*According to Patrick O'Ryan, Tsafendas was strongly opposed to the policies of the Governments of South Africa and Portugal.*⁴²⁰¹

Patrick O'Ryan, who knew Tsafendas better than the other witnesses and considered him to be his best friend, a feeling Tsafendas reciprocated, made several positive statements about his character, but none of them was mentioned in the Report, while the fact that he did not pay any board was included. It is true that Tsafendas did not pay for his board. However, ⁴¹⁹⁹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 32.

⁴²⁰⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 55.

⁴²⁰¹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 56.

he frequently bought food for the household and toys and sweets for the children. When O’Ryan asked Tsafendas not to do this because he thought it made him look bad, Tsafendas continued to bring food and sweets but told the children they were bought by their dad and himself. Young Reuben O’Ryan, a son of Patrick, said about Tsafendas, “We all loved him ... he was an adorable man ... he was the answer to our prayers. We were poor and he brought food to our house.”⁴²⁰²

Patrick O’Ryan had testified that he had formed a “deep liking” for Tsafendas and that he “had confidence in him... He was a very kindly man. In my experience of him he had a good heart ... I never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind,” or that he “was mentally disturbed.” He also found him to be “well-spoken and had good vocabulary.”⁴²⁰³ None of these is included in the Report.

O’Ryan had also testified that Tsafendas “was against the state policy of both South Africa and Portugal” and that he “labelled the apartheid policies as unfair.”⁴²⁰⁴ He later described Tsafendas as getting “excited” when he talked about politics and saying that Dr. Verwoerd was a tyrant who was oppressing his people, that he was “Hitler’s best student” and that if he (Tsafendas) ever get hold of him “he would bash his skull.” O’Ryan did not tell the police about Dr. Verwoerd being a tyrant or about bashing his skull as he believed it would be bad for Tsafendas.⁴²⁰⁵ For more about O’Ryan and his relationship with Tsafendas see his testimony at the Summary Trial Chapter. The Report’s comment that O’Ryan did not think that there was something seriously wrong with Tsafendas is discussed in the ‘Mental State’ section of this chapter.

⁴²⁰² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Father Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴²⁰³ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴²⁰⁴ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴²⁰⁵ Patrick O’Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Father Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

MRS. GROVES

*In April, 1966, he moved in as a boarder with Mrs. E. M. Groves at No. 57, Milton Road, Observatory, Cape Town, but because the other boarders were dissatisfied with his behaviour, he was asked to leave the boarding-house.*⁴²⁰⁶

The above statement is correct, but it is misleading because once again important information has been omitted. Firstly, it is not revealed that Groves was a former nurse in a psychiatric hospital and therefore experienced with schizophrenics. Tsafendas boarded with her for six to seven weeks and her opinion of him was bound to be scientifically more acceptable than that of the non-medic Johnston who spoke to Tsafendas for all of twenty minutes. His opinion about Tsafendas's mental state is included in the Report, hers is not. Referencing her professional experience, Mrs. Groves said of Tsafendas, "He was completely normal. I was a nurse and worked in lunatic institutions. He was a normal person to the best of my knowledge."⁴²⁰⁷

It is true that the other boarders were unhappy with aspects of Tsafendas's behaviour, but the Commission fails to say why. According to Mrs. Groves' statement: "D. Tsafendas was a very good eater. He mastered many languages and behaved properly. Besides his rough table manners, I have nothing against him. He was completely normal. I received complaints that he was argumentative and towards me he said that we Afrikaners are a backward nation. It was clear that he had nothing good towards Afrikaners. For the sake of my other tenants, I asked him to leave my place."⁴²⁰⁸

Jacobus Bornman, Tsafendas's roommate at Mrs. Groves's house, testified that "Tsafendas's conversations were always about women and politics. He never talked about anything else. Tsafendas was dissatisfied with conditions in R.S.A and he has often criticized the government, his exact words I don't remember, but it seemed to me that he had a grudge against Dr. Verwoerd. He stood up a lot for the Coloureds."⁴²⁰⁹ Thus, the dissatisfaction with Tsafendas was apparently due to his argumentativeness and his antipathy towards Afrikaners, something he never hid. However, by not revealing the reason for the boarders' dissatisfaction, the Commission leaves the reader with the wrong idea; that it was probably ⁴²⁰⁶ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 58.

⁴²⁰⁷ Elizabeth Magdalene Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴²⁰⁸ Elizabeth Magdalene Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴²⁰⁹ Jacobus Johannes Bornman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

because of his mental state or his aggression.

JACOBUS BORNMAN

*Mr. Bornman, who occupied the same room as Tsafendas, stated that Tsafendas did not show any signs of being mentally abnormal. He was good-natured, but had messy habits. His topics, of conversation were politics and women. He was strongly opposed to the policy of the Government. He read only English-language newspapers and was sometimes upset by what he had read. At times he passed the remark that the Government was doing so much for the Coloureds that it would be better for him to be a Coloured.*⁴²¹⁰

Bornman was Tsafendas's roommate in Mrs. Groves's house for six to seven weeks. The above comment about Tsafendas being 'good-natured' is the only wholly positive statement about Tsafendas in the entire Report. Although the Commission allowed two positive comments from Bornman – that Tsafendas was good natured and showed no signs of mental abnormality – they seem meagre in comparison with what was missing. The most important omission was that Tsafendas voluntarily gave money to Bornman and then refused to take it back. Bornman said about the incident: "on one occasion I had no money and then Tsafendas gave me five cents. I later wanted to return the money to him, but he would not take it."⁴²¹¹ Tsafendas is described by the Commission as a beggar, always asking for help and money, taking advantage of people and never thanking anyone for what they did for him, but this was hardly something a beggar would do. The omission is not unexpected. To include this example of his generosity would have raised questions as to whether Tsafendas was really the sort of hopeless person that emerged from the summary trial.

Bornman had also characterised Tsafendas as "a friendly and plausible person," adding that, "during the time I lived with Tsafendas, his behaviour was normal... I regarded him as a normal and very intelligent person... According to my observation, Tsafendas was a gentle person. He was neat on his person, but his eating habits were not up to scratch. He was messy." That the Commission omitted the comment about Tsafendas's intelligence is not that important as even the psychiatrists testified to his intelligence at the trial, along with several other witnesses. However, in stating that Tsafendas had "messy habits," the Commission is guilty of a misleading generalisation. Bornman used the word "messy" to refer to Tsafendas's ⁴²¹⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 58.

⁴²¹¹ Jacobus Johannes Bornman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

eating habits and not to his general appearance and behaviour. In fact he said that Tsafendas was a neat person. This omission is important as Tsafendas was portrayed in the summary trial as a dirty person with dirty clothes; not at all the same as being merely a messy eater.

In its totality, Bornman's statement was one of the most positive about Tsafendas. However, by its selective evisceration, the Commission managed to downplay it significantly. Bornman's comments regarding Tsafendas's ideology are examined in the section 'Political Activities and Ideology' of this chapter.

MRS. SCOTT

During June and July, 1966, he had his meals with Mrs. Scott at No. 42, Chamberlain Street, Woodstock. There he acquired the nickname of "The Pig" on account of his bad table manners. In her opinion he was normal. On one occasion he passed the following remarks in Mrs. Scott's presence when a possible job in South West Africa was mentioned:

I cannot go to South West Africa. I have a job to do here before I go back.

*He told one of the boarders that he had obtained a position in South West Africa, but that he would first take a post at the Houses of Parliament for two months.*⁴²¹²

Mary Cathleen Scott was Greek, married to a White South African. She often cooked Greek food and many Greeks would visit her house to eat.⁴²¹³ Scott told the police that Tsafendas was "very poorly mannered" and she named him "The Pig," but she "never got the impression that he could be mentally unbalanced," indeed she thought that he "appeared to be perfectly normal."⁴²¹⁴

Pamela Abrahams, a South African, often visited Scott's house to eat, along with her Greek boyfriend and future husband, Panagiotis Peroglou. She said Tsafendas was very well mannered, especially with women. Neither she nor her boyfriend recalled him having bad manners or being nicknamed "The Pig" by Scott. In fact, according to Abrahams, "Tsafendas was a gentleman. He would always get up from the table to greet you and he always offered you his seat or went to find you a seat... he was certainly very well mannered."⁴²¹⁵

⁴²¹² Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 67.

⁴²¹³ Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

⁴²¹⁴ Mary Cathleen Scott statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴²¹⁵ Pamela Abrahams in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

Panagiotis Peroglou was a good friend of Scott but he does not remember that she ever complained about Tsafendas's manners or called him a pig. He was very surprised to hear such comments, with which he disagreed. Peroglou remembers Tsafendas as being "very well mannered, especially with women and elderly people..." he was "very talkative and friendly" and "he had a lot of respect for the women. He would bring them a chair or he would offer his chair." Peroglou said Tsafendas was "well educated, especially about Greece's history and Christianity."⁴²¹⁶ Peroglou and Abrahams associated with Tsafendas for about three months and Peroglou said they "never got the impression that he might be insane. He never did or said anything to make us think he was insane. He was definitely sane." The couple do not remember Tsafendas talking politics.⁴²¹⁷ Peroglou was questioned by the police but his statement was not found in the archives. There is no mention of him in the Report.

Elias Constantaras, another Greek who knew Tsafendas very well, was also friendly with Scott and often ate at her house. He was surprised to hear that she called Tsafendas a pig and says she never did so in front of him. He does not remember Tsafendas's eating habits and thinks if they were so bad, he would have remembered. What he did remember was Scott complaining to him two or three times that Tsafendas talked politics persistently at the table in front of her boarders and she suspected him of being a Communist. According to Constantaras, Scott was afraid of Tsafendas talking in that way and she asked him to tell Tsafendas to stop. Constantaras did so and though Tsafendas was not happy that Scott did not tell him herself, he complied with her request.⁴²¹⁸

Constantaras remembers Tsafendas discoursing on history. "He knew a lot about Greek and world history." Tsafendas "was anti-colonialist and anti-apartheid; he described Dr. Verwoerd as 'Nazi' and 'Hitler's best student' and the white South Africans as Nazis. He [Tsafendas] believed that Dr. Verwoerd was doing to the Blacks what the Nazis did to the Jews."⁴²¹⁹ Constantaras and Peroglou were questioned by the police but their statements were not found in the archives.

Stratis Vamvarapis, another Greek, lodged with Mrs Scott at the same time as Tsafendas and knew him for about a year. He found Tsafendas to be a "strange man - strange as a character, not mentally strange. He was very argumentative and was getting easily crossed when he disagreed with people." Initially, Tsafendas had little to say, but became ⁴²¹⁶ Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

⁴²¹⁷ Pamela Abrahams and Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

⁴²¹⁸ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

⁴²¹⁹ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

more talkative as they grew to know each other, though he never discussed politics with him. Tsafendas never appeared to be schizophrenic or insane and he never heard him mention a tapeworm. He recalls him eating a lot but does not remember if his manners were messy and he never heard Mary Scott call Tsafendas "The Pig."⁴²²⁰

MRS. THEYSER

*He left Mrs. De Vos's house on 30th June, 1966, and moved into a room with Mrs. Theyser at No. 48, Devon Street, Woodstock. There he was also given notice and left on 30th August, 1966.*⁴²²¹

Theyser had also testified that she "never got the impression in any way that he might be mentally unbalanced. To me he appeared a quite normal person."⁴²²² As usual, the Commission omitted this positive statement.

CONCLUSION

⁴²²⁰ Stratis Vamvarapis in a personal interview, 31 May 2016.

⁴²²¹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 66.

⁴²²² Alice Mary Theyser statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Tsafendas is portrayed by the Commission as a bad lodger in many ways. Although some of the issues mentioned are true, the overall portrayal is inaccurate. The Commission omitted all the positive remarks about him, including those about his character and his mental state, but included anything remotely denigratory. The most important omissions are those about Tsafendas's personality, especially the fact that he gave money to Bornman when the latter had none and then refused to take it back, as well as the comments made by Bornman and by O'Ryan. Finally, a word on the language the Commission invariably employs when it describes Tsafendas or his activities: this is probably best described as verging on the contemptuous.

TSAFENDAS'S HOSPITALIZATIONS AND MEDICAL EXAMINATIONS

The Report refers extensively to Tsafendas's hospitalizations and the medical examinations he underwent throughout his life. Let us examine what was included in the Report and what was omitted.

TSAFENDAS'S FIRST HOSPITALIZATION

*While in detention in the United States of America, Tsafendas showed symptoms of mental disorder and was admitted to the Boston Psychopathic Hospital.*⁴²²³

This is the first reference to Tsafendas being hospitalized and the first to refer to "mental disorder." What is significant is that his symptoms occurred "while in detention." The experience of mental disorder while incarcerated will recur many times in Tsafendas's story, becoming almost a trademark in his life. Although Tsafendas manages his workaday life perfectly well and no-one notices anything wrong with him, whenever he is arrested, he appears to suffer from mental problems and is quickly released. In later life, Tsafendas declared openly that he faked madness in order to be released, and this claim is validated by the records. For example:

In January 1952, Tsafendas was arrested in Lisbon after security reports from Lourenço Marques advised the Portuguese authorities that he was a half-caste, a Communist and an anti-colonialist under suspicion of "unclear activities" during his time in Mozambique.⁴²²⁴ "During his interrogations he gave signs of having some sort of mental disability, which was confirmed by the Hospital do Ultramar." He was subsequently released.⁴²²⁵

In November 1964, in Mozambique, Tsafendas was arrested by the Portuguese Public Security Police and accused of preaching "under the guise of religion in favour of Mozambique's independence."⁴²²⁶ He was detained in police cells for fourteen days in the custody of Inspector Horacio Ferreira, who testified to the South African police that ⁴²²³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 3.

⁴²²⁴ Diario Popular, 'E Conhesido em Lisboa o Assassino do Dr. Verwoerd', 9 September 1966.

⁴²²⁵ PIDE Report regarding Tsafendas, 5 May 1956. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴²²⁶ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

Tsafendas was “normal” and he regarded him “as a very intelligent person.”⁴²²⁷ After two weeks, due to the seriousness of the charges and because of Tsafendas’s police record, he was handed to the PIDE for further interrogation. He spent the next two and half months in detention, interrogated regularly by PIDE. There, suffering from a harsh regime of imprisonment and interrogation, Tsafendas again showed “symptoms of mental illness” and was released.⁴²²⁸

Furthermore, each time he is arrested in the United States for contravening the immigration laws, the result is the same. Yet only three of the two hundred witnesses who were interviewed by the Commission and the police about Tsafendas expressed doubts as to his sanity as a free man. Surely this should have rung alarm bells with the Commission.

GRAFTON STATE HOSPITAL REPORT⁴²²⁹

The Commission includes several extracts from the report of this hospital, including statements which Tsafendas made to the doctors to convince them that he was mad. Most importantly, it repeats the following crucially important reference from the Grafton report:

Tsafendas’s faking mental illness

“He faked mental illness because he was afraid to ship out because of the numerous leakings of ships.”⁴²³⁰

That Tsafendas had pretended mental illness at least once is a hugely important revelation. Yet it is reproduced in the Report as a run-of-the-mill observation of no particular relevance. Assuming the Commission felt the question of his deceit could not be ignored, it nevertheless offered no comment or elaboration and posed no questions. Did the Commission not ask Tsafendas about the incident?

More important is why this information was not used at the summary trial. The Grafton document must have been given to the State by the police as it was also given to the Commission. Surely, the fact that Tsafendas had faked mental illness in the past was worth ⁴²²⁷ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, File 1/5. FILE Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

⁴²²⁸ Letter of Francisco Bartolomeu da Costa Lontrão to the Subdirector of the PIDE in Lourenço Marques, 19 January 1965. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Alberto Henriques de Matos Rodrigues conclusion to the Subdirector, 23 January 1965. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴²²⁹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 10.

⁴²³⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 10.

raising at the trial, where the defence was claiming he was mentally ill and the State was supposedly trying to prove otherwise. Would not such information have been extremely useful to those who examined Tsafendas, had they known of it?

This was not the only time Tsafendas simulated illness to get out of trouble, and the police and presumably the Commission, knew it. At least six witnesses from the Eleni tanker testified to the South African police on the 12th of October that Tsafendas had told them he faked mental illness to avoid call-up into the Portuguese army.⁴²³¹ Tsafendas had told the same thing to several other witnesses though they were not questioned by the South African police.

However, the fact that Tsafendas was exempted from serving in the Portuguese army was known to the South African police because it was mentioned in PIDE's reports. No reason was given for Tsafendas's exemption, but it would have been very easy for the Commission to find out. Exemption from service in the Portuguese army was granted only to persons with physical or mental defects. Since Tsafendas was not physically defective, the Commission must have deduced that his exemption was due to reasons concerning his mental state. No mention of this incident is made in the Report.

Evidence of a different sort of malingering by Tsafendas came from Antony Maw, the former Honorary Consul for Greece in Lourenço Marques. He told the South African police when he was questioned on the 7th of September that Tsafendas had claimed "illness" when he was not allowed to disembark from a ship on arrival in Lourenço Marques.⁴²³² Maw's statement was found in the archives and therefore it was known to the Commission, but no mention of this incident appears in its Report. Several witness told the author that on the occasion Maw referred to, Tsafendas pretended to be suffering from appendicitis so as to be taken off the ship to a hospital in Lourenço Marques.

It is clear that Tsafendas had thought this through. It would not have helped him to pretend madness since the probability was that he would be banned from landing. However, with an apparent acute appendicitis, it was likely he would be rushed to a hospital ashore. Although Maw does not specify the illness claimed by Tsafendas, his appendicitis trick was known to almost every Greek in Lourenço Marques and it seems highly unlikely that the ⁴²³¹ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴²³² Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub File: 1/8. NASA

Commission and the South African police did not hear about it. No fewer than seven Greeks who were interviewed by the author Andreas Babiolakis, Mary Eintracht, Helen Grispos, Ira Kyriakakis, George Liberopoulos, Nick Papadakis and Katerina Pnema - knew the story and said that most if not all of the city's Greek population knew it, too.⁴²³³

The hearing of voices

The Commission's Report also contains extracts from the Grafton Hospital report regarding Tsafendas's diagnosis, including a statement that "he hears voices coming through the radiators." The psychiatrists at the summary trial asked Tsafendas if he heard voices. Tsafendas replied in the negative, knowing full well that hearing voices was often used by people pretending to be crazy. When Tsafendas claimed to hear voices in the radiators it was 1946 and he had little knowledge or experience of hospitals. Years later, he told Father Minas Constandinou that the first times he was hospitalized he pretended to hear religious voices like "Joan of Arc." However, he was found to be lying by the psychiatrists and thereafter adopted something different - the tapeworm. He said "everyone hears voices or pretends to be Napoleon, but who would ever suspect anyone who believes he has a tapeworm?"⁴²³⁴ He never used the voices trick again.

TSAFENDAS'S HOSPITALIZATION IN HAMBURG

*At the beginning of 1954 he was treated at the Tropen Krankenhaus in Hamburg for a stomach complaint. According to documents received from Germany, he alleged at that time that his trouble was due to a tapeworm. He is said to have claimed that the worm had been troubling him since 1937. No such worm was found and he was discharged.*⁴²³⁵

On 11th February, 1955, Demitrios Tsafandakis was admitted to the psychiatric section of the Ochsenzoll⁴²³⁶ Hospital, Germany. The diagnosis was "mixed psychoneurosis psychosis." In ⁴²³³ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 May 2016; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; George Liberopoulos in a personal interview, 6 July 2014; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

All of the above witnesses, apart from Father Minas, were living at the time in Mozambique and heard about it. Father Minas was told about it by Tsafendas himself in the mid-1990s. Henk van Woerden in the Mouthful of Glass also describes the same scene (2000: 70), presumably because he was told about it by Tsafendas.

⁴²³⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴²³⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraphs 25.

⁴²³⁶ The correct spelling is Ochsenzoll.

*the copious notes the hospital made at that time, his allegation that he had a tapeworm was mentioned repeatedly. He is said to have alleged that the worm caused stomach-ache, and that he could hear it at times. During February, 1955, he also attempted suicide by swallowing twenty sleeping-pills. A priest of the sect to which he belonged, an American, visited him at the above-mentioned hospital. This visitor told one of the doctors that Tsafendas had deserted during the war, hardly ever worked, wandered from country to country and that he did not trust him. On 6th June, 1955, he was discharged from the hospital. Apparently the paranoiac ideas had ceased.*⁴²³⁷

While all the above information is correct, it tells only half the truth. On each occasion, Tsafendas admitted himself to the hospital, including when he allegedly attempted to commit suicide. The issue of the suicide has been examined extensively in the previous chapter, and would not be discussed here again. There is a big difference between someone walking into a hospital complaining that he is ill and seeking admission, and being taken there by others who have detected a health problem. The fact that Tsafendas personally presented himself at these hospitals is not mentioned in the Report, though surely this was something that would arouse curiosity in any investigator.

A further point is that Tsafendas was diagnosed as suffering from, and treated for, depression, not schizophrenia. This, too, goes unmentioned in the Commission's Report. Two concluding diagnoses made at the Hamburg hospital: Dr. Bieser, a senior physician, labelled Tsafendas's condition as "mixed – pictured phasic psychose,"⁴²³⁸ and Dr. Nachtwey, a psychiatrist, diagnosed "endogenous depression, mixed-picture."⁴²³⁹

TSAFENDAS'S MEDICAL EXAMINATIONS FOR HIS PERMANENT RESIDENCE APPLICATION

*In his application for permanent residence Tsafendas stated, inter alia, that he had been a sailor during the previous five years, that he had never before applied for permanent residence in South Africa, that he had never been deported from any country, and that he did not suffer from any mental disease. A medical certificate stating, inter alia, that he was not in any way mentally defective was attached to his application.*⁴²⁴⁰

⁴²³⁷ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraphs 26.

⁴²³⁸ Dr. Bieser and Dr. Schmidt-Janssen report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 7 June 1955. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

⁴²³⁹ Medical Bulletin of Dimitrio Tsafendas. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

⁴²⁴⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 3.

The above information is correct, but omits the fact that Tsafendas had been examined by two state doctors and issued with two medical certificates stating that he was perfectly fine, physically and mentally. This was known to the Commission. On November 11, 1963, Tsafendas was seen by Dr. C. Been and was found “not to be mentally or physically defective in any way,” and “generally in a good state of health.”⁴²⁴¹ On November 14, 1963, Tsafendas was examined again in reference to his residence application by Dr. A.C. McDonald, who wrote “a favourable report.” A certificate for permanent residence was subsequently issued based in part on the two doctors’ reports.⁴²⁴² If Tsafendas was as described by the medical experts in the summary trial – unable to follow a conversation for more than fifteen minutes, with disjointed speech and blocked thoughts - would not one or both of these two doctors have noticed?

SOUTH AFRICAN RAILWAYS AND HARBOURS

On 16th March, 1965, he was employed by the South African Railways and Harbours as a shed attendant at R90 per month. He was examined medically and nothing was found to be wrong with him.

*In a written statement in connection with this examination he stated, inter alia, that he had never had any nervous or mental disease.*⁴²⁴³

This is one of ten times that Tsafendas was medically examined between November 1963 and September 1966 and found to be perfectly healthy. He withholds the fact that he has been hospitalized several times and that he has a “fixation with a tapeworm.” Obviously, Tsafendas knew he would not get the job if he mentioned anything of the sort. Although only eighteen months into the future Tsafendas would be declared a schizophrenic with serious thought disorder, such a condition was not spotted by the doctor who examined him for the railways position.

It is important to mention here that Garnet Muller, Tsafendas’s supervisor at this job, had given a statement to the police which was in the Commission’s possession. Muller had “observed Tsafendas to possess intelligence above that of the average person who is likely to ⁴²⁴¹ Demitrio Tsafendas medical certificate issued by Dr. Been for the Aliens Act, 1937. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

⁴²⁴² Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

⁴²⁴³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 26.

accept a position with the little responsibility which is attached to that of shed attendant.”⁴²⁴⁴
Once again, a positive statement about Tsafendas is omitted.

DR. KOSSEW'S EXAMINATION

*On 17th June he was examined by Dr. Kossew, the district surgeon, whose finding was that he was suffering from a serious form of schizophrenia.*⁴²⁴⁵

The Report goes into great detail about Tsafendas's other medical examinations, but here simply states that he was diagnosed as suffering from a serious form of schizophrenia. It offers no further information about Dr. Kossew's examination. Once again, the Commission has omitted significant information, most importantly why Tsafendas was examined by Dr. Kossew, a district surgeon, not a psychiatrist. On February 3, 1967, the same question was asked in the House of Assembly by MP J.O.N. Thompson. The Minister of Social Welfare and Pensions replied that “Tsafendas applied for a veteran's pension. As he was under sixty years old, evidence was required in terms of section 3 of the War Veterans' Pension Act, 1962, that he was unable, owing to infirmity of mind or body, to undertake regular work.” The Minister said that although Tsafendas was diagnosed as schizophrenic and therefore was eligible for the pension, his application was eventually rejected “on the grounds that he had not rendered war service as defined in the Act.”⁴²⁴⁶

This explanation as to why Tsafendas was examined by the district surgeon was important and should not have been omitted from the Report. Tsafendas had to be found unfit to do any work in order to qualify for the pension and that is how he was judged. However, as we have seen, whenever Tsafendas wanted to be found fit to work, he always proved to be so. On at least three occasions in the previous two years (Marine Diamond Corporation, City Tramways and South African Railways), he was examined by doctors and pronounced fit for the work he was seeking. He was also found to be perfectly healthy when examined by Dr. Been and Dr. A.C. McDonald for his residence permit.⁴²⁴⁷ This must have been spotted by the Commission and is most likely why the information about this examination was omitted.

⁴²⁴⁴ Garnet Vincent Muller statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴²⁴⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 69.

⁴²⁴⁶ House of Assembly, Question No. 17. 3 February 1967. K150, Vol. 12, File: Social Welfare and Pensions, NASA.

⁴²⁴⁷ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

It is possible that the Commission failed to make the connection between the examinations. However the fact that Tsafendas was found perfectly sane and capable of working when he wanted to be so found, but the exact opposite when he wished to be ruled incapable must have struck the Commission as strange, at the least.

The Commission also omits significant information about the actual examination, for example the fact that it lasted only “a little bit longer” than ten minutes, and that Dr. Kossew arrived at his diagnosis simply by accepting what Tsafendas told him.⁴²⁴⁸ It also fails to state that Dr. Kossew made the diagnosis of schizophrenia after Tsafendas told him that in the house where he lived people were being killed off by poisoned food, a remark the doctor took for an illusion. However that meant that Tsafendas at the time nurtured two delusions: that he had a tapeworm inside him and people were being murdered by food poisoning. As Professors Alban Burke and Tuviah Zabow and Mr. van Zyl told the author, professional opinion held that it was almost impossible for a person to have two delusions at the same time.⁴²⁴⁹ The weaknesses of this diagnosis must have been evident to anyone who had studied the case or followed the summary trial, yet the Commission failed to raise any questions and simply stated the bald facts in its Report.

The reliability of Dr. Kossew’s examination is considered in detail in the Summary Trial Chapter and will not be discussed again here. For more about that subject see the comments on Dr. Kossew’s testimony in the chapter mentioned above.

OTHER MEDICAL EXAMINATIONS OF TSAFENDAS INCLUDED IN THE REPORT

*On 16th March, 1965, he was employed by the South African Railways and Harbours as a shed attendant at R90 per month. He was examined medically and nothing was found to be wrong with him. In a written statement in connection with this examination he stated, inter alia, that he had never had any nervous or mental disease.*⁴²⁵⁰

On 12th November, 1965, he applied for a position as a bus conductor with City Tramways, Cape Town. Once again he was examined medically and nothing was found to be wrong with ⁴²⁴⁸ Dr. Ralph Kossew testimony at Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966: 88. K150, Vol. 10, File: Union of S.A. NASA.

⁴²⁴⁹ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016; Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

⁴²⁵⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 33.

him. He stated, inter alia, that he had never had a nervous breakdown.⁴²⁵¹

In February, 1966, he was treated at Groote Schuur Hospital for an obstruction in the nose and for nose bleeding. In April, he had a nose operation. He was in-hospital from 18th to 22nd April, 1966, and on 17th May, 1966, he was declared to be cured.⁴²⁵²

The next place where he sought employment was the Marine Diamond Corporation in Cape Town. On 13th January, 1966, he was examined by this company's medical officer and nothing was found to be wrong with him. Once again he declared that he had never had any mental or nervous disease.⁴²⁵³

Dr. S. Michelson, a specialist physician, examined Tsafendas in the Neurology Department of Groote Schuur Hospital on 3rd June, 1966. Tsafendas told him that he was unable to find any employment, and attributed this to his headaches and the fact that he was a "Jack of all trades." In addition to headaches, he complained of dizziness and a poor memory. The physician found that no serious, organic defect was perceptible in the nervous system, and considered the headaches to be "of migrainous nature."⁴²⁵⁴

The Commission has included in its Report some of Tsafendas's medical checks, especially those which took place in connection with his job applications. These examinations could not be ignored since everyone knew that a job-seeker needed to be medically examined and found fit in order to secure employment with those companies. If these examinations had not been mentioned, a major question would have arisen as to how Tsafendas, a schizophrenic, managed to get work and whether he was examined.

Furthermore, the above examinations give birth to the question: How did none of these doctors notice that Tsafendas could not function on a reasonable level, was unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes, suffered from thought-disorder and spoke in a disjointed manner, as evidence at the trial claimed? It is evident that Tsafendas was found physically and mentally healthy when he needed to be, as with his two medical examinations for permanent residence status. However, those mentioned above were not the only times Tsafendas was medically examined and found to be perfectly healthy.

MEDICAL EXAMINATIONS OF TSAFENDAS OMITTED FROM THE REPORT

⁴²⁵¹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 49.

⁴²⁵² Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 60.

⁴²⁵³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 53.

⁴²⁵⁴ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 64.

As we have seen, the Commission omitted from its Report the two examinations in connection with Tsafendas's application for permanent residence. It also failed to note the following six medical checks, taking the total of omissions to eight:

- Dr. Been, the doctor who examined him for his permanent residence applications later examined Tsafendas again “for burns on his body whilst employed at Pooles” in 1964. Nothing about his mental state was noted.⁴²⁵⁵
- On September 25, 1965, he was examined by Dr. G.C. Baker and nothing was reported about his mental state.⁴²⁵⁶
- On February 25, 1966, Tsafendas was examined at Groote Schuur Hospital by I. Eisenberg, a registrar on the Ear, Nose & Throat Department, who did not observe anything mentally wrong with him.⁴²⁵⁷
- On April 18, 19, 26 and May 3, 1966 Tsafendas was examined at Groote Schuur Hospital by Dr. Leon Goldman, a consultant ear, nose and throat surgeon. He did not observe anything mentally wrong with him and discharged him as “fit” on May 17, 1966.⁴²⁵⁸
- From April 19, 1966 to May 15, 1966, Tsafendas was under the medical supervision of Dr. Leon Solomon at Groote Schuur Hospital, suffering from “a deviated nasal septum and epistaxis,” and underwent surgery on his nose. Dr. Solomon during this period did not report any mental disability and found Tsafendas to be fit to return to his work at Marine Diamond Corporation. Dr. Solomon examined him again on June 7, 1966, and again did not notice anything mentally wrong with him.⁴²⁵⁹
- Finally, Dr. T.A. Darby examined Tsafendas on the evening of the assassination but did not report anything to be wrong about his mental state.⁴²⁶⁰

Tsafendas's Hospitalization in Beira

⁴²⁵⁵ Dr. Been statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴²⁵⁶ Dr. G.C. Baker Statement re: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. No date. K150, Vol. 6, File: 4, NASA.

⁴²⁵⁷ I. Eisenberg Statement. RE: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. N.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴²⁵⁸ I. Eisenberg Statement. RE: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. N.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴²⁵⁹ Dr. Leon Solomon's medical report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA; Medical certificate issued by Dr. Solomon for the Employment Insurance Act, 1946. 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA.

⁴²⁶⁰ Dr. T.A. Darby. Statement re: Demitrio Tsafendas. G.S.H. NO. 65/014-181, 6 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Another of Tsafendas's hospitalizations not mentioned in the Report or at the summary trial is that at the Government Hospital in Beira in 1964. The Commission was aware of this development since Tsafendas had mentioned it to the police in his statement of the 19th of September⁴²⁶¹ and Lt.-Colonel P.J.B. van Wyk also noted it in his report. Furthermore, Col. van Wyk had then taken the "necessary steps" and "formally applied" to obtain a copy of Tsafendas's medical report covering this hospitalization.⁴²⁶² It must have been a simple formality to obtain the document since the Portuguese authorities had provided all of Tsafendas's medical reports from Portugal, and by then it would have been in the possession of the South African police. However, the author cannot know for a fact whether Lt.-Col van Wyk eventually received the report as no other reference to it was found in the national archives.

This hospitalization was important since it was the last time Tsafendas was admitted for a mental condition before he was arrested. Given that the South African authorities contacted hospitals in the United States for Tsafendas's records during the 1940s and in Europe for details of those in the 1950s, it is natural they contacted Beira, too. It was his most recent hospitalization and it must have been the easiest to contact since it was in Mozambique. The Portuguese authorities had happily shared with the South African police Tsafendas's medical records from his time in Portugal. They would surely have seen no problem providing one from Mozambique.

However, no mention of the hospitalization is made in the Commission's report. A clue might be found in the circumstances surrounding this incident. When the Portuguese Public Security Police arrested Tsafendas he was accused of pretending to be a religious missionary, while in reality preaching "under the guise of religion in favour of Mozambique's independence."⁴²⁶³ While in custody, Tsafendas was asked by the police if he had "dedicated himself to preach as a missionary and, under the guise of this same religion, advertised in favour of Mozambique's independence."⁴²⁶⁴

Since he was apparently involved in a so-called missionary activity and because he carried Bibles and other religious literature as cover of his activities, Tsafendas came up with ⁴²⁶¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴²⁶² South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴²⁶³ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴²⁶⁴ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

an idea that neatly fitted the situation. He pretended to be Christ's apostle, Peter, and quoted the Christian scriptures at length. The trick worked and he was transferred to the Government Hospital in Beira for mental examination. Once again, he had managed to convince the Portuguese that he was mad but harmless, and he was soon released.⁴²⁶⁵

The author does not know for a fact whether the South African police received Tsafendas's medical file from the Government Hospital in Beira, but it seems highly unlikely that they managed to get his file from every one of his hospitals around the world but this one. Furthermore, Lt.-Col van Wyk had already applied for this report, therefore it must have been in the police's possession. A number of mostly bureaucratic reasons can be adduced as to why this particular hospitalization was omitted from the Commission's report. What looms over all, however, is the likelihood that the Commission suppressed the information, not wanting to reveal that, tapeworm apart, Tsafendas, two years before the assassination, while also in custody, also believed he was Saint Peter. If this was revealed, the question would have been, why was such an important issue never brought up at his summary trial?

At the same time, if this information had become known, another major issue would have been raised, certainly by the psychiatrists and psychologists who would have read the Commission's Report. This is how was it possible that for Tsafendas to believe he had a tapeworm for almost thirty years, then for this to be replaced by the conviction that he was Saint Peter, only for the Apostle to be ousted by his belief that boarders in the house where he was staying were being poisoned to death and finally for the tapeworm to return and take up residence. Professors Alban Burke and Tuviah Zabow and Mr. van Zyl told the author it was highly improbable, effectively impossible, for a person's delusions to come and go like this or to have multiple delusions at the time.⁴²⁶⁶ This issue is discussed in detail in the Summary Trial Chapter.

Evidence Regarding Tsafendas's Hospitalizations

The Report lists a series of hospitals where Tsafendas was reported to have been admitted. Some of the names are taken from Tsafendas's statements to the South African police and some from what Tsafendas told the doctors in Grafton State Hospital. No evidence has been ⁴²⁶⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Father Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴²⁶⁶ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016; Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 28 November 2016.

found in the archives or elsewhere substantiating that Tsafendas was indeed hospitalised as stated, except for his word. Naturally, Tsafendas had a very good reason to exaggerate his hospitalisations, but this does not mean that he was not hospitalised as he stated. What is surprising is that the Commission accepted his word, apparently without making any effort to double-check Tsafendas's statements.

CONCLUSION

The Commission included in its Report Tsafendas's medical examinations for various job applications, knowing such checks were standard practice by the companies concerned. Seven other examinations are omitted, including two conducted by two state doctors for Tsafendas's permanent residence application. On the other hand, the examination by another state doctor, Dr. Kossew, who found Tsafendas to be a schizophrenic, although he was not a psychiatrist and examined him for a little bit more than ten minutes, is included. Still, none of the ten doctors who examined Tsafendas during the previous two and a half years before the assassination saw any sign of Tsafendas's alleged problems as set out at his summary trial.

Of great importance is the revelation by the Commission that Tsafendas had faked mental illness while in the United States. This is something that no-one mentioned in the court, although it must have been known to the State as the relevant medical report was in the possession of the South African police a month before the trial started. However, another time Tsafendas faked mental illness, in Portugal in order not to serve in the Portuguese army, is omitted, though it is possible that this information was withheld by the police and not given to the Commission.

Although the Commission goes into detail with Tsafendas's overseas hospitalizations, the most recent one in Mozambique in late 1964 is omitted. What makes this strange is that this hospitalization was known to the Commission, and the South African police were almost certainly in possession of the Beira hospital's records concerning Tsafendas. Then, why has it been omitted? The author can only speculate, but the fact that Tsafendas had pretended to be Saint Peter while he was in the custody of PIDE before being taken to the hospital suggests that this was the reason for the omission. It would have sounded strange, especially to psychiatrists and psychologists, if it had become known that Tsafendas, apart from allegedly believing he had a tapeworm since 1935, two years before the assassination he also believed he was Saint Peter.

TSAFENDAS AND THE FEMALE SEX

One gains the impression that he was unacceptable to the female sex. Neither the Whites nor the non-Whites would have anything to do with him. In Durban he tried to become more closely acquainted with a woman who belonged to his church, but she would have nothing to do with him.

*During May, 1966, he met a non-White, Sybie Barendilla, at one of the church services. He wanted to visit her as well, but she was not agreeable.*⁴²⁶⁷

The Commission's "impression" of Tsafendas's relations with women is wrong and reads like an attempt to portray him as some kind of unsavoury outcast. The Report refers to only two contacts with females, an unnamed woman in Durban and Sybie Barendilla. The woman in Durban was Helen Struthers. She told the Commission that Tsafendas visited her at her house. She did not know him but she invited him in because, like her, he was a member of the Christian Church. Tsafendas stayed in the house for an hour. Struthers said, "He asked if he could see me again, apparently to promote a personal relationship, but I rejected his request and I also rejected to correspond with him." She never saw him again.⁴²⁶⁸

As for Sybie Barendilla, this is an extract from her statement:⁴²⁶⁹

"During about May, 1966, I again met him on a bus when I was returning to work after lunch. He remembered me, spoke to me and said he was on his way to Town to buy a pair of shoes. He enquired how my uncle was in America. I do not know how he came to know that I had an uncle in America and I did not ask him. The next day after this incident he walked past the shop where I was employed. He paused in the door, waved to me and walked on. The following day he came into the shop and bought a chocolate. I got the impression that he wanted to talk to me, but I cut him short and carried on with my work. On a public holiday, I think the 11th of July, 1966, he came to my house and enquired for me. My sister opened the door and spoke to him. He was insistent to see me, but my sister put him off. I heard the conversation and told my sister that I did not want to see him."⁴²⁷⁰

It is clear from Barendilla's and Struther's statements that Tsafendas made an ⁴²⁶⁷ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 41.

⁴²⁶⁸ Helen Struthers statement to the COE, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

⁴²⁶⁹ Her full statement is available at Chapter 6.

⁴²⁷⁰ Sybie Barendilla statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

approach to them and they were not interested. It should be recalled here that both women were members of the Christian Church and most of the Church's members who were questioned after the assassination sought to belittle and distance themselves from Tsafendas. It is very possible, though there is no evidence to prove it, that Barendilla and Struthers adopted such a stance. Even if Barendilla and Struthers were truly not interested in Tsafendas's advances, that does not make Tsafendas anathema to all women. There cannot be many men who have not been rejected at some time in their lives, which does not mean they are generally "unacceptable to the female sex."

Helen Daniels claimed that she was disappointed when meeting Tsafendas face to face and since he did not make any attempt to establish a relationship with her, it seems clear the disappointment was mutual. However, the fact that Tsafendas was recommended to Helen Daniels by fellow members of their Church is significant. She was a preacher and a highly respected member of the Church and it seems most unlikely that her co-religionists would suggest Tsafendas as a husband and urge her to meet him unless they held him in high esteem. The fact that she went to great lengths to communicate with Tsafendas suggests that what she had heard about him could only have been good.

Apart from the rejections above, there is no evidence that Tsafendas was the sort of person described by the Report as unacceptable to women. Indeed, the report from the Ochsenzoll Krankenhaus Hospital in Hamburg in 1955 says that Tsafendas, upon his discharge, was picked up by a female friend who planned to accommodate him.⁴²⁷¹ Although it is not stated who this friend was, it is unlikely a woman would meet a man out of hospital and give him accommodation unless they were in a relationship. The Commission makes no reference to this woman when it refers to this hospitalization in Chapter II B, Paragraph 26. Light has been shed on the situation by Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis who met Tsafendas at the time in Hamburg. He said the woman was a young German Communist who did have a relationship with Tsafendas.⁴²⁷² While the Commission was almost certainly unaware of this information, it knew of the Hamburg hospital report but still made no reference to the woman mentioned.

The Commission was also aware of the fact that Tsafendas had his first sexual encounter in 1936, since it is mentioned in the Grafton State Hospital report which was in the ⁴²⁷¹ Ochsenzoll Hospital report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1, Sub-file: 1/8. NASA.

⁴²⁷² Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

Commission's possession. However, there is no mention of it in the Report.⁴²⁷³ According to Tsafendas's family, Tsafendas had a relationship with a Mozambican girl named Stella, who he saw for more than a year in the mid-1930s. It is very likely she was the one with whom he had his first grown-up sexual experience.⁴²⁷⁴ It is unlikely that the Commission knew anything of Stella, but it certainly knew that a certain female in 1936 found Tsafendas acceptable for a serious sexual encounter and omitted it from the Report.

Although the author is not in position to know Tsafendas's score card, he certainly had at least six serious girlfriends in his life. They were also from a range of ethnic backgrounds. The woman from Mozambique, Stella, was Black; then there was a White Jewish woman around 1940 in South Africa;⁴²⁷⁵ a White Greek woman in Greece sometime in the late 1940s,⁴²⁷⁶ a Portuguese woman, probably White, in Portugal in the 1950s;⁴²⁷⁷ a White Communist woman in Germany, also in the 1950s;⁴²⁷⁸ and a Turkish Muslim woman in Istanbul in 1961. The Turkish woman wanted to marry Tsafendas, but neither was willing to convert to the other's religion, and anyway, Tsafendas wanted to go back to Africa.⁴²⁷⁹

Indeed, according to many who knew him, Tsafendas was far from unacceptable to the female sex. The following views were gathered by the author, and obviously were not known to the Commission. Fotini Gavasiadis, who saw Tsafendas virtually every day for nine months in 1963-4 when they were flatmates, and then neighbours, while they also worked together, told the author: "Dimitris was adorable. He was a very sweet and kind man. He did not have a girlfriend at the time, but that was due to the fact that he was not interested in any particular woman as far as I could tell, not because he was unacceptable. He was tall and well-built; he was quite impressive."⁴²⁸⁰

Alexandra Vaporidis knew Tsafendas for some seven months in Istanbul in 1961. She said Tsafendas was "not particularly handsome, but I would definitely not call him

⁴²⁷³ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

⁴²⁷⁴ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴²⁷⁵ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴²⁷⁶ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; van Woerden, A Mouthful of Glass, p. 139.

⁴²⁷⁷ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴²⁷⁸ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

⁴²⁷⁹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 4 November 2015; van Woerden, A Mouthful of Glass, p. 139.

⁴²⁸⁰ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

unacceptable to women. A lot of ladies in the church asked me about him. He then met a Turkish woman and they fell in love. I know some ladies were quite disappointed.”⁴²⁸¹ Father Nikola Banovic, who knew Tsafendas for seven months in Istanbul in 1961, sharing accommodation with him for four of those months, strongly rejected the claim that Tsafendas was “unacceptable to women.” He told the author:

“There were some ladies, mostly I must say, older ladies, who were interested in him, but he was not interested. I told Dimitris and he said ‘they are too old for me.’ This Turkish lady I told you about fell in love with him, although she was a Muslim and he was a Christian and a Greek! His relationship with her caused quite a stir in the Greek community in Istanbul.”⁴²⁸²

Ira Kyriakakis, Helen Grispos and Andreas Babiolakis knew Tsafendas from childhood. Kyriakakis said that her sister Alice was in love with Tsafendas when she was at school, but Tsafendas was then in a relationship with Stella. She described him when he was younger as a “tall, handsome man.” She said, “He put on some weight when he was older, but he was still handsome.”⁴²⁸³ Babiolakis said Tsafendas was very popular with girls while a teenager in Mozambique.⁴²⁸⁴

Helen Grispos told the author:

“[Tsafendas] was of a certain type, unique, that made him attractive to women. I used to like him when we were in Mozambique. He was not like the other teenagers of the time. He was very-well-read and seemed sophisticated and different, at least to me! He was not like Alain Delon, but he was not ugly either. He would not stand out in the crowd for his beauty, but he was certainly attractive to women, at least to some women, especially after you get to know him.”⁴²⁸⁵

Katerina Pnema, his half-sister, told the author how Tsafendas had courted a Jewish girl who was their sister’s best friend at the time:

“He wrote her several notes and my sister would deliver them. He was shy and wouldn’t let us know what he was writing, but the girl would later tell my sister! I can’t remember what he was saying, but I think it was just how beautiful she is and things like this!

⁴²⁸¹ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

⁴²⁸² Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁴²⁸³ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁴²⁸⁴ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

⁴²⁸⁵ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

He sent her many notes with my sister as the courier. Eventually, we all went out one day and she fell in love with him and started going out with him.”⁴²⁸⁶

Pnefma dismissed the Commission’s comment as quite wrong. However, she added that Tsafendas’s appearance changed markedly after he acquired his metal teeth:

“He did these teeth, and when he came up to my poor brother-in-law’s, and when we saw him, I tell you, he looked like a monster. All his mouth was stainless steel or whatever it is. One day I was listening to the wireless, and you know how funny things happen. A woman was talking and she said, after Tsafendas committed the crime, ‘Do you know, he came to the shop...’ he came to her takeaway. And she said, ‘When he came in and he smiled at me, I got such a fright.’ And he went apparently a couple of times, but I think she was afraid of him. The way she talked, she didn’t want him near her shop... All our children got such a fright when they first saw his teeth, but then they got used of him and they liked him very much.”⁴²⁸⁷

Irene Michaletos, who knew him very well for more than a year (1964-1965), when he often visited her house in Beira, also mentioned the issue with the teeth. She told the author:

“To tell you the truth, when I first saw him, I was a little scared of him. He had a frightening face. He was not ugly at all, he just had these metal teeth that were really scary. He was tall and big; he looked like this villain from the James Bond movie [Jaws in The Spy who Loved Me and Moonraker]. When I saw the movie many years later, he immediately reminded me of Dimitris. But when you got to know him you could see that he was a gentle giant, a very kind-hearted man.”⁴²⁸⁸

Tsafendas’s first cousin, Mary Eintracht, who grew up with him in Mozambique and Egypt, told the author that “Dimitris had some conquests, but also some rejections, like happens to most men. Women were not falling to their feet for him, but there were quite a few who were interested in him; I don’t think he have any particular difficulty finding a girlfriend.”⁴²⁸⁹

It is blindingly clear from the above statements that far from being unacceptable to women, Tsafendas had a number of acknowledged, serious relationship, and it is more than ⁴²⁸⁶ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴²⁸⁷ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴²⁸⁸ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁴²⁸⁹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

likely for a man who travelled far and wide, that there were others. While the Commission was unaware of most of the above information, it only had the evidence of three rejections on which to base its statement that Tsafendas was unacceptable to the female sex. The statement was a matter of opinion and wildly inaccurate. In addition, in the evidence held by the Commission, Daniels testified that Tsafendas was recommended highly to her by her friends, there was a reference in Grafton State Hospital report to Tsafendas having sex with a girl when he was a teenager, while the Ochsenzoll Krankenhaus Hospital report mentions a woman who picked him up from the hospital when he was released to take him to her house.

PART II: SPECIFIC INCIDENTS AND OTHER ISSUES

THE ELENI

One of the most important elements in the Commission's Report concerns the Eleni, a Greek tanker which arrived in Cape Town for repairs on the 24th of July 1966 and remained docked there until the 3rd of September 1966, leaving just three days before Dr. Verwoerd's assassination.⁴²⁹⁰ The Commission discusses the Eleni in Chapter II C, Paragraphs 77-87, in greater detail than anything else in its Report. Those eleven paragraphs pay particular attention to claims that Dr. Verwoerd's death had been rumoured at the ship days before it occurred, but they omit signals as to how this might have come about, as well as significant details relating to Tsafendas, his background and his activities.

In the course of his work as a commission agent for a men's clothes outfitter, Tsafendas visited the tanker on a daily basis, often taking his meals there, and quickly became friendly with the crew, most of whom were Greeks. He was comfortable talking to the men because, like him, they were not South Africans; more importantly, some were Communists, with whom he felt very much at home.

Tsafendas testified to the police in his two statements of the 11th and the 19th of September, that he visited the Eleni every day that she was docked in Cape Town. The crew's testimonies were therefore important in determining Tsafendas's movements in the days before the assassination. Furthermore, Tsafendas testified that he had bought a gun from two members of the crew and was planning to escape on board the Eleni. Of particular interest to the Commission were the Dr. Verwoerd death rumours. Reginald Robert Maile, a South African security guard on the Eleni, told the police that three days before the assassination he was asked by Maria Kokkinidou, a woman who often visited the Eleni, where her son worked on a temporary basis, "Is Dr. Verwoerd dead?" Edmund George Stollenkamp, the ship's night watchman, was also involved in these exchanges about Dr. Verwoerd being dead. Because of these rumours, the Eleni played a prominent role in the police investigation.

According to the Commission's Report, the crew of the Eleni were questioned by the South African police on 12th October 1966 in Venice, Italy, where the vessel was then docked. The Eleni had a crew of thirty-eight men, thirty-four of them Greek, and almost every one of them was questioned, but as already stated, only four of their statements were found in NASA. The four were the captain of the Eleni, Michael Fountotos, Nicolas Mavronas, Emanuil Mastromanolis and Constandinos Kokkinidis, the temporary hire. Of the four, only Mastromanolis had associated frequently with Tsafendas. A further note was found in the archives referring to Dimitris Zafiriadis, a crew member who had become close to Tsafendas. However, the document was not an official statement, since Zafiriadis had refused to give one, merely a note containing some remarks by him. What happened in this particular round of questioning in Venice, and what the crew told the author are examined in detail in the Investigation Chapter, and will not be discussed again here.

⁴²⁹⁰ Michael N. Fountotos statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol 3, File Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

“IS DR. VERWOERD DEAD?”

Eight paragraphs in the Report, 80-87, deal with Dr. Verwoerd’s death being discussed at the tanker three days before the actual assassination. The Commission asked Major Rossouw:

COMMISSION: Another thing is that there is a lot of evidence that on the Friday morning BEFORE the murder people had been running back and forth screaming to one another that Dr. Verwoerd had been murdered – are you aware of this?

MAJOR ROSSOUW: Yes I am aware of that ...⁴²⁹¹

Although the Commission referred to “a lot of evidence,” its Report contains very little of this evidence and fails to explain what happened. This is the description according to the Commission’s Report:

80. Another visitor to the Eleni was a Mrs. Kokkinidou, a widow. Both she and the Captain originally came from Kilimnos, Greece. She was accompanied by Mr. Nicolai Christodoulos, a bachelor who lodges with her. Her son Constantinos Kokkinidou had started work on the Eleni in August, 1966.

On the morning of 3rd September, 1966, the ship had to be moved, and for this reason the gangplank was drawn up. The night watch, Stollenkamp, stood on deck because he was unable to get off the ship, and the morning watch, Maile, stood on the quay. The latter had a copy of the Cape Times with him. Near Mr. Stollenkamp stood Constantinos Kokkinidou. On the quay Mrs. Kokkinidou and Mr. Cristodoulos stood a short distance from Mr. Maile. As there are some discrepancies in the versions of what exactly happened then, the account of each of these five persons is given. Four gave oral evidence and a statement was received from Constantinos Kokkinidou.

⁴²⁹¹ Major Daniel Jacobus Rossouw testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

81. Mr. Maile said that Mrs. Kokkinidou asked him: “Is Dr. Verwoerd dead?” He says that he then called spontaneously to Stollenkamp and asked whether Dr. Verwoerd was dead.

82. Mrs. Kokkinidou says that her son shouted to her from the deck and asked whether she had heard the news that Dr. Verwoerd was dead. When she asked him who had said so, he pointed to Stollenkamp and said that the man with the newspaper—Maile—had said so. She says that she then asked the man with the newspaper whether Dr. Verwoerd was dead, and he explained that Stollenkamp had misunderstood him.

83. Mr. Christodoulos confirmed Mrs. Kokkinidou’s evidence.

84. Constantinos Kokkinidou stated that the night watch said to them “Do you know what? Dr. Verwoerd has been killed.” When he asked him who had said so, he (the night watch) pointed to the morning watch. He then told his mother, Mrs. Kokkinidou, that Dr. Verwoerd had been killed. His mother was upset, and he asked the night watch how Dr. Verwoerd had been killed. The night watch in turn asked the morning watch, and when the latter had replied, the night watch told Constantinos that he (the night watch) had misunderstood the morning watch. He then conveyed this to his mother. Mrs. Kokkinidou understands a little English and apparently no Afrikaans. The two watchmen had spoken Afrikaans to each other, while the Kokkinidous had spoken in Greek!

85. Stollenkamp says that Maile told him that Dr. Verwoerd was dead. He gave him to understand that it was in the newspaper. He then asked the young man standing next to him (it must have been Constantinos) whether he had heard that Dr. Verwoerd was dead. The young man then spoke to his mother, and then Maile told her that Dr. Verwoerd was not dead.

86. It is impossible to establish with any certainty exactly what was said. However, there is no doubt that Dr. Verwoerd’s death was mentioned on that morning three days before his death. What makes these incidents more than a coincidence is the fact that this was said at the ship which was visited daily for almost 40 days by the man who killed Dr. Verwoerd, where he bought a pistol and tried to buy a knife which he wanted to use —according to at least one statement made by him subsequently—to kill Dr. Verwoerd.

The fact that Dr. Verwoerd’s death was mentioned at that ship was probably more than pure coincidence.

87. The Commission must emphasize, however, that none of the five persons who took part in the conversation that took place that morning is suspected of any complicity. As has already been stated, the Commission had the opportunity of questioning four of them in person. The police report on Mrs. Kokkinidou and Mr. Christodoulou is favourable. What could have happened is that the discontented crew of the Eleni might, on the numerous occasions when they condemned the State's colour policy, have wished for Dr. Verwoerd's end. Something of this kind could have had a profound effect on the feelings of resentment Tsafendas already had. It might also have been that Tsafendas had on some occasion or other intimated that it was his intention to murder Dr. Verwoerd, and that for obvious reasons those who heard this do not now wish to make any admission in this regard.

The Commission fails to shed any light on these apparently confused exchanges and the conclusions in its Report are entirely speculative. It does not clarify how the rumour started, it simply guesses that the disgruntled Eleni crew wished Dr. Verwoerd dead and that Tsafendas was somehow sparked into action as a result. Crucially, while the witnesses' version of events is represented perfectly accurately, what is missing is what was said by the seamen, who are not named in the Report.

The Commission states that the mention of Dr. Verwoerd's death was "probably more than pure coincidence," but its whole treatment of the case is superficial to say the least. If it was more than a coincidence, this suggests that there were people prior to the assassination who were expecting it. However it appears that the Commission failed to investigate this important matter any further. The most astonishing thing is that the South African police were well aware of what happened and what was said on the Eleni, but none of this is mentioned in the Report.

A further puzzling point about the Commission's handling of the issue is that Tsafendas's opinion about how Dr. Verwoerd's death was discussed is not mentioned. Although it seems that he is asked to explain about the gun, no reference is made to what he said, if he said anything, to the Commission about such an important issue. It seems that the Commission, which interviewed him twice, either did not ask him to explain or simply suppressed his answer. It seems inconceivable that the Commission would not ask Tsafendas such an important question, especially since he was the person most likely to have an explanation of what happened. If Tsafendas was asked, his most likely reaction would have been to tell the truth, as he had done with the police regarding his motive for and planning of the assassination. This was that he had characterised a hypothetical assassination of Dr.

Verwoerd as morally justifiable because he was a dictator who was oppressing his people. Thus, the Commission would have had a good reason to hide his answers. However, we are not in position to know for certain whether the Commission asked Tsafendas such a question, It simply seems surprising that his side of the story is not heard, although he gave evidence twice to Judge van Wyk.

One of the four statements by the Eleni crew which were found in the National Archives of South Africa was that of Constandinos Kokkinidis⁴²⁹² (his correct name, not Kokkindou as in the Report). The Report gives the impression that no-one else from the crew was asked about the incident. However, nine of the twelve seamen who were interviewed by the author and were questioned by the police in Venice, clearly remember being asked whether Tsafendas had mentioned anything about killing Dr. Verwoerd. Five of them, Alachiotis, Billis, Kambouris, Kantas and Vasilakis, stated to the author that they had told the police that Tsafendas had spoken of a hypothetical assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. He had characterised such an act as morally justifiable because Dr. Verwoerd was a dictator and a tyrant.⁴²⁹³

However, Tsafendas never said that he intended to kill the Prime Minister himself. A sixth seaman, Grigoris Pouftis, was present at this conversation, but he is unsure whether he told the police about it.⁴²⁹⁴ Mastromanolis, whose statement was one of the four found in the archives, was asked about it, but there is no mention of his answer in the statement. However, he had no knowledge of the conversation at the dockside and had told the police so, which is probably why there is no mention of it in his statement.⁴²⁹⁵

The six seamen mentioned above freely explained to the police the circumstances of the conversation about a hypothetical assassination, at which they were all present. They said Tsafendas had spent the evening before the Eleni weighed anchor on board the vessel as he often did with some of his friends in the crew, among them Billis, Kantas, Alachiotis, Kambouris, Vasilakis, Pouftis, Xexenis and Zafiriadis. Xexenis asked Tsafendas if, during his wanderings in Africa, he had met Ioannis (Jean) Karageorgis, a Greek man who, on October 13, 1961, assassinated Prince Rwagasore, the first elected President of independent Burundi. Xexenis was from the same village as Karageorgis, but he had never met him. The other crew members were unaware of this event, so Tsafendas and the seaman told them what had ⁴²⁹² His statement is available in Chapter 5.

⁴²⁹³ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁴²⁹⁴ Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009.

⁴²⁹⁵ Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016.

happened. Tsafendas fiercely condemned the assassination, stating that Karageorgis was hired by the Belgian colonialists and was rightly executed because Rwagasore had been popularly elected.⁴²⁹⁶

A discussion about assassination ensued and the conversation extended to assassinations such as John F. Kennedy's in 1963 and that of King George I of Greece in 1913. Tsafendas argued that if Karageorgis had assassinated Dr. Verwoerd, it would have been justifiable, a tyrannicide, because South Africa's Prime Minister was a tyrant and a dictator who was oppressing his people. This, he said, did not apply to Prince Rwagasore, who was democratically elected.⁴²⁹⁷

Some thirty years after the assassination, Tsafendas repeated to Fathers Ioannis Tsaftaridis, Minas Constandinou and Spiros Randos his belief that assassinating Dr. Verwoerd was justified because he was a tyrant and a dictator.⁴²⁹⁸ This was exactly what he told the seamen three days before the assassination. Tsafendas had also characterised Dr. Verwoerd as a tyrant, dictator and "Hitler's best student" to some of the sailors and to several other witnesses prior to the assassination. All of this confirms the sailors' testimony that they heard Tsafendas using such words.

Billis, Kantas, Alachiotis, Kambouris and Vasilakis are positive that they told the police about this conversation. Pouftis, although present at the conversation, cannot remember whether he told the police about it, but he assumes that he did.⁴²⁹⁹ Mastromanolis, Tsabouniaris, Speis and Perselis all remember being asked whether Tsafendas said anything about killing Dr. Verwoerd and replied 'no' since they were not aware of the conversation.⁴³⁰⁰ The question posed by the police was a perfectly natural one since they knew Dr. Verwoerd's death was discussed on board the tanker. However, there is no mention ⁴²⁹⁶ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴²⁹⁷ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴²⁹⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Father Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴²⁹⁹ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴³⁰⁰ Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Emanuil Tsabouniaris in personal interview with the author, 14 June 2016.

in the Report of Tsafendas's discussion of various assassinations nor that he had characterised a possible assassination of Tsafendas as tyrannicide and morally justifiable.

The author cannot know for certain how the dockside exchanges as described in the Report started. The crewmen suggested to the author that Kokkinidis may have been at the table when the assassination discussion took place, or more likely nearby, since he did not fraternise with Tsafendas nor with the men there at the time. It is possible that Kokkinidis overheard snippets of the discussion and misunderstood them, passing them on a few hours later at the dockside. The men who spoke to the author all believe this is the likeliest explanation.

All of the thirteen sailors interviewed by the author and met Tsafendas in Cape Town stated emphatically that he never indicated that he intended to kill Dr. Verwoerd and that none of the men ever "wished for Dr. Verwoerd's end," as the Report proposed. These facts render the Commission's conclusion entirely wrong. Those who participated in the discussion about "justifiable assassinations" maintain that this was the only time that a conversation close to that described in the Report took place, indeed the only time that Dr. Verwoerd's "death" was discussed. What adds strength to the argument that the assassination discussion started the rumours is that it took place a few hours before the dockside exchanges involving Kokkinidis and his mother, her lodger and the security guards. Although there cannot be 100 per cent certainty that the "death" rumours started in the way suggested above, it is a much more plausible hypothesis than that suggested by the Commission, involving crewmen's discontent somehow pervading Tsafendas's psyche.

Nevertheless, the main issue here is not how the rumours began but the fact that at least five witnesses testified to the police that Tsafendas had characterised a hypothetical assassination of Dr. Verwoerd as justifiable and as tyrannicide, just three days before the actual assassination, and of this the Report makes no mention at all. The Commission was right that it was more than a coincidence that Dr. Verwoerd's death was discussed before he died. There could be no other explanation. However, the Commission failed to report accurately on the incident and how it occurred and instead attempted superficially to reconstruct the events and present a feasible scenario while admitting that it was "impossible to establish with any certainty exactly what was said." This should not have been the case as the police had all the evidence about what happened and what was said on the Eleni.

The author is not in position to know whether Judge van Wyk suppressed the seamen's evidence about the "justifiable assassination" discussion or whether the police withheld that information from the Commission. The fact is that this crucial development is missing from the Report. It would have contradicted what was heard at the summary trial and presented an entirely different picture of Tsafendas and his motive.

THE PURCHASE OF THE GUN

One Nicholas Mavros, a galley boy on the Eleni, alleges in a statement made on 12th October, 1966, in Venice on or about 26th or 27th August, 1966, that Tsafendas told some of the crew on board the Eleni that he wished to buy a pistol or knife, that he could obtain a position at a hotel at £2,000 and that he needed such a weapon for his protection. They regarded him as "foolish" and decided to play a trick on him by selling him a small pistol which they looked upon as a toy.

Subsequently they did sell it to him for 30 dollars. Of this, Mavros received 20 dollars and one Emanuel Mastromanolus⁴³⁰¹, the boatswain, ten. The latter confirmed this statement. This transaction must have taken place on or after 1st September, 1966, since, according to a statement made by a bank, Tsafendas bought 80 dollars on that date. On 3rd September, the day on which the Eleni sailed, Tsafendas came to claim his money back because the pistol was not in working order. (It was in fact a gas pistol.) They refused, however, to pay anything back. Tsafendas complained that he was a poor man and that he had had to work a whole week for the 30 dollars.

Michael N. Fontatis, the Captain of the Eleni, says in a statement that Tsafendas came to him on 3rd September, 1966, to complain about this, but that he refused to have anything to do with the matter. He considered Tsafendas (childish, mentioning as an example Tsafendas's offer to find an engineer to repair the ship—a job which cost £30,000.⁴³⁰²

The first point to make is that the name of the person who sold the gun to Tsafendas was Mavronas, not Mavros; the Commission misspelled it. It was Mavronas who stated to the police that "we regarded him as foolish and decided to joke with him." That was his statement alone, not an opinion shared by other crew members. According to thirteen sailors who were interviewed by the author and who knew Tsafendas well, no-one considered him to be foolish; on the contrary, all spoke highly of him. Their statements can be found in the ⁴³⁰¹ The correct spelling is Mastromanolis.

⁴³⁰² Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 78.

Eleni section in the Investigation Chapter.

Vasilis Perselis, the steward on the Eleni and a good friend of Mavronas, stated to the author that Tsafendas told them he was working at a hotel and needed a firearm for protection and to “scare people off” because he was living in a rough area. Michalis Vasilakis, a stoker, confirmed Perselis’s statement. Nikolas Kambouris and Emanuil Mastromanolis stated to the study that they do not remember Tsafendas saying anything about a hotel, but they remember him saying he needed a gun to “scare people off” because he was living in a rough area; he never said he was looking for a real one.⁴³⁰³

In interviews with the author, seven seamen, Nikolaos Billis, Georgios Kantas, Ilias Kokkinos, Vasilakis, Kambouris, Mastromanolis and Perselis, declared that Mavronas’s claim that they “decided to joke” with Tsafendas was untrue. In fact, initially they all thought that Mavronas’s weapon was real, since this is what he told them. They said Mavronas, who was only seventeen years old at the time, was showing off his gun unaware himself that it was just a gas pistol. Many of the crew were also fooled, as the pistol looked real.⁴³⁰⁴ Kambouris was the first to discover that the gun was not authentic. He believed Mavronas was fooled by the person who sold the gun to him.⁴³⁰⁵ Mastromanolis claimed that he only realised the weapon was fake when he suggested that Mavronas should sell it to Tsafendas for a quick profit. Mavronas then admitted that the gun was not real, after he had been told by Kambouris, but he still offered to sell it to Tsafendas on grounds that it would be “good enough to scare people off.”⁴³⁰⁶

The rest of the Report’s account is accurate: Tsafendas went back to the ship and asked Mavronas and Mastromanolis for his money back, but they said that they had charged him only thirty dollars instead of the original eighty because the pistol was just a gas gun.

CREW’S “DISSATISFACTION” WITH THE COLOUR POLICY

Reginald Robert Maile was a morning watch on the Eleni while it was in Cape Town harbour. He says the crew were most dissatisfied about the colour policy of the Government.

⁴³⁰³ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁴³⁰⁴ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁴³⁰⁵ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014.

⁴³⁰⁶ Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016.

*They wanted to bring Coloured women on board, but were not allowed to do so.*⁴³⁰⁷

Thirteen men who were with the Eleni in Cape Town all deny that any of the crew were dissatisfied because they were not allowed to bring Coloured women on board. They dismiss Maile's claim out of hand, describing it as ridiculous and stating that whoever wished to have sex with Black women simply went ashore and did so; no-one was the least bothered about the Act, it was simply ignored. After all, the men had easy access to White women in Cape Town and being seamen and travellers, they did not view sex with Black women as a unique or an especially sought-after experience.⁴³⁰⁸

None of the sailors remembers discussing the issue with Maile, but they accept that they might have said something about the Act because Maile was constantly warning them that sex with Coloured women was illegal. Tsafendas had given them the same caution but two of the men, Vasilakis and Kambouris, said that Maile reminded them whenever they went ashore to "stay away from non-White women," indeed from Black people. The men did not trust Maile because he was South African and it is possible that they complained about the Act to cover up the fact that they were having sex with Black women anyway.⁴³⁰⁹

The crew were not "dissatisfied" about apartheid, they were angry, and this was not due to the proscription against Coloured women, but to their discovery of how Blacks were treated. According to the seamen, Tsafendas had asked them spend as little money as possible in South Africa in order not to contribute to the apartheid economy and to show them what apartheid was really like, he took a group to a township in Cape Town. The sailors were shocked at the conditions they witnessed. It was then that some of the crew made the comment mentioned by Tsafendas in his statement to the police, that the South Africans "should be taught a lesson," and which prompted Mastromanolis to state repeatedly that they "need a good whipping."⁴³¹⁰

⁴³⁰⁷ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 79.

⁴³⁰⁸ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Panteleimon Aspiotis in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; D. Lallis in a personal interview, 19 June 2015; E. Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; V. Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; I. Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; D. Stavrianos in a personal interview, 18 January 2015; E. Tsabouniaris in personal interview with the author, 14 June 2016; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁴³⁰⁹ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁴³¹⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

OMISSIONS REGARDING THE ELENI FROM THE REPORT

Tsafendas's talk about justifiable assassination is not the only incident involving the seamen that is omitted.

Tsafendas's being a Communist and his participation in the Greek Civil War

That Tsafendas was a Communist was stated to the South African police by at least six men - Alachiotis, Billis, Kambouris, Kantas, Pouftis and Vasilakis. Some of the crew often joined him in singing Greek Communist songs on board, but they did not mention this to the police, as they did not want to reveal themselves as Communists too.⁴³¹¹ The most important thing the six men told the police was that Tsafendas had participated in the Greek Civil War on the side of the Democratic Army of Greece, the military wing of the Greek Communist Party.⁴³¹² As we have seen in the Investigation Chapter, Mavronas also testified to this, but he was probably misunderstood by the policeman who questioned him. However, there is no mention in the Report of Tsafendas joining in the war. Tsafendas's role in the Greek Civil War is examined in detail in the "political activities and ideology" section of this Chapter and in his Biography.

The Visit to a Township in Cape Town

This important event goes unmentioned in the Commission's Report. The visit was disclosed to the police in Venice by at least five men –Alachiotis, Billis, Kambouris, Kantas and Vasilakis.⁴³¹³ Two more, Mastromanolis and Pouftis, do not remember if they told the police about it, but believe they probably did.⁴³¹⁴ Ilias Aspras was not interviewed by the author, but he was among those who visited the township and the men believe that he must have also ⁴³¹¹ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴³¹² Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴³¹³ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴³¹⁴ Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009.

testified to that effect. Dimitris Zafiriadis was in Tsafendas's party, but he refused to give the police any statement.⁴³¹⁵

The seamen spoke about their onshore visit because they believed the police would have found out about it anyway. What they concealed was Tsafendas's purpose – to show them the living conditions of Black South Africans, and the fact that he urged them to not spend their money in South Africa because of apartheid. They told the police they behaved simply as tourists. There is no hint in the seamen's statements that Tsafendas organised the visit for political reasons, but even as it was, the visit did not see the light of day in the Commission's Report.

Spitting Gesture

On one occasion, Michalis Vasilakis brought a local newspaper on board which had Dr. Verwoerd's photograph on one page. When Vasilakis pointed to the picture, Tsafendas directed a spitting gesture at the floor, a classical Greek demonstration of contempt. Vasilakis, Alachiotis, Billis, Kambouris and Pouftis all said they told the police about this incident. Kantas and Perselis remember the incident but are not sure if they told the police.⁴³¹⁶ However, no mention of this small, but significant demonstration of Tsafendas's opinions is made in the Report. Some thirty years later, when Tsafendas was in hospital, Father Minas Constandinou showed him a newspaper photograph of Dr. Verwoerd, and Tsafendas repeated the spitting gesture.⁴³¹⁷

Tsafendas and the Portuguese Army

As we have seen, a politically significant event in Tsafendas's life, which was given to the police by the crew, was Tsafendas saying he had "played the fool" in order to avoid service in the Portuguese Army. At least six men testified to this: Alachiotis, Billis, Kambouris, Kantas, Pouftis and Vasilakis, while it is very likely Perselis and Aspras did so, too.⁴³¹⁸ This was very ⁴³¹⁵ Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴³¹⁶ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; V. Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴³¹⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴³¹⁸ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal important information since the Commission was aware that Tsafendas had also faked mental illness while in the USA. Knowing he had done it for a second time would have certainly raised eyebrows about whether Tsafendas was faking mental illness again, for a third time. However, the account of his act was suppressed.

Tsafendas's Plan of Escape

Tsafendas told the police that his initial plan was to hide in the Eleni after shooting Dr. Verwoerd, then sail away in the tanker the next day. That is why initially he planned to carry out the assassination on the evening of September 2, only a few hours before the Eleni's scheduled departure.⁴³¹⁹ This was highly significant information because it demonstrated that the assassination was carefully planned and not an impulsive act. Not only did the Commission ignore the escape plan, it omitted the reasons that Tsafendas went then ahead with the assassination, knowing that he had no chance of escape. This issue is discussed in the "assassination" section of this chapter.

TSAFENDAS AS DESCRIBED BY THE CREW AND OTHERS ASSOCIATED WITH THE ELENI

Although Tsafendas visited the Eleni every day for forty-two days up to three days before the assassination, none of the seamen's opinions or those of others connected to the Eleni are mentioned in the Report. The Commission included comments about Tsafendas's character by people who scarcely knew him, such as James Johnston who had spent a total of twenty minutes talking to him, but omitted the words of many who knew him far longer. Of particular value must have been the views of crewmen who chatted with Tsafendas shortly before the assassination, yet they are not included. The following are comments made to the police by non-crew members who knew Tsafendas at the Eleni:

- Neville Judson worked with Tsafendas for Mike's Outfitters for forty-two days in July and August 1966, frequently driving him to the Eleni. He told the police that he "never in no way got the impression that he (Tsafendas) could be mentally deranged. He appeared interview, 11 January 2012; V. Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴³¹⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

to be a normal man with normal reasoning powers” and “a very friendly way of talking.”⁴³²⁰ His comments were omitted from the Report.

- Reginald Robert Maile, a security guard on the Eleni, who testified about the “Is Dr. Verwoerd dead?” issue, also told the police that he saw Tsafendas every day for forty-two days and he “never got the impression that he could be mentally defective. He was sober, polite and perfectly normal” and “on very friendly relations with the crew.”⁴³²¹ His comments were omitted from the Report.
- Peter Protoulis was a supplier of foodstuffs to the Eleni. He claims that he testified to the police and to the Commission, but only his statement to the police was found. However, his name was found in the schedule list for interviews of the Commission and he was listed to give evidence on October 12. Protoulis told the author that he never heard Tsafendas say anything to suggest he was less than sane. He is certain that he was sane. Furthermore, he was “very impressed by the way he was dressed. He always wore a suit and very often a tie and a hat. I never show him wearing the same clothes two days in a row.”⁴³²²

Below are extracts from the statements of the eleven seamen who told the author that they were questioned in Venice and whose statements were not found in the archives. This is how they remember Tsafendas and is approximately what they believe they told the police. Their full interviews with the author are available in the Investigation Chapter.

Cleanthes Alachiotis remembers telling the police the “truth and everything that had happened,” apart from singing Communist songs and the fact that Tsafendas had asked them to spend as little money as possible in South Africa. He did mention the visit to the township. When asked if Tsafendas had said anything about the Prime Minister, Alachiotis replied that Tsafendas “did not like him much and called him ‘Hitler’s best student.’”⁴³²³ Alachiotis was ready to mention the “Hitler” remark because he believed, as they all did, that the police must have known about it since Tsafendas used the expression so often and so widely.

Alachiotis clearly remembers being asked if Tsafendas had said anything about killing Dr. Verwoerd. He assumed that the policeman was referring to the conversation on the Eleni’s last night in Cape Town when Tsafendas argued that it would be justifiable to kill Dr. Verwoerd because he was a tyrant, while the murder of Prince Rwagasore was to be ⁴³²⁰ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

⁴³²¹ Reginald Robert Maile statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

⁴³²² Peter Protoulis in a personal interview, 3 August 2016.

condemned because he was a democratically elected President. Therefore, Alachiotis told the whole story to the policeman, who showed great interest in it. Asked for his opinion about Tsafendas, Alachiotis could not remember exactly what he told the police, but believes that he must have told them he was a “harmless man, good-hearted, a quiet man ... very polite and well-mannered ... he seemed 100 per cent normal” as this is the way he remembered him. He also told the police that Tsafendas had told the crew that “he had played the fool with the Portuguese army in order not to serve his military duty... that he had joined the Communist army in the Civil War.”⁴³²³

Panteleimon Aspiotis does not remember the details of what he told the police, but presumes he told them most of what he remembered about Tsafendas. What he did not mention was fishing for lobster because Tsafendas had told them “not to tell anyone because it was illegal.” He remembers the issue about the gun, but he had nothing to do with it. Aspiotis maintains that Tsafendas “was perfectly fine” and this is what he told the police when asked about his character, that, “He was like any other person. He was definitely not insane. Him? Insane? No, definitely not! I wasn’t expecting such a question because the man was not mad.”⁴³²⁴

Nikolaos Billis remembers “everything ... I told them everything I knew. I was terrified. This was a serious case. You couldn’t mess around with it.” He mentioned Tsafendas’s mad act to avoid service in the Portuguese army and explained to the policeman that it was “common in Greece.” He also told the police that Tsafendas was a Communist and against apartheid, though he does not remember the details of what he said. He said Tsafendas frequently talked about politics, but he did not understand him since he had no knowledge or interest in the subject.

Billis also mentioned the trip to the township and claimed they had gone there for touristic reasons, to see where the Black people lived. He also remembers being asked if they discussed politics with Tsafendas and what his impression of him was. He does not remember being asked whether Tsafendas had served in any army, but he definitely told them about his mad act with the Portuguese. He also told the police that Tsafendas had told them that he had fought in the Greek Civil War with the Communists. Billis also told the police about their discussion regarding justifiable assassinations after he was asked whether Tsafendas had ⁴³²³ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010.

⁴³²⁴ Panteleimon Aspiotis in a personal interview, 6 June 2015.

mentioned anything about killing Dr. Verwoerd.⁴³²⁵

Nikolas Kambouris remembers that “the only thing I did not say was that we sang Communist songs ... I told them that he spat towards the Prime Minister’s picture ... yes, I certainly mentioned the ‘Hitler’s best student’ comment - this is something almost every one of the crew had heard.” Kambouris was asked to explain what Tsafendas meant with the remark about Hitler and Dr. Verwoerd but did not know what to say. He eventually said perhaps Tsafendas meant that Dr. Verwoerd had studied in Germany and Hitler was his tutor, avoiding any further supposition.

When the policeman asked if Tsafendas had said anything about killing the Prime Minister, Kambouris assumed, like the rest of the crew, that he was referring to Tsafendas’s claim that killing Dr. Verwoerd would be tyrannicide. Kambouris had to explain in detail to the policeman what tyrannicide was and Tsafendas’s theories about it. “I had to explain the whole thing and how it was in ancient Greece ... the policeman was very interested in this. I told him though that Tsafendas did not say he was going to kill the Prime Minister; just that it would have been justifiable if someone does.”

Kambouris also said about Tsafendas, “he did not look mad to me and certainly did not act like a madman. He never said or did anything to make me think he was a madman, he seemed perfectly fine.” He believes that he must also have told the police that Tsafendas had expressed his wish to go and live in Cuba. He described how Tsafendas told them he had fought in the Greek Civil War with the Communists. What he did not mention was Tsafendas urging them to avoid spending money in South Africa, that Tsafendas had given him a book, ‘Ten Days That Shook the World,’⁴³²⁶ which was banned in South Africa, that they fished for lobster and sang Communist songs.⁴³²⁷

George Kantas remembers “Tsafendas calling White South Africans Nazis. I told him everything I knew. We all told them everything, everything. We couldn’t take a chance and hide something. We did not tell them we were singing Communist songs together because it was only five or six of us and no-one else knew about it... I did not tell him that Tsafendas asked us to boycott South Africa and not spend any money there. Was I crazy to say it?”

⁴³²⁵ Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011.

⁴³²⁶ John Reed’s book ‘Ten Days that Shook the World,’ published in 1919, is a first-hand account of the 1917 October Revolution in Russia.

⁴³²⁷ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014.

Kantas does not remember what exactly he said about Tsafendas's personality, but he remembers him as a "very well-read and well-mannered man who knew a lot about politics and history," and he presumes this is what he told the police. When the policeman asked Kantas if he thought Tsafendas was "normal," he replied, "Yes, perfectly normal." He remembers going to the township and assumes he told the police but he cannot be certain. He remembers Tsafendas saying he wanted to live in "socialist Cuba," but he doesn't remember if he mentioned this to the police. He is certain that he mentioned Tsafendas's mad act to dodge the Portuguese Army, and that he had joined the DSE during the Greek Civil War.

Like everyone else, Kantas was asked if Tsafendas had said anything about killing the Prime Minister. He is sure he said that Tsafendas called Dr. Verwoerd "Hitler's best student," and that he believed it would be justifiable for someone to kill him because he was a tyrant. He does not remember telling the policeman about the spitting incident, which he had forgotten until it was mentioned to him by the author, but he presumes that he did.⁴³²⁸

Vasilis Perselis remembers the interview very well, "I was asked about the gun and told them he asked me for a pistol for self-protection because he lived in a rough area, so I referred him to Manolis [Mastromanolis] and to Nikolakis [Mavronas]. I had nothing else to do with the gun issue after that."

Perselis says he was asked if he thought "there was something wrong with him [Tsafendas]." He does not recall his exact answer, but he remembers Tsafendas as being "a very clever man, not mad at all, one hundred per cent normal." He remembers Tsafendas telling him that he had got a job which was not paying him well and he had to wear a uniform. Perselis thought that it was in a hotel, not in the Parliament. Tsafendas had told him that he wanted to save money to go and live the rest of his life in Cuba, though he does not remember if he told the police this. He remembers Tsafendas being a Communist and considered him to be well-informed about Greek and world politics and history.⁴³²⁹

Grigoris Pouftis is certain that he told the policeman about his mad act with the Portuguese Army and that Tsafendas served in the DSE during the Greek Civil War. Pouftis also told the policeman that Tsafendas was a Communist who despised the South African Prime Minister and mentioned both the spitting gesture and the remark that Dr. Verwoerd was 'Hitler's best student.' What he did not reveal for sure was that they had sung Communist songs together.

⁴³²⁸ Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012.

⁴³²⁹ Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015.

Pouftis remembers being asked if Tsafendas said anything about killing the Prime Minister. “I told him ‘God no; he never said anything like this.’” As for the “justifiable killing” conversation, he remembers it vaguely but cannot remember whether or not he told the policeman. Also, he remembers going to the township, but doesn’t remember if he told the police. Pouftis does not remember being asked about Tsafendas’s mental state, but his own memory is of “an ordinary man, soft-spoken, knowledgeable and passionate about politics.” He remembers Tsafendas telling him he wanted to go and live in Cuba, but he doesn’t remember if he said that to the police.⁴³³⁰

Ioannis Speis did not associate much with Tsafendas but he spoke to him from time to time and saw him every day on the Eleni. He does not remember everything he was asked but he recalls being questioned about Tsafendas’s character and asked his opinion of him. He believes that he told the police approximately the following: “I never noticed anything wrong with him; he was very talkative and friendly.” Speis considered Tsafendas to be “a proper gentleman.” He was familiar with hawkers selling their wares on ships but thought Tsafendas “did not look like other hawkers.” He saw him as “a proud, intelligent man with lots of dignity. He never asked for anything from the crew and was always prompt with our financial dealings.” Speis knew that Tsafendas had taken some of his crewmates to a township, but he had not gone along. However, he was one of those to whom Tsafendas demonstrated how to fish for lobster, but he did not reveal that to the police.⁴³³¹

Dimitrios Stavrianos does not remember exactly what he was asked and what he told the police. He remembers Tsafendas, but he did not associate with him very much and therefore thinks he could not have told the police a lot about him. He remembers Tsafendas as a “normal man; very well-dressed and well-mannered” who “did not show any signs of being mentally disturbed. He never behaved like a mad man or said anything to suggest that something might be wrong with him. None of us ever thought that he could be mad.”⁴³³²

Emanuel Tsabouniaris remembers the questioning very well. He was asked whether Tsafendas asked him for a gun or a knife. He replied that, “Tsafendas had seen I had a knife and asked me to sell it to him. I did not do so because I liked it and it was a souvenir.” The policeman then asked, “Do you still have it?” and he replied, “Yes.” Tsabouniaris said it was in his suitcase and offered to bring it for him, but the policeman replied, “No, that won’t be ⁴³³⁰ Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009.

⁴³³¹ Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015.

⁴³³² Dimitris Stavrianos in a personal interview, 18 January 2015.

necessary.”

Although he does not remember exactly what he said, he presumes he told the police what he remembers about Tsafendas to this day:

“[Tsafendas was] a very funny and good hearted man, a very friendly, talkative and polite person, a true gentleman. Always very well-dressed and always very courteous. Everyone liked him. He was certainly perfectly fine, impossible to have been insane. Impossible! This man was definitely not insane. I could swear to God that he was not insane... He was always very prompt with our financial dealings, not like other hawkers who I or the other guys had met. He was completely different; he talked more like a teacher than a hawker. He used nice words and had excellent command of the vocabulary. He seemed like a very well-educated and knowledgeable man; a sophisticated man...

... The only thing I found strange was that his profession of a hawker did not match his character. He was very educated and very polite for a hawker. I always believed that something must be going on with this man, that he couldn't be just a hawker. I am sure he could have found a much better job. I thought that perhaps he could have a reason for doing this job; as a cover for something else, so he could walk freely around the harbour and aboard the ships. We discussed this with some of the guys and they also thought that there must be something happening with him. The thing that impressed me more was that he was very proud. He was doing the job with pride, not like a beggar or trying to make you buy in a sleazy way. He was a true gentleman.”⁴³³³

Michalis Vasilakis remembers telling “pretty much everything” he knew about Tsafendas. “The only things I remember not telling him for sure is that he sang partisan songs with us and he gave me this anti-apartheid book. None of us mentioned these things, not even those who had not participated in the singing but just knew about it.” He remembers telling the police that Tsafendas took them to the township but not whether that they had tea in a Black family's house. He told them that Tsafendas was a Communist who had also fought with the Communists in the Greek Civil War and he is pretty certain that he also told the policeman and that he had “played the fool” so as not to serve in the Portuguese army.

He remembers mentioning that Tsafendas had spat at Dr. Verwoerd's photograph – it was Vasilakis who showed him the picture - and called the prime minister “Hitler's best student.” The most difficult part of the interview was when he had to explain to the policeman what tyrannicide was after telling him about Tsafendas's belief that Dr. Verwoerd's assassination would be justifiable because he was a tyrant. The interview lasted about thirty minutes and he spent at least half of it explaining the philosophy of tyrannicide as understood by the ancient Greeks.

⁴³³³ Emanuil Tsabouniaris in personal interview with the author, 14 June 2016.

He said that Tsafendas had "a very distinctive way of talking. It was slow, but very intelligent and sophisticated ... He was talking like a professor. It was more likely for us to not be able to follow him than him to follow us. We spent hours talking about politics and he was leading the conversation; none of us knew anything about apartheid at the time." He does not remember being asked about Tsafendas's mental state, but his own opinion is that he was "surely one hundred and ten per cent sane. There is absolutely no way Dimitri to have been mad. He definitely played mad to not be executed."⁴³³⁴

Emanuil Mastromanolis's statement was found in the archives but he stated to the author that he told the police much more than appeared in his statement. As we have seen from his statement, the police interview with Mastromanolis appeared to focus solely on the gun, but he told the author that discussion of the pistol lasted only about five minutes and the rest of the time was spent answering questions about Tsafendas's character and activities.

Mastromanolis acknowledged that his statement found in the archives is accurate and was what he told the policeman. He claims, however, that he lied in saying he thought the gun was a toy, because he was actually "under the impression that Mavronas's pistol was a real one." He had heard from Perselis that Mavronas had just bought a gun while in Cape Town and he was given the impression that it was real since Perselis also assumed it was real. Mavronas, who was only seventeen, had boasted about buying the gun and believed it was authentic. He was very surprised when the crew told him that it was just a gas pistol because it looked and felt authentic.⁴³³⁵

Mastromanolis thought that Mavronas might be willing to sell it to Tsafendas for a quick profit and only found out that the gun was fake when he suggested this to the boy. Mavronas proposed selling the gun to Tsafendas anyway, since Tsafendas had told everyone he needed a pistol to "scare people off," not to kill anyone, and it could do such a job. Mastromanolis agreed reluctantly, considering it would meet Tsafendas's requirement for a weapon just "to scare people off". Mastromanolis claims that he couldn't have told the ⁴³³⁴ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁴³³⁵ Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016.

police he was willing to sell Tsafendas a real firearm, which was why he called it a toy while hiding his impression that it was real.⁴³³⁶

After the Eleni left Cape Town for Kuwait, according to Mastromanolis and Perselis, they and Mavronas discussed the issue of the gun's sale to Tsafendas. Their initial thought was that if they were asked, they would tell the police that they believed Tsafendas was looking for a fake gun, since he had told them that he only wanted to "scare people off." Eventually, they decided to say they intended to play a joke on Tsafendas as they believed he would not be able to tell whether or not the gun was real.⁴³³⁷

Mastromanolis was surprised and relieved when he realised that the policemen were less interested in the gun than in Tsafendas's activities and character. He said talk about the gun lasted no more than five minutes while the rest of the time was spent discussing Tsafendas. Very early in the questioning, he was asked about a comment which Tsafendas attributed to him in his statement, that "the South Africans need a good whipping." Mastromanolis was surprised and concluded that Tsafendas must have talked extensively to the police since this was something he had said after Tsafendas took him and some of the seamen to a township in Cape Town. He denied to the policeman making such a remark, but he admitted to the author that Tsafendas had told the truth to the police and that he did make such a statement after they left the township. Mastromanolis does not remember if he was asked or if he told the police about the visit to the township.⁴³³⁸

Mastromanolis does not remember everything he told the police, but he described Tsafendas as being a "normal, intelligent person." He remembered Tsafendas as "a kind man, very much into politics and very well-informed about what was happening around the world. I've met many men, all around the world, and some of them were mad. I can say for sure that this man was not insane. There was nothing ever to make me believe that he might be insane. It was impossible for him to have been insane," and he believes this is what he told the police. He clearly remembers the police asking if Tsafendas had said anything about killing Dr. Verwoerd. He had replied, "No, never. If he had said such thing, I would have gone to the police."⁴³³⁹

⁴³³⁶ Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016.

⁴³³⁷ Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015.

⁴³³⁸ Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016.

⁴³³⁹ Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016.

THE MISSING STATEMENTS FROM THE ELENI

As we have seen, it is indisputable that witnesses' statements have gone missing from the Commission's record at the National Archives of South Africa. However, the crew of the Eleni gave vital information to the police about Tsafendas, and their missing statements are of great importance. This is what the police found out from the Eleni men:

- Tsafendas despised Dr. Verwoerd. He spat at a picture of him and denounced him as "Hitler's best student" because of the similarities between his national policies and those of Adolf Hitler.
- Three days before it happened, Tsafendas told the men that if Dr. Verwoerd were to be assassinated, such an act would be morally justifiable because Dr. Verwoerd was a tyrant and a dictator.
- Tsafendas was a passionate Communist and fought with the Communists in the Greek Civil War.
- Tsafendas constantly spoke about politics and strongly opposed apartheid.
- Tsafendas took some seamen to a black township in Cape Town to show them the hardships and injustices of apartheid.
- The crew of the Eleni, to a man, believed Tsafendas was perfectly sane; none had noticed anything wrong with him.

All of the above information was important to the Commission, especially Tsafendas's remark about justifiable homicide. This was of particular relevance, given that the Commission was trying to establish how Dr. Verwoerd's death came to be discussed three days before the assassination. However, none of this information is included in the Report. The information was also important to explain Tsafendas's motive, but it was not used for that purpose either.

The author cannot know whether these statements were suppressed by the Commission or were never given to the Commission by the police. Both withheld information in this case, so either alternative is possible. What makes the police the likelier culprit is that the Commission only used information for its Report from some of the four statements found in the archives and there is no mention at all of anything from the other statements. This suggests that the Commission was probably not in possession of any other statements. However, if this was so, did the Commission not wonder what happened to the rest of the crew's statements?

Surely the Commission did not believe that the South African police went all the way to Venice to interview three sailors about the sale of the gun and one about rumours of Dr. Verwoerd's death. The Commission was aware that there were thirty-eight men in the tanker crew and any one of them could have had important evidence about Tsafendas or about why Dr. Verwoerd's death was being discussed. The Commission must have been aware of how thorough the police had been in their investigation, even questioning people who had not seen Tsafendas for many years or who had a very brief acquaintance with him, such as James Johnston.

The Commission must have wondered whether the sailors were asked if Tsafendas had said anything about murdering Dr. Verwoerd, or what they knew, if anything, about the prime minister's death being discussed at the tanker. These were crucial matters but only one of the thirty-eight-man crew seems to have been questioned about them. This must have seemed unthinkable to the legal mind of the Commission, yet it seems it made no move to seek answers. An independent conclusion must be that the Commission either accepted without question what it was given by the police or that it received the missing statements and suppressed them, as it did with much other evidence. Whether the police or the Commission were to blame is less important than the effect of the blackout, namely that the Commission presented a totally distorted picture of how the conversation regarding Dr. Verwoerd's death probably began, leaving hanging questions to which the Eleni crew had provided mostly plausible answers. At the same time, the Commission's Report also does not contain some other very important information taken from the crew, such as the township visit, Tsafendas's participation in the Greek Civil War and his spitting gesture. The issue of the missing evidence from the archives and the Commission's Report is discussed in the section "missing evidence and the role of General van den Bergh" of this chapter.

CONCLUSION

The Commission's description of events surrounding the Eleni is inaccurate, tendentious, lacking evidence in many crucial aspects and in parts wildly speculative; it is notable more for what it omits than for what it contains. The Report, as written, supported the proceedings of the summary trial and doubtless met with the approval of the government in its determination to have Tsafendas proved insane and without a political motive. The Report lacked reference to the testimony of several Eleni crew members. Twelve men testified to the author that they and the rest of their colleagues who knew Tsafendas were all questioned by the police in Venice, yet only four statements from the thirty-eight-men crew were found in the national archives. Two other seamen who were not questioned by the South African police but were present when the questioning took place in Venice, confirmed this. However, there is no mention of what these people said in the Report.

The Report deals at length with the fact that rumours of Dr. Verwoerd's death were discussed on the Eleni. It is the most intriguing element of the Report. However, the Commission fails to give a solid answer or even a plausible explanation as to why this was so, speculating about the crew's discontent when hard evidence was available as to how the issue almost certainly arose. Several sailors had testified to the police that Tsafendas spoke of a hypothetical assassination of Dr. Verwoerd being morally justified since he was a tyrant and a dictator. This happened only hours before the dockside rumours about his death. The link was obvious. Yet the assassination talk is not mentioned by the Commission. Clearly talk of a morally justifiable assassination would contradict what was heard at the summary trial and was not what the authorities wanted the people to know.

Also omitted were the facts that Tsafendas had participated in the Greek Civil War with the Communists, that he considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant, a dictator and Hitler's best student, that he spat in contempt upon seeing a photograph of Dr. Verwoerd and that he took some of the sailors to a poor, black township in Cape Town. Again, none of these things fitted with the portrayal of Tsafendas in the summary trial or the one that the Commission was trying to build.

The missing statements also contained important information about Tsafendas's character. Many of the sailors had spent time with him on every one of the forty-two days that he visited the ship, up to three days before the assassination. Tsafendas felt comfortable with the crew, partly because some of them were fellow Communists but also because they were not South Africans and were only in the country temporarily. None of the positive comments about Tsafendas contained in the men's statement are mentioned in the Report.

The author is not in position to know whether or how much information was available to the Commission. However, it is not of major importance whether it was the police of the Commission itself which withheld the information. What is important is that evidence was suppressed and therefore the Report does not give an accurate account of what happened on the Eleni in the days preceding Dr. Verwoerd's assassination. The Eleni issue stands out as proof that important information was suppressed throughout the case against Tsafendas in order to depict him in an erroneous and disadvantageous light and to mislead the public regarding important aspects of the assassination.

THE VERGOS INCIDENT

Paragraphs 28 and 29 of Chapter II C deal with Tsafendas's physical fight with Nick Vergos. Vergos was described by the Commission as a key witness. On 12th October 1966, the front page of the Daily Dispatch announced "KEY WITNESS FOUND,"⁴³⁴⁰ while The Cape Times front-paged "IMPORTANT WITNESS TRACED."⁴³⁴¹ The Commission had appealed to the media for help in locating the fifty-four-year-old (or sixty-one-year old according to other reports) Greek-born Vergos, who was thought to have "vital information" regarding Tsafendas. Six hours after the appeal was issued, Vergos walked into the office of the Rand Daily Mail in Johannesburg.⁴³⁴² However, this important witness with "vital information" about Tsafendas, someone the Commission had spent much effort to locate, was not asked to testify at Tsafendas's summary trial. This is the Commission's Report of events involving Vergos:

His next employers were Messrs. Frazer and Chalmers, at Mandini, Zululand. There he worked as a fitter and turner from 19th April, 1965 to 19th May, 1965, when he was dismissed after a fight with a Greek, a certain Nicholas Vergos. In the fight Tsafendas sustained cuts on the arm and stomach, and he laid a charge of assault with intent to do grievous bodily harm against Vergos.

On 12th May, 1965, the trial took place. Vergos testified that, since Tsafendas had knocked him down without any provocation, he had defended himself with his razor when Tsafendas attempted to assault him again. Vergos was found not guilty since the magistrate held the view that Tsafendas had been the assailant. Tsafendas was most dissatisfied with the verdict (Tsafendas was the interpreter).⁴³⁴³

After this fight Vergos told Mr. J. J. Botha, the Security Officer of the S.A. Pulp and Paper Industries, that Tsafendas was a dangerous communist. Mr. Botha says that he conveyed this information to the South African Police at Nyoni, but not one of the policemen who were serving there at that time has any recollection of this. Sergeant Fourie of Nyoni admits that Vergos told him that Tsafendas was a "communist bastard," but he regarded this as an insult and not as an accusation, and consequently made no report on the matter. Vergos confirmed that he had made this allegation, but could not really give any sound reason for his im-

⁴³⁴⁰ Daily Dispatch, 'Dr. Verwoerd: Key Witness Found', 12 October 1966: 1.

⁴³⁴¹ The Cape Times, 'Dr. Verwoerd Inquiry: Important Witness Traced', 12 October 1966: 1.

⁴³⁴² The Cape Times, 'Dr. Verwoerd Inquiry: Important Witness Traced', 12 October 1966: 1.

⁴³⁴³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 28.

putation. He said that he had based it mainly on the fact that Tsafendas could speak so many languages.⁴³⁴⁴

The Report gives Vergos's version of events and not Tsafendas's. However, it is evident from the statements taken by the police and the Commission that Vergos had not been entirely honest with the police nor in court about the incident. According to Christoffel van Vuuren, a security officer at the paper factory, Vergos was known to his fellow workers as "Nicky the Greek, with a razor."⁴³⁴⁵ Tsafendas said Vergos often played idly with a razor. Tsafendas also said Vergos was a fascist, a racist and a bully, especially towards the African workers. He would often order the Africans to run personal errands for him, such as fetching cigarettes. Tsafendas told Vergos to stop using them as his personal servants. For his part, Vergos told Tsafendas to stop talking to the workers about Communism and against apartheid; he said Tsafendas would get them all dismissed or arrested. However, Tsafendas ignored him and they often argued.⁴³⁴⁶

What was the reason for the fight? Tsafendas heard that Vergos had hired two African employees to do some work for him in his house, then refused to pay them, claiming that they had not done a good job. When they protested, he threatened them with the loss of their jobs and since the work they had done was illegal, they could not complain to the police or the company.⁴³⁴⁷ One day in the company canteen, Tsafendas told Vergos he should pay the two men. Vergos refused and swore at Tsafendas, who then slapped Vergos twice in the face; Vergos fell to the floor and the fight stopped and both men left the canteen.⁴³⁴⁸ Tsafendas went to his room, where Vergos appeared soon afterwards with a knife in his hand. Tsafendas told him "to get out," but Vergos slashed at him with the knife. Tsafendas said in his statement to the police, "He gave me one stab in my hand which was trying to ward off the ⁴³⁴⁴ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 29.

⁴³⁴⁵ Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³⁴⁶ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴³⁴⁷ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴³⁴⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas's statement in the court regarding the incident, 14 May 1965. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van saak dossier Nyoni R.A.A. 14 May 1965. NASA; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

blow, then aimed another blow at my stomach. I jumped away and he only scratched me. I then pushed him away.”⁴³⁴⁹

In his testimony to the police, Vergos failed to explain why the dispute arose, saying Tsafendas attacked him out of the blue and for no reason and that he did not know him until then.⁴³⁵⁰ This was clearly a lie as Charles Edwin Woods, the men’s supervisor, testified that even before the fight, Vergos had asked him to get rid of Tsafendas because he was a “Communist.” Tsafendas, after the fight, told Woods that their argument was over politics,⁴³⁵¹ something he often argued about with Vergos. Although Woods testified that the cause of the fight was a political argument, the Commission omitted this information.

It was also before their physical fight that Vergos characterised Tsafendas as a “Communist bastard” to Jan Fourie, a sergeant of the South African police.⁴³⁵² This comment, plus the one Vergos made to Woods, contradict Vergos’s claim that he did not know Tsafendas before the fight. It also tends to confirm Tsafendas’s assertion that their arguments were about politics and the fact that he was a Communist. If these two men had no relationship or arguments before their physical fight, why would Vergos ask their supervisor to fire Tsafendas because he was a Communist or denounce him to the police as a “Communist bastard?”

Furthermore, according to Christoffel van Vuuren’s statement to the police, Tsafendas told him that he had an argument with Vergos and they got into a brawl, but he could not remember the specific reason for the fight. Van Vuuren then called Vergos out of the recreation club and on the way to his office “Vergos admitted that he assaulted Demetrios with a razor, because the latter tried to assault him with a knife.”⁴³⁵³ This is incompatible with the version Vergos gave to the police at the time. In that statement, which was found in the archives and therefore was in the Commission’s possession, he stated that Tsafendas had ⁴³⁴⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas’s statement to the police regarding the incident, 7 May 1965. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van saak dossier Nyoni R.A.A. 14 May 1965. NASA.

⁴³⁵⁰ Nicolas Vergos’ statement in the court regarding the incident, 14 May 1965. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van saak dossier Nyoni R.A.A. 14 May 1965. NASA.

⁴³⁵¹ Charles Edwin Woods statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴³⁵² Jan Johannes Albertus Fourie statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³⁵³ Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

punched him three times in the face. He made no mention of a knife. Van Vuuren also told the police that Vergos said Tsafendas “was not Greek, but a Kaffir and a Communist.”⁴³⁵⁴

Nothing from van Vuuren’s statement is mentioned in the Report. Vergos also claimed in his statement that the razor he employed against Tsafendas was “sometimes used to sharpen a pencil or so.” Vergos further claimed that he passed in front of Tsafendas’s room and the door was open. Tsafendas saw him and asked him to come inside. Vergos went in and Tsafendas attacked him again, and it was then he produced the razor and slashed Tsafendas.⁴³⁵⁵

Tsafendas’s version in his statement to the police also fell short of the whole truth. He said, “Vergos entered the canteen swearing.” Tsafendas asked him to “behave himself” and then they fought.⁴³⁵⁶ Vergos could not give the cause of the fight because he had used two African workers illegally, and Tsafendas did not refer to this because the Africans would have been fired or even worse for doing illegal work.⁴³⁵⁷ In Tsafendas’s version to the police, Vergos and another man entered his room. Tsafendas asked them to get out and it was then that Vergos attacked him.⁴³⁵⁸

⁴³⁵⁴ Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³⁵⁵ Nicolas Vergos statement to the police regarding the incident, 7 May 1965. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van saak dossier Nyoni R.A.A. 14 May 1965. NASA.

⁴³⁵⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas’s statement in the court regarding the incident, 14 May 1965. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van saak dossier Nyoni R.A.A. 14 May 1965. NASA.

⁴³⁵⁷ None of the witnesses remembers what the two African workers had exactly done for Vergos.

⁴³⁵⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas’s statement to the police regarding the incident, 7 May 1965. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van saak dossier Nyoni R.A.A. 14 May 1965. NASA.

The author is not in position to know exactly what happened, but it matters a little. What is important is that Vergos had reported Tsafendas to the South African police as Communist before they fought, and that he characterised him as “the biggest Communist in the Republic,” and both statements were omitted from the Report. The Report states that Vergos told J. J. Botha, a security officer for S.A. Pulp and Paper Industries, that Tsafendas was a “dangerous Communist.” However, Botha also told the police that Vergos described Tsafendas as “the biggest Communist in the Republic of South Africa,”⁴³⁵⁹ however, this comment was omitted. Also missing is a statement by Mike Josias Germishuys, a sergeant in the South African Police at Mandini, that Vergos was “under the influence of alcohol at the time of the arrest,” i.e. after the fight.⁴³⁶⁰

Although the reason for the fight was not given by either Tsafendas or Vergos, it must have been known to the Commission, because, according to The Cape Times, the police on 9th September questioned several workers at the canteen where the fight took place.⁴³⁶¹ It seems unlikely that the workers failed to explain the situation to the police, however much some of them might have wanted to protect Vergos, who was still working there.

One absurd element in the Vergos/Tsafendas situation is the reason Vergos gave for concluding that Tsafendas was a Communist - that he spoke many languages, an explanation the Commission treated with sufficient seriousness to include in its Report. Were all multi-linguists Communists? The only significance attachable to Vergos’s comment is that if he knew Tsafendas could speak several languages, then he must have known him before they fought.

In later life, Tsafendas would proudly display the scar caused by “fascist and racist” Vergos’s razor and a second one on his hand which he said he received during a confrontation in London in the early 1960s with members of Oswald Mosley’s fascist Union Movement. He considered both scars to be badges of honour.⁴³⁶²

TSAFENDAS’S RELATIONSHIP WITH THE GREEK COMMUNITY

⁴³⁵⁹ Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³⁶⁰ Mike Josias Germishuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³⁶¹ The Cape Times, ‘Tsafendas in Brawl in Canteen’, 9 September 1966: 15..

⁴³⁶² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015; Father Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

*The Greek community did not accept him as one of them.*⁴³⁶³

This is a correct statement, but it is not explained and so gives a wrong impression, although the Commission was probably not sure exactly why the Greek community did not accept Tsafendas. Far from being a blot on his character, the fact that Tsafendas was not accepted by the Greek community was in his eyes a mark of honour. Most Greeks in South Africa co-operated enthusiastically with, or at least supported, the apartheid regime, usually for commercial reasons; some even contributed financially to the National Party.⁴³⁶⁴ The prominent human rights Advocate George Bizos, opposed apartheid and as a result was cold-shouldered by his compatriots and seen as an embarrassment and a traitor to the community.⁴³⁶⁵ Tsafendas was viewed in exactly the same way, or even worse. In Mozambique, too, the majority of Greeks supported the Portuguese colonialists because it was financially beneficial to them to do so.

After the assassination, the Greek communities in South Africa and Mozambique tried frantically to distance themselves from Tsafendas as far as possible. People who had never met Tsafendas and knew nothing about him speculated that he must have been insane and many declared that he was not even Greek.⁴³⁶⁶ Georgios Manidis, President of the Greek Community in Bloemfontein and a supporter of apartheid, said Tsafendas, though he had never met him, “must be insane. He does not represent the feelings of the Greeks of South Africa. Most of the Greeks in South Africa are supporters of Dr. Verwoerd.”⁴³⁶⁷ The Greek community in Pretoria was the first publicly to distance itself from this “infamous and reprehensible assassination.” A spokesman hastily declared that “the criminal was in no way attached to any religious or social Greek organisation and he was not recognized as a Greek.”⁴³⁶⁸

Tsafendas was well-known to the Greek community in Pretoria because of his family, but mostly because of an incident in a Greek Orthodox Church in Pretoria during a service. The Greek priest praised South Africa and its apartheid policy and attacked Communism and those opposing apartheid, enraging Tsafendas. His half-brother, Victor Tsafantakis, stopped him from interrupting the priest. However, when the time came for Communion, Tsafendas refused to take the sacrament or to kiss the priest’s hands, as was customary. Instead, he ⁴³⁶³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 6.

⁴³⁶⁴ Advocate George Bizos in Live and Let Live.

⁴³⁶⁵ To Vima, Γιώργος Μπίζος: “Υποφέρουμε Όπως Εσείς Στους Ολυμπιακούς”, 13 June 2010.

⁴³⁶⁶ Eleftherotipia, ‘Οι Έλληνες Φίλοι του Απαρτχάιντ’, 4 July 2010.

⁴³⁶⁷ Kathimerini, ‘Θλίμης Εις την Ελληνικήν Παρουσίαν του Γιοχάνεσμπουργκ’, 7 September 1966: 1.

⁴³⁶⁸ Noticias, ‘Prosseguem As Investigações.’ 8 September 1966: 1.

argued quietly with the priest, saying he should be ashamed for praising apartheid. The priest politely replied that Greeks should not bite the hand that fed them in South Africa. Tsafendas said the Whites exploited the Blacks, but life for the majority of people was far from rosy. Members of the congregation then began protesting on behalf of the priest and denouncing Tsafendas. Tsafendas remained calm and finally his family managed to pull him away.⁴³⁶⁹

In Cape Town, a delegation of Greek leaders called on the John Vorster and assured him that Tsafendas was not of Greek origin and was not connected in any way with the Greek community in South Africa.⁴³⁷⁰ The leader of the Greek community in Johannesburg, Peter Paizes, said he was a personal friend and admirer of Dr. Verwoerd;⁴³⁷¹ he spoke of his “tremendous grief” and expressed “indescribable consternation” that the assassin apparently was partly of Greek extraction.⁴³⁷²

An unnamed person described as a “leading South Coast Greek businessman” gave an interview to The Daily News which represented the generally sycophantic attitude of local Greeks towards South Africa. He said, “When I arrived in South Africa some 15 years ago, I had holes in my shoes. With the help of the Government I was able to find employment, and within a matter of six years I had my own business and two cars. I am sure that I speak for all Greeks in South Africa when I say we never had it so good... we as Greeks have always had the highest regard for Dr. Verwoerd. He had done a great deal for us, allowed and given us every reason to want to be South Africans and succeed in business.”⁴³⁷³

Tsafendas never hid his political preferences; he was a Communist and an outspoken critic of colonialism and of apartheid. He frequently and publicly accused Greeks in South Africa and Mozambique of exploiting Black people and of being fascist and racist. He was known by the Greek community in Lourenço Marques as “The Red,” and he was arrested five times by the Portuguese because of his political ideas and activities.

Tsafendas usually avoided Greeks in the diaspora but he was happy to make friends with those who obviously did not share the obsequious Greek viewpoint, such as Fotini Gavasiadis, Irene Michaletos, Ira Kyriakakis, Elias Constantaras, George Grispos and Nick Papadakis. For more about Tsafendas’s interaction with the Greek community in ⁴³⁶⁹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴³⁷⁰ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), ‘Vorster Gives Greeks Assurance’, 11 September 1966.

⁴³⁷¹ To Vima, ‘Η Δολοφονία Του Φέρβειρντ: Ελληνικής Καταγωγής Ο Δράστης’, 7 September 1966: 1.

⁴³⁷² The New York Times, ‘Grief Expressed By Leader of Greeks in Johannesburg’, 7 September 1966: 16.

⁴³⁷³ The Daily News, ‘S.A. Greeks Had High Regard for Dr. Verwoerd’, 8 September 1966: 9.

Mozambique and South Africa see Chapter 2.

HELEN DANIELS

While in Durban he received an offer of marriage in writing from Cape Town from Miss Helen Daniels, a Coloured missionary of his church. She had received his photograph from a certain Arendse in Benoni. After further correspondence he decided to go to Cape Town. A motorist took him as far as Port Elizabeth from where he travelled to Cape Town by train, arriving there on 28th August, 1965.⁴³⁷⁴

He immediately moved in with the Daniels family (Mr. and Mrs. Daniels and their daughter Helen).⁴³⁷⁵

Miss Daniels testified how he arrived at their home with a big hole in his jersey, and dressed untidily. Her brother fetched his luggage from the station. This consisted of a suitcase containing mainly dirty washing and another suitcase containing tools, pots and pans. She immediately lost all interest in him, and he never showed any interest in her either.

Miss Daniels testified further that he often complained of a headache, and that he could not understand why he was unable to find employment. At times he said incomprehensible things. At church services, particularly, no one could understand what he was saying. Sometime he bragged about the things he wanted to do. He told her about the court case against Vergos. His account to her was that he had knocked Vergos down and that Vergos came back with four Bantu and attacked and cut him with a razor.⁴³⁷⁶

DANIELS'S APPROACH TO TSAFENDAS

The Report describes Helen Daniels's relationship with Tsafendas as it was and not as her brother presented it at the summary trial and in the Press. It makes clear that it was Helen who approached Tsafendas and not the other way around, as the brother claimed, confirming that he had lied to the court. Helen Daniels had testified freely to that effect in her statement to the police on September 15, but the Attorney-General in the summary trial did not use her statement to challenge her brother's blatantly untruthful court testimony. Nevertheless, as so often, the Commission omitted from its Report details from Daniels's statement which set out ⁴³⁷⁴ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 36.

⁴³⁷⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 37.

⁴³⁷⁶ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 38.

events in a faithful light. These are extracts from her statement, while her full statement is available at Chapter 4.

“During April 1965 I was visiting friends in Boksburg. There I learned of Demitrio Tsafendas. It was told to me that they would want me to meet him, he’s a nice man. I never met him and later returned to Cape Town. When I was in Cape Town, I thought to correspond with him and wrote to my friends to find out his address ... Other friends of mine went on holiday to Durban and I then wrote a letter to Tsafendas and asked my friends to give this to him. Our preacher is in Durban and I hoped to trace Tsafendas through the church.

... I wrote my letter during the June holidays in 1965 and received a reply from him on July 10, 1965. I wrote in my letter that I would like to meet and wanted to marry him. His answer was that he wanted to meet me first before giving me a positive answer. I wrote to him again - four letters – all of which he answered. I sent him a picture, but he did not send me one in return. He sent word that he would come to Cape Town for our church conference - it would be in November 1965. I lived with my parents and on August 28, 1965 - he arrived at my parents’ house ... We had a spare room and gave him lodging.”⁴³⁷⁷

Helen Daniels was a highly respected minister in her Church and the way she heard about Tsafendas suggests that he, too, was highly thought of by their fellow church members. Patrick O’Ryan said that Tsafendas was described to him by a fellow church-goer as a “highly cultured gentleman, a very refined gentleman who speaks seven languages.”⁴³⁷⁸ It is clear that the members of the Church admired and respected Tsafendas before the assassination. The fact that Daniels went to considerable trouble to contact him, seeking his address, dispatching a letter with a friend, then sending him four more letters and a picture of herself, implies that she expected to meet a good man who had been warmly recommended by her friends.

TSAFENDAS’S DIRTY CLOTHES

The Report states that Tsafendas was dressed untidily, that his jersey had a hole in it and that he had dirty clothes in one of his suitcases. Helen Daniels’s brother, her sister-in-law and three other witnesses made similar statements at the summary trial. Nickolas Nel, who had an argument with Tsafendas when they worked at F.A. Poole Engineering, testified that he “had ⁴³⁷⁷ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

⁴³⁷⁸ Patrick O’ Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

a messy and dirty appearance,⁴³⁷⁹ landlady Wilhelmina de Vos described Tsafendas as “dirty,”⁴³⁸⁰ and Gillian Clare Lieberman, personnel secretary at the Marine Diamond Corporation, told the police that Tsafendas had “dirty, sloppy clothes,”⁴³⁸¹ although she had only seen Tsafendas at work, where rough clothes would be normal. On the other hand, most of the many witnesses questioned by the police and the Commission said Tsafendas was neat, clean and well-dressed. However, none of their statements made it into the Report. Those commenting on the issue included:

1. South African Police Col. van Wyk, who questioned people in Rhodesia and Mozambique who knew Tsafendas. He wrote in his report that Tsafendas “was always neatly dressed.”⁴³⁸²
2. Violet Irene Manning was Tsafendas’s landlady for almost two months in 1965. She told the Commission about Tsafendas: “It was a serviced room but I found him making his own bed. When he came to me he was well-dressed, well-spoken, and gave a good impression. From his general appearance he appeared to be a businessman. When he paid me, he had a bundle of notes and I took him to be a man of means.”⁴³⁸³
3. Ian Boswell testified that Tsafendas was “at all times neatly dressed and never gave the impression of being destitute.”⁴³⁸⁴
4. Gideon Cloete, an official at the Department of Labour, testified that Tsafendas “was neatly dressed and had a clean appearance.”⁴³⁸⁵
5. Jacobus Bormman, Tsafendas’s flatmate for six-seven weeks, stated that “according to my observation, Tsafendas was a gentle person. He was neat in his person, but his eating habits were not up to scratch.”⁴³⁸⁶
6. Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys, employment officer at the Department of Labour in Cape

⁴³⁷⁹ Nikolaas Jacobus Nel statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³⁸⁰ Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³⁸¹ Gillian Claire Liebermann statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³⁸² Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴³⁸³ Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

⁴³⁸⁴ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

⁴³⁸⁵ Gideon Jacobus Cloete testimony at Tsafendas’s summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10. NASA.

⁴³⁸⁶ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Town, interviewed Tsafendas twice. He told the police that Tsafendas was “neatly dressed” and he “never got the impression that there was mentally anything wrong with him or that he acted abnormally.”⁴³⁸⁷

7. Redvers Quintin Wakfer worked with Tsafendas for six weeks at the Power Station in Cape Town and testified that he was “neatly dressed.”⁴³⁸⁸
8. Edward Furness testified that Tsafendas “was well-dressed and appeared to be wealthy.”⁴³⁸⁹
9. Katerina Pnema, his half-sister, testified that Tsafendas “was well dressed and gave a good appearance,” although as far as she could see, he had no visible means of support.⁴³⁹⁰ She later stated that Tsafendas was always well dressed and she never saw him wearing dirty clothes except when he was coming back from work.⁴³⁹¹
10. Sidney Wiehand, a senior messenger at the House of Assembly was one of three messengers who interviewed and appointed Tsafendas. He said that in order to be hired, a messenger “must always be neat,” indicating that Tsafendas fitted that description.⁴³⁹²

In Europe, Horst Hartmann, senior personnel officer at the heavy engineering company Fries & Son in Frankfurt, where Tsafendas worked as a welder, said in a newspaper interview that was published by the South African press and was in the Commission’s possession, “He drove up here in a big, battered American car. He looked like a successful businessman. I thought he was more likely to apply for an executive job than as a welder. Well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous, a very pleasant man...he made a good impression and he spoke good German, so I took him on.”⁴³⁹³

Furthermore, according to the testimony at the summary trial of Merle Daniels, Helen’s sister-in-law, the day Tsafendas arrived at their house, he immediately asked her to wash his clothes, which suggests that he was aware of their condition and was not habitually a dirty person. She also testified that Tsafendas’s clothes were always clean after that first ⁴³⁸⁷ Pieter Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

⁴³⁸⁸ Redvers Wakfer statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub File: 1/5, Subject Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

⁴³⁸⁹ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³⁹⁰ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴³⁹¹ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴³⁹² Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁴³⁹³ Daily Dispatch, ‘Assassination A One Man’s Job – Says Vorster’, 8 September 1966: 1.

day.⁴³⁹⁴ Joyce Dick, one of Helen Daniels's best friends at the time, stated to the author that whenever she saw Tsafendas, "he was always very neatly dressed."⁴³⁹⁵ Reuben O'Ryan lived with Tsafendas in the same house for five months and kept in touch with him for another year and he also knew Helen Daniels well. He told the author Tsafendas "was always very clean and well-dressed, apart from when he was coming home from work. That was the only time I saw him wearing dirty clothes. He always wore nice clothes; he was a clean person and always shaved."⁴³⁹⁶ Stanley O'Ryan, Reuben's brother also remembers Tsafendas as "clean and well-dressed person."⁴³⁹⁷

The author asked seventy-one witnesses who knew Tsafendas about the way he was dressed. Only two of them, Andreas Babiolakis and Costas Poriadis, said that they once saw Tsafendas looking neglected and wearing a torn shirt. However, that was on the day he was released from jail in Beira in February 1965. Having just spent several days in a prison cell, wearing the same clothes every day and being beaten up, he could hardly have appeared otherwise. Both witnesses said this was the only time they saw Tsafendas looking less than perfectly dressed.⁴³⁹⁸ None of the rest said Tsafendas was of a dirty or neglected appearance. Indeed, the vast majority remembered him as dressing well and looking like a gentleman. It is not possible to reproduce here more than a hundred statements, but the following are representative of those who knew Tsafendas well:

1. Father Nikola Banovic in 1961, lived in the same house as Tsafendas for four months and in a house next door for another two or three months. He saw Tsafendas virtually every day and says he was "always a very clean person and well-dressed, wearing a different hat each day."⁴³⁹⁹
2. Allan O'Ryan lived with Tsafendas for five months at the same house and kept being in touch for another year. He remembers Tsafendas being always "very well-dressed. Firstly, he always went out in a suit. He had a grey striped suit that he always wore. He was always very smart when he left the house. That I picked up – that he always looked very business-like. He was never casual about his dress. And his hair, though it was crinkly, it was neatly brushed. He was always well-dressed and he seemed to be going on ⁴³⁹⁴ Marle Daniels's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴³⁹⁵ Joyce Dick in a personal interview, 6 August 2016.

⁴³⁹⁶ Reuben O' Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

⁴³⁹⁷ Stanley O' Ryan in a personal interview, 9 April 2015.

⁴³⁹⁸ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Costas Poriadis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

⁴³⁹⁹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

business or going out for the day. And even the people in the street got to know him and greeted him as a man of... you know, as a distinguished gentleman, because of the way he dressed.”⁴⁴⁰⁰

3. Mary Eintracht, Tsafendas’s first cousin, knew him since he was five years old, grew together in Mozambique and she spent a lot of time with him in Pretoria in 1963-4. She insists that Tsafendas was always well-dressed and clean. She was impressed by his suits and Tsafendas told her that most of them were bought in Europe. “He was always well-dressed, very often wearing a hat, and was a very clean person. “He was very fussy with clean hands when he was a child, and I think he was also like this when he grew up, but I can’t remember for sure.”⁴⁴⁰¹
4. Fotini Gavasiadis saw Tsafendas virtually every day for nine months in 1963-4. She told the author that it is “nonsense” to say Tsafendas was not well-dressed or dirty, that in fact he always very well dressed and clean. “Sometimes it took him longer than it took me to get ready, trying to find a more suitable hat or tie. He adored hats and ties. He never wore the same clothes for two days in a row and when it was hot he would even change twice per day. He adored hats and ties.”⁴⁴⁰²
5. Ira Kyriakakis, who grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques and remained a lifelong friend, described as “absolutely absurd” claims that Tsafendas was not well-dressed and clean. “He was always very well dressed; since he was a child. He looked like a gentleman. He used to wear hats he had bought from all over the world. He loved hats and he must have had tens of them. He came back to Lourenço Marques in the 1960s and brought me a hat for a present from Lisbon.”⁴⁴⁰³
6. Helen Grispos was another who grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques, and her mother was the best friend of Tsafendas’s step-mother. “He was always very well dressed, even as a child; his step-mother always looked after him. When he visited us in the 1960s, I remember he wore a big hat he said he had bought somewhere in Europe. I don’t remember what he was wearing, but I remember the hat. It was very distinctive. He was certainly well-dressed.”⁴⁴⁰⁴
7. Irene Michaletos met Tsafendas in 1964 in Beira and saw him often until 1965. She ⁴⁴⁰⁰ Allan O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 8 November 2019.

⁴⁴⁰¹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁴⁴⁰² Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁴⁴⁰³ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁴⁴⁰⁴ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

- remembers him being “always well-dressed and clean.”⁴⁴⁰⁵
8. Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas’s cousins and sons of Artemis Michaletos, Tsafendas’s aunt and his father’s sister who brought him up in Egypt. They first met Tsafendas in 1951 in Lourenço Marques and got to know him between 1963 and 1965 in Mozambique. They both remember Tsafendas being “always well-dressed and clean.”⁴⁴⁰⁶
 9. Andreas Babiolakis knew Tsafendas since they were children and had lived in the same house as him in Beira for about two-three months. He finds the thought that he had a dirty and neglected appearance as “absurd.” He recalls that Tsafendas “had a shower every morning when he woke and in the evening when he returned from work. He believed that he sweated in the night, so he had one in the morning.”⁴⁴⁰⁷
 10. Costas Chagios, a Cape Town café owner, knew Tsafendas for more than a year as a frequent patron of his café. He remembers Tsafendas as being “always well dressed and clean.”⁴⁴⁰⁸
 11. Alexandra Vaporidis knew Tsafendas for about six months in Istanbul. She was impressed by his many hats and remembers that a lot of people commented about how neatly Tsafendas dressed. “I remember him coming to the church always wearing a tie.”⁴⁴⁰⁹
 12. Peter Protoulis was a supplier of foodstuffs to the tanker Eleni. He met Tsafendas on board and says, “I was very impressed by the way he was dressed. He always wore a suit and very often a tie and a hat. I never show him wearing the same clothes two days in a row.”⁴⁴¹⁰
 13. Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town and knew him up to his arrest. He recalls Tsafendas being well dressed and clean, often wearing suits and hats.⁴⁴¹¹
 14. Peter Peroglou and his wife Pamela Abrahams ate at the same place as Tsafendas for two or three months in 1966 and they remember him as always well dressed and very courteous.
 15. Nick Augustides is the son of the owner of Mike’s Outfitters in Cape Town, for whom Tsafendas worked on commission for about two months in 1966. He knew Tsafendas for ⁴⁴⁰⁵ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁴⁴⁰⁶ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁴⁴⁰⁷ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

⁴⁴⁰⁸ Costas Hagios in a personal interview, 24 March 2015.

⁴⁴⁰⁹ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

⁴⁴¹⁰ Peter Protoulis in a personal interview, 3 August 2016.

⁴⁴¹¹ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

three-four months and remembers him as “a well-dressed man.”⁴⁴¹²

16. Miltiades Kaldis knew Tsafendas for about a year, having met him in 1965 in Cape Town. He remembers him “looking clean and well-dressed.”⁴⁴¹³

17. The thirteen Eleni crewmen were impressed with the way Tsafendas dressed. He told some of them that most of his suits were bought in Europe a few years ago and that he had not bought any new clothes since he returned to South Africa.⁴⁴¹⁴

Personal appearance is a subjective matter. What is sloppy and dirty to one person may be casual and comfortable to another. It is germane that Tsafendas was a poor man, who often lived in basic lodgings, possibly without the facilities to wash his clothes, while the kind of jobs he did, welder and fitter, would require rough working attire. The fact is only the four people – Helen Daniels, Nel, de Vos and Lieberman - out of the two hundred the police and the Commission interviewed testified that Tsafendas wore dirty clothes. The vast majority not only disagreed, but stated that Tsafendas was neatly dressed, but the Commission omitted their statements.

TSAFENDAS'S STATE OF MIND

The Report contains several matters which were not mentioned by Daniels in her statement to the police, suggesting that they must have been from her testimony to the Commission, which was not found in the archives. One must assume that it was there that she spoke of Tsafendas saying incomprehensible things, talking about the Vergos fight and boasting about his future plans. Certainly, she did not mention anything like that in her statement to the police. On the contrary, she testified that: “besides his messy ways, I did not notice anything abnormal about him. There was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal. His stories about travelling abroad were interesting.”⁴⁴¹⁵

Although the Report does not say that Daniels thought there was something wrong with Tsafendas's mind, it also does not carry her statement saying the direct opposite (“There was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal”). Indeed it seems to hint at something wrong with Tsafendas by including the reference to his saying “incomprehensible ⁴⁴¹² Nick Augustides in a personal interview, 19 February 2016.

⁴⁴¹³ Miltiades Kaldis in a personal interview, 12 March 2016.

⁴⁴¹⁴ Kleanthis Alahiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴⁴¹⁵ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

things” and baffling fellow believers by the way he talked in church. Since Daniels said nothing like this to the police, she presumably made these remarks to the Commission.

The question is what were the “incomprehensible things” Tsafendas spoke about. Patrick O’Ryan said in his statement to the police that Tsafendas spoke against apartheid, but he “did not encourage him, because we advocate the Biblical idea of subservience to a Government ...” He said Tsafendas’s “spiritual view seemed confused, but he was not spiritually or mentally disturbed.”⁴⁴¹⁶ Far from subservient, Tsafendas believed that the Church should be revolutionary, help the people and fight against injustice; it should not support the powerful and the rich. He argued that the first Christians had rebelled against the Roman Empire and that the Church in South Africa and in Mozambique, because it had much power, should help in the people’s fight against apartheid and for the independence of Mozambique.⁴⁴¹⁷

Some members of the Christian Church were not happy with Tsafendas’s ideas, because they adhered to the idea of subservience to Government. The Commission was in possession of O’Ryan’s statement but nowhere in its Report does it mention Tsafendas’s “conflict” with the Christian Church, nor explain the matter of the “incomprehensible things.” Once again, the Report has included all that is negative about Tsafendas while omitting the positive. The Commission ignored Daniels’s statement about Tsafendas’s mental state. This testimony was important as it directly contradicted that of her brother and sister-in-law at the summary trial. The omission resulted in a skewed perspective of Tsafendas.

⁴⁴¹⁶ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴⁴¹⁷ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

TSAFENDAS IN THE USA

Chapter II B of the Report (paragraphs 1-12) starts with Tsafendas in the USA. Mostly, it deals with his hospitalizations and his violations of immigration laws there. Almost all of this information is taken from a file on Tsafendas held by the US Immigration authorities which was given to the South Africans on September 16, by the American embassy in Cape Town. This file also contained the Grafton State Hospital report, which has been used extensively to reconstruct Tsafendas's movements while in the USA.⁴⁴¹⁸

An important issue here is that vital information has been omitted from the Commission's Report. On September 9, the Secretary for Foreign Affairs in Cape Town received a secret telegram from the South African embassy in Washington, DC. It stated that a "very reliable source with first-hand knowledge" informed the embassy that the US Immigration authorities had a file on Tsafendas. That Tsafendas's file contained "full particulars" of his time in the United States, including the Grafton State Hospital report. The telegram stated that Tsafendas "is understood to have shown under psychiatric treatment that he was unstable though not (not)⁴⁴¹⁹ insane, but type of man who would easily be used as instrument of Communist or hostile organizations. Impression of US Immigration people at the time was that he had been manipulated and was under influence of someone or some organization. He was subsequently deported to Europe."⁴⁴²⁰

It is indisputable that the Commission was in possession of this telegram, since it was found in the Commission's files deposited at the national archives, yet the Commission ignored it. Here is a prime example of the Commission picking and choosing evidence to suit its purpose. The Report goes into detail concerning the unlikeliest rumours attached to Tsafendas – for example that he was wanted for murders and assaults in various countries –⁴⁴²¹ but it makes no mention of a crucial belief regarding Tsafendas's mental state held by the US Immigration authorities. This was no rumour, but the considered opinion of American governmental officials who had dealt with Tsafendas for five years. The US Immigration authorities knew that Tsafendas had been hospitalized and that he had faked mental illness. Their opinion must have been taken after due consideration and must surely have been worth ⁴⁴¹⁸ Letter of the USA Embassy in Cape Town to the South African Security Branch, 3 October 1966. Correctional Service. Subject: Demitrio Tsafendas. File: 80/0043 A123 Vol. 1. NASA.

⁴⁴¹⁹ This is exactly how it appears in the telegram. There is a second 'not' within brackets.

⁴⁴²⁰ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Washington to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

⁴⁴²¹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 43.

examining by the Commission if only because those authorities had dealt with Tsafendas for several years, longer than any other official body connected with him.

Furthermore, in Chapter IV, Paragraph 4, the Commission says:

“There were also speculations that Tsafendas might have undergone brainwashing overseas in the process of which he was instructed to murder Dr. Verwoerd. The Commission could find no evidence to justify such a finding.”

The Commission then goes on to explain why this could not have happened; the explanations are perfectly logical and the study agrees with this part of the Report, which will be examined in detail later. What is surprising is that the Report refers vaguely to “speculations” about brainwashing while ignoring the opinion of the US Immigration authorities that Tsafendas was the “type of man who could easily be used as instrument of Communist or hostile organizations” and that “he had been manipulated and was under influence of someone or some organization.”⁴⁴²² This certainly suggested at least a possibility of brainwashing.

The fact that this information did not come from just anybody, but from the South African embassy in the United States and that it quotes the US Immigration authorities is certainly worth stating and investigating. That is especially so when, as we will see, the Commission is happy to investigate numerous rumours about Tsafendas which are patently fictitious. However, to introduce a diplomatic telegram containing an official US opinion into open debate would have strengthened rumours that Tsafendas might not have been schizophrenic, after all, that he might even have been part of a Communist plot. Clearly such speculation was not in the interests of the Commission or the State.

⁴⁴²² Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Washington to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 09/09/1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

TSAFENDAS IN PORTUGAL IN 1949

In 1949, Tsafendas arrived in Portugal for the first time and was promptly arrested. The Report states: “Apparently the Portuguese authorities would not accept Tsafendas’s refugee passport, nor his claim that he was a Portuguese subject, the result being that he was arrested at the border post Barca d’Alva on 8th February, 1949. It appears that he was afterwards detained for a long time.”⁴⁴²³

The issue of this arrest and detention has been discussed earlier in this chapter.

TSAFENDAS AND THE PORTUGUESE ARMY

In Chapter II B, Paragraph 19, shortly after the incident mentioned above, the Report says:

“After it had been ascertained that Tsafendas was a Portuguese subject, he appeared on 6th February, 1950, before the Military Board of Inspection in Portugal and was granted exemption from military service.”

The above information, also taken by the Commission from a PIDE report given to the South African police,⁴⁴²⁴ is a drastically telescoped version of what happened in regard to Tsafendas and military service. According to a PIDE report that was not given to the South African police, it was while Tsafendas was held in Aljuba Prison that the Portuguese authorities discovered that he had not completed compulsory military service in the Portuguese Army. He was taken to Machine-Gun Regiment 1 in Lisbon,⁴⁴²⁵ where he was brought before the Military Board of Inspection. Tsafendas stated that he had been rejected by a recruiting board in Mozambique because his mother was a Coloured woman. Investigators replied that there was no racial discrimination in Portuguese East Africa, that everyone must serve and therefore he must complete his service.⁴⁴²⁶ ⁴⁴²³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 17.

⁴⁴²⁴ Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966.

⁴⁴²⁵ Letter of the Director of PIDE to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, 4 November 1961. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁴²⁶ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

The Portuguese authorities contacted the colonial administration in Lourenço Marques and were told that Tsafendas was not a deserter, that he had attended his interview for military service and had indeed been rejected because his mother was Coloured.⁴⁴²⁷ However, the law had changed since then and now every male Portuguese citizen was required to serve in the military. Thus, even if he was not a deserter, he was required to complete military service.⁴⁴²⁸ Tsafendas “did not want to serve a dictatorship”⁴⁴²⁹ and with no avenue of escape, he pretended to be mad. Psychiatrists who examined him were convinced that he was mad and he was officially exempted from military service.⁴⁴³⁰ He was required to pay military taxes for exemption in the sum of 1,200 Portuguese escudos and his situation in Portugal was legalized.⁴⁴³¹

The detailed explanation of the military service issue was omitted from the two PIDE reports given to the South Africans. However, the fact that Tsafendas had pretended to be mad in order not to serve in the Portuguese army was known to the South African police since at least six people had so testified when they were questioned.⁴⁴³²

TSAFENDAS AND HIS FAMILY

*His relatives in South Africa and Rhodesia are regarded as good, law-abiding citizens. The stepmother, a brother, a sister-in-law and a brother-in-law gave evidence before the Commission. All of them made a favourable impression. According to persons who know the family in Pretoria, they were not exactly taken up with this member of the family.*⁴⁴³³

*... the fact that his family did not really accept him...*⁴⁴³⁴

⁴⁴²⁷ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT

⁴⁴²⁸ Letter of Tsafendas to the Ministrao du Ultramar, 27 October 1962. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁴²⁹ The Cape Argus, ‘Brainwashed in Jail Held Man Told Argus.’ 7 September 1966: 3.

⁴⁴³⁰ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴⁴³¹ Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁴³² Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁴⁴³³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 6.

⁴⁴³⁴ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter III, Paragraph 3.

The Commission here suggests that Tsafendas was not popular with his family and later in Chapter III while discussing his motive it claims that he was “not really accepted” by them. Both statements are inaccurate and the Commission was in possession of considerable evidence to the contrary. Admittedly, the Commission held five statements that supported its claim. The first was from Katerina Pnefma who had testified that she had “very little or nothing to do with him during her lifetime” and that she considered him to be “a disgrace to the family.”⁴⁴³⁵ Hendrik van Loggenberg, a friend of the family, told the police that Tsafendas “was not welcome among his own people and they cast him out.”⁴⁴³⁶ Gladstone Dunn said in court that Tsafendas had told him that “he could not get on with his family and that they did not want to have anything to do with him.”⁴⁴³⁷ Caroline Barbeau had testified that Tsafendas “liked to pity himself, saying that his family did not want him, but at the same time he never thanked one for any kindness shown him.”⁴⁴³⁸ Interviewed by the police, John Marvis said Tsafendas had told him that his family did not want anything to do with him because his mother was Coloured.⁴⁴³⁹

It is not true that Pnefma had very little to do with Tsafendas in her lifetime and she admitted to the author that she tried to distance herself as much as possible from him when questioned by the police. In fact, she had corresponded regularly with Tsafendas since he left South Africa in 1942. She travelled from Rhodesia to Pretoria at Christmas 1963 along with her two little children so that she could meet him after not seeing him for twenty-two years. She then invited him to Rhodesia to meet her husband whom he did not know and she found him a job in Beira in 1964.⁴⁴⁴⁰ Clearly Pnefma had considerably more to do with her half-brother than she told the police.

It is true though that Pnefma considered him to be “a disgrace to the family,” which she still believes. However, this was because of his political activities, his arrests and bannings, which became widely known among her fellow Greeks. She felt directly insulted as a family member when Tsafendas criticised a boss who had employed him at the personal ⁴⁴³⁵ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁴³⁶ Hendrik Johannes van Loggenberg statement to the police, 8 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁴³⁷ Gladstone Dunn statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁴³⁸ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁴³⁹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁴⁴⁰ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

request of Pnema's husband. The Commission was not aware of any of these things and thus considered her statement to the police as valid.

Dunn's statement is partly accurate. Tsafendas's family was not very happy with his behaviour after he came back from Europe. They had helped him enter South Africa illegally only to discover that he had brought with him banned anti-apartheid and Communist literature. The incident in the church where he argued with the priest angered and embarrassed family members. That public row in a church, along with his refusal to throw away the banned literature and his noisy voicing of his political opinions caused friction between Tsafendas and his stepmother and half-brother.

As for Marvis's comment, this might have been made by Tsafendas out of frustration or on the spur of the moment. It was not mentioned by any of the scores of witnesses interviewed by the police and the author. The seventy-one witnesses interviewed by the author all denied any suggestion that Tsafendas felt rejected by his family because his mother was Coloured. They insisted that the only tension between Tsafendas and members of the family stemmed from his political ideas and activities.

In the case of Hendrik Johannes van Loggenberg, he had testified that he occasionally ate at Marika's house while Tsafendas ate there too, also that Tsafendas sometimes was a guest at his house.⁴⁴⁴¹ The fact that Tsafendas was welcomed to the table at his family's house and that he was also invited to van Loggenberg's home suggests that Tsafendas's relationship with the family could not have been exactly as van Loggenberg suggested. It is quite possible that van Loggenberg, being a good friend of Marika, might have tried to provide additional evidence distancing the family from Tsafendas, knowing that this was what they had done.

However, apart from the above statements, no other evidence in the Commission's possession supported its claim regarding Tsafendas's relationship with his family. On the contrary, there was considerable contradictory evidence. First and most important, the Commission was aware that Tsafendas's stepmother, half-brother and his wife, and his brother-in-law travelled by car from Pretoria to Lourenço Marques to meet him and then took him back to South Africa. This was a generous, indeed a courageous gesture, given that Tsafendas was a Communist and banned from entering South Africa, and they knew this. What is more, Vlachopoulos begged and convinced J.J. van den Berg, the passport official at the South African embassy in Lourenço Marques, to turn a blind eye to the fact that his brother-in-law was on the South African government Stop List and issue him with a visa.⁴⁴⁴² Although this was probably not known to the Commission, such an act is not something a family would risk for someone they did not care about.

⁴⁴⁴¹ Hendrik Johannes van Loggenberg statement to the police, 8 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Marika Tsafantakis told the Commission that “Tsafendas was favoured over the other children and sent to Middelburg because Portuguese children could only receive a proper education either there or in Swaziland.”⁴⁴⁴³ The fact that Tsafendas was favoured over the other children and was sent to study in South Africa was confirmed to this study by his cousin Mary Eintracht and his half-sister Katerina Pnefma. They said Tsafendas’s father was adamant that Dimitris should be the one to go and study as he was his first child and he could not afford to send the others, too. Marika had not objected.⁴⁴⁴⁴ This is hardly something a family will do for a child they do not accept.

Marika also told the Commission that Tsafendas “had grown up as one of her children.”⁴⁴⁴⁵ Her statement is confirmed by several witnesses and their testimonies were all in the Commission’s possession. Katerina Pnefma, his half-sister had also made a similar statement to the police; she said that growing up with Tsafendas “to all intents and purposes it was understood” by “her and her brother and sisters” that “he was a member of the family... his complexion was such – as also his manner – that he passed as a European.”⁴⁴⁴⁶

Guglielmo Conte, a friend and business partner of Tsafendas’s father, who also knew Tsafendas from the day he was born, explicitly denied in an interview with the Rand Daily Mail that was in the Commission’s possession, that Dimitri was estranged from his family.⁴⁴⁴⁷ Costas Michaletos, who knew Tsafendas from infancy and was his father’s best friend, told the police that “Dimetrios Tsafantakis grew up with his half-brothers and sisters and was always treated as part of the family.”⁴⁴⁴⁸ A Confidential Report from the Special ⁴⁴⁴² Eleni Vlachopoulos in Live and Let Live; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁴⁴³ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴⁴⁴⁴ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁴⁴⁵ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴⁴⁴⁶ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁴⁴⁷ Goldstein, ‘Tsafendas Timid and Puny As A Boy’, Rand Daily Mail, 14 September 1966.

⁴⁴⁴⁸ Costas Michaletos statement to the police, 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali said shortly after the assassination and after having questioned people who knew Tsafendas: “It is also reliably reported that the Tsafandakis family hold a good reputation among the Greek community and there are suggestions that Michael Tsafandakis made a big mistake in attempting to raise his illegitimate son as a full member of his family.”⁴⁴⁴⁹

In addition to this evidence, the Commission was aware that Tsafendas upon his return to Pretoria had stayed for a few days at his half-sister’s house and that her husband Charles Nissiotis hired him to work at their café-shop.⁴⁴⁵⁰ Although this was not known to the Commission, Charles Nissiotis took Tsafendas on at his café so that he could show he was employed and domiciled on his application for permanent residence while he even gave him a letter stating that he was his “guarantor” and would be financially responsible for him while in South Africa.⁴⁴⁵¹

After he moved out of his half-sister’s house, Vlachopoulos, his brother-in-law offered him a rent-free apartment he owned, but which was not immediately available. Then, Fotini Gavasiadis, Vlachopoulos’s twenty-five year old sister, and her husband Markos invited Tsafendas to stay with them until the apartment became available. Thus, Tsafendas spent the next few weeks at their house. When Vlachopoulos’s apartment became available, Tsafendas duly moved in. Tsafendas remained in this apartment for eight months. Nick Vlachopoulos also offered work to Tsafendas at his café-shop. Tsafendas worked there, but did it for free as a return because he was given the rent-free apartment by him. When Tsafendas was in Mozambique, he asked Vlachopoulos to help him sell some of his furniture. When the furniture was sold, Vlachopoulos gave the money to Marika and she sent them to him.⁴⁴⁵² All these are hardly the things a person would do for someone who was not exactly taken up by his family. Indeed they are things one would do when one cares and wants to help someone.

Others who told the author that the Commission’s conclusion was inaccurate included such members of Tsafendas’s family as his half-sister Katerina Pnema, his cousins Antony ⁴⁴⁴⁹ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁴⁵⁰ Charles Nissiotis statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁴⁵¹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁴⁵² Nick Vlachopoulos statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

and John Michaletos, Irene Michaletos, John's wife, his first cousin Mary Eintracht and Nick Vlachopoulos's sister, Fotini Gavasiadis.⁴⁴⁵³ People who were very close to Tsafendas, like Ira Kyriakakis, Andreas Babiolakis, Helen Grispos, and Nick Papadakis also stated to this study that the Commission's statement is inaccurate.⁴⁴⁵⁴

On a point of fact, the Commission stated that Tsafendas's "stepmother, a brother, a sister-in-law and a brother-in-law gave evidence before the Commission." This is true only up to a point because Tsafendas's two half-sisters, Eleni Vlachopoulos and Evangelia Nissiotis, also gave evidence to the Commission. According to the Commission's interview transcript with "Tsafendas's family," both women gave evidence along with the rest of the family on the 21st of October. Their names in the transcript of their testimony appear as Mrs. Nissiotis and Mrs. Vlachopoulos.⁴⁴⁵⁵

It is true that Tsafendas was not very close to his half-brother Victor or his half-sister Evangelia, largely because of his politics. However he was close to Katerina, and very close to his half-sister Eleni and to his stepmother Marika. Above all, he worshipped and was adored by his father.⁴⁴⁵⁶ Family relationships are often like this and we should also remember that Tsafendas had not seen his family for twenty-two years although he regularly corresponded with all of them. He sent postcards, letters and even presents on a regular basis to all the family, especially to his father, stepmother and Eleni. He wrote to his father every month and often telephoned him.⁴⁴⁵⁷

Therefore, to say that the whole family was cool to him is a huge exaggeration. It is true that after the assassination Tsafendas's family distanced themselves from him and from his political ideas and activities, claiming they knew nothing of them. This was natural under the circumstances, but no family member ever said did not accept him, as the Commission claimed. It is noteworthy that the Commission omitted most of the evidence which contradicted the claim in its Report.

⁴⁴⁵³ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John and Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁴⁵⁴ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

⁴⁴⁵⁵ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴⁴⁵⁶ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴⁴⁵⁷ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

TSAFENDAS'S EMPLOYMENT WITH HIS FAMILY

*One of his brothers-in-law said in evidence that shortly after Tsafendas's return, he employed him to assist his wife (Tsafendas's half-sister) in their cafe. After two days, however, she dismissed him because he was too lazy.*⁴⁴⁵⁸

The person who gave this evidence was Charles Nissiotis, who was married to Evangelia, Tsafendas's half-sister. Tsafendas was indeed employed for a very short time at Nissiotis's café shop, but the reason he was dismissed was entirely different to the one mentioned here, though this was probably not known to the Commission. Shortly after he arrived in Pretoria, Tsafendas began working at his brother-in-law's café.⁴⁴⁵⁹ A couple of days later, a Sunday, Tsafendas, along with everyone from his family, attended a Greek Orthodox Church service. At the end of the service, the Greek priest spoke briefly. He welcomed a family newly arrived from Greece and went on to praise South Africa and its policy of apartheid for the opportunities they gave to people to come and work there, offering them a better life than anywhere else in the world. He then attacked Communists and other "enemies" of the country.⁴⁴⁶⁰

Tsafendas was enraged and only his half-brother Victor stopped him from interrupting the priest. However, when the time came for Communion, Tsafendas refused to take the sacrament or to kiss the priest's hands, as was customary. Instead, and despite the efforts of Nick Vlachopoulos and Victor Tsafantakis, he started arguing quietly with the priest. He said a priest should not get involved in politics and that he should be ashamed for praising apartheid. The priest was polite and replied that Greeks should be grateful for South Africa's hospitality and that they should not bite the hand that fed them. Tsafendas said the Whites found things easy in South Africa because they exploited the Blacks, but life for the majority of people was far from rosy. By this time, other members of the congregation had come forward to see what was happening and began protesting on behalf of the priest and ⁴⁴⁵⁸ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 6.

⁴⁴⁵⁹ Charles Nissiotis statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁴⁶⁰ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

denouncing Tsafendas. However, Tsafendas remained calm throughout, supporting his views. Finally, his family managed to pull him away from the priest.⁴⁴⁶¹

Returning home, Tsafendas was rounded upon by his family for speaking out in public. Marika complained that he had embarrassed them all in front of everyone in the church and the whole Greek community would now hear about it. Tsafendas apologised for putting them into a difficult position and promised to keep his mouth shut from now on. However, Evangelia, fearing that they would lose their Greek customers over the church incident or that Tsafendas might start arguing with their customers, asked him to stop working at their café.⁴⁴⁶²

The Commission's biggest omission is that Tsafendas had worked for nine months at the Proclamation Café of Nick Vlachopoulos, his other brother-in-law. Tsafendas worked voluntarily at the café because Vlachopoulos had given him a rent-free apartment. Tsafendas was so good at the job that Vlachopoulos offered him a permanent position with good wages, but Tsafendas refused. He did not want to take any money after accepting the free apartment. He worked full-time at the café when he was unemployed and part-time when he was at F.A. Poole Engineering.⁴⁴⁶³ It is possible that the Commission was not aware of this fact.

TSAFENDAS'S FAMILY ABOUT THE TAPEWORM

*He (Tsafendas) said nothing to them (the family) about his alleged worm.*⁴⁴⁶⁴

This is a very important statement. It was stated in court during his summary trial that Tsafendas had a tapeworm since he was a small boy, that his step-mother was aware of its existence and was even indirectly responsible for it. Dr. Cooper had testified before the court that Tsafendas had the tapeworm since 1935 or 1936⁴⁴⁶⁵ while Dr. Muller and van Zyl testified for 1936,⁴⁴⁶⁶ a time when Tsafendas lived with his parents. Louise O'Ryan, one of the witnesses for the defence, testified as follows: "... he told me that a while back, when he was a little boy, about six feet of it came down. The doctor gave him something and six feet ⁴⁴⁶¹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁴⁶² Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁴⁶³ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁴⁴⁶⁴ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 6

⁴⁴⁶⁵ Dr. Harold Cooper's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA of it came down. He was sitting on a bucket. And then he fainted on the bucket, and his mother removed it and she destroyed it, and since then nothing has ever come down.”⁴⁴⁶⁷ The above testimony was not challenged in court by the Attorney-General despite the obvious contradiction as Tsafendas was eighteen or seventeen when he first found out about the tapeworm according to the doctors, and a little boy according to Louise O’Ryan. As already clarified, O’Ryan was referring to Tsafendas’s stepmother, not his mother, from whom he was separated when he was a few months old.⁴⁴⁶⁸

⁴⁴⁶⁶ Dr. Hendrik Muller's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA; Reyner van Zyl's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

Tsafendas lived constantly with his family until July 17, 1937,⁴⁴⁶⁹ but according to the Commission, Tsafendas never mentioned anything about a tapeworm to the family during all those years. It seems highly unlikely that a young boy could believe he had a tapeworm inside him but not ask his parents for help. More importantly, Tsafendas’s stepmother denied that the incident described by Louisa O’Ryan ever took place. The Commission’s transcript from the evidence given by the stepmother Marika and the other family members says:

*“Tsafendas never talked to the family about his tapeworm. According to them, he was definitely not insane.”*⁴⁴⁷⁰

Tsafendas’s half-sister Katerina Pnema and first cousin Mary Eintracht, who lived under the same roof as Tsafendas at the time, both told the author that the incident involving Marika never took place and that Tsafendas would have certainly told his parents if he believed he had a tapeworm. Marika insisted until she died that Tsafendas was perfectly sane and that he had invented the tapeworm story so as not to be executed. Every member of his family said the same thing; no-one believed that Tsafendas really thought he had a tapeworm.⁴⁴⁷¹

The Commission’s Report does not mention that Marika denied what was stated in court. Certainly it was not the Commission’s responsibility to deal with what happened at the summary trial, but the obvious fact that Tsafendas had lied about the origins of the tapeworm should surely have been mentioned.

TSAFENDAS’S VISIT TO HIS HALF-SISTER IN UMTALI

⁴⁴⁶⁷ Louise O’ Ryan’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴⁴⁶⁸ See Louisa O’Ryan’s testimony in Chapter 5.

⁴⁴⁶⁹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II A, Paragraph 17.

⁴⁴⁷⁰ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴⁴⁷¹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

*During this period he also visited his half-sister at Marandellas. He asked her for money, but she would have nothing to do with him and refused to help him.*⁴⁴⁷²

In a personal interview with the author, Katerina Pnefma, the half-sister in question, described the Commission's statement as inaccurate, but she acknowledged that it was what she had told the police. The Commission cannot therefore be blamed for accepting her words. Pnefma did not have a very close relationship with Tsafendas; they had completely different personalities and often argued over politics, but nevertheless they both cared for each other.

When Tsafendas visited Pnefma and her husband Gerry, it became quickly obvious to them that he was as dedicated as ever to Communism and to the fight against colonialism. An argument arose when Tsafendas denounced Greeks and other Whites in Rhodesia for taking advantage of Blacks. Pnefma clearly remembers her half-brother saying he was "disgusted" by what he had seen and by the way the indigenous people were treated. As for money, Pnefma said Tsafendas did not ask her for cash or any other assistance. She does not recall exactly what she told the police, but she admits that she may have said he asked for money and she spurned him in order to distance herself from him as far as possible and to demonstrate that they were not close. She insists that Tsafendas never asked her, and as far as she knew, anyone else in the family, for money. "He asked me a couple of times to help him get a job, but never for money. He was too proud to ask me for money, but he would ask for help to get a job."⁴⁴⁷³

Although Tsafendas did not ask for assistance in Rhodesia, presumably because he did not need it, he did so just a few months later. Shortly after he was released from the prison in Beira where he was detained for conducting subversive propaganda for the independence of Mozambique, Tsafendas contacted Katerina and her husband. He was unemployed and asked if they could help him get a job in Mozambique. Tsafendas thus demonstrated that he was close enough to his half-sister to ask for a favour despite their political disagreements. Katerina, although unaware of his latest imprisonment, showed that she cared for her half-brother by helping to get work for him. Gerry Pnefma was friendly with the manager of a dock in Beira and persuaded him to hire his brother-in-law as an interpreter.⁴⁴⁷⁴

⁴⁴⁷² Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter III C, Paragraph 14.

⁴⁴⁷³ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁴⁷⁴ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

However, Tsafendas lasted only a few days before being dismissed for urging the Mozambican workers to strike because of their working conditions. Tsafendas also denounced the manager and the company as “capitalists exploiting the workers.” The manager told Gerry Pnefma that the “only reason he did not call the police was that he did not want to cause his family problems.” He urged his friend not to help Tsafendas again because he was a dangerous Communist who could get him into trouble. Katerina Pnefma did not reveal this episode in her statement to the police and the Commission was probably unaware of it.⁴⁴⁷⁵

TSAFENDAS AND HIS HALF-SISTER KATERINA PNEFMA

*On another occasion Tsafendas was most upset because, he said, he had received a letter from his sister in Rhodesia telling him that she was going to Beira for a wedding, but that she did not wish to see him at all since he was a disgrace to the family.*⁴⁴⁷⁶

This part is accurate, but other incidents in Tsafendas’s life of which the Commission was probably unaware provide necessary clarification. Pnefma remembers the wedding in question and confirmed in an interview with the author that she told Tsafendas she did not want to see him because he was an embarrassment to the family. This was after Tsafendas was dismissed from the job at the dock in Beira that she and her husband had helped him obtain. Furthermore, Pnefma had learned in the interim of Tsafendas’s arrests by the Portuguese Security Police and that he had spent three months in prison. Pnefma considered Tsafendas as an embarrassment throughout her whole life, which she believes he then ruined by the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd.⁴⁴⁷⁷

⁴⁴⁷⁵ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁴⁷⁶ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 22.

⁴⁴⁷⁷ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

TSAFENDAS BEFORE THE COMMISSION

TSAFENDAS'S FIRST APPEARANCE BEFORE THE COMMISSION

On 25th October, Tsafendas gave evidence before the Commission. The Commission was aware that he was quite knowledgeable about mental disorders—he also admitted to the Commission that he had read fairly extensively on the subject in order to determine what was wrong with him—and therefore adopted a somewhat sceptical attitude towards him. It is clear that his word cannot be relied upon, and that he is sufficiently intelligent to put on a fairly good act.

The Commission was able to form only a lay opinion on his mental condition, and that was—after two hours' questioning—that he was not mentally normal. He was certainly not the practically normal person described by Mr. Hartford, but apparently more normal than he was when some of the psychiatrists interviewed him.

He answered all the questions freely. At times, especially at the beginning, he stuttered slightly, sometimes he was vague, incoherent, and evasive, but otherwise his answers were logical and well formulated.

He explained that he wished to buy the pistol and knives for self-protection. He tried to relate how four Bantu had attempted to rob him on a bus one day, and that he had seen a “skolly” stab another with a knife. This evidence was given laboriously. However, he stated of his own accord that he had not yet told the Police this, and explained that he had only just remembered it. He also said that he had not deliberately planned to kill Dr. Verwoerd, but that he had been taken by a sudden impulse to do so. When he was told that he must have had the impulse when he had hidden the knives on his person, his reply was that this had been done only five minutes before the assault. To the question whether he was sorry for himself, he replied fairly promptly in the affirmative; but when he was asked whether he in any way regretted what he had done, he evaded the question by saying that the whole affair was like a dream and that he was the centre round which everything revolved. He showed no signs of remorse. When he was asked whether he was against apartheid, he replied that he was in favour of separate development, but that he was against the laws prohibiting sexual intercourse between the various groups. He utterly denied ever having been in Russia. He said that the only occasion on which he had communicated with a Russian Embassy was when he had made enquiries about permission to go to Berlin.

He denied that he had told Mr. Vercuiel that he would murder Dr. Verwoerd. He explained that Vercuiel had persecuted him. Vercuiel dismissed practically all English-speaking persons and that was the reason why he was dismissed.

He denied that he had ever tried to canvass support in London for an uprising in South Africa. His efforts, he said, were confined to Portuguese territories.

As far as the ladies with whom he had boarded and by whom he had been given notice are concerned, he explained that they were disappointed because he was not interested in them and then started a campaign against him. He stated that he sometimes took liquor, especially a buchu brandy, because it calmed down his worm or serpent for a few days. Extracts from his evidence were submitted to Dr. Wolpowitz of the Stikland Hospital as well as to Dr. A. B. van der Merwe of Stellenbosch, and both found indications of schizophrenia in the evidence.⁴⁴⁷⁸

Tsafendas gave evidence to the Commission for the first time on 25th October, 1966, five days after Judge Beyers found him unfit to stand trial. At this time, he was waiting for Vorster's decision as to his future, since he was now considered to be the State President's patient. Before we examine Tsafendas's evidence, it must be noted that his statement, not only the typed version of his remarks, but also the Dictaphone recording, are missing from the National Archives. Exactly same thing happened with the account of his second appearance before the Commission on 11th November, 1966. Therefore the author is not in position to know precisely what Tsafendas told the Commission and can only rely on what is in its Report. It should also be noted again that Tsafendas's original statement to the police and to General van den Bergh on the night of the assassination has also gone missing.

The Report starts its account of Tsafendas's evidence to the Commission with a very significant statement in which it accepts that Tsafendas is capable of pretending to be mad:

“The Commission was aware that he was quite knowledgeable about mental disorders—he also admitted to the Commission that he had read fairly extensively on the subject in order to determine what was wrong with him—and therefore adopted a somewhat sceptical attitude towards him. It is clear that his word cannot be relied upon, and that he is sufficiently intelligent to put on a fairly good act.”

The Commission then simply describes what Tsafendas said in his evidence without using Tsafendas's own words. It is germane to recall that in outlining his movements prior to the assassination, the Commission had used large excerpts from Tsafendas's statement, thus providing an obviously more authentic perspective. The Commission, conceding that its viewpoint was not an expert one, found Tsafendas to be "more normal" than he was when examined by the psychiatrists, but still not a "practically normal person." Tsafendas gave evidence for two hours, during which time the Commission found his answers to be logical and well formulated. This contradicts Dr. Cooper's diagnosis that Tsafendas was unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes, as well as Dr. Aubrey Zabow's opinion that he suffered from thought-disorder.

⁴⁴⁷⁸ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18.

The Commission here does not write anything about Tsafendas's motive, although he must have been asked about it. After all, this was arguably the most crucial, question of all: why he killed Dr. Verwoerd. However, the Commission makes no reference to it. Although the Commission devotes an entire chapter to this question – Chapter III: Demitrio Tsafendas's Motives – even there, no clear motivation is elucidated.

Nevertheless, the Commission has mentioned here something very important, namely that Tsafendas did not show any remorse for killing Dr. Verwoerd. The conclusion must be that the Commission avoided asking the obvious question about motive or that it suppressed the answer because it contradicted the summary trial's conclusion, that Tsafendas killed Dr. Verwoerd because of a tapeworm. After all, Tsafendas had already told the police his motive – that killing Dr. Verwoerd might lead to a change in the policy of apartheid. It is very possible that Tsafendas even repeated his statement, as he did often thirty years later, and the Commission killed it as it did with the statement to the police when dealing with the motive issue in the relevant chapter. Three decades later, Tsafendas still felt no remorse about the assassination. When asked by Fathers Ioannis Tsafaridis and Minas Constandinou if he ever regretted his action, he replied, "No, no, no, not even for a moment, never, never. I did the right thing. He was a dictator, he created apartheid ..." Indeed, he said he would have regretted not doing it. He said he believed apartheid would soon collapse with Dr. Verwoerd out of the way and he did not expect it to last so long without him. Nevertheless, he maintained that he did not regret his action.⁴⁴⁷⁹

The fact that Dr. Verwoerd's death was discussed at the Eleni three days before the assassination is not mentioned at all. As we will see later in this chapter, although the Commission has dedicated a substantial amount of space to the issue, it makes no reference at all to Tsafendas's version of how come the issue of Dr. Verwoerd's death was discussed then. Did the Commission not ask Tsafendas if he had any idea how Dr. Verwoerd's death came to be discussed on board the tanker? After all, he was the man who laid the plans as to how and when he would kill Dr. Verwoerd. The Commission has speculated about the origins of the incident and after seeing the statements of some of those who were involved in the exchanges, it had the opportunity to ask the most important witness of all about the issue. However it seems that either Tsafendas was never questioned on the matter or his response was suppressed. It is possible that, if asked, Tsafendas would have volunteered a theory as to how Dr. Verwoerd's death was discussed three days before he died, namely that his discussion of a hypothetical assassination of Dr. Verwoerd which he had with some of the crew on board the Eleni was overheard by someone, misunderstood and passed on as a fact.

⁴⁴⁷⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

Another issue that goes unmentioned is that of the references which helped Tsafendas get the job in Parliament. Tsafendas's access to Dr. Verwoerd was a huge security lapse and the Commission had gone to great lengths to find out what went wrong. Sydney Wiehand, one of the messengers who appointed Tsafendas, told the Commission that Tsafendas had supplied references but he could not recall the specifics. Did the Commission not press him as to who provided the references? The messenger referred to "a school." A little further investigation would surely have disclosed that one reference came from Limasollu Naci, the most prestigious private college in Istanbul, where Tsafendas taught English for six months. However, such a revelation would have been incompatible with the Court's portrayal of Tsafendas.

The Commission did, however, permit reference to one instance of political activity by Tsafendas. It stated that he denied "that he ever tried to canvass support in London for an uprising in South Africa. His efforts, he said, were confined to Portuguese territories." Of course, Tsafendas would not have admitted that he tried to rally support for South Africa as he was still hoping to be transferred to a hospital, thus he could not deviate from what was said about him in the court.

The Report concludes that Tsafendas's statement to the Commission was given to two doctors and both found signs of schizophrenia in the evidence. Since the statement is not in the author's possession, it cannot comment authoritatively about it. However, it is very possible that Tsafendas deliberately included some "delusional" thoughts in his evidence so as to maintain his act. Neither of Tsafendas's statements to the police contain any sign of schizophrenia, as Professors Alban Burke and Tuviah Zabow confirmed.⁴⁴⁸⁰

Professor John Dugard said about the first and main statement that it "completely confirms the view that Tsafendas was not insane. It reads like a very normal story of a politically informed person, angry with apartheid and Dr. Verwoerd, determined to make a change, with nothing to lose personally. Really an incredible statement which was carefully concealed."⁴⁴⁸¹ Although the Report mentions nothing else of significance, it seems unlikely that this is all that was discussed with Tsafendas over a period of two hours.

TSAFENDAS'S SECOND APPEARANCE BEFORE THE COMMISSION

*On 11th November, 1966, the Commission interviewed Tsafendas again. His condition was appreciably better than on the previous occasion. He understood everything well, and gave his answers fairly promptly, which, with one or two exceptions, were logical and to the point.*⁴⁴⁸²

The Commission Report devotes only forty words to Tsafendas's second appearance, the forty words set out above, which contain not a single reference to what Tsafendas said. His own account of his appearance has also gone missing, therefore the author is not in position to know what was discussed.

CONCLUSION

Although Tsafendas gave evidence twice to the Commission, the Report contains very little of what he said and this not in Tsafendas's words but in those of the Commission. The most important issue, why he killed Dr. Verwoerd, remained unanswered. It seems highly unlikely that the Commission failed to ask Tsafendas why he killed Dr. Verwoerd, but still nothing is mentioned about it. Either the Commission did not ask the most important question of all, or it asked and did not like the answer and so made sure it did not see the light of day. The Commission does not mention the tapeworm, clearly distancing itself from it. However, if ⁴⁴⁸⁰ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016.

⁴⁴⁸¹ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

⁴⁴⁸² Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II D, Paragraph 19.

Tsafendas did mention it, the Commission would surely have included it in the Report in line with its generally negative approach to Tsafendas's character and actions.

The motive is not the only issue to go unexamined. The Dr. Verwoerd death discussion on the Eleni is ignored, as is the question of Tsafendas's job references. Any unbiased Commission of Inquiry would have attempted to find answers to these fundamental questions, especially since the person most likely to have the answers, Tsafendas himself, was available. The outstanding questions were:

- What was Tsafendas's motive? Why did he kill Dr. Verwoerd?
- What happened on the Eleni? How did it come about that Dr. Verwoerd's death was discussed three days before he died?
- Which reference did Tsafendas use to get the job in the House of Assembly?

If Tsafendas was asked about these issues and gave an explanation suitable to the Commission, van Wyk would almost certainly have included his answers, as it did with the issues of his appointment to the Parliament and Vercueil. That there are no comments from Tsafendas suggests that he was either not asked, or that his answers were suppressed by the Commission. As we have seen, the Commission certainly suppressed the evidence Tsafendas gave to the police as well as important evidence given about him by witnesses, so it cannot be ruled out that Tsafendas's answers, too, were simply made to disappear.

THE ASSASSINATION

EXPERT STABBER

*The doctor who carried out the post-mortem examination informed the Commission that there were no grounds for the rumour that the wounds had been inflicted by an expert stabber. He described them as quite ordinary. The Commission had the opportunity of inspecting all the photographs showing the position and extent of the wounds and is in agreement with this opinion.*⁴⁴⁸³

Dr. E.L. Fisher, a psychiatrist and a United Party MP, the first doctor to treat Dr. Verwoerd after Tsafendas's attack in Parliament, told Die Vaderland the day after the assassination that "it was clear that the assassin must have received training in the art of handling a knife. Each time the knife slipped through the ribs showing that it was not handled haphazardly as a usual stabbing would be carried out."⁴⁴⁸⁴ Furthermore, the Dagbreek, the newspaper on which Dr. Verwoerd was chairman, reported on September 11 that, "Medical doctors have also maintained that the way in which the stabbing was done attest to the attacker being an expert in using a dagger. The first thrust of the dagger was to the neck, in order to force the victim to raise his arms, and so open access to the heart. The second blow used the flat part of the dagger pushed between the ribs into the heart and twisted inside. The third and fourth blows were pushed into the lungs with the same precision."⁴⁴⁸⁵

The author agrees here with the post-mortem and the Commission. Firstly, Dr. Fisher was a psychiatrist, not an expert on knife wounds. It seems highly unlikely that he was able to determine the path of the knife and the damage it caused purely by observing the visible wounds. Secondly, Dr. Verwoerd's injuries could be seen for only a few minutes when his shirt was torn open and his torso partly bared before his body was removed. Further, most of the doctors' efforts during this period were aimed at reviving the Prime Minister by mouth-to-mouth and artificial respiration. As far as the author can establish, Dr. Fisher mentioned expertise in knifing handling only to Die Vaderland and not to any of the other newspapers he spoke to. As for the unnamed doctors who were quoted by Dagbreek, on which Dr. Verwoerd was chairman, it seems that they were able to form such an opinion by simply reading at the description of the stabbing and it seems highly unlikely to have been present.

⁴⁴⁸³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II D, Paragraph 12.

⁴⁴⁸⁴ Crowd and Revo, The Pattern of Assassination, p. 20.

⁴⁴⁸⁵ Dagbreek, 'Tsafendas Het vir V.V. in Persie Gewerk', 11 September 1966.

Even if they were present at the stabbing, they could not have been any of the doctors who treated Dr. Verwoerd as none of them made such statement apart from Dr. Fisher.

As for Tsafendas stabbing Dr. Verwoerd first in the neck, this was the natural thing to do. Dr. Verwoerd was seated at his desk and with his hands in front of him, a posture which made impossible for anyone to aim at the heart. Thus, for anyone approaching from the front, the neck was the most obvious and accessible target. A serious wound in the neck and throat area, however, could well prove fatal. Tsafendas's second target was the heart. Verwoerd by now had opened his arms, exposing a target area for Tsafendas. In terms purely of physical efficiency, Tsafendas's actions were normal.

Tsafendas could not be considered an "expert stabber," whatever that is, but he was certainly familiar with knives. His father would often hand-craft knives when he worked at Iscor Iron and Steel Works while one of Tsafendas's favourite possessions was a bayonet, which was given to him by his grandmother Katerina.⁴⁴⁸⁶ More importantly, all or most partisans of the DSE during the Greek Civil War possessed bayonets or at least knives. Tsafendas had received some basic training in guerrilla warfare from his comrades, so it is possible that he had learned how to use a bayonet or a knife, though he never said anything to that effect.

TSAFENDAS'S STATEMENT TO MAJOR ROSSOUW ON SEPTEMBER 11

The whole of Paragraph 15 in Chapter II D is taken from Tsafendas's statement to Major Rossouw on the 11th of September. It is used to describe how Tsafendas applied for the job in the House of Assembly and how he planned and carried out the assassination. The inclusion of his statement here shows that Tsafendas was perfectly able to describe the assassination and what happened before it. In court, Dr. Cooper, Dr. Sakinofsky and Dr. Zabow had testified that Tsafendas was unable to tell them what happened before and during the assassination.

⁴⁴⁸⁶ Michael Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 14 April 2016.

TSAFENDAS ABOUT GETTING AWAY AFTER THE ASSASSINATION

*I deny that I am a Communist. I am a Christian and I believe in the Bible. I did not think I would get away after murdering the Prime Minister. I did not care what happened to me.*⁴⁴⁸⁷

The issue of Tsafendas denying being a Communist has been discussed in Chapter 4 so it will not be considered again. As to his other comments, the Commission mentioned his statement that he “did not care what happened to me,” but omitted what came next, a declaration of his motive. Tsafendas made the comment in the statement used by the Commission. He told Major Rossouw on 11th September:

*“I did not care about the consequences for what would happen to me afterwards. I was so disgusted with the racial policy that I went through with my plans to kill the Prime Minister.”*⁴⁴⁸⁸

Then on 19th September, Tsafendas said to Major Rossouw:

*“I never thought about hiding if I had to do the job with a knife. I didn’t have much of a chance of getting away when using a knife. I didn’t care much and didn’t give it a second thought that I would be caught. I just happened to do it that way. I always had a grudge against the South African Government on account of its racial policies and I hated Dr. Verwoerd because he was a foreigner - a Hollander.”*⁴⁴⁸⁹

These statements reflect Tsafendas deep political convictions and determination, something that it is not evident in the Commission’s Report. By reducing his passionate explanation to the bald, eight-word phrase, “I did not care what happened to me,” the Commission manages to suggest the assassination was almost a whim by a man without a motive and unaware of the consequences.

TSAFENDAS’S ESCAPE PLAN?

Tsafendas did not have an escape plan for the assassination, but this was only because the weapon he decided to use would almost certainly make flight impossible. He had definitely planned to get away when he worked out his initial assassination strategy, to shoot Dr.

⁴⁴⁸⁷ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II D, Paragraph 15.

⁴⁴⁸⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁴⁸⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

Verwoerd. He aborted this plan when he was not able to get a pistol and decided to use a knife instead. He told Major Rossouw regarding his escape plan:

TSAFENDAS: I was going to find refuge on the tanker, the Eleni, which I knew was sailing to South America. My plans were, however, upset when I could not get the right pistol. The boat sailed on the Saturday before the Tuesday on which I stabbed the Prime Minister.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Did you know that the Eleni had sailed before you attacked, the Prime Minister? If so, what were your plans to get away?

TSAFENDAS: Yes, I knew the ship had already left. I never thought about hiding if I had to do the job with a knife. I didn't have much of a chance of getting away when using a knife. I didn't care much and didn't give it a second thought that I would be caught...⁴⁴⁹⁰

Tsafendas's initial plan to shoot Dr. Verwoerd and escape on the Eleni, was also mentioned at his summary trial.⁴⁴⁹¹ His intention had been to shoot Dr. Verwoerd during a function at Parliament organized by the Parliamentary correspondents.⁴⁴⁹² He was listed to work as a waiter at the event, which Dr. Verwoerd was scheduled to attend. The function was set for Friday, September 2, the evening before the Eleni's scheduled departure. In the event, Dr. Verwoerd did not attend the party,⁴⁴⁹³ but Tsafendas had already aborted his plan because of his inability to find a pistol.⁴⁴⁹⁴ This issue is also discussed under 'Escape Plan' in "The Eleni" section.

⁴⁴⁹⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁴⁹¹ Dr. Harold Cooper's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴⁴⁹² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴⁴⁹³ Fred Feinauer statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁴⁹⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

TSAFENDAS'S RECLASSIFICATION

*On 30th August, 1965, he applied as Demitrio Tsafendas to the Regional Representative of the Department of the Interior to be reclassified as a Coloured person. He gave the reason that he regarded himself as a Coloured and that he wished to marry a Coloured. On 1st September, 1965, he made a sworn statement in support of his application.*⁴⁴⁹⁵

The above statement, although almost certainly correct, is a direct contradiction of a memorandum written on 3rd of October by Attorney-General van den Berg, who led the case for the State at Tsafendas's summary trial. The following is an extract from it:

*"According to a statement in my possession, there was never any question of a marriage between him and the Coloured woman, Helen Daniels, from Belleville South. Information from Home Affairs files indicates that he applied for reclassification as a Coloured because he wanted to apply for a business licence in a Coloured area."*⁴⁴⁹⁶

The Home Affairs files which van den Berg referred to were not found in the archives nor was anything discovered relating to Tsafendas's application regarding his reclassification. The only information about this matter comes from witnesses' statements, including that of Tsafendas. All agree with the Commission and disagree with the Attorney-General. What is important here, however, is not the reclassification or Tsafendas's motive behind it, but that the Attorney-General was not in possession of all the evidence gathered by the South African police. It is obvious that the Attorney-General and the Commission gave contradictory statements on the same issue and the most likely reason for this was that not all the evidence gathered by the police was given to them.

In addition: After the assassination there were rumours that Tsafendas killed Dr. Verwoerd because he was barred from marrying a Coloured girl because of the Immorality Act. Years later, Father Minas Constandinou asked Tsafendas if these rumours were true. Tsafendas smiled and dismissed the stories. He said that if he wanted to marry a Coloured girl he could have taken her to Mozambique where it was legal to marry her, or to Cuba, where he was planning to move and live the rest of his life.⁴⁴⁹⁷ ⁴⁴⁹⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 39.

⁴⁴⁹⁶ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkoperij. NASA.

⁴⁴⁹⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

TSAFENDAS'S SUMMARY TRIAL (Chapter II D, Paragraph 17)

The Commission dedicates a paragraph to the summary trial, but gets an important fact wrong. It states that Patrick O’Ryan and his wife, among others, testified to Tsafendas’s “peculiar behaviour.” In fact, O’Ryan, when asked about Tsafendas, told the court that he “never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind,” or that he was “mentally disturbed.”⁴⁴⁹⁸

The Commission then refers to four psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas and testified at the trial: Dr. Cooper, Dr. Zabow, Prof. van Wyk and Dr. Macgregor. Surprisingly, Dr. Sakinofsky is omitted. The Report then states that Dr. Muller, a specialist physician, also examined Tsafendas and found that he had no tapeworm. However, Dr. Muller only spoke to Tsafendas, he did not physically examine him.

TSAFENDAS'S MOTHER

*According to information supplied to the South African Consul-General in Lourenço Marques, his mother is still alive and is living in the Bantu quarter of Lourenço Marques.*⁴⁴⁹⁹

⁴⁴⁹⁸ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴⁴⁹⁹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II A, Paragraph 6.

No such evidence was found in the archives. However, the Portuguese press and later the South African reported this claim about Tsafendas's mother as a fact.⁴⁵⁰⁰ Tsafendas always maintained, as is also stated in the Report, that his mother died when he was a boy. That is what he was told by his father and by members of his mother's tribe,⁴⁵⁰¹ while he had also obtained her death certificate which stated that she had died on January 12, 1927.⁴⁵⁰² The author has not been able to resolve this contradiction or to discover anything further about Tsafendas's mother, but it seems rather unlikely that someone in the Registrar of Births and Deaths in Lourenço Marques would have produced a fake death certificate and that all these people lied.

TSAFENDAS'S NAME

Both Tsafendas's name and surname underwent changes from time to time in the course of his life, besides which he was known to some people by the nicknames of MIMIS and MIEMIE. The other first names and surnames which he used from time to time are as follows:

First names: DEMETRIO, DIMITRIO, DIMITRO, DEMETRIOS, DEMITRIUS and JAMES.

Surnames: TSAFANDAKIS, TSAFENDAKIS, TSAFANTAKIS, TSAFENDOS, TSAFENDIS, TSAFANTAKIS and WILLIAMS.⁴⁵⁰³

Although Tsafendas's father, Michalis, used the surname Tsafantakis, the family's original name was Tsafendas and Dimitri was aware of this from a very young age. A change in nomenclature had occurred more than a hundred years earlier when Crete was under Ottoman occupation.⁴⁵⁰⁴ The rebellious activities by the Cretans were causing the empire much trouble, so the Ottoman overlords ordered that "akis," a suffix indicating smallness, as in a child, should be added to every Cretan name. It is customary in Greece for a boy named Nicholas to become Nicholakis to his family and friends; Georgios would be Georgakis and Dimitri-Dimitrakis. However, the Ottomans' intention was to humiliate and mock the ⁴⁵⁰⁰ Dagbreek, 'Kleurlingmoeder in Haglike Omstandighede', 11 September 1966; Diario de Lisboa, 'A Mae de Dimitrio Ainda Vive Nos Arredores de Lourenço Marques', 8 September 1966; Rand Daily Mail, 'Tsafendas' Mother Still Alive', 9 September 1966; Diario de Lisboa, 'Localizada a Mae de Tsafendas', 13 September 1966.

⁴⁵⁰¹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁵⁰² 'The history of the person who inflicted the fatal wounds to the late Dr. Verwoerd' drafted by Col. McIntyre, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Subject: Leer W.D. 10/10/4102 der Stafendas. NASA

⁴⁵⁰³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II A, Paragraph 4

⁴⁵⁰⁴ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

rebellious Cretans by suggesting they were little people of no account. The Cretans were furious and opposed the change, but the rule of the occupiers prevailed.⁴⁵⁰⁵

Hearing this story, Dimitri asked his father to change the family name back to Tsafendas. Michalis sympathised but said that would be difficult since everyone knew him as Tsafantakis and that was how his name appeared in official documents.⁴⁵⁰⁶ A few years later, however, Dimitri went ahead and changed his own surname to Tsafendas. The date of the change is uncertain. In all available official documents up to the 1950s, he appears as Tsafantakis.

⁴⁵⁰⁵ Apostolakis, "Cretan Family Names".

⁴⁵⁰⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

Finally, Tsafendas often deliberately registered himself with a slightly different name so that his past would not be traced, using such spellings as Stafendas, Tsascadeskis, Tsafedis etc. This was not difficult as he was in possession of a birth certificate written in Greek. Whenever he produced it to someone, he would just replace one or few letters from the certificate but would still make it look like his proper name. For example, the name was written as “Τσαφαντακης,” so he would keep the Greek letters that are similar to English letter like T, a, t, k but substitute some of the others with false letters, for example, Tcamaftakus etc.⁴⁵⁰⁷ Tsafendas sometimes gave James as his Christian name. This is an anglicised form of Dimitri often used by Greek people outside of their home country. Dimitri can also become Jimmy or Jim. An Italian friend of Tsafendas in Beira always called him Jimmy.⁴⁵⁰⁸

TSAFENDAS SEXUALLY ASSAULTED

*Tsafendas alleges that in 1927 he was violated by a member of his family. He says that he did not tell anyone of this, and it is not possible, therefore, to check this allegation.*⁴⁵⁰⁹

Despite exhaustive research, the author has not been able to establish whether or not such an incident took place. In 1946, in Grafton State Hospital, Tsafendas spoke about his sexual life and past sexual “traumas,” all of which he invented, but he did not mention being raped or assaulted. Tsafendas brought the rape story up with Dr. Cooper when the psychiatrist examined him for the defence at the summary trial, but he also spoke of it to the police in his statement of September 12, 1966, claiming that his step-mother persuaded her brother to rape him when he was a boy in Lourenço Marques. It is not possible to know what, if anything, occurred on this occasion. What is almost impossible to believe is that his step-mother asked her brother to violate her stepson and that Tsafendas really believed such a thing happened. He did speak negatively about his relationship with his step-mother to various psychiatrists, but never to anyone else. On the contrary, he often described how loving she was and how she treated him as her own child. What is more, Tsafendas never spoke about the alleged rape to anyone else, though the embarrassment attaching to such a story might have been a restraining factor.

⁴⁵⁰⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴⁵⁰⁸ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

⁴⁵⁰⁹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II A, Paragraph 9.

A key to the conundrum might lie in a statement Tsafendas made in later in life, that two claims were necessary to make an “insane act” look real and convince someone you are mad:

- a. To have a family history of insanity and
- b. To have a childhood trauma.⁴⁵¹⁰

This could explain why Tsafendas said negative things about his step-mother to the psychiatrists, but not to the police, since at the time, he was not trying to prove he was insane. It is very possible that Tsafendas spoke of the alleged rape to the police because he knew he might need to pretend madness to avoid torture or worse as a consequence of killing Dr. Verwoerd. If a mad act became necessary, having a childhood trauma in his past would add authenticity.

TSAFENDAS IN ISTANBUL

*The next country he visited was Turkey. It appears that he was there during the second half of 1961 and the beginning of 1962. He was employed for two months as a teacher of English.*⁴⁵¹¹

The Commission statement that Tsafendas was employed as a teacher of English in Turkey was well known, having been reported by South African newspapers within two days of the assassination.⁴⁵¹² The Commission merely touches on the fact, gives no details, fails to mention the name of the school, although it was aware of it, and shortens the length of Tsafendas’s stay. Tsafendas did not work for two months, but for about five-six months. The Commission wishes to sidestep the question that would have been raised if it was known that Tsafendas worked for five-six months as a teacher at the best private language college in Turkey, namely, how could a schizophrenic unable to follow a conversation for more than fifteen minutes, with thought-disorder and a disjointed way of speaking manage to secure a job of this sort and keep it for so long? This is a very important part of the Report and it is examined in the section ‘The Limasollu Naci’ of this chapter in the ‘Employment’ section.

TSAFENDAS IN RUSSIA?

⁴⁵¹⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Father Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁵¹¹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 37.

⁴⁵¹² Daily Dispatch, ‘Tsafendas Taught English in Turkey’, 8 September 1966: 1; The Cape Times, ‘Tsafendas Taught Turks English’, 8 September 1966; The Daily News, ‘Tsafendas Seen As ‘Mystery Man’’, 8 September 1966: 17.

*If Tsafendas ever visited Russia, it must have been during the years 1961 or 1962. As will appear from this report, there are witnesses who allege that he intimated on certain occasions that he had in fact been to Russia and that he could speak Russian. Tsafendas denies that he has any knowledge of this language, or that he has ever visited Russia. The evidence in this connection is not strong, and it is not possible to base any definite finding on it.*⁴⁵¹³

The author has not been able to establish whether Tsafendas ever visited Russia since the evidence is contradictory and not conclusive for either option. However, it seems more likely that he did not go there. However, if he did visit Russia, it could certainly not have been in 1961 and was highly unlikely to have been in 1962.

Tsafendas often sent postcards from abroad and sometimes photographs of himself in a foreign town or city. His half-sister, Katerina Pnema, told the author that she thinks she received a letter from Tsafendas from Russia, but she is not 100 per cent sure. She is quite certain, however, that it came from the Eastern Bloc and could have been from Bulgaria. It was certainly a letter and not a photograph or postcard, she said, as she would have remembered it. She also does not recall Tsafendas ever telling her that he visited Russia.⁴⁵¹⁴

Tsafendas's other half-sister, Eleni Vlachopoulos, stated in Live and Let Live that Tsafendas had visited Russia, but she did not say how she knew this.⁴⁵¹⁵ Pnema suggested that it may have been because of correspondence she received or from talks they had afterwards among the family. She said it is also possible that her sister confused Russia with Bulgaria. Furthermore, Tsafendas once sent his father a gift of a miniature Katyusha rocket, the weapon used widely by the Soviets during the Second World War. However, this was certainly in the 1950s when his father was still living with Tsafendas's step-mother and before they separated.⁴⁵¹⁶ It is also obvious that Tsafendas could have acquired the toy rocket anywhere in Europe. Finally, Gordon Winter claimed that General van den Bergh had evidence that Tsafendas visited Russia, but he withheld this information from the Commission and from his report on Tsafendas.⁴⁵¹⁷ However, he did not specify what his evidence was.

⁴⁵¹³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 38.

⁴⁵¹⁴ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁵¹⁵ Eleni Vlachopoulos in Live and Let Live.

⁴⁵¹⁶ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁵¹⁷ Gordon Winter to David Beresford, 8 September 1998. From David Beresford's personal collection.

Tsafendas always talked about the countries he visited and none of the seventy-five witnesses interviewed by the author recalled him saying he had been to Russia. Such was his talkative character, they said that if he had been, he would at least have told the people close to him. However, some of these witnesses did not rule out that Tsafendas might have told them and they forgot. Tsafendas spoke at length over a period of more than ten years to the priests who visited him in prison and in hospital. He told them about his life from the day he was born, including several confidential information such as the truth about the tapeworm. However, none of the priests remembers Tsafendas telling them he had been to Russia.⁴⁵¹⁸ It seems unlikely that Tsafendas would talk in detail about his life and journeying and omit Russia. His close first cousin, Mary Eintracht, who got numerous letters and postcards from him is certain that she never received any from Russia and that he never told her he had been there.⁴⁵¹⁹

As far as the author can establish for certain, the only country in the then Communist Eastern Bloc which Tsafendas visited was Bulgaria. The probability is that he was never in Russia, but if he was, it was certainly not in 1961 and was probably not in 1962, when his movements are fully accounted for. He was in Jerusalem on January 20, 1961⁴⁵²⁰ and spent the next five months in the area before travelling through Lebanon and Syria by bus; he crossed the Taurus mountain range and reached Ankara in May 1961 and stayed there for a month.⁴⁵²¹

Around June 1961, Tsafendas arrived in Istanbul and remained there until December 1961. He then went to Bulgaria and spent Christmas and New Year's Eve in Greece. In January 1962 he visited Crete and at the end of the same month arrived in Brindisi, southern Italy.⁴⁵²² He arrived in Rome on February 8, 1962⁴⁵²³ and by the end of the month he was in Lisbon, having travelled by train.⁴⁵²⁴ Sometime in June or July 1962, Tsafendas was in London. It is unknown how long he stayed in Britain but he was certainly back in Lisbon in ⁴⁵¹⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

⁴⁵¹⁹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁴⁵²⁰ Report of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, proc. 518/15/55. Co. 334. 6 April 1961. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁵²¹ Confidential Report of the Ministerio Dos Negocios Estrangeiros regarding Dimtri Tsafendas, proc. 518/15/55. Co. 367. 20 October 1961. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁵²² Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁵²³ Seccao Consular Report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 10 February 1962. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁵²⁴ Confidential PIDE report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas, No: 3.699-G.U, 13 November 1962. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

October 1962.⁴⁵²⁵ He then remained in Portugal until October 1963 when he returned to Mozambique.⁴⁵²⁶

All of this makes it extremely difficult for Tsafendas to have gone to Russia during the two years mentioned by the Commission, 1961 and 1962. The only possible window was between February 1962 and October 1963, when he was in Portugal. However, Tsafendas spent the first few months in Lisbon in the Albergue da Mitra (Hostel Mitra) before visiting London in June or July 1962. He was back in Lisbon probably in July or in August, and on October 27, 1962, he visited a police station in Lisbon in an attempt to have his exile from Mozambique ended.⁴⁵²⁷ He did not succeed and in November, 1962, he made yet another application for entry to South Africa, which he submitted to that country's embassy in Lisbon.⁴⁵²⁸ Therefore the only possible time that Tsafendas could have visited the Soviet Union in 1962 is between September-October. However, Tsafendas was informed about his adored father's death sometime in August or September 1962 and became desperate to get back to South Africa to visit his grave. Thus, it seems rather unlikely that he would travel to Russia when he was trying desperately to get back to South Africa.

⁴⁵²⁵ Eleni Vlachopoulos in Live and Let Live.

⁴⁵²⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁵²⁷ Letter of a police agent to the Ministry of Interiors regarding Tsafendas's exile. 30 October 1962.

PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁵²⁸ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 40.

In addition, PIDE, who kept a close eye on Tsafendas while he was in Portugal and was aware of his travels as he was using a Portuguese passport, makes no mention of any such travel to the Soviet Union. In those years, the Iron Curtain was impenetrable. Tsafendas could not just slip over the border as he did in South Africa, thus he would have needed a visa. These were extremely difficult to get and if issued, usually took a long time. Tsafendas never told any of the witnesses he met in 1963 and were interviewed by the author that he had visited Russia the year before, while he did however state openly that he had been to Bulgaria. If he was happy to mention Communist Bulgaria, he would presumably have felt no constraint about speaking of the Soviet Union. Tsafendas invariably travelled by train or by boat as he was afraid of flying, and anyway he could not afford plane tickets. This suggests that if he travelled to the Soviet Union it would probably have been by train, an extremely long voyage and one he was most unlikely to have undertaken in 1962 due to lack of time.

That Tsafendas visited Russia cannot be ruled out, but if he did so, this may have happened sometime between 1954 and 1959 when he was travelling in West Germany, Sweden and Denmark, countries which were physically closer to the Soviet Union. That, however, is supposition and there is not any evidence that Tsafendas entered Russia during this period.

As for Tsafendas being able to speak Russian, this depends on one's definition of speaking a language. According to his half-sister, Katerina Pnema, Tsafendas picked up some Russian from Soviet sailors in Lourenço Marques in the 1930s and by reading a Russian dictionary. As far as the author can establish, he knew enough words and phrases to enable him to communicate on a basic level with the occasional Russian he came across, but he could not hold a fluent conversation in the language. Finally, although Tsafendas was an accomplished linguist, he never listed Russian as one of his languages.

TSAFENDAS'S TEETH

*On 9th October 1964, he re-entered Rhodesia at Umtali. In Umtali he tried to buy a farm, but since it appeared that he had no money, no transaction took place. He also said that the silver fillings in his teeth had been done in Russia (To the Commission he stated that he had obtained these in Turkey).*⁴⁵²⁹

⁴⁵²⁹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 18.

The statement regarding Tsafendas's teeth is inaccurate. Several witnesses said Tsafendas told them that the dental work had been done in Bulgaria.⁴⁵³⁰ None of the witnesses interviewed by the author stated that the teeth were made in Russia or in Turkey. Most of them did not know which country was involved, but those who mentioned a country, mentioned Bulgaria. Father Nikola Banovic also stated that when Tsafendas left Turkey for Bulgaria he did not have new silver-type teeth. What is more, Tsafendas went to Sofia, Bulgaria, to visit his DSE comrade from the Greek Civil War who happened to be a dentist. All these strands of information strongly suggest that Tsafendas had his teeth fixed in Bulgaria, very likely by his dentist comrade. Since Tsafendas did not have the silver teeth while in Turkey up to December 1961, obviously he had them made sometime afterwards. It is highly unlikely that Tsafendas visited Russia between December 1961 and October 1963 when he returned to Mozambique as his movements throughout this period are accountable through PIDEs reports. This again, makes Bulgaria and very likely his dentist comrade as the most likely answers.

However, the Commission's reference to Russia is not unjustified, since two people had mentioned Russia in this context. Spiros Raftopoulos, whose shop in Umtali was twice visited by Tsafendas, said in a statement to the police that "Tsafendas told him that he had them done while he was staying in Russia."⁴⁵³¹ And The Umtali Post reported on September 9, that Tsafendas visited a café in Umtali in about October 1964. The lady owner was curious about his teeth and she quoted Tsafendas as saying they were false teeth which were made for him when he visited Russia.⁴⁵³²

It is highly unlikely that Tsafendas would lie or be confused as to where his teeth were fixed. The probability is that both Raftopoulos and the café lady confused Bulgaria with Russia. Andreas Babiolakis said that for most people in Africa, especially old people, "Bulgaria and Russia were like the same, as it was for every country in the Eastern Bloc. If you were saying Bulgaria it was like saying Russia!"⁴⁵³³ As for why Tsafendas told the Commission that he had the teeth done in Turkey, a plausible theory is that he did not want to ⁴⁵³⁰ For example, Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015 and several others.

⁴⁵³¹ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁵³² The Umtali Post, 'Assassin Was Seen in Umtali', 9 September 1966: 1.

⁴⁵³³ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

reveal that he had been in the Eastern Bloc nor expose his connection with his dentist comrade.

TSAFENDAS'S CAPE ARGUS INTERVIEW

*In July 1966, Tsafendas had a long interview with Mr. Hartford of the Cape Argus. They had already met at the beginning of the year when Tsafendas came to enquire whether there was any news of the so-called freedom fighters of Mozambique. He described himself as a rebel from Mozambique. Mr. Hartford thought that he might be able to provide material for a magazine article and asked him to return later for an interview. This interview was postponed a few times until it took place sometime in July. It lasted about 75 minutes. Tsafendas recounted inter alia, how he had entered the Union illegally in 1936. He made no secret of his strong anti-Portuguese feelings, but did not utter a word against the South African Government. He complained, inter alia, that he still suffered from headaches as a result of the treatment he had been given by the Portuguese in Lisbon after the war. Mr. Hartford's impression was that Tsafendas was normal; he had no reason to believe that he was mentally defective. This witness had listened to the evidence in the Supreme Court on Tsafendas's condition after the death of Dr. Verwoerd, and his impression was that his condition must have deteriorated since the interview for, when he interviewed Tsafendas, the latter spoke fluently without any noticeable gaps in the conversation. He added, however, that after he had heard the evidence, it occurred to him that Tsafendas had in fact sometimes evaded his questions, but not to such an extent as to arouse his suspicions about his mental condition.*⁴⁵³⁴

Hartford's statement to the Commission was not discovered in the archives, but his name was found among those listed to give evidence on the 4th of November. Hartford spent seventy-five minutes with Tsafendas for his interview and got the impression that Tsafendas was "normal; he had no reason to believe that he was mentally defective... he spoke fluently without any noticeable gaps in the conversation." This contradicts Dr. Cooper's evidence that Tsafendas was unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes and that he spoke in a disjointed manner.

The Commission states that Hartford, after hearing what was said at the summary trial about Tsafendas, formed the impression that "his condition must have deteriorated since the interview." He also concluded that Tsafendas had evaded questions during the interview. The ⁴⁵³⁴ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 75.

Commission does not seem to have pursued the suspected evasions, perhaps because it was obvious that Tsafendas would choose what to answer when discussing such sensitive political matters as Portuguese rebels and Mozambique's independence, with their security implications. The author cannot know exactly what questions were raised in the interview, but certainly Tsafendas would not have been able to give answers to many and naturally evaded them. Suppose he had been asked on what grounds he received amnesty and was allowed back to Mozambique after twelve years in exile? He could hardly have replied, "I pretended to be mad!" Then, if Hartford asked how he avoided service in the Portuguese military, could he possibly have given the same answer?

TSAFENDAS AND THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

*Tsafendas often attended services of his church at private homes in Durban. Some of the members of the same faith testified that he saw himself as an outcast, that he was always pitying himself, but that he never showed any gratitude for anything that was done for him.*⁴⁵³⁵

*At church services, particularly, no one could understand what he was saying.*⁴⁵³⁶

The Report refers to "some" church members criticising Tsafendas, but only one such statement was found in the Commission's archives. This does not mean it was the only one, since other similar statements might have gone missing. However, this statement, by Caroline Barbeau, contained all the references quoted by the Report. She said of Tsafendas that "he liked to pity himself saying that his family did not want him, but at the same time he never thanked one for any kindness shown him."⁴⁵³⁷ It seems evident that in referring to "some members," the Commission was actually referring only to Caroline Barbeau. Her testimony has been examined in the Investigation Chapter.

Barbeau's was the only statement from the two hundred people who were interviewed by the police and the Commission and whose statements were found in the archives which described Tsafendas in negative terms. It seems extraordinary that none of the other two hundred expressed similar views if Tsafendas behaved as Barbeau claimed. None of the seventy-one witnesses who were interviewed by the author agreed with Barbeau's ⁴⁵³⁵ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 35.

⁴⁵³⁶ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 38.

⁴⁵³⁷ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

characterisation of Tsafendas; in fact, all denied that Tsafendas was as she portrayed. It is noteworthy that the Christian Church, of which Barbeau was a member, sought to distance itself from Tsafendas and discount its links with him after the assassination.⁴⁵³⁸ Many of the Church's members were questioned by the police⁴⁵³⁹ and the negative attention this brought them, along with the fact that Tsafendas was a member of the sect, made them feel deeply embarrassed. They felt it reflected badly on their Church and like the Greek Community in South Africa, tried to distance themselves and the Church from Tsafendas.⁴⁵⁴⁰

Merle Daniels, also a member of the Church, admitted during Tsafendas's summary trial that she "would like to protect the name of the Christian Church."⁴⁵⁴¹ When Peter and Helen Daniels (the woman who asked Tsafendas to marry her), were interviewed by Post journalist Gordon Winter, they asked him not to mention that Helen was a preacher for the Christian Church because it "would bring disgrace" on the Church.⁴⁵⁴² Like most local Greeks, some members of the sect sought to disown Tsafendas in order to protect their reputation. It is more than coincidence that Barbeau and James Johnston, both members of the Church, were the two of the three witnesses of the two hundred questioned by the police and the Commission to speak negatively about Tsafendas.

At least some of the Church's members, before the assassination, had a very high opinion of Tsafendas. Patrick O'Ryan said that Tsafendas was described to him by a fellow member of the Church as a "highly cultured gentleman, a very refined gentleman who speaks seven languages."⁴⁵⁴³ Others spoke well of Tsafendas to Helen Daniels and recommended him as her husband. This was significant because Helen, as a preacher, was highly respected by the Church. Her co-religionists would have never recommended someone who was as described by Barbeau.

The second derogatory reference by the Commission - that no-one could understand Tsafendas at church services - was probably taken from Helen Daniels's testimony which sought to show Tsafendas as an outsider. It is likely that what the church people could not understand was Tsafendas's viewpoint concerning the role of the Church in modern society.

⁴⁵³⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013; Reuben O'Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Father Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁵³⁹ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), 'Tsafendas's Brothers are Quizzed', 18 September 1966: 18: 5; The Observer, 'Police Question S. African Sect', 18 September 1966: 2.

⁴⁵⁴⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013; Father Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁵⁴¹ Marle Daniels testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴⁵⁴² Gordon Winter in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes; Gordon Winter in a personal interview with Dr. James Sanders on behalf of the author, 19 August 2016.

⁴⁵⁴³ Patrick O'Ryan in A Question of Madness - this part is available in the rushes.

Tsafendas had clashed with the Church leaders because they advocated “the Biblical idea of subservience to a Government,” including to the governing National Party and its policy of apartheid, a stance which he hotly disputed.⁴⁵⁴⁴ The only member of the Christian Church to reveal this to the police was Patrick O’Ryan.⁴⁵⁴⁵

⁴⁵⁴⁴ Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013; Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴⁵⁴⁵ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

CHAPTER III: DEMITRIO TSAFENDAS'S MOTIVES

Chapter III of the Commission's Report deals exclusively with Tsafendas's alleged motives. The following is the whole chapter:

1. In determining Tsafendas's motives, we must bear in mind that we are not dealing with a normal person.

2. The finding that he was mentally disordered at the time of the examination by the Supreme Court, Cape Town, in October 1966, is accepted without any reservation.

It is probable that at all material times he was not mentally normal, but there may be some difference of opinion as to the degree of disorder.

3. His unhappy childhood, his discovery that he was an illegitimate child and that he was not White, the fact that his family did not really accept him, as well as that to all intents and purposes he knew no fatherland, that practically no country would have him, and all the other knocks and blows referred to in his history, undoubtedly inflicted severe psychological damage.

4. Whatever the causes were, there can be no doubt that he was a maladjusted, rejected, frustrated, feckless rolling-stone. He is boastful, selfish, unscrupulous and crafty.

5. Although there were exceptions, he almost invariably displayed strong feelings against the present South African; Government. During the Second World War, he was a member of the Communist Party in South Africa; in England, he made contact with extreme leftists, and even tried to find support for an uprising against the present Government in South Africa. It is probable that while he was working in the House of Assembly his interest in politics and his condemnation of the present Government became more intense.

The discontent of the crew of the Eleni about the Immorality Act probably had a profound effect on his already receptive mind.

6. It may be that the idea of murdering Dr. Verwoerd had already occurred to him when he realized that he might secure a post in the House of Assembly, but it is probable that the idea obtruded itself more strongly in his mind only when he started working in the House of Assembly and realized that it was within his power to, commit such a deed. It is unlikely that it already existed when he had the interview with Hartford in July 1966, for, if he had had such intentions then, he would not have divulged the facts about himself, including the fact that he was a rebel from Mozambique.

7. In the clouded mind of this outcast, who was a complete failure, whose life meant practically nothing to him, was born a cunning plan to make use of his power to destroy the head of a Government which he hated.

8. When he bought the pistol on the Eleni, the plan to kill Dr. Verwoerd must already have existed.

His explanation to the Commission that he had bought the pistol and knives for self-defence is unacceptable.

His statement to the Commission that the assault was not planned, but that he had experienced a sudden impulse immediately before the assault was made, does not tally with the facts.

9. Even if he was mentally disordered on 6th September, 1966, it is clear that when he bought the knives that morning he knew what he was doing, and knew what he was planning to do.

He concealed the knives carefully and had enough self-control to wait his chance. Unaided, without a false move, with cunning timing and with unerring purpose he executed his plan.

ANALYSIS OF THE CHAPTER

Chapter III of the Report purports to explain why Tsafendas killed Dr. Verwoerd and is thus of critical importance to the Commission's designated task, as outlined in its terms of reference, namely "to enquire into and submit a report on all aspects relating to the death of the late Dr. the Honourable Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd which the said commission deems to be in the public interest." Yet what is arguably the most significant of these aspects, Tsafendas's motivation, is dealt with in one of the Report's shortest chapters, a mere nine paragraphs, most of which are devoted to a negative and largely inaccurate portrayal of Tsafendas's character. Only two obscurely worded paragraphs, both of them suppositional, address the question of motivation. Anyone reading this chapter might conclude that Tsafendas had no real motive for his action, since only hatred for the Government is mentioned, along with some vague speculation as to what might have triggered his hand. The greater part of the chapter is used to denigrate Tsafendas with a series of negative and unfounded characterisations, as well as to note the "severe psychological damage" it alleged he had suffered.

The Report sounds convincing in presenting Tsafendas as someone without a clear motive. Ellison Kahn, Professor of Law at the University of the Witwatersrand, wrote in 1968, just two years after the Report's publication, that "the van Wyk Commission had searched in vain for an indisputable motive."⁴⁵⁴⁶ Professor Kahn's observation seems correct based on the contents of the Report, as this is the impression that the Commission wanted to give. However, in reality it is wrong, as Tsafendas had given perfectly clear and logical political reasons for the killing; the Commission, although very well aware of this, simply omitted them. Therefore, it was natural that someone, just like Professor Kahn, who was not aware of Tsafendas's statements, would have been given the wrong impression by the Report.

The Report also states clearly that it "accepted without any reservation" the finding of the Supreme Court that Tsafendas "was mentally disordered at the time of the examination," before adding that "it is probable that at all material times he was not mentally normal, but there may be some difference of opinion as to the degree of disorder." However, earlier in its Report, the Commission had admitted that it had "adopted a somewhat sceptical attitude towards him" as it was "clear that his word cannot be relied upon, and that he is sufficiently intelligent to put on a fairly good act.”⁴⁵⁴⁷ Advocate George Bizos, Professor John Dugard, Attorney Krish Govender and Judge Zak Yacoob believe that it was “impossible” for the Commission to contradict the Court’s verdict about Tsafendas and that its Report, no matter what evidence it had in its possession, was going to be along the same lines as the Court’s verdict and the way Tsafendas was presented in the Court.⁴⁵⁴⁸

⁴⁵⁴⁶ Kahn, Jr., The Separated People: A Look at Contemporary South Africa, p. 163.

Paragraph 5 of the Commission’s Report says:

“[Tsafendas] almost invariably displayed strong feelings against the present South African Government... it is probable that while he was working in the House of Assembly his interest in politics and his condemnation of the present Government became more intense. The discontent of the crew of the Eleni about the Immorality Act probably had a profound effect on his already receptive mind.”

Paragraph 7 says:

“In the clouded mind of this outcast, who was a complete failure, whose life meant practically nothing to him, was born a cunning plan to make use of his power to destroy the head of a Government which he hated.”

The tentative nature of the Commission’s conclusions is reflected in the use of the words “probable” and “probably” in the first quoted paragraph, and in the entirely subjective nature of the second, which claims to read Tsafendas’s mind as to his intentions and their causes.

What cannot be ignored is that Tsafendas had made it perfectly clear why he killed Dr. Verwoerd in statements he gave to the police and that these statements were in the possession of the Commission. He told the police that he killed the Prime Minister because he was “disgusted with his racial policies” and hoped that by killing him “a change of policy would take place.”⁴⁵⁴⁹ There could hardly be a clearer exposition of the fundamental political reason – to secure a change of policy – which prompted him to act as he did. Committing an act which aims for political change is the perfect definition of a political act. In addition, in his first statement to the police, Tsafendas declared that he “wanted to see a government representing all the South African people.” He said, “I do not think the Nationalist ⁴⁵⁴⁷ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18.

⁴⁵⁴⁸ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017; Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016; Attorney Krish Govender in a personal interview, 12 May 2017; Justice Zak Yacoob in a personal interview, 18 September 2017.

⁴⁵⁴⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

Government is representative of the people and I wanted to see a different government.”⁴⁵⁵⁰ In his second statement, he testified that “I always had a grudge against the South African government on account of its racial policies and I hated Dr. Verwoerd because he was a foreigner – a Hollander.”⁴⁵⁵¹ His reference to Dr. Verwoerd being a foreigner has already been discussed and was one of the many misrepresentations at the summary trial.

The Commission’s cherry-picking approach to written and oral evidence to suit its purposes goes beyond turning a blind eye to the above-mentioned aspects of Tsafendas’s statements. In the Report’s Chapter II D, Paragraph 15, the Commission has no hesitation in making extensive use of Tsafendas’s account from his statement to the police of his movements prior to the killing and of the killing itself. However, the Commission does not use Tsafendas’s own words from the same account to explain his motive. Is there a better way of explaining a person’s motive than by using his own words and his own explanation. Obviously the Commission could not have used Tsafendas’s own words, especially the fact that he was “disgusted” with Verwoerd’s “racial policies” and of his hope of a “change of policy”, because they did not sound like the words of a madman and did not match the picture it was trying to build, and were completely opposed to the picture that was painted during the court proceedings. More importantly, they flatly contradicted what was heard in the court about his motive and they did not fit with the picture of him that emerged from the summary trial.

Furthermore, no mention is made of more significant statements where at least five witnesses, Cleanthes Alachiotis, Nikolaos Billis, Nikolas Kambouris, Georgios Kantas and Michalis Vasilakis, testified to the South African police that Tsafendas had characterised any assassination of Dr. Verwoerd as justifiable because he was a tyrant and a dictator; and this was just three days before the assassination.⁴⁵⁵² Another witness, Edward Furness, told the police that Tsafendas was willing to do “anything that would get the South African regime out of power.”⁴⁵⁵³ Neither of these statements was referred to in the Commission’s Report.

⁴⁵⁵⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁵⁵¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁵⁵² Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁴⁵⁵³ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Although Tsafendas appeared twice before the Commission, no mention is made of the most obvious question of all: Why did he kill Dr. Verwoerd? He must surely have been asked by the Commission, and if he was (it is impossible to know for certain because accounts of his testimony have disappeared), his reply is not recorded. Therefore, what did Tsafendas say when called twice before the Commission?

Significantly, the Report makes no reference to the tapeworm, which was adduced at the summary trial as the reason Tsafendas killed Dr. Verwoerd. Had Tsafendas mentioned the tapeworm in his evidence to the Commission, Judge van Wyk, probably ought to have mentioned it; after all, he was ready to include other negative or absurd references to Tsafendas while omitting all the positive ones. The conclusion must be that, as with the police, Tsafendas made no mention of the tapeworm when he testified to the Commission.

Tsafendas also seemed to be aware that his act would have a positive impact to some people in South Africa. Major Rossouw, in evidence to the Commission, said: "When I originally questioned him, I accused him of being a horrible murderer. To which he answered, 'That is what you think but the world thinks differently!' At a later stage, I asked him whether he regretted his deed yet and he answered that he did feel remorse and that he was very sorry about what he had done."⁴⁵⁵⁴

Tsafendas's initial reaction seems to reflect his belief that many in South Africa would have applauded the assassination. As for feeling remorse at a later stage, the likelihood is that this remark was a gesture of appeasement to the police who had been torturing and beating him systematically since his apprehension. Statements by Tsafendas at the time and over subsequent years demonstrate that he never regretted killing Dr. Verwoerd. Thirteen days after the assassination, he told the police he "thought it was the right thing to do,"⁴⁵⁵⁵ and the Commission reported that "he showed no signs of remorse" during its deliberations.⁴⁵⁵⁶

Several witnesses who knew Tsafendas very well like Ira Kyriakakis, Costas Poriazis, Father Nikolas Banovic, Katerina Pnema, Helen Grispos, Fotini Gavasiadis, Nick Papadakis, Mary Eintracht, John and Antony Michaletos, Nick Augustides and Andreas Babiolakis stated to the author that Tsafendas was a passionate Communist who considered Dr.

⁴⁵⁵⁴ Major Daniel Rossouw testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁴⁵⁵⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁵⁵⁶ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18.

Verwoerd to be a tyrant, a dictator, and “Hitler’s best student.”⁴⁵⁵⁷ Tsafendas kept characterising Dr. Verwoerd with those words as long as thirty years after the assassination.⁴⁵⁵⁸ Describing Verwoerd as “Hitler’s best student” was a trademark characterisation of South Africa’s Prime Minister by Tsafendas and one which he used constantly. Tsafendas also constantly employed two particular words to describe Verwoerd: “tyrant” and “dictator.” He considered that Verwoerd was a “tyrant” because he was oppressing South Africa’s Blacks, and a “dictator” because he was elected by the Whites only; since the country’s majority Blacks did not have the vote, Verwoerd was not democratically elected in Tsafendas’s view, and was in essence a dictator.⁴⁵⁵⁹

Andreas Babiolakis told the author that Tsafendas never made an attempt to hide his detestation for colonialism and apartheid. Tsafendas told Babiolakis one day that “Verwoerd and [Portuguese Prime Minister] Salazar are fascist dictators and should be executed like Mussolini.”⁴⁵⁶⁰ Costas Poriadis told the author that Tsafendas was “a political animal. The most politicized person I’ve ever met” and that “there was fire in his eyes when talking politics, especially about the struggle for the independence of Mozambique and other countries in Africa. He was clearly pro-violence [for political reasons].”⁴⁵⁶¹ Six years after the assassination, Tsafendas proudly told anti-apartheid activist and Umkhonto we Sizwe fighter Alexander Moumbaris, a fellow prisoner in Pretoria Maximum Security Prison, “I got τον Νταή τους” (“their tough guy” or “their champion,” but in a pejorative sense).⁴⁵⁶²

Sometime in 1994, when Tsafendas was in Pretoria Prison hospital and apartheid had collapsed, Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis asked him, “Why did you do it, Mr. Tsafendas [kill Verwoerd]?” Tsafendas told the priest that he considered Verwoerd to be “a dictator and a ⁴⁵⁵⁷ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Costas Poriadis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁵⁵⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

⁴⁵⁵⁹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 11 May 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴⁵⁶⁰ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

⁴⁵⁶¹ Costas Poriadis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

⁴⁵⁶² Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017.

tyrant” and that because he was the “brains behind apartheid,” he hoped his death would lead to the collapse of that racist policy. He knew everything would not be transformed overnight, but he hoped Verwoerd’s “removal” would be a stepping stone towards the end of apartheid.⁴⁵⁶³

Tsafendas denounced the slain Prime Minister as a “monster” and an “evil person,” and set out in detail the steps Dr. Verwoerd had taken to establish his iron rule and earn his title, “the architect of apartheid.” Tsafendas told Bishop Ioannis that “Verwoerd was a dictator and a tyrant who oppressed his people. People were like slaves. He created apartheid... Even if you had lived here, you would not have been able to tell of its real extent [of apartheid] unless you had lived with Coloureds and Blacks. People were like slaves, they were only living to serve the Whites. Verwoerd did that. He was a monster, almost as bad as Hitler. I call him ‘Hitler’s best student’ because he copied some of Hitler’s Nurnberg Laws and applied them to the Blacks here ... Verwoerd would have done to the Blacks what Hitler did to the Jews if he did not need them to serve the Whites.”⁴⁵⁶⁴

Tsafendas then argued that his act was morally justifiable because Verwoerd was a tyrant and a dictator. He said that since he had the opportunity to rid the world of such monster, it was his “duty,” his “social responsibility” to do so, a “tyrannicide.” Tsafendas also argued that if he had not acted, his guilt would have equalled that of Verwoerd, because any person who is aware of a crime and does not intervene, or worse allows it to continue when he has the power to end it, is as guilty as the criminal himself. Father Minas disagreed with all this and reminded him that he had killed a man and that was unacceptable and a mortal sin, no matter who the person was and what he had done. Tsafendas then put this question to Bishop Ioannis and Father Minas,

“Every day, you see a man you know committing a very serious crime for which millions of people suffer. You cannot take him to court or report him to the police, because he is the law in the country. Would you remain silent and let him continue with his crime, or would you do something to stop him?”⁴⁵⁶⁵

⁴⁵⁶³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

⁴⁵⁶⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

⁴⁵⁶⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

Both priests replied that they would have wanted to stop the crime but they would not have killed a person to stop it. Tsafendas said, "Then you would have been as guilty as Dr. Verwoerd." The debate went on and on, but Tsafendas refused to accept that he was wrong, producing arguments and counter-arguments to support his contention. He even used examples from history where tyrants and dictators were executed by the people. He characterised the killings of the Italian dictator Benito Mussolini and of Reinhard Heydrich, Gestapo chief and one of the architects of the Holocaust, as justifiable and as tyrannicides.⁴⁵⁶⁶

Sometimes, Tsafendas, in the presence of the priests, would proudly make a stabbing gesture and denounce Dr. Verwoerd yet again as "Hitler's best student." He told them that at first, he intended to kidnap the Prime Minister and offer to exchange him for political prisoners. When he realised that this was not possible, he considered placing a bomb in Parliament to kill all the MPs. However, he dismissed this idea because journalists and other innocent people and the only "good" MP, Helen Suzman, could also have died.⁴⁵⁶⁷ Tsafendas always referred to his killing of Dr. Verwoerd as "the execution." He refused to use the word assassination. When the priests referred to "the assassination," Tsafendas would invariably correct them, saying, "the execution!"⁴⁵⁶⁸ Tsafendas also always maintained to Liza Key that he had killed Dr. Verwoerd for political reasons; because he was an "immoral man" and "disagreed with his policies" as he specifically told her.⁴⁵⁶⁹

Henk van Woerden told Carte Blanche Interactive in 2001 that when he asked Tsafendas why he killed Verwoerd, he replied, "I didn't like the man, I dislike what he's doing to the country, I don't agree [sic]. It was politically motivated." Van Woerden also stated that "the records that I have looked at suggest without a doubt that at the time he murdered Verwoerd, he was completely compos mentis."⁴⁵⁷⁰

⁴⁵⁶⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

⁴⁵⁶⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

⁴⁵⁶⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

⁴⁵⁶⁹ A Question of Madness; Liza Key in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

⁴⁵⁷⁰ Harris, "Arranging Prejudice: Exploring Hate Crime in Post-Apartheid South Africa", p. 28.

OTHER PARTS OF THIS CHAPTERParagraphs 1-2: Tsafendas's Mental State

The Commission immediately refers to Tsafendas's mental state, claiming flatly that he is not a normal person and stating that it accepts the Supreme Court's finding of mental disorder. It then lists reasons, which it says "undoubtedly inflicted severe psychological damage" on Tsafendas (Paragraph 3).

The Commission heard 105 witnesses and it seems that only Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos questioned Tsafendas's mental state, testifying that "at times his conversation was confused" and her impression was that "he was mad."⁴⁵⁷¹ However, she had given a completely different statement to the police, saying she "considered him to be a completely normal person."⁴⁵⁷² We cannot know why de Vos told the Commission something totally different to what she told the police. Perhaps she was influenced by what she had heard in court. The fact is that no-one else said anything about Tsafendas not being a normal person. On the contrary, whoever commented on his mental state said he was perfectly normal. This is discussed in detail in the section 'Mental State' of this chapter. This was the same with the one hundred and fifty people questioned by the police, all of whose statements were in the Commission's possession. Only three of these witnesses, Barbeau, Martincich and Johnston, testified negatively about Tsafendas's mental state and both their statements and reliability have been discussed extensively in the previous chapter.

Paragraph 3: The "causes" that "undoubtedly inflicted severe psychological damage" on Tsafendas

His unhappy childhood, his discovery that he was an illegitimate child and that he was not White, the fact that his family did not really accept him, as well as that to all intents and purposes he knew no fatherland, that practically no country would have him, and all the other knocks and blows referred to in his history, undoubtedly inflicted severe psychological damage.

⁴⁵⁷¹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II C, Paragraph 65.

⁴⁵⁷² Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

The entire paragraph is inaccurate or distorted and clearly part of an attempt to support the idea that Tsafendas was mentally disordered. The Commission did not have a psychiatrist among its ranks but boldly set out factors it claimed affected Tsafendas's mind. More importantly the Commission did not have in its possession, as far as the author could establish based on the documents found in the NASA, any evidence to support such a conclusion. On the contrary, evidence found clearly shows a different Tsafendas.

His Family did not Really Accept him

The Commission claims that Tsafendas's family did not really accept him. That is quite wrong and the Commission held ample evidence suggesting the exact opposite. However, it chose to ignore the many oral and written statements witnessing to the contrary. The issue has been discussed earlier in this chapter, so it will not be examined again.

Unhappy Childhood

It is wholly wrong to claim that Tsafendas had an "unhappy childhood." None of the two hundred or so witnesses who were questioned by the police or the Commission said anything to that effect and no other evidence has been found to justify such a claim. None of those who knew Tsafendas from childhood made any such comment. On the contrary, Dr. Samuel Schmahmann, a classmate in his school at Middleburg, giving his memories shortly after the assassination, recalled Dimitri as "a popular boy and not the least introverted... I particularly remember him singing a Greek song at a school concert," he said. "He was very funny and had us all in stitches."⁴⁵⁷³

Another schoolmate, William Mare Volbrecht, a psychologist who was questioned by the South African police at the same time, testified that "At that stage Tsafendas was seen as white and there was never anything that pointed to someone regarding or treating him as a non-white or to him being discriminated against. I cannot remember whether he was ever guilty of misconduct; he was never a loner and mingled freely with us."⁴⁵⁷⁴ Tsafendas's ⁴⁵⁷³ Rand Daily Mail, 'Boyhood Days of Tsafendas', 8 September 1966.

⁴⁵⁷⁴ William Mare Volbrecht statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol 3, File Verklaring deur Majoor Venter. NASA.

stepmother, Marika, told the police that Dimitri's "association with other children at this stage [in childhood], was good."⁴⁵⁷⁵

In addition, Tsafendas was always treated as a full-member of the family and there was never the slightest indication that this was not the case. Marika testified to the Commission that Tsafendas "had grown up as one of her children."⁴⁵⁷⁶ Katerina Pnema made a similar statement to the police shortly after the assassination. She said that growing up with Tsafendas "to all intents and purposes it was understood" by "her and her brother and sisters" that "he was a member of the family... his complexion was such – as also his manner – that he passed as a European."⁴⁵⁷⁷

The Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali shortly after the assassination questioned several Greeks who knew Tsafendas. It wrote in its confidential report to the South African police, "It is also reliably reported that the Tsafandakis family hold a good reputation among the Greek community and there are suggestions that Michael Tsafandakis made a big mistake in attempting to raise his illegitimate son as a full member of his family."⁴⁵⁷⁸

Guglielmo Conte, a very good friend and business partner of Tsafendas's father, who knew Tsafendas from the day he was born, explicitly denied in an interview with the Rand Daily Mail that was in possession of the Commission, that Tsafendas was not accepted by his family.⁴⁵⁷⁹ Costas Michaletos, who knew Tsafendas from infancy and was his father's best friend, told the police that "Dimetrios Tsafantakis grew up with his half-brothers and sisters and was always treated as part of the family."⁴⁵⁸⁰ All this information was known to the Commission

Helen Grispos was a near neighbour of Tsafendas and grew up with him in Lourenço Marques. Her mother, was Marika's best friend and her future husband, George, was one of Tsafendas's best boyhood friends. She described Tsafendas to the police as "well-mannered ⁴⁵⁷⁵ Marika Tsafantakis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁵⁷⁶ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴⁵⁷⁷ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁵⁷⁸ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁵⁷⁹ Goldstein, 'Tsafendas Timid and Puny As A Boy', Rand Daily Mail, 14 September 1966.

⁴⁵⁸⁰ Costas Michaletos statement to the police, 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

and intelligent”⁴⁵⁸¹ and made no comments about his childhood. However, in a personal interview, she dismissed the claim of an unhappy childhood. She remembers Tsafendas playing every day in front of her house with the other children and sometimes taking her, along with his stepsisters, to the beach in Lourenço Marques to teach her how to swim.⁴⁵⁸²

First cousin Mary Eintracht told the author that “it is a lie if someone says that Dimitri had an unhappy childhood. A big lie. He was full of life as a child. Very happy, friendly, very lively. He was very, very naughty, but just as some children are, especially boys, but nothing bad.” Eintracht also agrees that Tsafendas mixed freely with children of all races and never had an issue with his colour or identity.⁴⁵⁸³

Ira Kyriakakis, who grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques, was asked by the author if Tsafendas had an unhappy childhood and replied, “No, this is a mistake. Dimitri was very happy as a child. I don’t remember ever seeing him being unhappy. He was like all the other children, playing in the street, chasing each other. I remember he liked a lot playing hide and seek. He once hid in the top of a tree, just close to where I was. I never thought of looking up there as it was too high and I did not think that he would have climbed up there. He liked climbing trees.”⁴⁵⁸⁴ Andreas Babiolakis, another childhood friend, also disagreed about Tsafendas having an unhappy childhood. “That’s nonsense,” he said, “Dimitris was what we say the life of the party. He was full of energy and life. Absolute nonsense that he was unhappy.”⁴⁵⁸⁵

His younger half-sister, Katerina Pnefma, dismissed the Report’s comment as a “lie.” She told the author:

“Dimitri was a very happy but also a naughty child. He would spend all the time that he was not at school playing around the house. He loved playing. My mother had to go out in the street and scream his name to him to come back to the house when it was getting dark. He would always come home with dirty clothes from playing, but my mother did not mind; next day she would give him clean clothes again ... he loved the sea. He would often go there for swimming. He was an excellent swimmer. He taught all of us and many other children how to swim, even the little blind boy I told you before ... while there was light, Dimitri would spend ⁴⁵⁸¹ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁵⁸² Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

⁴⁵⁸³ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁴⁵⁸⁴ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁴⁵⁸⁵ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

his time out of the house, playing with other children. Sometimes, he would come to the house only to eat. Every evening though or when it was dark, he would spend it reading a book. He always read a book before he went to sleep. As far as I can remember he was reading every day ... he was like any other child I knew, it is a lie to say that he was unhappy.”⁴⁵⁸⁶

The facts are that Tsafendas was nurtured lovingly by his family while the one element that would have made him appear separate or different, the knowledge of his parentage, was withheld from him out of consideration for his feelings. The most important witness to his childhood happiness is Tsafendas himself, who always spoke very fondly of his family and his childhood to several witnesses, including Liza Key, David Beresford, and Fathers Nikola Banovic, Minas Constandinou and Michalis Visvinis and Bishop Ioannis Tsafataridis.⁴⁵⁸⁷

Illegitimate Child and not being White

Tsafendas learned that he was illegitimate not as a small boy but when he was seventeen, thus at an age when the discovery would affect him less. That said, he was disturbed to discover that Marika was not his mother. He was unhappy that he never met his real, half-African mother, but he was not concerned, as the Commission claimed, that he was not White. According to the Commission, Marika testified that “Tsafendas only learned that he had coloured origins when he looked for work at the aircraft factory. He had grown up as one of her children. He was depressed after he had learned about this, but never said anything about it.”⁴⁵⁸⁸ Her statement is confirmed by several people who associated with Tsafendas at the time.

Mary Eintracht, Tsafendas's first cousin who had grown up with him in Egypt and Lourenço Marques, knew him extremely well. She was in Lourenço Marques when Tsafendas found out about his parentage. She said, “He was not the least bothered about the fact that his real mother was Black, I don't think he cared at all about it, but he was devastated that he did not meet her. That made him very sad, he was really very sad about ⁴⁵⁸⁶ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

⁴⁵⁸⁷ Dimitri Tsafendas in A Question of Madness; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Liza Key in a personal interview, 6 April 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafataridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017; Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

⁴⁵⁸⁸ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

it.⁴⁵⁸⁹ His stepsister, Katerina Pnema, and childhood friends Andreas Babiolakis, Helen Grispos and Ira Kyriakakis, who were also around at the time, agree with the above statement. Tsafendas never said anything to them about his mother being Black, but he was devastated that he had not met her.⁴⁵⁹⁰ Tsafendas sometimes expressed his sadness that he never met her to Father Minas Constandinou who visited him prison and the hospital for about ten years.⁴⁵⁹¹

All the above witnesses and everyone interviewed by the author said that Tsafendas never had an issue with colour – other people's or his own. He considered that all people were equal and had equal rights and he freely associated and played with Black and White children. He had a Black girlfriend named Stella when he was a teenager awhile his best friends were White Greeks, like George Grispos and John Michaletos and Black Mozambicans like Manuel and the blind boy. He later also had both Black, Coloured and White friends, including girlfriends. Tsafendas was certainly saddened that he did not meet his birth mother, as most people would be, and he sometimes expressed his sorrow about it. However, there is no evidence that it inflicted severe psychological damage on him, as the Commission claims.

No fatherland

The Commission claimed that Tsafendas “knew no fatherland (and) that practically no country would have him,” and that these factors inflicted severe psychological damage on him. This, too, is wrong. Tsafendas was passionate about the country of his birth, Mozambique, which he considered to be his fatherland. He spent the first twenty years of his life there and then was exiled due to his anti-colonialist and Communist beliefs and activities. He was a passionate and devoted partisan for the independence of Mozambique. Tsafendas, even in exile, was more passionate, active and caring for the cause of Mozambique's independence than many who lived permanently in Mozambique itself. How passionate and devoted is evident from a confidential letter which the Chief Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon sent to the Sub-Director of PIDE in Mozambique, just two days after the assassination. The senior officer instructed his subordinate that any “information indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for ⁴⁵⁸⁹ Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁴⁵⁹⁰ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

⁴⁵⁹¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

the independence of your country should not be transmitted to the South African authorities, despite the relations that exist between your delegation and the South African Police.”⁴⁵⁹²

Although this letter and the wider extent of Tsafendas's involvement in the fight for Mozambique's independence were not known to the Commission, several significant factors were. They included the following:

- A PIDE report which said that “PIDE characterised Tsafendas as a “partisan for the independence of Mozambique”⁴⁵⁹³ and admitted that “it is true that one finds in him an obvious spirit of revolt in relation to the Portuguese Administration, and favouring the independence of Mocambique.”⁴⁵⁹⁴
- That he was “arrested on several occasions after creating public disturbances including shouting pro-Communist and anti-Portuguese slogans.”⁴⁵⁹⁵
- That he had spent three months in jail in Beira after he was accused of “making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses.”⁴⁵⁹⁶
- That he wanted to see a “Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the Mother nation.”⁴⁵⁹⁷
- Tsafendas himself had also admitted to the Commission that he had attempted to recruit people for an uprising in Mozambique.⁴⁵⁹⁸

As for the Commission's comment that “practically no country would have him,” this is misleading and inaccurate. Tsafendas was banned from entering Mozambique and South Africa due to his politics. Although angered that he was not able to live in these countries, where he had family, he considered his banishment as an honour, proud to be an enemy of fascist regimes. Far from being bitter or mentally affected, Tsafendas was happy to take what ⁴⁵⁹² Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁵⁹³ Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁵⁹⁴ Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁵⁹⁵ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Lisbon, to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁵⁹⁶ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁵⁹⁷ Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁵⁹⁸ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 32.

he saw as an honourable political stance against these two countries.⁴⁵⁹⁹ Father Nikola Banovic discussed the subject of Tsafendas's exile extensively with him while they lived together in Istanbul. Tsafendas told him, "When your enemies are banning you, that means that you are on a good path/road"⁴⁶⁰⁰ [a Greek expression, meaning you are doing something good, you are progressing well].

Tsafendas was not banned from any other country. He was deported from the United States, but this was after he had lived there for five years, and this was again because of his Communist beliefs. In Britain, he failed to get a residence permit, but he was able to live and work in other countries, which he did extensively, in Portugal, Germany, Greece and Turkey for example.

Paragraphs 4 and 7: Tsafendas's Character

The Commission devotes two paragraphs (4 and 7) to a series of negative and unfounded characterizations of Tsafendas's personality, omitting most of the positive statements in its possession while using every critical one. The parade of denigration – that he was maladjusted, rejected, frustrated, feckless, boastful, crafty and so on - suggests an attempt to belittle him as much as possible in people's eyes. Every characterization used by the Commission here was examined and dismissed as inaccurate in this chapter, in the 'Tsafendas's character according to the Commission' section. However, even if all of the Commission's negative characterizations of Tsafendas were true, they were irrelevant to his motives. A man could have all the characteristics mentioned yet still hold strong political principles. At the end of the day, Tsafendas volunteered clear political reasons for killing Dr. Verwoerd which were omitted from the Report.

⁴⁵⁹⁹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eintracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁶⁰⁰ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

Paragraph 5: Tsafendas's Political Activities and Ideas

Here, the Commission acknowledges some of Tsafendas's political activities and ideas, but the five lines it devotes to them scarcely scratch the surface of his interests. Among the very important facts missing are that he was exiled from Mozambique because of his Communist and anti-colonialist activities, his participation with the Communists in the Greek Civil War, his arrests and imprisonments by the Portuguese because of his anti-colonialist and Communist activities in Mozambique, his association in London with leading anti-apartheid activists such as David Gardener, Solly Sachs and Canon John Collins. That he considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a dictator and a tyrant and had expressed his willingness to do anything to get the South African regime out of power are also omitted.

The Commission then speculates that the "discontent" felt by the crew of the Eleni might have affected Tsafendas's mind. The issue of the crew's alleged "discontent" has been discussed and explained in the previous chapter and has clearly been misunderstood by the Commission. The crew, most in their early twenties, had no idea what apartheid was when they arrived in South Africa and it was Tsafendas who "enlightened" them. He asked the men to boycott South Africa's economy by spending as little money as possible and he took some of them to a township in Cape Town to see for themselves the hardships of apartheid. As a result, the crew became upset about the race-based policy of apartheid; Mastromanolis said that the South Africans need "a good whipping" and Zafiriadis commented that the South Africans "should be a taught a lesson." Thus, it was Tsafendas's exposure of apartheid that affected the crew rather than the crew's discontent affecting Tsafendas, as the Commission believed.

As for the claim that the crew's discontent was about the Immorality Act, this too was wrong. All of the thirteen Eleni crew who were present in Cape Town and were interviewed by the author dismissed the Commission's claim out of hand, pointing out that whoever wanted to, had sex with Black women; no-one was bothered about the Act, it was simply ignored. After all, the men had easy access to White women in Cape Town and being seamen and travellers, they did not view sex with Black women as a unique or sought-after experience.

Paragraph 6: The Idea to Kill Dr. Verwoerd

This paragraph focuses on when Tsafendas decided to kill Dr. Verwoerd. It is entirely speculative, using phrases such as it may be ... it is probable ... it is unlikely ... However, Tsafendas had clearly told the police how and when he had got the idea to kill Verwoerd: “some days after I started working in the House of Assembly, all kinds of thoughts came to my mind about murdering the Prime Minister. I saw an opportunity of shooting the Prime Minister from the lobby ...”⁴⁶⁰¹ Furthermore, as we have seen several times, he had also perfectly clearly explained the reasons that led him to this decision.

Paragraph 7: A Possible Motive?

This paragraph states in its entirety:

“In the clouded mind of this outcast, who was a complete failure, whose life meant practically nothing to him, was born a cunning plan to make use of his power to destroy the head of a Government which he hated.”

Again, the Commission characterizes Tsafendas in a negative fashion while attempting to explain why he killed Dr. Verwoerd. Although there is no mention of the tapeworm and the Commission admits that Tsafendas hated Dr. Verwoerd, the subject is never elaborated.

As for Tsafendas “the complete failure,” let us examine how much of a failure Tsafendas was. He was a teacher. He gave free English lessons for six months to Greek and Turkish students in Istanbul (1961) and on two different occasions (1935-1939 and 1964) did the same for poor children in Mozambique. He became an active member of the British anti-apartheid and anti-fascist movements, participated in demonstrations and smuggled anti-apartheid literature into South Africa. By standing up for his political beliefs, he was exiled for twelve years from Mozambique, while in Portugal he was prosecuted, arrested, imprisoned and tortured. He actively protested against Portugal’s forced cotton policy and toured villages in Beira trying to raise awareness of the independence cause and for this suffered further imprisonment and torture.⁴⁶⁰² He joined the Greek Communist Party and fought with its military wing, the DSE, during the Greek Civil War.⁴⁶⁰³

⁴⁶⁰¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

He developed a list of political objectives and worked tirelessly at a hands-on level to achieve his goals of independence for Mozambique and political change in South Africa. He wanted “to create a resistance to the regime of South Africa and mentioned civil disobedience and anything that would get the South African regime out of power.”⁴⁶⁰⁴ He smuggled anti-apartheid literature into the country, urged visitors not to spend money which would boost the apartheid economy and finally killing the man he believed had “created apartheid” and was “the brains behind apartheid”⁴⁶⁰⁵ in the hope that this would bring about a change of policy.⁴⁶⁰⁶

Tsafendas fearlessly told PIDE agents who interrogated him that he wanted to see “a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the Mother-nation,” adding that he was strongly in favour of the independence of Mozambique.⁴⁶⁰⁷ The fact that the Director-General of PIDE in Portugal instructed the Sub-Director of PIDE in Mozambique that “information indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of your country should not be transmitted to the South African authorities,”⁴⁶⁰⁸ implies that Tsafendas was politically significant and no useless failure. That PIDE deliberately hid his detailed file from the South African authorities implies that he was far from just a “daydreamer” or a failure and all these were the actions of a practical man with practical aims who had achieved much in his life.

As for being an outcast, this is also untrue. His relationship with his family and the Greek community is discussed in the relevant sections of this chapter. His contribution and interaction with society at large is also well documented in his biography and throughout the whole study. For example, an outcast is unlikely to volunteer to teach children without remuneration, as Tsafendas did in Mozambique and Turkey.

⁴⁶⁰² PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁶⁰³ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁴⁶⁰⁴ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁶⁰⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Father Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁶⁰⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁶⁰⁷ PIDE Record of questions, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁶⁰⁸ Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

Paragraph 8: The Assassination Plan

This paragraph concerns Tsafendas's reported answers to the Commission's questions regarding the pistol and the assassination plan which the Commission describes as unacceptable and where Tsafendas seems to have lied. However, Tsafendas had given accurate and perfectly reasonable explanations of these issues to the police on at least two occasions and the Commission was aware of this. For example, the Commission says that "His explanation to the Commission that he had bought the pistol and knives for self-defence is unacceptable." However, Tsafendas had told the police that he bought the pistol in order to shoot Dr. Verwoerd.⁴⁶⁰⁹

The Commission itself had written in Chapter II D, Paragraph 1, that "According to a statement made by Tsafendas, he wished to buy the pistol in order to shoot Dr. Verwoerd. When he was unable to obtain a pistol, he decided to use a knife." Thus, even if Tsafendas gave the answers he did to the Commission, was he not questioned about his previous statement to the police? Obviously, Tsafendas's statement to the police made more sense than his answer before the Commission and had all the appearances of truth. The Commission was in position to know that as it had his police statement in its possession.

More importantly, the Commission accepted Tsafendas's account to the police regarding his movements prior to the assassination and the sale of the pistol when dealing with his movements before the assassination and the killing itself. That is why it used a lengthy extract from Tsafendas's statement to the police to describe the events. However, when it comes to the issue of motive, the Commission uses the false statement Tsafendas gave to the Commission and not the truthful one he gave to the police. It seems that the Commission preferred to use the lie rather than the truth in order to discredit Tsafendas.

Paragraph 9: The Assassination

The final paragraph of the Chapter deals with the assassination and no reference to motive is made.

⁴⁶⁰⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

CONCLUSION

Although this chapter is headed "Demetrio Tsafendas's Motives," very little is adduced as to why Tsafendas killed Dr. Verwoerd. The greater part of the nine-paragraph chapter is dedicated to presenting Tsafendas in a wholly negative way, with unfounded and tendentious characterizations clearly intended to discredit and belittle him. Some paragraphs speculate about what might have triggered Tsafendas's act, when Tsafendas had already explained to the police in detail his reasons for the killing.

Despite the Report's efforts to present Tsafendas as mentally disordered, there is no mention of the tapeworm, whereas at the summary trial the tapeworm was said to have played a major part in the assassination. However, Tsafendas had never mentioned the tapeworm to the police, nor apparently did he mention it to the Commission, thus making it impossible for Judge van Wyk to include such a reference in his Report.

The main conclusion of the chapter is that Tsafendas killed Dr. Verwoerd because he hated the government. While it is true that Tsafendas hated the government, the specific reasons for his action, although known to the Commission, were not mentioned, namely that he believed Dr. Verwoerd to be a dictator and not the real representative of all the South Africans, that he was "disgusted" with his "racial policies", and that he hoped a change of policy would take place after the assassination. These were the reasons he gave to the police and, as many as thirty years later, to three separate witnesses, Fathers Spiros, Ioannis and Minas. Although known to the Commission, the reasons were not included in the Report because they were incompatible with what was heard about him in court.

In omitting Tsafendas's own words, the Commission misrepresented his motives, obviously because his lucid, three-point explanation did not sound like the words of a madman, as the Commission wished to represent him. This chapter offers one of the clearest indications that the Commission did not want to give the real answers to the questions it posed but like so many other commissions of inquiry during apartheid, sought simply to present a picture that was convenient for and favoured by the government.

CHAPTER IV: WERE THERE ACCOMPLICES?

*The Commission could find no evidence which could justify a finding that there were accomplices. The probability is that it was the act of Demitrio Tsafendas and of no one else.*⁴⁶¹⁰

The study agrees with the Commission and its analysis of all the issues mentioned in this chapter. However, some aspects need to be enlarged upon.

TSAFENDAS RECEIVING LARGE SUMS OF MONEY (Paragraph 3)

The Commission's conclusion – that there was no confirmation Tsafendas received large sums of money – is correct. Clearly, if Tsafendas possessed a great deal of money or was a paid assassin, he could have bought the gun from the Eleni crew as soon as he wished, without waiting until he was paid at the end of the month. Its price, 80 US Dollars, was not a huge sum for the average working South African, but it was a lot for a relatively poor man like Tsafendas.

BRAINWASHING (Paragraph 4)

“There were also speculations that Tsafendas might have undergone brainwashing overseas in the process of which he was instructed to murder Dr. Verwoerd. The Commission could find no evidence to justify such a finding. On the contrary, the weight of evidence indicates very strongly that Tsafendas did not come to South Africa with any such purpose...”

Again, the study agrees with the Commission, that there was no evidence Tsafendas was brainwashed to kill Dr. Verwoerd. If a foreign agency or power had done so, they would surely have provided him with a weapon or the money to buy one. Tsafendas had to wait until he was paid at the end of the month so that he could buy a pistol from the Eleni crew, having asked them already for a knife. Furthermore, Tsafendas only got the job in the Parliament, and thus access to Dr. Verwoerd, as a result of a chance encounter; it was not planned. As for brainwashing, consideration of Tsafendas's life and political development rules this out. His embrace of Communism and leftist politics in general, especially his unconcealed anti-colonialist stance in Mozambique, go back to the late 1930s. His abhorrence of South African apartheid and its architect, Dr. Verwoerd, emerged in the early-mid-1950s when he became eager to take up arms against apartheid in a meaningful way. Since 1959, he had made clear that he would do “anything that would get the South African regime out of power.”⁴⁶¹¹

⁴⁶¹⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter IV, Paragraph 2.

It seems highly unlikely that some mysterious power “programmed” Tsafendas in 1959 or sometime before he returned to South Africa to kill Dr. Verwoerd and that he waited so many years to do it. Had he been so programmed, he would probably have made his move soon after he returned to South Africa in 1963. He lived for nine months in Pretoria when Dr. Verwoerd was also there, but Tsafendas made no move against him. In fact, he left after nine months for Mozambique, intending to live the rest of his life there. What thwarted this dream was being twice arrested and imprisoned by the Portuguese police. Seeing only a future of persecution in Mozambique, Tsafendas returned to South Africa in 1964. Finding himself in Cape Town was chance, something that would not have happened had Helen Daniels not written, asking him to marry her.

The Commission received several letters from ordinary citizens offering theories as to how a schizophrenic managed to get a job in the House of Assembly. Some suggested, without evidence of any sort, that Tsafendas was pretending to be insane to avoid the gallows, while others (see below) argued that Tsafendas was brainwashed. All of these letters shared two factors: a) none of the authors knew Tsafendas or anything about him except what they had read in the newspapers, and b) none of them offered even the slightest evidence to support their theories.

ALLAN LOMAS (Paragraph 7)

⁴⁶¹¹ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Lomas’s story sounds very like the scene at the Eleni shortly before it sailed from Cape Town, with someone asking about Dr. Verwoerd’s death before the assassination took place. The Commission seems to dismiss the story and it is probably correct to do so. Lomas initially claimed his wife was with him when he was asked about Dr. Verwoerd, but then he did not allow the police to speak to her. More importantly, she later denied knowledge of any such incident or that she was present.

The author interviewed Mr. Lomas but he was unable or unwilling to shed more light on the incident, perhaps in part due to his advanced age. He told the author that the incident was “not like this,” meaning as it was presented in the newspaper, and that it was “a misunderstanding.” When asked what he meant, Lomas simply repeated that it was a “misunderstanding” and did not elaborate further. Lomas declined to discuss the matter further and continued to repeat that it was “a misunderstanding” and that it was “not like this.”⁴⁶¹²

THE “BRAINWASHING” CONSPIRACY THEORY

I am of the firm belief that no one should waste their time trying to rebuff a conspiracy theory that has no supporting evidence and is based simply on assumptions and intuitions. A theory must be proved, or at least be backed with enough evidence to make it plausible, before one attempts to rebut it. In the brainwashing case, just like the rest of the conspiracy theories regarding Tsafendas, no one has ever produced any evidence to support the theory; it is based entirely on people’s imaginations. However, let us examine it, as I would like everything that has been said about Tsafendas to be examined.

Before examining the theory that Tsafendas had been brainwashed, it is important to consider the mindset of the Western world at the time. It was during the 1960s that two of the world’s most infamous assassinations took place, that of President John F. Kennedy in 1963 and his brother, Robert, in 1968. Both then and long afterwards, conspiracy theorists argued that the assassins, Lee Harvey Oswald and Sirhan Bishara Sirhan, were brainwashed into committing the murders. According to these theories, Oswald’s mind was moulded by Soviet intelligence during the eighteen months he spent in the Soviet Union between 1959 and 1961, while Sirhan was influenced similarly by the CIA in the United States. However, not a scrap of evidence has ever been adduced to support these theories, which are based entirely on speculation.

⁴⁶¹² Allan Lomas in a personal interview, 12 December 2014.

What is germane is that the Cold War was in full flow at the time and international suspicions rampant - perfect conditions for a hugely popular movie on the subject of brainwashing. The novel, The Manchurian Candidate, by Richard Condon, was published in 1959 and released as a film in 1962. It presumed to show how the mind of an American POW during the Korean War is programmed by the Communists to assassinate an American presidential candidate. The publication of the book and in particular the release of the film spawned a multiplicity of conspiracy theories concerning assassinations by brainwashed killers, all fuelled by the paranoia of the time.

How did the Tsafendas brainwashing rumour start? In the atmosphere then prevailing, such a development was probably inevitable. Specifically though in Tsafendas's case, the culprit was L. Ron Hubbard, the founder of the Church of Scientology. Hubbard had opened several offices of his organization, the Hubbard Association of Scientologists International (HASI), in South Africa in the 1960s and had publicly expressed his support for Dr. Verwoerd and his policies. Hubbard was also racist, believing that Blacks' intelligence was too low to become useful members of his organization. In 1966, he wrote a letter to Dr. Verwoerd, warning him that “a dangerous situation might exist in his vicinity.” The Prime Minister wrote back and thanked him. However, after the assassination, Hubbard claimed he became “persona non grata in South Africa.” This was after Hubbard publicly insinuated that Tsafendas was a Communist spy who had been incited by psychiatrists to assassinate Dr. Verwoerd in order to overthrow the government.⁴⁶¹³ However, Hubbard produced no evidence for his bizarre theory. The brainwashing theory would come again to prominence after the collapse of apartheid firstly by Dr. Allan Bird. How is discussed in the next section.

Hubbard was not at the time the only member of the Church of Scientology to make such a claim about Tsafendas. John Browning McMaster, a member of the HASI in Durban, sent an affidavit and a memorandum to the Commission of Enquiry on October 12, 1966. His letter began, “I am a South African and support unswervingly the current Policies of this Government of South Africa at this time.” McMaster had a BA degree in Psychology and Political Philosophy and said in his letter he had also studied under the “direct training of L. Ron Hubbard, the Founder.” McMaster then wrote, “In February 1966, I emerged as the first Clear in the World and have since Toured both America and South Africa as such. A Clear is a person free from all reactive dictates of the subconscious mind and a product of the Technologies of Scientology. The fact that I am South African is of pride to me and I wish in all sincerity to have my country benefit from anything and everything that I have learned and can contribute. I have therefore compiled the attached memorandum.”⁴⁶¹⁴

⁴⁶¹³ Jones, Psychiatry, Mental Institutions, and the Mad in Apartheid South Africa, p. 157-161.

In his five-page memorandum, McMaster referred to the security measures of his organization, which, he said, were so effective no Communist could penetrate them, and he suggested that the Government should adopt these measures. McMaster presented scientology as an enemy of Communism and said HASI had developed a successful programme for identifying Communists. He claimed that the organization had been using these methods “over the years with increasing success, in order to eliminate any Communistic Element from our organisations. The success and survival of our organisations bears testament to the fact that our Security measures against Communism are very effective. It is with sincere concern for the effects Communism has already generated in our Country, the Republic of South Africa, that the above memorandum is respectfully submitted.”⁴⁶¹⁵

Claiming that Tsafendas was brainwashed by Communist agents, McMaster wrote that “in a Scientology Organisation, it is very unlikely that such a man would have remained employed for longer than a couple of days.” In urging the Government to adopt scientology’s measures, he noted that they were very “economical.”⁴⁶¹⁶ However, like his leader, McMaster offered no evidence as to how, where and when Tsafendas was brainwashed.

Scientology’s allegations of a Communist conspiracy involving psychiatrists and brainwashing did not stop with Tsafendas. In 1968, Hubbard stated that the World Federation of Mental Health was “an ideal tool for furthering international Communist causes and is well used for this purpose.” Going further, he claimed that the National Council for Mental Health in South Africa, which belonged to the World Federation of Mental Health, as well as South African psychiatrists, were also part of a conspiracy, not only against the South African government but against scientology, too.⁴⁶¹⁷ Despite the total lack of proof, Hubbard’s absurd conspiracy claims found support among some people who later reproduced them.⁴⁶¹⁸

On April 20, 1972, the brainwashing theory resurfaced in the South African press, more specifically through Die Vaderland. Dr. Willie Visser, a psychologist from Port Elizabeth, claimed that Tsafendas had assassinated Dr. Verwoerd “quite possibly” under ⁴⁶¹⁴ John Browning McMaster affidavit to the COE. 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 4. NASA.

⁴⁶¹⁵ John Browning McMaster memorandum to the COE. 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 4. NASA.

⁴⁶¹⁶ John Browning McMaster memorandum to the COE. 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 4. NASA.

⁴⁶¹⁷ Jones, Psychiatry, Mental Institutions, and the Mad in Apartheid South Africa, p. 160-162.

⁴⁶¹⁸ For a detailed account of Hubbard’s theory and the reasons behind it see Tiffany Fawn Jones (2012) Psychiatry, Mental Institutions, and the Mad in Apartheid South Africa.

duress from intensive brainwashing and after strong-hypnotic suggestions. Like Hubbard, Dr. Visser did not produce any evidence to prove his contention, although he admitted that this was just a theory about something which might “quite possibly” have taken place.⁴⁶¹⁹

Three years later, ignoring Dr. Visser’s caution that his argument was purely theoretical, B.M. Schoeman in Die Sluipmoord op Dr. Verwoerd (The Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd) accepted it as fact and asked questions such as where, when and by whom was Tsafendas brainwashed. The publications of Schoeman and Visser brought the brainwashing theory to the surface again and it was promoted eagerly by conspiracy theorists who conveniently overlooked the fact that there was not a single piece of evidence to support such a claim, except proceeded from the two men’s imagination. Then, in 1992, Jaap Marais, a leading adherent of the theory that Tsafendas was sane and part of a wider plot, argued that Dr. Visser’s theory had found a strong response in professional circles.⁴⁶²⁰ However, Marais did not provide any evidence to support his claim.

Despite all of the above, there is an important omission by the Commission’s Report which, if it had become known to the conspiracists, would certainly have further fuelled their brainwashing theory. On September 9, the Secretary for Foreign Affairs in Cape Town received a secret telegram from the South African embassy in Washington, DC. The telegram stated that a “very reliable source with first-hand knowledge” had informed the embassy that the U.S. Immigration authorities had a file on Tsafendas. The file contained “full particulars” of Tsafendas’s time in the United States. The telegram also said about Tsafendas that “He is understood to have shown under psychiatric treatment that he was unstable though not (not)⁴⁶²¹ insane, but type of man who would easily be used as instrument of Communist or hostile organizations. Impression of U.S. Immigration people at the time was that he had been manipulated and was under influence of someone or some organization.”⁴⁶²²

Presumably, the Commission, although aware of this telegram since it was found in the Commission’s records in the National Archives, omitted it so as not to add fuel to the brainwashing and Communist organizations theories, but also to avoid reference to Tsafendas’s mental health i.e. “not insane.” Just imagine what would have happened if Hubbard, Marais, Schoeman, Visser and company had known of this telegram. Another ⁴⁶¹⁹ Schoeman, Die Sluipmoord op Dr. Verwoerd, p. 64-67.

⁴⁶²⁰ Marais, Die Era van Verwoerd, p. 204.

⁴⁶²¹ This is exactly how it appears in the telegram. There is a second ‘not’ within brackets.

⁴⁶²² Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Washington to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

significant factor that the conspiracy theorists missed regarding Tsafendas was that the Chief of Psychological Warfare Operations for the CIA at the time was George Joannides, a fellow Greek! Had they been aware of this, the fact would certainly have been claimed as “further evidence” that Tsafendas had been brainwashed.

In 1992, twenty-six years after the assassination, Dr. Allan Bird, a South African Professor of Neurology at the University of the Witwatersrand and a private practitioner, suggested in his autobiography Bird on the Wing that Tsafendas, as well as David Pratt (his “theory” about Pratt will be discussed in Chapter 7), might have been brainwashed by Dr. Solomon (Solly) Jacobson.⁴⁶²³ He stated that Tsafendas was hospitalised in Brighton, where Dr. Jacobson, a South African psychiatrist, anti-apartheid activist and member of the SACP, was practising. Dr. Jacobson had treated David Pratt, and Dr. Bird suspected, or more precisely, assumed, that he might also have treated Tsafendas. Although this was merely a suspicion by Dr. Bird, based on no factual evidence at all, let us examine his theory.

Dr. Bird is completely misinformed about Tsafendas and gets all the basic facts wrong. He says that Tsafendas was sent to the Valkenberg mental hospital for observation during the judicial proceedings after the assassination.⁴⁶²⁴ That is wrong. Tsafendas was never sent to any hospital for observation, as we have seen. Dr. Bird then says that during Tsafendas’s summary trial “corroborative evidence was provided that he had been detained in mental hospitals in Britain for some years. The last was at Brighton.”⁴⁶²⁵ This is completely false as no such evidence was produced at the summary trial. The hospitals in Britain mentioned were St. Pancras in London and the Whitecroft on the Isle of Wight; a plethora of other evidence from the British authorities, the South African police, PIDE and Tsafendas himself confirms that while in England, Tsafendas was hospitalized in these two hospitals; no others are mentioned. The hospitalizations in these two hospitals had lasted a few weeks, not “some years”. More importantly, both hospitalizations had taken place in 1959, at which time, according to Dr. Bird himself, Dr. Jacobson was in South Africa and so could not have treated Tsafendas. Although Tsafendas returned to England in 1962, again he could not have been treated by Dr. Jacobson as at that time he was in South Africa.⁴⁶²⁶ Furthermore, no reference to a hospitalization in 1962 is made by the South African police, PIDE, the British authorities or Tsafendas himself.

⁴⁶²³ Bird, Bird on the Wing, p. 210-220.

⁴⁶²⁴ Bird, Bird on the Wing, p. 213.

⁴⁶²⁵ Bird, Bird on the Wing, p. 213.

⁴⁶²⁶ Piet Swanepoel in a personal interview, 6 April 2016.

Indeed, even the dates given by Dr. Bird prove that Tsafendas and Dr. Jacobson never met. According to Dr. Bird, Dr. Jacobson left South Africa a few days after the Rivonia arrests on July 11, 1963. Six weeks after he left South Africa, still according to Dr. Bird, Dr. Jacobson returned to the country to sort out some of his personal affairs. Thus, even if he only stayed in South Africa for a couple of days, he could not have returned to England until the end of August 1963; and this of course does not mean that he immediately started working. In August and September of 1963, Tsafendas was in Lisbon, where the Portuguese government gave him amnesty and permission to return to Mozambique.⁴⁶²⁷ A few weeks later, in October 1963, he sailed to Mozambique from Portugal.⁴⁶²⁸ PIDE, who held a detailed, 130-pages file on him, do not mention anything about a visit by Tsafendas to England in 1963, nor do the British or the South African authorities, and there is no record of Tsafendas himself mentioning such a visit to anyone. Furthermore, Tsafendas was in such a poor financial situation at that time that the Portuguese government’s social services paid the fare for his voyage to Mozambique.⁴⁶²⁹ This makes it highly unlikely that he had the money to buy a ticket to England. Furthermore, even in the highly unlikely event that he did return to England, Tsafendas could hardly have undergone a brainwashing programme from Dr. Jacobson in the few days before he sailed to Mozambique.

On the basis of dates and his information alone, Dr. Bird’s theory is untenable. Nevertheless, let us examine some other aspects. Both PIDE and South African police reports, along with British official reports and Tsafendas’s own statements to the police, say that he was admitted to two hospitals in Britain, the Saint Pancras in London and the Whitecroft on the Isle of Wight, both in 1959. All these reports say the same thing and none of them mentions Brighton. According to the medical records, none of the doctors who treated Tsafendas in these hospitals was named Jacobson. None of the above sources mentions Tsafendas being in Brighton, while Tsafendas never spoke of being anywhere in England other than London and the Isle of Wight. It seems highly unlikely that the British authorities would have missed a hospital where Tsafendas was admitted in England. It seems equally unlikely that Tsafendas would remember all of the hospitals where he was admitted ⁴⁶²⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁶²⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁶²⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

apart from the one in Brighton. Dr. Bird’s theory contains several other inaccuracies that are not worth examining further, since his fundamental claim is palpably wrong.

Furthermore, according to Dr. Jacobson’s biography by the Royal College of Physicians in Edinburgh, he never worked in a hospital in Brighton; after he moved to England, he worked at the St. Francis Hospital in Haywards Heath in West Sussex, where he remained until his retirement in 1973.⁴⁶³⁰ However, this could perhaps be a slight misunderstanding by Dr. Bird as Haywards Heath is 23 kilometres from Brighton (East Sussex). Finally, it is also worth mentioning that Dr. Bird claimed that he later revealed his suspicions to Brigadier Johan Coetzee,⁴⁶³¹ but he never mentioned them to the Commission of Enquiry into Dr. Verwoerd’s death. The Commission and Prime Minister John Vorster had publicly asked everyone with information, no matter how trivial, to come forward and present it to the Commission; the fact that this could be done anonymously also ensured that the witnesses could not be threatened. Thus, the question is, why Dr. Bird failed to raise his suspicions with the Commission at the time?

The brainwashing claims become even more dubious with the knowledge that Tsafendas had contemplated other actions against apartheid which did not involve killing Dr. Verwoerd. Two of these were bombing the House of Assembly or sabotaging the pipeline that transported oil from South Africa to Rhodesia. In later life and after apartheid had continued for many years, Tsafendas wondered whether he could have delivered a greater strike against racial politics by blowing up the pipeline instead of killing Dr. Verwoerd, since that would have damaged the economies of both racist regimes. He believed he could have pulled off the job easily because he knew how to make bombs and, since he had worked on the pipeline, where to place them. He was confident he could have got away because he was intimately familiar with the area. However, when he was presented with “an once-in-a-lifetime opportunity” to rid South Africa of Dr. Verwoerd, he knew he could not ignore it.⁴⁶³² Finally, as stated earlier, Tsafendas found himself in Cape Town by chance and this would not have happened had Helen Daniels not written, asking him to marry her.

⁴⁶³⁰ Royal College of Physicians of Edinburgh, “Dr Solomon (Solly) Jacobson, FRCP Edin.” Royal College of Physicians of Edinburgh. Retrieved from <https://www.rcpe.ac.uk/obituary/dr-solomon-solly-jacobson-frcp-edin>

⁴⁶³¹ Bird, Bird on the Wing, p. 214.

⁴⁶³² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

Report of the COE Theories

The "Lomas Affair" and Other Conspiracy

THE LOMAS INCIDENT AND OTHER CONSPIRACY THEORIES

Soon after the Lomas incident became known and even before the Commission had published its report, several people took it as proof that Tsafendas was not insane but a committed Communist and the assassination was a plot by his Communist co-conspirators. For example, in October 1966, the Rhodesia and World Report wrote that the Lomas affair was proof that the assassination was “in preparation and expected;” it said, “this is not the action of a mad man, but that of a dangerous conspiracy; and we can guess who are the people and forces behind it.”⁴⁶³³

The Commission’s Report failed to convince everyone that Lomas was an unreliable witness and that he probably invented the incident. Instead, a range of doubters saw the Commission’s explanation as inadequate, even suspicious. Some openly questioned the handling of the incident and its dismissal, while others saw it as a sign that unknown parties were involved in the assassination. J.J.J. Scholtz, in 1967, was one of the first who wrote a book about the assassination, Die Moord op Dr. Verwoerd (The Murder of Dr. Verwoerd). He referred to the incident but was one of the few who chose not to criticise the Commission.⁴⁶³⁴ B. M. Schoeman, in 1975, in Die Sluipmoord op Dr. Verwoerd (The Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd), did not appear convinced by the Commission’s explanations and characterised the incident as “odd.”⁴⁶³⁵

The greatest sceptic was Jaap Marais, who openly criticised the Commission’s explanation and expressed doubts about its conclusion. Marais referred at length to the Lomas incident on two occasions, in his 1992 book *Die Era van Verwoerd (The Era of Verwoerd)*⁴⁶³⁶ and his 1994 pamphlet The Founders of South Africa. In 1994, he wrote:

“So, also in Europe (or Britain) there was some indication of an anticipated assassination of Dr Verwoerd. The Commissioner, instead of dealing properly with this as a most extraordinary event, gave a superficial account of enquiries made by someone (unnamed) at the SA Embassy in London. The Commissioner left the million dollar question unanswered: how is it possible that such a newspaper report could have been published on the day of the assassination if there had not been some prior anticipation that an attempt on Dr Verwoerd’s life would be made? The Commissioner instead took it on him to discredit the man who gave the information to the newspaper merely on the evidence of an unnamed ⁴⁶³³ Sheldon, ‘The Pattern of Assassination. The Continuing Pattern’, p. 3.

⁴⁶³⁴ Scholtz, Die Moord op Dr. Verwoerd, p. 120-123.

⁴⁶³⁵ Schoeman, Die Sluipmoord op Dr. Verwoerd, p. 58-60.

⁴⁶³⁶ Marais, Die Era van Verwoerd, p. 203-204.

official who had described this person as someone who ‘did not make a good impression’, which is completely irrelevant to the matter of how the man concerned could have raised the question of assassination of Dr Verwoerd four days before the actual assassination. These two apparently unrelated occurrences (author’s note: here he refers to the Eleni and the “‘is Verwoerd dead’ incident”) shortly before the assassination irresistibly suggest a widely-planned action, about which some information had been leaked, either accidentally or intentionally.”⁴⁶³⁷

Piet (Petrus) Cornelius Swanepoel, a former BOSS agent, throughout the years extensively and thoroughly investigated most of the conspiracy theories that came to light regarding Dr. Verwoerd’s assassination and David Pratt’s attempt at killing him, especially Dr. Bird’s theory. He never discovered any evidence to support any of them: “not even the slightest, not even a tiny indication.” On the contrary, he stumbled upon several items of evidence that contradicted them and proved them to be false. In 2007, Swanepoel wrote accurately in his book Really Inside BOSS: A Tale of South Africa’s Late Intelligence Service that “the sad thing about Dr. Verwoerd’s assassination is that it created the setting for irresponsible people to construct conspiracy stories, with this murder as the central theme.”⁴⁶³⁸ Swanepoel characterised all these theories to the author as “a waste of time” and “nonsense”, concocted by “right-wing freaks” or “irresponsible people” “who “wanted to attract attention”⁴⁶³⁹ Nevertheless, in order to put all additional conspiracy theories to rest, they will be discussed in the final chapter.

The remainder of this chapter does not require further scrutiny and the study agrees with the Commission’s conclusions.

⁴⁶³⁷ Marais, The Founders of the New South Africa, p. 14-16.

⁴⁶³⁸ P.C. Swanepoel, Really Inside BOSS: A Tale of South Africa’s Late Intelligence Service (and Something about the CIA), (Pretoria: Published by the Author, 2007), p. 66.

⁴⁶³⁹ Piet Swanepoel in a personal interview, 6 April 2016.

CHAPTER V: THE PERMIT FOR TEMPORARY SOJOURN

This chapter of the Report deals at length with the fact that J. J. van den Berg, passport control officer at the South African embassy in Lourenço Marques, issued a permit for temporary sojourn to Tsafendas despite Tsafendas's name appearing on the Department of the Interior's Stop List. Van den Berg claimed that he had checked the list under 'S' and not 'T', which the Commission found “unacceptable” as an excuse. It concluded that this was “a clear case of neglect of duty.” What the Commission did not know was that van den Berg was convinced by Nick Vlachopoulos, Tsafendas's brother-in-law, and John Michaletos, Tsafendas's uncle who knew van den Berg personally. For a detailed account of the case and what happened to van den Berg see Chapter 4 of this study.

CHAPTER VI: THE PERMIT FOR PERMANENT RESIDENCE

THE PERMIT

The Commission deals here with Tsafendas's permit for permanent residence in South Africa. It focusses mainly on procedural matters and how once again the fact that Tsafendas was on the Stop List went unnoticed. The permit issue is also discussed in Chapter II C, paragraphs 1-5. There it is stated:

"In his application for permanent residence, Tsafendas stated, inter alia, that he had been a sailor during the previous five years, that he had never before applied for permanent residence in South Africa, that he had never been deported from any country, and that he did not suffer from any mental disease ... A medical certificate stating, inter alia, that he was not in any way mentally defective was attached to his application."

Everything in Report's Chapter VI and the reference in Chapter II C regarding the procedure to get the permit appears to be accurate, but there are two very important omissions. The first is that Tsafendas attended three interviews with three different officers of the Department of Immigration and made a very favourable impression on all of them. That is why he was granted the permit.⁴⁶⁴⁰ This is significant in view of the evidence by the psychiatrists at the summary trial that Tsafendas was unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes, that his speech was disjointed, he was unable to function on a reasonable level, and he suffered from thought-blocking and thought disorder. If Tsafendas was really like this, how did he manage to convince three different civil servants that he was perfectly fine?

Even if it is objected that these three men were not doctors of medicine, the response is that Tsafendas was also examined by two state doctors for the permit and they, too, found him to be perfectly healthy. The following covers the second omission by the Commission: although the Report refers to a medical certificate stating that Tsafendas was not mentally defective, there were in fact two certificates, both issued by the state doctors after they examined him. On November 11, 1963, Tsafendas was examined by Dr. C. Been for his permanent residence application and was found “not to be mentally or physically defective in any way,” and “generally in a good state of health.”⁴⁶⁴¹ Dr. Been would later examine Tsafendas again “for burns on his body whilst employed at Pooles.” Again, nothing about his mental state was noted.⁴⁶⁴² On November 14, 1963, Tsafendas was examined again in reference to his residence application, this time by Dr. A.C. McDonald, who wrote “a favourable report.” A certificate for permanent residence was subsequently issued.⁴⁶⁴³ If Tsafendas was as described by the doctors in the summary trial, would one of these two doctors not have noticed something, such as his alleged inability to follow a conversation or his thought-blocking?

⁴⁶⁴⁰ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

This chapter goes into great detail concerning the permit process, but in omitting Tsafendas’s examination by two state doctors, the Commission once again ignores facts which contradict or raise questions concerning evidence heard at the summary trial. Surely the fact that two state doctors found Tsafendas not to be mentally defective was too important a matter to be eschewed, despite the Commission’s evident wish to present Tsafendas in the opposite light.

LIMASOLLU NACI

An important factor in this chapter is the publication of the name of the college where Tsafendas worked in Istanbul, the Limasollu Naci, although it is misspelled here as Limasolla Nace College. The name appears to be written on a note, presumably by the official in the Department of the Interior who interviewed Tsafendas. The fact that the College’s name is given proves that it was known to the Commission and to the authorities. However, it appears that no enquiries were made about it.

⁴⁶⁴¹ Demitrio Tsafendas medical certificate issued by Dr. Been for the Aliens Act, 1937. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

⁴⁶⁴² Dr. Been statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁶⁴³ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

CHAPTER X: THE HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY

This chapter deals at great length with the way Tsafendas was appointed as a messenger in the House of Assembly. Five of Tsafendas's colleagues were interviewed by the Commission and the police and none of them said anything negative about Tsafendas or his mental state; he was described as an ordinary, normal man. Three of the employees interviewed Tsafendas for the position of messenger and all five worked with him for more than one month.

The Report states in Paragraph 12,

“The Commission is satisfied that the interview these three persons had with Tsafendas did not differ materially from other interviews they and their predecessors had with applicants over the years. The Commission is also satisfied that there was nothing in Tsafendas's behaviour from which it could be inferred that he was mentally disordered, or that there was any indication that he might become dangerous.”

The Commission deals extensively with the interview and how Tsafendas was appointed, but there is no reference to his work as a messenger. It was claimed at the summary trial that his work was unsatisfactory and that he was unable to do even a menial job like the messenger's. However, none of Tsafendas's five colleagues in the Parliament had anything negative to say about him or his mental state or his work abilities; on the contrary, he was described as a normal person, just like any other working there.

The most important omission from Chapter X concerns the references which Tsafendas used in order to get the job. The Commission specifically asked Sydney Wiehand, one of the senior messengers who interviewed Tsafendas, about references. This is the exchange between the Commission and Wiehand:

COMMISSION: And did he have any references?

WIEHAND: He had some references. There was one —

COMMISSION: What were these references?

WIEHAND: They were from different firms -

COMMISSION: Pardon?

WIEHAND: From different firms. One or two of them. I just can't remember how many,

Sir-

COMMISSION: One or two?

WIEHAND: Yes, and then he had one - I think it was from a school — where he went to school, somewhere in Natal or the Transvaal. I can't remember, Sir. There's such a lot that I see.⁴⁶⁴⁴

Tsafendas later said that he had used the reference from the Limasollu Naci College in Istanbul in order to get the job.⁴⁶⁴⁵ Although the language college reference was not specifically named by the messengers, it seems highly unlikely that it was not found by the police among Tsafendas's belongings. It also seems an obvious question for the Commission to ask Tsafendas what references he used to get the job, especially since the messengers did not remember. However, it cannot be excluded that the Istanbul reference was never found by the police or seen by the Commission.

If it was found, however, would it have been mentioned? Many awkward questions would have followed: What was this college? How did Tsafendas get an outstanding reference from the best language college in Istanbul? How did he get a job as a teacher of English there? How did he keep the job for six months? All of this when he is supposed be a hopeless, certifiable schizophrenic without a hope of cure.

⁴⁶⁴⁴ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁴⁶⁴⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

CHAPTER XI: THE POLICE

This chapter deals mostly with the files on Tsafendas and General van den Bergh's and Vorster's initial claim that the police had no file on Tsafendas. It turned out that the police had four files on Tsafendas and the general was initially misinformed or deliberately lied. Naturally, the Report attributes the police "mistake" to an innocent misunderstanding.

A SHORT SYNOPSIS OF OTHER ISSUES DISCUSSED IN THE REPORT

The Commission, in addition to investigating Tsafendas's life and movement, also inquired into matters of travel documentation and Parliamentary security, criticised certain procedures and individuals and issued a series of recommendations.

Regarding travel, it highlighted two failures. The first was that Tsafendas, a Portuguese, was allowed to enter South Africa, initially on temporary terms but thereafter for permanent residence, despite the fact that his name appeared on an official Stop List. The second concerned a delay of many months in processing an order for Tsafendas's deportation, something the Commission said could have been done in an hour.

The Report criticised officials in the Department of the Interior and on the Immigrants Selection Board for not noticing that Tsafendas had been named on the Stop List when in July 1964, he applied for a travel visa and when he returned nine months later. As for the deportation issue, it pointed out that on December 14, 1965, a high official of the Department of the Interior recommended that the Minister of the Interior should consider deporting Tsafendas, and that the Minister signed the necessary warrant on August 9, 1966.⁴⁶⁴⁶

On September 1, 1966, the Ministry typed a letter to the police requesting service of the warrant but by September 6, the day Tsafendas assassinated Dr. Verwoerd, it had not been sent off. The Commission stated: "Under all these circumstances, it is clear that the delay from 14th December 1965 to 6th September 1966 is indefensible... one senior clerk would not have required longer than an hour to draw up all these documents."⁴⁶⁴⁷ Subsequently in departmental disciplinary proceedings, two officials were found guilty of negligence in carrying out official duties, the one being reprimanded and the other admonished.

The Commission made three recommendations:

- A work-study be carried out into the organization and methods of the Department of the Interior;
- A list be compiled of anyone who had received treatment for mental disorders, such as Tsafendas, because "it is probable that a large number of assassinations, if not the majority, are committed by mentally disordered persons;"

⁴⁶⁴⁶ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter IX, Paragraph 7.

⁴⁶⁴⁷ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter IX, Paragraph 7.

- Consideration be given to whether medical practitioners should be obliged to submit to the Commissioner of Mental Health the names of patients who might become a danger to others.⁴⁶⁴⁸

As for Parliamentary security, the Commission dismissed the system for hiring temporary messengers as “hopelessly wrong.” This responsibility devolved upon the Chief Messenger, assisted by senior messengers, with reference to the Sergeant-at-Arms if doubts were raised as to an applicant.⁴⁶⁴⁹ The system created unnecessary risk, the Report said.⁴⁶⁵⁰ However, it acknowledged that since the assassination, there had been drastic changes in security measures. These were the best possible and had been adopted by the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders.

⁴⁶⁴⁸ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter X, Paragraphs 18, 19, 20.

⁴⁶⁴⁹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter X, Paragraph 12.

⁴⁶⁵⁰ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter X, Paragraph 17.

Report of the COE
Bergh

Missing Evidence and the Role of General van den

MISSING EVIDENCE AND THE ROLE OF GENERAL VAN DEN BERGH

As stated at the beginning of this chapter and was discussed extensively in Chapter 4, it is indisputable that several statements by witnesses who testified to the Commission and to the police, along with other evidential items, are missing from the National Archives of South Africa. The missing evidence includes material collected by both the Commission and the police. The Commission had access to its own evidence when it was sitting, so obviously it went missing afterwards. As for the police evidence, the author cannot know whether or not this was given to the Commission and therefore exactly when it went astray.

Sixty-four of the 105 statements given directly by witnesses to the Commission cannot be traced. Among statements given to the police which are missing are those by Patrick O’Ryan and the crew of the Eleni. These were supposedly in the Commission’s possession during the proceedings. Furthermore, the Commission stated that:

*“Evidence was submitted to the Commission that Tsafendas had tried to recruit people to take part in an uprising in South Africa. He admits that he did in fact try to recruit people for an uprising, but says that his aim was confined to the Territory of Mozambique.”*⁴⁶⁵¹

However, no such evidence was found in the archives. It seems inconceivable that the Commission would invent such a statement. After all, it was the Commission which suppressed knowledge of Tsafendas’s political activities. It would hardly then make up a story testifying to Tsafendas’s political activities.

While we must accept that the statements of those who testified before the Commission disappeared after the proceedings ended, we cannot be certain that all the evidence collected by the police was given to the Commission. There is no mention in the Commission’s Report of the statements collected by police from the Eleni seamen, except for the four whose statements were found in the archives. Therefore, it is very possible that their statements were never given to the Commission. However, it is also perfectly possible that the statements were supplied to the Commission, which simply suppressed them. After all, the Commission had suppressed important evidence that was certainly in its possession. The author is therefore not in a position to know with certainty which party suppressed the evidence. However, what is more important than the answer to this question is the fact that evidence was suppressed in order to misrepresent Tsafendas and his reasons for the assassination.

⁴⁶⁵¹ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd’s Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 32.

The following incidents supports the theory that the Commission was responsible for a few, but not all, of the omissions from its Report, while the police also withheld some evidence. On 30th October 1966, The Post revealed that Tsafendas had joined the South African Communist Party in 1938. The article was written by Gordon Winter, a journalist of The Post but also an agent of the Security Police and a good friend of van den Bergh. Van den Bergh was not at all happy about the revelation and asked Winter to downplay it. Winter said about the incident: “HJ [General van den Bergh] was unhappy about that aspect. He enjoyed the rest of the story, but that one aspect he was unhappy about, and that’s why he called me to Pretoria and said, ‘Do a deflation job here. Knock it down. He was an ineffective Red. He was just a procession man. They just used him to pad the numbers in the demos. Okay, Gordon?’ I said, ‘Yes, fine.’”⁴⁶⁵²

This incident is indicative of how van den Bergh operated and demonstrates how anxious he was to conceal or dismiss Tsafendas’s Communist activities. The SACP reference was not the only one. When Winter gave evidence to the Commission that Tsafendas had been in contact with some Russian seamen off Walvis Bay, this did not appear in the Commission’s Report, apparently because of General van den Bergh’s intervention. Winter told Liza Key about the incident:

“Another good example of how they closed up, closed ranks, and wiped out all trace of any suggestion that Tsafendas had been a successful communist or a keen communist was that I investigated a story in which I satisfied myself that Demetrios Tsafendas was in contact with Russian seamen on boats off Walvis Bay. There is no doubt about this whatsoever. And I gave evidence to the Commission of Enquiry, run by Judge van Wyk, into the reason and cause of death of Dr. Hendrik Verwoerd. I gave evidence to that commission, and my evidence was – quite easily for me to prove – that Tsafendas had been in contact with Russian seamen off Walvis Bay. It’s not a big story today. It’s not important whether he was or not. It’s not important that he could speak Russian with those people, whether haltingly or not ... So I satisfied myself that Tsafendas had been in contact with Russian seamen. That doesn’t mean anything. But in the ‘reds under the bed’ scared atmosphere of South Africa, that’s a big story. I thought it was a great story...

Now, all this is a long histoire; it’s nonsense; it’s not important whether it’s true or not. Whether Tsafendas was in contact with Russian seamen – who gives a stuff? My ⁴⁶⁵² Gordon Winter in A Question of Madness; Gordon Winter in a personal interview with Dr. James Sanders on behalf of the author, 19 August 2016.

question to you is to ask the commission why that story didn't appear in the report issued by Judge van Wyk. No mention. I later found out why. HJ [General van den Bergh] told me he didn't want it in the report. 'No connection with red seamen, no way, we don't want that. He's a madman. No connection. No connection.'"⁴⁶⁵³

Winter also told David Beresford about the incident:

"I also wish to stress that H. J. van den Bergh made quite sure that my evidence to the Commission of Inquiry in Verwoerd's death (that I had discovered that Tsafendas had definite links with Russian seamen and that Tsafendas spoke Russian) was completely (and illegally) eradicated from the minutes of that Inquiry."⁴⁶⁵⁴

Winter's oral evidence before the Commission was accompanied by two personal written and sworn statements and supported by statements made by two of his colleagues on The Post, Mogamet Isaacs and Gordon Tobin. This evidence can be seen earlier in this chapter. No mention of it is made in the Commission's Report.

In 1976, van den Bergh asked Winter to visit Tsafendas in prison and write a propaganda article knocking down claims by The Observer newspaper in London that Tsafendas was being tortured in jail.⁴⁶⁵⁵ Winter agreed and visited Tsafendas several times, developing a good relationship with him, which was not surprising since he was Tsafendas's only visitor, apart from David Bloomberg who visited him twice in ten years. Winter repeated that Tsafendas was a one-time member of the South African Communist Party, although this had been revealed ten years earlier and the Commission had even written about it. Winter thought it was old news and water under the bridge, but again van den Bergh was unhappy that it was mentioned. Winter told David Beresford of the Guardian in 1998 about the incident:

"I believe Pretoria did not want there to be any suggestion whatsoever that Tsafendas was clever, or programmed, or politically affiliated in any way. As I explained to Liza and Sylvia when they filmed me in London, H J van den Bergh was horrified when I wrote that story in The Citizen stating that Tsafendas had joined the South African Communist Party in Johannesburg in 1939 which HJ van den Bergh then told me to 'water down' by writing a follow-up article in which he [van den Bergh] described Tsafendas as being an ineffective Red, and was just used as a crowd fodder in marches etc. All HJ wanted the public to believe ⁴⁶⁵³ Gordon Winter in A Question of Madness.

⁴⁶⁵⁴ Gordon Winter to David Beresford, 8 September 1998. From David Beresford's personal collection.

⁴⁶⁵⁵ The incident is examined in Chapter 6.

was that Tsafendas was totally mad and that if he managed to get out of Death Row he would definitely kill again.”⁴⁶⁵⁶

This is how van den Bergh described Tsafendas in the article:

“It is true that Tsafendas joined the CPSA in the late 1930s, but he was completely ineffective as a member of the Party because he never really appreciated what communism was all about. He was totally incapable of converting other people to the communist cause and that is why they merely used him to fill the ranks whenever a street procession was mounted.”⁴⁶⁵⁷

As for the concealment of evidence, it would not have been the first time General van den Bergh and the South African police had withheld important evidence from the judicial process. In March 21, 1960, after the Sharpeville massacre, a police unit including van den Bergh, then a captain, swooped on the hospitals where wounded demonstrators were taken and removed any corpses which showed evidence of injuries caused by illegal dum-dum bullets. Evidence concerning the use of such bullets and the ammunition rounds issued was conveniently “lost” or “misplaced” by the police. The police lied, hid and fabricated evidence to cover up their use of the dum-dums,⁴⁶⁵⁸ which, under van den Bergh’s supervision and orders, proved quite effective.⁴⁶⁵⁹

After the massacre, van den Bergh was sent to the Baragwanath hospital, where policemen under his command dragged wounded people from their beds, manacled them and transported them to Boksburg Prison. There they were stripped naked, sprayed with water and ordered to dress again in their same, often blood-stained clothes. They were forced to wear unwashed for months afterwards to demonstrate what happened to “agitators.”⁴⁶⁶⁰ Judge Wessels, the sole member of the Commission of Inquiry into the Sharpeville Massacre, appointed van den Bergh to determine who shouted “shoot” and who fired the first shots that wounded peaceful demonstrators. Naturally, van den Bergh “failed” to discover the guilty parties.⁴⁶⁶¹

Since van den Bergh and other police officers were able to lie, hide and fabricate evidence in 1960, they were certainly capable of doing so again six years later, especially ⁴⁶⁵⁶ Gordon Winter to David Beresford, 8 September 1998. From David Beresford’s personal collection.

⁴⁶⁵⁷ Winter, ‘Tsafendas was Ineffective Red-Van den Bergh’, The Citizen, 26 October 1976.

⁴⁶⁵⁸ Martin, Justice Ignited: The Dynamics of Backfire, p. 13.

⁴⁶⁵⁹ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 147-8; 154-6.

⁴⁶⁶⁰ Frankel, An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre, p. 194-195.

⁴⁶⁶¹ Report of the Sharpeville Commission, p. 154; Roux, Time Longer than Rope: A History of the Black Man’s Struggle for Freedom in South Africa, p. 408.

since the Commission could not know what evidence the police had gathered. It was certainly easier to suppress paper documents than remove corpses and wounded casualties from a hospital. Since van den Bergh was keen to discount Tsafendas's adherence to Communism, it is natural to assume that he would also want to conceal the fact that Tsafendas had fought with the Communists in the Greek Civil War and that he had once characterised a hypothetical assassination of Dr. Verwoerd as justifiable, both political acts of greater importance than simply being a Communist Party member. Clearly, it was very easy to withhold evidence when the witnesses concerned did not give evidence to the Commission, and van den Bergh had all the statements in his possession. That would also explain why the statements from the Eleni went missing.

Playing fast and loose with unwelcome evidence was made much easier for van den Bergh just three years later, in 1969, when he and Prime Minister Vorster dreamed up the General Law Amendment Bill, whose notorious Clause 29 authorised the Prime Minister or his nominee (General van den Bergh, of course) to prohibit oral or written testimony before any court or statutory body if they considered such evidence or document would be "prejudicial to the interests of the state or public security." This meant that the police and the security forces could conceal or ensure the unavailability of any document or evidence which might threaten their interest.⁴⁶⁶² Thus, if Tsafendas's case had taken place in 1969, van den Bergh would have been in his rights to block unwelcome evidence. Not that it stopped him from doing so earlier, as, for instance in the Commission of Enquiry into the Sharpeville massacre.⁴⁶⁶³

The case of James Lenkoe, a Lesotho national living in Johannesburg, can also be used to demonstrate how Section 29 may be employed in the interests of the authorities. Mr. Lenkoe, thirty-five, was arrested on the night of March 5, 1969, and was dead five days later. Warders at the inquest said he was found hanging by a belt from the window of his cell in Pretoria Local Prison. His wife could not identify the belt; she said he was not wearing one when arrested and he had left his only belt at home. Major J.T. Swanepoel denied that detainees were ever given electric shock treatment, but Dr. Alan Richards Moritz, a noted American pathologist, testified that a lesion on Mr. Lenkoe's toe was an electrical burn.⁴⁶⁶⁴

⁴⁶⁶² International Defence and Aid Fund, BOSS: The First Five Years, p. 11.

⁴⁶⁶³ International Defence and Aid Fund, South Africa: The BOSS Law, p. 7-8.

⁴⁶⁶⁴ Bernstein, South Africa: The Terrorism of Torture, p. 30-31; International Defence and Aid Fund, 'Resettlement' – The New Violence to Africans, (London: International Defence and Aid Fund, 1969), p. 7-8.

Mrs. Lenkoe announced her intention to sue the Prime Minister, the Minister of Police and Major Swanepoel for damages arising out of her husband's death. However, since Section 29 prohibits the giving of evidence "prejudicial to the interests of the State or public security," either of the Ministers can issue a certificate preventing evidence of Lenkoe's interrogation or discussion of the cause of his death. Such a procedure may also be used to stop civil actions seeking damages from the police for alleged assault. A factor affecting government thinking may be the rise in such actions, from 76 in 1966 to 117 in 1968. Section 29 will prove particularly useful to the State in the case of inquests into the deaths of persons in detention, and in circumstances where detainees have been charged and wish to claim that confessions were extracted from them under torture.⁴⁶⁶⁵

Furthermore, in 1971, a security police agent and State witness against the Anglican Dean of Johannesburg in charges under the Terrorism Act was accused by Sydney Kentridge, the defence counsel, that he distorted and exaggerated his reports on the Dean.⁴⁶⁶⁶ Van den Bergh's readiness to interfere with evidence was demonstrated again in 1976, this time in his personal interest, when he instructed officials in the Ministry of Information to destroy all "unnecessary documentation" that would have disclosed his involvement in the "information scandal."⁴⁶⁶⁷

Gordon Winter claimed that it was General van den Bergh who omitted evidence from the Commission and downplayed Tsafendas's political activities, especially anything that had to do with Communism. Why? Winter's explanation to Liza Key seems entirely logical:

⁴⁶⁶⁵ Bernstein, South Africa: The Terrorism of Torture, p. 30-31; International Defence and Aid Fund, 'Resettlement' – The New Violence to Africans, p. 7-8.

⁴⁶⁶⁶ Stanely Uys, 'Agent Accused of Distorting Reports', The Guardian, 4 August 1971: 3.

⁴⁶⁶⁷ Sanders, South Africa and the International Media, 1972-1979: A Struggle for Representation, p. 62.

“It’s an embarrassment for him [van den Bergh] that this man who was a) dangerous, b) mad, c) Coloured, got a job at the House of Assembly, and HJ’s policemen or security... it doesn’t matter about going to work Pelindaba or whatever you call it, for a uranium base or whatever. This is not a Kruger Park ranger job; we’re talking about in the House of Assembly. It’s embarrassing for HJ, the supremo of intelligence, for his mob to allow this lunatic – if he was a lunatic – into the House of Assembly, and he then went in with two daggers. That’s some security. No wonder they wanted to keep it quiet ... if there was a political motive, it’s hardly pro-South Africa. And if it was a political motive, surely wouldn’t the Kremlin get some benefit from that? A nice bit of propaganda. You don’t want that. The reds under the beds in South Africa were the enemy. We don’t let them score victories. Think about it. Its common sense.”⁴⁶⁶⁸

It is also indisputable that documents from a number of important cases during apartheid have gone missing from the National Archives of South Africa. They include some 600 pages from Ahmed Timol’s original inquest records.⁴⁶⁶⁹ It is logical to assume in such cases that evidence was removed by or on behalf of persons who wished to conceal their involvement and possible misconduct. In Tsafendas’s case, it is not surprise that the statements which went missing were those he made which would have contradicted the Commission’s findings. In fact, it is surprising that two statements which contradicted both the Court’s and the Commission’s conclusions were found in the Archives. It seems that whoever removed the other evidence missed these two documents. That is hardly surprising when the total of relevant documents exceeded 10,000.

PUBLICATION OF THE COMMISSION’S REPORT

The report of the Commission was tabled in Parliament and published as a Blue Book (R.P. 16/1967) on 24th January 1967.⁴⁶⁷⁰ Immediately upon publication, the government bureaucracy came in for serious criticism, particularly the departments of Immigration and Interior, along with the police. An MP for the opposition United Party, Grant Hughes, accused the Minister of the Interior, Senator Johannes de Klerk,⁴⁶⁷¹ of incompetence and bungling, stating that in any other country he would be pressed to resign. Hughes said that of the three departments under fire, the Interior was most to blame. De Klerk conceded that ⁴⁶⁶⁸ Gordon Winter in A Question of Madness.

⁴⁶⁶⁹ Nicolson, ‘Timol Inquest: He Was Murdered But Culprits are Dead, Court Rules’, Daily Maverick, 12 October 2017.

⁴⁶⁷⁰ Ellison Kahn, ‘Constitutional and Administrative Law’, Annual Survey of South African Law, 1966, p. 3.

⁴⁶⁷¹ Father of F.W. de Klerk, the last apartheid President.

there had been negligence on the part of certain officials in his department, but his response was not accepted by the Leader of the Opposition, Sir De Villers Graaff. He argued that de Klerk had tried to play down the seriousness of his department's negligence.⁴⁶⁷²

Another UP Member, J.O.N Thompson, asked what happened to the medical report on Tsafendas written by District Surgeon Dr. Kossew after he examined him on June 17. It was at this examination that Dr. Kossew diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic. Thompson said, "Less than a fortnight later he was able to come into employment in this House. The Commission's Report did not reveal what happened to the report of the district surgeon."⁴⁶⁷³ In essence, the Report achieved its main goal, which was to back the court's verdict and to assure nervous South Africans that the assassination was the act of a schizophrenic without any political motive who acted entirely alone. It also presented Tsafendas in such an unattractive light as to ensure that he would find no sympathy from the public.

COMMISSION OF INQUIRY INTO THE RESPONSIBILITY OF MENTALLY DERANGED PERSONS AND RELATED MATTERS

The issues arising from the van Wyk Commission and the Tsafendas case led to the appointment of a further Commission of Inquiry, chaired by Judge Frans Rumpff, to look at the criminal responsibility of the mentally ill, and to make recommendations in the public interest. Its remit included investigating the effectiveness of current regulations on the judging of criminal cases involving the mentally ill; methods for preventing such persons from committing acts dangerous to others; and the extent to which such persons could be judged responsible for their actions.

⁴⁶⁷² Rand Daily Mail, 'Seriousness of Negligence Being 'Played Down'', 28 January 1967: 2.

⁴⁶⁷³ Rand Daily Mail, 'Report is Missing', 28 January 1967: 2.

In 1967, the Commission issued its report, which recommended, among other things, that the doctrine of “irresistible impulse” in criminal responsibility should be abolished in favour of a criterion involving inability to act in accordance with an appreciation of the wrongfulness of an act. Eventually, ten years later, this recommendation was adopted in the Criminal Procedure Act.⁴⁶⁷⁴

⁴⁶⁷⁴ S.A. Strauss, “The Person with Schizophrenia and Criminal Justice: Some Aspects.” The Comparative and International Law Journal of Southern Africa, Vol. 29, No. 3 (November 1996), p. 292; JH van Rooyen, Faye J Goldberg, and Norval Morris, “The Psychopath in South African Criminal and Mental Health Law.” The Comparative and International Law Journal of Southern Africa, Vol. 9, No. 1 (March 1976), p. 4.

SUMMARY OF THE COMMISSION'S REPORT

The report of the Commission played a very important role in creating the false picture of Tsafendas that persists until today. The stated duty of the Commission was “to enquire into and submit a report on all aspects relating to the death of the Prime Minister which were deemed to be in the public interest.” Anyone reading the Commission’s Report without specialist knowledge would probably consider it lucid, informative and even-handed. On most issues, it is also in accordance with what was heard during Tsafendas’s summary trial.

However, anyone cognisant of the evidence which the police and the Commission had in their possession, would conclude that van Wyk’s Report was no better, no fairer and no more accurate than Sharpeville or the other Inquiries discussed at the beginning of this chapter. In truth, it was worse because of the sheer amount of information it suppressed in order to portray Tsafendas’s personality and intentions in a negative light. As with several judicial inquiries, the van Wyk Commission concealed more than it revealed. Although the picture of Tsafendas contained in the Report was certainly more accurate than the one which emerged from his trial, it was nevertheless a travesty of the truth.

The Commission seemed to believe that apart from the stated official reasons of its existence, it also had the following duties:

- To confirm that Tsafendas had acted alone.
- To strengthen and confirm the notion that Tsafendas was mad and devoid of political motive.
- To belittle Tsafendas in such a way that the public would agree with the portrayal it had engineered.
- To absolve the police and the security forces of blame for letting Tsafendas get close to Dr. Verwoerd.

To achieve these aims, the Commission covered up any contrary evidence.

TSAFENDAS'S POLITICAL ACTIVITIES AND IDEOLOGY

The Commission appears to be open and objective in disclosing some of Tsafendas’s political activities. It reports that he was a one-time member of the SACP, that he was engaged in Communist propaganda in Mozambique and South Africa and that he had strong feelings against the Portuguese colonial rulers and the South African government. All this is correct, but merely skims the surface of Tsafendas's political involvements.

The Commission omits major facts, such as his association in London with leading anti-apartheid activists, the fact that he fought with the Communists in the Greek Civil War, his opinion about Dr. Verwoerd, and several of his arrests and prison sentences by the Portuguese because of his political activities. Furthermore, the Commission offers no new revelations since most of Tsafendas's political activities, for example that he was a former member of the SACP, had already been reported by the Press. Some revelations could probably not have remained hidden, e.g. that the police held four files on Tsafendas and not just one as originally stated, while others come across as attempts to show some objectivity so as to conceal more important facts.

It is noticeable that evidence available to the Commission revealing Tsafendas to be a politically involved person, a devoted and passionate Communist with a fully developed ideology is not the evidence which the Commission presents. The Commission downplays his political ideas and omits details of his activities. The extent of Tsafendas's desire to effect a change in South Africa's race policy is suppressed. Crucially missing, for instance, are that he wanted "to create a resistance to the regime of South Africa and mentioned civil disobedience" and his willingness to do "anything that would get the South African regime out of power,"⁴⁶⁷⁵ and that he wanted to see a "Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the Mother nation."⁴⁶⁷⁶ Most importantly, the Commission avoided using Tsafendas's own words to describe his political ideology, apparently because, honest, persuasive and coherent as they were, they did not fit with the idea of a madman.

TSAFENDAS'S PERSONALITY

The Commission's determinedly negative portrayal of Tsafendas could be fairly described as character assassination. It ignores any positive evidence about him, apart from one, whilst embracing everything it can find to his detriment. Some 200 witnesses were interviewed by the police and the Commission, of whom 44 made positive statements about Tsafendas's ⁴⁶⁷⁵ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁶⁷⁶ Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

character, 6 made negative statements and the remainder said nothing negative or positive. Thus, 22% of the statements were positive, 3% were negative and the remaining 75% neutral. However, the Commission used only 1 of the 44 positive comments; that is only 2.2% of the positive comments but 100% of the negative. It also presented some incidents in such a way as to give the wrong idea about the incident and about Tsafendas.

Judge van Wyk used a series of unfounded characterisations to portray Tsafendas which were incompatible with the evidence collected by the Commission and the police. It did this by suppressing and misrepresenting evidence in order to reduce Tsafendas to a shambling caricature of the person he truly was. If van Wyk were alive today, he would have great difficulty defending himself against a charge of defamation.

TSAFENDAS'S MOTIVE

A glaring loophole in the Commission's work is its failure to provide an explanation for Tsafendas's motive for the assassination. Although Tsafendas had made it perfectly clear to the police in his two statements that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he considered him to be a dictator and hoped his death would change national policy, these comments about motivation are omitted. Instead, the Commission speculates fruitlessly about Tsafendas's reasoning and what might have triggered his hand.

More importantly, in the chapter of the Report titled "Demetrio Tsafendas's Motives," the Commission dedicates most of the space to presenting Tsafendas as a rejected, frustrated, psychologically damaged product of an unhappy childhood, employing a series of wholly unfounded descriptions of him that were irrelevant to the question of motive. One area where the Commission distanced itself from the summary trial was in making no reference to the tapeworm story when discussing motives for the assassination. Once again, the Commission avoided using Tsafendas's own words to describe his motive, clearly because such an explanation did not fit with the idea of a madman.

TSAFENDAS'S MENTAL STATE

The Report seems to suggest that the Commission has some doubts as to the extent of Tsafendas's alleged insanity. It concedes that he was not as mad as portrayed at his trial and that he was clever enough to put on a good act. Still, it goes to great pains to press its case for insanity. For instance, only 4 witnesses out of a total of about 200 questioned by the police and the Commission thought there was something mentally wrong with Tsafendas; that is 2% of the total. Using 3 of these 4 means the Commission used 75% of the negative statements. On the other hand, 51 witnesses out of the 200, this is the 25.5%, had commented that Tsafendas was perfectly normal, while the rest made no comment, obviously because Tsafendas seemed perfectly normal to them. However, the Commission only used 6 out of the 51 positive statements, thus only 11.7% of them. This is something that happened with every issue dealt by the Commission. All, or the vast majority of negative statements, are used, while the positive ones are ignored.

TSAFENDAS FAKING MENTAL ILLNESS

One very important revelation made by the Commission is that Tsafendas had faked mental illness while in the United States. This was a genuine disclosure since it was not brought up at the trial and had not been mentioned elsewhere. However, the incident is treated superficially and no elaboration is offered, while the Commission suppressed the fact that there was at least one other time when Tsafendas faked mental illness - when he pretended to be mad in order to not serve in the Portuguese army.

THE ELENI

One of the most intriguing parts of the Report concerned what happened on board the tanker Eleni and how it was that Dr. Verwoerd's death was discussed there three days before he actually died. The Commission dedicated more space to this than to any other issue but failed to find an answer and in the end only speculated about what might have happened. Judge van Wyk could have saved himself much effort by using the evidence painstakingly collected by the South African police in Venice. They showed precisely what happened and the circumstances in which Dr. Verwoerd's death was discussed when Tsafendas characterised a hypothetical assassination of his as justifiable because he was a tyrant who was oppressing his people. This was not the only important omission concerning the Eleni. Also suppressed were the fact that Tsafendas took some of the crew to visit a township, and the details of his initial assassination plan, to shoot Dr. Verwoerd and escape by hiding and then sailing away on the Eleni.

CONCLUSION

Austin T. Turk, Professor of Criminology at the University of California, said about South Africa during apartheid that it may well have had “the world’s most elaborate legal structure for the repression of political resistance of all kinds.”⁴⁶⁷⁷ The van Wyk Commission and how it operated, as well as Tsafendas’s summary trial, are perfect examples of how right he was. As with so many Commissions of Inquiry during apartheid, the van Wyk inquiry concealed more than it revealed; it suppressed all the evidence which contradicted the verdict at Tsafendas’s summary trial and the picture of him which was presented to the court. Crucially, it sat on key evidence showing Tsafendas as a politically motivated person who killed Dr. Verwoerd because he considered him to be exactly what he was, a tyrant and a dictator and the brains behind apartheid, and further hoped that by killing him a change of policy would take place.

The primary aim of the Report was to dispel any suggestion that the assassination might have been part of a wider plot and that there might be serious political opposition to the apartheid regime, and it did this by presenting Tsafendas as a wandering lunatic who killed Dr. Verwoerd for no reason. By suppressing a great deal of evidence and massaging some that was presented, the Commission reassured the public and ensure there ensured and there would be no sympathy for Tsafendas and therefore no unfortunate reactions to his fate.

The Attorney-General at Tsafendas’s summary trial might not have had access to all the evidence gathered by the police and Judge Beyers himself was not even aware of it, but the same cannot be said about Judge van Wyk. He was in possession of a wealth of evidence making clear that Tsafendas was not as described at the summary trial. Nevertheless, he deliberately omitted much of it to present the distorted picture of Tsafendas that he required.

Professor John Dugard told the author about the portrayal of Tsafendas by van Wyk: “van Wyk was politically very much in favour of the government, so it would not surprise me at all that van Wyk decided either under pressure, but I suspect not under pressure, probably he just felt... and he was in touch with all the top National Party people, socially. He would probably have got the message that it was better, as far as the government was concerned, that Tsafendas be found to be insane. Politically, it was obviously better for the government to portray Tsafendas as someone who was insane, because they wished to be able to argue that no sane person could kill Dr. Verwoerd – that anyone who killed Dr. Verwoerd must have been insane. So that was why I suspect that Judge van Wyk interpreted the evidence the way he did.”⁴⁶⁷⁸

⁴⁶⁷⁷ Turk, Political Criminality: The Defiance and Defence of Authority, p. 146.

Advocate George Bizos, Professor John Dugard, Attorney Krish Govender and Judge Zak Yacoob believe it is inconceivable that van Wyk would have contradicted Judge Beyers’ verdict under any circumstances, even if he had evidence pointing in an opposite direction. It would have been impossible for him to present Tsafendas and the assassination in a way that did not suit the government. That is exactly why he was chosen in the first place. They all agree that the Commission “clearly manipulated and concealed evidence [in its Report] in order to mis-portray Tsafendas and conceal his real motive for killing Verwoerd.”⁴⁶⁷⁹

The way the Commission of Enquiry into Dr. Verwoerd’s death was conducted is a perfect example of the argument about how such Commissions were manipulated to help the apartheid government; as such, the Commission should take its place of dishonour alongside other disgraced apartheid-era Commissions, such as those on Sharpeville, Soweto and Langa.

⁴⁶⁷⁸ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

⁴⁶⁷⁹ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017; Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016; Attorney Krish Govender in a personal interview, 12 May 2017; Justice Zak Yacoob in a personal interview, 18 September 2017.

CHAPTER 8

AFTERMATH AND CONCLUSION

AFTERMATH

TSAFENDAS'S TIME IN PRISON

The torture of Tsafendas did not stop after he left Caledon Square. He was physically and systematically abused in prison, first in Robben Island and then in Pretoria Central Prison, for many years after the assassination. Throughout most of his incarceration, the prison authorities went to great lengths to prevent Tsafendas from having any sort of contact with the other prisoners.

Anti-apartheid revolutionary Lionel Davis was imprisoned for seven years on Robben Island (1964-1971) and then spent another five years under house arrest (1971-1976). He was in Robben Island prison when Tsafendas was taken there in November 1966. He told the author: "We saw him [Tsafendas] on Robben Island because he was in the main cell block that was opposite where we were. He was in a single cell there and we were in single cells on the other side." Davis said that Tsafendas was "totally isolated," in an area where those who were punished were kept. As to how Tsafendas was seen at the time by his fellow prisoners, he told the author, "We all saw him as a hero. He was a hero in our eyes." Asked whether the ANC members also saw Tsafendas as a hero, Davis said, "All political, orchestrated political persuasions on the island, hailed him as a hero." Davis also stated that all his former comrades in the anti-apartheid struggle "still hail him as a hero."⁴⁶⁸⁰

Tsafendas himself has described how in Pretoria Central Prison, he was beaten, brutalised, and tortured, and his food contaminated by the warders' urine.⁴⁶⁸¹ He told David Beresford and Liza Key:

"It was very bad in prison. They used to hang people there next to my cell, half a dozen at a time ... six a week, mostly Coloureds from the Cape ... The warders ... they used to take me into a disguised locker of clothes ... and they used to put a straight-jacket on me and ⁴⁶⁸⁰ Lionel Davis in a personal interview, 8 April 2015.

⁴⁶⁸¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 23 January 2017.

then they used to punch me until I fell unconscious to the floor. Every morning the two officers used to come out in my dormitory, my room. I had to follow them. They took me out into the place and I had to walk. They wanted me to walk for exercise. Back. Long like this. And Potgieter followed me with a baton behind. He was a rugby player and used to beat me with club on the head. Mostly behind the head here. Blood used to come out. One men there stood up for me. He says, 'that's enough! That's too much.' One officer. I still remember him ... they used to take me into the laundry room where they kept their clean clothes and they used to beat me. Scale, see my weight and then I'd jumped down and they'd start punching, all around the room. I couldn't get away. Small laundry room ... then when I came out of the laundry room, I couldn't stand up straight. I couldn't walk straight. I had to bend from the waist-line down ... They used to take me into a locker of clothes and put a straight-jacket on me and then they punched me until I fell unconscious.⁴⁶⁸²

In December 1968, Bernard Mitchell, a former inmate in Pretoria Central was interviewed about his time in prison. He briefly mentioned Tsafendas, saying:

"They built a special cell – a flat they called it – for him [Tsafendas] in the death block in Pretoria Central Prison, where I was at the time. This mate of mine in the death wing told me they put a screen around the landing in front of the cell and 'exercised' Tsafendas there. A screw would stand in each corner and Tsafendas's exercise would consist of dodging their truncheons as they threw him from one side to the other. We used to exercise in the yard below his cell and you could hear him screaming."⁴⁶⁸³

Apart from the physical abuse, Tsafendas underwent the psychological torture of spending twenty-three years in a cell right next to the death chamber where the hangings took place. The apartheid authorities were at that time the world's "busiest hangman," executing about one hundred people per year. In order to cope with the "workload" and make the executioners' work easier, the authorities had erected a special gallows at Pretoria Central Prison which could hold a number of nooses, for occasions involving multiple hangings.⁴⁶⁸⁴ Tsafendas's cell was right next to this gallows.

Each execution, and they were frequent (on average two persons per week), involved at least a week of mental agony for Tsafendas because the condemned man was moved into ⁴⁶⁸² Tsafendas in A Question of Madness; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017.

⁴⁶⁸³ John de St Jorre, 'I Was Glad That Cancer Got Me Out of Vorster's Jail', The Observer, 1 December 1968:

7.

⁴⁶⁸⁴ Sachs, The Violence of Apartheid, p. 1.

the cell next door seven days before his due date. There then began physical preparations for the hanging, including testing of the mechanism which operated the trapdoors, a procedure which caused a loud creaking noise. The day before the execution, political prisoners and other condemned men on Death Row would begin to sing.⁴⁶⁸⁵ Tsafendas himself would weep and wail when the hanging took place, always at dawn. He was convinced that this was not just about torture: it was a warning of the fate that awaited him should he regain his “sanity”.⁴⁶⁸⁶

A vivid picture of how it must have been for Tsafendas spending years within earshot of men being hanged was offered by a fellow prisoner and anti-apartheid activist, Professor Renfrew Christie. He recalled that “we were also put as close to the gallows as possible... we listened to about three hundred hangings ... you would hear the sound of the trapdoors opening and half an hour later you would hear the sound of nails being driven with a hammer, which meant the people were dead and were being placed into coffins.”⁴⁶⁸⁷

During most of his twenty-three years next to the death chamber, Tsafendas was kept in solitary confinement for twenty-four hours a day, sometimes not allowed out of his cell at all, often left there for days without explanation; he was not in contact with any fellow prisoner and was not allowed access to newspapers, magazines or books, apart from the Bible; his guards urinated in his food and beat him daily, sometimes several times a day, and sometimes after putting him in a straightjacket so he was unable to protect himself.⁴⁶⁸⁸

In 1971, the issue of Tsafendas's treatment was raised by Professor Barend van Niekerk.⁴⁶⁸⁹ The Professor informed Progressive Party MP Helen Suzman and Justice Ludorf,⁴⁶⁹⁰ that “Tsafendas is being subjected to the cruellest possible treatment. Perhaps you

⁴⁶⁸⁵ Beresford, ‘Dr. Verwoerd’s Insane Killer Being Brutalised on SA Death Row: Cell Next to Gallows for 71-Year Old Prisoner’, The Guardian, 9 June 1989: 12; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Lucas Ledwaba, ‘My ANC: ‘We Were Put Close to the Gallows’’, News 24, 7 January 2012. Retrieved from:

<https://www.news24.com/Archives/City-Press/My-ANC-We-were-put-close-to-the-gallows-20150429>; Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017; Thornycroft and Lee, ‘Amnesty for Tsafendas?’, Sunday Tribune, 15 May 1994.

⁴⁶⁸⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴⁶⁸⁷ Ledwaba, ‘My ANC: We Were Put Close to the Gallows’’, News 24, 7 January 2012.

⁴⁶⁸⁸ Breyten Breytenbach in A Question of Madness; Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017; Mather, ‘Horror in Black and White’, The Observer, 1 August 1976: 17.

⁴⁶⁸⁹ (1939-1981) Prominent South African Law Professor. Passionate human rights activist and outspoken critic of apartheid.

⁴⁶⁹⁰ (1913-1982) Joseph Francis Ludorf. Member and strong supporter of the National Party. He had admitted being an officer of the pro-Nazi Ossewabrandwag during the Second World War (International Defence and Aid Fund, South Africa: The BOSS Law, p. 4). He was one of the judges in the Treason Trial but had to withdraw when the defence argued there was a conflict of interest and he could be prejudiced because he had represented the Government in 1954. He was a lawyer for the police when Harold Wolpe sought a court interdict to eject the may raise the question of his treatment in the Justice vote. I think it is shocking that he should at all be detained in gaol, where he probably does not get the psychiatric treatment he needs.”⁴⁶⁹¹ The same year, A.M. Towert, a civil servant, informed Suzman that Tsafendas was kept in the “execution block at Central Gaol, Pretoria.”⁴⁶⁹² Suzman responded that it would be best if she raised the matter privately with the Minister of Justice and the Commissioner of Prisons, knowing that if she raised it in public, she “will simply get a flat denial.” She felt that by doing it privately, there was a “chance that something might be done.”⁴⁶⁹³

However, despite Suzman’s efforts, the torture did not stop, with claims of brutality as much ten years after the assassination. Tsafendas’s torture was also the subject of an article in the British Sunday newspaper, The Observer, on 1 August 1976. A former prisoner, Brian Price, claimed that Tsafendas “was treated with gross inhumanity and was a broken man.” He said that the guards urinated in Tsafendas’s food then forced him to eat it and he was routinely beaten and kicked. “For the first five years or so, the warders used to lay into Tsafendas. He was a plaything for sadists.”⁴⁶⁹⁴ The fact that Tsafendas was still being systematically tortured was confirmed by another two prisoners, anti-apartheid activists Alexander Moumbaris and Breyten Breytenbach, by two other unnamed prisoners and later by Tsafendas himself.⁴⁶⁹⁵

Breyten Breytenbach, convicted of sabotage and jailed for nine years,⁴⁶⁹⁶ who was with Tsafendas in Pretoria Maximum Security Prison in the mid-1970s, told Liza Key:

“[The warders] were martyring the man. There was no doubt about that ... throw out his food, throw it on the floor, walk in it, have him clean it up, throw a bucket of water on his police from a meeting of the Congress of the People (Mandela, Long Walk to Freedom, p. 29-30). He was the judge in John Harris’s trial. He found Harris guilty and he was hanged (David Beresford, Truth is A Strange Fruit: A Personal Journey Through the Apartheid War, Auckland Park: Jacana Media, 2010, p. 326-341). Nevertheless, in the late 1960s, he protested against the BOSS’s methods and increasing power (International Defence and Aid Fund, South Africa: The BOSS Law, p. 4).

⁴⁶⁹¹ Letter to Helen Suzman from Professor Barend D. van Niekerk of Wits referring to the “cruellest” treatment being meted out to Dimtri Tsafendas in jail, 9 April 1971. Helen Suzman Papers 1944-2009. Mb2.10.1.5. University of the Witwatersrand.

⁴⁶⁹² Letter to Helen Suzman from A.M. Towert informing her that Tsafendas is held in the “execution block” at Central Gaol, Pretoria, 16 May 1971. Helen Suzman Papers 1944-2009. Mb2.10.1.5. University of the Witwatersrand.

⁴⁶⁹³ Letter from Helen Suzman to Prof. B.D. van Niekerk (Wits) who’d written to her saying that “Tsafendas is being subjected to the cruellest possible treatment.” 5 May 1971. Helen Suzman Papers 1944-2009. Mb2.10.1.6. University of the Witwatersrand.

⁴⁶⁹⁴ Ian Mather, ‘Horror in Black and White’, The Observer, 1 August 1976: 17.

⁴⁶⁹⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017; Thornycroft and Lee, ‘Amnesty for Tsafendas?’, Sunday Tribune, 15 May 1994; Tsafendas and Breyten Breytenbach in A Question of Madness.

⁴⁶⁹⁶ Abel, Politics by Other Means: Law in the Struggle against Apartheid, 1980-1994, p. 16.

floor and get him to dry it ... this seems to be a continuing and ongoing sport amongst the warders ... They felt personally responsible of called upon to punish him for what he had done. He was never going to be tried and he was never going to be executed ... were really egging one another on to see who could be the most awful. Some of them felt that they personally had to take it out on him for having killed Dr. Verwoerd. He had to be punished day after day ... 'you killed our leader' kind of thing ... although they themselves had never known Dr. Verwoerd, they were too much too young to be concerned with that ... but there was this kind of revenge ... generally using him as a punching bag." Breytenbach also confirmed that he had seen Tsafendas in a straight-jacket, but the warders told him that they put it on to him because he was "out of control."⁴⁶⁹⁷

Breytenbach also told Key:

"Under those circumstances ... one-is extremely sensitive to the slightest change in regime ... when you get your food late, when you get your food cold ... when they come to tip over your bed and you have to do it all over again ... And they used to do things like that all the time to him, throw out his food, throw it on the floor, walk in it, have him clean it up ... throw a bucket of water on the floor ... get him to dry it ... pour water on his bed ... And this seems to be a continuing and ongoing sport among the warders ... they were really egging one another on to see who could be the most awful. Some of them felt that they personally had to take it out on him for having killed Dr. Verwoerd. He had to be punished day after day... 'You killed our leader' kind of thing ... although they themselves had never known Dr. Verwoerd, they were too much too young to be concerned with that ... but there was this kind of revenge ... generally using him as a punching bag."⁴⁶⁹⁸

Alexander Moumbaris said about Tsafendas in 1980, "He was being buried alive. The warders beat him several times a day. Although he is not a sane man, the treatment he is getting for his illness is non-existent. He told me and this was corroborated that he was often put into a straight-jacket and his testicles twisted by warders."⁴⁶⁹⁹ In a personal interview with the author, Moumbaris clarified his reference in the Guardian to Tsafendas as "not a sane man." He said, "I couldn't tell otherwise. This is what they thought. If they knew he was sane, they would have killed him."⁴⁷⁰⁰

⁴⁶⁹⁷ Breyten Breytenbach in A Question of Madness.

⁴⁶⁹⁸ Breyten Breytenbach in A Question of Madness.

⁴⁶⁹⁹ Roger Omond, 'South Africans Demand POW Status', The Guardian, 22 January 1980: 7

⁴⁷⁰⁰ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017.

Two unnamed former inmates of Tsafendas told the Sunday Tribune that Tsafendas was “beaten and brutalised time and time again for his assassination of Dr. Verwoerd.”⁴⁷⁰¹ Advocate George Bizos told the author, “The information I got from Alex Moumbaris and others [fellow prisoners] regarding Tsafendas’s treatment in prison was enough to make one throw up.”⁴⁷⁰² Professor Renfrew Christie, an anti-apartheid activist who was sentenced for passing to the ANC important secret information on the apartheid government, including its nuclear development plans, was also an inmate at Pretoria Central Prison. He met Tsafendas briefly in the early 1980s. He told the author:

“I was left alone with Tsafendas for a very short time. He was shocked and his face, his hair, were bleached grey/white and he was clearly a man who had been through immense stress and he was, and the best word to use is, a ghost. Neither of us was expecting this meeting; I think one of the warders must have said, ‘This is Tsafendas.’ But I don’t know if I was identified although I think he understood that I was there for my opposition to apartheid and we had three sentences together, no more, as a greeting. He was a man sleep-walking and in great, great shock; distinctly distressed.

My sense is that these particular warders wanted to do him a favour and let him see some other person but I cannot say what their motive was... I believe that the warders who arranged this accident were trying to do him a favour, to let him see some other person, and they picked me. Maybe they thought I was friendly, I don’t know, but we said little more than, ‘Hello. How are you?’ Polite conversation and, of course, the warders were present and we could not say anything serious... I cannot say that the person I met was insane in any way, I can say he was deeply, deeply stressed and he looked like a ghost but that doesn’t make him insane, that makes him someone who’s been in solitary for fifteen or eighteen years or whatever the number is.”⁴⁷⁰³

⁴⁷⁰¹ Thornycroft and Lee, ‘Amnesty for Tsafendas?’ Sunday Tribune, 15 May 1994.

⁴⁷⁰² Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017.

⁴⁷⁰³ Professor Renfrew Christie in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

In 1989, Tsafendas was seventy-one, but still on Death Row and still being tortured, according to the British Guardian. The newspaper made a widely noted point that instead of being detained in a psychiatric hospital, as the law required for the mentally ill, he had been kept not only in a maximum security prison, but on Death Row.⁴⁷⁰⁴ In September 1989, after his health had seriously deteriorated, he was transferred to the low-security Zonderwater Prison in Cullinan.

AMNESTY EFFORTS

In July 1994, with his health having declined further, the ANC released Tsafendas from prison and he was transferred to the Sterkfontein Psychiatric Hospital in Krugersdorp. From 1966 to 1994, the only person who visited him – apart from the priests, a social worker, and the two brief visits by David Bloomberg – was one of his Shangaan students, who by the late 1980s had become the chief of his tribe. However, Tsafendas was not allowed to converse with his friend because the warders did not speak Portuguese or Shangaan.⁴⁷⁰⁵

On November 24, 1994, Jody Kollapen – then a lawyer with the organization Lawyers for Human Rights, and now a High Court Judge in Pretoria – who had been visiting Tsafendas in prison, attempted to secure an amnesty for him and have him released from the hospital. He wrote a memorandum to the new democratically elected regional government, stating that:

“Dimitrio Tsafendas has been South Africa’s longest serving prisoner... To our knowledge he was the only State President’s patient who was not held in a mental institution but in a prison and we have no doubts whatsoever that the reasons for that were purely political and were based on inflicting the maximum amount of suffering upon the man who killed the so called architect and grandmaster of apartheid ...

It remains my belief that Mr. Tsafendas should not die a lonely man in an institution but should spend the last years of his life in the company of people he knows and perhaps trusts ... In summation I believe that the man has served his debt to the society (if he owed a debt at all in the first place). His age and disposition certainly do not warrant him being held ⁴⁷⁰⁴ Beresford, ‘Dr. Verwoerd’s Insane Killer Being Brutalised on SA Death Row: Cell Next to Gallows for 71-Year Old Prisoner’, The Guardian, 9 June 1989: 12.

⁴⁷⁰⁵ Jody Kollapen memorandum regarding Dimitrio Tsafendas. 24 November 1994. Dimitri Tsafendas’s file in the Lawyers for Human Rights collection (AL3183). SAHA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

in an institution and if it was possible to release him either to family or into an old age institution run by the State this might be the best approach to follow at the present time.”⁴⁷⁰⁶

The ANC government was willing to release Tsafendas, but because he was unable to look after himself, Kollapen attempted to find someone who could look after him after he was released. He personally contacted Tsafendas’s family, but they refused, claiming they were too old to look after him. Subsequently, Kollapen contacted the Greek community in Pretoria asking them to place Tsafendas in an old people’s home which was owned by the local Greek Orthodox Church. The Greeks refused, claiming that having Tsafendas living in their old people’s home would attract negative publicity for the local community and that could harm their business with a possible boycott by White South Africans. Kollapen then even asked the regional government to intervene with his family, suggesting that if the government “were to approach the family their response might well be different.”⁴⁷⁰⁷ Despite Kollapen’s endless efforts, the release of Tsafendas from the hospital did not materialise due to the fact that no one was willing to care for him.⁴⁷⁰⁸

THE TRC

⁴⁷⁰⁶ Memorandum of Jody Kollapen of Lawyers for Human Rights, 24 November 1994. Dimitri Tsafendas’s file in the Lawyers for Human Rights collection (AL3183). SAHA.

⁴⁷⁰⁷ Memorandum of Jody Kollapen of Lawyers for Human Rights, 24 November 1994. Dimitri Tsafendas’s file in the Lawyers for Human Rights collection (AL3183). SAHA.

⁴⁷⁰⁸ Judge Jody Kollapen in a personal interview, 16 April 2015.

Jody Kollapen was not the only jurist to take an interest in Tsafendas's case. In late 1996, Mr. Krish Govender, an anti-apartheid activist, human rights lawyer at the time and future Durban State Attorney and co-chairman of the Law Society of South Africa, submitted to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission that Tsafendas's case should be "reviewed and investigated." Govender said that the purpose of his submission was to query how Tsafendas as "a State President's patient" could have landed up on Death Row for twenty-eight years. He said in his request that "all decisions, documents and material [regarding Tsafendas's case] must be reviewed and investigated thoroughly. He should be visited by members of the TRC urgently to reassure him that mechanisms for justice or him are taking shape. The public needs to be reassured about his safety, well-being and state of mind, before something happens to him."⁴⁷⁰⁹

It was a natural request since it was well-known how the legal system operated during apartheid. Professor John Dugard told the author that he, like many other South Africans, including jurists, "suspected that there was a political cover-up in the Tsafendas case."⁴⁷¹⁰ He also said of the judges in the case:

"I suspect that the government was very careful when it came to appointing judges to hear the Tsafendas case, and so that would explain why both Beyers and van Wyk were involved. They were certainly political persons and they owed their appointments to the government. Van Wyk was politically very much in favour of the government, so it would not surprise me at all that van Wyk decided either under pressure, but I suspect not under pressure, probably he just felt ... and he was in touch with all the top National Party people, socially. He would probably have got the message that it was better, as far as the government was concerned, that Tsafendas be found to be insane."⁴⁷¹¹

However, the then Chief Justice Michael Corbett,⁴⁷¹² ignorant of the facts about Tsafendas, rejected the suggestion and characterised it as "pointless and absurd," because of ⁴⁷⁰⁹ Liza Key letter to Dr. Meryl Vorster, 14 October 1997. Personal Collection of Liza Key.

⁴⁷¹⁰ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 8 September 2016.

⁴⁷¹¹ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

⁴⁷¹² Justice Michael Corbett (1923-2007) was appointed Chief Justice in late 1988 (Dyzenhaus, Hard Cases in Wicked Legal Systems: Pathologies of Legality, p. 163). In 1991, Justice Corbett served as co-chairman of the Convention for a Democratic South Africa (CODESA), a negotiating forum, which held negotiations between the apartheid government and anti-apartheid organizations such as the ANC and the South African Communist Party (Dyzenhaus, Hard Cases in Wicked Legal Systems: Pathologies of Legality, p. 40). He was supposed to retire from his position as Chief Justice in 1993, but the Cabinet asked him to stay on for another year; then Nelson Mandela and the Cabinet asked him to remain in his position until the end of 1996. Upon his retirement in 1996, President Nelson Mandela awarded him the Order of Meritorious Service. During the ceremony, Mandela said that Corbett's passion for justice and his sensitivity to racial discrimination were combined with what he considered to be overwhelming evidence presented to the court regarding Tsafendas's mental health.⁴⁷¹³ Subsequently, as result of Govender's request, Liza Key, the researcher and filmmaker who had met Tsafendas and made a documentary about him, was asked by Govender and the TRC to make a submission on Tsafendas's behalf. Key brought some evidence to the TRC about Tsafendas that had not been known at the time, for example his statement to the police where he had given clear political reasons as his motives for killing Dr. Verwoerd. However, also thanks to Corbett, Tsafendas's case was not investigated further.

It should also be mentioned that Govender's request was part of a submission he had made to the TRC entitled "Injustice under apartheid judiciary," asking the Commission to investigate the judiciary's conduct under apartheid and calling for all judges who had held office prior to 1994 to be held accountable for their conduct before the Commission. It was an eminently reasonable request and something that should have already been done, as it was common knowledge that the South African legal system had been an integral part of the repressive machinery of the apartheid system.⁴⁷¹⁴ In addition, the TRC itself had revealed and exposed the inaccuracies and bias of some of the death inquests (for example into the Steve Biko case) and the Commissions of Inquiry (for example the Commissions about the Sharpeville Massacre and the Soweto uprising).

In addition, Govender's suggestion was supported by several legal bodies in South Africa, such as the Black Lawyers Association, Lawyers for Human Rights, the Legal Resources Centre and the National Association of Democratic Lawyers. These bodies argued that "lawyers and courts under apartheid, with very few and notable exceptions, had co-operated in servicing and enforcing a diabolically unjust political order ... Judicial independence was a myth that had been exploded in the daily experience of the courts."⁴⁷¹⁵

Because of Govender's submission, the TRC invited the legal community, including Chief Justice Corbett, to appear before it in a hearing.⁴⁷¹⁶ The Commission's invitation emphasised that the purpose of the hearing involving the legal community was not "to establish guilt or hold individuals responsible ... the hearing is an attempt to understand the "intellectual vigour and clarity of thought". (Gerald Friedman, "A Tribute to Michael MacGregor Corbett", 124 The South African Law Journal, (2007), p. 667).

⁴⁷¹³ David Dyzenhaus, Judging the Judges, Judging Ourselves: Truth, Reconciliation and the Apartheid Legal Order, (Oxford: Hart Publishing, 2003), p. 37-44.

⁴⁷¹⁴ SATIS, Political Trials in South Africa: Judicial Instruments of Repression, p. 55.

⁴⁷¹⁵ Klug, "Review: Law Before and After Apartheid: Abel's Sociolegal Analysis", p. 658.

⁴⁷¹⁶ Dyzenhaus, Judging the Judges, Judging Ourselves: Truth, Reconciliation and the Apartheid Legal Order, p. 37.

role the legal system played in contributing to the violation and/or protection of human rights and to identify institutional changes required to prevent those abuses which occurred from happening again.⁴⁷¹⁷

In the end, much to the Commission's dismay, not a single judge or magistrate accepted the invitation. Some judges, including Chief Justice Corbett, responded by sending memorandums. Corbett made it clear in his memorandum that although he was not speaking on behalf of the "judiciary as a whole," he had distributed his memorandum "among the present members of the Appellate Division" and that it bore "their endorsement."⁴⁷¹⁸ In his memorandum, despite all the previously quoted evidence about the judiciary, Corbett staunchly defended its record under apartheid; he praised the judges and said that the record of judicial decisions during apartheid was "generally" good,⁴⁷¹⁹ while he claimed that "the courts had no option but to apply the law as they found it, however unjust it might appear to be."⁴⁷²⁰ Finally, he "objected on practical and constitutional grounds" to Govender's suggestion that all judges and magistrates should be brought before the Commission.⁴⁷²¹

Archbishop Desmond Tutu, the chairman of the TRC, Dullah Omar, the Minister of Justice, and other members of the Commission openly expressed their disappointment in the judges' and magistrates' behaviour. Archbishop Tutu said that given the importance of the occasion, the written submissions by some judges were not enough: they should have appeared in front of the Commission in person.⁴⁷²² The Commission's report said that "The failure of the judiciary to appear is all the more to be lamented when the historic significance of the Commission is considered, as well as its envisaged role in the transformation of South African society into a caring, humane and just one."⁴⁷²³ Advocate Clifford Mailer commented that "The truth is that few judges on the bench embrace the new culture of human rights and [they] are hostile to change."⁴⁷²⁴

⁴⁷¹⁷ TRC, TRC Report: Volume Four, p. 95.

⁴⁷¹⁸ Dyzenhaus, Judging the Judges, Judging Ourselves: Truth, Reconciliation and the Apartheid Legal Order, p. 37.

⁴⁷¹⁹ Dyzenhaus, Judging the Judges, Judging Ourselves: Truth, Reconciliation and the Apartheid Legal Order, p. 37-53.

⁴⁷²⁰ Klug, "Review: Law Before and After Apartheid: Abel's Sociolegal Analysis", p. 658.

⁴⁷²¹ Dyzenhaus, Judging the Judges, Judging Ourselves: Truth, Reconciliation and the Apartheid Legal Order, p. 37.

⁴⁷²² Iain Currie, "The Judiciary and Freedom of Speech in South Africa." In H.P. Lee (ed.), Judiciaries in Comparative Perspectives, (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2011), p. 220.

⁴⁷²³ TRC, TRC Report: Volume Four, p. 107.

⁴⁷²⁴ Guy Arnold, The New South Africa, (Basingstoke: Palgrave Macmillan, 2000), p. 15.

As we saw in Chapter 5, the TRC was very critical of the judiciary for its role during apartheid.⁴⁷²⁵ It said in its report about the judges' non-appearance that:

“The Commission has a good deal of understanding for the ‘collegiality’ argument, which says that the non-appearance by those judges willing in principle to appear will create greater mutual trust among the ‘old order’ and the ‘new order’ judges and so advance the cause of constitutional democracy. However, such benefits, if achieved in this way, are outweighed by the powerful symbolic effect of the judiciary showing themselves publicly and humbly to be accountable. For this is what the hearing was about and what the Constitution demands of a judiciary that is granted the onerous power of constitutional review. It is required that the judiciary display some sense of being able to balance its necessary and justifiable demand for independence with a measure of accountability to the South African nation it serves. The Commission deplores and regrets the almost complete failure of the magistracy to respond to the Commission’s invitation, the more so considering the previous lack of formal independence of magistrates and their dismal record as servants of the apartheid state in the past. They and the country lost an opportunity to examine their role in the transition from oppression to democracy.”⁴⁷²⁶

It seems improbable that Corbett was unaware of what was happening to the judiciary under apartheid, especially regarding the appointments and promotions of judges. Nevertheless, he took such a stance. Rather than being ignorant, it seems more likely that he was trying to protect the reputation of his professional community and of his former colleagues, after seeing how the reputations of other respected professional communities, for example the medical profession, had been shattered by the TRC’s exposure of their disgraceful conduct under apartheid.

Judge Corbett’s conduct during apartheid, when he served as a judge before he became a chief justice, could be characterised as disgraceful on at least two occasions when he disregarded international law and supported the apartheid government’s actions. Two Appellate Division rulings supported by Judge Corbett concerned provision of counsel for indigent accused and a State’s responsibility for its agents. In the first, the court rejected the right to counsel of accused people without assets, ignoring the stance of international and European human rights organisations that indigent accused were entitled to such ⁴⁷²⁵ Currie, “The Judiciary and Freedom of Speech in South Africa”, p. 219-220; Piet Meiring, Chronicle of the Truth Commission: A Journey through the Past and Present into the Future of South Africa, (Vanderbijlpark: Carpe Diem Books, 1999), p. 247-251.

⁴⁷²⁶ TRC, TRC Report: Volume Four, p. 107-108.

representation. The second case concerned the abduction of persons from Swaziland by South African security forces. It was common practice at the time for South African security forces and agents to abduct anti-apartheid activists from foreign territory and bring them back to South Africa for interrogation and torture in detention. However, unbelievably, the court, with the full support of Judge Corbett, ruled that the State bore no responsibility for the unauthorised acts of its agents, a decision which ran counter to international law.⁴⁷²⁷

In order to better understand the climate of the time, it should be noted that in 1996 one hundred White judges, including ten of the eleven on the Appeal Court (the exception was Justice Ralph Zulman),⁴⁷²⁸ most of them appointed by the apartheid government, came out against the nomination of Justice Ismail Mahomed and attempted to block his appointment as Chief Justice of South Africa, to succeed the retiring Corbett.⁴⁷²⁹ Justice Mahomed was the first Black judge to be appointed to the Supreme Court, and a member of the new Constitutional Court, and during his career had defended several leading figures in the anti-apartheid struggle. The White judges instead pushed for the nomination of Hennie van Heerden, a White judge and the most senior member of the Appeal Court. One of the most vocal opponents of Mahomed's appointment was Appeal Court Judge Joos Hefer – who, according to Advocate Clifford Mailer, had been “a champion of apartheid emergency legislation” in the late 1980s. Advocate Mailer accused the White judges of hypocrisy, reminding them that none of them had protested when “Mahomed had to finish his argument in one day at the Appeal Court in Bloemfontein, because if he stayed overnight he would break the Group Areas Act. Not a voice was raised in protest when the same apartheid laws prevented Mr Mahomed lunching with colleagues in the bar dining-room.”⁴⁷³⁰ Eventually, the White judges failed in their campaign and Nelson Mandela appointed Justice Mahomed as South Africa's Chief Justice. The New York Times characterised his appointment as “a momentous step towards transforming the country's justice system.”⁴⁷³¹ Furthermore, the Pretoria Bar, which refused to admit Black members, only made an apology for its racism in October 1997.⁴⁷³²

⁴⁷²⁷ Dugard, “The South African Judiciary and International Law in Apartheid Era”, p. 118-120.

⁴⁷²⁸ Soggot, ‘Battle Lines Drawn Over Chief Justice’, Mail and Guardian, 20 September 1996.

⁴⁷²⁹ Mary Braid, ‘SA Old Guard Blocks Black Judge’, The Independent, 23 September 1996.

⁴⁷³⁰ Braid, ‘SA Old Guard Blocks Black Judge’, The Independent, 23 September 1996.

⁴⁷³¹ Henri E. Cauvin, ‘Ismail Mahomed, 68: Led Post-Apartheid Court’, The New York Times, 19 June 2000.

⁴⁷³² TRC, TRC Report: Volume Four, p. 101.

If Chief Justice Corbett had not spoken against Govender's suggestion and the TRC had investigated Tsafendas's case in 1996, the Commission would have discovered the plethora of evidence found by the author in the National Archives of South Africa and in Portugal. Just this would have been enough to reveal the truth about Tsafendas and the assassination. In addition, the TRC had the means and the authority to have investigated the case even further by interviewing people who knew Tsafendas. This would have provided additional information about him, since many witnesses who knew him well, and were then still alive, had died by the time the author began its research. Thus, if the case had been investigated by the TRC, the truth about Tsafendas and the assassination would have had come to light then and not over twenty years later. In addition, Tsafendas would probably have been released from the hospital and would not have spent the last years of his life alone there.

This author, along with Advocate George Bizos, Professor John Dugard, Attorney Krish Govender, Advocate and TRC Commissioner Dumisa Ntsebeza and Justice Zak Yacoob, strongly believes that the current Minister of Justice should act upon the facts and evidence about Tsafendas's case, rather than ignoring them as Chief Justice Corbett did.

TSAFENDAS'S DEATH

On 7 October 1999, aged 81, Tsafendas quietly died in Sterkfontein, having been suffering from pneumonia. He was buried, and still lies, in an unmarked grave right next to the hospital.⁴⁷³³ Of the last 33 years of his life, he had spent 28 in prison and the other 5 in Sterkfontein, a high-security hospital. Adding to this the approximately 2 years he had spent in Portuguese prisons, this means that he had spent a total of 35 years in prison and had been free for only 46 years of his life.

⁴⁷³³ van Woerden, A Mouthful of Glass, p. 152-156.

ADDITIONAL CONSPIRACY THEORIES

Dr. Bird's, Dr. Visser's and Hubbard's brainwashing theories mentioned earlier were not the only conspiracy theories regarding Dr. Verwoerd's assassination. As with John F. Kennedy's assassination and the publication of the Warren Commission which named Harvey Lee Oswald as the sole assassin, Verwoerd's assassination and the subsequent Commission of Enquiry gave rise to a number of conspiracy theories. Despite Judge van Wyk's best efforts, not all South Africans were convinced that Tsafendas was a schizophrenic who killed Dr. Verwoerd because of a tapeworm. Some opponents espoused alternatives which were merely far-fetched, others which verged on the farther shores of lunacy. The purpose of examining some of these theories below, though it might appear a pointless exercise since none adduces any real evidence for their claims, is to put an end to all these theories, however obvious their general idiocy must be from the study anyway.

Setting aside the theories of brainwashing, Dr. Bird and Hubbard, examined earlier in this Report, one of the first published rejections of the official version of Dr. Verwoerd's assassination came in 1967 from Noel Crowd and Count Revo, in their book The Pattern of Assassination. The authors, clearly right-wing extremist Christians and anti-Semites, argued that Tsafendas was a trained assassin and part of a wider plot against South Africa. The only evidence they offered to support this claim was Dr. Fisher's opinion, and those of the unnamed doctors quoted by Dagbreek, that the wounds were inflicted by an expert knife handler. The authors appeared completely unaware of Tsafendas's statements to the police, of his political ideas or of his past political activism. Most of their book consisted of praise for Dr. Verwoerd and an anti-Semite tirade.

In order better to understand Revo's and Crowd's claim, it is important to know something about them, as well as the company which published their book. The authors were anti-Semite, anti-Communist, right-wing Christians who "specialised" during the 1960s in advancing "conspiracy theories" and authoring anti-Semitic hate books. Revo's titles included Chance or Conspiracy (1965) regarding Kennedy's assassination and a Jewish conspiracy, Internationalism (1965) about another alleged Jewish conspiracy, and Senator Kennedy: Sinister or Sincere (1968) yet one more anti-Semitic conspiracy. Crowd wrote the Pseudo-Liberals Strategy of War in 1964 and in 1965 the Persecution of South Africa, both anti-Semitic and anti-Communist tirades allegedly exposing alleged Jewish and Communist plots against South Africa.⁴⁷³⁴

All of Revo's and Crowd's books, including The Pattern of Assassination, were published by Boomerang Publications, a publishing house in Pretoria which specialised in anti-Semitic hate literature with titles such as Hard Facts about the South African Jewish Times (1960) and South Africa - Heart & Soul: The Start of a Breakthrough (1965). Boomerang Publications propounded the belief that South Africa had been targeted by an international Jewish conspiracy whose ultimate aim was world domination. The company billed itself as the publishing representative of the Patriots Society for Race Friendship, which aimed to counter the alleged Jewish plan by study of the conspiracy.⁴⁷³⁵ Crowd's and Revo's Jewish and "Red" theories found a significant measure of acceptance in South Africa at the time and even today some South Africans refer to their books to support their argument for a Jewish conspiracy.

It should be noted that The Pattern of Assassination was not the only book in 1967 which dealt with Verwoerd's assassination. Also in 1967, J.J.J. Stoltz, who was also Verwoerd's biographer, published Die Moord op Dr. Verwoerd, in which he seemed to accept most, if not all, of the Commission's findings and conclusions. Stoltz made reference to the brainwashing theory, as well as the Lomas issue and the "Is Verwoerd dead?" question at the Eleni. More than simply reporting the Commission's observations without challenging them, Stoltz sought to confirm the Commission's findings with his own analysis.

In subsequent years, books such as B.M. Schoeman's 1975 work, Die Sluipmoord op Dr. Verwoerd, and Jaap Marais's 1992 volume, Die Era van Verwoerd, questioned the claimed insanity of Tsafendas and the Commission's findings. Both books referred to incidents which they felt were "odd" or inadequately explained by the Commission, like Lomas and the Eleni. Marais wondered how the conversation about Verwoerd's death started in the Eleni since he found the Commission's explanation inadequate. However, Marais was unaware that the Commission, or the police, had suppressed the evidence about how the conversation started. Finally, both books also referred to the brainwashing theory and both authors, especially Schoeman, presented it as a real possibility.

Schoeman also claimed that Tsafendas was part of a wider Communist plot. He claimed that there was irrefutable evidence that Tsafendas was a member of M-Apparat, a secret Communist organization of seamen and officials of seamen's unions affiliated with the Russian Navy spy service. Schoeman claimed that this information was made available to him in 1969, three years after Verwoerd's assassination, by Patrick Walsh, research director of Canadian Intelligence Publications (CIP), who visited South Africa that year. Schoeman also claimed that the US Congress and the Committee on Un-American Activities had investigated the M-Apparat in 1963 (This was known as the Albany investigation).

⁴⁷³⁴ Blog Rare Books.co.uk.

⁴⁷³⁵ Shimoni, Community and Conscience: The Jews in Apartheid South Africa, p. 72.

Schoeman's book offered purported background on M-Apparat, highlighting the fact that some prominent members, like Tony Ambatlios and George Scordas, were Greek. He claimed that Tsafendas was a close friend of Constantine Poulos, another Greek and allegedly a leader of M-Apparat in Canada. He claimed that in the Canadian Intelligence Publications office in Ontario there was a complete file with extensive information about Tsafendas, including details of his "operations" in the United States, as well as articles from American and Canadian newspapers proving that Tsafendas was linked to M-Apparat. Finally, Schoeman speculated as to how M-Apparat members might have assisted Tsafendas in the United States and elsewhere.

Let us examine Schoeman's claims. Firstly, the author of this study examined every single copy of two of the biggest Canadian newspapers of the time, The Globe and Mail of Toronto and the Vancouver Sun, between September 6, 1966 and October 30, 1966. None of the information mentioned by Schoeman appears in either of these two newspapers. It could be argued that the information was published on another date or by another newspaper. However, the Canadian print media gave very little space to Tsafendas and there were no reports about him from three or four days after the assassination until his summary trial. What's more, if such a report had appeared in another paper, it would almost certainly have been picked up by the two biggest newspapers. Using services which provide access to the world press, the author examined everything that had been written about M-Apparat and Tsafendas and ascertained that not a single newspaper published any of the claims made by Schoeman. In fact, there is not a single mention in the available literature or on the internet of the M-Apparat being an active organization after 1935.

A cursory study reveals that Schoeman is wrong about some of his "facts," which should have been easy to check. For example, the hearings of the Committee on Un-American Activities (the Albany investigation) took place in 1953 and not in 1963 as he claimed.⁴⁷³⁶ Schoeman also wrote that three Greeks, Constantine Poulos, George Scordas and Tony Ambatielos,⁴⁷³⁷ were named during the Committee's hearings as members of the organization. The fact is only Scordas was mentioned, named by Patrick Walsh. Importantly, several other members of the organization were named by Walsh, along with Communists who were active in the past in the USA. Tsafendas was not named. It seems unlikely, though not impossible, that Walsh forgot to mention Tsafendas, despite, according to Schoeman, filling a prominent role.

Let us now examine the man who claimed to have information about Tsafendas and M-Apparat. Patrick Walsh, a fanatical anti-Communist, was born in Quebec City, Canada, on March 17, 1916. In 1934, he spent a year in the novitiate of the Catholic order of missionaries, the White Fathers of Africa. During the Second World War, he served with the Canadian armed forces and participated in the Normandy landings in 1944. After the war, he spent four years "sailing on deep-sea ships all over the world." Upon his return to Canada, he worked as undercover agent for the Special Branch (later renamed Security and Intelligence) of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP). According to Walsh, it was at "this stage that he began to realize the extent of Communist penetration in the trade-union movement" and he co-operated with the Provincial Police and the RCMP in "thwarting Communist violence in the Rouyn-Noranda area." Walsh held positions in a large number of organisations, including President of the United Veterans Branch of the Canadian Legion, Provincial Command Officer of the Canadian Legion in Quebec, Research Director of the Canadian League of Rights and National Secretary of the Canadian Friends of Rhodesia. In 1967, he stated that he had "spent thirty years of his life fighting the Communist conspiracy."⁴⁷³⁸

Regarding these organisations, the Canadian Friends of Rhodesia does not need explanation since the title says it all. The Canadian League of Rights was one of the most far-

⁴⁷³⁶ The full text of the hearings is available here:

https://archive.org/stream/investigationofc0102unit/investigationofc0102unit_djvu.txt

⁴⁷³⁷ Tony Ambatielos was a Greek seaman who emigrated to Great Britain in the 1930s and founded the Communist Federation of Greek Maritime Unions. After WWII, he returned to Greece, which was soon devastated by the Civil War. He was arrested in October 1947 and sentenced to death for his Communist and trade union activities, but the sentence was commuted to life imprisonment. He spent the next seventeen years in prison before being released in 1964, only to be re-arrested three years later by the military dictatorship in Greece (David Aaronovitch, Party Animals: My Family and Other Communists. London: Jonathan Cape, 2016, p. 123-125). He could not have been active with M-Apparat or any similar organization while in prison because conditions for political prisoners in Greece were very harsh. Detainees were closely watched and allowed minimal outside contact, making it virtually impossible for them to participate in any form of political activity.

⁴⁷³⁸ Patrick Walsh, RCMP Security and Intelligence Against Communism in Canada, (Ottawa: Canadian Anti-Communist Secretariat, 1967), p. 2.

right, anti-Semitic and anti-Communist organizations in Canada, led by an infamous fascist and anti-Semite, Ron Gostick, who was also founder of Canadian Intelligence Publications.⁴⁷³⁹ Walsh's membership of these two organizations pointed clearly to his political opinions.

Walsh's written and spoken words make it clear that he was a dyed-in-the-wool anti-Communist who believed that Communism was conspiring to rule the world. In 1967, using Canadian Intelligence Publications and the Canadian Anti-Communist Secretariat, he published a pamphlet entitled RCMP Security and Intelligence Against Communism in Canada. The pamphlet is dedicated by Walsh "To Mrs. Anne Neill⁴⁷⁴⁰ of Australia, and Mr. Gerard Ludi of South Africa, former undercover agents who risked their lives in the line of duty in order to expose the International Communist Conspiracy."⁴⁷⁴¹

Ludi was an agent of the South African secret service who managed to infiltrate the South African Communist Party and secure the arrests of many anti-apartheid activists. His cover was blown when he was required to testify in the trial of Bram Fisher as a state witness. Ludi testified to his meetings and chats with Fisher, thus contributing to the latter's conviction.⁴⁷⁴² Walsh claimed that his pamphlet exposed the infiltration of Communists in the Canadian public sector.⁴⁷⁴³

The pamphlet concluded with a section headed "Postscript to the Australian Edition" in which Walsh wrote:

"The truth will out some day and when that day comes, some of you Aussies will recall the pamphlet SPOTLIGHT ON RED SPY RINGS and we in Canada will recall another pamphlet, THE ARCHITECTS BEHIND THE WORLD COMMUNIST CONSPIRACY, that DARED to tell the truth BEHIND the Soviet spy rings while most of the communications media ranted about 'McCarthyism' instead of telling the facts to their readers."⁴⁷⁴⁴ ⁴⁷³⁹ In 1954 Godstick wrote The Architects Behind the World Communist Conspiracy and argued that there was, as the title suggests, a Communist conspiracy to take over the world.

⁴⁷⁴⁰ Neill was an Australian widow who was a member of the Liberal and Country League and of the Women's Peace Council. She was later recruited by the Australian Security Intelligence Organisation to infiltrate the South Australian Peace Council and the Communist party of Australia. She was successful and even attended the Peace Congress in Vienna and visited Moscow (Horner (The Guardian), 7 October 2014, 'Anne Neill: Australia's first secret agent invited behind the iron curtain.')

⁴⁷⁴¹ Walsh, RCMP Security and Intelligence Against Communism in Canada, no page number provided.

⁴⁷⁴² Sean Clingman, Bram Fischer: Afrikaner Revolutionary (2nd edition), (Johannesburg: Jacana Media, 2013), p. 319-323, 371.

⁴⁷⁴³ Walsh, RCMP Security and Intelligence Against Communism in Canada, p. 1-8.

⁴⁷⁴⁴ Walsh, RCMP Security and Intelligence Against Communism in Canada, p. 1-8.

In the event, none of Walsh's many conspiracy theories or prophecies came true because they were largely guesswork, supposition, wishful thinking or figments of his imagination.

As for Schoeman's claims regarding M-Apparat, Walsh indeed spoke about this organization to the Committee of Un-American Activities. He described it as a "worldwide international organization of top Communist agitators aboard ships and among the dock workers."⁴⁷⁴⁵ However, as far as the author can establish, M-Apparat was nothing like this. According to three eminent historians, Timothy S. Brown, Assistant Professor of History at Northeastern University, Boston, Mass., Eve Rosenhaft, Professor of German Historical Studies at the University of Liverpool, and James J. Ward, Professor of History at the Cedar Crest College, Allentown, Pennsylvania, the M[ilitary]-Apparat was formed by the Communist Party of Germany (KPD) in 1920 as part of an extensive illegal organization established after the Second Comintern Congress held that year. It was the KPD's illegal, para-military wing set up to defend Communists from the violence of paramilitary organizations in Germany, but also to prepare its members for a possible armed uprising. Technical assistance from Moscow gave M-Apparat additional muscle but the organisation was cut back in 1923. In 1928-1929 the name was changed to A[nti]-M[ilitary]-Apparat, and it was dissolved in 1935.⁴⁷⁴⁶

Schoeman in his book offers a completely different account of the M-Apparat, about how it was created, how it operated and its aims and goals. None of the three historians named above mentions anything like this, suggesting that Schoeman got his facts wrong or knew things the historians missed. The author has researched this subject extensively and has not been able to find any reference to M-Apparat being active since 1935, apart from Walsh's theory. Professor James J. Ward told the author, "I think it unlikely that the Apparat would have been reconstituted during WW II, although a handful of former members may have participated in the establishment of the SED in the Soviet occupation zone in the first post-war years."⁴⁷⁴⁷ It seems rather unlikely that the organization was indeed active but only

⁴⁷⁴⁵ Archive.org, "Investigation of Communist activities in the Albany, N.Y., area. Hearings", (1953), retrieved from: https://archive.org/stream/investigationofc0102unit/investigationofc0102unit_djvu.txt ⁴⁷⁴⁶ Timothy Scott Brown, Weimar Radicals: Nazis and Communists Between Authenticity and Performance, (New York: Berghahn Books, 2016); Eve Rosenhaft, Beating the Fascists? The German Communists and Political Violence 1929-1933, (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2009); James J. Ward, "Terror, Revolution, or Control? The KPD's Secret Apparat During the Weimar Republic." Terrorism, Volume 7, Issue 3, (1984), p. 257-297.

⁴⁷⁴⁷ Professor James J. Ward in a personal interview, 6 November 2017.

Walsh knew about it. Consideration of his other theories and far-fetched claims suggest this to be a very unlikely possibility.

As for Tsafendas, even if the organization did exist during WWII and in the 1960s, that does not mean he was a member. Tsafendas spoke at length and in great detail about his life to the Orthodox priests who visited him regularly in prison and in hospital. He had no problem telling them about joining the Communists of the DSE during the Greek Civil War and even spying on their behalf. Thus, it seems most unlikely that he revealed these and many other unknown aspects of his life but kept membership of M-Apparat secret. The author asked all the Communist sailors of the Eleni whether they were members of the M-Apparat or any Communist organization and they all strongly denied it. None of them had heard the name M-Apparat and could not even pronounce it. They pointed out that Communism and the Communist Party were illegal at the time in Greece and it was a serious offence to be a member of any Communist organization.

What makes Schoeman's claim regarding Tsafendas and the M-Apparat almost impossible of belief is Walsh himself and Canadian Intelligence Publications. Both seem to contradict Schoeman's claim that the company had a complete file on Tsafendas with his activities in the United States and Canada. Walsh wrote, co-wrote, or contributed forewords to several books about Communist conspiracies, all published by the Canadian Intelligence Publications, where he was the research director.

The publishing house did in Canada what Boomerang Publications did in South Africa. It published and distributed far-right, right-wing-Christian, anti-Semitic and anti-Communist hate literature, much of which warned of a Jewish-Communist conspiracy to take over the world. The company's titles included The Architects Behind the World Communist Conspiracy; The Red Fog Over America; Hidden Government; No Wonder We Are Losing; The Yalta Betrayal; Zion's Fifth Column; The Real Communist Menace: The Canadian Royal Commission's Report on Espionage and Other Communist Activities in Canada; Student Power Movement & What is Behind it World Wide; The Battle for Canada; Canada's Watergate: The Story of Treason in Ottawa; The Moment of Truth; The World Council of Churches: - A Soviet-Marxist Catspaw in Africa?; Harvest of Fear, A Diary of Terrorist Atrocities in Rhodesia. However, in none of these books is there any mention of Tsafendas. If the company really had a file on him, it would almost certainly have published it to support its claims of the Communist conspiracy since Tsafendas was indeed a Communist and had just assassinated South Africa's Prime Minister.

The briefest glance at some of the conspiracy theories in these books is enough to convince the serious reader that they cannot be taken seriously. For example, in The Moment of Truth, The World Council of Churches: A Soviet-Marxist Catspaw in Africa?, published in 1978, Ron Gostick repeated his claim of a Communist conspiracy to enslave the world. What was different about this pamphlet was Gostick's discovery of a new enemy, the World Council of Churches, which he claimed was a tool in the hands of the Soviets. He described the WCC as "little more than the ecclesiastical arm of the International Communist Conspiracy," which wanted to make all of Africa Communist. After Africa, it would be the turn of the rest of the world.⁴⁷⁴⁸

Gostick claimed that the WCC supported and funded "the most barbaric guerrilla-terrorist activities in Southern Africa, which have caused untold suffering and the death of thousands — mostly Blacks — including many children and our own Christian missionaries. This anti-Christian action of the WCC has become so outrageous that it is offensive to some of its own more fundamentalist or evangelical members. Yet, only last month, in addition to the $85,000 the WCC recently gave the Red-controlled guerrillas attacking Rhodesia, a further $125,000 was allocated to SWAPO terrorists operating as the Soviets' catspaw in South West Africa." He warned that "until Canadians in general, and the Christian Laity in particular, wake up and face the reality of this incredible betrayal, this policy of national suicide will continue. Therefore, this little booklet is a most timely addition to the Freedom arsenal." ⁴⁷⁴⁹

At the end of The Architects Behind the World Communist Conspiracy, published in 1954 (first edition in 1951), Gostick wrote:

"Nothing less than a Christian reawakening and a return to Moral Law can lay the basis of sound action to overcome this Anti-Christ onslaught upon Christendom. We of the West must begin to face up to the Truth, ugly though it may be. Anything less will spell disaster. May Almighty God, through His Holy Spirit, awaken, guide and direct His people in the salvaging and revitalizing of Christian Civilization. International Marxism is a Conspiracy. The quickest way to defeat a Conspiracy is to expose it to the light."⁴⁷⁵⁰

⁴⁷⁴⁸ Ron Gostick, The Moment of Truth, The World Council of Churches: A Soviet-Marxist Catspaw in Africa?, (Flesherton, Ont.: The Canadian League of Rights, 1978), p. 1-8.

⁴⁷⁴⁹ Gostick, The Moment of Truth, The World Council of Churches: A Soviet-Marxist Catspaw in Africa?, p. 1-2.

⁴⁷⁵⁰ Ron Gostick, The Architects Behind the World Communist Conspiracy, (Flesherton, Ont.: Canadian Anti-Communist League, 1954), p. 16.

Gostick then pleaded “after you have read this revelation of treason and subversion, send copies to friends, public officials and influential citizens throughout your community and province. Don’t break the chain – keep the revelation growing.”⁴⁷⁵¹

It is obvious from the above and from other publications by the same company that their aim was to spread the word about this alleged Communist conspiracy. Tsafendas, a Communist who assassinated a powerful world leader and who was allegedly a member of M-Apparat, would clearly have been an ideal figurehead for such a campaign. Yet Tsafendas receives no mention from the Canadian Intelligence Publications that according to Schoeman the company had a detailed file on him in its offices. It appears almost impossible that the company had a large file on Tsafendas and kept it to itself. Furthermore, if it did have such information, Walsh and the CIP would surely have alerted the South African authorities. After all, it was clear from Walsh’s dedication to Ludi and his membership of the Canadian Friends of Rhodesia group that he supported apartheid. Thus, if he had such information, it seems unlikely that he kept it to himself and Schoeman.

Despite the many egregious inaccuracies in Schoeman’s book, there are always people eager to believe in conspiracy theories and one, in this case, was Jaap A. Marais. In his book in 1992, Marais referred to the rumour about Tsafendas and M-Apparat.⁴⁷⁵² Without checking, Marais lifted the claim directly from Schoeman and almost copy-pasted it into his own book. That is evident from the fact that he makes exactly the same mistake as Schoeman in claiming that the Albany Investigation took place in 1963, when in reality, it was in 1953. Finally, in his 1980 book Die Geldmag. SA se Onsigbare Regering, Schoeman returned with another conspiracy theory and claimed that Dr. Verwoerd’s assassination, by the “Communist Tsafendas” was a key moment in the planning of the great internal and external financial powers to gain control of the South African economy.⁴⁷⁵³

It is worthy of note that in 1974, although he did not mention anything about Tsafendas, British journalist and political analyst Douglas Reed wrote in The Siege of Southern Africa that Poqo had sent out “an organized group” to kill Dr. Verwoerd, Vorster and Dönges. Reed claimed that the plan failed when the group was intercepted by the ⁴⁷⁵¹ Gostick, The Architects Behind the World Communist Conspiracy, p. 16.

⁴⁷⁵² Marais, Die Era van Verwoerd, p. 200-212.

⁴⁷⁵³ B.M. Schoeman, Die Geldmag. SA se Onsigbare Regering, (Pretoria: Aktuele Publikasies, 1980), p. 46.

police.⁴⁷⁵⁴ Significantly, Reed was also a well-known conspiracist and a fanatical anti-Semite who also believed the Jews were planning to take over the world.⁴⁷⁵⁵

In later years, with the arrival of the internet, more conspiracy theories came to light, one being that Tsafendas was a hired assassin, another that he was trained by MI6, while the Jewish, the Communist and the brainwashing theories remained prominent. A conspiracy theory which surprisingly found some appeal among white South Africans was put forward by Advocate P.J. Pretorius in his 1996 book Volksverraad: Die Geskiedenis agter die Geskiedenis (self-published in English the following year as Sell-Out: The Truth Behind the History of South African Politics). It carries the following blurb:

“For the first time, the White South Africans heard the truth about how they had been manipulated and brainwashed into giving their country to black Communist rulers. The handing over of the government to black rule had been carefully planned over many decades with the help of traitors among the Afrikaners. These traitors had been working hard behind the scenes, telling their people one thing, but doing and planning quite another. In this shocking book, Advocate P J Pretorius unmasks them all, calls them by their names and tells of their crimes against the unsuspecting Afrikaner nation. He names their accomplices among the CIA, as well as those in the NIS [National Intelligence Service] of South Africa. He leaves no stone unturned to get at the damning truth.”⁴⁷⁵⁶

Advocate Pretorius, a former NIS agent, claimed that the Verwoerd assassination was orchestrated by the Illuminati and Anton Rupert, while Happy Oppenheimer is described as the Illuminatie’s “kingpin” in South Africa.⁴⁷⁵⁷ Pretorius also claimed that Tsafendas was trained by Britain’s MI6 to assassinate Dr. Verwoerd and that he was paid R5,000 in cash. The inaccuracies in Pretorius’s book are so many and so obvious, it is difficult to know where to begin and therefore we will examine only some of those errors which pertain to Tsafendas.

According to Pretorius:

“Tsafendas in May 1960 told workers at Anton Rupert’s cigarette factory at Brits, Rothmans International, that he would kill Dr. Verwoerd should such an occasion arise. Tsafendas’ statement was relayed to Dr. Rupert shortly afterwards. Tsafendas was employed ⁴⁷⁵⁴ Douglas Reed, The Siege of Southern Africa, (Johannesburg: Macmillan South Africa, 1974), p. 111.

⁴⁷⁵⁵ Richard Thurlow, “Anti-Nazi Antisemite: The Case of Douglas Reed.” Patterns of Prejudice, Vol. 18, No. 1, (1984), p. 23-34.

⁴⁷⁵⁶ P.J. Pretorius, Sell-Out. The Truth Behind the History of South African Politics, (Published by the Author, 1997), back cover.

⁴⁷⁵⁷ Pretorius, Sell-Out. The Truth Behind the History of South African Politics, p. 133, 170-175.

at Rothmans International in June 1960, and his employment was terminated formally in January 1962. Rupert never spoke to Tsafendas face to face. From February 1962, Tsafendas was unemployed but was paid from Rupert's financial sources. It is said that the idea to murder Dr. Verwoerd first took shape in March 1963 in the vicinity of Birmingham. Rupert called a meeting with four other persons, among them members of the Council on Foreign Relations (CFR), CIA and MI6. At that meeting it was resolved that Dr. Verwoerd was to be killed by an assassin, and Tsafendas was called in to do the deed. It was decided that Tsafendas would be trained by MI6, and that they would pay him once the deed was done...

Tsafendas's training by MI6 was done in two stages. The first stage was conducted in the vicinity of Kerkira in Greece, and rested mainly on hypnotic brainwashing. The spear was used as symbol to activate the murder. A drop of blood signified the time factor. When and where the second stage was conducted is not known. The emphasis during this stage was on the handling of weapons. In Cape Town on 9 June 1965 at about 21h30 Tsafendas was paid about R 5,000 in cash to murder Dr. Verwoerd. He was paid by an unidentified MI6 agent. As far as is known, he was transported in Rupert's car. Rupert himself was not present, but his chauffeur was. The chauffeur was not aware of the nature of the event.⁴⁷⁵⁸

Pretorius concluded that, "Although Rupert was the driving force behind Dr. Verwoerd's murder, the architect was the foreign Monetary Power."⁴⁷⁵⁹ Pretorius does not name sources for any of the above claims; instead, he asks the reader to take his word for granted, as he states at the beginning of his book: "I, the writer, stand by the contents of this book. I will only go back on my word if those who allege that this information is false, are willing to prove it through a serum test."⁴⁷⁶⁰

Let us examine some of the claims involving Tsafendas. Firstly, Tsafendas never worked for Rothmans. There is no such information in the PIDE file, in the COE's report, nor in the evidence collected by the South African police, including that provided by the British authorities regarding Tsafendas's time in England. Tsafendas himself never told anyone that he had worked for Rothmans and it is worth mentioning that he personally abhorred smoking and would move away from cigarette smokers to avoid the fumes.⁴⁷⁶¹

⁴⁷⁵⁸ Pretorius, Sell-Out. The Truth Behind the History of South African Politics, p. 170-174.

⁴⁷⁵⁹ Pretorius, Sell-Out. The Truth Behind the History of South African Politics, p. 175.

⁴⁷⁶⁰ Pretorius, Sell-Out. The Truth Behind the History of South African Politics, n.p.

⁴⁷⁶¹ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

What is incontestable is that in June 1960, Tsafendas was working, not for Rothmans in England, but at a tractor factory in Munich, Germany. Tsafendas stated as much in his statement to the South African police after his arrest and the PIDE file on him confirmed it, noting that on May 25, 1960, he was issued a temporary Portuguese passport in Munich. On June 30, according to several PIDE documents, according to Tsafendas himself and according to the Commission of Enquiry, Tsafendas began travelling through the Balkans to Egypt in an attempt to reach Mozambique by land. In Egypt, his passport expired and the Portuguese Consulate refused to renew it. However, he managed to obtain a refugee passport from the Red Cross and travelled to Beirut, Lebanon.⁴⁷⁶²

On January 20, 1961, Tsafendas presented himself at the Consulate-General of Spain in Jerusalem, requesting a visa for Israel as a refugee.⁴⁷⁶³ In June/July 1961, he found himself in Istanbul, where he remained until December 1961. Unless, PIDE, the Commission of Enquiry, the South African press, Tsafendas himself in his statements to the police and his friends, Father Nikola Banovic and Alexandra Vaporidis are all mistaken, these were Tsafendas's whereabouts, rendering Pretorius's statements false. Tsafendas lived for some seven months in Istanbul, four of them in Father Banovic's house where the two were in touch on a daily basis. Another witness, Alexandra Vaporidis, whose husband Father Agathagelos Vaporidis also associated with Tsafendas at the time, confirmed to the author that Tsafendas was in Istanbul at the time. Even the South African press had become aware that Tsafendas was in Istanbul in 1961 teaching English at a private college

As for Tsafendas's whereabouts in January 1962, these were also known to PIDE and to the South African authorities. According to Tsafendas's statement to the police, but also to PIDE's file, he was at that time in Crete. He then took a ferry to Piraeus, travelled by bus and ferry to Corfu, then boarded a seagoing ferry to Brindisi in southern, Italy.⁴⁷⁶⁴ He arrived in Brindisi, on January 31, 1962 and travelled to Rome, where on February 8, 1962, he called at the Portuguese Embassy. The embassy gave him an allowance of 6,000 lire and a Rome-Lisbon train ticket costing 26,000 lire to help him return to Portugal.⁴⁷⁶⁵ It is surely not possible that all these sources, especially PIDE's official documents from the Portuguese ⁴⁷⁶² Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁷⁶³ Report of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, proc. 518/15/55. Co. 334. 6 April 1961. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁷⁶⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁷⁶⁵ Seccao Consular Report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 10 February 1962. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

mission in Italy, could be mistaken about Tsafendas's whereabouts while Pretorius is correct, without providing a single piece of evidence to support his claim.

As for Tsafendas receiving a payment on June 9, 1965 in Cape Town, this could not have happened because Tsafendas was in Durban at the time. On May 7, 1965, Tsafendas was embroiled in a fight with Vergos in Mandini, a town about a hundred kilometres north of Durban.⁴⁷⁶⁶ Father Hanno Probst testified to the police that sometime in June he saw Tsafendas in Mandini with his hand bandaged from the fight with Vergos.⁴⁷⁶⁷ That must have been early June, as later that month Tsafendas moved back to Durban and from June 21, 1965 to August 24, 1965, he lived at the Durban Men's Home at 160 Queen Street. Two staff members of the Home, Kenneth Heugh Ross and Robert Harpur Smith, testified to the police after they checked their records that Tsafendas was there at the time.⁴⁷⁶⁸ It was also in June 1965, while he was in Durban, that Tsafendas received the first letter from Helen Daniels in Cape Town. They subsequently exchanged more letters.⁴⁷⁶⁹ According to Tsafendas himself, to Helen Daniels's statement to the police and to her brother Peter Daniels's testimony at Tsafendas's summary trial, Tsafendas arrived in Cape Town from Durban on August 28, 1965, travelling partly by train and partly hitch-hiking.⁴⁷⁷⁰

It seems highly unlikely that these three people are mistaken about the date of Tsafendas's arrival while Pretorius is correct, again without evidence. It is not impossible that Tsafendas could have travelled for one day from Durban to Cape Town, received the money from the MI6 agent and then returned to Durban. In such a case, however, why would he not stay in Cape Town to do the job? A final point: Tsafendas's financial situation was so bad at the time that he hitch-hiked free to Cape Town. Why would he go to all that trouble when he had in his possession the money the agent supposedly gave him? Pretorius's book contains several other unfounded claims both about Tsafendas and historical events in South Africa, ⁴⁷⁶⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File Verklarings. NASA.

⁴⁷⁶⁷ Father Hanno Probst statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁷⁶⁸ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966, K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁷⁶⁹ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

⁴⁷⁷⁰ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA; Peter Daniels's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA; Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

but the author feels it is not necessary to examine them since it is clear that they have no basis in truth and are not worth taking seriously.

As was stated earlier, over the years, former BOSS agent Piet Swanepoel extensively and thoroughly researched most of the conspiracy theories that came out regarding Dr. Verwoerd's assassination. In his 2007 book Really Inside BOSS: A Tale of South Africa's Late Intelligence Service, Swanepoel accurately wrote that "the sad thing about Dr. Verwoerd's assassination is that it created the setting for irresponsible people to construct conspiracy stories, with this murder as the central theme."⁴⁷⁷¹ Swanepoel referred explicitly to Advocate P.J. Pretorius in Really Inside BOSS as being one of those "irresponsible people" who constructed conspiracy theories. He wrote in his book that Advocate Pretorius's claims

"are completely unfounded. His nameless sources are non-existent and the entire book, which refers to the 'Illuminati' on just about every page, is constructed on a falsehood. He claims the proof of the existence of the 'Illuminati' is to be found in Professor Carroll Quigley's book Tragedy and Hope. The truth, of course, is that the word 'Illuminati' appears nowhere in that book."⁴⁷⁷²

Swanepoel told the author that he came across "not even the slightest [evidence], not even a tiny indication" to support any of the conspiracy theories; on the contrary, he came across a plethora of evidence that contradicted them and proved them to be false. He characterised all the theories to the author as "a waste of time" and "nonsense", concocted by "right-wing freaks" or "irresponsible people" who "wanted to attract attention."⁴⁷⁷³

Conspiracy theories as to Verwoerd's assassination continued to appear in later years, especially on the world wide web when that became available, but also occasionally in books. The most popular theory, as always, was of a Jewish and/or Communist conspiracy. What may have added to this belief was the fact that four members of Tsafendas's defence team were Jewish (Bloomberg, Dr. Kossew, Dr. Sakinofsky and Dr. Zabow) as was Dr Jacobson, a fact highlighted by Dr. Bird's theory. Many of the theories developed in later years took elements from the older ones or simply re-presented them as facts because Schoeman or Marais wrote about them. It is pointless to continue analysing these writings since none of them provides any supporting evidence. Worse, the authors prove not to have even the most ⁴⁷⁷¹ Swanepoel, Really Inside BOSS: A Tale of South Africa's Late Intelligence Service (and Something about the CIA), p. 66.

⁴⁷⁷² Swanepoel, Really Inside BOSS: A Tale of South Africa's Late Intelligence Service (and Something about the CIA), p. 67.

⁴⁷⁷³ Piet Swanepoel in a personal interview, 6 April 2016.

basic knowledge of Tsafendas's life, political ideas or political actions before the assassination.

Ironically, none of the conspiracy advocates seemed to be aware that Tsafendas's great-grandmother was Jewish, although this would doubtless have been seen as further evidence of a complicated Judaic plot. Many similar theories purporting to explain the "truth" behind Verwoerd's assassination can be found on the internet, including several based on Dr. Bird's theory or on Dagbreek's report from the unnamed doctors. None of them is worthy of serious examination since they provide no credible proof for their claims. They either speculate endlessly about what possibly happened, or they refer to "events" and present them as facts, while no names or references are adduced as to the source of their "information." Finally, none of the authors demonstrates even the slightest knowledge of Tsafendas's life, character, political beliefs and activities apart from the information published in the van Wyk Commission's report.

It can be no coincidence that most of the conspiracy theories regarding Tsafendas were developed by people with the same political obsessions and characteristics, being racists, fascists, anti-Semites and anti-Communists. All claim that there was a Jewish-Communist conspiracy against Dr. Verwoerd and South Africa. Where they differ is with the assassin, some claiming Tsafendas was brainwashed, others that he was a member of a secret Communist organization, still others that he was a hired hand. Something else they have in common, and the most important, is that none of them presents any evidence to support his theory and sources are never specified. As for the Jews being blamed, that is hardly surprising. As Jean-Paul Sartre said, "If the Jew did not exist, the anti-Semite would invent him."⁴⁷⁷⁴ ⁴⁷⁷⁴ Jean-Paul Sartre, Anti-Semite and Jew: An Exploration of the Etiology of Hate, (New York, N.Y. Schocken Books, 1995, first published in 1946), p. 13.

OPINIONS OF SOME PROMINENT ANTI-APARTHEID ACTIVISTS CONCERNING TSAFENDAS

Professor Renfrew Christie told the author:

“I was in my final year of high school when Tsafendas carried out his political assassination of Verwoerd. My own view is that he was perfectly sane, he was, after all, a member of the South African Communist Party. My own interpretation of the events is that this was a fully legitimate, politically motivated part of the armed struggle. Remember, Nelson Mandela had been sentenced for armed struggle just two years before, two or three years and there was a legitimate armed struggle going on against one of the great evils of the Twentieth Century and the greatest architect was Hendrik Verwoerd. So, the person that killed Verwoerd was a member of the Communist Party, the South African Communist Party and, in alliance with the ANC, were in an armed struggle. I think his basic motives are perfectly obvious, he carried out an armed struggle and killed the tyrant and that is, I think, how he should be remembered, as a hero. I think it is very peculiar that the new South Africa has accepted the crooked old South Africa’s interpretation of Tsafendas.

In the time of reconciliation and settlement, I think a lot of the heroism of the armed struggle got whitewashed and papered over and forgotten. There’s a sustained pressure out of Western Europe, and even now, we get people who paint art works about the settlement and about Mandela the ‘peacemaker’ and we get people coming to stress how important was the non-violent struggle in liberating the country. And it sometimes has a Cold War flavour, that the ANC was aligned with the Communist Party and was supported by the Soviets whereas the West were not democrats in South Africa for forty years, the West fought against democracy for forty years. So, there’s an attempt to hide the armed struggle and to play up the side of Nelson Mandela, the ‘peacemaker’ rather than Nelson Mandela, the ‘armed struggler.’ In fact, and in the actual history, there was thirty years of armed struggle. The latter-day attempt to ignore it and to say we would have had a peaceful settlement anyway and capitalism would naturally have reformed, is a continuation of Cold War thinking. The fact remains that the West armed, even after sanctions, secretly armed apartheid and they did it, not only because they were racists, although there was deep racism in places like Brazil and America, they did it because they wanted forced labour for mining gold and diamonds and uranium.”⁴⁷⁷⁵

⁴⁷⁷⁵ Professor Renfrew Christie in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

Anti-apartheid revolutionary Lionel Davis, who was imprisoned on Robben Island at the same time as Tsafendas, told the author of how he and his fellow prisoners viewed him: “We all saw him as a hero. He was a hero in our eyes.” Asked whether the ANC members also saw Tsafendas as a hero, Davis said, “All political, orchestrated political persuasions on the island, hailed him as a hero.” Davis also stated that all his former comrades in the anti-apartheid struggle “still hail him as a hero.”⁴⁷⁷⁶

Denis Goldberg told the author that Tsafendas’s statements to the South African police after his arrest, “clearly shows that he was politically motivated [for killing Verwoerd] and not insane ... the man is determined to kill the Prime Minister because of the racism... [Tsafendas] has a clear political opinion about racism.” Goldberg was not in the least surprised when he heard that Tsafendas had been declared to be insane, and “always had doubts” about the verdict. He thought that it was natural for the Apartheid State to do such a thing so they could claim that “only an insane person would kill this brilliant prime minister.” “They would have never admitted that a Communist did it,” Goldberg told the author.⁴⁷⁷⁷

Goldberg also believes that it would have been “very embarrassing” for the authorities and the police if it had become known that Tsafendas was a former member of the South African Communist Party and a committed Communist with a long history of political activism. “They had made a decision, they’re not going to have a proper trial, they want Tsafendas declared insane and unfit to stand and that was their decision. So, we lock him away until the Government says it’s okay to release him or never and the answer was never, until he died.” Asked by the author whether he agreed with Tsafendas’s act, Goldberg said that while he did not condone political assassinations, he could not condemn this one. About Tsafendas, he said, “I have no problem with him.”⁴⁷⁷⁸

Krish Govender said that the “society should recognise the heroism of Tsafendas and his place in history should be in the category of a freedom fighter and he should be honoured.”⁴⁷⁷⁹ Ronnie Kasrils characterised this study as “incredible” and said of Tsafendas that “the powers of the day sought to portray Tsafendas as a crazy man, and what we now can see and the country needs to know is that the man was motivated with good intentions and that he was a communist.” Kasrils also said that Tsafendas should have been pardoned back ⁴⁷⁷⁶ Lionel Davis in a personal interview, 8 April 2015.

⁴⁷⁷⁷ Denis Goldberg in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

⁴⁷⁷⁸ Denis Goldberg in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

⁴⁷⁷⁹ Monica Laganparsad, ‘Verwoerd’s Killer A Freedom Fighter?’ Sunday Times, 11 September 2016: 7-8.

in 1994, but instead “what we have is an invisible man. We have an unmarked grave at Sterkfontein ... his name should be on the wall of Freedom Park.”⁴⁷⁸⁰

Ahmed Kathrada, asked by the author whether he thought Dr Verwoerd’s assassination changed South Africa’s history and hastened the end of apartheid, said, “there is no doubt about that.” Asked whether he agreed with the assassination, he clarified that although he does not agree with assassinations in general, he cannot condemn this particular one.⁴⁷⁸¹ High Court Judge Jody Kollapen told the author that “the interesting thing is, that if he was found not to be insane then the trial would have to proceed, right. Then, there’s a real risk – given his early arrest for distributing pamphlets etc. – that you’re putting on trial, then, not only Dimitris Tsafendas, you’re putting on trial on the international stage the entire system of apartheid.”⁴⁷⁸²

John Matshikiza, a prominent South African actor, poet and political activist, wrote shortly after Tsafendas’s funeral in an article in the Mail and Guardian that Verwoerd’s assassin was not only an “unsung hero” and South Africa’s “greatest political assassin,” but that he had secured “a place in heaven.” Matshikiza also stressed that Tsafendas never mentioned the tapeworm during his interrogation despite persistent efforts by the police to make him say a tapeworm made him do it. He concluded his article with the following, “Any warrior who would be prepared to strike a blow against it [apartheid] would be entitled to a place in heaven. For 33 years we ignored Tsafendas. He had embarrassed us by getting straight to the point, while we were still justifying our pain. Last Saturday, he was buried quietly in Krugersdorp. Ten people, mostly members of the Greek community were in attendance. The politicians, and the humble victims of apartheid for whom he had struck the most awesome blow in the fight for freedom, chose to stay away.”⁴⁷⁸³

Solly Mapaila, First Deputy General Secretary of the South African Communist Party told the author:

“The majority of our people in the country have relied, not exclusively but in the main, on the information from the apartheid treaty about Tsafendas, which sought to deal away with the discourse that the liberation movement or the political actors at the time, whether on behalf of the liberation movement or on behalf of their own conscience could actually take political action against the apartheid treaty. Which is what Tsafendas did. So, they ⁴⁷⁸⁰ Laganparsad, ‘Verwoerd’s Killer A Freedom Fighter?’ Sunday Times, 11 September 2016: 7-8.

⁴⁷⁸¹ Ahmed Kathrada in a personal interview, 13 April 2016.

⁴⁷⁸² Judge Jody Kollapen in a personal interview, 16 April 2015.

⁴⁷⁸³ John Matshikiza, ‘Place in Heaven for Unsung Hero’, Mail and Guardian, October 15 to 21, 1999: 4.

did not want to create an impression that somebody can respond to the might of oppression and Tsafendas, not only responded to this might, he hit them hard. He hit the main force, the principal force and the principal instigator of the apartheid system.

So, with that he was politically astute and correct in the actual identifying the real problem and he decided to sort it out the best way he could and I think any other Black person who has political conscience with that access could have actually done it, knowing that he will pay the ultimate price for it and I'm quite convinced that Tsafendas had a clear conscience that he will die on the side of the people by his actions and he was brave enough. In fact, I regard him as a hero and a warrior for his bravery to confront the might of apartheid systems, right in its parliament and actually dealt with Verwoerd. So, the apartheid regime created this impression that this was a lunatic, a madman, who one day decided to kill the Prime Minister of the country at the time, not knowing what he was doing because he was a lunatic. Obviously only fools really believe this stupid idea throughout history."

Mapaila concluded that the truth about Tsafendas was "long overdue" and that South Africa should "recognise the contribution of Dimitri Tsafendas and to accord him, his rightful place amongst heroes of our struggle."⁴⁷⁸⁴

Alexander Moumbaris, who was honoured twice by the South African government (Grand Companion of O.R. Tambo and a Sabotage Campaign medal) for his part in the struggle against apartheid. Moumbaris considers Tsafendas to be the most unfairly treated person in the history of South Africa. He is deeply saddened that Tsafendas suffered a lonely death in a psychiatric hospital. In 2003, he created a web page for Tsafendas headed, "Dimitri Tsafendas. Remembering a Revolutionary. Homage to Dimitri Tsafendas. Hero and Martyr of the Cause of the South African People." Moumbaris concluded his entry with the following: "I regret not having done better for him to get out of there [the hospital where he died]. He deserved a better liberty than the one he got."⁴⁷⁸⁵ He described Tsafendas to the author as "a brave revolutionary, the bravest man I ever met." He believes that South Africa should at last recognise that Tsafendas was a revolutionary, not an insane person, and that the assassination was a political act and not a mindless one.⁴⁷⁸⁶

Helen Suzman, asked by Liza Key if the assassination changed South Africa's history, she replied:

⁴⁷⁸⁴ Solly Mapaila in a personal interview, 24 March 2015.

⁴⁷⁸⁵ Alexander Moumbaris, 'Dimitri Tsafendas. Remembering A Revolutionary', The Talking Drum.

⁴⁷⁸⁶ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 17 January 2017.

“I do think the assassination of Verwoerd changed the course of history in South Africa, because nobody was quite as sure as he was of the policy of separate development. I mean, he was steeped in it. It was religion to him. But the others all had doubts. I mean there was no doubt that Vorster was determined to maintain white domination, but that was a different thing. It wasn't based in any philosophy the way Verwoerd's was. Nobody had the same certitude that he had. And I am quite sure that the first brick would not have come down in the late seventies with the removal of job reservations and the granting of Trade Union rights to Blacks. Now those were the removal of the first bricks of apartheid. He [Dr. Verwoerd] would have known, and he would have been right from the point of view of his reasoning, that if you start pulling down one or two bricks in the wall of apartheid, the whole structure would eventually come tumbling down as indeed it did.”⁴⁷⁸⁷

Asked by Liza Key what she thought would have happened if Dr. Verwoerd had not died, Suzman said:

“I think we would have ended up with a civil war. I think South Africa would gone on being a Pariah nation, the other countries would have intensified the economic boycott and sanctions. And eventually, the Black people would have been supplied either by Russia or some other country with sufficient arms to enable them to actually start a civil war which would have been pretty horrific. And not easily, I don't think brought to a victorious conclusion.”⁴⁷⁸⁸

⁴⁷⁸⁷ Helen Suzman in A Question of Madness.

⁴⁷⁸⁸ Helen Suzman in A Question of Madness.

THE MAN WHO KILLED APARTHEID AND ITS AFTERMATH

Upon publication, The Man Who Killed Apartheid: The Life of Dimitri Tsafendas was praised by numerous reviewers in the academic and journalistic worlds, both in South Africa and elsewhere, who acclaimed it for “setting the record straight” about Tsafendas and his action. Furthermore, the calls by several South Africans for Tsafendas to be officially recognised as a hero of the anti-apartheid struggle were significantly boosted. For example, Moira Levy, in her review of the book in the New Agenda: South African Journal of Social and Economic Policy, wrote:

“How does democratic South Africa justify how this man today lies in an unmarked grave somewhere in Gauteng, and ten years after his lonely death, he remains publicly unacknowledged for the role he played as a hero and a freedom fighter whose legacy belongs in the proud history of the fight that finally did kill apartheid.”⁴⁷⁸⁹

Glen Relief wrote in the Daily Maverick:

“The push to rehabilitate him as a freedom fighter is overdue. Tsafendas needs a monument; an exhibition in the Apartheid Museum; rewritten textbooks; a primetime television special on the SABC.”⁴⁷⁹⁰

Oscar van Heerden argued in an article in the Daily Maverick:

“As an activist myself, I know that one’s contribution in the anti-apartheid struggle was never about recognition and accolades. But to allow this great revolutionary to remain in prison well into our new democracy, and furthermore to allow him to be buried in an unmarked grave, is embarrassing and disgraceful. The ANC government is so obsessed with its reconciliation approach that South Africa regularly rolls out the red carpet in funerals for former apartheid politicians. Let us for once acknowledge this oversight in our history, and correct this embarrassing situation with regards to Dimitri Tsafendas. Let us honour him posthumously with one of the highest honours in our government’s arsenal: the Order of Luthuli or the Order of Mendi for Bravery. Let us remember him in the ANC, and the SACP as well.”⁴⁷⁹¹

⁴⁷⁸⁹ Levy, “The Man who Tried to Kill Apartheid, Harris Dousemetzis”, p. 48.

⁴⁷⁹⁰ Glen Relief, “All We Are Saying is Give Tapeworms a Chance.” Daily Maverick, 30 April 2019.

⁴⁷⁹¹ Oscar van Heerden, “Why Tsafendas should be seen as a National Hero.”

In October 2019, the SACP held a memorial service for Tsafendas on the 20th anniversary of his death. It also reinstated his membership of the Party, while plans are under way to build him a tombstone and to name one of the Party's branches after him.

CONCLUSION

Dimitris Tsafendas was a man of deep political convictions, a passionate Communist from his teenage years, inspired by his anarchist father. He was kind-hearted, generous and selfless. Always poor, he repeatedly gave money to people he felt needed it more than he did, such as his flatmate Jacobus Bornman, paupers in Durban, a poor woman in Istanbul, passengers lacking a bus fare. He devoted hours of his time to teaching children without payment in Mozambique and Turkey. He had a keen eye for injustice. Born in Mozambique, he saw no reason why this African nation should remain in the control of Portugal, a European power, and at great cost to himself, he campaigned persistently for its independence. What he envisaged was “a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the mother nation.”⁴⁷⁹²

Tsafendas never made no attempt to disguise his beliefs and for his pains he was dismissed from jobs and forced into exile. The PIDE became aware of Tsafendas’s political activities in 1935, when he was seventeen, when he was dismissed from his work for “voicing Communist ideas.”⁴⁷⁹³ Three years later after he was “suspected of distributing communist propaganda,” PIDE opened a file on him, the Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis.⁴⁷⁹⁴ The file only got bigger over the years and at the time of the assassination, almost thirty years later, it ran to 130 pages.

Injustice for Tsafendas was never more evident than in South Africa, where apartheid ruled. It was a policy which Tsafendas loathed as racist and exploitative, and he was willing to do “anything that would get the South African regime out of power.”⁴⁷⁹⁵ He joined the South African Communist Party and worked actively on its behalf; in London, he participated in anti-apartheid and anti-colonial demonstrations; he smuggled anti-apartheid literature into South Africa and he urged visitors to spend as little as possible in order not to contribute to the apartheid economy. Finally, he assassinated Dr. Verwoerd, the man he characterised as the brains behind apartheid, hoping that with the guiding hand gone, apartheid would collapse and a more benign national policy would take its place; and that is exactly what he told the police after the assassination.

⁴⁷⁹² PIDE Record of questions, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁷⁹³ Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁷⁹⁴ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁷⁹⁵ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, SANA.

Tsafendas was held in custody for twenty days before being allowed access to his lawyers. While in the hands of the police, he was systematically beaten, given electric shocks and subjected to mock hangings, a brutal range of physical and psychological tortures commonly practised against political prisoners by the apartheid police. Tsafendas asked to be defended by Advocate George Bizos, whose father he knew well, but his request was ignored. Instead the State chose who would defend him. However, it should be stated that the lawyers in question were quite independent and unconnected with the authorities.

Although Tsafendas had given the police logical and valid political reasons for the killing, twenty days later, when he met his defence team, he changed his tune. He claimed that a tapeworm lived inside him which controlled his life. He repeated this to the doctors who examined him later. After nearly three weeks of systematic brutality and cognisant of the fate of many political prisoners under apartheid, Tsafendas concluded that what lay ahead of him was a dubious and undignified death in a police cell. Determined to avoid such an inglorious end and to stop the torture, Tsafendas resorted to a strategy he had used in the past to get out of trouble, namely, pretending to be mad. It had worked when he was arrested by the American immigration authorities, on two occasions when he was detained by the Portuguese police, once to avoid service in the Portuguese army and once to persuade the Portuguese to give him amnesty to return to Mozambique after twelve years in exile.

Tsafendas's defence team prepared an excellent case, lining up psychiatrists who had examined him and witnesses who had had contact with him. However, the psychiatrists based their findings only on what they were told by Tsafendas himself and were forced to take short-cuts due to the pressure of time. The result was a misdiagnosis of Tsafendas, with the eager co-operation of the accused. The psychiatrists became convinced that Tsafendas was a schizophrenic after examinations whose circumstances would normally raise legal eyebrows. None of the psychiatrists' diagnoses would have been seen as credible in any democratic court today.

As for the witnesses chosen to testify for Tsafendas, most hardly knew him, except for the O'Ryans and, to a certain extent, the Daniels. Meanwhile people who had known him for many years, even a lifetime, were ignored by the defence. A good example was James Johnston, who told the police that he did not know Tsafendas well and had talked to him for twenty minutes in his whole life. Yet he was called to testify for the defence. That said, the rationale for the defence choices was evident: put on the stand witnesses who could support its chosen line, not necessarily those who knew the accused best. What was surprising was that the credibility of Johnston and the other witnesses was not questioned by the State. The prosecutors could quickly have challenged the right of certain witnesses to testify and broken down their claims, but this did not happen. Peter Daniels clearly lied and gave testimony to the police that flatly contradicted that of his sister. The State could easily have exposed his testimony, but it did not attempt to do so.

The defence's main witness was Patrick O'Ryan, Tsafendas's best friend and someone who knew him extremely well. In normal proceedings, he would have been the only suitable witness to take the stand. O'Ryan spoke at length about the tapeworm, although he had said nothing to the police about such a creature, and had also stated that Tsafendas was perfectly sane. Many years later, O'Ryan confessed that he had lied about the tapeworm at the urging of Wilfrid Cooper, Tsafendas's advocate. He said he knew perfectly well that Tsafendas did not have a tapeworm and that it was an invention from his past to convince the Portuguese police to stop torturing him. In his statements to the police, Tsafendas made no mention of a tapeworm and gave clear political reasons for killing Dr. Verwoerd. However, what Tsafendas told the police was not used in court and the defence's claims of schizophrenia and a tapeworm went unchallenged.

Tsafendas's summary trial was in fact a show trial. The police had enough evidence to destroy the defence's line. Although the author is not in position to know whether this evidence was passed to the Attorney-General, the latter's conduct during the proceedings was strange, to say the least. Suspicions as to his integrity were heightened ten days after the trial when he denied knowing that Tsafendas was a former member of the South African Communist Party. This fact became known to him at least twenty-seven days earlier and, of course, during the summary trial. The defence case looked solid, but it would have been no match for the State if the prosecutor had used all the evidence gathered by the police. None of Tsafendas's political ideas or activities was spoken of in court and the word "Communist" was never heard. Instead, Tsafendas was presented as a schizophrenic, withdrawn, isolated, rude, a drifter, uninterested in politics, a person who lived an aimless life often taking advantage of other people. The considerable evidence suggesting that the truth was the exact opposite did not appear. The conclusion must be that either the Attorney-General chose not to use this evidence or it was not in his possession.

Doctors who examined Tsafendas gave a list of what they said were his schizophrenic symptoms, including being withdrawn, isolated, unable to function on a reasonable level, unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes, unable to look after himself, speaking in a disjointed manner, a victim of thought-disorder and confused ideas. The police and the Commission interviewed two hundred people and none of them noticed any of these symptoms in Tsafendas. The author interviewed seventy-one people who knew Tsafendas, some of them since childhood. Not one perceived any of these alleged symptoms and all strongly disagreed that Tsafendas was anything like the doctors' characterisation. Tsafendas's alleged belief that he had a tapeworm is as much a myth as Mamoru Samuragochi's deafness.

Although the author cannot know if the Attorney General had access to the police evidence and chose not to use it or whether the evidence was withheld from him, the same cannot be said for the Commission of Enquiry. The police provided the Commission with most, if not all, of the evidence they had assembled. More importantly, the Commission had conducted its own investigation and had discovered enough evidence to show that Tsafendas was not as portrayed in court. In the event, the Commission concealed very important evidence and presented Tsafendas in almost the same way he was portrayed at the summary trial. Although the Commission was well aware of Tsafendas's real personality, his political activities and the real reasons why he killed Dr. Verwoerd, it deliberately concealed these facts so as not to contradict what was heard in court. It is clear from the way its Report is written that the Commission wanted to belittle Tsafendas so that no-one would feel any sympathy for him, but also so that no-one would ever think that the pathetic man presented in its Report could have had a political motive for assassinating Dr. Verwoerd.

The Commission acted shamelessly and in a scandalous way in concealing many of Tsafendas's political activities, but more importantly for distorting his intentions in killing Dr. Verwoerd. Tsafendas had told the police openly that he killed the prime minister because he considered him not to be the real representative of all South Africans, that he was disgusted by his racial policies and he hoped that by killing him a change of policy would take place. None of these altruistic motives was mentioned by the Commission. Instead it speculated pointlessly about what his motive might have been and what might have triggered his hand.

Furthermore, the Commission dealt extensively with the question of Dr. Verwoerd's death being discussed on board the Eleni three days before he actually died. Although at least six witnesses from the Eleni had told the police that Tsafendas had spoken of a hypothetical assassination of Dr. Verwoerd as being morally justifiable because he was a tyrant, the Commission concealed this information, too, and again it speculated about what might have happened. In smearing Tsafendas, the Commission used unfounded characterizations and misrepresented some incidents. At the same time, it omitted some 90% of the positive statements about Tsafendas's character and mental state, while including almost every negative one.

PIDE contributed to the misrepresentation of Tsafendas by concealing from the South African police the fact that it had a file on Tsafendas. The file contained, in PIDE's words, "information indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of Mozambique." Thus, the South African authorities never learned of the extent of Tsafendas's political activities in Mozambique. Nevertheless, the South African police managed to discover a great deal about Tsafendas's political activities not only in Mozambique but in other nations where he travelled. The most important of these were also concealed from the public.

The South African police, PIDE, the Attorney-General and the Commission each played a role in presenting a distorted picture of Tsafendas by concealing evidence. The Commission's Report, although no more subjective and honest than that of the Sharpeville Commission, was accepted without question because it sounded so convincing. For fifty years it remained unchallenged. The fact is it was a character assassination and a travesty of truth. The same may be said about Tsafendas's summary trial, although the judge was innocent of any malfeasance, being unaware of much important evidence. However, the Attorney-General, the supposed custodian of evidence, failed to present significant testimony and thus another travesty of truth took place.

With regard to Dr. Verwoerd, Professor John Dugard, who has served as a judge at the International Court of Justice (ICJ), told the author that if he was alive today, he could have been charged by the ICJ with "committing a crime against humanity, namely the propagation of apartheid." "He would have been accused of committing a crime against humanity, because in 1973, the United Nations promoted the UN Convention on the Prohibition of the Crime of Apartheid. So apartheid was defined as a crime against humanity in 1973. And clearly, Dr. Verwoerd, as the main architect of apartheid, would have been categorised as a criminal. So if he had been brought before the court, he would have been charged with a crime against humanity." However, the decision to prosecute him would have been political and it is by no means certain that he would ever have been placed in the dock.⁴⁷⁹⁶ ⁴⁷⁹⁶ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

A profound irony concerning the attacks on Dr. Verwoerd is that Tsafendas and Pratt have always been regarded as mad, while Dr. Verwoerd is considered to be sane. Let us examine the achievements and beliefs of these three historic characters in the table below:

Dr. VERWOERD	TSAFENDAS	PRATT
According to The New York Times , he was the “enforcer of the harshest race laws since Hitler.”	He was fanatic anti-racist and wanted to end apartheid.	He was fanatic anti-racist and wanted to end apartheid.
He believed that his life was saved by divine intervention, thus proving that God accepted apartheid and wished it to continue. He told Canadian Prime Minister John Diefenbaker that his survival “revealed God’s approval of the cause he had followed.” He also told his wife, “I knew that I had been spared to complete my life’s work.”	He had no such thoughts.	He had no such thoughts.
He believed in minority rule and claimed that this was the only way for the minority to be protected against the majority. He argued that “apartheid is based on the principle that only in this way can the weak he protected	He believed in majority rule.	He believed in majority rule.

from the strong, and the minority be made to feel safe.”
He believed that each race should be separate and should “develop” on its own. Such development was difficult for the 79% of the population who had no land rights, were forced to live in designated areas and were forbidden to enter “Whites only” territory. The Whites were 21% of the population but owned 87% of the land, forcing the rest 79% onto the remaining 13% of the land.	He believed all people to be equal and that they should have equal rights.	He believed all people to be equal and that they should have equal rights.
He prohibited mixed marriages in order to preserve the White race. Repeatedly Verwoerd said to his wife, “I am not going into history as the man who will lead the Afrikaner people to integration. If the majority wants that, I will step down”. He believed that God made the Black man to be in perpetuity a “hewer of wood and drawer of water” for the	He believed all races were equal and people should be allowed to marry whoever they wanted. He had, Black, White, Jewish, Muslim and Christian girlfriends.	He believed that all people are the same and should be allowed to marry whoever they wanted.

White man.
He believed that only Whites should decide the country's policies and future, although they were a distinct minority in terms of numbers, because the Blacks were not civilized, and that he and the other Whites were going to "civilize" them, "protect" them, "help" them and "teach" them "democracy."	He believed that all the people of South Africa should decide their policies and future. He wanted "a government representing all the South African people," and he did not consider that Dr. Verwoerd represented all the people. He believed that Mozambique should be "governed by the natives of that Province, be they White or Black, and therefore separated from the mother nation." He cherished the hope that one day the South African people would storm Parliament and throw out the apartheid government.	He believed that all people of South Africa should decide their policies and their future. "... Every South African, Afrikaner, English South African, Coloured, Indian, Bantu, Malay... every person in South Arica has got to play his part if we are to build the South African that I know can be built ..."
He created the Bantu Education Act which was designed to teach the Blacks that they were not the same as Whites, that they would never have equal rights but would be the "labourer in the country." Most importantly, the Act would prevent them from learning about "European values" such as "freedom" and "equality."	He believed that education was one of the most important things in life. He voluntarily taught for free English and History to Greek, Mozambican and Turkish children in Mozambique and in Turkey.	He believed that education was one of the most important things in life. He financed and built a modern school on his farm for his Black workers' children, which still exists today.

He forcibly removed hundreds of thousands of Blacks so that they could not live among White people, seizing the land thus made vacant for occupation by Whites.	He considered Mozambique, Rhodesia and South Africa to be “occupied lands,” stolen by force from the indigenous inhabitants and ruled by colonialists and fascists. He recognised the rights of Whites to live there if they accepted majority rule and did not exploit the Blacks. He had also lived in houses with Blacks, Coloureds and Whites.	He built modern and comfortable apartments in his farm for his Black employees. Their relatives and friends came to live there, too, and were allowed to do so.
He espoused a form of neo-slavery, requiring that Blacks learn only how to serve the White man, teaching them that they were “not allowed to graze” at “the green pastures of European society,” and that there was “no place for them in the European community above the level of certain forms of labour.”	He organized strikes and attempted to organize employees in places where he worked to act for their rights.	He was such a good employer that friends and relatives of his Black employees flocked to him, asking for work.
Although Africans lived in South Africa for more than 200,000 years in comparison to the 400 years of the Whites, he believed that South Africa was a white	He wanted “a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they White or Black, and therefore separated from the mother-nation.” In South Africa, he	He believed that all people of South Africa should have a say in deciding the future of their country. “... Every South African, Afrikaner, English South African,

country because Whites developed and “civilized” it. He presented South Africa as a land that had been empty before the Europeans arrived.	wanted “a government representing all the South African people.”	Coloured, Indian, Bantu, Malay... every person in South Arica has got to play his part if we are to build the South African that I know can be built ...”
He was pro-Nazi and anti-Semitic. He copied some of the Nuremberg Laws. He supported the Nazis during WWII and was convicted for being a “tool of the Nazis.”	He was anti-Nazi and anti-fascist. He got into physical fights with members of the Ossewabrandwag in South Africa and with Oswald Mosley’s fascists in England. He served on American ships supplying the Allies in WWII. He fought with the Communists against the Royalists in the Greek Civil War.	He was anti-apartheid, anti-fascist and anti-Nazi. He joined the South African army as a volunteer in WWII.
He believed apartheid was God’s will and that He approved it.	He believed that the Churches should be on the side of the people and not with the establishment.	He believed “a glittering future awaited South Africa as long as she observes the basic laws of God and human dignity, which of course, means, in the words, I think, of Macmillan at the time, “Rule by merit and not pigment of skin.”
He believed that Africans should be grateful that the Europeans did not annihilate	-	-

them when they first arrived in South Africa, as the Europeans did to the Indians in the USA.
He turned South Africa into a police state in order to suppress opposition, using methods ranging from banning and exile to imprisonment and torture.	He tried to end apartheid. He was arrested five times by the Portuguese for anti-colonialist activities. PIDE had a file on him since he was twenty. He participated in anti-apartheid and anti-fascist demonstrations. He urged people to boycott South African goods.	He wanted apartheid to end and Dr. Verwoerd to reconsider his policies. He publicly spoke out in Britain in favour of a boycott of South African imports.
He was racist. He considered Africans to be “lower than animals.” He strongly believed that the Afrikaners were South Africa’s master race, destined for supremacy, while other races were “privileged” to share South Africa with them, but in an inferior position. In a debate in Parliament, apparently amazed, he told an MP “... and you believe a Native instead of my word!”	He was fanatically anti-racist and believed that all people are equal. He was member of the anti-fascist movement, the Yellow Star.	He was a committed anti-racist believing all people to be equal. He helped several Blacks in South Africa with gifts of money.
He believed that he was always right and that people	He understood perfectly well what apartheid was and	He understood perfectly well what apartheid was

outside South had misunderstood apartheid. He insisted that apartheid was a “domestic affair” and people who did not live in South Africa could not understand its nature and its background.	wanted it to end.	and wanted it to end.
He insisted that “a vast number” of Blacks in South Africa approved his policies, while the rest simply failed to understand that apartheid was really something good and that he was trying to do what was best for them	He understood perfectly well what apartheid was and wanted it to end.	He understood perfectly well what apartheid was and wanted it to end.
He was the “architect of apartheid.”	He considered Dr. Verwoerd to be the brains behind apartheid and hoped that by killing him, a “change of policy would take place.” He joined the British anti-apartheid movement, he was a member of the SACP and he participated in anti-apartheid demonstrations.	He wanted to end apartheid. He tried to form a political coalition with the aim of defeating the National Party at the polls and ending apartheid. He gave financial assistance to the anti-apartheid Liberal Party of Great Britain and often spoke publicly in England against apartheid.

By today’s standards, which of these two men’s opinions and actions would suggest insanity? They were different times, in a nation more God-fearing than most today, but it was the same era and the same nation for both men. It might be germane to add here that another apartheid enthusiast, General van den Bergh also believed, like Dr. Verwoerd, that his life was saved by divine intervention. He declared that “the hand of God was upon me” when a lightning strike killed a nearby Black South African during a storm but left him untouched. However, no-one seems to have questioned van den Bergh’s sanity, apart from the British writer Frederick Forsyth, to whom he told the story.

Advocate George Bizos told the author that:

“The police at the time would have never allowed it to become known that Tsafendas was a politically minded person who had killed Verwoerd for political reasons [the hope that apartheid would collapse without him]; if this had happened, Tsafendas would have instantly become a hero of the anti-apartheid movement. Then a trial of politically minded person like Tsafendas, just like the Rivonia, would have put apartheid in the dock... it would have also been hugely embarrassing for the police to admit that a dedicated Communist with such a long history of political activism had managed to penetrate what was alleged to be a top security system... Communism was at the time the monster in South Africa, the number-one enemy, and the killing of Verwoerd by a Communist would have been a major blow to the prestige of the regime, but also a big victory for Communism. Verwoerd at the time was adored and accepted by most Whites in this country and the thought that someone had killed him because he disagreed with his policies would have shattered such an image.”⁴⁷⁹⁷

Professor John Dugard said about the Tsafendas case and this research:

“This research confirms that there was a cover-up. It shows convincingly that Tsafendas was a political revolutionary, whose assassination of Dr. Verwoerd was motivated by a hatred of Dr. Verwoerd and all he stood for. He was not an insane killer but a political assassin determined to rid South Africa of the architect of apartheid. Political assassinations seldom achieve their goal and this was no exception. But at least South African history should know the truth about Tsafendas. Dousemetzis has done South Africa a service by correcting the historical record.”⁴⁷⁹⁸

Justice Zak Yacoob said about the study:

“The historical record shows that comrade Tsafendas killed Verwoerd, that he pleaded in sanity at the trial, his plea was upheld and he was, consequent to his plea confined at the pleasure of the relevant authority. If he had spoken the truth, he would have been sentenced to death, so the tactic was a very good one in the circumstances. History does not record that ⁴⁷⁹⁷ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017.

⁴⁷⁹⁸ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 8 September 2016.

he pretended to be insane to save his life. This is well brought out in the research. The research shows conclusively that he did a deliberate courageous anti-apartheid act but pretended insanity at the trial understandably so. I think the research speaks for itself.”⁴⁷⁹⁹

Bertolt Brecht, one of Tsafendas’s favourite authors, wrote something that fits perfectly both with his crime and with Dr Verwoerd’s policies:

“There are many ways to kill. One can stab a knife into someone’s belly, take away one’s bread, not heal one from a disease, stick one in a bad apartment, work one to death, drive one to commit suicide, send one off to war, etc. Only a few of these things are forbidden in our country.”⁴⁸⁰⁰

Unfortunately for Tsafendas, he chose the only one on the list that was forbidden by the apartheid laws; all the rest were legal and the results of Dr. Verwoerd’s laws and policies.

⁴⁷⁹⁹ Justice Zak Yacoob in a personal interview, 18 September 2017.

⁴⁸⁰⁰ Bertolt Brecht, Me Ti: Book of Interventions in the Flow of Things, (London: Bloomsbury, 2016). Originally published in 1967 in German with the title Me Ti. Buch der Wendungen.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

PRIMARY SOURCES

ARCHIVAL MATERIALS

Attempted Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. DO 35/10569. British National Archives.

Correctional Services File 80/0043, A 123, of Dimitrio Tsafendas. National Archives of South Africa.

David Pratt's file at the National Liberal Club Archives. London, England.

Dimitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A124 and A125. National Archives of South Africa.

Dimitrios Tsafantakis's file in Arquivo PIDE/DGS (physical location: PIDE/DGS, SC, CI(2) 6818, NT 7461). Arquivo Nacional da Torre do Tombo. Lisbon, Portugal.

Dimitrios Tsafantakis's file in Arquivo Antonio Oliveira Salazar (physical location: Arquivo Salazar, UL-46, cx. 843, pt.11). Arquivo Nacional da Torre do Tombo. Lisbon, Portugal.

Helen Suzman Papers 1944-2009. Mb2.10.1.5. University of the Witwatersrand.

K150. Report of the Commission of Enquiry into the Circumstances of the Death of the Late Dr. the Honourable Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd. National Archives of South Africa.

Mary Lindsay Cumming vs. David Beresford Pratt. 877/1953. National Archives of South Africa.

Regina vs. David Beresford Pratt. The State vs. David Beresford Pratt. 712-60. National Archives of South Africa.

Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Responsibility of Mentally Deranged Persons and Related Matters. National Archives of South Africa.

South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. British National Archives.

Susan Diane Pratt. 6000/60. National Archives of South Africa.

Dimitri Tsafendas's file in the Lawyers for Human Rights Collection (AL3183). South African History Archive.

INTERVIEWSWitnesses who met Tsafendas

Pamela Abrahams. She met Tsafendas in 1966 in Cape Town.

Cleanthes Alachiotis. From the Eleni, he associated a lot with Tsafendas during the Eleni's stay in Cape Town in July and August 1966.

George Ananiades. He met Tsafendas in 1963 in Lourenço Marques.

Pantelis Aspiotis. From the Eleni, he met Tsafendas in Cape Town in 1966.

Nick Augustides. Tsafendas's employer in July-September 1966.

Andreas Babioulakis. Grew up with Tsafendas in Mozambique and was a very close friend.

Nicola Banovic. A Greek Orthodox priest who became very close to Tsafendas. They met in Istanbul in 1961. Tsafendas lived in Father Banovic's house for four months and associated with him for another three.

David Beresford. Guardian journalist. He met Tsafendas in the mid-1990s in Sterkfontein hospital and wrote about him.

Nikolas Billis. From the Eleni, he associated a great deal with Tsafendas during the Eleni's stay in Cape Town in July and August 1966.

David Bloomberg. Tsafendas's attorney in the summary trial.

Willie Burger. One of Tsafendas's lawyers at his summary trial.

Costas Chagios. He associated with Tsafendas for about two years (1965-66) in Cape Town.

Professor Renfrew Christie. Anti-apartheid activist. He met Tsafendas in Pretoria Prison in 1980-1981, where he was also imprisoned.

Father Minas Constandinou. A Greek Orthodox priest who met Tsafendas in Mozambique in 1963. He later visited him in prison and in the hospital. They were extremely close and Tsafendas confided in him at length about his life.

Elias Constantaras. He associated with Tsafendas in Cape Town for several months in 1966.

Maggie Davey. She met Tsafendas in the mid-1990s in Sterkfontein hospital.

Joyce Dick. Helen Daniels's best friend. She met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town.

Mary Eintracht. Tsafendas's cousin, grew up together in Egypt and Mozambique and were very close.

Efthimios Eleftheriadis. Priest who met Tsafendas in Hamburg in the 1950s.

Ellen Elmendorp. Photographer who visited Tsafendas at Sterkfontein Hospital.

Mario Ferreira. He worked with Tsafendas at the Table Bay Power Station.

John Peter Galanakis. He met Tsafendas in Beira in 1964.

Fotini Gavasiadis. One of Tsafendas's closest friends. She met him in Pretoria in 1963-64. She saw Tsafendas virtually every day for nine months in 1963-4, when they were flatmates and then neighbours while they also worked together.

Helen Grispos. She grew up with Tsafendas in Mozambique and met him again in Rhodesia in 1964. Her husband George Grispos was one of Tsafendas's best childhood friends. Her mother Sophia Gavadias was Tsafendas's step-mother's best friend in Lourenço Marques.

Miltiades Kaldis. He met Tsafendas in Cape Town in 1965-1966.

Nicolas Kambouris. From the Eleni, he associated a lot with Tsafendas during the Eleni's stay in Cape Town in July-August 1966.

Georgios Kantas. From the Eleni, he consorted regularly with Tsafendas during the Eleni's stay in Cape Town in July and August 1966.

Liza Key. Filmmaker and researcher. She met Tsafendas in Sterkfontein Hospital in 1995 and subsequently visited him on several occasions. She made a documentary about him.

Judge Jody Kollapen. Anti-apartheid activist and High Court Judge in Pretoria. He met Tsafendas in prison in 1994 and tried to grant him an amnesty.

Ira Kyriakakis. She grew up with Tsafendas in Mozambique and was a very close friend.

Dionisis Lallis. From the Eleni, he met Tsafendas in July-August 1966.

George Liberopoulos. He met Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques in 1963.

James Mange. He met Tsafendas in prison in the early 1980s.

Emanuil Mastromanolis. From the Eleni, he associated a lot with Tsafendas during the Eleni's stay in Cape Town in July-August 1966.

Nicolas Mavronas. From the Eleni. He sold his gun to Tsafendas, but he did not associate with him.

Antony Michaletos. Tsafendas's cousin and son of Artemis Michaletos, Tsafendas's aunt and his father's sister who brought him up in Egypt. He first met Tsafendas in 1951 in Lourenço Marques and got to know him well between 1963 and 1965 in Mozambique.

Irene Michaletos. She very closely associated with Tsafendas in Beira in 1964-1965.

John Michaletos. Tsafendas's cousin and son of Artemis Michaletos, Tsafendas's aunt and his father's sister who brought him up in Egypt. He first met Tsafendas in 1951 in Lourenço Marques and got to know him between 1963 and 1965 in Mozambique.

Alexander Moumbaris. Anti-apartheid revolutionary, MK fighter and fellow prisoner in Pretoria Prison. He met Tsafendas there and later visited him at Sterkfontein Hospital.

Marie-Jose Moumbaris. Anti-apartheid activist. She met Tsafendas in 1996 at Sterkfontein Hospital.

Antonis Nichas. He associated with Tsafendas in Cape Town in 1966.

Allan O'Ryan. Patrick O'Ryan's son. He lived under the same roof as Tsafendas for five months in 1965 and remained very close to him until the assassination.

Enid O'Ryan. Patrick O'Ryan's daughter. She lived under the same roof as Tsafendas for five months in 1965.

Jerome O'Ryan. Son of Patrick O'Ryan. He lived under the same roof as Tsafendas for five months in 1965.

Maud O'Ryan. Patrick O'Ryan's daughter. She lived under the same roof as Tsafendas for five months in 1965.

Reuben O'Ryan. Son of Patrick O'Ryan. He lived in the same house as Tsafendas for five months in 1965 and they were very close.

Stanley O'Ryan. Son of Patrick O'Ryan. He lived in the same house as Tsafendas for five months in 1965.

Nick Papadakis. He met Tsafendas in 1964 in Beira. They became good friends and they were also flatmates for two months.

George Petrakakis. He met Tsafendas in 1963 in Lourenço Marques.

Panagiotis Peroglou. He associated with Tsafendas in Cape Town in 1965-1966.

Vasilios Perselis. From the Eleni, he associated with Tsafendas during the tanker's stay in Cape Town in July-August 1966.

Richard Poggenpoel. Tsafendas lived in his house in Cape Town in 1965.

Katerina Pnema. Tsafendas's half-sister.

Michael Pnema. Tsafendas's nephew. He met him in 1964.

Costas Poriadis. He met Tsafendas in 1964 in Beira.

Grigoris Pouftis. From the Eleni, he associated a lot with Tsafendas during the tanker's stay in Cape Town in July-August 1966.

Peter Protoulis. He met Tsafendas in Cape Town in 1966.

Father Spiros Randos. A Greek Orthodox priest who visited Tsafendas in Pretoria Prison Hospital and in Sterkfontein Hospital and became close to him.

Emanuel Sakellaridis. From the Eleni. He met Tsafendas during the tanker's stay in Cape Town, but he did not associate with him.

Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky. One of the psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas for the summary trial.

Dimitris Skoularikis. He met Tsafendas in prison in the early 1990s.

Ioannis Speis. From the Eleni, he met Tsafendas during the tanker's stay in Cape Town in July-August 1966.

Dimitris Stavrianos. From the Eleni, he met Tsafendas during the tanker's stay in Cape Town in July-August 1966.

Emmanuel Tsabouniaris. From the Eleni, he associated with Tsafendas during the tanker's stay in Cape Town in July-August 1966.

Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis. Bishop of the Greek Orthodox Church in Zambia-Malawi and Coordinator of the Interparliamentary Assembly on Orthodoxy as well as its Liaison to the Pan-African Parliament. He visited Tsafendas at Pretoria Prison Hospital and at Sterkfontein Hospital. Tsafendas told him much about his life.

Marina Tsihlikis. She met Tsafendas in Beira in 1964.

Evangelos Tsuroulis. President of the Greek Community in Rhodesia in 1964 and of the Pan-Hellenic Association of Zimbabwe-Zambia-Malawi-Mozambique Greek Communities (PAZZIMMO). He met Tsafendas in Rhodesia in 1964.

Reyner van Zyl. The psychologist who examined Tsafendas for the summary trial.

Stratis Vamvarapis. He met Tsafendas in 1965-1966 in Cape Town.

Alexandra Vaporidis. She met Tsafendas in 1961 in Istanbul. Her husband, Father Agathagelos Vaporidis, was very good friend of Tsafendas.

Michalis Vasilakis. From the Eleni, he associated a lot with Tsafendas during the tanker's stay in Cape Town in July-August 1966.

Father Michalis Visvinis. A Greek Orthodox priest who very regularly visited Tsafendas in prison for five years (1989-1994). They became very close and Tsafendas spoke extensively to him about his life.

Michael Vlachopoulos. Tsafendas's nephew. He met him in 1963.

Gordon Winter. Former BOSS agent. He met Tsafendas in Pretoria Prison in 1975.

Pericles Zouridis. He met Tsafendas in 1964 in Beira.

Witnesses who did not meet Tsafendas

Akis Apergis. Member of the Greek community in Johannesburg at the time of the assassination.

Terry Bell. Anti-apartheid activist and journalist who co-authored with advocate Dumisa Ntsebeza SC the Unfinished Business: South Africa, Apartheid and Truth.

Ioannis Bizos. Member of the Greek Community in Johannesburg at the time of the assassination.

Advocate George Bizos SC. World-renowned human rights lawyer and anti-apartheid activist. His mother-in-law was one of the closest friends of Tsafendas's stepmother. Tsafendas requested to be represented by him, but his request was denied.

Desmond Blow. Rand Daily Mail, Sunday Times and Sunday Express journalist. He became very close to David Pratt after the latter's assault on Dr. Verwoerd.

Elizabeth Blow. Desmond's wife. She spoke to the author about her husband's relationship with Pratt.

Graham David Blow. Desmond Blow's son. He spoke to the author about his father's relationship with Pratt. He was named David by his father after Pratt.

Professor Alban Burke. Professor of Psychology and Head of the Psychology Department at the University of Johannesburg.

Stefan Bubenzer. Actor. He played in Will Tunner's play Tsafendas when it was performed in London in the 1970s.

Luli Callinicos. Historian and anti-apartheid activist, present in Johannesburg at the time of the assassination.

Mathys Carstens: He worked in the House of Assembly in 1966, but never met Tsafendas.

Dr. Antonis Chaldeos. Historian, expert on Greek diaspora in Africa.

Gavin Cooper. Son of Wilfrid Cooper, Tsafendas's advocate in his summary trial.

Lionel Davis. Anti-apartheid activist. Imprisoned in Robben Island while Tsafendas was held there.

Achileas Dalamagkas. Psychologist.

Professor John Dugard. Professor of International Law and Former Judge ad hoc at the International Court of Justice.

Judge Gerald Friedman. Retired Judge President, Cape High Court.

Dr. Costa Gazidis. Anti-apartheid activist. Cousin of Rika Nikolatos, a social worker who visited Tsafendas in prison and in the hospital.

Janet Gazidis. Wife of Costas Gazidis, who knew Nikolatos very well.

Denis Goldberg. Anti-apartheid activist. Imprisoned in Pretoria Central Prison at the same time as Tsafendas, but he never met him.

Krish Govender. Former Durban State-Attorney, co-chairman of the Law Society of South Africa and anti-apartheid activist; he made a request in the TRC to examine Tsafendas's case.

Mike Grispos. Son of Helen and George Grispos. George Grispos was Tsafendas's schoolmate and childhood friend.

Maria Kasimatis. She lived in Lourenço Marques at the time of the assassination.

Ronnie Kasrils. Founding member of the Umkhonto we Sizwe and former Minister for Intelligence Services.

Ahmed Kathrada. Anti-apartheid activist. Imprisoned in Robben Island while Tsafendas was held there.

Ayten Kececi. Head of Limasollu Naci, the college in Istanbul where Tsafendas worked in 1960.

Jan-Ake Kjellberg. UN police officer. He handled Tsafendas's file in the TRC.

Elias Kokkinos. From the Eleni, he was present in Venice when the crew was questioned.

Dr. Anton Krueger. Academic and playwright. He wrote a play about Tsafendas.

Dr. Peter Lambley. Psychologist and author of The Psychology of Apartheid. He knew Reyner van Zyl and Dr. Cooper who examined Tsafendas and referred to his case in the book.

Adviye Vedia Limasollu. Wife of Limasollu Naci, owner of the college of the same name, where Tsafendas worked while in Istanbul.

Tunc Limasollu. Son of Limasollu Naci, owner of the college with the same name where Tsafendas worked while in Istanbul.

Alan Lomas. He was involved with the case in 1966 and the Commission of Enquiry referred to him.

Dr. Evangelos Mantzaris. Academic, expert on trade unions in South Africa and of the Greeks of South Africa.

Solly Mapaila. First Deputy General Secretary of the South African Communist Party.

Judge Robin Marais. Retired Judge.

Costas Maroudas. He lived in Johannesburg at the time of the assassination. Son-in-law of Father Minas Constandinou and grandson of Father Bertolis, the priest who baptised Tsafendas and knew him throughout his life.

Tessa Marwick. Theatre director. She directed the play Tsafendas in 1976 in London.

Michael Meadowcroft. British former MP with the Liberal Party and honorary President of the National Liberal Club.

Michalis Michelis. Journalist who extensively researched Tsafendas's case in 1987.

Saul Molobi. South Africa's consul general in Milan. He took an interest in Tsafendas's case in the 1990s.

Abhilash Nair. Law academic.

John Nankin. Director, actor and stage designer. He did some research on Tsafendas in the mid-1970s for William Tanner's play "Tsafendas."

Dumisa Ntsebeza SC. Anti-apartheid activist, advocate, chancellor of the University of Fort Hare, and TRC Commissioner; he has acted as a judge in various divisions of South Africa's High Court and he co-authored with Terry Bell the Unfinished Business: South Africa, Apartheid and Truth.

Akis Papageorgiou. President of the Greek Community of Pretoria in the early 1990s.

Emmanuel Perselis. From the Eleni, he was present in Venice when the crew was questioned.

Piers Pigou, International Crisis Group's Senior Consultant for Southern Africa and TRC Investigator.

Susan Pratt. David Pratt's daughter.

Elizabeth Radsma. David Pratt's personal assistant and secretary.

Professor Phillip Resnick. Forensic psychiatrist.

Judge Albie Sachs. Retired Constitutional judge and anti-apartheid activist.

Professor Robert L. Sadoff, clinical Professor of Psychiatry and Director of the Center for Studies in Social-Legal Psychiatry at the University of Pennsylvania, former president of the American Academy of Psychiatry and the Law, as well as the American Board of Forensic Psychiatry.

Dr. James Sanders. Author and researcher, specialising in South Africa.

Emanuel Sakellaridis. Eleni's former captain. He was aware of the questioning of the crew in Venice.

Cheche Selepe. Journalist and Mike Phahlane's good friend.

Dr. Aditya Sharma. Consultant psychiatrist.

Renos Spanoudes. Actor and drama teacher. He played Tsafendas in the plays Living in Strange Lands and Strange Lands.

Guy Spiller. Filmmaker. He made a documentary about David Pratt.

Piet Swanepoel. Former BOSS agent.

Dr. Arjun Thampy. Consultant psychiatrist.

Alexandros Tsafantakis. Tsafendas's nephew.

Aris Tsafantakis. Tsafendas's cousin, Tsafendas stayed at his parents' house in Crete in 1962.

Maria Tsafantakis. Granddaughter of Costas Kargakis, whose house Tsafendas stayed in while in Crete and who taught him to make bombs.

Michalis Tsafandakis. Tsafendas's nephew and husband of Maria Tsafantakis.

Stelios Tsafantakis. Tsafendas's cousin. He was in Crete when Tsafendas visited the island in 1962.

Judge Zak Yacoob. Anti-apartheid activist and retired Constitutional judge.

Professor Tuviah Zabow. Former Professor of forensic psychiatry at the University of Cape Town and former head of the forensic psychiatry unit at Valkenberg Hospital.

Dimitris Zitanelis. President of the Greek Community in Cape Town; he lived there at the time of the assassination.

Maria Vasilakis. Member of the Greek community in Johannesburg at the time of the assassination.

Dimitris Vergitsis. Former Greek-Orthodox priest who buried Tsafendas.

James J. Ward, Professor of History at the Cedar Crest College, Allentown, Pennsylvania, USA.

AUDIO-VISUAL

Angulló, C. and Jacobson, M. (2013) Plot for Peace.

Dimelas, M. (2007) Live and Let Live.

Discovery Channel. (1998) Apartheid's Last Stand.

Key, L. (1997) A Question of Madness.

Spiller, G. (1999) The Liberal and the Pirate.

GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS

House of Assembly Debates (Hansard). Volumes from 1952, 1954, 1964 and 1966.
Government Printer.

House of Assembly Debates (Hansard) (1949) Debates of Parliament 1910-99. Cape Town: Government Printer.

Report of the Commission Appointed to Investigate and Report on the Occurrences in the Districts of Vereeniging (namely, at Sharpeville location and Evaton) and Vanderbijlpark, Province of the Transvaal, on 21st March 1960. Pretoria: Government Printer. 1960.

Report of the Commission of Enquiry into the Circumstances of the Death of the late Dr. The Honourable Hendrik French Verwoerd. December 1966. R.PR. 16/67. Pretoria: Government Printer, 1966.

Report of the Commission of Enquiry into Secret Organisations. R.P. 20/1965. Pretoria: Government Printer. 1965.

Report of the Commission of Inquiry into Alleged Irregularities in the Former Department of Information. Pretoria: Government Printer. 1978.

Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Responsibility of Mentally Deranged Persons and Related Matters. R.PR. 69/1967. Pretoria: Government Printer, 1967.

PERSONAL COLLECTIONS

David Beresford's personal documents regarding Tsafendas.

David Bloomberg's personal documents regarding Tsafendas.

Desmond Blow's personal documents regarding David Pratt.

Liza Key's personal documents regarding Tsafendas.

Alexander Moumbaris's personal documents regarding Tsafendas.

Dr. James Sanders's personal documents regarding Tsafendas.

Gordon Winter's personal documents regarding Tsafendas.

NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS

A Voz

Acropolis

Africa South

Anglo-Portuguese News

Atlanta Daily World

Business Day

Chicago Tribune

Cleveland Call and Post

Corriere Della Sera

Dagbreek

Daily Dispatch

Daily Mail

Daily Mirror

Daily News

Daily Representative

Der Spiegel

Der Tagesspiegel

Deutsche Zeitung

Die Beeld

Die Burger

Die Transvaler

Die Welt

Die Vaderland

Die Volksblad

Drum

Deues Deutschland

Bibliography

Newspapers and Periodicals

Economic and Political Weekly

El Mundo

Evening Standard

Frankfurter Allgemeine

Frankfurter Rundschau

Handelsblatt

Kathimerini

La Stampa

Le Courier d'Afrique

Le Monde

Le Monde Juif

Liberation

LIFE

Moscow News

Natal Mercury

Natal Witness

Neues Deutschland

New Journal and Guide

New York Amsterdam News

News Chronicle

Newsweek

Noticias

O Primeiro de Janeiro

Personality

Philadelphia Tribune

Pravda

Pretoria News

Rand Daily Mail

Revolution Africaine

Scope

South African Jewish Times

Sunday Express

Sunday Tribune

Bibliography

Newspapers and Periodicals

TIME (Magazine)

The Australian

The Canberra Times

The Cape Argus

The Cape Times

The Citizen

The Chicago Daily Defender

The Chronicle (Bulawayo)

The Economist

The Illustrated London News

The Independent

The Globe and Mail

The Guardian (London)

The Herald (Melbourne)

The New York Times

The Observer

The People

The Post

The Rhodesia Herald

The Sphere

The Stage

The Times (London)

The Spectator

The Star

The Sunday Times (London)

The Sunday Times (Johannesburg)

The Telegraph

The Umtali Post

The Vancouver Sun

To Vima

Washington Post

Zululand Times

SECONDARY SOURCESBOOKS AND JOURNAL ARTICLES

A Distinguished South African Lawyer (who for obvious reasons must remain anonymous) (1965) Verwoerd's Police State. London: A Christian Action Pamphlet.

Aaronovitch, D. (2016) Party Animals: My Family and Other Communists. London: Jonathan Cape.

Abel, R. L. (1995) Politics by Other Means: Law in the Struggle against Apartheid, 1980-1994. New York and London: Routledge.

Abraham, K. (1991) Politics of Black Nationalism: From Harlem to Soweto. Trento, N.J.: Africa World Press.

Abulof, U. (2015) The Mortality and Morality of Nations. New York: Cambridge University Press.

Adam, H. (1971) Modernizing Racial Domination: South Africa's Political Dynamics. Berkeley: University of California Press.

Adams, Z. (2011) Demitrios Tsafendas: Race, Madness and the Archive. PhD Thesis, University of the Western Cape, South Africa.

Addison, J. (1981) Apartheid (Today's World Series). London: Batsford Ltd.

Adhikari, M. (2005) Not White Enough, Not Black Enough: Racial Identity in the South African Coloured Community. Athens: Ohio University Press.

Adler, F. H. (2000) "South African Jews and Apartheid." Patterns of Prejudice, Volume 34, Issue 4, (2000), pp. 23-36.

Africa Today (1962) "Take Action against Apartheid by Observing Human Rights Day." Africa Today, Vol. 9, No. 8 (Oct., 1962), pp. 16.

Africa Today (1964) "Partners in Apartheid: United States Policy on South Africa." Africa Today, Vol. 11, No. 3, (March 1964), pp. 2-17.

African Affairs (1961) "Presentation to Mrs. Margaret Ballinger." African Affairs, Vol. 60, No. 240 (Jul., 1961), pp. 420-422.

African National Congress (1976) A Message to Western Europe from African National Congress South Africa. London: African National Congress South Africa.

African National Congress Parliamentary Caucus. (1996) Parliamentary Bulletin: 'Attorney General Says National Party Blocked Sol Kerzner Trial'. (16 Sep. 1996). Available from: <https://ancparliament.org.za/content/attorney-general-says-national-party-blocked-sol-kerzner-trial>

- Ainslie, R. (1962) The Unholy Alliance: Salazar, Verwoerd, Welensky. London: Anti-Apartheid Movement.
- Ainslie, R. (1977) Masters and Serfs: Farm Labour in South Africa. London: International Defence and Aid Fund for South Africa.
- Ainslie, R., Robinson, D. (1963) The Collaborators. London: The Anti-Apartheid Movement.
- Akinturk, A. S. (2011) The Politics of English as A Foreign Language: The Case of Turkey. Ph.D. Thesis. Carleton University, Ottawa, Ontario.
- Albertyn, C. H. (1991) A Critical Analysis of Political Trials in South Africa 1948-1988. Ph.D. Thesis. Cambridge: University of Cambridge.
- Alden, C. (1996) Apartheid's Last Stand: The Rise and Fall of the South African Security State. Basingstoke: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Alexander, N. (1990) Education and the Struggle for National Liberation in South Africa. Johannesburg: Skotaville Publishers.
- Alexander, N. (2013) Thoughts on the New South Africa. Johannesburg: Jacana Media Ltd.
- Alhadeff, V. (1985) A Newspaper History of South Africa. Cape Town: Don Nelson.
- Allighan, G. (1961) Verwoerd-The End: A Look-Back from the Future. Cape Town: Purnell and Sons.
- Amnesty International (1978) Political Imprisonment in South Africa. London: Amnesty International Publications.
- Ampiah, K. (1997) The Dynamics of Japan's Relation with Africa: South Africa, Tanzania and Nigeria. London: Routledge.
- ANC (1988) The Spear of the Nation. Armed Struggle-Strategy and Tactics of the African National Congress. London: African National Congress.
- Andrews, H.T., Berrill, F.A., de Guingand, F., Holloway, J.E., Meyer, F., van Eck, H.J., van Schoor, A.M. (eds.) (1962) South Africa in the Sixties: A Socio-Economic Survey. Cape Town: South Africa Foundation.
- Anti-Apartheid Movement (1974) Racism and Apartheid in Southern Africa. Paris: UNESCO Press.
- Apostolakis, Nikos. (2009) Cretan Family Names. Greek Ethos Organization. Retrieved from: <http://www.greekethos.org/2008/articles/01%20Crete/Cretan%20family%20names.pdf>
- Arnold, G. (2000) The New South Africa. Basingstoke: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Arnold, M. (ed.) (1981) Steve Biko: Black Consciousness in South Africa. Biko's Last Public Statement and Political Testament. New York: Random House.

Asmal, K, Asmal, L., & Roberts, R. S. (1996) Reconciliation Through Truth: A Reckoning of Apartheid's Criminal Governance. Cape Town: David Philip Publisher.

Ashforth, A. (1990) "Reckoning Schemes of Legitimation: On Commissions of Inquiry as Power/Knowledge Forms." Journal of Historical Sociology, Volume 3, Issue 1, March 1990, pp. 1–22.

Attwell, M. (1986) South Africa: Background to the Crisis. London: Sidgwick and Jackson.

Badiou, A. (2012) The Rebirth of History: Times of Riots and Uprisings. New York: Verso Books.

Badat, S. (2013) The Forgotten People: Banishment Under Apartheid. Leiden and Boston: Brill.

Baines, G. (2007) "The Master Narrative of South Africa's Liberation Struggle: Remembering and Forgetting June 16, 1976." The International Journal of African Historical Studies, Vol. 40, No. 2 (2007), pp. 283-302.

Baker, J. T. (1965) "Human Rights in South Africa." Howard Law Journal, Vol. 11 (1965), pp. 549-582.

Baldwin-Ragaven, L., de Gruchy, J., London, L. (1999) An Ambulance of the Wrong Colour: Health Professionals, Human Rights and Ethics in South Africa. Rondebosch: University of Cape Town Press.

Bale, J. M. (2006) "South Africa's Project Coast: 'Death Squads,' Covert State-Sponsored Poisonings, and the Dangers of CBW Proliferation." Democracy and Security, Vol. 2, 2006 - Issue 1, pp. 27–59.

Ballinger, M. (1969) From Union to Apartheid. Folkestone: Bailey Bros and Swinfen Ltd.

Barber, J. (1999) South Africa in the Twentieth Century: A Political History – in Search of a Nation State. Oxford: Blackwell Publishers.

Barber, J., Barratt, J. (1990) South Africa's Foreign Policy: The Search for Status and Security, 1945-1988. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

Barkon, J. L. (1961) "Apartheid in South Africa." Current History, Feb 1, 1961; 40, 234, pp. 104-108.

Barron, C. (2005) Collected South African Obituaries. Johannesburg: Penguin Books.

Baxter, L. G. (1985) "Doctors on Trial: Steve Biko, Medical Ethics, and the Courts." South African Journal on Human Rights, pp. 137-151 (1985).

Beaudien, M. C. (1982) "The Cultural Boycott of South Africa." Africa Today, Vol. 29, No. 4, (4th Qtr., 1982), pp. 5-16.

- Beck, R. B. (2000) The History of South Africa. Santa Barbara: Greenwood Press.
- Becker, H. (2019) "South African Student Protests, 1968 to 2016: Dissent, Disruption, Decolonization", International Socialist Review, (Issue 111, Winter 2018-19), pp. 31-47.
- Beinart, W., Dubow, S. (eds.) (1995) Segregation and Apartheid in Twentieth-Century South Africa. London: Routledge.
- Beinart, W. (1997) "Transkeian Migrant Workers and Youth Labour on the Natal Sugar Estates, 1918-1948." In Jeeves, A.H., Crush, J. (eds.), (1997) White Farms, Black Labour. The State and Agrarian Change in Southern Africa, 1910-1950. Pietermaritzburg: University of Natal Press.
- Beinart, W. (2001) Twentieth Century South Africa. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Beinart, W. (2011) "The Mpondo Revolt Through the Eyes of Leonard Mdingi and Anderson Ganyile." In Kepe, T., Ntsebeza, L. (eds.) (2011) Rural Resistance in South Africa. The Mpondo Revolts After Fifty Years. Leiden: Brill, pp. 91-114.
- Bell, T., Ntsebeza, D. B. (2003) Unfinished Business: South Africa, Apartheid and Truth. London and New York: Verso Books.
- Belling, V. S. (2002) The Price They Paid: A Bibliographical Survey Of The Memoirs Of The Jews In The Struggle For Democracy And Human Rights In South Africa. Proceedings of the 37 Annual Convention of the Association of Jewish Libraries, Denver: CO., June 23-26, 2002, pp. 1-10.
- Beningfield, J. (2006) The Frightened Land: Land, Landscape and Politics in South Africa in the Twentieth Century. London and New York: Routledge.
- Benson, M. (1960) The Badge of Slavery (The Pass Laws of South Africa). London: Christian Action Publications.
- Benson, M. (1963) "The Destruction of Family Life." In Friedmann, M. (ed.) (1963) I Will Still be Moved: Reports from South Africa. London: Arthur Baker.
- Benson, M. (1963) Chief Albert Lutuli of South Africa. London: Oxford University Press.
- Benson, M. (1966) South Africa: The Struggle for a Birthright. London: Minerva Press.
- Benson, M. (ed.) (1974) The Sun Will Rise. Statements from the Dock by Southern African Political Prisoners. London: International Defence and Aid Fund.
- Benson, M. (1986) Nelson Mandela: The Man and the Movement. New York: W.W. Norton & Company.
- Beresford, D. (2010) Truth is A Strange Fruit: A Personal Journey Through the Apartheid War. Auckland Park: Jacana Media.

Bibliography

Books and Journal Articles

Bernstein, E.. (1966) "South African Jewish Community". The American Jewish Yearbook, Vol 67, 1966, pp. 451-456.

Bernstein, H. (1965) "Profile of an Afrikaner." Transition, No. 23 (1965), pp. 22-24.

Bernstein, H. (1972) South Africa: The Terrorism of Torture. London: International Defence and Aid Fund.

Bernstein, H. (1975) For Their Triumphs and Their Tears: Women in Apartheid South Africa. London: International and Defence Fund.

Berridge, G.R. (1992) South Africa, the Colonial Powers and 'African Defence': The Rise and Fall of the White Entente, 1948-60. London: MacMillan.

Beyers, C.J. (ed.) (1982) Dictionary of South African Biography, Vol IV. London: Butterworth.

Beyers, C.J., Basson, J.L. (eds.) (1987) Dictionary of South African Biography, Vol 5. Pretoria: Human Resources Research Council.

Bianchi, E. C. (1972) The Religious Experience of Revolutionaries. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday.

Bird, A. V. (1992) Bird on the Wing. Simon's Town: South African Natural History Publications C.C.

Bishop, M. (2014) "An Accidental Good: The Role of Commissions of Inquiry in South African Democracy." New York Law School. Law Review. Twenty Years of South African Constitutionalism. Friday, November 14, 2014.

Bizos, G. (1998) No One to Blame? A Personal Account of Inquests into Some Deaths in Detention under Apartheid. Cape Town: David Philip Publishers.

Bizos, G. (2011) Odyssey to Freedom. Houghton: Random House.

Black, M. (1965) No Room for Tourists. London: Secker and Warburg.

Bloom, L. (1967) "The Coloured People of South Africa." Phylon, Vol. 28, No. 2, (2nd Qtr., 1967), pp. 139-150.

Bloomberg, C. (1990) Christian-Nationalism and the Rise of the Afrikaner Broederbond in South Africa, 1918-1948. London: MacMillan.

Bloomberg, D. (2007) My Times: The Memoirs of David Bloomberg. Simon's Town: Fernwood Press.

Blumberg, M. (1960) "The Mafekeng Affair." Africa South. April/June 1960, pp. 39-46.

Blumenfeld, J. (ed.) (1987) South Africa in Crisis. London and New York: Croom Helm for the Royal Institute of International Affairs.

- Bonner, P., Delius, P., Posel, D. (1993) "The Shaping of Apartheid: Contradiction, Continuity and Popular Struggle." In Bonner, P., Delius, P., Posel, D. (eds.), (1993) Apartheid's Genesis: 1935-62. Braamfontein: Raven Press and Johannesburg: Witwatersrand University Press, pp. 1-42.
- Booth, D. (1998) The Race Game. Sport and Politics in South Africa. London: Frank Cass Publishers.
- Bosch, D. J. (1979) "Racism and Revolution: Response of the Churches in South Africa." Occasional Bulletin, Vol. 3, Issue 1, pp. 13-20.
- Boshoff, A. (1974) Sekretaresse vir die Verwoerds. Cape Town and Pretoria: Human & Rousseau.
- Botha, J. (1967) Verwoerd is Dead. Cape Town: Books of Africa.
- Bourne, P. G. (1986) Fidel: A Biography of Fidel Castro. New York: Dodd Mead.
- Brecht, B. (2016) Me Ti: Book of Interventions in the Flow of Things. London: Bloomsbury.
- Breckenridge, K. (2005) "Verwoerd's Bureau of Proof: Total Information in the Making of Apartheid." History Workshop Journal, Vol. 59, Issue 1, (Spring 2005), pp. 83-108.
- Breckenridge, K. (2014) Biometric State: The Global Politics of Identification and Surveillance in South Africa, 1850 to the Present. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Breytenbach, B. (1985) The True Confessions of an Albino Terrorist. London and Boston: Faber and Faber.
- Brickhill, J. (1976) Race Against Race: South Africa's 'Multi-national' Sport Fraud. London: International Defence and Aid Fund.
- Brink, A. (2009) A Fork in the Road. A Memoir. London: Harvill Secker.
- Brink, E., Krige, S., Lebelo, S., Malungane, G., Ntshangase, D. (2010) Soweto, 16 June 1976: It All Started With A Dog. Cape Town: Kwela Books.
- British Council of Churches (1965) The Future of South Africa. London: SCM Press Ltd.
- Broderick, J. J. (1960) "Role of the Psychiatrist and Psychiatric Testimony in Civil and Criminal Trials." Notre Dame Law Review, Vol 35, Issue 4, (8 January 1960), pp. 508-524.
- Brookes, E. H. (1968) Apartheid: A Documentary Study of Modern South Africa. London: Routledge and Kegan Paul.
- Broun, K. S. (2012) Saving Nelson Mandela: The Rivonia Trial and the Fate of South Africa. New York: Oxford University Press.

Brotz, H. (1977) The Politics of South Africa: Democracy and Racial Diversity. Oxford: Oxford University Press.

Brown, T. S. (2016) Weimar Radicals: Nazis and Communists Between Authenticity and Performance. New York: Berghahn Books.

Browett, J. (1982) "The Evolution of Unequal Development within South Africa: An Overview." In Smith, D. M. (ed.) (1982) Living under Apartheid: Aspects of Urbanization and Social Change. London: George Allen and Unwin, pp. 10-23.

Brunner, E D. (1955) "Problems and Tensions in South Africa Source." Political Science Quarterly, Vol. 70, No. 3, (Sep., 1955), pp. 368-386.

Bundy, C. (1994) "At War with the Future? Black South African Youth in the 1990s." In Stedman, S. J. (ed.) (1994) South Africa: The Political Economy of Transformation. Boulder and London: Lynne Rienner Publishers.

Bunting, B. (1959) Apartheid - The Road to Poverty. Cape Town: Real Printing and Publishing.

Bunting, B. (ed.) (1981) South African Communists Speak: Documents from the History of the South African Communist Party 1915-1980. London: Inkululeko Publications.

Bunting, B. (1986, originally published in 1964) The Rise of the South African Reich. London: International and Defence and Aid Fund for South Africa.

Bunting, I. (2006) "The Higher Education Landscape under Apartheid." In Cloete, N., Maassen, P., Fehnel, R., Moja, T., Gibbon, T., Perold, H. (eds.) (2006) Transformation in Higher Education: Global Pressures and Local Realities. London: Springer, pp. 35-52.

Buntman, F. L. (2003) Robben Island and Prisoner Resistance to Apartheid. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

Burger, M. (1961) Dr Verwoerd of South Africa: Architect of Doom. London: A Christian Action Pamphlet.

Burke, A. (2006) "Mental Health Care during Apartheid in South Africa: An Illustration of How 'Science' Can Be Abused." In Parry, J. T. (ed.) (2006) Evil, Law and the State: Perspectives on State Power and Violence. Amsterdam-New York: Rodopi B.V.

Bush, B. (1999) Imperialism, Race and Resistance: Africa and Britain, 1919-1945. London and New York: Routledge.

Buthelezi, M. (1974) White and Black Nationalism, Ethnicity, and Future of the Homelands. Johannesburg: South African Institute of Race Relations.

Buthelezi, M. (1990) South Africa: My Vision of the Future. London: Weidenfeld and Nicholson.

- Buthelezi, J. C. (2006) Rolihlahla Dalibhunga Nelson Mandela. London: Trafford Publishing.
- Butler, A. (1998) Democracy and Apartheid: Political Theory, Comparative Politics and the Modern South African State. Houndmills and London: MacMillan Press.
- Cachalia, Y. (1990) "The Evolution of a Decade." In Schadeberg, J. (ed.) (1990) Nelson Mandela and the Rise of the ANC. London: Bloomsbury Publishing Limited, pp. 10.
- Callinicos, A. (ed.) (1992) Between Apartheid and Capitalism. Conversations with South African Socialists. London: Bookmarks.
- Callinicos, A. (1995) South Africa: Between Reform and Revolution. London: Bookmarks.
- Callinicos, A., Rogers, J. (1977) Southern Africa after Soweto. London: Pluto Press Limited.
- Callinicos, L. (2005) Oliver Tambo. Beyond the Engeli Mountains. Cape Town: David Philip Publishers.
- Calpin, G. H. (1951) "South Africa in Afrikaner Hands." Foreign Affairs, Vol. 29, No. 3, (April 1951), pp. 417-423.
- Calpin, G.H. (1968) At Least We Have Got Our Country Back. Cape Town: Buren Publishers.
- Calvocoressi, P. (1961) South Africa and World Opinion. London: Oxford University Press.
- Cameron, T. (1994) Jan Smuts: An Illustrated Biography. Cape Town: Human & Rousseau.
- Campbell, C. (2012) "Beyond Radicalisation: Toward An Integrated Strategy." In Salinas de Frías, A.M., Samuel, K. L.H., White, N. (2012) Counter-Terrorism: International Law and Practice. Oxford: Oxford University Press, pp. 255-282.
- Carter, G. M. (1954) "Can Apartheid Succeed in South Africa?" Foreign Affairs, (January 1954), Vol. 32, pp. 296-309.
- Carter, G. M. (1958) The Politics of Inequality: South Africa since 1948. London: Thames and Hudson.
- Cazenove, S. (2019) An Unwitting Assassin. The Story of My Father's Attempted Assassination of Prime Minister Hendrik Verwoerd. Rainbird.
- Cawood, L. (1964) The Churches and Race Relations in South Africa. Johannesburg: South African Institute of Race Relations.
- Cawthra, G. (1986) Brutal Force: The Apartheid War Machine. London: International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa.
- Cell, J. W. (1982) The Highest Stage of White Supremacy: The Origins of Segregation in South Africa and the American South. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

Centre for African Studies (1978) J.B Vorster: A Political Background. London: Bureau of National and International Communication, South African Embassy.

Citino, R. M. (1991) Germany and the Union of South Africa in the Nazi Period. New York: Greenwood Press.

Chaldeos, A. A. (2015) The Greek Community in Mozambique. Athens: Self-published.

Chisholm, L. (2002) "Continuity and Change in Education Policy Research and Borrowing in South Africa." In Kallaway, P. (ed.) (2002) The History of Education under Apartheid 1948-1994: The Doors of Learning and Culture Shall be Opened. New York: Peter Lang Publishing Inc., pp. 93-108.

Christian Action (1955) The Dispossessed: The Human Tragedy of Apartheid. London: Christian Action.

Christopher, A.J. (1994) The Atlas of Apartheid. London and New York: Routledge.

Choonoo, R. N. (1997) "The Sophiatown Generation: Black Literary Journalism during the 1950s." In Switzer, L. (ed.) (1997) South Africa's Alternative Press: Voices of Protest and Resistance, 1880s-1960s. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, pp. 252-265.

Clark, S. (1986) "Introduction." In Harsch, E. (1986) Apartheid's Grand Land Theft. The Struggles for the Right to Farm in South Africa. New York: Pathfinder Press.

Clark, N. L., Worger, W. H. (2011) South Africa: The Rise and Fall of Apartheid. 2nd Edition. Harlow: Longman.

Clingman, S. (2013) Bram Fischer: Afrikaner Revolutionary (2nd edition). Johannesburg: Jacana Media.

C.M.T. (1977) "Notes on Church-State Affairs." Journal of Church and State, Vol 19, Issue 2, (Spring 1977), pp. 203-424.

C.M.T. (1978) "Notes on Church-State Affairs." Journal of Church and State, Vol 20, Issue 2, (Spring 1978), pp. 213-442.

Cole, E. (1968) House of Bondage. A South African Black Man Exposes in his Own Pictures and Words the Bitter Life of his Homeland Today. London: The Penguin Press.

Cole, C. M. (2015) "Just in Transition: South Africa Political Trials, 1956-1964." In Allo, A. (ed.) (2015) The Courtroom As A Space of Resistance: Reflections on the Legacy of the Rivonia Trial. Farnham: Ashgate Pub Co., pp. 81-122.

Collins, R. O. (1990) Central and South African History. New York: Markus Wiener Publishing.

Commonwealth Eminent Persons Group. (1986) Mission to South Africa: The Commonwealth Report. Harmondsworth: Penguin Books.

Coniglio, R. (2012) "Methods of Judicial Decision-Making and the Rule of Law: The Case of Apartheid South Africa." Boston University International Law Journal, Vol. 30, pp. 497-527.

Conference Steering Committee (1964) "Sanctions and World Peace." In Segal, R. (ed.) (1964) Sanctions Against South Africa. Baltimore: Penguin Books, pp. 94-106.

Cook, A. (1974) South Africa: The Imprisoned Society. London: International Defence and Aid Fund.

Coombes, A. E. (2003) History After Apartheid: Visual Culture and Public Memory in a Democratic South Africa. Durham, N.C.: Duke University Press.

Cooper, G. (2016) Under Devil's Peak: The Life and Times of Wilfrid Cooper, An Advocate in the Age of Apartheid. Kenilworth: Burnet Media.

Cooper, S., Nicholas, L. J., Seedat, M., Statman, J.M. (1990) "Psychology and Apartheid: The Struggle for Psychology in South Africa." In Nicholas, L. J., Cooper, S. (eds.) (1990) Psychology and Apartheid. Johannesburg: A Vision/Madiba Publication, pp. 1-21.

Corke, M.A.S. (1978) "A School System for our Society." In Senate Special Lectures (1978) South Africa's Crisis in Education. Johannesburg: University of the Witwatersrand.

Cornell, M. (1960) "The Statutory Background of Apartheid: A Chronological Survey of South African Legislation." The World Today, Vol. 16, No. 5 (May 1960), pp. 181-194.

Couzens, T. (1984) History of the Black Press in South Africa, 1836-1960. Additional Seminar Paper. African Studies Seminar series. University of the Witwatersrand Institute for Advanced Social Research. Paper presented September 1984.

Cronin, J. (1992) "The Communist Party and the Left". In Callinicos, A. (ed.) (1992) Between Apartheid and Capitalism. Conversations with South African Socialists. London: Bookmarks.

Cronje, S. (1964) Witness in the Dark: Police Torture and Brutality in South Africa. London: The Anti-Apartheid Movement.

Cros, B. (1996) "Why South Africa's Television is Only Twenty Years Old: Debating Civilisation, 1958-1969." Alizes (Trade Winds) Revue Angliciste de La Reunion, No 12. October 1996, pp. 117-129.

Crowd, N. and Revo, C. (1967) The Pattern of Assassination. Pretoria: Boomerang Publications.

Currie, I. (2011) "The Judiciary and Freedom of Speech in South Africa." In Lee, H.P. (ed.) (2011) Judiciaries in Comparative Perspectives. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, pp. 217-236.

Curry, D. Y. (2012) Apartheid On A Black Isle. Removal and Resistance in Alexandria, South Africa. New York: Palgrave Macmillan.

D'Amato, A. A. (1966) "The Bantustan Proposals for South-West Africa." The Journal of Modern African Studies, Vol. 4, No. 2 (Oct., 1966), pp. 177-192.

D'Amato, A. A. (1966) "Apartheid in South West Africa: Five Claims of Equality." Portia Law Journal, Vol. 1, No. 2, (Spring 1966), pp. 59-76.

D'Oliveira, J. (1977) Vorster – The Man. Johannesburg: Ernest Stanton.

Daniel, J., Vale, P. (2009) "South Africa: Where were we looking in 1968?" In Gassert, P. and Klimke, M. (eds.) (2009) 1968 - Memories and Legacies of a Global Revolt. Washington, DC: German Historical Institute.

Daniels, E. (2002) There and Back: Robben Island, 1964-1979. Bellville: Mayibuye Books.

Darnborough, A. (1967) Labour's Record on Southern Africa. London: Anti-Apartheid Movement.

Davenport, T.R.H. (1991) South Africa: A Modern History. Houndmills and London: MacMillan.

Davenport, R., Saunders, C. (2000) South Africa: A Modern History. London: Macmillan Press Ltd.

Davidson, B., Slovo, J., and Wilkinson, A. R. (1977) Southern Africa: The New Politics of Revolution. Harmondsworth: Penguin Books.

Davis, D. (1978) African Workers and Apartheid. London: International Defence and Aid Fund.

Davis, D., & le Roux, M. (2009) Precedent and Possibility: The (Ab)use of Law in South Africa. Cape Town: Double Storey Books.

Davis, S.M. (1987) Apartheid's Rebels: Inside South Africa's Hidden War. New Haven: Yale University Press.

de Beer, C. (1984) The South African Disease: Apartheid Health and Health Services. Trenton, N.J.: South African Research Service.

de Broglio, C. (1970) Apartheid in Sport. London: International Defence and Aid Fund.

de Kiewiet, C.W. (1964) "Loneliness in the Beloved Country." Foreign Affairs, Vol. 42, (April 1964), pp. 413-427.

de Klerk, F.W. (1999) The Last Trek. A New Beginning. London: Pan Books.

de Klerk, W. A. (1975) The Puritans in Africa: Story of Afrikanerdom. London: Rex Collings.

- Denoon, D., Nyeko, B. (1989) Southern Africa Since 1800. London and New York: Longman.
- Department of Information [of South Africa]. (1968) The Transkei: A Progress Report and Multi-national Development in South Africa. London: South African Embassy to the UK.
- Department of Information [of South Africa]. (1978) Amnesty for Terrorism. Pretoria: Simondium Publishers on behalf of the Department of Information.
- Desai, A. (2015) "Indian South African and the Black Consciousness Movement under Apartheid." Diaspora Studies, Vol 8, Issue 1, p. 37-50.
- Desmond, C. (1971) The Discarded People. Harmondsworth: Penguin Books.
- Devenish, G.E. (2012) "The Republican Constitution of 1961 Revisited: A Re-Evaluation after Fifty Years", Fundamina: A Journal of Legal History, Volume 18, Issue 1, Jan 2012, pp. 1-14.
- de St. Jorre, J. (1976) "Inside the Laager: White Power in South Africa". Foreign Affairs, October 1976.
- de Villiers, L. (1975) South Africa: A Skunk Among Nations. London: International Books.
- de Villiers, R. (1971) "Afrikaner Nationalism." In Wilson, M., Thompson, L. (eds.) (1971) The Oxford History of South Africa. Oxford: Clarendon Press, pp. 365-416.
- Diemont, M. A. (1995) Brushes with the Law. Cape Town: Human & Rousseau.
- Dlamini, M. (1984) Robben Island, Hell-Hole: Reminiscences of a Political Prisoner. Nottingham: Spokesman.
- Dousemetzis, C. (2018) The Presidency of Jimmy Carter and the Emerging Politics of Gay Rights and Evangelical Religion. Ph.D. Thesis, Durham University, England, (July 2018).
- Dowdall, T.L. (1991) "Repression, Health Care and Ethics under Apartheid." Journal of Medical Ethics, (Dec., 1991), 17 (Supplement), pp. 51-54.
- Doxey, G.V. (1963) "The South African Problem: A Conflict of Nationalism." International Journal, Vol. 18, No. 4 (Autumn 1963), pp. 501-512.
- Drew, A. (ed.) (1996) South Africa's Radical Tradition: A Documentary History. Volume 1: 1907-1950. Cape Town: Buchu Books, Mayibue Books, University of Cape Town Press.
- Drury, A. (1968) A Very Strange Society: A Journey to the Heart of South Africa. London: Michael Joseph.
- Dubow, S. (1987) "Race, Civilisation and Culture: The Elaboration of Segregationist Discourse in the Inter-War Years." In Marks, S., Trapido, S. (eds.) (1987) The Politics of Race, Class and Nationalism in Twentieth Century South Africa. London and New York: Longman, pp. 71-94.

- Dubow, S. (1992) "Afrikaner Nationalism, Apartheid and the Conceptualization of 'Race.'" The Journal of African History, Vol. 33, No. 2 (1992), pp. 209-237.
- Dubow, S. (1995) Scientific Racism in Modern South Africa. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Dubow, S. (1995) "The Elaboration of Segregationist Ideology." In Beinart, W., Dubow, S. (eds.) (1995) Segregation and Apartheid in Twentieth-Century South Africa. London: Routledge, pp. 145-175.
- Dubow, S. (2011) "Macmillan, Verwoerd, and the 'Wind of Change' Speech", Historical Journal, 54 (4), (2011), pp. 1087-1114.
- Dubow, S. (2014) Apartheid 1948-1994. Oxford: Oxford Histories.
- Dubow, S. (2015) "Racial Irredentism, Ethnogenesis, and White Supremacy in High Apartheid South Africa". Kronos, Vol. 41 No.1, (Nov. 2015), pp. 236-264.
- Dubula, S. (1965) The Menace of Apartheid. London: Peace and Socialism Publishers.
- Dugard, C.J.R. (1966) "Foreign Affairs and Public International Law." Annual Survey of South African Law 1965, (1966), pp. 51-64.
- Dugard, J. (ed.) (1973) The South West Africa/Namibia Dispute. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- Dugard, J. (1978) Human Rights and the South African Legal Order. Princeton, New Jersey: Princeton University Press.
- Dugard, J. (1987) Recognition and the United Nations. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Dugard, J. (1997) "Is the Truth and Reconciliation Process Compatible with International Law? An Unanswered Question." South African Journal on Human Rights, Vol. 13, Issue 2 (1997), pp. 258-268.
- Dugard, J. (1998) "The South African Judiciary and International Law in Apartheid Era." South African Journal on Human Rights, Vol. 14, Issue 1 (1998), pp. 110-126.
- Dugard, J. (1998) "Reconciliation and Justice: The South African Experience." Transnational Law & Contemporary Problems, Vol. 8, Issue 2 (1998), pp. 277-312.
- Duncan, P. (1963) "Toward a World Policy for South Africa." Foreign Affairs, Vol 42 (October 1963).
- du Pre, R. H. (1994) Separate but Unequal: The 'Coloured' People of South Africa, A Political History. Johannesburg: Jonathan Ball Publishers.
- du Preez, M. (2008) Of Tricksters, Tyrants and Turncoats. Cape Town: Zebra Press.

- du Preez Bezdrob, A. M. (2003) Winnie Mandela: A Life. Cape Town: Zebra Press.
- Durgun, U. R. (2013) A General Outlook on Teaching Foreign Language via Distance Learning in Turkey. Konya: Selcuk University Literature Faculty.
- du Toit, B. M. (1991) "The Far Right in Current South African Politics." Journal of Modern African Studies. Vol. 29. No. 4, December 1991), pp. 627-667.
- Dyzenhaus, D. (1991) Hard Cases in Wicked Legal Systems: South African Law in the Perspective of Legal Philosophy. Oxford: Clarendon Press.
- Dyzenhaus, D. (2003, first published in 1998) Judging the Judges, Judging Ourselves: Truth, Reconciliation and the Apartheid Legal Order. Oxford: Hart Publishing.
- Dyzenhaus, D. (2010) Hard Cases in Wicked Legal Systems: Pathologies of Legality. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Dvorin, E. P. (1952) Racial Separation in South Africa: An Analysis of Apartheid Theory. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- De Lange, M. (1997) The Muzzled Muse: Literature and Censorship in South Africa. Amsterdam/Philadelphia: John Benjamins Publishing Company.
- Eades, L. M. (1999) The End of Apartheid in South Africa. Westport: Greenwood Press.
- Edgar, R.E. (ed.) (1990) Sanctioning Apartheid. Trenton, N.J.: Africa World Press, Inc.
- Ellis, S., Sechaba, T. (1992) Comrades Against Apartheid: The ANC and the South African Communist Party in Exile, London: James Currey.
- El-Khawas, M. (1971) "The Third-World Stance on Apartheid: The U.N. Record". The Journal of Modern African Studies, Vol. 9, No. 3, October 1971, pp. 443-452.
- Elphick, P. (2006) Liberty: The Ships That Won the War. Annapolis, Md.: US Naval Institute Press.
- Elphick, R. (2012) The Equality of Believers: Protestant Missionaries and the Racial Politics of South Africa. Charlottesville: University of Virginia Press.
- En So Haber. (2012) "Limasollu Naci kimdir." En So Haber, 23 May 2012. Retrieved from: <http://www.ensonhaber.com/limasollu-naci-kimdir-2012-05-23.html>
- Evans, I. (1997) Bureaucracy and Race: Native Administration in South Africa. Berkley: University of California Press.
- Facaros, D., Pauls, M. (2001) South of France. London: Cadogan Guides.
- Fair, T. J. D., and Shaffer, N. M. (1964) "Population Patterns and Policies in South Africa, 1951-1960." Economic Geography, Vol. 40, No. 3 (Jul., 1964), pp. 261-274.

- Farah, A. A. (1974) "South Africa's Apartheid Policy: An Assessment." In El-Ayouty, Y. and Brooks, H. (eds.) (1974) Africa and International Organization. Dordrecht: Springer, pp. 71-102.
- Fasulo, G. (1970) The Powers Behind Apartheid. Africa Research Group. Boston: New England Free Press.
- February, V. (1991) The Afrikaners of South Africa. London and New York: Kegan Paul International.
- Feit, E. (1967) African Opposition in South Africa: The Failure of Passive Resistance. Stanford: The Hoover Institution on War, Revolution and Peace.
- Field, S. (1998) "From the 'Peaceful Past' to the 'Violent Present': Memory, Myth and Identity in Guguletu." In Howarth, D. R., Norval, A. J. (eds.) (1998) South Africa in Transition: New Theoretical Perspectives. London: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Fieldhouse, R. (2005) Anti-Apartheid: A History of the Movement in Britain. London: The Merlin Press.
- First, R. (2006) 117 Days: An Account of Confinement and Interrogation under the South African 90-Day Detention Law. Harmondsworth: Penguin Books.
- First, R., Steele, J., Gurney, C. (1973) The South African Connection. Western Investment in Apartheid. Harmondsworth: Penguin Books.
- Fisher, J. (1969) The Afrikaners. London: Cassel and Company.
- Fleisch, B. (2002) "State Formation and the Origins of Bantu Education." In Kallaway, P. (ed.) (2002) The History of Education under Apartheid 1948-1994: The Doors of Learning and Culture Shall be Opened. New York: Peter Lang Publishing Inc.
- Fobi, B. T. (2014) The Engineers of History: Hendrik Verwoerd, George Wallace, and the Power of Historical Memory. Ph.D. thesis. Yale University.
- Forman, L., Sachs, E.S. (1957) The South African Treason Trial. London: John Calder.
- Forsyth, F. (2015) The Outsider: My Life in Intrigue. London: Bantam Press.
- Foster, D. (1987) Detention and Torture in South Africa: Psychological, Legal and Historical Studies. London: James Curry.
- Foster, D. (1991) "Race and Racism in South African Psychology." South African Journal of Psychology, December 1991, Vol. 21, No. 4, pp. 203-210.
- Foster, D. (1993) "On Racism, Virulent Mythologies and Fragile Threads." In Nicholas, L. J. (1993) Psychology and Oppression: Critiques and Proposals. Johannesburg: Skotaville Publishers, pp. 55-81.

- Frankel, G. (1999) Rivonia's Children: Three Families and the Cost of Conscience in White South Africa. New York: Farrar, Strauss and Giroux.
- Frankel, P. (2001) An Ordinary Atrocity: Sharpeville and Its Massacre. New Haven and London: Yale University Press.
- Freeman, L.R. (1915) "Rhodes's 'All Red' Route: The Effect of the War on the Cape-To-Cairo and the Control of a Continent." In Page, W.H., Page, A.W. (2012) The World's Work, Volume 29; A History of Our Time. RareBooksClub.com.
- Friedman, G. (2007) "A Tribute to Michael MacGregor Corbett." 124 The South African Law Journal, pp. 666-670.
- Friedman, G., Gauntlett, J. (2013) Bar, Bench and Bullshiflers: Cape Tales 1950-1990. Cape Town: Siber Ink.
- Froneman, J. D. (2000) "HF Verwoerd's Student Years: Cradle of his Political Career and Thought." Koers. Vol. 65, No. 3, 399-412.
- Frye, W. (1970) In Whitest Africa: The Dynamics of Apartheid. Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey: Prentice-Hall INC.
- Fullard, M. (2004) "State Repression in the 1960s." In South African Democracy Education Trust (2004) The Road to Democracy in South Africa, Volume 1 (1960-1970). Cape Town: Zebra Press, pp. 341-390.
- Furlong, P. J. (1983) The Mixed Marriages Act: An Historical and Theological Study. Cape Town: Centre for African Studies, University of Cape Town.
- Furlong, P. J. (1991) Between Crown and Swastika: The Impact of the Radical Right on the Afrikaner Nationalist Movement in the Fascist Era. Hanover and London: Wesleyan University Press.
- Furlong, P. J. (2003) "Apartheid, Afrikaner Nationalism and the Radical Right: Historical Revisionism in Hermann Gilomee's The Afrikaners." South African Historical Journal, Vol. 49, Issue 1, pp. 207-222.
- Furlong, P. J. (2010) "The National Party of South Africa: A Transnational Perspective." In Durham, M., Power, M. (eds.) (2010) New Perspectives on the Transnational Right. New York: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Gailbraith, J. S. (1959) "The Tragedy of South Africa." Western Humanities Review: Jan 1, 1959: 13, pp. 264-282.
- Gastrow, S. (1995) Who's Who in South African Politics: No.5. Johannesburg: Ravan Press.
- Gaughwin, P. C. (2005) "On Being Insane in Medico-Legal Places: The Importance of Taking a Complete History in Forensic Mental Health Assessment", Psychiatry, Psychology and Law, 12:2, pp. 298-310.

- Geldenhuys, D. (1984) The Diplomacy of Isolation. Johannesburg: Macmillan
- Gerhart, G. M. (1978) Black Power in South Africa: The Evolution of an Ideology. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- Gevisser, M. (2007) Thabo Mbeki: The Dream Deferred. Johannesburg and Cape Town: Jonathan Ball Publishers.
- Gibbs, H. (1949) Twilight in South Africa. London: Jarrolds.
- Gibbs, T. (2014) Mandela's Kinsmen: Nationalist Elites and Apartheid's First Bantustan. Oxford: James Currey.
- Gifford, T. (1981) Southern Africa's Record of International Terrorism. United Nations Centre Against Apartheid. London: Anti-Apartheid Movement.
- Gilbert, S. (2010) "Jews and the Racial State: Legacies of the Holocaust in Apartheid South Africa, 1945–60." Jewish Social Studies, Vol. 16, No. 3 (Spring/Summer 2010), pp. 32-64.
- Giliomee, H., Schlemmer, L. (1990) From Apartheid to Nation-Building. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Giliomee, H., Mbenga, B. (2007) New History of South Africa. Cape Town: Tafelberg Publishers.
- Giliomee, H. (2003) "The Making of the Apartheid Plan, 1929-1948." Journal of Southern African Studies, Vol. 29, No. 2 (Jun., 2003), pp. 373-392.
- Giliomee, H. (2011) The Afrikaners: Biography of A People. London: Hurst and Company.
- Giliomee, H. (2012) The Last Afrikaner Leaders: A Supreme Test of Power. Cape Town: Tafelberg.
- Glaser, C. (1993) "'When are They Going to Fight?' Tsotsis, Youth Politics and the PAC". In Bonner, P., Delius, P., Posel, D. (eds.) (1993) Apartheid's Genesis: 1935-62. Braamfontein: Raven Press and Johannesburg: Witwatersrand University Press, pp. 296-315.
- Glaser, C. (2013) The ANC Youth League. Athens: Ohio University Press.
- Glaser, D. (2001) Politics and Society in South Africa. London: Sage Publications.
- Gleijeses, P. (2002) Conflicting Missions. Havana, Washington, and Africa, 1959-1976. Chapel Hill: The University of North Carolina Press.
- Goldberg, D. (2010) The Mission: A Life for Freedom in South Africa. Johannesburg: STE Publishers.
- Goldin, I. (1987) "The Reconstitution of Coloured Identity in the Western Cape." In Marks, S., Trapido, S. (eds.) (1987) The Politics of Race, Class and Nationalism in Twentieth Century South Africa. London and New York: Longman, pp. 156-181.

Goodman, D. (2001) Fault Lines: Journeys into the New South Africa. Berkeley and Los Angeles, California: University of California Press.

Goodhew, D. (2004) Respectability and Resistance: A History of Sophiatown. Westport, Connecticut: Praeger Publishers.

Gool, J. (1966) The Crimes of Bantu Education in South South Africa. Dar es Salaam: All African Convention and Unity Movement.

Gordin, J. (2008) Zuma: A Biography. Johannesburg and Cape Town: Jonathan Ball Publishers.

Gordon, L.R., Sharpley-Whiting, T.D., White, R.T. (eds.) (1996) Fanon: A Critical Reader. Oxford: Wiley-Blackwell.

Gostick, R. (1954) The Architects Behind the World Communist Conspiracy. Flesherton, Ont.: Canadian Anti-Communist League.

Gostick, R. (1978) The Moment of Truth, The World Council of Churches: A Soviet-Marxist Catspaw in Africa? Flesherton, Ont.: The Canadian League of Rights.

G. M. C. (1958) "The South African Election Appraised." The World Today, Vol. 14, No. 7 (July 1958), pp. 316-321.

Gray, A. (1960) "Quarterly Chronicle". African Affairs, Vol. 59, No. 236 (Jul., 1960), pp. 180-190.

Gray, S. (1993) Human Interest and Other Pieces. Johannesburg: Justified Press

Graybill, L.S. (2002) Truth and Reconciliation in South Africa: Miracle or Model? Boulder, CO: Lynne Rienner Publishers, Inc.

Grey, R. (1949) "South Africa under the Nationalist Party." International Journal, Vol. 4, No. 1, (March 1, 1949), pp. 52-59.

Grobbelaar, P. W. (1967) This Was A Man. Cape Town: Human & Rousseau.

Grundy, K.W. (1973) Confrontation and Accommodation in Southern Africa: The Limits of Independence. Berkeley: University of California.

Grundy, K.W. (1976) "Intermediary Power and Global Dependency: the Case of South Africa." International Studies Quarterly, Vol. 20, No. 4, (Dec., 1976), pp. 553-580.

Grundy, K.W. (1986) The Militarization of South African Politics. Bloomington: Indiana University Press.

Grundy, K.W. (1991) South Africa: Domestic Crisis and Global Challenge. Boulder: Westview Press Inc.

- Guelke, A. (2005) Rethinking the Rise and Fall of Apartheid. New York: Palgrave MacMillan.
- Gunther, M. (2004) "The National Committee of Liberation (NCL)/African Resistance Movement." In South African Democracy Education Trust. (2004) The Road to Democracy in South Africa, Volume 1 (1960-1970). Cape Town: Zebra Press, pp. 209-256.
- Gutsche, T. (1970) A Very Smart Medal: The Story of the Witwatersrand Agricultural Society. Cape Town: Howard Timmins.
- G.V.D. (1961) "South Africa Faces the Future." The World Today, Vol. 17, No. 12 (Dec., 1961), pp. 538-546.
- Hachten, W.A., Giffard, C.A. (1984) The Press and Apartheid: Repression and Propaganda in South Africa. Madison, Wis.: The University of Wisconsin Press.
- Haekkerup, P. (1964) "The South African Racial Crisis and the World." In Segal, R. (ed.) (1964) Sanctions Against South Africa. Harmondsworth: Penguin Books, pp. 42-61.
- Haigh, A. (1962) South African Tragedy. London: World Distributors.
- Hain, P. (1996) Sing the Beloved Country: The Struggle for the New South Africa. Chicago, Ill: Pluto Press.
- Hahlo, H.R., Kahn, E. (1960) The Union of South Africa: The Development of its Laws and Constitution. London: Stevens & Sons, Ltd.
- Halisi, C.R.D. (1999) Black Political Thought in the Making of South African Democracy. Bloomington: Indiana University Press.
- Hann, D. (2013) Physical Resistance. A Hundred Years of Anti-Fascism. Winchester: Zero Books.
- Hanf, T., Weiland, H., Vierdag, G. (1981) South Africa: The Prospects for Peaceful Change. Bloomington: Indiana University Press.
- Harris, B. (2004) "Arranging Prejudice: Exploring Hate Crime in Post-Apartheid South Africa." Race and Citizenship in Transition Series, Centre for the Study of Violence and Reconciliation (SWOP), University of the Witwatersrand.
- Harrison, D. (1981) The White Tribe of Africa: South Africa in Perspective. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- Harrison, N. (1986) Winnie Mandela: Mother of a Nation. London: Harper Collins Publishers Ltd.
- Harrison, R. (2006) The Black Christ: A Journey to Freedom. Claremont: David Philip Publishers.

Harsch, E. (1980) South Africa: White Rule, Black Revolt. New York: Monad Press.

Harsch, E. (1986) Apartheid's Grand Land Theft. The Struggles for the Right to Farm in South Africa. New York: Pathfinder Press.

Harvey, W. B. and Dean, W. H. B. (1978) "The Independence of Transkei - A Largely Constitutional Inquiry". The Journal of Modern African Studies, Vol. 16, No. 2 (Jun., 1978), pp. 189-220.

Hyam, R. (1972) The Failure of South African Expansion, 1908-1948. New York: Africana Publishing Corporation.

Haysom, N. (1986) "The Langa Shootings and the Kannemeyer Commission of Enquiry." Human Rights Quarterly, Vol. 8, No. 3, (Aug., 1986), pp. 494-510.

Haywood, C. (2000) A History of South African Literature. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

Heard, K. A. (1974) General Elections in South Africa, 1943-70. London: Oxford University Press.

Heilbrun, K., Rosenfeld, B., Warren, J., Collins, S. (1994) "The Use of Third-Party Information in Forensic Assessments: A Two-State Comparison." Bull Am Acad Psychiatry Law, Vol. 22, No. 3, pp. 399-406.

Heilbrun, K., Marczyk, G.R., DeMatteo, D. (2002) Forensic Mental Health Assessment: A Casebook. Oxford: Oxford University Press.

Heilbrun, K., Warren, J., Picarello, K. (2003) "Third Party Information in Forensic Assessment." In Goldstein, A.M., Weiner, I.B. (eds.) (2003) Handbook of Psychology, Vol. 11: Forensic Psychology. Hoboken, New Jersey: John Wiley and Sons, Inc., pp. 69-86.

Heilbrun, K., Grisso, T., Goldstein, A.M. (2008) Foundations of Forensic Mental Health Assessment. New York: Oxford University Press.

Heilbrun, K., NeMoyer, A., King, C., Galloway, M. (2015) "Using Third-Party Information in Forensic Mental-Health Assessment: A Critical Review." Court Review, Vol. 51, pp. 16-35.

Hellig, J. (2009) "German Jewish Immigration to South Africa during the 1930s: Revisiting the Charter of the SS Stuttgart." Jewish Culture and History, Vol. 11, Issue 1-2, pp. 124-138.

Henkes, B. (2016) "Shifting Identifications in Dutch-South African Migration Policies (1910–1961)." South African Historical Journal. Volume 68, 2016 - Issue 4, pp. 641-669.

Hepple, A. (1966) South Africa: A Political and Economic History. London: Pall Mall.

Hepple, A. (1967) Verwoerd. Harmondsworth: Penguin Books.

- Hepple, A. (1969) "South Africa's Bureau for State Security." The World Today, Vol. 25, No. 10 (Oct., 1969), pp. 436-439.
- Hepple, A. (1971) South Africa: Workers under Apartheid. London: An International Defence and Aid Fund Pamphlet.
- Hepple, A. (1974) Press under Apartheid. London: International Defence and Aid Fund.
- Hepple, A., Ainslie, R. (1965) "South Africa's Labour Problems." The World Today. Vol. 21, No.2 (Feb., 1965), pp. 65-72.
- Hepple, B. (2011) Alex Hepple: South African Socialist. South African History Online Lives of Courage Series. Cape Town: South African History Online.
- Herbstein, D., Evenson, J. (1989) The Devils are Among US: The War for Namibia. London: Zed Books Ltd.
- Herbstein, D. (2004) White Lies: Canon Collins and the Secret War against Apartheid. Oxford: James Curry.
- Higgins, R. (1964) "International Action and Domestic Jurisdiction." In Segal, R. (ed.) (1964) Sanctions Against South Africa. Harmondsworth: Penguin Books, pp. 85-94.
- Higgins, R. (1970) "The United Nations and Lawmaking: The Political Organs." The American Journal of International Law, Vol. 64, No. 4, The United Nations: Appraisal at 25 Years (September 1970), pp. 37-48.
- Higginson, J. (2014) Collective Violence and the Agrarian Origins of South African Apartheid, 1900-1948. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Hirson, B. (1990) Yours for the Union. London and New Jersey: Zed Books Limited.
- Hirson, B. (2005) History of the Left in South Africa: Writings of Baruch Hirson. London: I.B.Tauris.
- Hodges, A. (2014) Alan Turing: The Enigma: The Book That Inspired the Film The Imitation Game. London: Vintage Books.
- Holmes, C. (1964) A Time to Choose. London: The Student Christian Movement.
- Holness, M. (1983) Apartheid's War Against Angola. New York: United Nations Centre Against Apartheid.
- Honey, A. (2000) "South Africa and the Olympic Movement." Bridging Three Centuries: Fifth Olympic Symposium for Olympic Research, pp. 177-184.
- Hopkins, K. (2001) "Assessing the World's Response to Apartheid: A Historical Account of International Law and its Part in the South African Transformation." 10 University of Miami International and Comparative Law Review. 241. (2001).

Horrell, M. (1962) A Survey of Race Relations in South Africa 1961. Johannesburg: South African Institute of Race Relations.

Horrell, M. (1964) A Decade of Bantu Education. Johannesburg: South African Institute for Racial Relations.

Horrell, M. (1964) A Survey of Race Relations in South Africa 1963. Johannesburg: South African Institute of Race Relations.

Horrell, M. (1966) A Survey of Race Relations in South Africa 1965. Johannesburg: South African Institute of Race Relations.

Horrell, M. (1972) A Survey of Race Relations in South Africa 1971. Johannesburg: South African Institute of Race Relations.

Horrell, M. (1978) Laws Affecting Race Relations in South Africa 1948-1976 (to the End of 1976). Johannesburg: South African Institute of Race Relations.

House of Assembly [South Africa]. (1961) Debates. January 23-27, 1961, col. 98.

House of Assembly [South Africa]. (1971) Debates. 21 April 1971.

Houser, G. M. (1966) "What Can the US Do about Apartheid." Africa Today, Vol. 13, No. 3, (March 1966), pp. 4-6, 16.

Houston, G., Magubane, B. (2007) "The ANC Political Underground in the 1970s." In South African Democracy Education Trust (2007) The Road to Democracy in South Africa: 1970-1980, Vol 2. Pretoria: UNISA Press, pp. 371-451.

Huddleston, T. (1987, first published in 1956) Naught for your Comfort. London: William Collins Sons & Co. Ltd.

Huddleston, T. (1957) Four Words on South Africa. London: Christian Action.

Hughes, J. (1961) The New Face of Africa: South of the Sahara. New York: Longmans, Green and Co.

Human & Rousseau. (1999) They Shaped our Century: The Most Influential South Africans of the Twentieth Century. Cape Town: Human & Rousseau.

Hunt, E., Kimonis, E.R. (2015) "Third-Party Information." In Cautin, R.L., Lilienfeld, S.O. (eds.) (2015) The Encyclopaedia of Clinical Psychology. John Wiley & Sons.

Huntington, M.K. (1958) "The Indian Minority Problem in the Union of South Africa." World Affairs, Vol. 121, No. 2 (Summer 1958), pp. 43-46.

Hutton, B. (1994) Robben Island: Symbol of Resistance. Johannesburg: Mayibuye Books.

Hyslop, J. (1989) "School Boards, School Committees and Educational Politics: Aspects of the Failures of Bantu Education as a Hegemonic Strategy, 1955-1976." In Bonner, P.,

Hofmeyr, I., James, D., Lodge, T. (eds.) (1989) Holding Their Ground: Class, Locality and Culture in 19th and 20th Century South Africa. Johannesburg: Witwatersrand University Press, pp. 201-27.

Hyslop, J. (1993) “‘A Destruction is Coming In.’ Bantu Education as Response to Social Crisis.” In Bonner, P., Delius, P., Posel, D. (eds.) (1993) Apartheid's Genesis: 1935-62. Braamfontein: Raven Press and Johannesburg: Witwatersrand University Press, pp. 393-410.

Hyslop, J. (1995) “White Working-class Women and the Invention of Apartheid: ‘Purified’ Afrikaner Nationalist Agitation for Legislation Against ‘Mixed’ Marriages, 1934–9.” The Journal of African History. Volume 36, Issue 1, March 1995, pp. 57-81.

Hyslop, J. (1999) The Classroom Struggle: Policy and Resistance in South Africa 1940-1990. Pietermaritzburg: University of Natal Press.

International Defence and Aid Fund (n.d.) Information Service Manual. London: International Defence and Aid Fund.

International Defence and Aid Fund (1967) South African Prisons and the Red Cross Investigation. London: International Defence and Aid Fund.

International Defence and Aid Fund (1969) South Africa: The BOSS Law. London: International Defence and Aid Fund.

International Defence and Aid Fund (1969) ‘Resettlement’ – The New Violence to Africans. London: International Defence and Aid Fund.

International Defence and Aid Fund (1970) Trial by Torture: The Case of the 22. London: International Defence and Aid Fund.

International Defence and Aid Fund (1975) BOSS: The First Five Years. London: International Defence and Aid Fund.

International Defence and Aid Fund (1975) South Africa: Apartheid Quiz. London: International Defence and Aid Fund.

International Defence and Aid Fund (1983) Apartheid: The Facts. London: International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa.

International Defence and Aid Fund (1988) Apartheid's Violence Against Children. London: International Defence and Aid Fund.

International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa, in Co-operation with the United Nations Centre Against Apartheid. (1981) Women Under Apartheid. London: International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa.

Inwood, G.J., Johns, C.M. (2014) “Why Study Commissions of Inquiry?” In Inwood, G.J., Johns, C.M. (eds.) (2014) Commissions of Inquiry and Policy Change: A Comparative Analysis. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, pp. 3-19.

Inwood, G.J., Johns, C.M. (2014) "Commissions of Inquiry and Policy Change: A Comparative Analysis." In Inwood, G.J., Johns, C.M. (eds.) (2014) Commissions of Inquiry and Policy Change: A Comparative Analysis. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, pp. 261-302.

Italiaander, R. (1961) The New Leaders of Africa. Englewood Cliffs: Prentice Hall.

Jabavu, N. (1960) Drawn in Colour: African Contrasts. London: John Murray.

Jabavu, N. (1982, orig. 1963) The Ochre People. Cape Town: Galvin and Sales.

Jackson, J.D. (1980) Justice in South Africa. Harmondsworth: Penguin Books.

Jallow, B. G. (2014) "The Case for African Leadership Studies and Leadership in Colonial Africa: An Introduction". In Jallow, B. G. (ed.) (2014) Leadership in Colonial Africa. Disruption of Traditional Frameworks and Patterns. New York: Palgrave Macmillan, pp. 1-21.

Jansen, E.G. (1951) Native Policy of the Union of South Africa: Statements Made by Dr. the Honourable E.G. Jansen, Minister of Native Affairs. Pretoria: State Information Office of the Union of South Africa.

Jaspan, M.A. (1961) "South Africa 1960-61: The Transition from Passive Resistance to Rebellion." Science and Society, Vol. 25. No. 2 (Spring 1961), pp. 97-106.

Jaster, R. (1985) "A Regional Security Role for Africa's Frontline States." In Jaster, R. (ed.) (1985) Southern Africa: Regional Security Problems and Prospects. Aldershot: Gower, pp. 37-88.

Jaster, R.S., Jaster, S.K. (1992) South Africa's Other Whites. London: Palgrave Macmillan.

Jeeves, A. H. (1971) "The Problem of South Africa." International Journal. Vol 26, No. 2, June 1, 1971, pp. 418-432.

Joffe, J. (2009) The State vs. Nelson Mandela: The Trial that Changed South Africa. London: Oneworld.

Johns, S., Hunt Davis, Jr., R. (1991) Mandela, Tambo, and the African National Congress: The Struggle against Apartheid, 1948-1990: A Documentary Survey. Oxford: Oxford University Press.

Johns, C.M., Inwood, G.J. (2014) "Theories of Policy Change and a Four-Part Theoretical Framework for Comparative Analysis." In Inwood, G.J., Johns, C.M. (eds.) (2014) Commissions of Inquiry and Policy Change: A Comparative Analysis. Toronto: University of Toronto Press. pp. 20-48.

Jones, T. F. (2012) Psychiatry, Mental Institutions, and the Mad in Apartheid South Africa. New York: Routledge.

Joseph, H. (1968) Tomorrow's Sun: A Smuggled Journal from South Africa. London: Hutchinson.

Joseph, H. (1998, first published in 1963) If this be Treason: Helen Joseph's Dramatic Account of the Treason Trial, the Longest in South Africa's History and one of the Strangest Trials of the 20th Century. Johannesburg: Contra Press.

Kahn, E. (1966) "Constitutional and Administrative Law." Annual Survey of South African Law, pp. 1-38.

Kahn, Jr., E. J. (1968) The Separated People: A Look at Contemporary South Africa. New York: W.W. Norton & Company, Inc.

Kahn, E. (1982) "Notes and Comments: Retirement of Chief Justice, Mr. Justice F. L. H. Rumpff." 99 South African Law Journal, pp. 438-448.

Kahn, E. (1995) "In Memoriam: Israel Aaron Maisels QC". 112 South African Law Journal, 132, 1995, pp. 132-133.

Kalley, J. (2000) Apartheid in South African Libraries. The Transvaal Experience. Lanham: The Scarecrow Press, Inc.

Kane-Berman, J. (1978) Soweto: Black Revolt, White Reaction. Johannesburg: Ravan Press.

Kane-Berman, J. (1991) South Africa's Silent Revolution. Johannesburg: South African Institute of Race Relations and Southern Books Publishers.

Kaplan, H. (2014) "Apartheid on Trial: Mandela's Rivonia Speech from the Dock, Half a Century Later." Social Education. Vol 78, No. 2, (Mar-Apr 2014), pp. 63-67.

Kaplan, R. (2001) "The Aversion Project – Psychiatric Abuses in the South African Defence Force during the Apartheid Era." South African Medical Journal, March 2001, Vol. 91, No. 3, pp. 216-217.

Kaplan, R.M. (2019) "The Man Who Killed Apartheid: The Life of Dimitri Tsafendas." South African Historical Journal, 71: 3, pp. 521-525.

Kaplan, R.M. (2019) Dark Tales of Illness, Medicine, and Madness: The King Who Strangled His Psychiatrist. Newcastle upon-Tyne: Cambridge Scholars Publishing.

Karis, T. G. (1961) "The South African Treason Trial." Political Science Quarterly, Vol. 76, No. 2 (Jun., 1961), pp. 217-240.

Karis, T., Carter, G.M. (eds.) (1977) From Protest to Challenge: A Documentary History of African Politics in South Africa, 1882-1964. 4 vols. Stanford, California: Hoover Institution Press.

Kasrils, R. (1993) Armed and Dangerous: My Undercover Struggle Against Apartheid. Oxford: Heinemann.

- Kasrils, R. (2012) The Unlikely Secret Agent. New York: Monthly Review Press.
- Kathrada, A. (2001) "Indian South Africans – A Future Bound with the Cause of the African Majority". In Maharaj, M. (ed.) (2001) Reflections in Prison. Voices from the South African Liberation Struggle. Cape Town: Zebra Press.
- Kathrada, A. (2004) Memoirs. Cape Town: Zebra Press.
- Kawasaki, S. (2001) "The Policy of Apartheid and the Japanese in the Republic of South Africa." 東京家政学院筑波女子大学紀要第5集 53～79ページ, Retrieved from: <http://www.tsukuba-g.ac.jp/library/kiyou/2001/4.KAWASAKI.pdf>
- Keable, K. (ed.) (2012) London Recruits: The Secret War against Apartheid. London: Merlin Press.
- Keet, B.B. (1956) Whither South Africa? Cape Town: University Publishers and Booksellers.
- Kenney, H. (1980) Architect of Apartheid: HF Verwoerd – An Appraisal. Johannesburg: Jonathan Ball Publishers.
- Keppel-Jones, A. (1963) South Africa: A Short History. London: Hutchinson University Library.
- Khopung, E. (1972) Apartheid: The Story of A Dispossessed People. Dar es Salaam: Sharpeville Day Association Mbizana.
- Kiloh, M., Sibeko, A. (2000) A Fighting Union: An Oral History of the South African Railway and Harbour Workers' Union. Randburg: Ravan Press.
- Klotz, A. (1995) Norms in International Relations: The Struggle Against Apartheid. Ithaca and London: Cornell University Press.
- Klug, H. (2000) "Review: Law Before and After Apartheid: Abel's Sociolegal Analysis." Law and Social Inquiry. Volume 25, Issue 2 (Spring 2000), pp. 657–667.
- Klug, H. (2010) The Constitution of South Africa: A Contextual Analysis. Oxford: Hart Publishing.
- Klug, H. (2010) Constituting Democracy: Law, Globalism and South Africa's Political Reconstruction. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Kondlo, K. (2009) In the Twilight of the Revolution. The Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (South Africa) 1959-1994. Basel: Basler Afrika Bibliographien.
- Koorts, L. (2014) D.F. Malan and the Rise of Afrikaner Nationalism. Cape Town: Tafelberg.
- Kostal, R. (2005) A Jurisprudence of Power: Victorian Empire and the Rule of Law. Oxford: Oxford University Press.

Kros, C. (2002) "W.W. M. Eiselen, Architect of Apartheid Education." In Kallaway, P. (ed.) (2002) The History of Education under Apartheid 1948-1994: The Doors of Learning and Culture Shall be Opened. New York: Peter Lang Publishing Inc. Pp. 53-73.

Kruger, D. W. (1969) The Making of a Nation: A History of the Union of South Africa. Johannesburg and London: MacMillan.

Kuper, L. (1957) Passive Resistance in South Africa. New Haven: Yale University Press.

Kykkotis, S. (2013) Αναφορές στο Νομπελίστα Νέλσον Μαντέλα. Athens: Παπασωτηρίου.

La Guma, A. (1971) Apartheid: A Collection of Writings on South African Racism by South Africans. New York: International Publishers.

Laidlaw, E.F. (1994) A History of the Isle of Wight Hospitals. Newport: Cross Publishing.

Lambert, R. V. (1993) "Trade Unionism, Class, Race and Nationalism in the 1950s Resistance Movement." In Bonner, P., Delius, P., Posel, D. (eds.) (1993) Apartheid's Genesis: 1935-62. Braamfontein: Raven Press and Johannesburg: Witwatersrand University Press, pp. 275-295.

Lambley, P. (1980) The Psychology of Apartheid. Athens: The University of Georgia Press.

Landis, E. S. (1957) "Apartheid Legislation." Africa Today, Vol. 4, No. 6 (Nov-Dec 1957), pp. 45-48.

Landis, E. (1961) "The New Order in South Africa." Africa Today, Vol. 8, No. 8, (October 1961), pp. 4-6.

Landis, E. S. (1961) "South African Apartheid Legislation I: Fundamental Structure." The Yale Law Journal. Vol. 71, No. 1. (November 1961), pp. 1-52.

Landis, E. S. (1962) "South African Apartheid Legislation II: Extension, Enforcement, and Perpetuation." The Yale Law Journal. Vol. 71. No. 3, (January 1962), pp. 437-500.

Langer, E. (1967) "Science in South Africa: The Effects of Apartheid." Science. New Series. Vol. 155, No 3768 (Mar. 17, 1967), pp. 1387-1389.

Lapchick, R. E. (1979) "South Africa: Sport and Apartheid Politics." Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, Vol. 445, Issue 1, (September 1, 1979), 155-165.

Lapierre, D. (2009) A Rainbow in the Night: The Tumultuous Birth of South Africa. Da Capo Press.

Lapping, B. (1986) Apartheid: A History. London: Grafton Books.

Laros, T. (2015) "Literary Autonomy on Trial: The 1974 Cape Town Trial of Andre Brink's Kennis van die Aand". In Allo, A. (ed.), The Courtroom As A Space of Resistance: Reflections on the Legacy of the Rivonia Trial. Farnham: Ashgate Pub Co., pp. 283-304.

Lave, T.R. (1994) "A Nation at Prayer, a Nation in Hate: Apartheid in South Africa." Stanford Journal of International Law, Vol. 30 (Summer 1994), pp. 484-524.

Lawrie, G.G. (1964) "South Africa's World Position." The Journal of Modern African Studies, Volume 2, Issue 01 (March 1964), pp. 41-54.

Lawyers Committee for Human Rights (1986) The War Against Children: South Africa's Youngest Victims. New York: Lawyers Committee for Human Rights.

Lazar, J. (1993) "Verwoerd versus the Visionaries. The South African Bureau of Racial Affairs." In Bonner, P., Delius, P., Posel, D. (eds.) (1993) Apartheid's Genesis: 1935-62. Braamfontein: Raven Press and Johannesburg: Witwatersrand University Press, pp. 362-393.

Le May, G.H.L. (1995) The Afrikaners: An Historical Interpretation. Oxford: Blackwell Publishers Ltd.

Legassick, M., and Saunders, C. (2004) "Above Ground Activities in the 1960s." In South African Democracy Education Trust (2004) The Road to Democracy in South Africa, Volume 1 (1960-1970). Cape Town: Zebra Press, pp. 661-684.

Legum, C. (1960) "Crisis in South Africa." World Today, Vol. 16, No. 6, (June 1, 1960), pp. 233-242.

Legum, C. (1963) "The Doomed Republic." Africa Today, Vol. 10, No. 9 (Nov., 1963), pp. 4-7.

Legum, C., Legum, M. (1964) "Power in South Africa." In Segal, R. (ed.) (1964) Sanctions Against South Africa. London: Penguin Books, pp. 31-41.

Legum, C., Legum, M. (1964) South Africa: Crisis for the West. London and Dunmow: Pall Mall Press.

Legum, C., Legum, M. (1968) The Bitter Choice: Eight South Africans' Resistance to Tyranny. Cleveland: World Publishing Company.

Leiss, A. C. (1965) Apartheid and United Nations Collective Measures: An Analysis. New York: The Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

Lentz, H. M. (1996) Heads of States and Governments since 1945. London: Routledge.

Leonard, R. (1983) South Africa at War: White Power and the Crisis in Southern Africa. Westport: Lawrence Hill and Company.

Levy, B., Hirsch, A., Woolard, I. (2014) South Africa's Evolving Political Settlement in Comparative Perspective. Cape Town: Southern Africa Labour and Development Research Unit. Working Paper Series. Number 138.

Levy, M. (2019) "The Man who Tried to Kill Apartheid, Harris Dousemetzis." New Agenda: South African Journal of Social and Economic Policy, Volume 2019, Number 73, Jul 2019, pp. 47-48.

Lewin, H. (1976) Bandiet: Seven Years in a South African Prison. Harmondsworth: Penguin Books Ltd.

Lewis, J. (1984) Industrialisation and Trade Union Organisation in South Africa, 1924-55. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

Lipton, M. (1985) Capitalism and Apartheid: South Africa, 1910-1984. Aldershot: Gower/Maurice Temple Smith.

Lipton, M. (1987) "Reform: Destruction or Modernization of Apartheid?" In Blumenfeld, J. (ed.) (1987) South Africa in Crisis. London and New York: Croom Helm for the Royal Institute of International Affairs.

Lichtenstein, A. (2005) "Making Apartheid Work: African Trade Unions and the 1953 Native Labour (Settlement of Disputes) Act In South Africa." The Journal of African History. Vol. 46, No. 2, pp. 293–314.

Litvak, L., DeGrasse, R., McTigue, K. (1978) South Africa: Foreign Investment and Apartheid. Amsterdam: Institute for Policy Studies.

Lodge, T. (1983) Black Politics in South Africa since 1945. London and New York: Longman.

Lodge, T. (2001) "Sharpeville and Memory." Conference Paper Presented at Violence, Memory and Commemoration: Perspectives from Southern, East and Central Africa. Birbeck College, 9 December 2001.

Lodge, T. (2011) Sharpeville: An Apartheid Massacre and its Consequences. Oxford: Oxford University Press.

Lodge, T. (2012) "Reflections on Black Politics in South Africa since 1945." South African Historical Journal. Vol. 64. No. 3, September 2012, pp. 494-506.

Longford, C. (1985) South Africa: Black Blood on British Hands. London: Junius.

Loubser, J.A. (1987) The Apartheid Bible: A Critical Review of Racial Theology in South Africa. Cape Town: Maskew Miller Longman.

Louw, P. E. (2004) The Rise, Fall, and Legacy of Apartheid. London: Praeger.

Loring, M., and Powell, B. (1988) "Gender, Race, and DSM-III: A Study of the Objectivity of Psychiatric Diagnostic Behavior", Journal of Health and Social Behavior, Vol. 29, No. 1 (Mar., 1988), p. 1-18.

Loveland, I. (1999) By Due Process of Law? Racial Discrimination and the Right to Vote in South Africa 1855-1960. Oxford: Hart Publishing.

Low, V.N. (1958) "Education for the Bantu: A South African Dilemma". Comparative Education Review, Vol. 2, No. 2. (Oct., 1958), pp. 21-27.

Luthuli, A. (1962) Let My People Go. London: Collins.

Luyt, C. (1989) "The Killing Fields: South Africa's Human Rights Record in Southern Africa." Social Justice: A Journal of Crime, Conflict and World Order; Vol. 16, No. 2 (36), Varieties of State and Corporate Crime (Summer 1989), pp. 89-115.

Maaba, B. B. (2004) "The PAC's War against the State." In South African Democracy Education Trust (2004) The Road to Democracy in South Africa, Volume 1 (1960-1970). Cape Town: Zebra Press, pp. 257-299.

Macdonald, J.M. (1958) Psychiatry and the Criminal: A Guide to Psychiatric Examinations for the Criminal Courts. Springfield, Ill.: Charles C Thomas.

MacMillan, W.M. (1950) "South Africa Revisited." African Affairs, Vol. 49, No. 197, (October 1950), pp. 319-324.

Mager, A., Minkley, G. (1993) "Reaping the Whirlwind: The East London Riots of 1952." In Bonner, P., Delius, P., Posel, D. (eds.) (1993) Apartheid's Genesis: 1935-62. Braamfontein: Raven Press and Johannesburg: Witwatersrand University Press, pp. 229-251.

Magubane, B. (1996) The Making of a Racist State: British Imperialism and the Union of South Africa, 1875-1910. Trenton and Asmara: Africa World Press.

Magubane, B. (2000) "Race and Democratization in South Africa." Macalester International, Vol. 9, Article 8, (Fall 31-12-2000), pp. 33-82.

Magubane, B. (2007) "Introduction to the 1970s: The Social and Political Context." In South African Democracy Education Trust (2007) The Road to Democracy in South Africa: 1970-1980, Vol 2. Pretoria: UNISA Press, pp. 1-36.

Maharaj, M., Kathrada, A. (eds.) (2006) Mandela: The Authorised Portrait. Kansas City: Andrew McMeel Publishing.

Maisels, I. (1998) A Life at Law: The Memoirs of I.A. Maisels, QC. Johannesburg: Jonathan Bell Publishers

Malhotra, R. C. (1964) "Apartheid and the United Nations." The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, Vol. 354, Issue 1, (July 1, 1964), pp. 135-144.

Mamdani, M. (1996) Citizen and Subject Contemporary Africa and the Legacy of Late Colonialism. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press.

Mandela, N. (1978) The Struggle is My Life. London: International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa.

Mandela, N. (1984) I Am Prepared to Die. London: International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa.

Mandela, N. (1991) No Easy Walk to Freedom. Johannesburg: Heinemann Publishers.

- Mandela, N. (2001) "Clear the Obstacles and Confront the Enemy: Wither the Black Consciousness Movement? An Assessment." In Maharaj, M. (ed.) (2001) Reflections in Prison. Voices from the South African Liberation Struggle. Cape Town: Zebra Press.
- Mandela, N. (2013) (orig. 1994) Long Walk to Freedom. London: Abacus.
- Mantzaris, E. (1984) "The Greek Miners in the Transvaal South Africa: A Socio-Historical Investigation, 1902-1913." Journal of the Hellenic Diaspora, Vol. 11. No. 1. pp. 25-37.
- Manzo, K.A. (1996) Creating Boundaries: The Politics of Race and Nation. London and Boulder: Lynne Rienner.
- Marais, H. (2001) South Africa: Limits to Change: The Political Economy of Transition. Cape Town: University of Cape Town Press.
- Marais, H. (2011) South Africa Pushed to the Limit: The Political Economy of Change. London: Zed Books.
- Marais, J. (1992) Die Era van Verwoerd. Pretoria: Aktuele Publikasies.
- Marais, J. A. (1994) The Founders of the New South Africa. Pretoria: s.n.
- Marback, R. C. (2012) Managing Vulnerability: South Africa's Struggle for a Democratic Rhetoric. Columbia: University of South Carolina Press.
- Margo, C. (1998) Final Postponement: Reminiscences of a Crowded Life. Johannesburg: Jonathan Ball Publishers.
- Marks, S. (1983) "Ruth First: A Tribute." Journal of Southern African Studies, Vol. 10, No. 1, Special Issue on Women in Southern Africa (Oct., 1983), pp. 123-128.
- Marks, S., Trapido, S. (1987) "The Politics of Race, Class and Nationalism". In Marks, S., Trapido, S. (eds.) (1987) The Politics of Race, Class and Nationalism in Twentieth Century South Africa. London and New York: Longman, pp. 1-70.
- Marquard, L. (1968) A Short History of South Africa. New York: Praeger Publishers.
- Marquard, L. (1969) The People and Policies of South Africa. London: Oxford University Press.
- Martin, B. (2007) Justice Ignited: The Dynamics of Backfire. Lanham: Rowman and Littlefield.
- Marx, A. W. (1992) Lessons of Struggle: South African Internal Opposition, 1960-1990. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Marx, C. (1994) "The Ossewabrandwag as a Mass Movement, 1939-1941." Journal of Southern African Studies, Vol. 20, No. 2 (Jun., 1994), pp. 195-219.

Marx, C. (2010) "From Trusteeship to Self-Determination: L.J. du Plessis' Thinking of Apartheid and his Conflict with H.F. Verwoerd." Historia 55, 2, November 2010, pp. 50-75.

Marx, C. (2011) "Hendrik Verwoerd's Long March to Apartheid: Nationalism and Racism in South Africa." In: Berg, M. and Wendt, S. (eds.) (2011) Racism in the Modern World: Historical Perspectives on Cultural Transfer and Adaptation. New York: Berghahn Books, pp. 281 – 302.

Marx, C. (2011) Oxwagon Sentinel: Radical Afrikaner Nationalism and the History of the Ossewabrandwag. Berlin: Lit Verlag.

Marx, C. (2013) "Hendrik Verwoerd and the Leipzig School of Psychology in 1926." Historia 58, 2, November 2013, pp. 91-118.

Mathabatha, S. (2004) "The PAC and POQO in Pretoria, 1958-1964." In South African Democracy Education Trust. (2004) The Road to Democracy in South Africa, Volume 1 (1960-1970). Cape Town: Zebra Press, pp. 299-318.

Matoti, S., Ntsebeza, L. (2004) "Rural Resistance in Mpondoland and Thembuland, 1960-1963". In South African Democracy Education Trust. (2004) The Road to Democracy in South Africa, Volume 1 (1960-1970). Cape Town: Zebra Press, pp. 177-208.

Matsinhe, D. M. (2013) Apartheid Vertigo: The Rise in Discrimination against Africans in South Africa. Farnham: Ashgate Publishing Ltd.

Matthews, A. S. (1972) Law, Order and Liberty in South Africa. Berkeley: University of California Press.

Matthews, A. S. (1986) Freedom, State Security and the Rule of Law: Dilemmas of the Apartheid Society. Cape Town: Juta & Co, Ltd.

May, H. J. (1955) The South African Constitution. Cape Town and Johannesburg: Juta and Co.

Mbeki, G. (1964) South Africa: The Peasants' Revolt. London: Penguin Books.

Mbeki, G. (1991) Learning from Robben Island. The Prison Writings of Govan Mbeki. London: James Currey.

Mbeki, G. (2001) "The Anatomy of the Problems of the National Liberation Struggle in South Africa." In Maharaj, M. (ed.) (2001) Reflections in Prison. Voices from the South African Liberation Struggle. Cape Town: Zebra Press.

McDowall Clokie, H., Robinson, J.W. (1969) Royal Commissions of Inquiry: The Significance of Investigations in British Politics. New York: Octagon Books.

McKay, V. (1966) "South African Propaganda". SAIS Review; Washington, D.C. Vol. 10, Iss. 3, (Spring 1966), pp. 4-17.

McKay, V. (1966) "South African Propaganda: Methods and Media". Africa Report, Vol. 11, Iss. 2, (Feb 1, 1966), pp. 41-46.

Mda, T. (2000) "Language in Education." In Mda, T., and Mothata, S. (eds.) (2000) Critical Issues in South African Education after 1994. Kenwyn: Juta and Company Limited, pp. 155-172.

Meierhenrich, J. (2010) The Legacies of Law: Long-Run Consequences of Legal Development in South Africa, 1652-2000. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

Meiring, P. (1999) Chronicle of the Truth Commission: A Journey through the Past and Present into the Future of South Africa. Vanderbijlpark: Carpe Diem Books.

Meli, F. (1988) A History of the ANC: South Africa Belongs to Us. Harare: Zimbabwe Publishing House.

Meredith, M. (1988) In the Name of Apartheid: South Africa in the Post-war Period. London: Hamish Hamilton.

Meredith, M. (2007) Diamonds, Gold and War: The Making of South Africa. London: Simon and Schuster.

Merret, C. (1990) "Detention Without Trial in South Africa: The Abuse of Human Rights as State Strategy in the Late 1980s". Africa Today, Vol 37, No. 2, Dismantling Apartheid: Problems and Possibilities (2nd Qtr., 1990), pp. 53-66.

Michelis, M. (1988) "Δημήτρης Τσαφέντας: Έκανα το Καθήκον Μου ... Εσείς;" ("Dimitris Tsafendas: I did my Duty ... You?") Σχολιαστής (Scholiastis), 70, 24 June 1988.

Miller, J. (2014) "Voortrekker or State Builder? John Vorster and the Challenges of Leadership in the Apartheid State." In Jallow, B. G. (ed.) (2014) Leadership in Colonial Africa: Disruption of Traditional Frameworks and Patterns. New York: Palgrave MacMillan, pp. 115-138.

Miller, J. (2016) An African Volk: The Apartheid Regime and Its Search for Survival. New York: Oxford University Press.

Miller, R. B. (1993) "Science and Society in the Early Career of H.F. Verwoerd." Journal of Southern African Studies, Vol. 19, No. 4, December 1993, pp. 634-661.

Minde, M (1977) "History of Mental Health Services in South Africa. Part XIV. Psychiatric Education." South African Medical Journal, Vol. 51, Issue 7, Feb., 1977, pp. 210-214.

Minter, W., Hill, S. (2008) "Anti-apartheid Solidarity in United States-South Africa Relations: From the Margins to the Mainstream." In South African Democracy Education Trust (2008) The Road to Democracy in South Africa, Volume 3, International Solidarity. Pretoria: UNISA Press, pp. 745-822.

Mkhondo, R. (1933) Reporting South Africa. James Currey: London.

Mnguni, M.H. (1998) Education as a Social Institution and Ideological Process. New York: Waxmann.

Mokgatle, N. (1971) The Autobiography of an Unknown South African. London: Hurst and Company.

Moltana, N. (1978) "Politics and Education". In University of the Witwatersrand: Senate Special Lectures (1978) South Africa's Crisis in Education. Johannesburg: University of the Witwatersrand.

Mothata, S. (2000) "The Provision of Education to Minorities". In Mda, T., and Mothata, S. (eds.) (2000) Critical Issues in South African Education after 1994. Kenwyn: Juta and Company Limited, pp. 131-154.

Moodie, T. D. (1975) The Rise of Afrikanerdom. Berkley: University of California Press.

Moodie, T.D. (2017) "Separate Development as a Failed Project of Social Engineering: The Flawed Logic of Hendrik Verwoerd." South African Historical Journal, Vol. 69, Issue 2, pp. 153-161.

Morrell, R., Moletsane, R. (2002) "Inequality and Fear: Learning and Working Inside Bantu Education Schools." In Kallaway, P. (ed.) (2002) The History of Education Under Apartheid 1948-1994: The Doors of Learning and Culture Shall be Opened. New York: Peter Lang Publishing Inc., pp. 224-43.

Morris, J. (1958) South African Winter. London: Faber and Faber.

Morris, M. (1977) "State Intervention and the Agricultural Labour Supply, Post 1948." In Wilson, F., Kooy, A., Hendrie, D. (eds.) (1977) Farm Labour in South Africa. Cape Town: David Phillip Publishers, pp. 62-72.

Morris, M. (2004) Every Step of the Way. The Journey to Freedom in South Africa. Cape Town: HSRC Press.

Motala, S. (1987) Behind Closed Doors. Braamfontein: South African Institute of Race Relations.

Mouton, F.A. (2014) "No Prime Minister Could Want a Better Leader of the Opposition: Sir de Villiers Graaff, the United Party and the Apartheid State, 1956-1977." African Historical Review. Vol 46, 2014, Issue 1, pp. 48-69.

Mufson, S. (1990) Fighting Years. Black Resistance and the Struggle for a New South Africa. Boston: Beacon Press.

Muller, C.F.J. (ed.) (1981) Five Hundred Years: A History of South Africa. Pretoria: Academia.

Müller, L. (2011) "Tangible and Intangible Ngquza Hill: A Study of Landscape and Memory." In Kepe, T., Ntsebeza, L. (eds.) (2011) Rural Resistance in South Africa. The Mpondo Revolts After Fifty Years. Leiden: Brill, pp. 209-230.

- Mungazi, D.A. (2006) The Tragedy of Apartheid in South Africa: Hendrik F. Verwoerd and Dimitri Tsafendas Meet at the Crossroads. Keyrney: Morris Publishing.
- Munger, E. S. (1965) Notes on the Formation of South Africa Foreign Policy. Pasadena: Grant Dahlstrom.
- Murder in Mind. (1997) The Japanese Cannibal. London: A Marshall Cavendish Reference Collection.
- Murray, M. (1987) South Africa: Time of Agony, Time of Destiny. London: Verso.
- Mzimela, S. E. (1980) Nazism and Apartheid: The Role of Christian Churches in Nazi Germany and Apartheid South Africa. PhD thesis. New York University.
- Myers, D. (1959) "World News Makers." World Affairs. Vol. 122, No. 1 (Spring 1959), p. 23.
- Naidoo, R. (2008) The Indian in DRUM Magazine in the 1950s. Woodstock, Cape Town: Bell-Roberts Publishing.
- Nattrass, G. (2017) A Short History of South Africa. London: Biteback Publishing Ltd.
- Naudé, C.F.B. (1964) My Decision. Christian Institute of Southern Africa.
- Neame, L.E. (1962) The History of Apartheid: The Story of the Colour War in South Africa. London: Pall Mall Press with Barrie and Rockcliff.
- Nelson Mandela Organization (n.d) Criminal Procedure Amendment Act No 96. Retrieved from:
<https://www.nelsonmandela.org/omalley/index.php/site/q/031v01538/041v01828/051v01829/061v01920.htm>.
- Newitt, M. (1995) A History of Mozambique. London: Hurst & Company.
- Newitt, M. (ed.) (2010) The Portuguese in West Africa, 1415–1670: A Documentary History. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Ngcokavane, C. (1989) Demons of Apartheid: A Moral and Ethical Analysis of the NGK, NP and Broederbond's Justification of Apartheid. Braamfontein: Skotaville Publishers.
- Nichols, J., McCarthy III, J.W. (2013) "Civil Law and Civil Disobedience: The Early Church and The Law". In Cochran, R. F., VanDrunen, D., Law and the Bible: Justice, Mercy and Legal Institutions. Downers Grove, Illinois: IVP Academic, pp. 183-207
- Nicholas, L.J. (1990) "The Response of South African Professional Psychology Associations to Apartheid." In Nicholas, L.J., Cooper, S. (eds.) (1990) Psychology and Apartheid. Johannesburg: A Vision/Madiba Publication, pp. 50-59.

Nicholas, L.J. (2014) "Psychological Sequelae of Political Imprisonment during Apartheid." South African Journal of Psychology, Vol. 44, Issue 1, pp. 18-29.

Nieftagodien, N. (2014) The Soweto Uprising. Johannesburg: Jacana Media.

Nightingale, E.O., Hannibal, K., Geiger, J., Hartmann, L., Lawrence, R., Spurlock, J. (1990) "Apartheid Medicine: Health and Human Rights in South Africa." JAMA, October 24/31, 1990-Vol 264, No. 16, pp. 2097-2102.

Nixon, R. (1994) Homelands, Harlem and Hollywood: South African Culture and the World Beyond. New York: Routledge.

Nixon, R. (1999) "Apollo 11, Apartheid and TV." The Atlantic. July 1999 Issue. Retrieved from: <http://www.theatlantic.com/magazine/archive/1999/07/apollo-11-apartheid-and-tv/377681/>

Nkabinde, Z. P. (1997) An Analysis of Educational Challenges in the New South Africa. Lanham, MD.: University Press of America.

Nkomo, M. (1990) Pedagogy of Domination: Toward A Democratic Education in South Africa. Trenton, N.J.: Africa World Press.

Norval, A.J. (1996) Deconstructing Apartheid Discourse. London and New York: Verso.

Nqakula, C. (2018) The People's War: Reflections of an ANC Cadre. Johannesburg: Mutloatse Arts Heritage Trust.

Ntantala, P. (1993) A Life's Mosaic: The Autobiography of Phyllis Ntantala. Berkeley: University of California Press.

Ntsebeza, L. (2011) "Resistance in the Countryside: The Mpondo Revolts Contextualized". In Kepe, T., and Ntsebeza, L. (eds.) (2011) Rural Resistance in South Africa. The Mpondo Revolts After Fifty Years. Leiden: Brill, pp. 21-42.

Odendaal, A. (1989) "Resistance, Reform, and Repression in South Africa in the 1980s." In Hill, I. T., Harris, A. (eds.) (1989) Beyond the Barricades. Popular Resistance in South Africa in the 1980s. London: Kliptown Books.

Okoth, A. (2006) A History of Africa: African Nationalism and the De-Colonisation Process. Nairobi: East African Educational Publishers.

O'Brien, K.A. (2010) The South African Intelligence Services: From Apartheid to Democracy, 1948-2005. London: Routledge.

O'Meara, D. (1977) "The Afrikaner Broederbond 1927-1948: Class Vanguard of Afrikaner Nationalism." Journal of Southern African Studies, Vol. 3, 1977 - Issue. 2 (Apr., 1977), pp. 156-186.

O'Meara, D. (1983) Volkskapitalisme: Class, Capital and Ideology in the Development of Afrikaner Nationalism. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

O'Meara, D. (1996) Forty Lost Years: The Apartheid State and the Politics of the National Party 1948-1994. Randburg: Ravan Press.

O'Meara, D. (1997) The Life and Work of Harold Wolpe. Address to the Inaugural Conference of the Harold Wolpe Memorial Trust, 1-2 April 1997.

O'Meara, P. (1991) "South Africa's Contradictory Regional Goals". In Davis, Jr., R.H. (ed.) (1991) Apartheid Unravels, Gainesville: University of Florida Press, pp. 213-227.

Orlik, P. B. (1970) "South Africa: How Long Without TV?" Journal of Broadcasting, Volume 14, Issue 2 (Spring 1970), pp. 245-258.

Osada, M. (2002) Sanctions and Honorary Whites: Diplomatic Policies and Economic Realities in Relations between Japan and South Africa. London: Greenwood Press.

Owusu, M. (1992) "Zan Boko: Mapantsula". City & Society, December 1992, Vol. 6, No. 2, pp. 176-181.

Pallister, D., Stewart, S., Lepper, I. (1988) South Africa Inc. The Oppenheimer Empire. London: Corgi Books.

Parker, P., Parker-Mokhesi, J. (1998) In the Shadow of Sharpeville: Apartheid and Criminal Justice. Houndmills, Basingstoke, Hampshire and London: Macmillan Press Ltd.

Paton, A. (1965) South African Tragedy: The Life and Times of Jan Hofmeyr. New York: Scribner.

Paton, A. (1966) "Dr. Hendrik Verwoerd: A Liberal Assessment." Liberal Opinion. December 1966, pp. 3-6.

Paton, A. (1973) Apartheid and the Archbishop: The Life and Times of Geoffrey Clayton, Archbishop of Cape Town. Cape Town: David Philip Publishers.

Peires, J. (2004) The Holocaust and Apartheid: Similarities and Differences A Comparative Study. A dissertation submitted in fulfilment of the requirements for the award of the degree of Master of Arts in Jewish Studies. Faculty of the Humanities, University of Cape Town.

Pelzer, A.N. (ed.) (1966) Verwoerd Speaks: Speeches 1948-66. Johannesburg: APB Publishers.

Pelzer, A.N. (1979) Die Afrikaner-Broederbond: Eerste 50 Jaar. Kaapstad: Tafelberg-Uitgewers Beperk.

Pfister, R. (2005) Apartheid South Africa and African States: From Pariah to Middle Power, 1961-1994. London and New York: Tauris Academic Studies.

Phatlane, S.N. (2006) Poverty, Health and Disease in the Era of High Apartheid: South Africa, 1948-1976. Ph.D. thesis, University of South Africa, November 2006.

Pienaar, H. (1999) "Hendrik Verwoerd." In Human & Rousseau (1999) They Shaped our Century: The Most Influential South Africans of the Twentieth Century. Cape Town: Human & Rousseau.

Pienaar, S. and Sampson, A. (1960) South Africa: Two Views of Separate Development. London: Oxford University Press.

Pierce, J. (1999) "World: Africa Democratic Party Return from the Wilderness." BBC News, June 3, 1999. Retrieved from: <http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/world/africa/360189.stm>

Pike, H.R. (1985) A History of Communism in South Africa. Primrose Hill, Germiston: Christian Mission International of South Africa.

Pillay, V. (1963) Verwoerd's Military Preparations. Cairo: The Cairo Office of the African National Congress.

Pirie, G.H., Rogerson, C.M., Beavon C.S.O. (1980) "Covert Power in South Africa: The Geography of the Afrikaner Broederbond." Area, Vol. 12, No. 2 (1980), pp. 97-104.

Pirie, G.H. (1992) "Rolling Segregation into Apartheid: South African Railways, 1948-53." Journal of Contemporary History, Vol. 27, No. 4, (Oct., 1992), pp. 671-693.

Placier, P.L., Letseka, M., Seroto, J., Loh, J., Montecinos, C., Vasquez, N., Tirri, K. (2016) "The History of Initial Teacher Preparation in International Contexts." In Loughran, J. and Hamilton, M.L. (eds.) (2016) International Handbook of Teacher Education, Volume 1. New York: Springer.

Pogrand, B. (1990) How Can Man Die Better ... Sobukwe and Apartheid. London: Peter Halban.

Pogrand, B. (2000) War of Words: Memoir of a South African Journalist. New York: Seven Stories Press.

Pohlandt-McCormick, H. (2000) "I Saw a Nightmare ...: Violence and the Construction of Memory (Soweto, June 16, 1976)." History and Theory, Vol. 39, No. 4, Theme Issue 39: "Not Telling": Secrecy, Lies, and History (Dec., 2000), pp. 23-44.

Pollack, R. (1981) Up Against Apartheid. The Role and the Plight of Press in South Africa. Carbondale, IL: Southern Illinois University Press.

Polakow-Suransky, S. (2010) The Unspoken Alliance: Israel's Secret Relationship with Apartheid South Africa. New York: Pantheon Books.

Pos, M. (1967) Wie Was Dr. Verwoerd. N.V. Uitgeverij. De Banier-Utrecht.

Posel, D. (1987) "The Language of Domination, 1978-1983." In Marks, S., Trapido, S. (eds.) (1987) The Politics of Race, Class and Nationalism in Twentieth Century South Africa. London and New York: Longman, pp. 419-443.

Posel, D. (1993) "Influx Control and Labour Markets in the 1950s." In Bonner, P., Delius, P., Posel, D. (eds.) (1993) Apartheid's Genesis: 1935-62. Braamfontein: Raven Press and Johannesburg: Witwatersrand University Press, pp. 411-430.

Posel, D. (1997) The Making of Apartheid 1948-1961. Oxford: Clarendon Paperbacks.

Posel, D. (2009) "The Assassination of Hendrik Verwoerd: The Spectre of Apartheid's Corpse." African Studies. Volume 68, Issue 3, (2009), pp. 331-350.

Posel, D. (2011) "The Apartheid Project, 1948-1970." In Ross, R., Mager, A. K., Nasson, B. (eds.) (2011) The Cambridge History of South Africa. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, pp. 319-368.

Pretorius, P.J. (1997) $ Sell-Out. The Truth Behind the History of South African Politics. Published by the Author.

Price, R. (1984) "Pretoria's Southern African Strategy". African Affairs, Vol. 83, No. 330 (Jan., 1984), pp. 11-32.

Prinsloo, D. (1981) "Dr. H. F. Verwoerd as Hoofredakteur van Die Transvaler." Kleio, Vol. 13, Issue 1-2, pp. 5-19.

Prinsloo, D. (1985) "Dr. H. F. Verwoerd en die Ossewa-Brandwag 1938-1952." Kleio, Volume 17, Issue 1, pp. 73-85.

Rabkin, D. (1975) Drum Magazine and the Works of Black South African Writers Associated With It. Doctoral Thesis. University of Leeds.

Rademeyer, C. (2014) "Entrenching Apartheid in South African Sport, 1948-1980." Journal for Contemporary History. Vol. 39. No. 2. December 2014, pp. 120-138.

Randall, P., Desai, Y. (1967) From 'Coolie Location' to Group Area. A Brief Account of Johannesburg's Indian Community. Johannesburg: South African Institute of Race Relations.

Rake, A. (1990) "8 April 1960 – ANC Banned". In Schadeberg, J. (ed.) (1990) Nelson Mandela and the Rise of the ANC. London: Bloomsbury Publishing Limited, pp. 148-153.

Rappaport, H. (2001) Encyclopaedia of Women Social Reformers. Santa Barbara, Calif.: ABC-CLIO Ltd.

Rayner, M. (1987) Turning a Blind Eye? Medical Accountability and the Prevention of Torture in South Africa. Washington: AAAS Committee on Scientific Freedom and Responsibility.

Rayner, M. (1990) "From Biko to Wendy Orr: The Problem of Medical Accountability in Contexts of Political Violence and Torture". In Manganyi N.C., du Toit A. (eds.) Political Violence and the Struggle in South Africa. Palgrave Macmillan, London, pp. 172-204.

Reddy, E.S. (1974) "Apartheid and the International Community." A Journal of Opinion, Vol. 4, No. 3 (Autumn 1974), pp. 19-24.

Reddy, E.S. (1991) India and the Struggle against Apartheid. London: Hansib Publishing.

Reed, D. (1974) The Siege of Southern Africa. Johannesburg: Macmillan South Africa.

Rees, P. (1990) Who's Who in the Extreme Right since 1890: An International Biographical Dictionary. Harlow: Prentice-Hall.

Reeves, A. (1955) Justice in South Africa. London: The Africa Bureau.

Reeves, A. (1960) Shooting at Sharpeville: The Agony of South Africa. London: Victor Gollancz Ltd.

Reeves, A. (1962) South Africa: Let the Facts Speak. London: Christian Action.

Reeves, A. (1962) South Africa - Yesterday and Tomorrow: A Challenge to Christians. London: Victor Gollanz Ltd.

Republic of South Africa. (1961) Debates of the Senate, (June 15 1961) col. 5342.

Reznek, L. (2016) Peddling Mental Disorder: The Crisis in Modern Psychiatry. Jefferson, North Carolina: McFarland & Company, Inc.

Rhodie, N.J. (1969) Apartheid and Racial Partnership in Southern Africa. Pretoria: Academica.

Rich, P.B. (1989) "Doctrines of 'Change' in South Africa." In Brewer, J.D. (ed.) (1989) Can South Africa Survive? Five Minutes to Midnight. Basingstoke: Macmillan Press, pp. 281-311.

Richards, V. (ed.). (1993) Violence & Anarchism. A Polemic. London: Freedom Press.

Robertson, I. (1978) "South African Education". In Robertson, I., Whitten, P. (eds.) (1978) Race and Politics in South Africa. New Brunswick: Transaction Books, pp. 103-126.

Robinson, J. (1996) The Power of Apartheid: State, Power and Space in South African Cities. Oxford: Butterworth Heinemann.

Rogers, B. (1972) South Africa: The 'Bantu Homelands'. London: An International Defence and Aid Fund Pamphlet. Christian Action Publishers Ltd.

Rogers, B. (1976) Divide and Rule: South Africa's Bantustans. London: International Defence and Aid Fund.

Rogers, B., Bolton, B. (1981) Sanctions Against South Africa: Exploding the Myths. Manchester: Manchester Free Press and Holland Committee on Southern Africa.

Rose, B.W. (1965) "Bantu Education as a Facet of South African Policy." Comparative Education Review. Vol 9. No. 2 (Jun., 1965), pp. 208-212.

Bibliography

Books and Journal Articles

- Rosenhaft, E. (2009) Beating the Fascists? The German Communists and Political Violence 1929-1933. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Rosenhan, D. L. (1973) "On Being Sane in Insane Places." Science, New Series, Vol. 179, No. 4070. (Jan. 19, 1973), pp. 250-258.
- Rosenthal, E. (1966) Southern African Dictionary of National Biography. London: Frederick Warne and Co. Ltd.
- Rosenthal, E. (1978) Encyclopaedia of Southern Africa. Cape Town and Johannesburg: Juta and Company Limited.
- Roskam, K. L. (1960) Apartheid and Discrimination. Leyden: AW Stythoff.
- Rotberg, R. I. (1983) "The Process of Decision Making in Contemporary South Africa." In Kitchen, Helen. (ed.) (1988) South Africa: In Transition to What? Washington, D.C: The Centre for Strategic and International Studies.
- Roux, E. (1972) Time Longer than Rope: A History of the Black Man's Struggle for Freedom in South Africa. Madison, Wisconsin: The University of Wisconsin Press.
- R.T.M. (1962) "Notes on State-Church Affairs." Journal of Church and State, Volume 4, Issue 2, November 1962, pp. 141-260.
- R.T.M. (1962) "Notes on State-Church Affairs." Journal of Church and State, Volume 5, Issue 2, November 1963, pp. 157-311.
- R.T.M. (1964) "Notes on Church-State Affairs." Journal of Church and State, Volume 6, Issue 3, Autumn 1964, pp. 277-427.
- Rubin, L. (1961) This is Apartheid. London: Victor Gollancz LTD.
- Rubin, L. (1976) Apartheid in Practice (Study prepared by Rubin at the request of the United Nations Unit on Apartheid). New York: United Nations Publication.
- Rubin, L., Rubin, N. (1965) This is Apartheid. London: A Christian Action Pamphlet.
- Rudolph, H. (1984) Security, Terrorism and Torture: Detainees' Rights in South Africa and Israel: A Comparative Study. Cape Town: Juta and Co Ltd.
- Rydon, J. (1958) "The South African General Elections." The Australian Quarterly, Vol. 30, No. 2 (June, 1958), pp. 30-38.
- Sachs, A. (1970) The Violence of Apartheid. London: Christian Action Publications.
- Sachs, A. (1973) Justice in South Africa. London: Sussex University Press.
- Sachs, A. (2011) The Soft Vengeance of A Freedom Fighter. London: Souvenir Press Ltd.
- Sachs, B. (1961) The Road from Sharpeville. London: Brian Dobson.

- Sachs, E. S. (1952) The Choice Before South Africa. London: Turnstile Press.
- Sachs, E. S. (1965) The Anatomy of Apartheid. London: Collet's.
- Sagittarius [Neogy, R]. (1961) "David Pratt is Dead", from Transition I (1961). Transition 75/76. The Anniversary Issue. Selections from Transition, 1961-1976 (1997). pp. 270-272.
- Sampson, A. (1987) Black and Gold: Tycoons, Revolutionaries and Apartheid. London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1987.
- Sanders, J. (1999) South Africa and the International Media, 1972-1979: A Struggle for Representation. London: Routledge.
- Sanders, J. (2006) Apartheid's Friends: The Rise and Fall of South Africa's Secret Service. London: John Murray.
- Sarakinski, I. (1992) "South Africa: Changing Politics and the Politics of Change." In Benjamin, L., Gregory, C. (eds.) (1992) Southern Africa at the Crossroads? Prospects for Stability and Development in the 1990s. Rivonia: Justified Press.
- Sartre, J.P. (1995) Anti-Semite and Jew: An Exploration of the Etiology of Hate, (New York, N.Y. Schocken Books (first published in 1946).
- Scheepers Strydom, C.J. (1967) Black And White Africans: A Factual Account of South Africa Race Policies in the Verwoerd Era. Cape Town: Tefelberg-Uitgewers.
- Schadeberg, J. (1987) The Fifties People of South Africa. Black Life: Politics-Jazz-Sport. Johannesburg: A Bailey's African Photo Archives Production.
- Schadeberg, J. (ed.) (1990) Nelson Mandela and the Rise of the ANC. London: Bloomsbury Publishing Limited.
- Schalkwyk, J. (2001) "Chronotopes of the Self in the Writings of Women Political Prisoners in South Africa." Yousaf, N. (ed.) (2001) Apartheid Narratives. Leiden: Brill, pp. 1-36.
- Schifter, R. (1993) "Human Rights at the United Nations: The South Africa Precedent." American University International Law Review, Vol. 8, No. 2, (Winter/Spring 92/93), pp. 361-372.
- Schmidt, E. (1980) Decoding Corporate Camouflage. U.S. Business Support for Apartheid. Washington, D.C.: Institute for Policy Studies.
- Schoeman, B.M. (1975) Die Sluipmoord op Dr. Verwoerd. Pretoria: Strydpers Bpk.
- Schoeman, B.M. (1980) Die Geldmag. SA se Onsigbare Regering. Pretoria: Aktuele Publikasies.
- Scholtz, J.J.J. (1967) Die Moord op Dr. Verwoerd. Johannesburg: Nasionale Boekhandel BPK.

- Scholtz, G.D. (1974) Dr. Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd. 1901-1966. Johannesburg: Perskor-uitgewery.
- Schonteich, M., Boshoff, H. (2003) Volk, Faith and Fatherland: The Security Threat Posed by the White Right. Pretoria: Institute for Security Studies.
- Schlemmer, L. (1970) Social Change and Political Policy in South Africa. Johannesburg: South African Institute of Race Relations.
- Seegers, A. (1996) The Military in the Making of Modern South Africa. London: Tauris Academic Publishers.
- Seekings, J. and Nattrass, N. (2005) Class, Race, and Inequality in South Africa. New Haven and London: Yale University Press.
- Seeley, J. (1984) "South Africa's Foreign Policy System, 1910-1966." In Geldenhuys, D. (1984) The Diplomacy of Isolation: South African Foreign Policy Making. Johannesburg: MacMillan, pp. 1-29.
- Segal, L., Cort, S. (2011) One Law, One Nation: The Making of the South African Constitution. Auckland Park: Jacana Media.
- Segal, R. (1960) The Agony of Apartheid. London: A Christian Action Pamphlet.
- Segal, R. (1961) Political South Africa: A Who's Who of Personalities and Parties. London: Stevens and Sons Ltd.
- Segal, R. (ed.) (1964) Sanctions Against South Africa. Baltimore: Penguin Books.
- Seidman, Gay W. (1994) Manufacturing Militance: Workers' Movements in Brazil and South Africa, 1970-1985. Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press.
- Seiler, J. (1975) "South African Perspectives and Responses to External Pressures." The Journal of Modern African Studies, Vol 13, Issue 3 (September 1975), pp. 447-468.
- Serfontein, J.H.P. (1978) Brotherhood of Power: An Expose of the Secret Afrikaner Broederbond. Bloomington: Indiana University Press.
- Shain, M. (1994) The Roots of Antisemitism in South Africa. Charlottesville: University of Virginia Press.
- Shaw, G. (1999) The Cape Times: An Informal History. Cape Town: David Phillip Publishers.
- Shaw, G. (2007) Believe in Miracles: South Africa from Malan to Mandela – and the Mbeki Era. Newlands: Ampersand Press.
- Shimoni, G. (1980) Jews and Zionism: The South African Experience. Cape Town: Oxford University Press.

- Shimoni, G. (2003) Community and Conscience: The Jews in Apartheid South Africa. The Tauber Institute for the Study of European Jewry Series. Hanover, N.H.: University Press of New England [for] Brandeis University Press; Cape Town: David Philip Publishers.
- Shirer, W.L. (1964) The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich. London: Pan Books.
- Shorten, J.R. (1970) The Johannesburg Saga. Johannesburg: John R. Shorten (Proprietary) Ltd.
- Sidley, P. (1995) "South Africa's Doctors Apologise for Apartheid Years." British Medical Journal, Vol. 311, No. 6998 (Jul. 15, 1995), pp. 148.
- Sidley, P. (1997) "South African Truth Commission Calls Doctors to Account for Their Actions during the Apartheid Era." British Medical Journal, Vol. 314, No. 7098 (Jun. 28, 1997), pp. 1850.
- Silove, D. (1990) "Doctors and the State: Lessons from the Biko Case." Social Science & Medicine, Volume 30, Issue 4, 1990, pp. 417-429.
- Simmons, (1997) Struggles in Southern Africa for Survival and Equality. London: Macmillan Press Ltd.
- Simons, J., Simons, R. (1983) Class and Colour in South Africa, 1850-1950. London: International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa.
- Simson, H. (1980) The Social Origins of Afrikaner Fascism and its Apartheid Policy. Stockholm: Almqvist and Wiksell International.
- Sisulu, E. (2003) Walter & Albertina Sisulu: In Our Time. London: Abacus.
- Sisulu, W. (1990) "Foreword." In Schadeberg, J. (ed.) (1990) Nelson Mandela and the Rise of the ANC. London: Bloomsbury Publishing Limited, pp. 6.
- Sisulu, W., Houser, G.M., Shore, H. (2001) I Will Go Singing. Cape Town: Robben Island Museum in association with the Africa Fund, New York.
- Sitze, A. (2013) The Impossible Machine: A Genealogy of South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press.
- Shore, L. (1990) "The Cultural Boycott of South Africa (II)." In Edgar, R. E. (ed.) (1990) Sanctioning Apartheid. Trenton, N.J.: Africa World Press, Inc., pp. 397-412.
- Slovo, J. (1996) Slovo: The Unfinished Autobiography. London: Hodder & Stoughton.
- Smeulers, A., Grünfeld, F. (2012) International Crimes and Other Gross Human Rights Violations: A Multi- and Interdisciplinary Textbook. Leiden: Martinus Nijhoff Publishers.
- Smit, J. A. (2015) "Critical Perspectives on Beyers Naudé as Post-colonial Theologian". Alternation Special Edition No 14 (2015), pp. 247-281.

Smith, D. M. (ed.) (1982) Living Under Apartheid: Aspects of Urbanization and Social Change. London: George Allen and Unwin.

Smith, H. L. (1979) Anatomy of Apartheid. Germiston: Khanya Publishers.

Solani, N., Nieftagodien, N. (2004) "Political Imprisonment and Resistance in South Africa: The Case of Robben Island, 1960-1970." In South African Democracy Education Trust (2004) The Road to Democracy in South Africa, Volume 1 (1960-1970). Cape Town: Zebra Press, pp. 391-411.

Soudien, C. (2002) "Teachers' Responses to the Introduction of Apartheid Education." In Kallaway, P. (ed.) (2002) The History of Education under Apartheid 1948-1994: The Doors of Learning and Culture Shall be Opened. New York: Peter Lang Publishing Inc, pp. 211-223.

Southern Africa the Imprisoned Society (SATIS) (1985) Political Trials in South Africa: Judicial Instruments of Repression. London: SATIS.

South African History Online. (2019) Ahmed Timol. 30 January 2019. Retrieved from: <https://www.sahistory.org.za/people/ahmed-timol>

South African History Online (n.d) Robert Sobukwe Inaugural Speech, April 1959. Retrieved from: <http://www.sahistory.org.za/archive/robert-sobukwe-inaugural-speech-april-1959>

South African History Online (n.d) Rowley Israel Arenstein. Retrieved from: <http://www.sahistory.org.za/people/rowley-israel-arenstein>

South African History Online (n.d.) The Inquest into Biko's Death and his Funeral. Retrieved from: <http://www.sahistory.org.za/article/inquest-bikos-death-and-his-funeral>

South African Law Journal. (1994) "In Memoriam: Mr Justice Alexander John Milne." South African Law Journal, Vol. 111, No. 2, (May 1994), pP. 378-381.

Sowden, L. (1968) The Land of Afternoon: The Story of a White South African. London: Elek Books Limited.

Sparks, A. (1990) The Mind of South Africa. London: Heinemann.

Sparks, A. (1995) Tomorrow is Another Country. The Inside Story of South Africa's Road to Change. Chicago: The University of Chicago Press.

Spence, J. E. (1966) "After Verwoerd." World Today, Oct 1, 1966; 22, 10, pp. 413-417.

Spence, J.E. (1968) "The Republic of South Africa and her Neighbours". In The Royal African Society (1968) Africa. South of the Congo. London: The Royal African Society.

St. John, R. (1954) Through Malan's Africa. London: Victor Gollancz Ltd.

- Stevens, R. P. (1971) "Zionism, South Africa and Apartheid: The Paradoxical Triangle." Phylon Vol. 32, No. 2 (2nd Qtr., 1971), pp. 123-142.
- Stephenson, J. (1978) "Jonathan Stephenson on a Cape Town Incident". Fortnight, No. 159 (Dec., 1977 - Jan., 1978), pp. 27.
- Stoler, A.L. (2009) Along the Archival Grain Epistemic Anxieties and Colonial Common Sense. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press.
- Strauss, S.A. (1996) "The Person with Schizophrenia and Criminal Justice: Some Aspects." The Comparative and International Law Journal of Southern Africa, Vol. 29, No. 3 (November 1996), pp. 282-294.
- Strangways-Booth, J. (1976) A Cricket in the Thorn Tree: Helen Suzman and the Progressive Party of South Africa. Bloomington: Indiana University Press.
- Study Commission on U.S. Policy Toward Southern Africa. (1981) South Africa: Time Running Out - The Report of the Study Commission on U.S. Policy Toward Southern Africa. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- Stultz, N. M. (1969) "The Politics of Security: South Africa Under Verwoerd, 1961-6." The Journal of Modern African Studies, Vol. 7, No. 1 (Apr., 1969), pp. 3-20.
- Stultz, N. M. (1974) Afrikaner Politics in South Africa, 1934-48. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- Stultz, N. M. (2016) "Evolution of the United Nations Anti-Apartheid Regime." In Young, T. (ed.) (2016) Readings in the International Relations of Africa. Bloomington: Indiana University Press.
- Stultz, N.M., Butler, J. (1963) "The South African General Election of 1961." Political Science Quarterly, Vol. 78, No. 1, (Mar., 1963), pp. 86-110.
- Sulitzeanu-Kenan, R. (2010) "Reflection in the Shadow of Blame: When Do Politicians Appoint Commissions of Inquiry?" British Journal of Political Science, Vol. 40, Issue 3, July 2010, pp. 613-634.
- Susser, M., Cherry, V.P. (1982) "Health and Health Care under Apartheid". Journal of Public Health Policy, Vol. 3, No. 4 (Dec., 1982), pp. 455-475.
- Suttner, I. (ed.) (1997) Cutting through the Mountain: Interviews with South African Jewish Activists. Viking Penguin: New York.
- Suttner, R. (2001) Inside Apartheid's Prison. New York: Ocean Press.
- Suttner, R. (2008) The ANC Underground in South Africa to 1976: A Social and Historical Study, Johannesburg: Jacana Media.
- Suzman, H. (1993) In No Uncertain Terms - A South African Memoir. New York: Alfred A. Knopf.

Swanepoel, P.C. (2007) Really Inside BOSS: A Tale of South Africa's Late Intelligence Service (and Something about the CIA). Pretoria: Published by the Author.

Swart, M. (2015) "The Road to Freedom Passes Through Gaol': The Treason Trial and Rivonia Trial as Political Trials". In Allo, A. (ed.) (2015) The Courtroom As A Space of Resistance: Reflections on the Legacy of the Rivonia Trial. Farnham: Ashgate Pub Co., pp. 149-170.

Switzer, L. (1997) "Socialism and the Resistance Movement: The Life and Times of the Guardian, 1937-1952." In Switzer, L. (ed.) (1997) South Africa's Alternative Press: Voices of Protest and Resistance, 1880s-1960s. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

Tafira, H. K. (2017) Xenophobia in South Africa: A History. Cham: Palgrave Macmillan.

Tambo, O. (1964) "Apartheid: The Indictment." In Segal, R. (ed.) (1964) Sanctions Against South Africa. Harmondsworth: Penguin Books, pp. 15-30.

Tatz, C. M. (1961) "Apartheid: Battle for the Mind." The Australian Quarterly, Vol. 33, No. 2, (June 1961), pp. 18-29.

Tatz, C. M. (1962) Shadow and Substance in South Africa. Pietermaritzburg: University of Natal Press.

Temerlin, M. K. (1970) "Diagnostic Bias in Community Mental Health." Community Mental Health Journal, Vol. 6 (2), 1970, pp. 110-117.

Temkin, B. (2003) Buthlezi: A Biography. London: Frank Cass and Co. Ltd.

Terreblanche, S. (2002) A History of Inequality in South Africa 1652-2002. Pietermaritzburg: Interpak Books.

The Bishop of Johannesburg (1960) Report on South Africa. London: Christian Action.

The Round Table. (1958) "South Africa. Dr. Verwoerd's Government." The Round Table: The Commonwealth Journal of International Affairs, Vol. 49, 1958-Issue 193, pp. 87-90.

Thompson, D. V. (1957) "The South Africa of Today." African Affairs, Vol. 56, No. 223 (Apr., 1957), pp. 128-136.

Thompson, L. (1966) Politics in the Republic of South Africa. Boston: Little, Brown and Company.

Thompson, L. (2001) A History of South Africa. New Haven and London: Yale University Press.

Thurlow, R. (1984) "Anti-Nazi Antisemite: The Case of Douglas Reed." Patterns of Prejudice, Vol. 18, No. 1, pp. 23-34.

Trades Union Congress. (1974) Trade Unionism in South Africa: Report of a Delegation from the Trades Union Congress. London: Trades Union Congress.

Transition. (1976) "Torture in South Africa". Transition, No. 50 (Oct., 1975 - Mar., 1976), pp. 52-57. Indiana University Press.

Troup, F. (1975) South Africa: An Historical Introduction. Harmondsworth: Penguin Books.

Troup, F. (1976) Forbidden Pastures: Education under Apartheid. London: International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa.

Truth and Reconciliation Commission (1998) Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report, Volume One.

Truth and Reconciliation Commission (1998) Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report, Volume Two.

Truth and Reconciliation Commission. (1998) Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report, Volume Three.

Truth and Reconciliation Commission. (1998) Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report, Volume Four.

Turk, A.T. (1982) Political Criminality: The Defiance and Defence of Authority. Beverly Hills: SAGE Publications, Inc.

Tyler, H. (1995) Life in the Time of Sharpeville and Wayward Seeds of a New South Africa. Cape Town: Kwela Books.

Tyler, H., Furie, B.G. (1960) "Sharpeville and After." Africa Today, Vol. 7, No. 3 (May, 1960), pp. 5-8.

UNESCO (1972) Apartheid: Its Effects on Science, Culture and Information. Paris: The UNESCO Press.

UNESCO (1974) Racism and Apartheid in Southern Africa. South Africa and Namibia. Paris: The UNESCO Press.

Union of South Africa. (1960) "Unlawful Organizations Act, Act No. 34 of 1960". Government Printer.

United Nations Centre Against Apartheid and N'dumbe, A. K. (1976) Relations between Nazi Germany and South Africa. New York: United Nations.

United Nations (1969) Action Against Apartheid. New York: United Nations Office of Public Information.

University of KwaZulu-Natal (n.d) "Liberal Party of South Africa (LPSA)". Alan Paton Centre and Struggle Archives. Retrieved from: <http://paton.ukzn.ac.za/Collections/liberal.aspx>

- Uys, S. (1959) "Dr. Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa," Africa South, Jan-March 1959, pp. 1-12.
- Uys, S. (1965) "Opium of the Afrikaner". Transition, No. 19 (1965), pp. 13-16.
- Uys, S. (1989) "The Afrikaner Establishment". In Johnson, S. (ed.) South Africa: No Turning Back. Bloomington and Indianapolis: Indiana University Press, pp. 206-240.
- Vail, L. (ed.) (1989) The Creation of Tribalism in South Africa. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- Vale, P. (1987) "Regional Policy: The Compulsion to Incorporate." In Blumenfeld, J. (ed.) (1987) South Africa in Crisis. London and New York: Croom Helm for the Royal Institute of International Affairs.
- van Aarde, A. G., de Villiers, P. G. R., Buitendag, J. (2014) The Forgotten Struggle of Albert Geyser Against Racism and Apartheid. Article served as introduction to the very first A.S. Geyser Commemoration Lecture held on 17 February 2014 at the Faculty of Theology of the University of Pretoria.
- van den Bergh, H. J. (1967) "Sabotage in South Africa." In National Council to Combat Communism (1967) Battle for the Mind: Papers Read at the International Symposium on Communism, Sept. 1966, Pretoria. Joubert Park: National Council to Combat Communism
- van den Berghe, P. L. (1962) "Apartheid, Fascism and the Golden Age." Cahiers d'Études Africaines, Vol. 2, Cahier 8 (1962), pp. 598-608.
- van den Berghe, P. L. (1966) "Racial Segregation in South Africa: Degrees and Kinds." Cahiers d'Études Africaines, Vol. 6, Cahier 23 (1966), pp. 408-419.
- van den Berghe, P. L. (1967) South Africa: A Study in Conflict. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- van der Horst, S. T. (1981) "Employment." In Van der Horst, S.T., Reid, J. (eds.) (1981) Race Discrimination in South Africa: A Review. Cape Town: David Philip Publisher.
- van der Walt, J. L. (2015) "Perspectives on Teacher Education: A Comparison of Religious Education in Estonia and South Africa." In Karras, K.G., Calogiannakis, P., Wolhuter, C.C. and Kontogianni, D. (eds.) (2015) Education and Teacher Education in the Modern World. Newcastle upon Tyne: Cambridge Scholars Publishing, pp. 199-210.
- van der Westhuizen, C. (2007) White Power and the Rise and Fall of the National Party. Cape Town: Zebra Press.
- van Jaarsveld, F. A. (1964) The Afrikaner's Interpretation of South African History. Cape Town: Simondium Publishers.
- van Jaarsveld, F.A. (1977) "The Afrikaner's Idea of his Calling and Mission in South African History." Journal of Theology for Southern Africa, Vol. 19, (June 1977).

- van Rooyen, J.H., Goldberg, F.J., Morris, N. (1976) "The Psychopath in South African Criminal and Mental Health Law." The Comparative and International Law Journal of Southern Africa. Vol. 9, No. 1 (March 1976), pp. 1-56.
- Van Rooyen, J.J. (1976) P.W. Botha: 40 Jaar. Kaapstad: Nasionale Boekdrukkery Bpk.
- van Tonder, R. (1990) Boerestaat. Randburg: Boerestaat Party.
- van Woerden, H. (2000) A Mouthful of Glass. London: Granta Books.
- Vassen, R. (n.d.) "Detentions without Trial during the Apartheid Era." South Africa: Overcoming Apartheid, Building Democracy. Available at: <http://overcomingapartheid.msu.edu/sidebar.php?id=65-258-9&page=1>
- Vatcher, W. H. (1965) White Laager: The Rise of Afrikaner Nationalism. London: Pall Mall Press.
- Venter, J. J. (1999) "H. F. Verwoerd: Foundational Aspects of his Thought." Koers, 64 (4), March 1999, pp. 415-442.
- Verwey, E. J. (ed.) (1995) New Dictionary of South African Biography, v.1. Pretoria: HSRC Press.
- Verwoerd, C.A. (2014) 39ste H.F. Verwoerd Gedenklesing. Bylae tot "Voorgrond" Orania Beweging, pp. 10-11. [39th H.F. Verwoerd Commemorative Address. Addendum to "Voorgrond" Orania Beweging, pp. 10-11.]
- Verwoerd, H. F. (1961) The Truth about South Africa. Bloemfontein: National Party's Information Service.
- Verwoerd, H. F. (1961) Live and Let Live. Johannesburg: Dagbreek.
- Verwoerd, H. F. (1963) Dr. H. F. Verwoerd on I: Crisis in World Conscience. II: The Road to Freedom for Basutoland, Bechuanaland, Swaziland. Pretoria: Department of Information.
- Verwoerd, W. (2019) Verwoerd: My Journey through Family Betrayals. Cape Town: Tafelberg.
- Verwoerd, W. J. (2001) Verwoerd: Só Onthou ons Hom. Pretoria: Protea Boekhuis.
- Vigne, R. (1969) The Transkei - A South African Tragedy. London: The Africa Bureau.
- Vigne, R. (1997) Liberals against Apartheid: A History of the Liberal Party in South Africa. London: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Visser, G. C. (1976) OB: Traitors or Patriots? Johannesburg: MacMillan South Africa.

Visser, N. (1997) "Postcoloniality of a Special Type: Theory and Its Appropriations in South Africa." The Yearbook of English Studies. Vol. 27, The Politics of Postcolonial Criticism (1997), pp. 79-94.

Volpe, H. (1988) Race, Class and the Apartheid State. London: James Currey.

Vontress, C. E., Naiker, K. S. (1995) "Counselling in South Africa: Yesterday, Today, and Tomorrow." Journal of Multicultural Counselling and Development, Vol 23, Issue 3 (July 1995), pp. 149-157.

Waldmeir, P. (1997) Anatomy of a Miracle. The End of Apartheid and the Birth a New South Africa. New Brunswick: Rutgers University Press.

Walker, M. (1990) "History and History Teaching in Apartheid South Africa." Radical History Review, (1990) 1990(46-47), pp. 298-308.

Walshe, A.P. (1963) "The Changing Content of Apartheid." The Review of Politics, Vol. 25, No. 3 (Jul., 1963), pp. 343-361.

Walsh, P. (1967) RCMP Security and Intelligence Against Communism in Canada. Ottawa: Canadian Anti-Communist Secretariat.

Walshe, P. (1970) The Rise of African Nationalism in South Africa: The African National Congress, 1912-1952. London: C. Hurst and Company.

Walshe, P. (1977) "Church versus State in South Africa: The Christian Institute and the Resurgence of African Nationalism." Journal of Church and State, Volume 19, Issue 3, 1 October 1977, pp. 457-479.

Ward, J. J. (1984) "Terror, Revolution, or Control? The KPD's Secret Apparatus During the Weimar Republic." Terrorism, Volume 7, Issue 3, 1984, pp. 257-297.

The Water Wheel (2011) "Kouga Dam - Serving the Fertile Gamtoos Valley." The Water Wheel, January/February 2011, pp. 20-24.

Warwick, R. (2009) White South Africa and Defence 1960-1968: Militarization, Threat Perceptions and Counter Strategies. PhD Thesis, University of Cape Town.

Welsh, F. (2000) A History of South Africa. London: Harper Collins.

Wentzel, J. (1995) The Liberal Slideaway. Johannesburg: South African Institute of Race Relations.

Weyl, N. (1970) Traitor's End. The Rise and Fall of the Communist Movement in Southern Africa. New Rochelle, N.Y.: Arlington House.

Wheeler, J. H. (1961) "Apartheid Implemented by Education in South Africa." The Journal of Negro Education. Vol. 30. No. 3, (Summer 1961), pp. 241-250.

Wheeler, D. L. (1983) "In the Service of Order: The Portuguese Political Police and the British, German and Spanish Intelligence, 1932-1945." Journal of Contemporary History, Vol. 18, No. 1 (Jan., 1983), pp. 1-25.

Wiechers, M (1968) "South West Africa: The Decision of 16 July 1966 and its Aftermath." The Comparative and International Law Journal of Southern Africa, Vol. 1, No. 3 (November 1968), pp. 408-446.

Wieder, A. (2013) Ruth First and Joe Slovo in the War Against Apartheid. New York: Monthly Review Press.

Williams, D. K. (2013) "Sex and the Evangelicals; Gender Issues, the Sexual Revolution, and Abortion in the 1960s." In Schafer, A.R. American Evangelicals and the 1960s. Madison: University of Wisconsin Press, pp. 97-118.

Wilkins, I., Strydom, H. (1979) Broederbond: The Super-Afrikaners. London: Corgi Books.

Willems, C., West, N., Unwon, R., Eveleigh, S. (1988) A Case for Change. Rights, Repression and Responses in South Africa. Leeds: Leeds Education Development Centre.

Wills, I. (2012) "The Politics of Bantu Education in South Africa: 1948-1994." Political Crossroads. Vol. 19, No. 1, 2012, pp. 5-24.

Wilson, L. (1991) "Bantu Stephen Biko: A Life." In Pityana, N.B. Ramphela, M., Mpumlwana, M., Wilson, L. (1991) Bounds of Possibility: The Legacy of Steve Biko and Black Consciousness. Cape Town: David Philip Publishers.

Wilson, M., Thompson, L. (1969) The Oxford History of South Africa. Oxford: Oxford University Press.

Winter, G. (1981) Inside BOSS: South Africa's Secret Police. Harmondsworth: Penguin Books.

Witz, L. (2003) Apartheid's Festival: Contesting South Africa's National Past. Bloomington: Indiana University Press.

Wolfe, B. D. (2001) Three Who Made A Revolution: A Biographical History of Lenin, Trotsky and Stalin. New York: Cooper Square Publishers Inc.

Wolpe, H. (1972) "Capitalism and Cheap Labour Power in South Africa: From Segregation to Apartheid", Economy and Society, 1:4, pp. 425-456.

Wood, J. R. T. (1987) "The Roles of Diefenbaker, Macmillan and Verwoerd in the Withdrawal of South Africa from the Commonwealth." Journal of Contemporary African Studies, Vol. 6, Issue 1-2, pp. 152-179.

Wood, J.R.T. (2012) A Matter of Weeks Rather Than Months: The Impasse between Harold Wilson and Ian Smith Sanctions, Aborted Settlements and War 1965-1969. Victoria: Trafford Publishing.

Wood, R.J., Haines, R., Lloyd, H.R. (2014) "Afrikaans Business under Apartheid: The Case of the Western Cape." Mediterranean Journal of Social Sciences, Vol 5, No 27, December 2014, pp. 1361-1371.

Woods, D. (1978) Biko. New York: Paddington Press Ltd.

Woods, D. (1987) South African Dispatches. London: Penguin Books.

Woodson, D. C. "Albert Luthuli and the African National Congress: A Bio-Bibliography", History in Africa, Vol. 13 (1986), p. 345-362.

Worden, N. (2000) The Making of Modern South Africa. Oxford: Blackwell (Third edition).

Worger, W. H., Clark, N. L., Alpers, E. A. (2010) Africa and the West: A Documentary History. Volume 2: From Colonialism to Independence, 1975 to the Present. Oxford: Oxford University Press.

World Peace Council. (1972) Apartheid is Built on Torture. Helsinki: Information Centre of the World Peace Council.

Worrall, D. (1971) "Politics and Parties." In Worrall, D. (ed.) (1971) South Africa: Government and Politics. Pretoria: JL van Schaik, pp. 172-253.

Worsnip, M. E. (1991) Between Two Fires: The Anglican Church and Apartheid, 1948-1957. Pietermaritzburg: University of Natal Press.

Wylie, D. (2011) "The Shock of the New: Ngquza Hill 1960." In Kepe, T., Ntsebeza, L. (eds.) (2011) Rural Resistance in South Africa. The Mpondo Revolts After Fifty Years. Leiden: Brill, pp. 191-208.

Wyman, D. S., Rosenzweig, C. H. (1996) The World Reacts to the Holocaust. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press.

Zug, J. (2007) The Guardian: The History of South Africa's Extraordinary Anti-Apartheid Newspaper. Pretoria: UNISA Press.

APPENDIX

ABOVE LEFT: Tsafendas in Egypt, aged four or five.⁴⁸⁰¹

ABOVE RIGHT: Tsafendas (second from right) with (left to right) his stepsister Evangelia, stepmother Marika, stepbrother Victor and his father Michalis.⁴⁸⁰²

BELOW: Tsafendas in 1934, aged sixteen.⁴⁸⁰³

⁴⁸⁰¹ Photo courtesy of Liza Key.

⁴⁸⁰² Photo courtesy of Irini and John Michaletos.

⁴⁸⁰³ Goldstein, 'Tsafendas Timid and Puny As A Boy', Rand Daily Mail, 14 September 1966.

Appendix

The first item on PIDE's file on Tsafendas, opened in 1938. Tsafendas was "suspected of distributing communist propaganda."⁴⁸⁰⁴

124

POLÍCIA DE VIGILANCIA E DEFESA DO ESTADO

SECÇÃO POLÍTICA E SOCIAL

CADASTRO SECRETO N.º 10.415

--	--

Nome Demitrios Tsafantakis e Grego

Alcunha _____ Estado _____ Profissão Empregado de escri torio

Data do nascimento _____ Naturalidade _____

Filiação _____

Residência Quelimane

Sinais particulares _____

BIOGRÁFIA

Esteve empregado em Quelimane na Imperial Airways.- Suspeito de destri buir propaganda comunista.- Consta que foi para o Transvaal.

⁴⁸⁰⁴ Secret Criminal Record nº 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

Appendix

Captain Michalis Tsafantakis, Tsafendas's great-grandfather and prominent rebel in the Great Cretan Revolution against the Ottomans (1866–1869). Tsafendas's father was named after him. Tsafendas worshipped his great-grandfather and grew up dreaming of becoming a rebel like him.⁴⁸⁰⁵

The expensive coffee table Tsafendas gave to his stepsister Evangelia as a wedding present in 1941.

⁴⁸⁰⁵ Photos courtesy of Alexandros Tsafantakis.

Appendix

TOP: Costas Kargakis, the Greek partisan whose granddaughter Maria was married to Michalis Tsafantakis, Tsafendas's cousin. Tsafendas stayed for about a month in Kargakis's house in Crete in 1962 and was trained by him and other partisans in bomb-making.⁴⁸⁰⁶

BELOW: Maria (Kargakis's granddaughter) and Michalis Tsafantakis (second from right), Tsafendas's cousin.

⁴⁸⁰⁶ Photos courtesy of Alexandros Tsafantakis.

Appendix

LEFT: Dr. Verwoerd in 1924.⁴⁸⁰⁷

RIGHT: Dr. Verwoerd in 1947 as editor for Die Transvaler.⁴⁸⁰⁸

Dr. Verwoerd, J.G. Strijdom and D.F. Malan.⁴⁸⁰⁹

⁴⁸⁰⁷ N.F. Hefer and G.C. Basson, Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd: pictorial biography 1901–1966, Johannesburg: Voortrekkerpers Ltd., 1967), p. 22

⁴⁸⁰⁸ N.F. Hefer and G.C. Basson, Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd: pictorial biography 1901–1966, Johannesburg: Voortrekkerpers Ltd., 1967), p. 34

⁴⁸⁰⁹ N.F. Hefer and G.C. Basson, Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd: pictorial biography 1901–1966, Johannesburg: Voortrekkerpers Ltd., 1967), p. 45

The New York Times announcing on 6 September 1958, exactly eight years before he was assassinated, that Dr. Verwoerd had become South Africa's Prime Minister. The article is indicative of how Dr. Verwoerd was perceived by the Western democratic world at the time.⁴⁸¹⁰

Bad News From South Africa

There will be no rejoicing anywhere, not even among a majority of the South African people, that Hendrik Verwoerd has been chosen Prime Minister. This is an affliction which the unhappy people of South Africa will have to bear for a while.

Dr. Verwoerd is an outstanding example of a gradually disappearing breed—the racist. In Hitler's days he was pro-Nazi and anti-Semitic. His passion and his role in South Africa today is that of the champion of an extremist white supremacy. He is the most fanatical exponent of apartheid, the segregation of the black and Colored—or mixed—races from the white.

The special misfortune of South Africa is that while there is almost unanimity among the whites—even those of the opposition United party and those of English descent—for apartheid in some form, Dr. Verwoerd stands for the extreme type. It is an irony for the Christian world at large that Dr. Verwoerd should be a pillar of the Calvinist Dutch Reformed Church and cites the Old Testament to support his wicked and foolish policies.

⁴⁸¹⁰ The New York Times, 'Bad News from South Africa', 6 September 1958: 16.

Appendix

Dr. Verwoerd and British PM Harold Macmillan during the latter's visit to South Africa in 1960.⁴⁸¹¹

Dr. Verwoerd (top, fifth from the right) and John Vorster (bottom, first left) in August 1960.⁴⁸¹²

⁴⁸¹¹ N.F. Hefer and G.C. Basson, Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd: pictorial biography 1901–1966, Johannesburg: Voortrekkerpers Ltd., 1967), p. 79

⁴⁸¹² N.F. Hefer and G.C. Basson, Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd: pictorial biography 1901–1966, Johannesburg: Voortrekkerpers Ltd., 1967), p. 87

Appendix

Dr. Verwoerd just after being shot by David Pratt on 9 April 1960.⁴⁸¹³

⁴⁸¹³ N.F. Hefer and G.C. Basson, Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd: pictorial biography 1901–1966, Johannesburg: Voortrekkerpers Ltd., 1967), p. 79

Appendix

David Pratt: (left) aged 17 at Cambridge University⁴⁸¹⁴ and (right) in 1960.⁴⁸¹⁵

⁴⁸¹⁴ Doreen Billson as told to Gordon Winter, 'I Loved David Pratt-Wonderful, Sad Man', Sunday Express, 8 October 1961: 2.

⁴⁸¹⁵ Cazenove, An Unwitting Assassin. The Story of My Father's Attempted Assassination of Prime Minister Hendrik Verwoerd, p. 24.

The picture of David Pratt (on the right) outside the British Prime Minister's house while he was canvassing on behalf of the Liberal Party, which he also financed, during the 1959 UK General Election. Below, the same picture in the British Daily Mirror on 12 April 1960. Pratt's political beliefs and activities, especially against apartheid, did not become known in South Africa at the time, as two days after the shooting the apartheid government banned the press from mentioning anything about him, including his name.⁴⁸¹⁶

AND NOW HE MUST BE 'NAMELESS'

From HOWARD JOHNSON, Johannesburg, Monday
DAVID PRATT, 53, the wealthy, eccentric farmer, held for the attempted assassination of South Africa's Prime Minister, Dr. Hendrik Verwoerd, on Saturday, is now being detained under the Government's Emergency Regulations.

Interests of public order or safety.
 Tonight doctors at the heavily-guarded Pretoria Hospital, where Dr. Verwoerd is being treated for two serious face wounds said:
 Although the Prime Minister suffered less pain and discomfort than yesterday, he still had to endure a considerable amount of anguish.
 In the circumstances, however, he had a good day, and tonight was able for the first time to take liquid food.
 It is expected to be at least six weeks before the Premier is able to think about a return to his duties.
 But it was announced today that no deputy Premier would be appointed during Dr. Verwoerd's absence. Mr. Paul Sauer, 62, Minister of Lands, will preside over Cabinet meetings.

WORLD NEWS SPOTLIGHT

SOUTH AFRICAN farmer David Pratt, the man alleged to have shot Prime Minister Verwoerd, once called at No. 10, Downing-street.
 Here he is (above, with striped tie) making that visit.
 It was during the General Election campaign last October, when he was helping Mr. Derek Mansley, Liberal candidate for the Cities of London and Westminster, who is pictured knocking at the door.

 Mr. Pratt is an overseas member of the National Liberal Club in London.

It is not known WHEN OR IF he will appear in court on a charge.
 Tonight, the police warned that, as Pratt was being held under the Emergency Regulations, it would be an offence in future to mention him by name in a newspaper or even by word of mouth.
 The decision not to try Pratt at present was taken after a day of sealed lips over the future of the twice-married ex-farm-

Misunderstood

⁴⁸¹⁶ Daily Mirror, 'And Now He Must Be "Nameless"', 12 April 1960: 5.

Appendix

Portions of Pratt's statement to the court;⁴⁸¹⁷ only a small portion of it made it into the press, and it was generally misunderstood at the time.

On my arrival in Cape Town I was horrified at the disintegration that had taken place in South Africa, during the period I had been away. The sense of hopelessness on people's faces - the apathy - or alternatively selling up, packing up, and clearing out, which is no answer. Simultaneously the Press were full of riots - details of which I need not go into.

I don't say it of my own accord, and I don't say it as David Pratt, I say it as a message for every South African Afrikaner, English South African, Coloured, Indian, Bantu, Malay - every person in South Africa has got to play his part if we are to build the South Africa that I know can be built. When I say "I" you will appreciate that it is the "I" of the "I feel" that I refer to. South Africa has got to come out of her wilderness was the first message I felt in 1954. She has got to take her rightful place in the community of nations and in particular the continent of Africa. She is the finest country in this continent and there is no better in the world and he is capable of doing it, and she can do it, and she has a great and glorious future - a glittering future waiting for her as long as she observes the basic laws of God and human dignity. Which of course, means, in the words, I think, of Mr. Macmillan at the time: "Rule by merit and not pigment of skin." South Africa has to throw off the slimy snake of apartheid which is gripping its throat. Practical apartheid, obviously, cannot go immediately. The principle of apartheid has to be flung off, and then it is out, and then it is up to the coloured section of the population how rapidly the practical section is put into effect. As I have said, ⁴⁸¹⁷ David Pratt's testimony in the Enquiry regarding his mental condition in Regina vs. David Beresford Pratt, 13 September 1960. The State versus David Beresford Pratt. 712-60. NASA.

Appendix

LEFT: Page 22 from David Pratt's "Method for Approaching Trial."⁴⁸¹⁸ In it, he outlines to Desmond Blow his plan for a new trial where he would claim political responsibility for shooting Dr. Verwoerd; the plan included calling important defence witnesses like Anton Rupert and Harry Oppenheimer, two of the country's wealthiest and most powerful men. Blow went on to contact everyone Pratt suggested and all happily agreed to testify on Pratt's behalf. However, Pratt's plan failed as he was found dead in his cell shortly after the police discovered his intentions.

RIGHT: Pratt at The Fort in Bloemfontein; the last known photograph of him, a few months before his death.⁴⁸¹⁹

- 22 -

Oppenheimer will say:

I rang him in 1954 for an interview and proposed certain things to form a coalition government. He agreed to co-operate and I left him to see the others.

He, too, will give his account of the position of the country under Verwoerd and his views on expansion under the circumstances.

Phone him to see if he is agreeable.

Jacobson will say:

He has been treating me for epilepsy since I left Chesler. He will describe the epileptic personality and how it is possible for epileptics to imagine uncontrollable urges and phantasies. The growing conviction of a most strange phantasy received unexpected collaboration from a witness at the hearing. I have not discussed it yet and will not do so until I am sure. Then I will finish my address to the Jury.

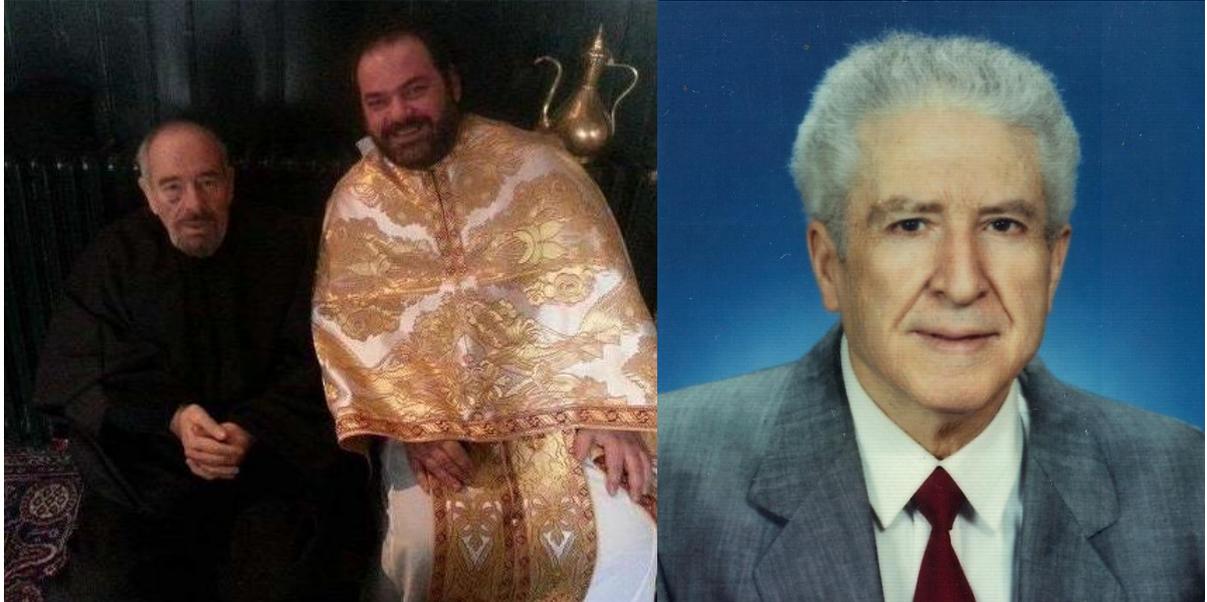

⁴⁸¹⁸ David Pratt's 'Method for approaching trial.' n.d. Personal Collection of Desmond Blow; Desmond Blow in a personal interview, 11 May 2015.

⁴⁸¹⁹ Cazenove, An Unwitting Assassin. The Story of My Father's Attempted Assassination of Prime Minister Hendrik Verwoerd, p. 201.

Appendix

LEFT: Father Nikola Banovic (on the left). A very close friend of Tsafendas; he shared his home with Tsafendas for about five months in Istanbul in 1961 and they remained good friends until Tsafendas's death.⁴⁸²⁰

RIGHT: Limasollu Naci, the owner of the private college with the same name in Istanbul, where Tsafendas worked for six months in 1961 as a teacher of English. Naci was a very good friend of Tsafendas and they kept in touch until the latter's death. Tsafendas was given an excellent reference by Naci and he used it in order to get the job in the House of Assembly.⁴⁸²¹

The staff of Limasollu Naci College. Mr. Naci is sitted down in the middle. One of the women is almost certainly the one Tsafendas dated and lived with while in Istanbul.⁴⁸²²

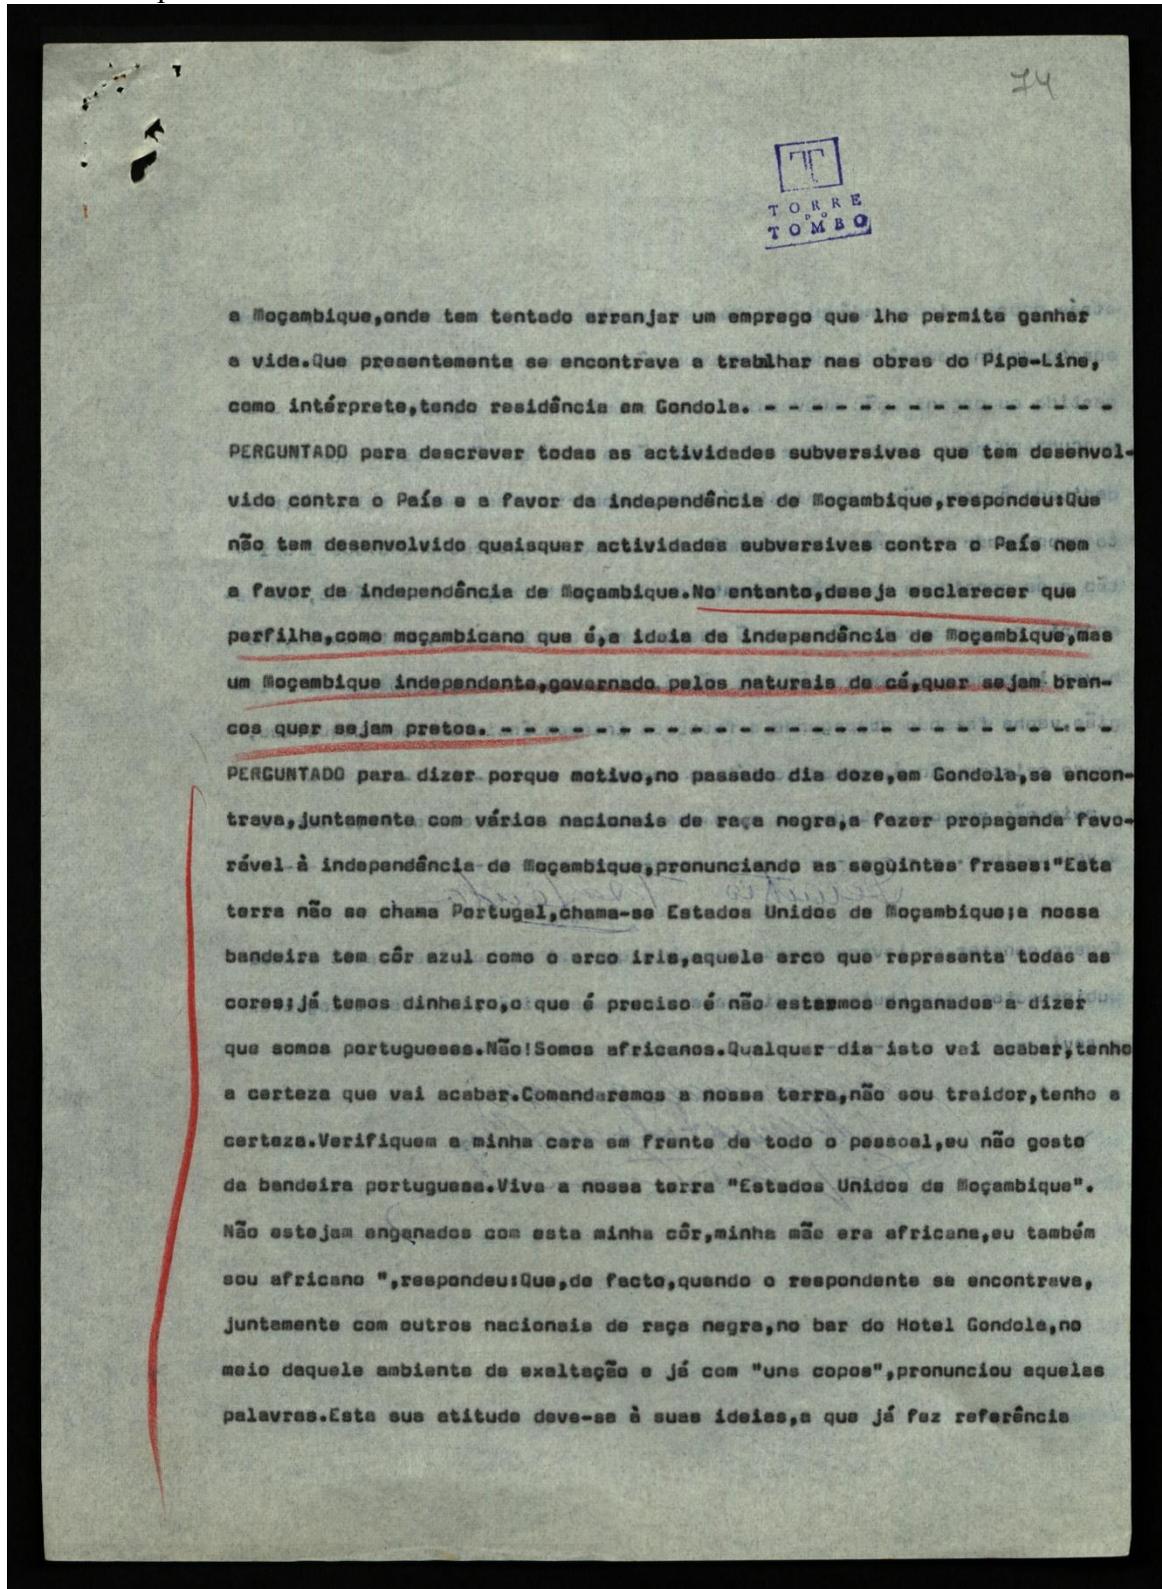

⁴⁸²⁰ Photo courtesy of Father Nikola Banovic.

⁴⁸²¹ Photo courtesy of Mrs. Advije Vedia Limasollu.

⁴⁸²² Photo courtesy of Mrs. Advije Vedia Limasollu.

Appendix

Portion of Tsafendas's interrogation transcript by PIDE on 25 November 1964. Tsafendas was accused of "making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses." He admitted that he wanted to see "a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they White or Black, and therefore separated from the mother nation."⁴⁸²³

⁴⁸²³ PIDE Record of questions, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

Appendix

LEFT: The Eleni.⁴⁸²⁴

RIGHT: The fake pistol Mavronas and Mastromanolis sold to Tsafendas.

From left to right: Nicolas Mavronas from the Eleni (he owned the pistol that he and Mastromanolis sold to Tsafendas); Emanuil Mastromanolis and Vasilis Perselis from the Eleni; they associated with Tsafendas while the Eleni was docked in Cape Town. Mastromanolis was one of the Eleni sailors whom Tsafendas took to a township in Cape Town in order to show them the effects of apartheid and the Black people's hardship due to it. The visit had an enormous and profound effect on the Eleni men; saddened and angered, some of them said the Afrikaners "should be taught a lesson," while Mastromanolis, declared that "the [White] South Africans need a good whipping."⁴⁸²⁵

⁴⁸²⁴ Photograph of the Eleni. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

⁴⁸²⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016.

Appendix

Tsafendas in the mid-1960s in South Africa (apart from the bottom left which was taken in West Germany sometime in 1958-1959). All the photographs show him as neatly dressed, with a suit and tie, as some 95 per cent of witnesses testified to the police and to the COE. However, during the summary trial and especially in the COE's Report, Tsafendas was misportrayed as a tramp, with a dirty and neglected appearance.⁴⁸²⁶

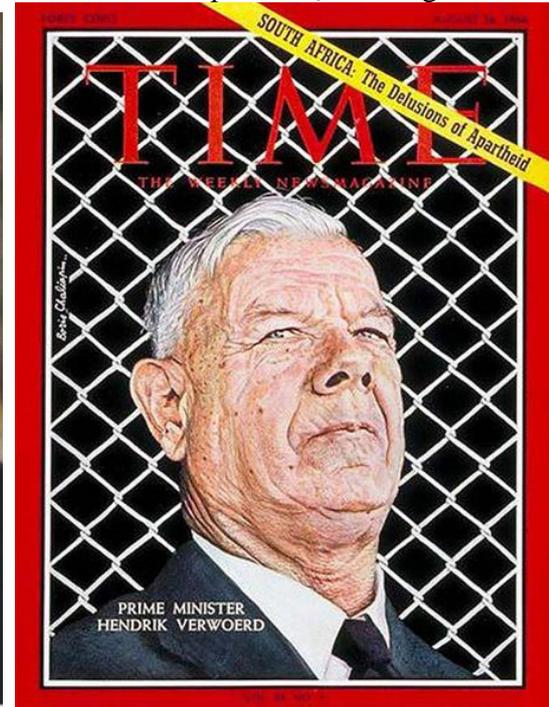

⁴⁸²⁶ All photos courtesy of Liza Key, apart from bottom left by Gordon Winter, 'I Jilted Tsafendas, Says Coloured Girl', The Post, 18 September 1966: 1.

Appendix

LEFT: Dr. Verwoerd and his wife Betsie.⁴⁸²⁷

RIGHT: TIME magazine: 'South Africa: The Delusions of Apartheid,' 26 August 1966.

The House of Assembly and a description of the assassination.⁴⁸²⁸

⁴⁸²⁷ N.F. Hefer and G.C. Basson, Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd: Pictorial Biography 1901–1966.

⁴⁸²⁸ SAFARI: September, 1966.

Appendix

Tsafendas's two knives; he used the one on the bottom.⁴⁸²⁹

Dr. Verwoerd carried out from the House of Assembly after he was stabbed; he was already dead.⁴⁸³⁰

⁴⁸²⁹ Photo courtesy of Liza Key.

⁴⁸³⁰ J.J.J. Scholtz, Die Moord op Dr. Verwoerd, (Johannesburg: Nasionale Boekhandel BPK, 1967),

Appendix

Reconstruction of the killing by the Sunday Express. The pictures show how Dr. Verwoerd was stabbed. From top to bottom: (top) the stabbing in his left shoulder, where the knife severed the main artery; (second) one of the fatal stabbings, three inches into Dr. Verwoerd's heart; (third) this stab struck below the heart and entered the abdomen; (bottom) the stabbing on Dr. Verwoerd's right shoulder.⁴⁸³¹ ⁴⁸³¹ Sunday Express, 'Killing Reconstructed.' 23 October 1966: 1.

Appendix

Police photo of Tsafendas in Caledon Square Police Station shortly after his arrest for the assassination.⁴⁸³²

Tsafendas at an identification parade in Caledon Square Police Station shortly after the assassination.⁴⁸³³

⁴⁸³² A Question of Madness.

⁴⁸³³ A Question of Madness.

Appendix

Tsafendas at identification parades in Caledon Square Police Station shortly after the assassination.⁴⁸³⁴

⁴⁸³⁴ A Question of Madness.

Appendix

LEFT: 13 September 1966: General John Keevy, Commissioner of the SA Police, on the left; John Vorster in front; and Major Dirk Genis, security police officer, at the back.⁴⁸³⁵ After the assassination, Vorster instructed General Keevy to put General van den Bergh in charge of the investigation. Major Genis, who was one of the SA police officers who had received special training from the French in torture techniques, had arrested Tsafendas at the House of Assembly and had later searched his room.

MIDDLE: General Hendrik van den Bergh in his office in 1976. He had also received special training from the French in torture techniques, and had led the investigation and interrogated Tsafendas.⁴⁸³⁶

RIGHT: General van den Bergh in October 1961 giving the salute of the Ossewabrandwag, the Nazi paramilitary organization that was active in South Africa during the WWII, at the funeral of its leader Hans van Rensburg. Van den Bergh claimed that he was not a Nazi supporter or a member of the organization. In addition to the salute, van den Bergh was interned during WWII in Koffienfontein camp as suspected member of the Stormjaers, the military wing of the Ossewabrandwag.⁴⁸³⁷ ⁴⁸³⁵ John D'Oliveira, Vorster – The Man.

⁴⁸³⁶ Sanders, Apartheid's Friends: The Rise and Fall of South Africa's Secret Service.

⁴⁸³⁷ Rand Daily Mail, 'Van den Bergh: I Wasn't An OB', 9 October 1966: 1.

Appendix

LEFT: (left) Major Daniel Jacobus Rossouw, head of the Security Police in Cape Town. He personally interrogated Tsafendas on several occasions in Caledon Square Police Station. On his right, is Major Dirk Genis.

RIGHT: The famous and sarcastic cover of Private Eye on 17 September: “Verwoerd: A Nation Mourns.”

Caledon Square Police Station.

Appendix

Appendix

Tsafendas's statement to Major Rossouw on 11 September 1966. Tsafendas never mentioned the tapeworm or anything to suggest he was insane; on the contrary, he clearly stated that he was "disgusted with the racial policy" and that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he believed that "a change of policy would take place" after his "disappearance."⁴⁸³⁸ was on ships most of the time. While I was staying in England I did attend some political meetings. I attended meetings of the Committee of African Organisations and I attended meetings at Caxton Hall. I also attended political meetings at Hyde Park in London. They were anti-colonial meetings, anti-apartheid meetings and anti-racial meetings. It's a long time ago and I cannot remember the names of all the speakers. I remember speeches by Barbara Castle, Fenner Brockway and Callaghan. I used to like to attend these meetings and be present at the meetings to contribute to their way of thinking. I did take part in a protest and propaganda meeting at Trafalgar Square. It was anti-colonial protests. I was holding the posters up but did not speak at these meetings. I was never approached to become a member of the Communist Party. I was anti-colonial, against slavery and in favour of all colonies which were controlled by Belgium, France and Portugal to be afforded self-government. I was against apartheid because it separated the people of different races and brought a big barrier amongst them which is difficult to describe. It ⁴⁸³⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150. K150, Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

Appendix

It is true that I mixed with South African people in London, some of whom were leftists. In private conversations with some of these people it was said that the South African Prime Minister deserves to be shot. I cannot remember by whom this statement was made because it was merely during private conversations that this statement was made. This sort of statement was made more than once by different people. I cannot remember any particular person having made such a statement. It was just casual talk. These were isolated statements by people I happened to come across by chance. To say that this was the main thought amongst leftists, is a bit exaggerated. I must have made a mistake by telling General van den Bergh this. I used to agree with the idea that the Prime Minister deserves to be shot. I sometimes agreed with them. Sometimes we used to discuss that Dr. Verwoerd was lucky he did not die the first time he was shot. There was no decision made that he should in fact be killed - I mean I did not decide on anything at that time. I never took upon me the task of killing the Prime Minister nor did I tell anyone that I would kill the Prime Minister. I did believe that with the disappearance of the South African Prime Minister a change of policy would take place. I did set myself the task of destroying the Prime Minister. It was my own idea to kill him. No one ever asked me to kill him. No one offered me any reward for doing so. I did not care about the consequences for what would happen to me afterwards. I was so disgusted with the racial policy that I went through with my plans to kill the Prime Minister.

Tsafendas's second statement to the police, 19 September 1966.⁴⁸³⁹ His answers are clear and coherent as always. He explains his plan to shoot Dr. Verwoerd, that he did not care about the consequences, that he "always had a grudge against the South African Government on account of its racial policies", and that Dr. Verwoerd was a "foreigner." He was not speaking in terms of Dr. Verwoerd's citizenship, rather from his personal ideology in which "foreigners" were colonialists and oppressors, such as the ruling Whites in South Africa and the Portuguese in Mozambique. He considered Rhodesia and South Africa, as well as all the colonized countries such as Mozambique, to be "occupied lands," under White minority or European rule, whereas they should be governed on a democratic basis by the people who were born in those countries, be they Black or White. Tsafendas often used the words "foreigners," occupiers", "colonialists" or "conquerors" for the Whites in Africa who supported authoritarian, colonialist, minority and oppressive regimes.

⁴⁸³⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

Appendix

Question: Were you ever indoctrinated by any person to commit the unlawful act for which you are now charged?

Answer: No, I was not. I did not do it at the instigation of anyone. I did it on my own because I thought it was the right thing.

Question: It appears that you planned the assault on Dr. Verwoerd over a long period - can you tell me when your planning to kill Dr. Verwoerd first started?

Answer: The idea of destroying Dr. Verwoerd entered my mind a few days after I started work as a messenger in the House of Assembly. I saw an opportunity to do so in the House of Assembly because I was inside the house. I first thought of buying a gun with which I could shoot him and then run away. I did in fact buy a gun from the crew of the Eleni but I found that the gun was useless. I bought the gun at the end of the month when I got my pay. I went there before to try and get the gun but I had no money. I then waited until I got my pay. I was going to buy a Beretta but the man didn't keep his word and gave me the other pistol. He made all kinds of excuses. It was only after I found that the gun was useless that I decided on using a knife.

Question: And if you managed to escape after assassinating the Prime Minister, where were you going to hide yourself?

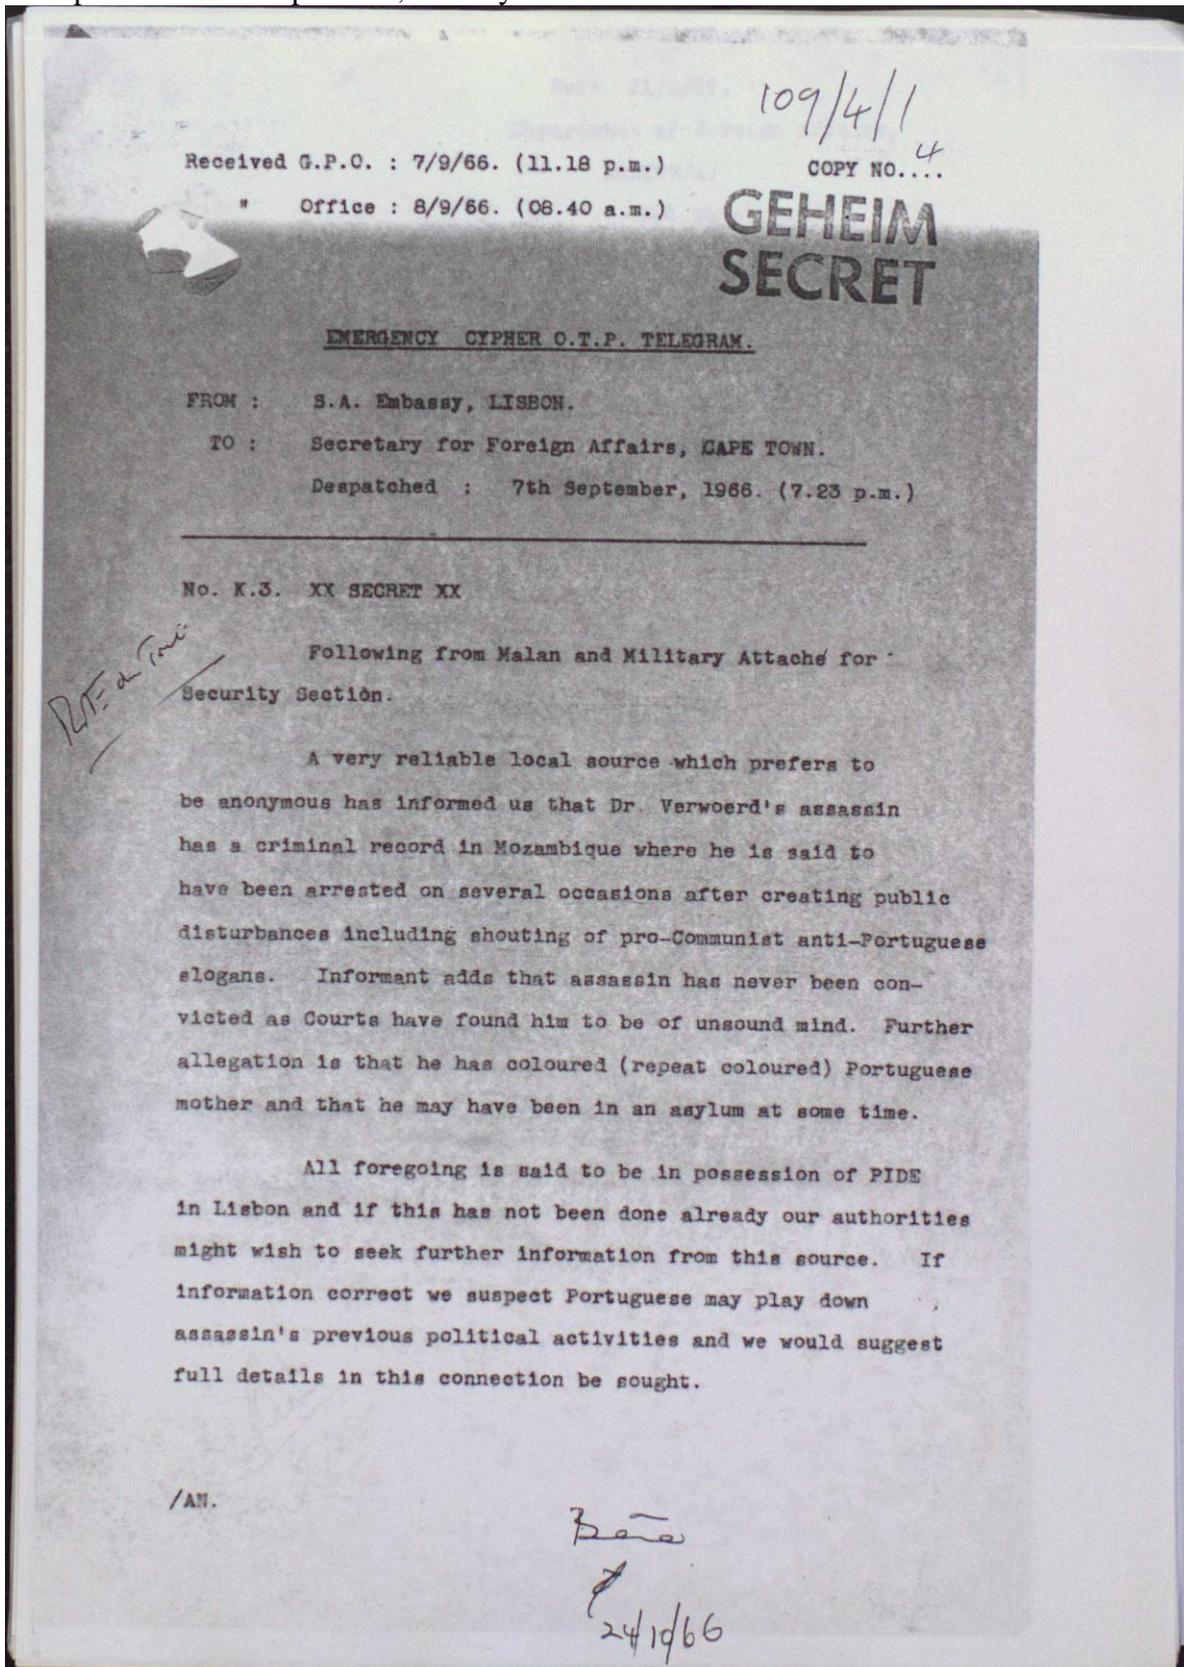

Answer: I was going to find refuge on the tanker, the Eleni, which I knew was sailing to South America. My plans were, however, upset when I could not get the right pistol. The boat sailed on the Saturday before the Tuesday on which I stabbed the Prime Minister.

Question: Did you know that the Eleni had sailed before you attacked the Prime Minister? If so, what were your plans to get away?

Answer: Yes, I knew the ship had already left. I never thought about hiding if I had to do the job with a knife. I didn't have much of a chance of getting away when using a knife. I didn't care much and didn't give it a second thought that I would be caught. I just happened to do it that way. I always had a grudge against the South African Government on account of its racial policies and I hated Dr. Verwoerd because he was a foreigner - a Hollander.

Appendix

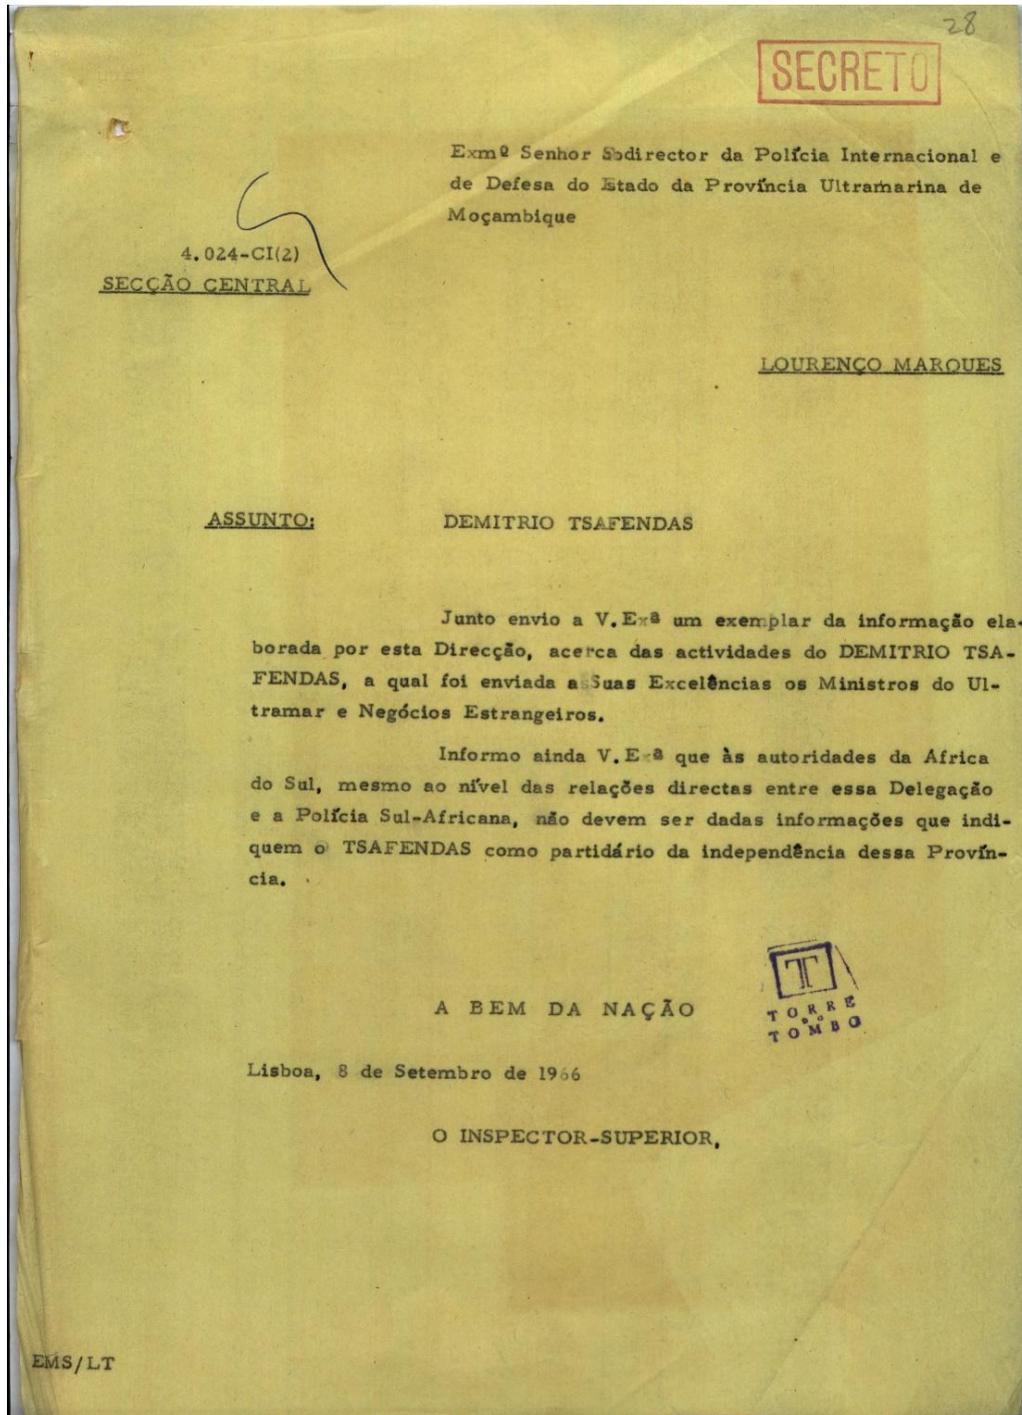

Secret telegram of the South African Embassy in Lisbon to the Secretary for Foreign Affairs in Cape Town on 7 September, one day after the assassination.⁴⁸⁴⁰ ⁴⁸⁴⁰ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Lisbon, to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 07 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

Appendix

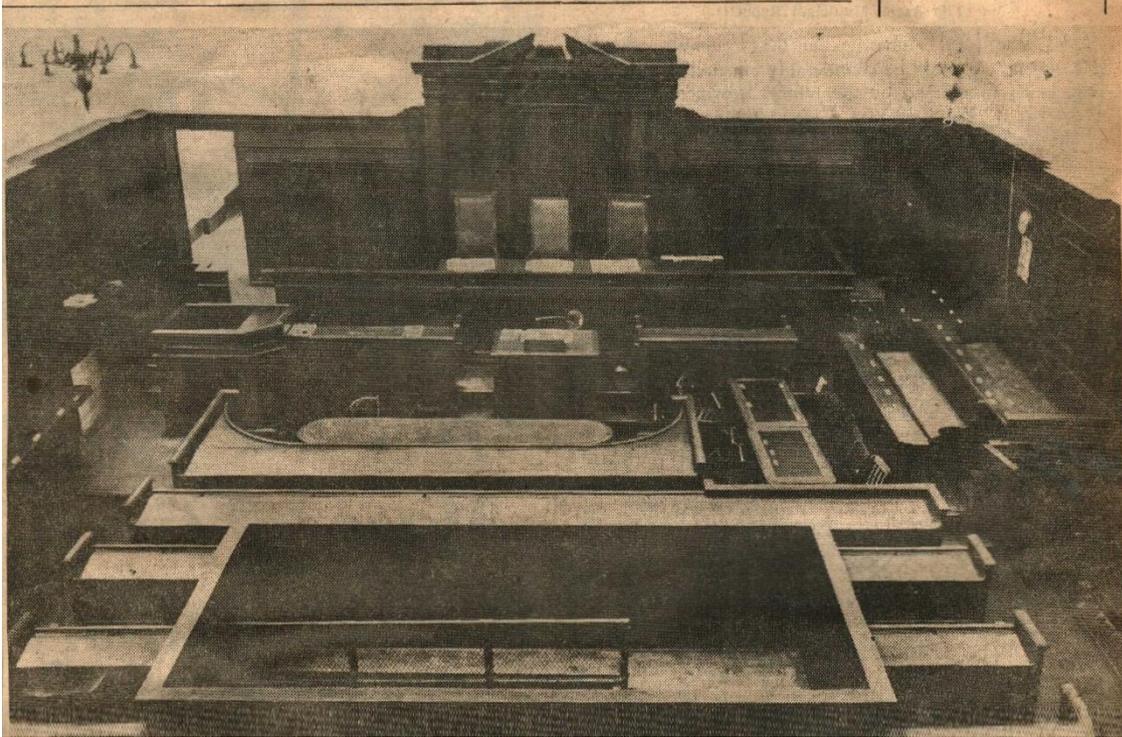

The previous telegram could not have been more correct as the following day, 8 September, PIDE's chief inspector in Lisbon issued the secret order below, instructing the Sub-Director of the force in Mozambique that "information indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of your country should not be transmitted to the South African Authorities, even despite the relations that exist between your Delegation and the South African Police." The order was followed and PIDE downplayed and omitted some of Tsafendas's political activities.⁴⁸⁴¹ ⁴⁸⁴¹ Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

Appendix

Court No. 1 of the Supreme Court, Cape Town; the room where Tsafendas's summary trial took place.⁴⁸⁴²

Judge Adries Beyers, Judge President of the Cape and Judge at Tsafendas's summary trial.⁴⁸⁴³ He was a supporter of the apartheid government and well connected with it.

⁴⁸⁴² The Cape Argus, 'Tsafendas Trial', 13 October 1966: 1.

⁴⁸⁴³ Friedman and Gauntlett, Bar, Bench and Bullshiffters: Cape Tales 1950–1990, p. 49.

Appendix

Judge Beyer's two assessors, (left) P.W.E. Baker, SC, and (right) Dr. P.H. Henning.⁴⁸⁴⁴

Willem M. van den Berg (left), the Attorney-General and public prosecutor in the summary trial, and Donald Brunnette (right), his assistant in the proceedings.⁴⁸⁴⁵

⁴⁸⁴⁴ The Cape Argus, 'Court for Trial of Tsafendas to Accommodate 400 People', 15 October 1966.

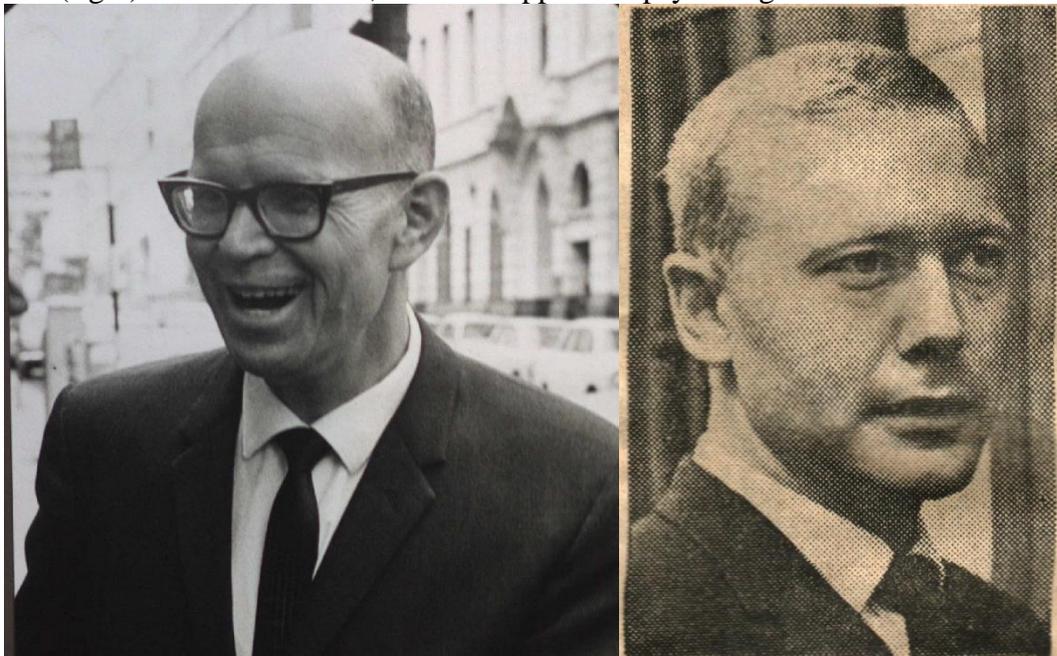

⁴⁸⁴⁵ Photo courtesy of David Bloomberg.

Appendix

The defence lawyers: (left to right) David Bloomberg, Wilfrid Cooper and Willie Burger.⁴⁸⁴⁶

Prosecution Witnesses: (left) Professor Adolph van Wyk, the State-appointed psychiatrist⁴⁸⁴⁷ and (right) Jacobus Erasmus, the State-appointed psychologist.⁴⁸⁴⁸

⁴⁸⁴⁶ Photo courtesy of David Bloomberg.

⁴⁸⁴⁷ Photo courtesy of David Bloomberg.

⁴⁸⁴⁸ Die Burger, 21 October 1966.

Appendix

Defence witnesses, clockwise from top left: Reyner van Zyl and Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky, Dr. Ralph Kossew and Dr. Aubrey Zabow.⁴⁸⁴⁹

⁴⁸⁴⁹ All photos courtesy of David Bloomberg.

Appendix

Defence witnesses: (left) Dr. Harold Cooper⁴⁸⁵⁰ and (right) Dr. James MacGregor.⁴⁸⁵¹

Defence witnesses: (left) Gideon Cloete⁴⁸⁵² and (right) Gillian Lieberman,⁴⁸⁵³

⁴⁸⁵⁰ Die Burger, 18 October 1966: 1.

⁴⁸⁵¹ Die Burger, 20 October 1966: 1.

⁴⁸⁵² Die Burger, 20 October 1966: 1.

⁴⁸⁵³ Die Burger, 19 October 1966.

Appendix

Defence witnesses: (left) Louisa and Patrick O’Ryan (who was also Tsafendas’s best friend), and (right) Jacobus Bornman.⁴⁸⁵⁴

Defence witnesses: (left) Merle and Peter Daniels, and (right) Owen Smorenberg.⁴⁸⁵⁵

⁴⁸⁵⁴ Photos courtesy of David Bloomberg.

⁴⁸⁵⁵ Photos courtesy of David Bloomberg.

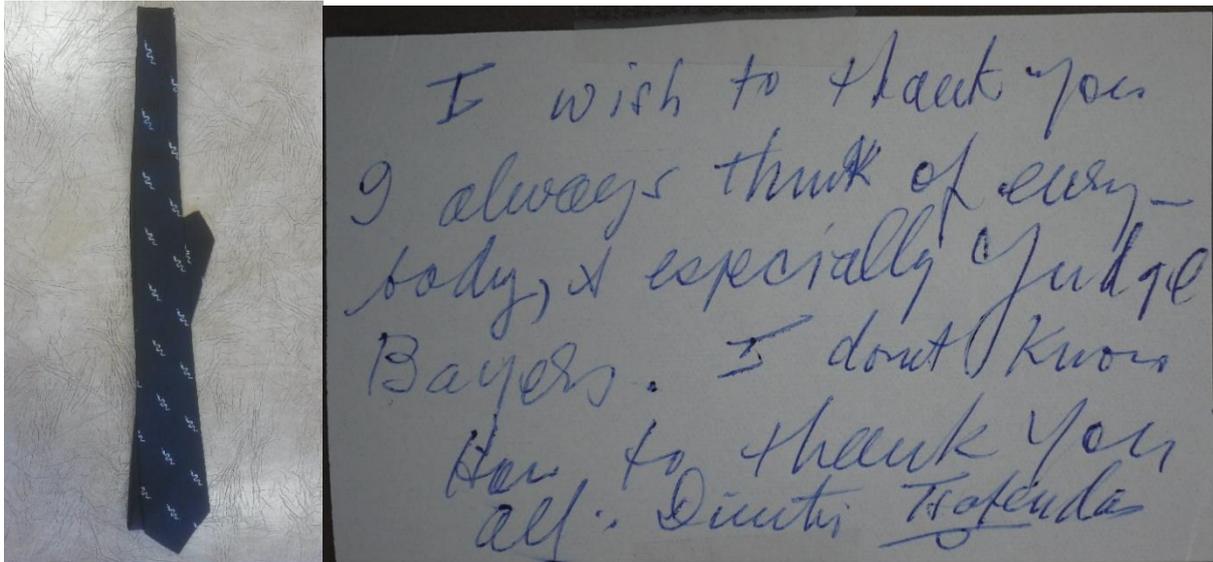

Appendix

Scenes outside the Supreme Court in Cape Town while the summary trial was taking place.⁴⁸⁵⁶

LEFT: The tapeworm tie that David Bloomberg gave as a present to all the members of the defence team to celebrate their victory.

RIGHT: Tsafendas's handwritten note to his defence team.⁴⁸⁵⁷

⁴⁸⁵⁶ Photo courtesy of David Bloomberg.

⁴⁸⁵⁷ Photo courtesy of David Bloomberg.

Appendix

The Grafton State Hospital Report which states that Tsafendas had faked mental illness in 1943. Despite the fact that the SA authorities were aware of this, as well as of another occasion where Tsafendas had faked mental illness, this information was not given to the clinicians who examined him and was not raised during the summary trial.⁴⁸⁵⁸ However, the Commission of Enquiry mentioned it, although rather briefly and without elaborating further, in its Report.

PREVIOUS MENTAL ILLNESS:

Patient states that in 1943 he was a patient at the Metropolitan State Hospital for a period of three months. He says that he made a statement at the Immigration Depot that he would commit suicide if he were sent back to Africa, and that he faked mental illness because he was afraid to ship out because of the numerous leakings of chips. He then was discharged and has been working for the Mer-

A portion of a telegram sent by Die Landstem to the Commission of Enquiry that contained information the newspaper had gathered about Tsafendas. It states that in 1947, Tsafendas was sent to Greece where he joined the "Greek Communist Party with whom he fought against the Greek Government."⁴⁸⁵⁹ The telegram contained several inaccuracies about Tsafendas, but also some correct information. In addition, the SA police had received statements from at least five people who had stated that Tsafendas had fought with the Communists during the Greek Civil War. Tsafendas's participation in the War was common knowledge among those who knew him. Nevertheless, the Commission concealed this information in its Report and Tsafendas's participation in the Civil War did not become known at the time.

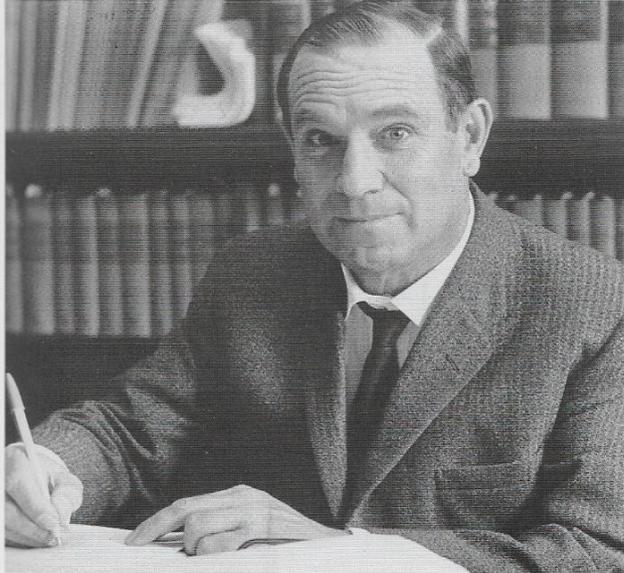

VAN MOSAMBIEK KOM WORD HY 1947 NA GRIEKELAND IS IN BETREURENSWAARDIGE
TOESTAND MET HONGERSNOOD EN WERKLOOSHEID EN
TSAFENDAS DWAAL HONGER EN SONDER
HERBERG ROND TOTDAT HY BY GRIEKSE KOMMUNISTE AANSLUIT
X HY VEG SAAM MET GRIEKSE KOMMUNISTE TEEN
GRIEKSE REGERING EN WORD VERDAG VAN TWEE OF DRIE

⁴⁸⁵⁸ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

⁴⁸⁵⁹ Die Landstem telegram. n.d. K150, Vol 5. NASA.

Appendix

Judge Jacques Theodore van Wyk,⁴⁸⁶⁰ the sole member of the Commission of Enquiry into Dr. Verwoerd's assassination. He was a racist and supporter of the National Party and of apartheid; he was well connected with Government members, including Prime Minister Vorster. The government appointed him on several other crucial and delicate cases, including as ad hoc member of the International Court of Justice in The Hague, hearing the Ethiopia and Liberia v. South Africa case (1962–1966). He celebrated apartheid's victory over Ethiopia and Liberia in the court in such a provocative manner that he offended and angered all the Africans who were present. Shortly after Dr. Verwoerd's assassination and in response to van Wyk's provocative celebrations, a number of African representatives at the UN contemplated celebrating in the same way the Judge had done in The Hague. However, eventually, they decided against any kind of public demonstration.

From left to right: Judge van Wyk, John Vorster and Judge Beyers during the opening of a new civil court in Cape Town's Supreme Court, on 4 August 1966, just over a month before the assassination.⁴⁸⁶¹

⁴⁸⁶⁰ Friedman and Gauntlett, Bar, Bench and Bullshiffters: Cape Tales 1950–1990, p. 77.

⁴⁸⁶¹ Friedman and Gauntlett, Bar, Bench and Bullshiffters: Cape Tales 1950–1990, p. 21.

Appendix

Report of the Commission of Enquiry, Chapter II B, Paragraph 32, stating that while in London, Tsafendas had attempted to recruit people for an uprising in South Africa.⁴⁸⁶²

Evidence was submitted to the Commission that Tsafendas had tried to recruit people to take part in an uprising in South Africa. He admits that he did in fact try to recruit people for an uprising, but says that his aim was confined to the Territory of Mozambique.

Report of the Commission of Enquiry, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18. Although the Commission stated in its Report that Tsafendas was not normal, but a schizophrenic, it also admitted that Tsafendas's "word cannot be relied upon" and that "he is sufficiently intelligent to put on a fairly good act."⁴⁸⁶³

18. On 25th October, Tsafendas gave evidence before the Commission. The Commission was aware that he was quite knowledgeable about mental disorders—he also admitted to the Commission that he had read fairly extensively on the subject in order to determine what was wrong with him—and therefore adopted a somewhat sceptical attitude towards him. It is clear that his word cannot be relied upon, and that he is sufficiently intelligent to put on a fairly good act.

⁴⁸⁶² Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II B, Paragraph 32.

⁴⁸⁶³ Report of the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's Death, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18.

Appendix

The transfer order for Tsafendas from Robben Island to Pretoria Central Prison, 3 February 1967.⁴⁸⁶⁴

C

G.P.-S.2133625-1957-8-5,000. Mental S. 25.

STATE PRESIDENT'S ORDER FOR TRANSFER OF ~~GOVERNOR-GENERAL'S~~ DECISION OR CRIMINAL PATIENT FROM AN INSTITUTION OR OTHER PLACE TO ANOTHER INSTITUTION OR PLACE.

[Mental Disorders Act, 1926: Section 39.]

To (1) The Officer Commanding,
Robben Island Prison, Robben Island and (2) the Officer Commanding,

Central Prison, Pretoria

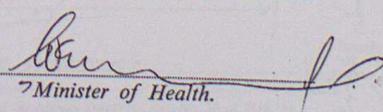

WHEREAS it is expedient that (3) Demitrio
Tsafendas

a (4) State President's decision patient, who is now in your custody under warrant of (5) the Minister of Health dated 25th November, 1966

shall be transferred to the Central Prison, Pretoria
there to be detained as a (4) State President's decision patient:
These are therefore to command you (1) the Officer Commanding, Robben Island Prison, to liberate the said (3) Demitrio Tsafendas from your custody by delivering him to (2) the Officer Commanding,
Central Prison, Pretoria

And to command you the said (2) Officer Commanding,
Central Prison, Pretoria
to receive the said (3) Demitrio Tsafendas into your custody, and detain him until he be legally discharged or otherwise removed from your custody.

Given under my hand this 3rd day of February, 1967

Minister of Health.
ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICER.

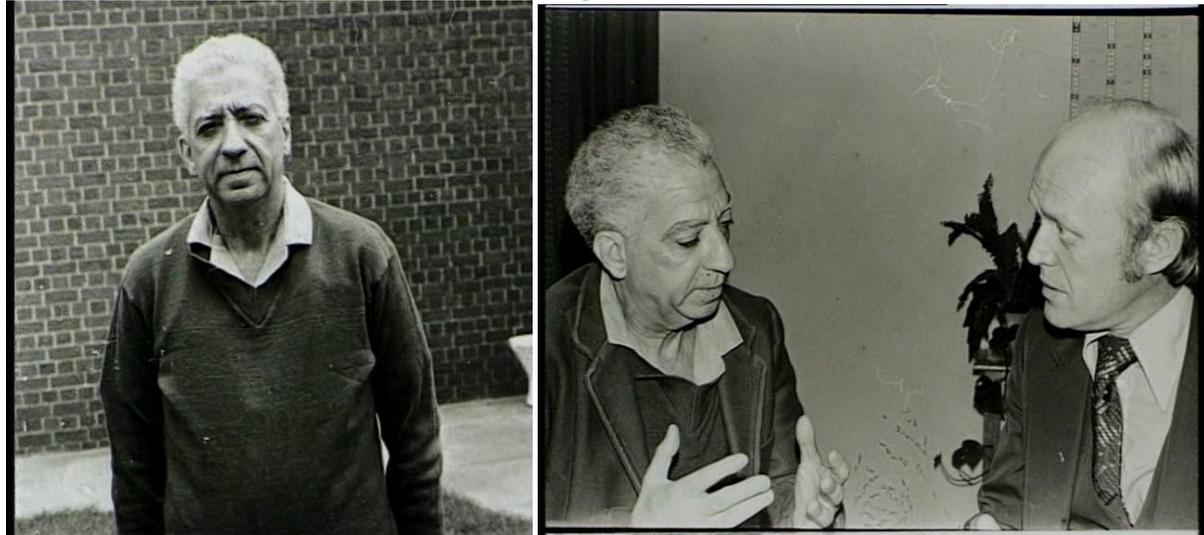

Authorised thereto by Govt.
No. 66
dated 16-1-67
under Section 39 of the Mental Disorders Act, No. 38 of 1926.

(1) Insert name of officer of or other place custody.
(2) Insert name of officer of a institution.
(3) Insert name of patient.
(4) Insert patient is "Criminal" or "General's Decision".
(5) Describe.

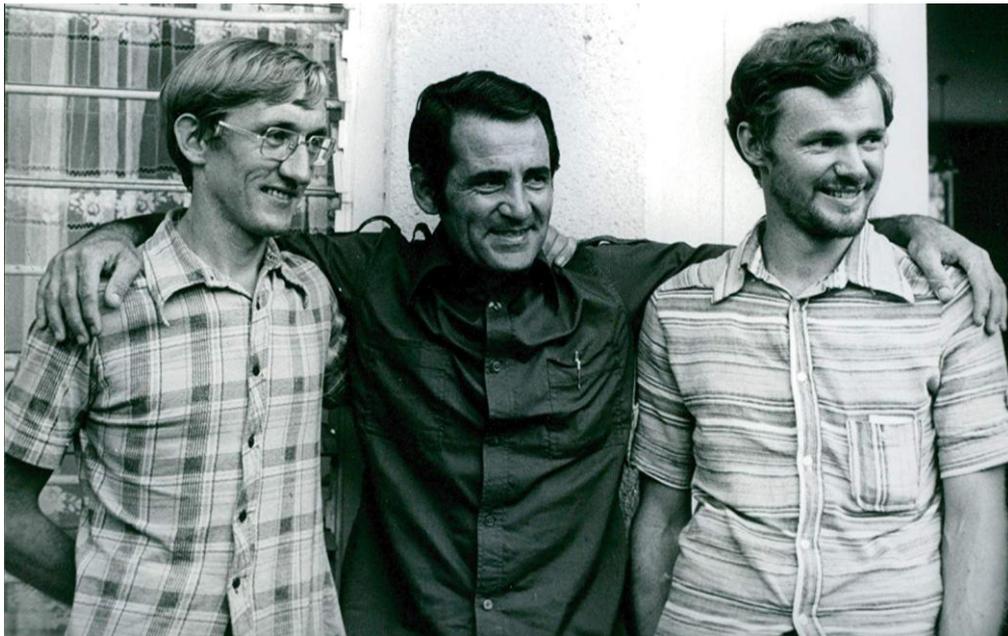

⁴⁸⁶⁴ Tsafendas's transfer order from Robben Island to Central Prison, Pretoria. 3 February 1967. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

Appendix

LEFT: Tsafendas in Pretoria Central Prison in October 1976 during Gordon Winter's visit.
RIGHT: Tsafendas and Gordon Winter during the latter's visit.⁴⁸⁶⁵

Alex Moumbaris (middle), along fellow anti-apartheid activists Tim Jenkin (left) and Stephen Lee (right) in Dar es Salaam in 1979 after their escape from Pretoria Central Prison. Moumbaris met Tsafendas in late 1972 - early 1973 at Pretoria Maximum Security Prison while awaiting trial on political charges. He was found guilty of “conspiring with the ANC to instigate violent revolution in South Africa, aiding terrorists, distributing ANC pamphlets in Durban in 1968, and reconnoitring the Transkei to find places for seaborne landings.” One day, Tsafendas told him proudly in Greek about Dr. Verwoerd: “I got τον Νταή τους” (“their tough guy” or “their champion,” but in a pejorative sense). Moumbaris, who has been awarded the national order of Grand Companion of O.R. Tambo Medal and the Sabotage Campaign Medal by the South African government, told the author: “I not only regard Dimitri Tsafendas as a sane man but also as the bravest and most ill-treated man I have ever met.” Moumbaris visited Tsafendas again in 1996 in Sterkfontein Hospital and endeavoured to have him released from there.

⁴⁸⁶⁵ Photos courtesy of Gordon Winter.

Appendix

Tsafendas's removal order from Pretoria Central Prison to Sterkfontein Hospital, 5 July 1994.⁴⁸⁶⁶

07 JUL '94 15:04 DEPT NAT HEALTH 012 3256061 P. 4/3

REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA

81172892 (Z 28)

DIRECTIVE IN TERMS OF SECTION 28(2) OF THE MENTAL HEALTH ACT, 1973 (ACT 18 OF 1973) FOR THE REMOVAL AND DETENTION OF A STATE PATIENT

PERSONAL DETAILS

NAME: DEMITRIO TSAFENDAS

SEX: MALE AGE: 76 YEARS

ORDER FOR REMOVAL

You, the Head, Pretoria Central Prison, are hereby directed to give Demitrio Tsafendas in respect of whom an order in terms of section 77(6) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1977 (Act 51 of 1977), was given by the Judge in the Supreme Court of South Africa (Cape of Good Hope Provincial Division), on the 20th day of October 1966, in the custody of the Superintendent, Sterkfontein Hospital, Krugersdorp.

ORDER FOR DETENTION

You, the Superintendent of Sterkfontein Hospital, Krugersdorp, are hereby directed to receive Demitrio Tsafendas in your custody and to keep him in safe custody until he is legally discharged or is legally removed from your custody.

Given under my hand at Pretoria on the 5th day of July 1994.

Nkulama
N C DLAMINI ZUMA
MINISTER OF HEALTH

M. J. van der Merwe
NMS SUPERINTENDENT: STERKFONTEIN
HOSPITAAL
K R G S D O R P

→ RSP →
→ LSA →

⁴⁸⁶⁶ Tsafendas's removal order from Pretoria Central Prison to Sterkfontein Hospital, 5 July 1994. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

Appendix

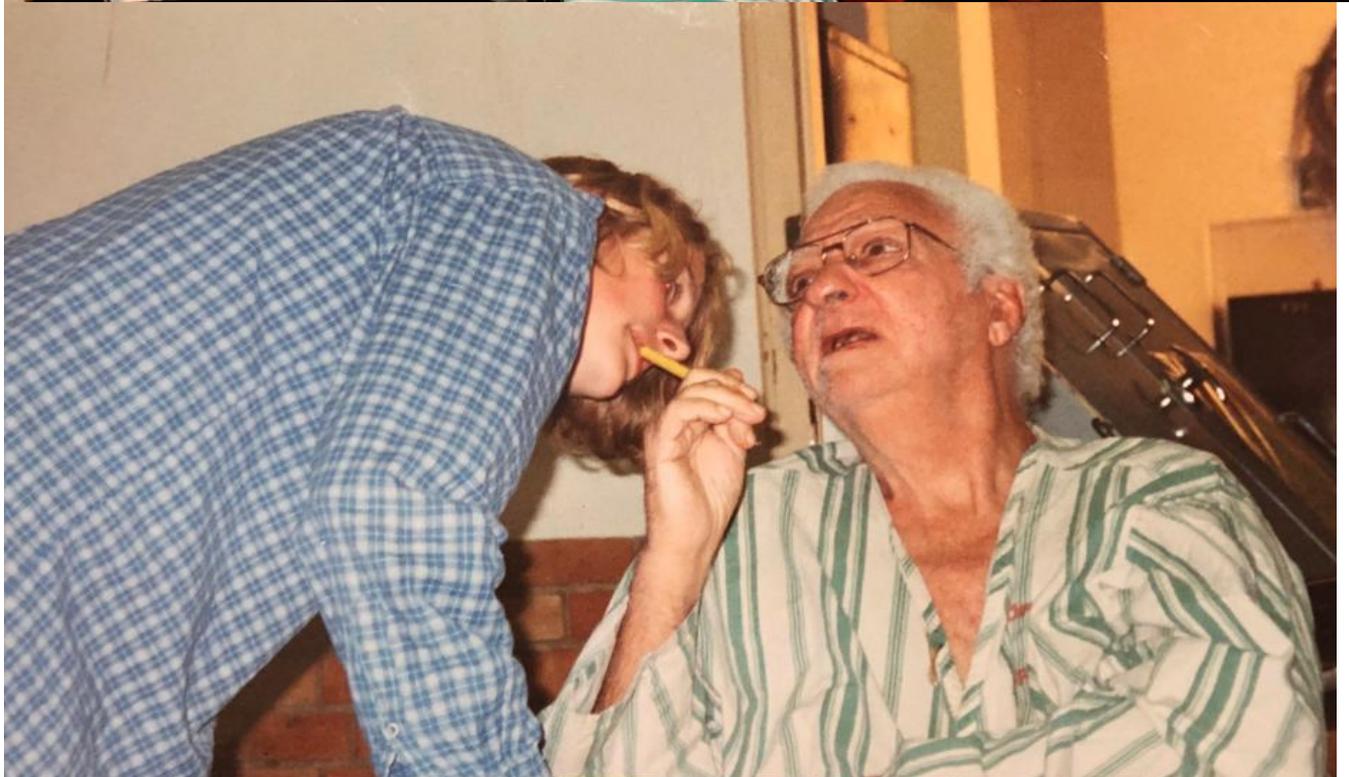

Tsafendas at Sterkfontein Hospital. All pictures are from late 1997, apart from the first one which was taken in 1995. In the second one, Tsafendas describes to David Beresford, Ellen Elmendorp and Liza Key how he stabbed Dr. Verwoerd.⁴⁸⁶⁷ ⁴⁸⁶⁷ All photos courtesy of Ellen Elmendorp, apart from the one which is courtesy of Liza Key.

Appendix

Tsafendas in April 1998 at Sterkfontein Hospital, a few months before his death. The last two known pictures of him. In the top picture, Tsafendas is talking to fifteen-year-old Joris Beresford, David Beresford's son, about a school essay the latter had written about him.⁴⁸⁶⁸ ⁴⁸⁶⁸ Photos courtesy of Liza Key.

Appendix

The registry with the locations of the graves at Sterkfontein cemetery. This is the only way to locate Tsafendas's unmarked grave (pictured below).

8 Oktober 99	I 39/34	11	220x230	Coetzee Johannes Jacobus C	70	230609	10314
8 Okt. 99	C10	8A	212x90	Du Preez Maria Magdalena C.	92	25226	10315
8 Oktober 99	N6	5A	213x90	Kuyt Annie Christina	71	024676P	gekoop
8 Oktober 99	E 26	4A	213x90	Wassenaar Elizabeth	70	25232	gekoop
8 Oktober 99	I 26	5B	213x90	Dryman Maud Agnes	82	0159418	gekoop
8 Oktober 99	P 18/19	10A	213x210	COLVERT JOHN	54	2303846	10316
9 Oktober 99	J 59	11	220x100	Tsafendas Dimitri	81	2307729	10318
12 Oktober 99	O 6	7	213x91	James Helen Elizabeth	80	230847	gekoop
12 Okt 99	C12	6B	213x90	Coombes Basil Eugene	69	25233	gekoop
12 Okt 99	A 6	10	250x105	Locher Anna Elizabeth	73	2306012	utgekoop
14 Okt 99	B 12	1A	213x90	v/det Renne Hendrika	20	2309735	10321
13 Okt 99	P 6	10A	213x90	CILLIERS Madalaine	14	27131	10322
13 Okt 99	P 10	10A	213x90	Cothuyssen HELENA G	89	14132	10323
13 Okt 99	E 31	11	220x100	FITZGERALD Elizabeth F. Z.	92	184847m	gekoop
				BENNETTS HESTER CHRISTINA	85	25235	10324

Appendix

Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis leading a memorial service for Tsafendas in Maputo on 18 October 2015.

TOP LEFT: the poster for the service, characterizing Tsafendas as “The idealist.”

